The case relied on by the lower appellate court and which might have influenced the trial court is Kesar Kunwar v. Kashi Ram[1], in which the opinion was expressed that a mortgagee cannot insist on payment of the sum due under a tacking bond unless his suit on the basis thereof is in time when the mortgagor's suit for redemption of the possessory mortgage is brought. In later rulings of this Court, e.g., Ram Kishore Ahir v. Ram Nandan Ram[2] this view was not approved and it was pointed out that limitation can be pleaded as against a plaintiff's claim and that no defence can be barred by any article of the first schedule of the Indian Limitation Act. We are clearly of opinion that this is so. The defendant-appellants are certainly entitled to have the sum due under the bond of 1874, if they are otherwise entitled regardless of the question whether their suit on foot of that bond, if now brought, would be barred by limitation.

The next question is whether the bond of 1874 creates a charge on the property sought to be redeemed. The lower appellate court has thrown some doubt on that aspect of the case. The plaintiff-respondents were not aware of the particulars of the mortgage of 1868. They stated in the plaint certain conjectural particulars as regards the date of the mortgage, the property in possession of the mortgagee and the amount advanced thereunder. It was not till the defendant-appellants filed their second written statement and a phatbandi which is in reality part of an award made by certain arbitrators in a dispute relating to the partition of the family property of the defendant-appellants and their co-parceners that the plaintiffs ascertained the correct particulars of the mortgage of 1868. Accordingly they amended their plaint and made allegations in accordance with the entries in the aforesaid phatbandi and such entries have been accepted by both the courts below in decreeing their suit for redemption. Now, the phatbandi also mentions the fact that besides the mortgage of 1868 the mortgagor had executed, on September 22, 1874, another bond for Rs.100 in favour of the same mortgagee and that the sum advanced

---

[1] 37 All. 634=13 A. L. J. 889

[2] 25 A. L. J. 1086

CIVIL

1932

PARAS RAM CHAUBEY
v.
SHEO DHAN PANDEY

Niamat-ullah, J.

under the bond was charged on the same property as was in possession of the mortgagee under the deed of 1868. It is not disputed before us that the phatbandi is admissible in evidence for proving the fact that the sum advanced under the bond of 1874 is charged on the property which had been mortgaged in 1868, but it is contended that the entry in the phatbandi is not conclusive and it is possible that it refers to some other bond executed between the same parties on the same date for the same sum. It has never been suggested in this litigation that there was any other bond with identical description. The necessity of extrinsic evidence to establish the property hypothecated under the bond of 1874, arose from the fact that it did not specifically mention the property which had been mortgaged under the deed of 1868, which has not been produced. The lower appellate court has referred to a discrepancy in the name of the village according to the recitals contained in the bond of 1874. There is an obscure reference to a village Jauhi in which the property hypothecated under the bond of 1874 is recited to be situated. This may be a correct recital and it does appear that certain properties to which the possessory mortgage did not relate were hypothecated by the bond of 1874. Besides the security afforded by such property it contains a stipulation to the effect that the possessory mortgage should not be redeemed by the mortgagor without payment of the sum due under the bond of 1874. The difficulty arises from the fact that the bond of 1874 does not give any particulars of the 'possessory mortgage'. This ambiguity is cleared up by the phatbandi to which reference has already been made. We are satisfied that there is no difficulty as regards the identity of the usufructuary mortgage referred to in the bond of 1874 or as regards the property mortgaged thereunder.

On the construction of the bond of 1874 ther is no doubt that it creates a further charge on the property mortgaged by the deed of 1868. There is a clear stipulation to the effect that the mortgagor should not redeem the mortgage of 1868 without payment of the principal and interest due under the bond of 1874. The case of Aditya Prasad v. Ram Ratan Lal[3] is fully applicable, and we are bound to hold, that the plaintiff-respondents are not entitled to redeem plot No. 1257 in possession of the defendant-appellants under the mortgage of 1868 without payment of the principal and interest due under the subsequent bond of 1874. Accordingly, we allow this appeal, set aside the decree passed by the courts below and substitute therefor a decree in favour of the plaintiff-respondents for redemption of plot No. 1257 on payment of Rs.213 plus principal and interest due under the bond of September 22, 1874. The period for redemption is fixed at six months. The usual redemption decree shall be prepared.

Appeal allowed

[3] 57 I. C 173

CIVIL

1932

Jan. 29

MEARS, C. J.
SEN, J.

GOBARDHAN DAS AND ANOTHER (Plaintiffs)
versus
AFZAL HUSAIN AND (AFTER HIS DEATH) IQBAL HUSAIN AND OTHERS (Defendants)*

Transfer of Property Act, Secs. 55(2) and 55(1)(g)—Vendees—Property passes out of their possession—Suit for damages—Claim not founded upon covenant of indemnity in sale-deed—Whether vendees entitled to an implied warranty of title under Sec. 55(2).

Defendant purchased certain property. Part of the sale consideration was left with him for payment of the pre-existing mortgage. As the money was not paid, the vendors brought a suit for recovery of the unpaid purchase money against the defendant, and the present plaintiffs, who had purchased the property from the defendant, were also made parties to this suit; and a decree was passed against defendant personally and against the property in the hands of the plaintiffs. In execution of the decree, the property was sold. Thereupon the plaintiffs instituted the present suit for damages against the defendant, and the claim was not founded upon the covenant of indemnity contained in the sale-deed. Held, (1) that the cause of action for the present suit accrued on the date of plaintiffs' dispossession consequent upon the sale of the property, and they were entitled to damages by reason of a breach of an implied warranty of title under Sec. 55(2) T. P. Act; (2) that the former suit did not operate as res judicata.

SECOND APPEAL from a decree of J. C. MALIK ESQ., Additional Subordinate Judge of Fatehpur at Cawnpore, confirming a decree of BABU KISHORI LAL, Munsif of Fatehpur.

R. C. Ghatak for the appellants.

Zafar Mehdi and Hyder Mehdi for the respondents.

The judgment of the Court was delivered by

Sen, J.

SEN, J.—This is an appeal by the plaintiffs and is directed against the appellate decision of Mr. J. C. Malik, dated March 20, 1929, confirming the decision of the Munsif, Mr. Kishori Lal, dated June 19, 1928.

Chaudhri Afzal Husain owned zamindari shares in three villages, namely, Pindri, Moiya and Karmun. He sold these shares to Thakur Prasad and Baij Nath under a sale-deed dated August 14, 1919 for Rs.1,772. The sale-deed contained the usual indemnity clause which provided that if the vendees lost possession over the property sold in whole or in part the vendor would be liable to make good the loss together with interest at 1 per cent per annum. Baij Nath sold his share to Gobardhan Das plaintiff No. 1. Gobardhan Das was brother of Thakur Prasad. Thakur Prasad is dead. Bhagwat Das, plaintiff No. 2, is his son.

Chaudhri Afzal Husain had purchased the shares in Pindri and Moiya from Ikram Husain and Ghazanfar Husain under a sale-deed dated February 25, 1919. On the date of the execution of the sale-deed, Ikram and Ghazanfar were indebted to one Cheda Lal for a mortgage debt. They left Rs.700 of the purchase money with Chaudhri Afzal Husain for payment to Cheda Lal. Afzal Husain did not pay the money. Ikram Husain and Ghazanfar Husain, therefore, brought a suit (No. 224 of 1922, of the court of the Munsif of Fatehpur) for recovery of the unpaid purchase money against Afzal Husain and also against Gobardhan and Thakur Prasad. Afzal Husain pleaded that he was no longer liable for the amount because he had parted with the property. Gobardhan and Thakur Prasad pleaded that they were bona fide purchasers for value and had no notice that the property was subject to an encumbrance in favour of Cheda Lal. Presumably they took shelter under Section 40, Paragraph 2 of the Transfer of Property Act. Their contention was overruled by the trial court and a decree was passed on January 31, 1923 against Chaudhri Afzal Husain personally and against the property in the hands of Gobardhan Das and Thakur Prasad. In execution of this decree, the properties in Pindri and Moiya were sold on August 22, 1927. This led to the institution of the present suit by Gobardhan Das and Bhagwat Das for recovery of Rs.992 principal and Rs.69-4-0 interest from Chaudhri Afzal Husain for damages consequent upon the loss of the property purchased by them under the sale-deed dated August 14, 1919. This suit was instituted on March 22, 1928.

---

*S. A. 918 of 1929

Various pleas were raised in defence, but the chief contention was that the decision in suit No. 224 of 1922 operated as res judicata inasmuch as it had been held therein that the predecessors-in-title of the plaintiffs had made the purchase of zamindari shares in mauza Pindri and Moiya with the knowledge that the property at the date of the purchase was subject to an encumbrance of Rs.700 in favour of Cheda Lal.

This plea found favour with the trial court which dismissed the suit. It held that the former decision operated as res judicata. It also held that the plaintiffs had agreed to purchase the properties as they were at the time of the sale and that they had before them the title deeds relating to the properties, a perusal of which was bound to disclose the pre-existing encumbrance. The lower appellate court has confirmed the decree.

It has been argued that the decision in the former suit does not operate as res judicata and that in view of Section 55 (1) (g) and Section 55 (2) of the Transfer of Property Act it was the statutory duty of Afzal Husain to discharge whatever encumbrance existed upon the property on the date of the sale.

We are of opinion that the courts below have erred in holding that the claim is barred by the rule of res judicata. In the former suit Afzal Husain had pleaded that he had sold away the property to Gobardhan Das and Thakur Prasad and that the plaintiffs' remedy lay not against him personally but against the purchasers and against the property in their hands. Gobardhan Das and Thakur Prasad pleaded that they were bona fide purchasers for value without notice and that the plaintiffs had no remedy either against them or against the property in their hands. No question arose whether Gobardhan Das and Thakur Prasad would be entitled to claim damages from Afzal Husain if the property passed out of their possession. Under the decree dated Jan. 31, 1923, Ikram Husain and Ghazanfar Husain could proceed either against Chaudhri Afzal Husain personally or against the property in the possession of Gobardhan Das and

CIVIL

1932

GOBARDHAN DAS v. AFZAL HUSAIN

Sen, J.

Thakur Prasad. They chose to proceed against the latter and the property was sold on August 22, 1927. No loss accrued to the plaintiffs till the property was actually sold. The cause of action for the present suit accrued on the date of plaintiffs' dispossession consequent upon the sale of the property. The plaintiffs were entitled to relief against the defendant by reason of a partial failure of consideration. They were entitled to rely upon the covenant of indemnity contained in the sale-deed. They did not rely upon the said covenant and the claim was not founded upon a breach of the covenant contained in the sale-deed. They, however, were entitled to an implied warranty of title which has received statutory recognition in Section 55 of the Transfer of Property Act. In the case of a breach of covenant or warranty of title the vendees were entitled to repudiate the sale altogether or to claim compensation for the breach. The cause of action for the suit arose as the result of the breach. The cause of action for the present suit was distinct from the cause of action in suit No. 224 of 1922. The cause of action was consequent upon the execution of the decree in that suit resulting in the deprivation of the property purchased by the plaintiffs. The decision in the former suit could not operate as res judicata in another suit in which the cause of action was distinct.

Neither the trial court nor the lower appellate court has gone into the question as to the amount of loss sustained by the plaintiff by reason of the deprivation of the properties. In paragraph 5 of the plaint, the plaintiff stated that the value of the shares in the villages lost to him was Rs.992. The defendants in their written statement disputed the correctness of this proposition. The case cannot be disposed of without a finding on the aforesaid issue. As the courts below have disposed of the case upon a preliminary ground and as we have come to the conclusion that the decision on the preliminary ground is erroneous, we allow the appeal, set aside the decrees of both the courts below and remand the case through the lower appellate court to the trial court for reinstatement under its original number for disposal according to law.

We allow no costs to the plaintiff-appellants because of the negligence with which the plaint was drawn up. Great stress was laid by the learned advocate for the appellants upon the indemnity clause in the sale-deed. The suit was not founded upon a breach of the warranty of title as contained in the sale-deed. The plaintiffs succeed because of the breach of the warranty of title which must be implied under Section 55 of the Transfer of Property Act. We therefore allow no cost to the plaintiffs either of this court or of the courts below.

Appeal allowed
Case remanded

Civil

1932

April 10

King, J.

JAG NARAIN PANDEY AND ANOTHER (Plaintiffs)
versus
MATA BADAL AND ANOTHER (Defendants)*

Court-fees Act, Sec. 19, Cl. XX—Applicability of—Application under Sec. 13 for refund of court-fees—Not chargeable with court-fees.

No court-fee is chargeable on an application, under Sec. 13 of the Court-fees Act, for refund of court-fees.

STAMP REFERENCE.

A. P. Bagchi for the applicants.

The following judgment was delivered by

King, J.

KING, J.—This is a reference under Section 5 of the Court Fees Act, 1870, and the question raised is whether an application under Section 13 of the Act, for refund of court-fees, is chargeable with a court-fee.

The application in question was made to the High Court which passed the remand order in consequence of which the refund is claimed. Under Schedule II, Art. 1 (d) a court-fee of Rs.2 is chargeable upon every application (not otherwise specially provided for) when presented to a High Court, unless some ground for exemption is established.

The applicant claims exemption under Section 19, Clause XX. This lays down that no fee is chargeable upon an "application for the payment of money due by Government to the applicant." Prima facie this clause is applicable to the facts of this case. The court-fee was credited to Government. If the court-fee is refundable under Section 13 (which is mandatory and not discretionary in its terms) then I think it must be held that the money claimed is due by Government to the applicant, and an application for the payment of such money is covered by Section 19 (XX).

It is admitted that the practice of this Court before 1927 was to charge no court-fee on applications for the refund of court-fees. The Taxing Officer relies upon a Local Government Notification No. C|276|X-530-1927 for holding that the previous practice was wrong. That notification modified the court-fee prescribed in Schedule II, Art. 1 (d) in respect of applications to the High Court for payment of deposits. Instead of a final fee of Rs.2 being payable on every such application, the notification laid down a graduated scale of fees, starting with 2 annas, according to the amount of the deposit. This notification does no doubt show that court-fees are chargeable on applications for payment of deposits made by parties to civil suits. It has also been expressly held in Haridasi Debi v. Gopeshwar Pyne[1] that an application for the refund of a deposit, for costs of the preparation of a paper book of a Privy Council appeal, is chargeable with a court-fee. In my opinion neither the notification nor the ruling are in point. The repayment of a deposit is very different from the refund of a court-fee. The money paid for a court-fee is paid to Government outright. If the money is refundable under Section 13, the money is due by Government. The incidents of deposits made by parties in civil suits

---

*Stamp Ref. in S. A. 823 of 1929

[1] 27 C. W. N. 646

CIVIL
1932
JAG NARAIN PANDEY v. MATA BADAL
King, J.

are quite different. I think it is only through a misunderstanding that the notification has been taken to mean that court-fees are chargeable on applications for the refund of court-fees and the previous practice has accordingly been changed. The language of Section 13 supports the view that no court-fees are chargeable on applications for refund under that Section. It is laid down that "the full amount of fee" is to be paid. In the present case the applicant claims a refund of Rs.3-12-0. If he has to pay a fee of Rs.2 in order to claim Rs.3-12-0, I do not think he can properly be said to recover "the full amount of fee". If the sum claimed is less than Rs.2, as it might be, it seems absurd to require the applicant to pay a further court-fee exceeding the amount claimed. If the Act required such applications to be charged with court-fees, I think Government would certainly have introduced a graduated scale of fees (as it has done in the case of deposits) in order to avoid the absurdity of charging Rs.2 on an application for the refund of sums less than Rs.2.

In my opinion Section 19, Clause XX covers the case and no fee is chargeable on the application.

Reference answered

CIVIL

1932

May 3

KENDALL, J.

HARNARAIN SAHI (Judgment-debtor)
versus
GOVIND RAI (Decree-holder)*

Civil Procedure Code, Or. 41, R. 6(2)—Interpretation of—Decree—Appeal—Order for sale of immovable property in execution—Whether execution court obliged to stay sale in every case.

Or. 41, R. 6(2) is not to be interpreted to mean that in every case where an order has been made for the sale of immovable property in execution of a decree from which an appeal is pending, the executing court is obliged to stay the sale on the application of the judgment-debtor.

APPLICATION for stay of execution proceedings.

M. Waliullah for the applicant.

Shambhu Prasad (for Shiva Prasad Sinha) for the opposite party.

The following judgment was delivered by

Kendall, J.

KENDALL, J.—This is an application under Order XLI, Rule 5 of the Code of Civil Procedure for stay of execution proceedings. It is made on the ground that the judgment-debtor entered into a compromise with the decree-holder to the effect that the latter should execute his decree against the villages of Singha and Mahesra, which were said to be free from encumbrance; and that if any encumbrance were discovered on these villages the decree-holder should proceed against the villages of Pakaryar and Sorha. The decree-holder has however proceeded against these two latter villages on the allegation that village Singha had an encumbrance on it. On the question of whether there is an encumbrance on this village the two lower courts have decided that there is, but a second appeal is pending.

The applicant states in paragraph 12 that he will suffer an irreparable injury and may have to pay substantial compensation if the villages of Sorha and Pakaryar are sold. This is explained by the allegation that he has entered into a deed of partition with his wife and son by which they become the owners of these two villages. Apart from this there is nothing to show why he should suffer any more substantial loss by the sale of these two particular villages than of the others which he is willing to offer for sale. If he really has transferred the villages of Sorha and Pakaryar to his wife and son, he may have to pay compensation to them under some private arrangement, but will himself be compensated by escaping from the liability that would attach to his own villages. Moreover, if the villages have been transferred it is difficult to see on what principle the judgment-debtor can come into court and object to their sale. The proper remedy would be for the transferees to make an objection under Order XXI, Rule 58 C. P. C.

In short, after hearing counsel on both sides I am not satisfied that there is sufficient reason for the stay of the sale under Rule 5 of Order XLI.

The suggestion was made that the sale could be stayed under Clause (2) of Rule 6 of Order XLI. As the interpretation of this rule has on some occasions given some difficulty I have considered the matter somewhat carefully. Clause (2) of Rule 6 reads as follows:—

---

*Application in E. S. A. 182 of 1932

> Where an order has been made for the sale of immovable property in execution of a decree, and an appeal is pending from such decree, the sale shall, on the application of the judgment-debtor to the court which made the order, be stayed on such terms as to giving security or otherwise as the court thinks fit until the appeal is disposed of.

and Rule 8 of the same Order provides:—

> The powers conferred by Rules 5 and 6 shall be exercisable where an appeal may be or has been preferred not from the decree but from an order made in execution of such decree.

as is the case here.

If this Rule is to be interpreted to mean that in every case where an order has been made for the sale of immovable property in execution of a decree from which an appeal is pending, the executing court is obliged to stay the sale on the application of the judgment-debtor, then the present application might succeed on the ground that the High Court will have jurisdiction to pass an order that ought to have been but has not been passed by the executing court.

Rules 5 to 8 of Order XLI are the rules covering stay of proceedings and of execution, and the marginal notes to Rule 5 show that that is the rule that is applied to stay of proceedings and of execution, while the marginal notes to Rule 6 show that that is the rule that is applied to security. Clause (1) of Rule 6 shows that where an order is made for the execution of a decree from which an appeal is pending, the court which passed the decree shall, on sufficient cause being shown by the appellant, require security to be taken (from the decree-holder executing the decree) for restitution. Clause (2) shows that where an order has been made for the sale of immovable property in execution of a decree for which an appeal is pending, the sale shall be stayed on the application of the judgment-debtor to the court which ordered the sale 'on such terms as to giving security or otherwise as the court thinks fit.' The attention of the Legislature seems in both these clauses to have been directed to the manner in which security should be demanded, and as the rule immediately follows Rule 5, which prescribes the manner in which execution proceedings may be stayed, the whole of Rule 6 must, I think, be held to be complementary to Rule 5, providing in fact an explanation of the word 'security' which has been used in Clause (c) of Sub-rule (3) of Rule 5. I am not, therefore, of opinion that Clause (2) of Rule 6 was intended to impose on the court which ordered the sale an obligation to stay the sale merely because the property which is to be sold is immovable property.

The result is that the present application fails and is dismissed with costs.

Application dismissed

CIVIL

1932

Jan. 12

MEARS, C. J.
SEN, J

SRI RAM SINGH AND OTHERS (Defendants)
versus
BALDEO PRASAD AND OTHERS (Plaintiffs)*

Civil Procedure Code, Sec. 11—Rule of Res judicata—As between co-defendants—Criterion—Evidence Act, Sec. 115—Estoppel—Conditions to be fulfilled—Tenancy Act (II of 1901), Sec. 22—Occupancy holding—Succession.

The plaintiffs, who were the heirs of the mortgagor under the personal law, instituted the present suit for redemption of a usufructuary mortgage of an occupancy holding. The mortgagees contested the suit on the ground that the plaintiffs were not the heirs to the mortgagor under the Tenancy Law in force at the time the inheritance opened (Sec. 9 of Act XII of 1881). Prior to this the zamindar had instituted a suit in the revenue court against the present plaintiffs and defendants for possession of the occupancy holding on the allegation that on the death of the tenant (mortgagor) without leaving any heirs, the holding lapsed to her as zamindar. The present plaintiffs did not contest the suit. The present defendants however contested the suit on the ground that the tenant had died leaving the present plaintiffs as heirs. This plea found favour with the revenue court which dismissed the suit for ejectment. The plaintiffs contended that the decision of the revenue court operated as res judicata, and it was not now open to the mortgagees to take the plea that the plaintiffs were not the heirs to the mortgagor. Held, (1) that there was no conflict of interest between the present plaintiffs and defendants, who were arrayed as defendants in the revenue court, and the revenue court decision did not operate as res judicata. Munni Bibi v. Tirloki Nath, 1931 A. L. J. 453; (2) that whether or not the plaintiffs were the legal heirs of the tenant (mortgagor) was as much within their knowledge as that of the defendants, and the attitude of the defendants in the revenue suit did not in any way mislead the plaintiffs or induce them to alter their position, and Sec. 115 Evidence Act did not apply. Ram Saran Singh v. Munshi Syed Amin Ali, 13 Moore's I. A. 551 applied.

An occupancy tenure is the creation of statute, and where a special rule of succession has been laid down in the statute, it is the statute which regulates the devolution of inheritance and not the personal law of the tenant (Sec. 9 of Act XII of 1881 and Sec. 22 of Act II of 1901). Bhura v. Shahabuddin, I. L. R. 30 All. 128.

LETTERS PATENT APPEAL from a judgment of the HON'BLE MR. JUSTICE DALAL.

N. P. Asthana and B. N. Sahai for the appellants.

K. N. Katju and R. C. Ghatak for the respondents.

The judgment of the Court was delivered by

SEN, J.—This is an appeal by some of the defendants in a suit for redemption of a mortgage and is directed against a judgment of this Court under Section 10 of the Letters Patent. Sen, J.

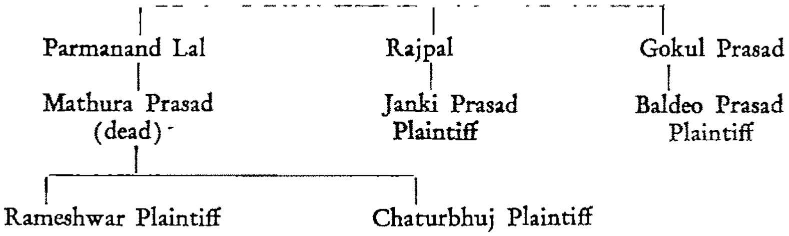
One Parmanand Lal possessed an occupancy holding in Mouza Bhaipur Kalan, pargana Bhulli, in the district of Mirzapur which consisted of 27 plots comprising an area of 15 bighas and 10 biswas. On June 26, 1885, he executed a usufructuary mortgage of the entire holding in favour of

---

*L. P. A. 6 of 1931

Udit Singh for Rs.175. Later on, Parmanand Lal executed another usufructuary mortgage of the identical plots in favour of one Bhagwan Lal for Rs.475 on January 21, 1901 and left Rs.175 with the mortgagee for payment to Udit Singh under the earlier mortgage. It was stipulated in this document that this mortgage was to remain in force for 59 years. On April 29, 1904, Bhagwan Lal sold his mortgagee rights to Mukutdhari Lal, son of Udit Singh, for Rs.499. Mukutdhari Lal was the father of defendants Nos. 1 to 3 and grandfather of defendants Nos. 4 and 5. On March 11, 1924, the sons of Mukutdhari Lal made a sub-mortgage in favour of defendants Nos. 6 to 9. No effect appears to have been given to this sub-mortgage, and on May 8, 1926, they sold the mortgagee rights under the document, dated April 29, 1904, to defendants Nos. 6 to 14.

On January 10, 1927, the suit which has given rise to this appeal was instituted by Janki Prasad, Baldeo Prasad, Rameshwar Prasad and Chaturbhuj for redeeming the mortgage, dated June 26, 1885 on payment of Rs.175. The plaintiffs claimed to be the heirs of Parmanand Lal. The following genealogical table will elucidate the relationship:—



Plaintiffs alleged that Parmanand Lal died 29 or 30 years before suit, that Rajpal and Gokul Prasad were alive at the time of his death, that the equity of redemption was inherited by his brothers and that it devolved subsequently upon the four plaintiffs. They further alleged that the usufructuary mortgage bond, dated January 21, 1901 was collusive, fictitious and without consideration. They also impugned the deed of assignment, dated April 29, 1904 on the same grounds. In 1922, Rani Surajpal Kuer, zemindar of mouza Bhulli Kalan had instituted a suit in the revenue court against the present plaintiffs and defendants Nos. 1 to 5 for possession of the occupancy holding. This was suit No. 543 of 1922. The Rani alleged that Parmanand Lal had died without leaving any heirs and that the occupancy holding had lapsed to her as the zemindar. The present plaintiffs did not contest the suit. The other defendants, who were the successors-in-interest of Udit Singh, in their written statement dated July 11, 1923 resisted the suit on the ground that Parmanand Lal had not died without leaving any issue, that defendants Nos. 1 to 5 (brother and nephews of Parmanand Lal) were his heirs and that the occupancy holding had not lapsed to the zemindar. These pleas found favour with the revenue court, which dismissed the suit on September 28, 1923.

Since the dismissal of the suit, defendants Nos. 1 to 5 and their transferees have continued to remain in possession of the occupancy holding.

Plaintiffs contended that they were entitled to redeem the mortgage as they were the heirs of Parmanand Lal under the personal law and had an interest in the holding under Section 91(a) of the Transfer of Property Act, that the finding in Suit No. 543 of 1922 that Baldeo Prasad and others were the occupancy tenants of the holding by right of succession to Parmanand Lal operated as res judicata and that the defendants were estopped under Section 115 of the Indian Evidence Act from disputing the title of the plaintiffs to redeem.

The suit was directed against 14 defendants; defendants Nos. 1 to 5 were the grandsons and great-grandsons of Udit Singh the original mortgagee; defendants Nos. 6 to 14 were the puisne transferees in possession.

The suit was contested by defendants Nos. 6 to 9 and by defendants Nos. 12 to 14. They contended that Rajpal was not the brother of the mortgagor, that Parmanand Lal died 13 or 14 years before suit, that Rajpal and Gokul had predeceased him, that the plaintiffs had no interest in the equity of redemption, that the mortgage of 1901 was a genuine transaction supported by consideration and that the mortgage, dated June 26, 1885 had been superseded by the later mortgage, dated January 21, 1901 and that under the last mentioned mortgage, the property was not redeemable before the expiry of 59 years.

The court of first instance dismissed the suit. It came to the following conclusions:—

(a) Parmanand Lal and Rajpal were own brothers;

(b) Rajpal died 20 or 21 years ago;

(c) Parmanand Lal died in or about 1324 F.;

(d) Parmanand Lal had executed the mortgage bond, dated January 21, 1901 but this document and the subsequent document, dated April 29, 1904 were not supported by consideration;

(e) On the allegation contained in the plaint that Parmanand Lal died 29 or 30 years ago, Rajpal or the plaintiffs did not inherit the holding, having regard to the provisions of Section 9 of Act XII of 1881 as they did not share in the cultivation of the holding along with Parmanand Lal;

(f) The judgment in suit No. 543 of 1922 did not operate as res judicata; and

(g) The defendants were not estopped under Section 115 of the Indian Evidence Act from denying the title of the plaintiffs to the property in dispute.

The lower appellate court reversed the decision and decreed the suit for redemption. It specifically came to a finding that the mortgage, dated January 21, 1901 was a fictitious document and did not supersede the earlier mortgage dated June 26, 1885. No findings were arrived at as to the time of the death of Parmanand Lal and his brothers or whether the inheritance in the occupancy holding devolved upon the plaintiffs. This is clear from the following extract from the judgment:—

> In my opinion in this case it is not very important to decide when Parmanand Lal died and whether his borthers were alive or not at that time and how the inheritance of Parmanand Lal devolved on his heirs.

The lower appellate court was of opinion that the plaintiffs or, at any rate their father and grandfather were heirs of Parmanand Lal under the Hindu Law and that fact gave them sufficient interest to maintain a suit for redemption of the mortgage. The court also found that the judgment in suit No. 543 of 1922 operated as res judicata as against the defendants; and that the defendants having set up the plaintiffs as the heirs of Parmanand Lal in the occupancy holding in their written statement, dated July 11, 1923, were precluded from contesting the plaintiffs' claim to redeem. The grounds upon which the judgment proceeds may be reproduced here:—

> In 1922, Rani Surajpal Kuar, the zemindar of the plots in dispute, sued Kamta Prasad, Jwala Prasad and Sankhta Prasad, sons of Mukutdhari, and also the brother and nephews of Parmanand Lal for ejectment on the allegation that Parmanand Lal had died without leaving any heir, and his brother, nephews and the mortgagees, the sons of Mukutdhari, were not entitled to remain in possession and she was entitled to possession after ejecting the defendants. Kamta Prasad on his own behalf and on behalf of his brothers filed a written statement on July 11, 1923 and in it he clearly stated that after the death of Parmanand Lal defendants 1 to 5 (brothers and nephews of Parmanand Lal) became the lawful heirs of the occupancy holding in dispute and their names were entered in the village papers 13 or 14 years ago, that it could not be said that Parmanand Lal died without any heir; that the plaintiff had admitted the right of inheritance of the defendants and she could not go against her admission. This ejectment suit was decided on September 28, 1923 and the claim was dismissed on the ground that Parmanand Lal had left heirs who were entitled to inherit under the tenancy law and they were rightly recorded as occupancy tenant in the village papers In the present case, the plaintiffs have been recorded as heirs of Parmanand Lal, the occupancy tenant of the holding, their right was recognized by a competent court in a suit for ejectment by the zemindar in which the heirs of the mortgagor and the heirs of the mortgagee both were parties, and as I have stated above, it was on the plea raised by the heirs of the mortgagee themselves. I think this is conclusive and the mortgagee has got no right to open the question and go behind the finding of the revenue court or village record. I, therefore, hold that the plaintiffs have got a right to redeem the holding in dispute.

The judgment of the lower appellate court has been affirmed by a learned Judge of this Court substantially on the grounds indicated above.

The contesting defendants have appealed to this Court and have challenged the correctness of the findings on all the three points.

In our opinion the contentions of the defendants are well founded and ought to be accepted.

The judgment in suit No. 543 of 1922 cannot operate as res judicata.

We however do not accept the contention of Mr. Narain Prasad Asthana that the judgment of the revenue court was not that of a court of competent jurisdiction. The defendants were not sued as trespassers but appear to have been sued as non-occupancy tenants. Under Section 34 of the Tenancy Act (Act II of 1901, local), it was within the competence of the landholder to treat a person occupying land without his consent as a non-occupancy tenant and to sue for his ejectment in the revenue court. The landholder could do this under Section 34 coupled with Section 63 of the Act. As pointed out in Jagardeo Singh v. Ali Hammad[1] > a person occupying land without the consent of the landlord is a person who enters in possession without the express consent of the landlord and without any previous arrangement with him.

---

[1] 16 A. L. J. 249

The revenue court had therefore jurisdiction to entertain a suit for the ejectment of persons who occupied land without the landlord's consent.

Neither the lower appellate court nor this Court has indicated in its judgment any reasons for holding why the judgment in the former suit should operate as res judicata between the co-defendants. Where parties are arrayed on the same side as co-defendants, any adjudication between them does not operate as res judicata, unless three conditions are satisfied:—

(1) There must be a conflict of interest between the defendants concerned; (2) it must be necessary to decide this conflict in order to give the plaintiff the relief he claims and (3) the question between the defendants must have been finally decided. This is settled law and the final pronouncement on this point has been made by the Judicial Committee in re Mst. Munni Bibi v. Tirloki Nath[2]. Their Lordships have cited with approval the following observation of Wigram, V. C. in Cottingham v. Earl of Shrewsbury[3]:—

> If a plaintiff cannot get at his right without trying and deciding a case between co-defendants, the court will try and decide that case, and that the co-defendant will be bound, but if the relief given to the plaintiff does not require or involve a decision of any case between co-defendants, the co-defendants will not be bound as between each other by any proceeding which may be necessary only to the decree the plaintiff obtains.

In suit No. 543 of 1922, the present plaintiffs did not put forward any defence. There was no conflict of interest between them and the other defendants who were arrayed on the same side with them. There was therefore no question at issue between the two sets of defendants nor any final adjudication of any such question. The decision therefore cannot operate as res judicata.

It has strongly been contended on behalf of the plaintiffs that the defendant-appellants, having in the former suit, held out that the plaintiffs were the heirs of Parmanand Lal and as such the occupancy tenants of the holding in dispute, and this defence having succeeded, with the result that they had continued to remain in possession of this property since 1922, they are precluded from disputing the plaintiffs' title to redeem. The plaintiffs take their stand upon Section 115 of the Indian Evidence Act and also upon a rule of estoppel founded upon general principles. Section 115 of the Indian Evidence Act does not exhaust the doctrine of estoppel. We are however of opinion that the defendants are not estopped from questioning the plaintiffs' title either by reason of Section 115 or by recourse to any doctrine founded upon general principles. In order to operate as estoppel under the aforesaid Section, three conditions must be fulfilled:—(1) There must be a representation made by the opposite party with a view to cause belief, (2) the representation should have been believed under circumstances that its falsity could not be ascertained in spite of due diligence and (3) actions arising out of such belief. There can be no estoppel where truth is accessible. Again, there can be no estoppel in the absence of representation or conduct amounting to such. Further, there can be no estoppel where a party is not misled and has not induced to do something detrimental to its interest owing to the action of the other party. The defendant-appellants, when they filed their written statement in the aforesaid case on July 11, 1923, made no representation to the plaintiff-respondents. The plaintiff-respondents did not contest the suit for their ejectment. Whether or not they were the legal heirs of Parmanand Lal was a matter as much within their knowledge and accessible to search or enquiry as it was to the other co-defendants. The written statement filed by the other defendants did not in any way mislead them or induce them to alter their position to their injury or detriment. Section 115 of the Indian Evidence Act is therefore clearly inapplicable to the case. This matter is concluded by the pronouncement of the Privy Council in re Ram Saran Singh and Munshi Syed Amir Ali v. Mst. Ram Pearey[4]. The facts of this case present many common features. In a former suit, certain co-defendants combined and made a false statement in respect of an alleged mortgage transaction with a view to defeat the plaintiffs' claim. A foreclosure suit was subsequently brought by one of these defendants against the other defendant founded on such alleged mortgage. The defendants contested the suit and denied the mortgage. The plaintiffs pleaded that the defendants were estopped from denying the mortgage which gave the plaintiffs the right of action. It was held by Lord Justice James that "There was nothing whatever to prevent the defendant from showing the real truth of the transaction" and that "it was equally clear that a pleading by two defendants against the suit of another plaintiff never could amount to an estoppel as between them." This ruling was applied by Turner and Oldfield, JJ. in re Param Singh v. Lal Ji Mal[5].

[2] 35 Cal. W. N. 661 at 667 and 668

[3] 3 Hare 627 at 638

Lastly, it was contended that the plaintiff-respondents were the heirs of Parmanand Lal under the Hindu Law and were entitled to redeem as being persons having an interest in the right to redeem the mortgaged property under Section 91(a) of the Transfer of Property Act (Act IV of 1882). An occupancy tenure is the creation of statute, and where a special rule of succession has been laid down in the statute, it is the statute which regulates the devolution of inheritance and not the personal law of the tenant. The interest referred to in Section 91 can accrue either by succession, conveyance or contract. No right accrued to the plaintiffs by conveyance or by contract. In order to determine whether the right devolved by inheritance, we have got to look into the statute, which was in force at the time when the succession opened. If Parmanand Lal died before 1902, Section 9 of the Act XII of 1881 applied and regulated the inheritance. Under this Act, his brothers and nephews are no heirs to the holding, if they did not share in its cultivation jointly with Parmanand Lal. If Parmanand Lal died after 1902, inheritance would be governed by Section 22 of Act II of 1901 and his brothers would be entitled to succeed to his holding even though they did not share the cultivation with him. In the absence of a finding as to the time of Parmanand Lal's death, it is

[4] 13 Moore's I. A. 551

[5] I. L. R. 1 All. 403

CIVIL
1932
SRI RAM SINGH v. BALDEO PRASAD
Sen, J.

impossible to determine whether or not the plaintiff-respondents had any title to the property by succession to Parmanand Lal. The appeal has not been tried on the merits. We have however not the slightest doubt in holding that the personal law of the parties was not applicable to the case of succession to an occupancy holding, Bhura v. Shahabuddin[6]. If therefore the plaintiffs are not the heirs to Parmanand Lal under the Tenancy Law in force at the time when the inheritance opened, they cannot maintain a suit for redemption. They acquired no interest in the holding under their personal law. The 'interest' referred to in Section 91 of the Transfer of Property Act is interest in the property sought to be redeemed.

As the appeal has not been heard and disposed of on the merits and as we are reversing the findings of this Court and of the lower appellate court upon preliminary points, this appeal must go back for trial on the merits. We accordingly allow the appeal, set aside the judgments and decrees of this Court and of the lower appellate court and remand the case to the lower appellate court under Order 41, Rule 23 of the Civil Procedure Code for its reinstatement under its original number and disposal according to law. Costs here and heretofore shall abide the event.

Appeal allowed
Case remanded

---

[6] I. L. R. 30 All. 128

NEWAL KISHORE AND ANOTHER (Defendants)
versus
SARJU RAM SAHU (Plaintiff)*

CIVIL
1932
March 31
MUKERJI, J.
BENNET, J.

Transfer of Property Act, Sec. 55 (2)—Sale-deed—No covenant of indemnity—Vendee had some idea as to defect in vendor's title—Whether vendor liable under Sec. 55 (2).

Where the sale deed does not contain any statement to the effect that the vendor was assuring the vendee that his title subsists, held, that unless the vendor's liability as imposed by Sec. 55, Sub-sec. (2) Transfer of Property Act is excluded by express covenant, his liability must be deemed to subsist, notwithstanding the fact that the vendee may have some idea as to the defect in the title of the vendor. Ram Chander Dutt v. Dwarka Nath Bysack, I. L. R. 16 Cal. 330 and Muhammad Ibrahim v. Nakched Ram, 7 A. L. J. 752 relied on.

FIRST APPEAL from a decree of S. MAITRA ESQ., Additional Subordinate Judge of Basti.

P. L. Banerji, N. Upadhiya, S. N. Verma and Kartar Narain Agarwala for the appellants.

K. N. Katju and Harnandan Prasad for the respondents.

The judgment of the Court was delivered by

Mukerji, J.

MUKERJI, J.—This is an appeal by the two defendants in the suit. The appeal, although filed jointly, has been argued separately on behalf of the two appellants. The reasons will be apparent from the facts of the case which are as follows:—

---

*F. A. 267 of 1928

The Raja of Basti owned the property in suit. It was eventually purchased by certain gentlemen known as the Pandes of Narharia in the district of Basti. An 8 annas share in the village of Bhatendwa was sold by the said Pandes to Babu Nawal Kishore, the appellant No. 1, for a sum of Rs.6,000. The entire sum was left with the vendee for payment to certain mortgagees who were in possession. This was on March 10, 1914. The defendant No. 1 sold the property to the plaintiff on August 31, 1915 for a sum of Rs.15,000. Out of this consideration money a sum of Rs.9,000 was paid in cash to the appellant No. 1 and Rs.6,000 was left with the vendee for payment to the mortgagees who were duly paid. After this the sons of the Pandes of Narharia brought a suit against Sarju Ram Sahu, the plaintiff-respondent in this case, and Mr. Nawal Kishore, the appellant No. 1, to recover the entire 8 annas share on the ground that the family of the then plaintiffs and the vendors was a joint one and the vendors had no right to transfer the family property. The suit succeeded to the extent of 7 annas 8 pies share out of the entire 8 annas share sold. Sarju Ram Sahu filed an appeal to the High Court but the appeal was dismissed. Thereupon Sarju Ram filed an application to this Court for leave to appeal to the Privy Council. This was rejected and then he applied to their Lordships of the Judicial Committee for special leave to appeal. This application was also dismissed. Thereupon the plaintiff filed the suit out of which this appeal has arisen.

In the plaint as originally filed the plaintiff stated that the defendants were members of a joint Hindu family and for some reasons best known to him the defendant No. 2, the father of the defendant No. 1, had obtained the sale-deed from the Pandes of Narharia in favour of his son, the defendant No. 1. Later on the plaint was amended and it stood as if both the defendants had made the purchase, the sale-deed being executed in favour of only one of the defendants.

After this amendment of the plaint, the defendants filed their written statements. The defendant No. 1, Mr. Nawal Kishore, said that he was only a benamidar and he was not liable on account of any claim for damages and was not liable to refund any part of the purchase-money. The defendant No. 2, the father, said that he was not an executant of the sale-deed and therefore he was not liable. It was admitted by both the defendants that the father and son were members of a joint Hindu family. As regards the damages, the plaintiff stated in the plaint that the costs of the application for leave to appeal made in this Court and the costs of the application to His Majesty in Council for special leave to appeal had been incurred at the instance of Babu Jugal Kishore who had agreed to meet all the expenses if the applications proved unsuccessful.

The learned Subordinate Judge framed several issues and he held that the defendants being members of a joint Hindu family were both liable and that the plaintiffs were entitled to recover a proportionate part of the purchase money paid by him and the costs incurred by him in his litigation with the sons of the Pandes of Narharia. He disallowed the amounts spent by the plaintiff in his applications for leave to appeal in India and in England.

CIVIL
1932
NEWAL KISHORE
v.
SARJU RAM SAHU
Mukerji, J.

The defendants have filed this appeal and the plaintiff has filed a cross-objection in respect of the portion of the damages disallowed by the court below.

The appeal on behalf of the appellant No. 2, Babu Jugal Kishore, has been argued by Mr. Upadhia and the appeal of Mr. Nawal Kishore, the appellant No. 1, has been argued by himself.

The argument on behalf of the appellant No. 2 was that the sale-deed did not contain any covenant to indemnify the plaintiff and that, in any case, all the important facts relating to the property had been mentioned in the sale-deed and, therefore, the plaintiff having purchased with his eyes open was not entitled to recover any damages.

The sale deed has been read out to us. We do not find in it any statement of the fact that the Pandes of Narharia had sons who were members of a joint Hindu family with them. This was an important fact which Sarju Ram might have been told for his benefit. But the matter does not really stand on such a narrow ground. It is true that the sale-deed in question does not contain any statement to the effect that the vendor was assuring the vendee that his title subsists. But by application of Section 55, Sub-section (2) there is an implied contract on the part of the vendor that his title subsists.

Some cases have been cited to us on behalf of Babu Jugal Kishore and these are Kulla Mal v. Umra[1], Gondu Ramashubbu Iyer v. Muthiah Kone[2] and Kali Din v. Madho[3]. The first two cases are single Judge judgments and do not really cover the point in question. In the first case the transfer was of an occupancy holding which was not transferable under the law. In the second case what the court considered was Section 55, Sub-section (1), Clause (a) and not Section 55, Sub-section (2). In the last-mentioned case the observations of Stuart, J. of this Court do not touch the point in question. On the other hand there are two clearly applicable cases which go entirely against the appellant. These are Ram Chander Dutt v. Dwarka Nath Bysack[4] and Muhammad Ibrahim v. Nakched Ram[5]. In both these cases it was held that unless the vendor's liability as imposed by Section 55, Sub-section (2) was excluded by express covenant, his liability would be deemed to subsist, notwithstanding the fact that the vendee may have some idea as to the defect in the title of the vendor. In the Calcutta case it was stated that the vendee was entitled to rely on the assurance of title on the part of the vendor, although he himself may have had some doubt as to it. We are of opinion that the view taken in Calcutta and in this Court quoted above is the correct view. The liability of the vendor clearly exists.

The next point that was urged was that the liability was of the vendor Babu Nawal Kishore, the appellant No. 1, and not of Babu Jugal Kishore. We shall consider this point when we consider the liability of the appellant No. 1 himself. Now we take up the case of appellant No. 1. His case was that he was only a benamidar for his father and he was not liable.

Now, what are the facts that we find established? We find that the

[1] 61 I. C. 604

[2] 1925 A. I. R. Mad. 968

[3] 1923 A. I. R. All. 169

[4] I. L. R. 16 Cal. 330

[5] 7 A. L. J. 752

father and son, the appellants, formed a joint Hindu family. We find that the son purchased a property. We find that the father approached the plaintiff (see the evidence of the plaintiff) and proposed that he should purchase the property. Babu Jugal Kishore who is a practising pleader was the legal adviser of Sarju Ram in his cases. When the price was ultimately settled at Rs.15,000 both the appellants arrived at Basti and appellant No. 1 executed the sale deed. The sum of Rs.9,000 was handed over to Babu Nawal Kishore as the vendor. This fact, he admits, but he nowhere says that he handed over the money to his father, he himself being a benamidar and, as such, having nothing to do with the money. All these facts stand unrebutted. None of the appellants entered into the witness-box to state that the facts were different from what have been deposed to. On the facts before us we have no hesitation in coming to the conclusion that the purchase was made by the joint family in the name of the junior member of the family; that the sale was on behalf of the family, and that the sale-deed had to be executed by the junior member for the simple reason that the sale-deed executed by the Pandes of Narharia stood in his favour. On these findings there is no question of a benamidar coming on the scene. We hold with the court below that both the defendants are liable.

In the view of the facts that we take it is not necessary to consider what would be the liability, if any, of a man who is a pure benamidar and not a member of a joint family interested in the property and transferring the same as such.

The result is that the appeal fails and we hereby dismiss it with costs.

As regards the cross-objection, we have already mentioned that it is for the costs incurred in the two applications for leave to appeal, and sought to be recovered on the allegation that Babu Jugal Kishore promised to recoup them. It has been conceded before us by the learned counsel on behalf of the plaintiff that he could not base his claim on the ground that he was entitled to damages for loss of property at the instance of the sons of the Pandes of Narharia. We find it difficult to decree the claim for no less than Rs.1,800 and odd on the mere statement of the munib of the plaintiff that he approached B. Jugal Kishore and got an assurance from him that he would recoup the costs if the applications proved unsuccessful. There is a contradiction on this point between the palintiff and his munib. The plaintiff said that when his munib returned after a visit to the defendants, he (the munib) told him (the plaintiff) that both the father and son had agreed to recoup the plaintiff his costs. The munib says that it was Babu Jugal Kishore alone who gave the assurance. It would certainly have been wise on the part of the plaintiff to obtain some assurance in writing from Babu Jugal Kishore that he was going to repay the costs of the applications for leave to appeal if the applications were to prove unsuccessful.

For the foregoing reasons, we hold that the cross-objection cannot succeed and we dismiss it also with costs.

Appeal dismissed

RAGHUNATH DAS (Plaintiff)
versus
GANESH DAS AND OTHERS (Defendants)*

CIVIL
1932
Jan. 19
PULLAN, J.
NIAMATULLAH, J.

Civil Procedure Code, Sec. 11—Appeal—Abatement—Whether decision of trial court operates as res judicata—Custom—Ancient—How to be proved—Whether proof of instances essential—Whether prevailing practice in maths of the same order relevant.

Where an appeal is not decided on the merits but abates, so that the appeal becomes infructuous and the decision of the trial court becomes conclusive, the latter will operate as res judicata as regards questions decided by it, in a subsequent suit between the same parties, assuming that other conditions of the rule exist.

Evidence afforded by instances is more satisfactory than evidence afforded by tradition but an ancient custom can be established by evidence of persons who heard it mentioned by persons deceased who had special means of knowledge.

While it is true that questions relating to succession to the office of a mahant have to be decided on proof of custom applicable to each particular math, the prevailing practice in a large number of 'maths' of the same order (that installation by mahants belonging to the same order is considered necessary) cannot be ignored.

Where the plaintiff alleged that the 'math' in question had existed for several centuries, and this fact was admitted in the written statement without any qualification or reservation, held, that the District Judge was not justified in holding contrary to the case of both parties that the 'math' in question was of recent growth.

SECOND APPEAL from a decree of T. N. MULLA ESQ., District Judge of Gorakhpur, reversing a decree of BABU HARI HAR PRASAD, Additional Subordinate Judge.

K. N. Katju, P. L. Banerji and N. Upadhiya for the appellant.

Iqbal Ahmad and Sankar Saran for the respondents.

The judgment of the Court was delivered by

Niamatullah, J.

NIAMATULLAH, J.—This appeal has arisen out of a suit brought by the plaintiff-appellant for a declaration of his right as 'mahanth' of the Kabirpanthi Math, situate in 'muhalla' Ghasi Katra, city Gorakhpur, in succession to the preceding 'mahanth' Malhu Das. Ganesh Das, the 1st defendant, is a rival claimant to the 'gaddi', while the other defendants were transferees of certain properties alleged to belong to the 'math' but wrongfully transferred by Mahanth Malhu Das.

The plaintiff-appellant, who claims to be the disciple of Khelawan Das, a disciple of Malhu Das and who is described in the proceedings as 'grand chela' of Malhu Das, has been engaged in litigation for about 15 years. He had instituted, with the permission of the District Judge, Gorakhpur, a suit under the Religious and Charitable Endowment Act against Mahanth Malhu Das (1) for removal of Malhu Das from the office of 'mahanth', (2) for certain alienations made by him in favour of the present defendants Nos. 2 to 6 being declared invalid, and (3) for appointment of himself as a 'mahanth' in succession to Malhu Das. The first two reliefs were granted. As regards the 3rd, it was held that the Court had no power to appoint the plaintiff as 'mahanth'. Accordingly it was refused. Three appeals were filed from the decision of the Subordinate Judge: one by the plaintiff, a 2nd by the transferees and the 3rd by Malhu Das. During the pendency of the appeals Malhu Das died on December 12, 1921. Ganesh Das, present defendant No. 1, claimed to be his 'chela' and entitled to have his name brought on the record in place of Malhu Das. He was opposed by the plaintiff, who denied that Ganesh Das was the 'chela' of Malhu Das. Accordingly, an issue was remitted to the court of first instance for a finding on this question. Eventually, it was held that Ganesh Das was not the 'chela' of Malhu Das. Two out of the three appeals already mentioned ended without the questions arising therein being decided on the merits. Malhu Das's appeal was declared to have abated, as no one entitled to claim as his legal representative had applied within limitation for substitution of his name in place of Malhu Das, Ganesh Das's application having been dismissed. The plaintiff's appeal was virtually withdrawn, as it was dismissed on his statement that he had been installed as a 'mahanth' by other 'mahanths' and the gentry of the town after the decree of the trial court removing Malhu Das from the office of 'mahanth'. The only appeal which was heard and decided by this Court was that of the transferees. As against them, the judgment of the first court was upheld. In the meantime, Ganesh Das succeeded in obtaining mutation of names after the death of Malhu Das. The present suit was instituted on August 2, 1923 against Ganesh Das and the transferees, who had been unsuccessful before the Subordinate Judge and this Court, for declaration of his right as 'mahanth' and for recovery of the properties in possession of the unsuccessful transferees, namely, defendants Nos. 2 to 6. The plaintiff relied on a custom obtaining in all Kabirpanthi Maths and also in the math in question, under which, on the death or removal of a 'mahanth', a successor is installed by other 'mahanths' of Kabirpanth Maths and the gentry of the neighbourhood, such successor being either the disciple or disciple of the disciple of the preceding 'mahanth'. The plaintiff alleged that he had been installed after Malhu Das's removal under the decree passed by the court of first instance in the suit under the Religious and Charitable Endowment Act. The Subordinate Judge, before whom the suit had been instituted, dismissed it on the preliminary ground that the plaintiff failed to establish that he had been installed as alleged by him. On appeal, the Additional District Judge set aside the decree of the court of first instance, holding that the plaintiff had established his installation, as alleged by him. Accordingly, the suit was remanded under O. 41, R. 23, C. P. C., for a decision on all the questions arising in the case, specially the issue relating to the custom, on which the trial court had expressed no opinion. On December 15, 1924, the Additional Subordinate Judge decreed the plaintiff's suit in full. Ganesh Das, defendant No. 1, preferred an appeal. The transferee-defendants, except Manohar Sahu who filed a separate appeal, acquiesced in the decision of the trial court. Both the appeals were heard by the learned District Judge of Gorakhpur, who allowed them by

---

*S. A. 596 of 1928

CIVIL

1932

RAGHUNATH DAS
v.
GANESH DAS

Niamat-ullah, J.

his judgment of March 19, 1928 and dismissed the plaintiff's suit. The plaintiff has filed two appeals in this Court. The present appeal is against the decree of the lower appellate court passed in the appeal preferred by Ganesh Das, while second appeal No. 597 of 1928 is from the decree passed by him in the appeal preferred by the transferee. In so far as the learned District Judge found that Ganesh Das was not the 'chela' of Malhu Das, a cross-objection has been filed by Ganesh Das impugning that finding. We may say at once that no arguments have been addressed to us in support of the cross-objection, directed as it is against a finding of fact. It must, therefore, fail and the finding of the learned District Judge that Ganesh Das, defendant No. 1 was not the 'chela' of Mahanth Malhu Das is accepted by us in discussing the merits of the case so far as they relate to the plaintiff's appeal.

The learned District Judge has held that the plaintiff was installed as 'mahanth' by the "mahanths of his sect and neighbouring raises" during the lifetime of Malhu Das after the latter's removal in pursuance of the decree passed in the suit brought by the plaintiff under the Religious and Charitable Endowment Act. He felt bound to arrive at that finding in view of the order of remand passed by the Additional District Judge in appeal from the first decree of the trial court dismissing the suit. We think that the learned District Judge was right in taking that view of the aforesaid order of remand, which was one under O. 41, R. 23, and could have been appealed from but as it was not challenged by an appeal, it became conclusive. No attempt was made on behalf of any of the respondents to impugn the correctness of the view taken by the learned District Judge on this aspect of the case. We must, therefore, take it that the plaintiff-appellant was accepted by the 'mahanths' of Kabirpanthi Maths and the gentry of the neighbourhood as the rightful successor of Malhu Das after the latter's removal.

Though the appellant starts with important findings in his favour, namely, that defendant No. 1, the rival claimant to the 'gaddi', has no locus standi and that he had been installed by the 'mahanths' of Kabirpanthi Maths and the gentry of the neighbourhood, yet he is confronted with a definite finding by the learned District Judge that he failed to establish that he was the grand chela of Malhu Das and further that he failed to establish the custom pleaded by him. If all the findings of the learned District Judge were to stand, a most anomalous state of things will exist, at least, for sometime, as regards the management of the 'math' and its properties. His findings, however, must be accepted, being those of fact, unless they can be displaced on any legitimate ground.

It was contended before the learned District Judge, as has been done before us, that the finding arrived at by the trial court and by the High Court on appeal in the suit under the Religious and Charitable Endowment Act to the effect that the plaintiff-appellant was the 'grand chela' of Malhu Das operates as res judicata on the same question arising in the present litigation. The learned District Judge held that it did not, as, to quote his own words, > an appeal having been filed by Malhu Das and having been admitted in the

Civil

1932

Raghu-nath Das v. Ganesh Das

Niamat-ullah, J.

> appellate court, the matters decided by the lower court ceased to be res judicata and were left open between the parties for final decision of the appellate court. It can hardly be denied that there was no final decision by the High Court as against Malhu Das, because his appeal had abated.

We do not think that the ground on which the view of the learned District Judge proceeds is sustainable. It is true when the decision of the trial court is appealed from, all questions decided by it again become sub judice, and its decision cannot operate as res judicata pending the appeal. It is also true that the decision of the appellate court on such questions supersedes the decision of the 1st court, so that for the purpose of res judicata the decision of the appellate court, unless it adopts that of the 1st court, is to be considered; but where the appeal is not decided on the merits but abates, so that the appeal becomes infructuous and the decision of the trial court becomes conclusive, the latter will operate as res judicata as regards questions decided by it, in a subsequent suit between the same parties, assuming, of course, that other conditions of the rule exist. We have been taken by the learned advocate for the appellant through the judgment of the trial court in the suit under the Religious and Charitable Endowment Act and that of the court of appeal, and find that the question of the plaintiff being the 'grand chela' of Malhu Das was directly and substantially in issue in that case, the fact having been alleged by the plaintiff and denied by the opposite party. Both the courts definitely found that the plaintiff was the 'grand chela' of Malhu Das. The question was material in so far as the plaintiff had no right to take proceedings under the Religious and Charitable Endowment Act, unless he established that he had such an interest in the 'math' as entitled him to sue. Referring to the plaintiff's right to sue, the learned Judges of this Court, who heard the appeal, observed as follows:—

> What the plaintiff has proved is that he is a celibate ascetic belonging to the same fraternity as Mahant Malhu Das. He has proved, further, that he has been personally associated in a peculiar manner with that body or group of ascetics who resided on the premises in the city of Gorakhpur referred to in this case as the Math of Ghasi Katra, that he took part in the worship performed on these premises and benefited by the charities dispensed there in favour of Sadhus or ascetics appertaining to this sect. These facts alone would appear sufficient under the provisions of Sec. 15 of the Religious Endowment Act No. XX of 1863 to give B. Raghunath Das a right to maintain the suit. We think it right to add, however, that we see no reason to doubt the evidence by which the plaintiff sought to prove an even closer association with this establishment by showing that he was himself the disciple of B. Khelawan Das, who was a disciple of Mahant Malhu Das.

It was contended before us that it was not necessary for the purposes of that case that the court should go so far as to pronounce the opinion of the plaintiff being the 'grand chela' of Malhu Das, as a lesser association with the 'math' was sufficient to entitle the plaintiff to sue and the court found that the plaintiff was a celibate ascetic belonging to the same fraternity as Mahanth Malhu Das. It must be observed that the plaintiff cannot belong to the same fraternity as Mahanth Malhu Das unless he is a 'grand chela' of Malhu Das, as alleged by him. It is not suggested by the defendants that the plaintiff could belong to the same fraternity as Mahanth Malhu Das for any reasons other than those alleged by the plaintiff himself. The plaintiff could be a "celibate ascetic" only if he had been initiated by Khelawan Das as his 'chela'. The two characters of the plaintiff are so inseparable that the finding arrived at in the previous case, accepted as a whole, must imply that the plaintiff was the 'grand chela' of Malhu Das. We are of opinion that the question whether the plaintiff was the 'grand chela' of Malhu Das was directly and substantially in issue in the previous case and was heard and finally decided in that case, and the decision thereon operates as res judicata on the same question arising in the present litigation.

It is argued by the learned advocate for the respondents that Ganesh Das cannot be deemed to be claiming under Malhu Das and that any decision obtaining against the latter cannot operate as res judicata against the former. We do not think this contention is well-founded. Malhu Das was a party in the earlier suit and represented the 'math'. Ganesh Das claims now to be representing the 'math', being, according to himself, its 'mahanth'. We are satisfied that the present suit is between the same parties or those claiming under the parties to the previous suit, as required by Section 11, C. P. C.

Apart from what the lower appellate court held on the question of res judicata, it should have regarded the judgment in the previous case as possessing some evidential value on the question whether the plaintiff was the 'grand chela' of Malhu Das. Again, the lower appellate court having accepted as a fact that the plaintiff-appellant had been installed by the 'mahanths' of other Kabirpanthi Maths and the gentry of the neighbourhood, should have treated it as a circumstance possessed of some evidential value on the question whether the plaintiff was the 'grand chela' of Malhu Das. The learned District Judge, however, approached this question as if there was nothing but the oral evidence of a few witnesses bearing on that question. We are clearly of opinion that the two pieces of evidence referred to above, should not have been ignored by the learned District Judge and that his finding, though one of fact, is vitiated in consequence of such evidence being ignored. We have been taken through the evidence of several witnesses examined on behalf of the plaintiff and of the three witnesses examined on behalf of the defendants, and think that the finding of the trial court, which is in favour of the plaintiff, should be accepted. Taking the oral evidence with all the probabilities of the case, the recognition of the plaintiff as the 'grand chela' of Malhu Das in the judgment of the trial court and of this Court in the suit under the Religious and Charitable Endowment Act and by a number of Kabirpanthi Maths and the gentry of the neighbourhood as the rightful successor of Malhu Das, we are driven to the conclusion that the plaintiff's case on this point is true. The learned District Judge has not referred to the evidence of the defendants' witnesses probably considering it as quite worthless. In any case we take it to be so. For these reasons, we hold that, apart from any previous judgment operating as res judicata, the plaintiff is proved by the evidence adduced in this case that he was the 'grand chela' of Malhu Das, as alleged by him.

CIVIL
1932
RAGHUNATH DAS
v.
GANESH DAS
Niamatullah, J.

As already stated, the learned District Judge has found against the plaintiff on the question of custom set up by him. Referring to a passage in the judgment of the 1st court in the suit under the Religious and Charitable Endowment Act and one or two other documents, the learned Judge held "that the office of the math is not a very ancient institution", and "that the office of the mahanth has been so far hereditary." He went on to hold "that the math in dispute was established definitely as a math only in the time of Paltan Das", that is, the immediate predecessor of Malhu Das. Now, this finding is contrary to what is admitted by both parties in pleadings. It is alleged in paragraph 1 of the plaint that the 'math' in question had existed for several centuries. Ganesh Das admitted this fact in the 1st paragraph of his written statement without any qualification or reservation. The learned District Judge was not justified in holding contrary to the case of both parties that the 'math' in question is of recent growth and no custom such as is alleged by the plaintiff could come into existence. The learned Judge lays stress on the fact that no instance has been cited in which a 'mahanth' was removed and another appointed. It is true that evidence afforded by instances is more satisfactory than evidence afforded by tradition but it is beyond question that an ancient custom can be established by evidence of persons who heard it mentioned by persons deceased who had special means of knowledge. The witnesses examined by the plaintiff, who, it should be noted, have not been disbelieved by the learned District Judge, so far as they speak of the custom, state it to be the same as alleged by the plaintiff. The only custom which the defendants have alleged in the written statement relates to the case of a 'mahanth' who dies leaving several chelas. They do not allege any custom where a 'mahanth' dies without leaving a chela. The witnesses examined on behalf of the defendants, do not, likewise, throw any light on the question. While we agree that questions relating to succession to the office of a 'mahanth' have to be decided on proof of custom applicable to each particular 'math',[*] we cannot ignore the prevailing practice in a large number of 'maths' of the same order that installation by 'mahanths' belonging to the same order is considered necessary. Considering the evidence as a whole, we are of opinion that the finding arrived at by the lower appellate court cannot be supported, vitiated as it is by reasons some of which have been mentioned, and that the finding of the trial court, which is based on the evidence produced by the plaintiff, should be allowed to prevail. We have considered the evidence as to custom for ourselves, and find ourselves in agreement with the trial court. We may note that in interfering with the finding of the lower appellate court on the question of custom we have not departed from the principle laid down in the recent Full Bench case of this Court in the Municipal Board, Benares v. Kandhiya Lal[1] cited at the bar.

The result is that the appeal is allowed. The decree of the lower appellate court is set aside and that of the court of first instance is restored. The cross-objection preferred by defendant No. 1 is dismissed with costs.

Appeal allowed

---

[*] Ram Prakash Das v. Anand Das, 14 A. L. J. 621

[1] 1931 A. L. J. 757

HALIMA BEGAM (Plaintiff)
versus
MOHIT ULLAH KHAN AND ANOTHER (Defendants)*

CIVIL
1932
March 8
BANERJI, J.
KING, J.

Land Revenue Act (III of 1901), Sec. 233 (k)—Joint co-sharers in a unit formed by partition—Civil suit raising a question of title between them—Whether barred.

There is no authority for the proposition that Sec. 233 (k), Land Revenue Act, bars a civil suit raising a question of title between joint co-sharers in a unit formed by partition, because such questions might have been raised in the partition proceedings. Supposing A, B and C are recorded co-sharers in a mahal, their respective shares being recorded as 8 annas, 5 annas and 3 annas. Supposing A applies for separation of his share into a separate mahal. B and C do not wish for any partition inter se and prefer to remain joint in one mahal, and the revenue court therefore would only be concerned in dividing the original mahal into two shares of equal value. If after partition C claims as against B a declaration that his share in the new mahal which has been allotted to them jointly is not 3|5ths but ½, then his suit would not be barred, because the question of title, though it might have been raised under Sec. 111 during the partition proceedings, would not have affected the partition. Muhammad Sadiq v. Laute Ram, I. L. R. 23 All. 291 explained; Lal Bihari v. Parkali Kunwar, I. L. R. 42 All. 309 relied on.

FIRST APPEAL from a decree of P. C. MOGHA ESQ., Subordinate Judge of Aligarh.

S. K. Dar and T. A. K. Sherwani for the appellant.

P. L. Banerji, M. Waliullah and M. A. Aziz for the respondents.

This appeal arose out of a suit for possession of zamindari shares in certain villages. The portion of the judgment dealing with the applicability of Sec. 233 (k), Land Revenue Act, is reproduced below.

King, J.

KING, J.—The main question is whether the trial court was right in holding that the plaintiff's claim for a larger share in village Hamirpur was barred either by S. 233 (k) of the Land Revenue Act or by the rule of res judicata?

In 1906, two co-sharers of village Hamirpur made an application to the revenue court for separation of their shares by partition. It must be presumed that notice was given to all the other recorded co-sharers including the present plaintiff Mst. Halima Begam. We find from the khewat of the village for the year 1315 Fasli that the result of the partition was to divide the mahal into four pattis. One of the pattis was allotted to the two brothers Mohit Ullah Khan and Azmat Ullah Khan and to their sister Mst. Halima Begam jointly, the two brothers being recorded as owning 14 shares and Halima Begam's being recorded as owning one share in this patti. Presumably the members of this family must have applied for having their shares formed into a separate patti. The imperfect partition of the mahal and village into four pattis was sanctioned and declared to come into force on July 1, 1908.

---

*F. A. 512 of 1927

Now the question is whether the plaintiff can claim in a civil court a share larger than the share allotted to her in the partition.

The question of res judicata may be disposed of briefly. The parties to the present suit, or their predecessors-in-title, were arrayed upon the same side in the partition proceedings. If they applied jointly for having their shares formed into a separate patti, as appears probable, then they were in the position of co-plaintiffs. Otherwise they were in the position of co-defendants. No partition was effected between the parties inter se. A separate patti was allotted to them jointly, proportionate to the total value of their recorded shares. There was no conflict of interest between them and for the purpose of effecting the partition it was unnecessary to determine the shares of the parties inter se. In such circumstances we hold that the plaintiff's claim to a larger share as against her brothers is not barred by the rule of res judicata. The extent of the shares of the parties inter se was not raised or decided by the revenue court. Although it was open to the plaintiff to have raised the question of title in the partition proceedings, it is difficult to say that she ought to have raised such question and in any case it cannot be held that she ought to have raised the question as a ground of defence or attack, since there was no conflict of interest between the parties inter se. We hold therefore that the rule of res judicata does not bar the present suit.

The next question is whether the plaintiff's claim is barred by S. 233 (k).

Section 233 (k) prohibits the institution of a civil suit or proceeding in respect to "partition except as provided in Ss. 111 and 112". The present suit was certainly not instituted as provided in S. 111; so the only question is whether it is a "suit with respect to partition." This language is very wide, but ever since the decision of the Full Bench in Mohammad Sadiq v. Laute Ram[1] it has been understood as referring to a suit which aims at altering the distribution of property effected by the partition. In the absence of authority we should find it difficult to hold that the present suit is of such a nature. There was no division of property between the parties. One patti was allotted to them jointly. It is true that the extent of their respective interests was recorded in accordance with S. 114 but it would be difficult to hold that any alteration of the recorded shares of the parties inter se would amount to an alteration in the distribution of property effected by the revenue authorities.

The plaintiff's advocate has cited a number of rulings in which it has been held that where a civil suit does not aim at disturbing the distribution of property effected by the revenue court, so as to alter the total amount of shares in any mahal or patti or to alter the area of any mahal or patti, but merely aims at substituting the plaintiff for the defendant as owner of a share or plot of land in a mahal or patti, then the suit is not barred by S. 233 (k). We may refer to Data Din v. Nohra[2], Ram Rekha Misra v. Lallu Misra[3] and the Full Bench decision in Kalka Prasad v. Man Mohan Lal[4]. In all these cases the parties had conflicting interests in the partition proceedings, i.e., they were allotted separate mahals or pattis. Nevertheless,

[1] I. L. R. 23 All. 291

[2] 1930 A. L. J. 1046

[3] I. L. R. 53 All. 568

[4] I. L. R. 38 All. 302

it was held that a civil suit by one party claiming a share in property allotted by partition to the opposite party, was not barred by S. 233 (k). In the present case the revenue court made no division of property between the parties and there was no conflict of interest between them. The rulings cited are, therefore, distinguishable upon the facts. Although we hold that S. 233 (k) does not bar the present suit, we wish it to be clearly understood that we do not arrive at that conclusion on the strength of these rulings which seem to be hardly reconcilable with the Full Bench decisions in Muhammad Sadiq v. Laute Ram[5] and Bijai Misir v. Kali Prasad Misir[6].

Our decision is supported by two other rulings cited by the plaintiff, to which we shall presently refer.

The respondent's learned counsel contends for the proposition that if the plaintiff could have claimed a larger share under S. 111 and failed to do so, then she is debarred from raising the question in the present suit. He relies strongly upon the Full Bench decision in Muhammad Sadiq v. Laute Ram. This is undoubtedly the most authoritative Full Bench decision on this point as it was passed by five Judges unanimously. The decision turns upon the construction of the corresponding provisions of the North-Western Provinces Land Revenue Act 1873 which laid down that "no civil court shall exercise jurisdiction over any of the following matters", one of the matters mentioned in Clause (F) being, "The distribution of the land or allotment of the revenue of a mahal by partition". The language of S. 233 (k) of the present Land Revenue Act is even wider, and we think that any civil suit which would be barred under the Act of 1873 would also be barred under the present Act of 1901. In that case it was held that if a party to a partition desires to raise any question of title affecting the partition, he must do so according to the procedure laid down in Ss. 112 to 115 of the Act. If a question of title affecting the partition which might have been raised under Ss. 112 and 113 of the Act during the partition proceedings, is not so raised and the partition is completed, S. 241 (F) bars the parties to the partition from raising subsequently in a civil court any such question of title. In our opinion the Full Bench decision does not go to the length of laying down the proposition for which the respondent contends. The decision does not refer to every question of title which might be raised by a party to a partition but only to a question of title affecting the partition. We consider this qualification very important. In the case before the Full Bench, the question of title which might have been raised did affect the partition, because there was a conflict of interest between the parties to whom separate mahals were being allotted in the partition proceedings. Supposing A, B and C are co-sharers in a mahal, their respective shares being recorded as 8 annas, 5 annas and 3 annas. Supposing A applies for separation of his share into a separate mahal. If B and C do not wish for any partition inter se and prefer to remain joint in one mahal, then the revenue court would only be concerned in dividing the original mahal into two shares of equal value. If after the partition C claims as against B a declaration that his share in the new mahal which has been allotted to them jointly is not 3|5ths but ½, then we understand that his suit would not be barred, on the authority of the Full Bench ruling, because the question of title would not have affected the partition even if it had been raised during the partition proceedings. If, on the other hand, B and C applied to have their property divided inter se, in accordance with their recorded shares, so that the revenue court formed three mahals proportionate to 8 annas, 5 annas and 3 annas respectively, then if after the confirmation of the partition C claims a one anna share in B's mahal, such suit would, in accordance with the Full Bench ruling, be barred, because it is a question of title which might have been raised during the partition proceedings and which would have affected the partition. If C had raised the question during the partition proceedings and had established his claim, then the revenue court instead of allotting to B and C unequal mahals proportionate to 5 annas and 3 annas respectively, would have allotted 2 equal mahals proportionate to 4 annas each. Interpreting the Full Bench ruling in this light, we find that it is no authority for the contention that the plaintiff's suit is barred by S. 233 (k), because the question of title, though it might have been under S. 111, did not affect the partition.

---

[5] I. L. R. 23 All. 291

[6] I. L. R. 39 All. 469

Not a single ruling has been cited in which it has been held that S. 233 (k) bars a suit raising a question of title between joint co-sharers in a unit formed by partition, because such questions might have been raised in the partition proceedings. On the other hand, the plaintiff's learned advocate has cited clear authority for the view that a suit in such circumstances is not barred, namely, Lal Bihari v. Parkali Kunwār[7] which was followed by a single Judge of the Chief Court for Oudh in Mst. Phuljhari v. Har Prasad[8]. These rulings are directly in point and the former is of special importance, as the two learned Judges who decided that case were parties to the Full Bench decision in Muhammad Sadiq v. Laute Ram, and must have found that decision distinguishable upon the facts. We agree with them and follow their ruling.

We find therefore that the plaintiff's suit is not barred by S. 233 (k).

Appeal allowed

---

[7] I. L. R. 42 All. 309=18 A. L. J. 110

[8] I. L. R. 1 Luck. 318

Criminal
1932
April 22
Young, J.

KATWAROO RAI AND OTHERS

versus

KING-EMPEROR*

Criminal Procedure Code, Secs. 426 (1), 107 and 423 (1) (d)—'Convicted person' in Sec. 426 (1)—Meaning of—Appeal from an order under Sec. 107—Whether appellate court empowered to suspend execution of order relating to security.

The words "convicted person", in Sec. 426 (1) of the Criminal Procedure Code, include persons against whom an order has been passed by a criminal court from which there is an appeal allowed.

The applicants, who were bound over under Sec. 107 Cr. P. Code to keep the peace and were ordered to find security, appealed to the sessions court, held, that the words 'convicted person' in Sec. 426 (1) applied to a person against whom an order was made under Sec. 107 and the appellate court was therefore empowered to suspend the order relating to furnishing of security. Even supposing Sec. 426(1) did not apply, the appellate court could pass such order under Sec. 423 (1) (d).

*Cr. Rev. 156 of 1932

CRIMINAL

1932

KATWAROO RAI v. KING-EMPEROR

CRIMINAL REVISION from an order of BABU PREO NATH GHOSE, Additional Sessions Judge of Basti.

R. K. Dave for the applicants.

M. Waliullah (Assistant Government Advocate) for the Crown.

The following judgment was delivered by

Young, J.

YOUNG, J.—This is an application in revision against the order of the Additional Sessions Judge of Basti. The applicants were bound over under S. 107 of the Criminal Procedure Code to keep the peace and were ordered to find security. They appealed to the sessions court. An order was passed on their application that security was not to be taken from them until the hearing of the appeal. Against that order the Government Pleader made an application contending that such an order was ultra vires and could not be passed by the sessions court and also that no bail could be granted. The learned Sessions Judge came to the conclusion that the objection of the Government Pleader was sound and set aside the order. Against this order of the Additional Sessions Judge the applicants have come here in revision. The learned Additional Sessions Judge relied upon the provisions of S. 426(1) of the Criminal Procedure Code which enacts as follows:

> (1) Pending any appeal by a convicted person, the appellate court may, for reasons to be recorded by it in writing, order that the execution of the sentence or order appealed against be suspended and, also, if he is in confinment, that he be released on bail or on his own bond.

The learned Additional Sessions Judge held that the words "convicted person" in the section did not apply to a person against whom an order was made under S. 107 and therefore there was no authority in the appellate court to suspend the order relating to furnishing of security. He relied upon a decision of the Patna High Court in A. I. R. 1930 Patna 274 which held that the words "convicted person" in S. 426 applied only to persons convicted of an offence. It is clear that persons against whom an order is passed under S. 107 cannot be said to be convicted of an offence. See A. I. R. 1926 All. 403. But I do not see why such a narrow or restricted meaning should be given to the words "convicted person" in this Section. When S. 406 is looked at, it is found that persons against whom an order has been made under S. 107 and ordered to find security under S. 118, are given the power to appeal against the order. The whole of this chapter is concerned with appeals. It would be peculiar that the execution of sentence or order could be suspended in the cases of persons charged and convicted of serious offences and yet the appellate courts should be powerless to suspend an order under Section 107. It is impossible, in my opinion, to think that the legislature could have contemplated this. Further, in S. 426 itself the words "sentence or order" are used.

I see no reason why the words "convicted person" in this section should not include persons against whom an order has been passed by a criminal court from which there is an appeal allowed. The word "convicted" is not in the English language confined to an association with offences. A man may be said to be convicted of vulgarity or moral depravity and the word can also be used where someone has merely been proved to be wrong. While agreeing therefore with the consensus of opinion of this Court and other courts that it cannot be said that a person against whom an order has been passed under S. 107 has been convicted of an offence, I see no reason why he cannot be said to have been convicted. He has been proved to be a dangerous person and in that sense he certainly has been convicted.

Further, even supposing Sec. 426 did not apply, I consider that S. 423 (1) (d) would cover the order originally made in this case suspending the execution of the order relating to security. Section 423 (1) (d) reads as follows:

> The appellate court may make any amendment or any consequential or incidental order that may be just or proper.

This is in the very widest terms and in my opinion an order dispensing with securities pending an appeal which possibly may be successful, may be said to be an incidental order that may be just or proper.

The second point raised in this application is whether the appellate court could grant bail in a case where an order has been made under S. 107. Section 498 of the Code of Criminal Procedure enacts:

> The amount of every bond executed under this Chapter shall be fixed with due regard to the circumstances of the case, and shall not be excessive; and the High Court or Court of Sessions may, in any case, whether there be an appeal on conviction or not, direct that any person be admitted to bail, or that the bail required by a police officer or Magistrate be reduced.

This again is in the very widest terms. Authority is in my opinion clearly given to an appellate court, to the High Court or Court of Session, in any case to direct that any person be admitted to bail. I find it difficult to construe this section in any other manner.

This application in revision is allowed and the record is sent back to the sessions court in order that the learned Additional Sessions Judge may proceed with the appeal. The original order of the Sessions Court dated February 19, 1932 is restored.

Application allowed

Civil

1932

May 25

MUKERJI, J.
BANERJI, J.
BENNET, J.

TOTA RAM AND OTHERS (Defendants)
versus
RAM LAL AND OTHERS (Plaintiffs)*

Transfer of Property Act, Secs. 92 and 101 (as amended by Act XX of 1929)—Embody rule of justice, equity and good conscience—Whether have retrospective effect—Three successive mortgages—Third mortgagee pays off first mortgagee with a part of the mortgage money—Suit for sale by second mortgagee—Whether third mortgagee subrogated to the position of the first mortgagee.

Secs. 92 and 101 of the Transfer of Property Act (as amended by Act XX of 1929) have retrospective effect. Supposing, however, that the said sections have no retrospective effect, the rule laid down by the Legislature would be a safe guide to follow as laying down correctly the rule of justice, equity and good conscience for cases arising before the passing of Act XX of 1929.

Where a third mortgagee professes to keep in his hand a part of the mortgage money in order to pay off the first and second mortgages and pays off only the first mortgage, and the second mortgagee brings a suit to enforce his mortgage, held, that the third mortgagee is subrogated to the position of the first mortgagee. Makhan Lal v. Naththi, 21 A. L. J. 382 overruled.

[On return of the answer by the Full Bench, the Division Bench directed that the property mortgaged should be sold subject to the prior mortgage as held by the third mortgagee.]

SECOND APPEAL from the decision of the Subordinate Judge of Bulandshahr.

S. B. L. Gaur for the appellants.

Panna Lal for the respondents.

The judgment of the Court was delivered by

Mukerji, J.

MUKERJI, J.—This case has been referred to a Full Bench for a decision of the following point of law, namely:—

> Where a third mortgagee professes to keep in his hand a part of the mortgage money in order to pay off the first and second mortgages and pays off only the first mortgage, whether, in a suit by the second mortgagee to enforce his mortgage, it is open to the third mortgagee to insist on his being treated as a first mortgagee whose mortgage must be paid off before the plaintiff brings the mortgaged property to sale?

The facts of the case are stated in the referring judgment and briefly are as follows:—

One Ram Chandra was the owner of a certain property. He mortgaged the same for a sum of Rs.200 to one Paras Ram on October 19, 1915. The next year on October 16, 1916, he made a simple mortgage of the same property in favour of one Ram Lal and one Ganga Sahai, son of Tika Ram. The second mortgage was for a sum of Rs.400 and Ram Lal and Ganga Sahai kept a portion of the mortgage money with themselves to pay off Paras Ram. Ram Lal and Ganga Sahai, however, did not pay off Paras Ram and their suit out of which the present appeal has arisen is for recovery of a sum of Rs.176 principal amount and interest.

---

*S. A. 1005 of 1930

Ram Chandra sold the property on a date which is unknown to one Ganga Sahai, son of Shimbhoo, and this Ganga Sahai made a simple mortgage of the property sold to the present appellants, (defendants 3 to 5) Ram Chandra, Tota Ram and Durga, for Rs.2,000 on July 29, 1926. Out of the mortgage consideration of Rs.2,000 a sum of Rs.676-3-0 was left with the mortgagees for payment to Paras Ram, a sum of Rs.730-8-0 was left with the mortgagees to pay the second mortgage held by the plaintiff respondents, Ram Lal and Ganga Sahai, son of Tika Ram, a sum of Rs.557-13-6 was similarly left with the mortgagees to pay off a simple money decree held against the vendor and a sum of Rs.35-7-6 was paid in cash to the vendor. On November 29, 1926, the heirs of Paras Ram were paid by the appellants a sum of Rs.704-12-0 in full satisfaction of the first mortgage, dated October 19, 1915. The second mortgage not having been discharged, Ram Lal and Ganga Sahai, son of Tika Ram, have claimed their money. The appellants were impleaded as the third mortgagees and they pleaded inter alia that they had satisfied Paras Ram's mortgage and without paying that amount the plaintiffs were not entitled to get the property in question sold by auction.

We have to consider whether in the circumstances of the case the appellants were subrogated to the position of Paras Ram.

The point raised in this appeal has given rise to conflicting decisions, although it must be said that in this Court the majority of cases has decided that a third mortgagee paying off the first mortgage in the circumstances of the present case is not entitled to be subrogated to the position of the first mortgagee.

The earliest important case on this point is the Full Bench decision in Muhammad Saddiq v. Ghaus Muhammad[1]. It was a case of a purchaser from the mortgagor paying off the first mortgage, and it was held in the circumstances of the case that it was never the intention of the purchaser to keep the first mortgage alive. It was pointed out that at the date of the sale the intention of the purchaser was to pay off and extinguish the first mortgage and not to keep it alive. Then it was pointed out that, if the date of payment be the crucial date on which the intention to keep alive or extinguish was to be entertained, then the written statement showed that no idea of keeping alive the first mortgage was entertained at the date of payment, because it was not even mentioned by way of defence and the point was raised subsequently as an "afterthought".

This case and the Privy Council case of Bawan Das v. Mahesh Lal[2] were cases of purchasers whose interest it might be to extinguish the mortgage and to hold the property free from it for their own benefit. Both the cases were decided on the peculiar facts of the case and their Lordships took care to point out the questions of fact which determined their decision.

The principle of merger, which was contained in a codified form in Section 101 of the Transfer of Property Act before its amendment and which is still to be found in the amended section of the same Act, does not lay down that there may be a merger, where the person paying off the

---

[1] I. L. R. 33 All. 101

[2] I. L. R. 9 All. 961

CIVIL
1932
TOTA RAM
v.
RAM LAL
Mukerji, J.

earlier charge was only a charge holder or mortgagee and not a full owner. It is only in the case of a larger interest being acquired that a smaller interest disappears on the principle of merger. This was entirely overlooked in some subsequent cases decided in this Court and a doctrine of agency was evolved. It was said that the money with which the third or any subsequent mortgagee pays the first mortgage is the property of the mortgagor and, as no subrogation is allowed to a mortgagor, the third or subsequent mortgagee in making the payment is acting only as an agent of the mortgagor and he is not entitled to be subrogated to the position of the first mortgagee. Such a case was that of Makhan Lal v. Naththi (21 A. L. J. page 382). There the learned Judges applied the case of Muhammad Saddiq v. Ghaus Muhammad[3] without distinguishing the feature of the earlier case that there the person making the payment was a purchaser, from the mortgagor.

This case has been followed by other cases in this Court, but a contrary view has also been taken in this Court—see, for example, Shiam Lal v. Basir Uddin[4] and Chhote Lal v. Bansidhar[5]. In Madras the case of Vanmikalinga v. Chidambara[6] and in Calcutta the case of Jagatdhar v. Brown[7] take the same view as this Court did in the two cases just mentioned.

The doctrine of agency has much to be said against it. To start with there does not appear to be any difference in principle between a case where a purchaser or a third mortgagee advances some money to the vendor or the mortgagor, as the case may be, and then pays off the first mortgage and the case where a purchaser or a third mortgagee professes to take the transfer for a larger sum than in the earlier case and keeps with him the money needed for paying off the earliest mortgage and actually does not hand over the money to the vendor or the mortgagor, but uses the money to pay off the first mortgage. It is conceded that in the first case a subrogation does arise, but it is denied that it arises in the second case. The principle of subrogation has been brought into existence on the ground that the person who has discharged a burden should not lose the money spent on discharging the burden, and a subsequent mortgagee who has contributed nothing to discharge the burden should not have the benefit of the discharge for which he has not contributed. The Privy Council case of Dinbandhu v. Yogmaya[8] and Ibrahim Husain v. Ambika Prasad[9] are entirely, in our opinion, inconsistent with the theory of agency propounded in some cases by the High Courts.

The question, however, has become very much simplified and, it may be said, has entirely disappeared from the arena of controversy owing to the amendment of the Transfer of Property Act.

Before its amendment in 1929 the Transfer of Property Act did not even contain the word "subrogation" and the law of subrogation had to be deduced from English cases and from general principles of equity. Section 74 of the Transfer of Property Act which has since been repealed

[3] I. L. R. 33 All. 101
[4] I. L. R. 28 All. 778
[5] 24 A. L. J. 570
[6] I. L. R. 29 Mad. 37
[7] I. L. R. 33 Cal. 1133
[8] I. L. R. 29 Cal. 154
[9] I. L. R. 39 Cal. 527

contained only the rudiments of the law of subrogation and was not of much use. Section 92, as it now stands after amendment of 1929, does not recognize any doctrine of agency. It is couched in the simplest, widest and clearest language possible and the relevant portion runs as follows:—

> Any of the persons referred to in Section 91 (other than the mortgagor) and any co-mortgagor shall, on redeeming property subject to the mortgage, have, so far as regards redemption, foreclosure or sale of such property, the same rights as the mortgagee whose mortgage he redeems may have against the mortgagor or any other mortgagee.

Mr. Panna Lal, who has argued the case for the respondent with his usual ability, has not denied that, if the first paragraph of Section 92 applied to the case, the appeal must succeed and the appellants must be treated as the first mortgagees. This is also clear, because the appellants as the third mortgagees are among the persons who are entitled under Section 91 of the Transfer of Property Act to redeem the property; they have redeemed the property subject to the first mortgage and they have thereby, according to the terms of the rule of law, the same rights as the first mortgagee whose mortgage they have redeemed, against the mortgagor and any other mortgagee, the last expression including the plaintiff respondents. The fact, that a part of the so-called mortgage money was left with the third mortgagees, does not in any way destroy the facts that the appellants are the third mortgagees and it is they who have redeemed the first mortgage. It is clear, therefore, that, if Section 92 as amended by Act XX of 1929 applies, the appeal must succeed.

Mr. Panna Lal, however, argued that Section 92 had no application because of the provision contained in Section 63 of Act XX of 1929.

Section 63 deals with two portions of the Amending Act. It first says that certain provisions of the Act (XX of 1929) shall not be deemed in any way to affect the terms or incidence of any transfer of property made or effected before the 1st day of April, 1930 or to affect the validity or invalidity, effect or consequences of anything done or suffered before the aforesaid date and so on. The provisions contained in Sections 92 and 101 of the Transfer of Property Act are dealt with by Sections 47 and 51 and these are not to be found in the first provision of Section 63 of Act XX of 1929. The second portion of the Section 63 of Act XX of 1929 runs as follows:

> And nothing in any other provision of this Act shall render invalid or in any way affect anything already done before the 1st day of April, 1930 in any proceeding pending in a court on that date; and any such remedy and any such proceeding as is herein referred to may be enforced, instituted or continued, as the case may be, as if this Act had not been passed.

Section 47 of Act XX of 1929 dealing with Section 92 of the Transfer of Property Act and Section 51 of Act XX of 1929 dealing with Section 101 of the Transfer of Property Act fall under this Second Clause of Section 63 of Act XX of 1929. In our opinion, there is nothing in the Second Clause which affects the present case. These sections are to have retrospective effect except in so far as they are not to have that effect according to the rule laid down. Now is there anything in this case which has already been done before the 1st day of April, 1930 in any proceeding pending in a court on that date. Then again, is there any remedy and any such proceeding as is referred to in Act XX of 1929 which is being affected by the new provisions of Sections 92 and 101? We do not find that such is the case. Indeed Mr. Panna Lal has not been able to point out to us what has been done in this case before April 1, 1930 which is being undone by the new rule of law and what is the remedy or proceeding which is being affected by the new provisions of Sections 92 and 101. All that has been done is to lay down a rule of subrogation which was not contained in the unamended Act. The rule was based on general ideas of equity, and it cannot be said that the new Act is going to affect any remedy or any proceeding which was lawful under the old Act. In our opinion, therefore, Sections 92 and 101 of the amended Act have retrospective effect.

Supposing, however, that the said sections have no retrospective effect, we have got this position. This Court itself was divided as to the rule of subrogation in the circumstances of this case and there are conflicting decisions of other High Courts. Opinion is likely to differ as to how far the Privy Council cases in I. L. R. 29 and I. L. R. 39 Calcutta quoted above affect the decisions of the High Courts. In the circumstances, the rule laid down by the Legislature would be a safe guide to follow as laying down correctly the rule of justice, equity and good conscience for cases arising before the passing of Act XX of 1929.

The result is that in our opinion the question for our decision must be answered in favour of the appellants, and we must hold and do hold that the appellants are subrogated to the position of the first mortgagee.

We direct that the case be returned to the Bench making the reference with the answer given above.

Reference answered

On return of the answer by the Full Bench, the Division Bench consisting of Mukerji and Bennet, JJ. delivered the following judgment:—

In this appeal a point of law was referred to a Full Bench, and the Full Bench has returned an answer to the question. The answer is to the effect that the appellants are entitled to step into the shoes of Paras Ram, the mortgagee of 1915.

We accordingly allow the appeal and modify the decree of the court below by directing that the property to be sold, shall be sold subject to the charge created in favour of Paras Ram on October 19, 1915. The appellants will have their costs of this appeal and their costs in the courts below.

CIVIL
1930
Dec. 4
1932
March 8
LORD THANKERTON
SIR LANCELOT SANDERSON
SIR GEORGE LOWNDES

PRIVY COUNCIL

DULAHIN JADUNATH KUAR (Defendant)

versus

BISHESHAR BAKHSH SINGH (Plaintiff)*

Oudh Estates Act of 1862, Sec. 19—Applicability of—To wills made after inclusion of talukdar's name in the prescribed lists made up for approval, but before such approval—Hindu Law—Succession—Male agnate—Same as Gotraja-sapinda—Necessity of proving identity of Gotra.

Sec. 19 of the Oudh Estates Act of 1862 applied to wills made after the passing of the Act by talukdars of the statutory class prescribed by Sec. 10, and it applied to a will, at the time of making of which the talukdar's name was included in the lists made up under Sec. 8 for the purpose of subsequent approval and publication, so that, if unattested as required by Sec. 50 of the Succession Act, 1865, it was invalid as a will.

In order to qualify as a male agnate, or gotraja-sapinda of the propositus, the plaintiff must satisfy two conditions, viz., (a) that he is of the same gotra, or, as it may be expressed, of a common patriarchal stock, and (b) that he is a sapinda of the deceased, that is, connected by blood through a common ancestor, the connection being traced through males. In the absence of challenge, it might well be that proof by the plaintiff that he was a sapinda of the propositus would be sufficient to raise a presumption that he was also gotraja, but on his being challenged by defendant, it is for the plaintiff to satisfy the court that he complies with this condition also, before he can succeed in his claim to the succession.

APPEAL from a decision of the Chief Court of Oudh at Lucknow. (For a report of judgment under appeal, see A. I. R. [1928] Oudh 307.)

The following judgment was delivered by

Lord Thankerton

LORD THANKERTON—These are three consolidated appeals from two decrees dated December 15, 1927, passed by the Chief Court of Oudh, which varied a decree, dated January 4, 1927, of a single Judge of the same Court sitting as a Court of Original Civil Jurisdiction.

The plaintiff in the suit out of which these appeals have arisen was Raja Bisheshar Bakhsh Singh, and he is appellant in the second of these appeals (No. 103 of 1929). The defendants in the suit were (1) Dulahin Jadunath Kuar (hereinafter referred to as defendant No. 1), who is appellant in the first appeal (No. 102 of 1929), (2) Lal Partap Harihar Bakhsh Singh (hereinafter referred to as defendant No. 2), who is appellant in the third appeal (No. 104 of 1929), and (3) Mahabir Singh. The last-named is not a party to the first two appeals, as, by agreement with the plaintiff, the appeal which he had taken from the decree of the Trial Judge to the Chief Court was dismissed on March 15, 1927.

In the suit the plaintiff claims possession of the Taluka Gangwal, consisting of sixty villages as set out in the schedule attached to the plaint, lying in District Bahraich and District Gonda, as the nearest male agnate according to the rule of lineal primogeniture, of Raja Suraj Pragash Singh, the last male holder, who died in 1899, in terms of Section 22(10) of the

---

*P. C. A. 102, 103 and 104 of 1929

Oudh Estates Act, 1869, as amended by the Oudh Estates (Amendment) Act, 1910. In the suit the plaintiff also claimed certain other property, as to which no question arises in these appeals.

Two main questions arise in the present appeals, viz.:—(a) Whether the succession is governed by the provisions of the Oudh Estates Act, which arises in the first appeal, and, if so, (b) whether the plaintiff is "the nearest male agnate according to the rule of lineal primogeniture" within the meaning of the Act, which arises in the third appeal.

A minor question is raised in the second appeal as to certain villages, which the Chief Court held defendant No. 1 entitled to hold during her life, thereby varying the decree of the Trial Judge.

Raja Sitla Bakhsh Singh was the first Talukdar of Gangwal, and his name was entered in Lists I and II, prepared in accordance with the provisions of Section 8 of the Act of 1869. The Act was passed on January 12, 1869, and in terms of Section 9 these lists were approved by the Chief Commissioner of Oudh on July 20, 1869, and published in the "Gazette of India" on July 31, 1869.

On April 3, 1869, Raja Sitla wrote a letter to the Deputy Commissioner of Bahraich, in which he said: "I beg to state that, firstly, I hope to have issues, and they will, after me, succeed me. In case there be no hope of issue, the two legally-wedded Ranis of mine are (malik) proprietors (of my estate). After my death, the Rani Saheba have power. Share in the estate shall not be divided." It was not disputed before this Board that, as concurrently found by both Courts below, this document is of a testamentary nature. It was equally undisputed that this document was not attested as required by Section 19, which incorporated Section 50 of the Indian Succession Act, but the application of Section 19 was disputed. If this document was both valid and operative as a will, it was not disputed that its effect was to take the succession outside the operation of the Act, with the consequent failure of the plaintiff's case.

The defendants stand on the defensive and put the plaintiff to proof of his title to claim the estate.

The question of the validity of the will depends on construction of the original Act of 1869, apart from its amendment by the Act of 1910. Both the Courts below have held that the will was invalid on the ground that it was not attested as required by Section 19 of the Act of 1869, the material part of which is as follows:—

> 19. Sections 49, 50, 51, 54, 55, and 57 to 77 (both inclusive), and Sections 82, 83, 85, and 88 to 98 (both inclusive), of the Indian Succession Act (No. X of 1865), shall apply to all wills and codicils made by any Talukdar or Grantee, or by his heir or legatee, under the provisions of this Act, for the purpose of bequeathing to any person his estate, or any portion thereof, or any interest therein: Provided that marriage shall not revoke any such will or codicil: Provided also that nothing herein contained shall affect wills made before the passing of this Act

Defendant No. 1, who is appellant in this issue, maintains that the provisions of Section 19 of the Act of 1869 with regard to the attestation of wills made by talukdars did not apply to a will made before approval and publication under Section 9 of the lists prepared under Section 8, even though, as in the present case, at the time of his making the will, the talukdar's name was included in the lists made up for the purpose of subsequent approval and publication. This contention is based on the definition of talukdar in Section 2, which is as follows:—

> Talukdar means any person whose name is entered in the first of the lists mentioned in section eight.

The material portion of Section 8 is as follows:—

> 8. Within six months after the passing of this Act, the Chief Commissioner of Oudh, subject to such instructions as he may receive from the Governor-General of India in Council, shall cause to be prepared six lists, namely:—
>
> First.—A list of all persons who are to be considered Talukdars within the meaning of this Act.

Sections 9 and 10 may also be conveniently cited here:—

> 9. When the lists mentioned in section eight shall have been approved by the Chief Commissioner of Oudh, they shall be published in the 'Gazette of India.' After such publication, the first and second of the said lists shall not, except in the manner provided by section thirty or section thirty-one, as the case may be, be liable to any alteration in respect of the names entered therein. If, at any time after the publication of the said lists, it appears to the Governor-General of India in Council that the name of any person has been wrongly omitted from or wrongly entered in any of the said lists, the said Governor in Council may order the name to be inserted in the proper list, and such name shall be published in the 'Gazette of India' in a supplementary list, and such person shall be treated in all respects as if his name had been from the first inserted in the proper list.
>
> 10. No persons shall be considered Talukdars or Grantees within the meaning of this Act, other than the persons named in such original or supplementary lists as aforesaid. The Courts shall take judicial notice of the said lists and shall regard them as conclusive evidence that the persons named therein are such Talukdars or Grantees.

Defendant No. 1 maintained that there could not be a list within the meaning of the definition until at least the approval of the Chief Commissioner had been obtained, that the reference to lists in the definition was imperative and not merely evidentiary, and that the definition applied to Section 19 as fully as to any other section. The plaintiff, on the other hand, maintained that the reference to lists in the definition was merely evidentiary and that the Act applied, as from its passing, to every talukdar who came within the terms of Section 3, which, apart from the definition, appears to be declaratory of the rights of an existing class. He further maintained that, even if the definition is imperative, it was repugnant to the context of Section 19 and in particular to the proviso as to wills made before the passing of the Act. The plaintiff did not maintain that the provisions of Section 13 as to registration applied in the present case, as he was unable to say that the legatee was not a person excepted from the operation of the section.

The history of events from the annexation of Oudh in 1856 up to the passing of the Oudh Estates Act in 1869, including the Summary Settlement, the preparation of lists of talukdars and the granting of sanads to talukdars was fully dealt with before their Lordships, and the plaintiff founded on the two orders of the Governor-General incorporated in the first schedule to the Act, but their Lordships are of opinion that the Act only recognised a statutory class of talukdars and that this is made clear by the provisions of Section10 that no persons should be considered talukdars "within the meaning of this Act" other than the persons named in the original and supplementary lists. Further, their Lordships are of opinion that such lists, in the case of the original lists, did not become operative as lists until they had been approved by the Chief Commissioner, but that they became operative as from the date of such approval, the subsequent publication being merely public notification of the fact.

The plaintiff founded on certain passages in the judgment of this Board, delivered by Mr. Ameer Ali, in Murtaza Husain Khan v. Mahomed Yasin Ali Khan[1]. In that case the original talukdar, whose name appeared in lists 1 and 2 prepared under Section 8, had died in 1865, prior to the passing of the Act, and the property in dispute was not part of the talukdari estate under the Act, it being undisputed that the taluka fell under the provisions of the Act. It was held that, upon the death in 1899 of a subsequent talukdar, the succession to his property, not forming part of his talukdari estate, was subject to a rebuttable presumption that there was a family custom of descent to a single heir. In referring to the original talukdar, Mr. Ameer Ali said (at p. 276):—

> As already observed, a summary settlement of the Government revenue had been made with Jamshed Ali Khan on January 22, 1859, a taluqdari sanad was granted to him on October 17, 1861, and his name was entered as a taluqdar in the first of the lists. He had acquired, as declared by Section 3, 'a permanent, heritable and transferable right' in his estate, and was unquestionably a taluqdar within the meaning of the Act. His death before the Act was passed into law makes no difference in his status or in his rights. The lists which the Chief Commissioner was directed to 'cause to be prepared' were obviously in course of preparation long before the passing of the Act; the limit of six months was clearly meant as a limit for their completion, and not for their initiation. In fact, it is beyond dispute now that Jamshed Ali and his heirs and successors to the estate are such taluqdars.

No argument arose in that case as to whether the deceased talukdar became a talukdar within the meaning of the Act as soon as it passed or only on approval of the lists, and, in their Lordships' opinion, either view is consistent with the general expressions used in this passage.

As regards Section 19, their Lordships consider that operative effect should be given, if a reasonable construction so permits, to every provision of a statute, and that to apply the definition of talukdar to Section 19 so as to limit its operation to wills made after the approval of the lists would have the effect of redeeming the proviso as to wills made before the passing of the Act purposeless; they are therefore of opinion that the definition is to that extent repugnant to the context and is inapplicable. It follows that, in their Lordships' opinion, the provisions of Section 19 applied to wills made after the passing of the Act by talukdars of the statutory class prescribed by Section 10, and that it applied to the will here in question, so that, being unattested as required by Section 50 of the Indian Succession Act, 1865, it was invalid as a will.

---

[1] [1916] 43 I. A. 269 at 276

It therefore becomes unnecessary to consider whether, on the assumption that it was a valid will, it ever became operative or was abandoned by the legatee, Raja Sitla's widow, as to which a separate argument was raised.

With regard to the plaintiff's pedigree, there are concurrent findings of fact by the Courts below to the effect that the plaintiff has proved his pedigree, and their Lordships see no reason for disturbing these findings, which establish that, in blood relationship, the plaintiff is the nearest male blood relation according to the rule of lineal primogeniture of the last male holder of the taluk. But this leaves open the issue in the third appeal, in which defendant No. 2 raises a point of law on the construction of Section 22(10) of the 1869 Act as amended by the Act of 1910.

In the first appeal defendant No. 1 also sought to raise a question as to whether a village called Rajapur Grant was comprised in the taluka, though no such point was raised in her case of appeal, but, even if it were not too late to raise the point, their Lordships were not prepared to disturb the concurrent findings of fact by the Courts below that the taluka consisted of the sixty villages claimed in the plaint, including the village of Rajapur Grant.

In the second appeal (No. 103 of 1929) the plaintiff takes objection to the variation of the decree of the Trial Judge made by the Chief Court, in that they held that defendant No. 1 was entitled to remain in possession during her life of five villages of which she was in possession under an agreement dated June 29, 1899.

Raja Sitla, the original talukdar, died in 1885, leaving surviving him his widow, Rani Sukhraj Kuar, and his half-brother, Narpat Singh. Under a compromise of a suit raised by the latter against the former, Narpat Singh was declared to be the absolute owner of the entire estate of Gangwal, and the Rani was allowed to remain in possession of five villages by way of guzara, besides some other property, which is not in issue in these appeals. Narpat remained in possession of the taluka of Gangwal until his death in 1892, when he was succeeded by his son, Raja Suraj Prakash Singh, who died in 1899, having been predeceased by his only son, Mahesh Bakhsh. Raja Suraj Prakash Singh was survived by—

(a) Rani Sukhraj Kuar, Raja Sitla's widow, who died in 1922;

(b) Rani Itraj Kuar, the senior widow of Raja Suraj Prakash Singh, who died in 1925, and on whose death the present dispute arose;

(c) Rani Abhiraj Kuar, the junior widow of Raja Suraj Prakash Singh, who died before 1925; and (d) Defendant No. 1, the widow of Mahesh Bakhsh Singh, the predeceasing son of Raja Suraj Prakash Singh.

On June 29, 1899, an agreement was entered into between the two widows of Raja Suraj Prakash Singh and defendant No. 1, the material portion of which is as follows:—

> Whereas Raja Suraj Pragash Singh, Taluqdar of Gangwal, died childless and intestate, while we, i.e., Rani Itraj Kuar, the first widow, > Rani Abhiraj Kuar, the second widow, Dulhin Saheba, viz., Jadunath Kuar, widow of Bachcha Mahesh Bakhsh Singh, the son of the late Raja and Rani Achal Raj Kuar, the mother of the deceased Raja, are the heirs, and now we, by mutual consultation, have decided that the mutation of Taluqa Gangwal, Districts Bahraich and Gonda, and purchased Pattis Chaisar, etc., be effected in favour of Rani Itraj Kuar and, during her (Itraj Kuar's) life Rani Abhiraj Kuar, Musammat Dulhin Jadunath Kuar, and Rani Achalraj Kuar, the mother of the deceased Raja, having received the following Bhaiyai villages, which have always remained in the possession of the heirs to the estate and also were held for a long time by Raja Narpat Singh during the Shahi rule, should support themselves because this Bhaiyai right now belongs to Rani Abhiraj Kuar and Musammat Dulhin Jadunath Kuar, the heirs to the estate, who, after me, Rani Itraj Kuar, shall gradually become the successors.

As Rani Sukhraj and Rani Abhiraj Kuar died in the lifetime of Rani Itraj Kuar, defendant No. 1 was in possession of the guzara villages at the time of Rani Itraj Kuar's death in 1925.

The Chief Court held that the agreement was a reaonable family settlement, made for the purpose of settling controversies as to the mutation of names consequent on the death of Raja Suraj Prakash Singh, and they further said:—

> Prima facie a provision for maintenance must be deemed to be intended to enure for the lifetime of the grantee—Raja Rameshwar Bakhsh Singh v. Arjun Singh (L. R. 18 I. A. 1). In the present case the provision was to cease earlier, but only in the event of the grantee coming into the possession of the estate. We are unable to discover anything in the document to justify the interpretation that it was to cease on the death of Rani Itraj Kuar, and during the lifetime of the grantee, when the succession to the estate is withheld from her on a ground not contemplated by the settlement.

Their Lordships find themselves unable to agree with this construction of the agreement, as, in their opinion, the words "during her (Itraj Kuar's) lifetime" do not qualify the antecedent part of the provision, but qualify the subsequent part of the provision, under which alone defendant No. 1 has any claim to the guzara villages. It follows that defendant is not entitled to retain possession of these villages, and it is unnecessary to consider whether the settlement was valid and reasonable.

The third appeal involves a question of construction of the Oudh Estates Act of general importance, which does not appear to their Lordships to have been clearly or adequately placed before either of the lower Courts, and, in view of the importance and difficulty of the question, their Lordships feel that it will be more satisfactory to have this appeal re-heard before a fuller Board.

Until the advice to be humbly tendered by their Lordships to His Majesty in respect of the third appeal is determined, it will not be possible to settle the terms of the order in respect of the first two appeals.

[The third appeal was accordingly re-heard before a fuller Board consisting of Lord Tomlin, Lord Thankerton, Lord Salvesen, Sir George Lowndes and Sir Dinshah Mulla.]

A. M. Dunne, K.C. and J. M. Parikh for the appellant.

CIVIL

1932

DULAHIN JADUNATH KUAR v. BISHESHAR BAKHSH SINGH

Lord Thankerton

Upjohn, K.C., L. De'Gruyther K.C. and W. Wallach for the respondent.

Subsequently on March 8, 1932 judgment of their Lordships was delivered by LORD THANKERTON—In accordance with the view expressed in the judgment of this Board dated December 4, 1930, the issue raised in the third appeal has been re-heard before a fuller Board. By that judgment it was decided that the succession to the Taluka Gangwal is governed by the Oudh Estates Act, and in particular by Section 22(10), which, as amended in 1910, is as follows:—

> (10) Or in default of or on the death of such mother, then to the nearest male agnate according to the rule of lineal primogeniture, subject as aforesaid.

The last Talukdar was Raja Suraj Prakash Singh, and the plaintiff's pedigree shows Bhaya Partap Singh as their common ancestor, and in accordance with the previous judgment the plaintiff must be held to have established that, in blood relationship, he is the nearest male blood relation according to the rule of lineal primogeniture of Raja Suraj, the last male holder of the Taluka. It is clear from the context that this finding relates to physical blood relationship and does not exclude the possibility—raised by the issue in the third appeal—of the legal right of succession, so far as expressed as blood relationship, having been lost, e.g., by adoption.

The sole question in the third appeal is whether the plaintiff has proved that he is an "agnate" of the propositus within the meaning of Section 22 (10); if so, he is admitted to be the nearest male agnate according to the rule of lineal primogeniture.

In the first place, their Lordships are clearly of opinion that the meaning of "male agnate" for the purposes of the section cannot be determined without recourse to the ordinary law which would govern the succession apart from the statute—in this case the Hindu Law of succession according to the rules of the Mitakshara. The term "agnate" is not a term of art in the English legal system; in the English language, though not in frequent use, it is a known term, used to indicate relationship on the father's side or exclusively through males. In their Lordships' opinion, it is a word expressive of relationship, similar to "son" or "brother," to which the rule of construction laid down in Raghuraj Chandra v. Subhadra Kunwar[2], falls to be applied. The only express prescriptions of the Act relative to "male agnate" are that it denotes only legitimate relatives (Section 2), and that it applies only to najib-ul-tarfain, i.e., those of noble birth on both sides (Section 21). Subject to these qualifications, the meaning of "male agnate" falls to be ascertained by the personal law of the individual, to whom the succession is to be established.

Turning to the law of the Mitakshara, their Lordships have no doubt that "male agnate" denote a gotraja-sapinda, as to which an authoritative exposition is to be found in Bhyah Ram Singh v. Bhyah Ugur Singh[3]. Sir Robert Phillimore, in delivering the judgment of this Board, says (p. 390):—

---

[2] [1928] 55 Ind. App. 139

[3] [1870] 13 Moore Ind. App. 373

CIVIL

1932

DULAHIN JADUNATH KUAR v. BISHESHAR BAKHSH SINGH

Lord Thankerton

> The Mitácshará, in the 5th and 6th sections of the second chapter, recognises two successive classes of heirs: first, 'Gentiles'; next, Bandhoos; after them it places certain special persons, and after these last the State, the ultimus hœres. Whatever descent prevails, and even where the State takes by escheat, the duty of some ceremonial performance to the deceased is still enjoined. The family is the cherished institution of Hindoos. Individual separate ownership is less the subject of the general remarks of Commentators on the Hindoo Law than the associated aggregate community, the family. In this respect an analogy is observed between family ownership and that of the old village community. Consequently, family union or connection derived from a common head, the founder of the family, may reasonably be regarded, amongst a patriarchal people, as the source of the entire class from which a succession of heirs may be derived. Again, as males are preferred to females in succession, from religious reasons, the same class may be reasonably subject to the condition that the descent be generally derived from males, who, for the same reason, may obtain a constant preference. The text of the whole of the 5th and 6th sections of the 2nd chapter of the Mitácshará is in the strictest conformity to these principles. The Gentiles, or Gotraja (from the Gotra) are described as descending from one common stock, a male, and derived generally through males, as forming a family, though embracing, possibly, many families, and such original bond of union is regarded as necessary to the constitution of the Gotra. These conditions are all that are stated as necessary to the constitution of the class of Gentiles. As regulating preference of succession amongst them, the law of succession amongst Gentiles classifies them further, as Sapindas and Samanodacas; the first it treats as prior to the second, but excludes neither, within limits wide enough to include the present plaintiffs. As the plaintiffs, then, in this case show a common ancestor, a Gotra, a community of family, a descent which extended to the deceased and themselves, they appear to satisfy every condition of the text.

From this it is clear that, in order to qualify as a male agnate, or gotraja-sapinda of the propositus, the plaintiff must satisfy two conditions, viz.: (a) that he is of the same gotra, or, as it may be expressed, of a common patriarchal stock, and (b) that he is a sapinda of the deceased, that is, connected by blood through a common ancestor, the connection being traced through males.

It is now settled that sapinda-ship under the Mitakshara law arises from the community of corporal particles, and is not dependent on the right to participate in the offering of funeral oblations; the latter may be of importance in settling the order of preference of heirs in the same class, but is not relevant in a question of exclusion from a class of heirs. Lulloobhoy Bappoobhoy v. Cassibai[4], Ramchandra Martand Waikar v. Vinayak Venkatesh Kothekar[5]. It may further be noted that the bandhus, or cognates, have a technical meaning in the system of the Mitakshara and signify the bhinna-gotra sapindas, that is, those not belonging to the same gotra or family (Ramchandra, supra cit.).

The pedigree of the plaintiff in the present suit shows his community of corporal particles with the propositus through a common ancestor, Bhaya Partab Singh, traced through males, and, to that extent, the pedigree has been held proved, as already stated. He has, therefore, satisfied one of the two requisite conditions, i.e., that he is a sapinda of the propositus; but the main issue in the third appeal is whether the plaintiff has proved that he satisfies the other condition, namely, that he is of the same patriarchal stock or gotra. In the absence of challenge on this point, it might well be that proof by the plaintiff that he was a sapinda of the propositus would be sufficient to raise a presumption that he was also gotraja, but, on his being challenged by defendant No. 2 on this point, it is for the plaintiff to satisfy the Court that he complies with this condition also, before he can succeed in his claim to the succession.

---

[4] [1880] 7 Ind. App. 212

[5] [1914] 41 Ind. App. 290

Defendant No. 2 maintains in this appeal that it is established on the evidence that the gotra of the propositus was Vaiyaghra, and the plaintiff's gotra being admittedly Atri, they cannot be related as agnates (gotraja sapinda) under the Mitakshara law, and that, in any event, the plaintiff has failed to prove that the propositus, like himself, belonged to the Atri gotra. The plaintiff maintains that the evidence sufficiently establishes that he was of the same gotra as the propositus, but that, if this conclusion is not justified, the case should be remitted for further enquiry on this point, as the issue was not fairly or fully raised in its present form at the trial or in the Courts beow.

It was ultimately agreed by both parties (a) that, if in fact the propositus was of the Vaiyaghra gotra and the plaintiff was of the Atri gotra, this difference of gotra necessarily led to the conclusion that the plaintiff is not an agnate, i.e., gotraja sapinda, of the propositus, and (b) that such difference of gotra could only be accounted for by adoption into a different gotra of the plaintiff or one of his paternal ancestors since the common ancestor, Bhaya Partab Singh.

In the previous judgment their Lordships expressed the view that this issue had not been clearly or adequately placed before either of the lower Courts, and, after reconsideration before a fuller Board, their Lordships are confirmed in this view.

The question of gotra was not raised in the pleadings, written or oral. Defendant No. 2 put the plaintiff to the proof of his pedigree, and his only express contention was that Jugraj Singh, the younger son of Partab Singh, died childless. The only issue that could be held to cover this point was No. 7, which is as follows: "Is the plaintiff the nearest heir under the Act by the rule of lineal primogeniture to Suraj Prakash Singh, or under the custom applicable to the family?"

At the trial, gotra was first mentioned during the cross-examination of the plaintiff, when he stated "My gotra is Atra gotra"; he was not further examined on this point by either side. It is next referred to in cross-examination, for defendant No. 2, of two witnesses for defendant 1 and 3 (D. W. 15 and D. W. 18), and is dealt with by a series of witnesses for defendant No. 2. About halfway through this latter body of witnesses a statement by plaintiff's counsel is recorded to the effect that the plaintiff did not admit that the gotra of the Gangwal family was Vaiyaghra, but that the Gangwal family belonged to Atri gotra.

It seems reasonably clear from the judgment of the trial Judge that difference of gotra was only used before him as affecting the question whether Jugraj Singh had died childless, in other words, as involving a break in the blood relationship of the plaintiff with Jugraj Singh. There appears no trace of an argument that, granted the blood relationship, the difference of gotra would still negative the plaintiff's claim to be the nearest agnate.

The learned trial Judge held it proved by the defendants' witnesses that the Gangwal talukdars were of the Vaiyaghra gotra, though he thought that this conclusion was weakened by the fact that that point was not put to the plaintiff or his witnesses in cross-examination; he also thought it possible that the plaintiff might have stated his gotra incorrectly or his ancestors might have forgotten to what gotra they belonged and then taken whatever gotra was suggested by their prohits or priests. On consideration of Sastri's Treatise on Hindu Law and Dr. Gour's Hindu Code, he came, apparently reluctantly, to the conclusion that it is possible that persons descended in the male line from a common ancestor can belong to two different gotras, and stated "whatever the explanation of the difference of gotras may be, I am not prepared to accept this difference as conclusive proof that the plaintiff and his family are not agnatic relations of the talukdars of Gangwal in the manner claimed. Counsel for defendant 2 should have put his case to the plaintiff in cross-examination. Probably he feared that if he did so the plaintiff might be able to explain the apparent difficulty. I think it is impossible to explain away the admissions made by Raja Sitla Bakhsh Singh and his Mukhtar to which I have referred above." The admission referred to was made in a suit in 1868 by Sheo Nath, the plaintiff's father, against Raja Sitla, the first talukdar of Gangwal claiming that certain villages had been given as bhayai to the plaintiff's ancestors; in his answer the Raja stated "The plaintiffs do belong to the defendant's family, but these villages were not given to them as a bhayai, i.e., portion. Defendant's ancestors gave Gularia to plaintiff's ancestor in 1244 as jagir." The learned Judge also referred to the conduct of Rani Itraj Kuar in 1900, when Sheo Nath Singh made an application to have the estate taken under the Court of Wards on the ground of mismanagement by Rani Itraj Kuar and the detriment to himself as next reversioner, and the omission of the Rani to suggest that Sheo Nath Singh was in no way related to the Talukdar's family and therefore had no locus standi to present the application. The learned trial Judge concludes:—

> In my opinion, therefore, the plaintiff has satisfactorily established his agnatic relationship to Raja Suraj Prakash Singh in the manner set forth in his pedigree.

Their Lordships are satisfied that the admissions of Raja Sitla and conduct of Rani Itraj Kuar do not involve any admission as to identity of gotra between the two families.

The Chief Court, in their judgment, say:—

> On the question of the plaintiff's relationship with Raja Sitla Bakhsh Singh [? Raja Suraj Prakash Singh] the case put forward and argued before us on behalf of Lal Harihar Partab Bakhsh Singh, the defendant appellant in Appeal No. 19, is that Jugraj Singh, the second son of Partab

CIVIL

1932

DULAHIN JADUNATH KUAR v. BISHESHAR BAKHSH SINGH

Lord Thankerton

Singh, died issueless, or at least that the plaintiff has failed to prove that he is the descendant of Jugraj Singh. It was not disputed that Jugraj Singh was one of the two sons of Partap Singh. We agree with the trial Court that the plaintiff has succeeded in establishing the fact that he is the descendant of Jugraj Singh according to the line of descent indicated in the pedigree above set forth. The evidence seems to be overwhelming and there is no evidence worth the name in rebuttal.

After dealing with the evidence, including the admissions of Raja Sitla about 1868, the learned Judges state:—

> In agreement with the trial Court, we therefore hold that the plaintiff has succeeded in establishing the fact that he is an agnate of the late Suraj Prakash Singh.

It is obvious that the word "agnate" is loosely used in that finding, for after disposing of a question as to the seniority of the plaintiff's line, which was not in dispute before this Board, the judgment proceeds:—

> Against the broader question of relationship, which we have decided in agreement with the trial Court in favour of the plaintiff, the only argument advanced on behalf of the defendants and particularly Lal Harihar Pratap Bakhsh Singh, defendant No. 2, is that the plaintiff and Raja Suraj Prakash Singh could not be held to be related to each other, in spite of all the evidence to the contrary, on the ground that the two belonged to different gotras. On the face of it the argument is highly technical and its pursuit has landed us into the region of Hindu tradition.

After quoting the first part of the passage cited above from the judgment of this Board in Bhyah Ram Singh's case[6], the learned Judges state:—

> Technically and prima facie, therefore, if the plaintiff and the talukdar of Gangwal are descended from a common ancestor, they should have one and the same gotra.

Differing from the Trial Judge's view of the evidence as to the gotra of the talukdar of Gangwal, the learned Judges considered that the matter was not free from doubt, and suggested that there were two meanings of gotra, one technical and the other popular. They seek to attribute to the plaintiff's use of the term gotra a so-called popular meaning as referring to his being a Sombansi, and they conclude as follows: "On these grounds we are unable to give effect to this argument as sufficient to outweigh the direct and positive evidence as to the relationship of the two families."

As already indicated, their Lordships are of opinion that gotra has only one meaning, and they find it difficult to believe that, if the question now raised had been clearly in issue ab initio, there would have been any difficulty in producing evidence to identify beyond judicial doubt or speculation the gotras of the plaintiff and of Raja Suraj Prakash Singh. Their gotras must be well known to relatives who attended the S'raddh ceremonies, at which the gotra of the three paternal ancestors is recited, and such evidence is conspicuous by its absence. There should be no need to resort to the "region of Hindu tradition."

Their Lordships are therefore of opinion that the case should be remitted to the Chief Court in order that the plaintiff may have the opportunity of establishing the identity of his gotra with that of Raja Suraj

---

[6] 13 Moore I. A. at 391

Prakash Singh; upon this issue his success or failure in his claim to the taluka will now depend.

In accordance with the previous judgment of this Board, dated December 4, 1930, and this judgment, their Lordships will humbly advise His Majesty as follows:—That the decree of the trial Judge dated January 4, 1927, be recalled except in so far as it dismisses the plaintiff's claim in respect of the property mentioned in Schedules B, C, E and F appended thereto, that the decrees of the Chief Court in Civil Appeals Nos. 19 and 24 of 1927 be recalled; that the first appeal (No. 102 of 1929) be dismissed, the appellant (defendant No. 1) to pay the plaintiff's costs of the appeal and of Civil Appeal No. 24 of 1927; that the second appeal (No. 103 of 1929) be allowed, the appellant's costs to be paid by defendant No. 1; that the third appeal (No. 104 of 1929) be allowed without costs, and the case be remitted to the Chief Court as above proposed, the costs of all parties in the trial Court, of the parties in Civil Appeal No. 19 of 1927, and of further procedure to be adjudged by the Chief Court.

Case remitted

[Ed., A. L. J.—This case was recently followed by the Allahabad High Court in F. A. 395 of 1928 decided on June 16, 1932 (Babu Tulshi Prasad Narain Singh and others defendants-appellants v. Maharaja Prabhu Narain Singh) known as the Narhan case.]

NAGENDRA NATH DEY AND ANOTHER (Defendants)
versus
SURESH CHANDRA DEY AND OTHERS (Plaintiffs)*

Civil
1932
April 21

Lord Blanesburgh
Lord Tomlin
Lord Russell of Killowen
Sir George Lowndes
Sir Dinshah Mulla

Limitation Act, Art. 182—Construction of—Decree—Appeal—Appeal irregular or incompetent—Whether time runs from date of appellate decree.

Time under Article 182 of the Limitation Act in a case where there has been an appeal runs from the date of the decree of the appellate court. There is no qualification either as to the character of the appeal or as to the parties to it and the appeal would be no less an appeal even though it be irregular or incompetent; nor is it necessary that all the persons affected should be parties to the appeal or it should be one in which the whole decree was imperilled. Mashiat-un-nissa v. Rani, [1889] 13 All. 1 overruled. In construing provisions relating to statutes of limitations equitable considerations are out of place and strict grammatical meaning of the words is the only safe guide.

In a mortgage suit some of the mortgagees were plaintiffs while others were impleaded as defendants. The other defendants were the mortgagors or their representatives. A decree having been passed partly in favour of the plaintiffs and partly in favour of the defendants mortgagees, the plaintiffs appealed against the decree in so far as it related to the defendants mortgagees and to the appeal the defendants representing the mortgagors' interests were not impleaded. Held, nevertheless, that time for execution under Article 182 ran from the date of the decree of the appellate court.

Any application by a party to an appellate court, asking it to set aside or revise a decision of a subordinate court, is an appeal within the ordinary

---

*P. C. A. 84 of 1928

NAGENDRA NATH DEY v. SURESH CHANDRA DEY

Sir Dinshah Mulla

acceptation of the term, and it is no less an appeal because it is irregular or incompetent.

APPEAL from a decision of the High Court of Judicature at Fort William in Bengal.

L. De'Gruyther, K.C. and Jinnah for the appellants.

K. V. L. Narasimham and P. V. Subba Row for the respondents.

The following judgment was delivered by

SIR DINSHAH MULLA—This appeal raises a question as to the construction of Article 182 of Schedule I of the Indian Limitation Act, 1908.

In a suit brought many years ago for partition of certain properties held jointly by the parties to this appeal and their predecessors, a receiver was appointed with power to raise a loan on the security of a mortgage of the properties. The receiver borrowed Rs.18,000 from some of the co-sharers, and on July 10, 1894, he executed a mortgage of the properties in their favour. Amongst the mortgagees were Nagendra Nath Dey and Pulin Behari Dey, who are the appellants before this Board, and Madan Mohan and his son, who are respondents Nos. 24 and 27 respectively. The position at that date was that some of the co-sharers were mortgagees and all the co-sharers were mortgagors.

In 1907, after the shares of the several co-sharers in the partition suit had been allotted to them and the receiver discharged, Madan Mohan and his son instituted the suit out of which the present appeal arises in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Hooghly to enforce the mortgage. In this suit Madan Mohan claimed that the appellants (defendants Nos. 11 and 12) had assigned their interest in the mortgage to him. The Subordinate Judge upheld his claim, and after taking accounts between the parties, passed a preliminary mortgage decree declaring inter alia the liability of the appellants to pay a sum of Rs.4,467 which they accordingly brought into Court.

On appeal to the High Court at Calcutta a compromise was effected between the parties, and on June 10, 1913, a preliminary decree in supersession of the decree of the Subordinate Judge was passed by the High Court in terms of the compromise.

Under this decree Madan Mohan's claim against the appellants was disregarded, and the appellants were shown as mortgage-creditors for Rs.14,615-15-3. The appellants thereupon applied to the Subordinate Judge for withdrawal of the Rs.4,467. Madan Mohan opposed their application, reasserting his former claim, but his contention was overruled, and the appellants were allowed to withdraw their deposit. Madan Mohan appealed to the High Court, but his appeal was dismissed.

In the preliminary decree as passed by the High Court the co-sharers were ranged into two groups, one of decree-holders consisting of six sets of co-sharers, and the other of judgment-debtors consisting of eight sets of co-sharers. After the date of the decree two out of the eight judgment-debtors paid the amount due from them under the decree. The rest did not pay, and on June 4, 1916, Madan Mohan applied to the Subordinate Judge for a final mortgage decree. In his application he again claimed that the appellants had assigned their interest in the mortgage to him, and prayed that an order should be made to that effect. On June 24, 1920, the Subordinate Judge delivered his judgment, disallowing Madan Mohan's claim, and a final decree was passed for the sale of the mortgaged properties that had come to the share of the remaining six judgment-debtors. The decree was drawn up on August 2, 1920, but properly dated as of June 24. It contained a declaration, in conformity with the judgment, that the appellants were entitled to payment of the above-mentioned sum of Rs.14,615-15-3 out of the proceeds of the sale of the properties.

On August 27, 1920, Madan Mohan presented an application to the High Court purporting to be an appeal from the "order" of the Subordinate Judge of June 24, 1920, and alleging, what was clearly untrue, that no decree had been drawn up. His objection was only to the decision against him in respect of the assignment, and he joined as parties to the appeal only the other decree-holders and not the judgment-debtors.

The appeal, though irregular in form as not being an appeal against the decree of the Subordinate Judge, and being insufficiently stamped for this purpose, was admitted and heard in due course by Woodroffe and Suhrawardy, JJ. Objection was taken to the form of the appeal; Madan Mohan asked to amend but this was refused. In the result, the appeal was dismissed both on the ground of irregularity and upon the merits, and the dismissal was embodied in a decree of the High Court dated August 24, 1922.

It is upon the effect of this appeal that the decision of the question under Article 182 of the Limitation Act now before the Board depends.

On October 3, 1923, the appellants presented an application to the Subordinate Judge for execution by sale of the mortgaged properties. It was opposed by some of the judgment-debtors, the present respondents Nos. 1 to 4, on the ground that it was barred by Article 182. The material portion of that article is in these terms:—

Description of application.	Period of limitation.	Time from which period begins to run.
For the execution of a decree or order of any Civil Court not provided for by article 183 or by Section 48 of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908.	Three years	1. The date of the decree or order; or 2. (where there has been an appeal) the date of the final decree or order of the Appellate Court.

If the three years are to be calculated, as the respondents contend, from the date of the decree of the Subordinate Judge, viz., June 24, 1920, the application was manifestly out of time; it was within time if the critical date is that of the decree of the High Court of August 24, 1922, and the decision of this question depends on whether Madan Mohan's appeal which was dismissed on the latter date was an appeal within the meaning of the second clause in the third column of the article cited above. The Subor-

CIVIL

1932

NAGENDRA NATH DEY v. SURESH CHANDRA DEY

Sir Dinshah Mulla

dinate Judge held that it was, and that the application was in time; the judgment-debtor-respondents appealed, and the High Court took the opposite view, and dismissed the application of the appellants.

The dismissal is supported upon three grounds, namely, (1) that Madan Mohan's application of August 27, 1920 (hereinafter for convenience referred to as the 1920 appeal), was by reason of its irregularity not an appeal at all, but merely an abortive attempt to appeal; (2) that an appeal in order to save limitation under Clause 2 of the article must be one to which the persons affected, i.e., in the present case the judgment-debtors, were parties; and (3) that it must also be one in which the whole decree was imperilled.

In their Lordships' opinion there is no force in the first of these contentions. There is no definition of appeal in the Code of Civil Procedure, but their Lordships have no doubt that any application by a party to an appellate Court, asking it to set aside or revise a decision of a subordinate Court, is an appeal within the ordinary acceptation of the term, and that it is no less an appeal because it is irregular or incompetent. The 1920 appeal was admitted and was heard in due course, and a decree was made upon it.

The second and third contentions have been the subject of much difference of opinion in India. In Mashiat-un-nissa v. Rani[1] three of the Judges in the Full Court took one view, and two the other. In Gopal Chunder Manna v. Gosain Das Kalay[2] a Calcutta Full Bench followed the Allahabad minority, though drawing a distinction between cases of joint and of several decrees. Subsequently further differences of opinion manifested themselves even in the Calcutta Court; see Christiana Sens Law v. Benarashi Proshad Chowdhury[3] (upon which the judgment of the High Court in the present case was based); and Satish Chandra Chaudhuri v. Girish Chandra Chakravarty[4] and Dewan Abdul Alim v. Abdul Hakam[5] in both which cases the opposite view seems to have prevailed. In the courts of Madras, Bombay and Patna, the view which was taken by the minority in the Allahabad case, and which favours the present appellants, has ultimately prevailed.

Their Lordships think that nothing would be gained by discussing these varying authorities in detail. They think that the question must be decided upon the plain words of the article: "where there has been an appeal," time is to run from the date of the decree of the appellate Court. There is, in their Lordships' opinion, no warrant for reading into the words quoted any qualification either as to the character of the appeal or as to the parties to it; the words mean just what they say. The fixation of periods of limitation must always be to some extent arbitrary, and may frequently result in hardship. But in construing such provisions equitable considerations are out of place, and the strict grammatical meaning of the words is, their Lordships think, the only safe guide. It is at least an intelligible rule that so long as there is any question sub judice between any of the parties those affected shall not be compelled to pursue the so often thorny path of execution which, if the final result is against them, may lead to no advantage. Nor in such a case as this is the judgment-debtor prejudiced. He may indeed obtain the boon of delay, which is so dear to debtors, and if he is virtuously inclined there is nothing to prevent his paying what he owes into Court. But whether there be or be not a theoretical justification for the provision in question, their Lordships think that the words of the article are plain, and that there having been in the present case an appeal from the mortgage decree of June 24, 1920, time only ran against the appellants from August 24, 1922, the date of the appellate Court's decree. They are therefore in agreement upon this point with the Subordinate Judge, and they think that the order passed by him on August 4, 1924, was right.

---

[1] [1889] 13 All. 1

[2] [1898] 25 Cal. 594

[3] [1914] 19 C. W. N. 287

[4] [1920] 47 Cal. 813

[5] [1926] 53 Cal. 901

Their Lordships will accordingly humbly advise His Majesty that this appeal should be allowed, that the decree of the High Court dated February 16, 1926, should be set aside, and the order of the Subordinate Judge dated August 4, 1924, restored. The respondents Nos. 1 to 4 must pay the cost of the appellants in the High Court and before this Board.

Appeal allowed

Watkins and Hunter—Solicitors for the appellants.
Harold Shephard—Solicitor for the respondents.

THE COMMISSIONER OF INCOME TAX, CENTRAL PROVINCES AND BERAR

versus

SIR S. M. CHITNAVIS, SINCE DECEASED (NOW REPRESENTED BY KRISHNA RAO, MINOR, THROUGH HIS GUARDIAN PARWATI BAI LADY CHITNAVIS)*

Civil
1932
April 26
Lord Blanesburgh
Lord Russell of Killowen
Sir Dinshah Mulla

Income-tax Act (XI of 1922), Sec. 10—Business profits—Ascertainment of—Bad debts of the year to be deducted—What debts bad—Question of fact—To be decided by appropriate tribunal—Statute barred debts not necessarily bad.

In assessing the amount of profits and gains of a year chargeable to income-tax account must be taken of all losses incurred during the year and for this purpose each year is a separate and self-contained period of time in regard to which profits earned or losses sustained before its commencement are irrelevant. Consequently a debt, which had in fact become a bad debt before the commencement of a particular year, could not properly be deducted in ascertaining profits of that year because loss had not been sustained in that year.

Whether a debt is a bad debt, and, if so, at what point of time it became a bad debt, are questions of fact to be decided in the event of dispute by the appropriate tribunal, and not by the ipse dixit of any one else. The assessee has no option of declaring debts bad in any particular year. A statute barred debt is not necessarily bad; neither is a debt which is not statute barred necessarily good.

---

*P. C. A. 71 of 1930

CIVIL

1932

COMMISSIONER OF INCOME TAX, C. P.
v.
S. M. CHITNAVIS

Lord Russell of Killowen

APPEAL from a decision of the Court of the Judicial Commissioner of the Central Provinces. (For a report of the judgment under appeal see Commissioner of Income Tax, Central Provinces v. S. M. Chitnavis, A. I. R. [1929] Nag. 50.)

A. M. Dunne, K.C. and R. P. Hills for the appellant.

Latter, K.C. and Jinnah for the respondent.

The following judgment was delivered by

LORD RUSSELL OF KILLOWEN—This is an appeal from a judgment of the Court of the Judicial Commissioner, Central Provinces, upon a reference of questions of law, made at the instance of an assessee, under Section 66(2) of the Indian Income Tax Act, 1922, which will hereafter be referred to as the Act.

The questions involved were considered by the said Court to be of such importance that the case was (after argument before two Commissioners) re-argued before a full Bench.

Two separate and distinct matters were raised for decision before the said Court, and its adjudication upon each was adverse to the present appellant. In respect of one of such matters he made no attempt to appeal, and the dispute in regard thereto is at an end. In regard to the other matter, however, he applied to the said Court for leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council, and in response to that application the Court certified that the requirements of Section 109(c) of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908, were fulfilled, "inasmuch as a question of great public importance is involved in the case."

Their Lordships draw attention to this aspect of the case at the outset in view of the contentions which were advanced before them on behalf of the respondent.

The facts of the case may now be stated.

Sir Shanker Rao Chitnavis (who will be referred to as the assessee) for the purpose of assessment to income tax for the year 1926-1927 had, under Section 22 of the Act, to make a return of his total income during the year 1925-1926. He returned that income at Rs.74,668. The Income Tax officer, proceeding under Section 23 of the Act, by his order dated January 17, 1927, assessed the total income at a figure of Rs.1,16,480. In arriving at this figure the officer had (inter alia) disallowed certain deductions which had been made by the assessee. The assessee appealed, under Section 30 of the Act, against the assessment to the Assistant Commissioner, who, by his order dated April 25, 1927, reduced the amount of the assessment to Rs.1,13,012. The Assistant Commissioner allowed some, but disallowed others, of the said deductions.

Among the deductions which the assessee had made from the gross income of his business was a sum of Rs.17,983-11-6 for bad debts. The officer had disallowed Rs.7,481-13-9 of this deduction, thereby increasing the figure of assessment by that amount. The Assistant Commissioner affirmed this disallowance. It is round this sum of Rs.7,481-13-9, and the right of the assessee to deduct it, that this appeal revolves.

The officer, in his order, dealt with the matter thus:—

> Bad debts claimed amount to Rs.17,983-11-6. Lists were called > for and scrutinized and found that as much as Rs.7,481-13-9 are very old and time-barred.

He accordingly would not allow the Rs.7,481-13-9 to be deducted.

The Assistant Commissioner, in his order, used the following language:—

> It is urged that the whole of the bad debt amounting to Rs.17,982 should have been allowed. Lists were called for showing details of dates when the amounts were due in order to ascertain when the debts were really ascertained to be bad and on examination it was found that Rs.7,481 were on account of old bad debts which could not be allowed in the account year. The rest were allowed. Mr. Zinzarde argues that it should be left to the assessee to declare when the debts were bad and the Income-tax Officer should not go on the presumption that the amount had become time-barred in previous years. It appears to me that the criterion to know when the debt is bad is that all the legal remedies to recover fail. The assessee could not be said to be able to recover an old debt although he may entertain a hope to recover. Mere hope will not convert an irrecoverable loan into a recoverable item. It is, I think, not right to allow sums which had become time-barred long before the account year.

The assessee then required the Commissioner to refer to the High Court, under Section 66(2) of the Act, certain questions of law alleged to arise out of the order of the Assistant Commissioner, that which related to the said sum of Rs.7,481-13-9 being described in the assessee's petition in these terms:—

> Has not the assessee got the option of declaring debts bad when he finds after sufficient waiting that from the circumstances of the debtors he is unable to recover them? Can the Income-tax authority deprive the assessee of this option? Should not the Income-tax Officer and the Assistant Commissioner have allowed Rs.7,481-13-9 to the assessee on the same considerations on which the remaining amount out of Rs.17,982 claimed by him was allowed?

An oral affirmation was made by the general agent of the assesee, which contained the following statement in regard to the bad debts:—

> The bad debts, amounting to Rs.7,481, had already gone bad, owing to their being time-barred much before the account year. That is they had gone time-barred in previous account years. But we did not write them off in the hope that they would be collected later on. But as they did not come to be so collected, they were written off during the account year.

The Commissioner, in accordance with Section 66(2) of the Act, drew up a statement of the case and referred it, with his own opinion thereon, to the Court of the Judicial Commissioner. The statement contains two passages which require to be set out. The first is this:—

> Rs.7,481-13-9.—In all, the assessee had claimed a deduction of Rs.17,982 on account of bad debts. Of these, debts amounting to Rs.10,105 were such as had fallen bad during the account year and were written off in that year and were allowed. Debts amounting to Rs.7,481-13-9 were very old and had become bad on account of being time-barred or otherwise much before the account year. They should have been written off in those years and were therefore not allowed.

The other passage runs thus:—

> I beg to say that the assessment is to be made on the income > of the previous year. This is arrived at after making certain deductions or allowances specified in the Act. These deductions or allowances must also relate to the previous year. Expenditure, actual or notional, that does not relate to the previous year cannot be allowed. The Act does not allow losses to be carried forward from one year to another. Bad debts are a form of notional expenditure and such expenditure must be deemed to be incurred when the debts become bad, that is when they are found to be irrecoverable. When they become bad is, a question of fact to be determined by the Income-tax Officer. It is clear, I submit, that an assessee cannot be allowed to accumulate bad debts and write them off in a year when he will escape the largest possible amount of income-tax by doing so. This answers the first two parts of the first question. The contention that the bad debts amounting to Rs.7,481 should have been allowed on the same ground as the balance of the total claim of Rs.17,982 was allowed does not hold good, in as much as the remaining debts became bad during the account year and were written off during that period and as such were correctly allowed. I submit therefore that this part of the question should be answered in the negative.

The opinion of the Full Bench was unanimous on the points involved in the reference, and in accordance therewith the Court of the Judicial Commissioner by order of December 13, 1928, answered the question in relation to bad debts as follows:—

> The assessee has the option of declaring debts bad when he finds, after sufficient waiting, that from the circumstances of the debtors he is unable to recover them. As the law at present stands the income-tax authority cannot deprive the assessee of this option. The present non-applicant was, therefore, entitled to the deduction of Rs.7,481-13-9 on the same consideration on which the balance of the amount of Rs.17,892 was allowed.

The grounds for this decision are contained in the opinion delivered by Mr. Kinkhede, additional Judicial Commissioner, with which the two other members of the Court merely expressed their agreement. He took the view as their Lordships read his opinion, (1) that an assessee is entitled in ascertaining his profits for a year to deduct such debts as he adjudges to be in that year bad debts; (2) that in assessing the taxable profits for any account year the assessee is entitled to have deducted the whole amount which the assessee has in fact written off as irrecoverable in his accounts of that year; (3) that in this regard the assessee is the sole arbiter, and that his decision is final. That this correctly represents the view of the Judicial Commissioner may be seen from the following passages in his opinion. After stating that the argument of the assessee's counsel (based upon some official Manual) was correct, he said: "It entitles the assessee to urge that in deducing the taxable income in the shape of book profits of the account year, the whole of the amount of bad debts written off by him in his account as irrecoverable in the account year must be deducted." And later on he uses the following language: "The assessee must for obvious reasons be the sole arbiter of his own rights and privileges as regards the business he conducts in his own interest. What is to his interest, and what is prejudicial to him, must depend upon his own decision. It therefore follows that on the question whether to treat any particular debt as bad or irrecoverable, his word or decision must be final; for he alone is or can be the judge of the risks, chances and circumstances which may effect the recovery or non-recovery of that debt from his debtor." In other words the Judicial Commissioner thinks that the assessee is the sole person to decide whether a debt is bad and when it became bad.

The Judicial Commissioner in coming to this view seems to have been to some extent influenced by the mistaken belief that if a creditor writes a debt off in his books as bad, that act in some way puts an end to any right ever to recover the debt. This would appear from the following extract from his opinion:

> An entry in the creditor's account books writing off a debt as a bad debt in any particular year is under such circumstances likely to be interpreted by the debtor as prima facie good evidence of conduct on the part of the creditor wherefrom an abandonment of his right to demand it might reasonably be inferred so as to serve as a good answer to any future demand, on the occasion of any adjustment or fresh loan. Such an entry is, in my opinion, a conscious act on the creditor's part whereby he determines his election, once and for ever, to treat the debt referred to therein as bad or irrecoverable. It, therefore, stands to reason that the creditor must have full discretion in the matter, because, it is he, and not the Income-tax Officer, who knows, or must be deemed to know, the circumstances and risks as well as chances of recovery from his debtor. The Income-tax Officer cannot, therefore, legally insist that the assessee must subordinate his own will or discretion and even his decision in the matter to his decision.

Their Lordships are of opinion that the views of the Judicial Commissioner enumerated above are erroneous, and that the assessee has no such decisive voice as suggested.

Although the Act nowhere in terms authorises the deduction of bad debts of a business, such a deduction is necessarily allowable. What are chargeable to income tax in respect of a business are the profits and gains of a year; and in assessing the amount of the profits and gains of a year account must necessarily be taken of all losses incurred, otherwise you would not arrive at the true profits and gains. But the losses must be losses incurred in that year. You may not, when setting out to ascertain the profits and gains of one year, deduct a loss which had in fact been incurred before the commencement of that year. If you did, you would not arrive at the true profits and gains of the year. For the purpose of computing yearly profits and gains, each year is a separate self-contained period time, in regard to which profits earned or losses sustained before its commencement are irrelevant. It thus follows that a debt, which had in fact become a bad debt before the commencement of a particular year, could not properly be deducted in ascertaining the profits of that year, because the loss had not been sustained in that year.

Whether a debt is a bad debt, and, if so, at what point of time it became a bad debt, are questions which in their Lordships' view are questions of fact, to be decided in the event of dispute by the appropriate tribunal, and not by the ipse dixit of any one else. The mere fact that a debt was incurred at a date beyond the period of limitation will not of itself make the debt a bad debt; still less will it fix the date at which it became a bad debt. A statute barred debt is not necessarily bad; neither is a debt which is not statute barred necessarily good. The age of the debt is no doubt a relevant matter to take into consideration. In every case it is a question of fact, to be determined after consideration of all relevant circumstances.

If, therefore, the order and decision of the Court of the Judicial Commissioner depend upon the view that this question of fact is one as to which the sole arbiter is the assessee, that order and decision cannot stand.

It was, however, argued by Mr. Latter on behalf of the respondent that the appeal must be dismissed. He conceded that an assessee was not entitled, in computing his business profits and gains of one year, to deduct a loss in fact incurred in an earlier year. Further he said that he was not concerned to argue that an assessee was the sole arbiter to decide whether a debt was bad, and when it had become bad, because this particular assessee was entitled to succeed upon the evidence as it stood in this particular case. He claimed that in this particular case, the deduction of the Rs.7,481-13-9 had been disallowed by the officer and the Assistant Commissioner solely upon the insufficient ground that the debts represented by that sum had become statute-barred before the year in question; and that accordingly the debts being admittedly bad there was no evidence to justify the disallowance of the deduction in the particular year.

Their Lordships are not prepared to accept the view that the disallowance rested solely on the fact that the limitation period had expired. The debts are stated to be not only time-barred, but are also described as "very old," and as "old bad debts which could not be allowed in the account year."

However this may be, it is clear that the members of the Court of the Judicial Commissioner intended to decide and thought that they were deciding, not a question affecting only a particular assessee and depending upon the state of the evidence in a particular case, but a question of great public importance affecting assessees generally, and depending upon general principles.

The questions for reference under Section 66 of the Act (which were framed by the assessee) are, perhaps, not very happily worded; but the use of the word "option" and the question whether the income-tax authority can deprive the assessee of the alleged option help to throw light upon what was the real issue between the parties. Their Lordships feel no doubt as to what that issue was, and how it arose. The officer (under Section 23 of the Act), after considering the evidence and account books produced, disallowed the deduction; and the Assistant Commissioner confirmed the disallowance. The argument on behalf of the assessee is apparent in the order of the Assistant Commissioner. He states therein that the pleader for the assessee "argues that it should be left to the assessee to declare when the debts were bad, and the Income-tax officer should not go on the presumption that the amount had become time-barred in previous years." From this their Lordships are satisfied that the attitude adopted by the assessee, when challenged, was to decline to establish by evidence that these old debts had not already become bad before

CIVIL

1932

COMMISSIONER OF INCOME TAX, C. P. v. S. M. CHITNAVIS

Lord Russell of Killowen

the commencement of the year of account, and to claim the right to be sole arbiter of the question in dispute. That was the real issue between the parties which the Court of the Judicial Commissioner (wrongly, as their Lordships conceive) decided in favour of the assessee.

In their Lordships' opinion the question which was referred to the Court in relation to bad debts should have been answered as follows:—

"The assessee has no 'option' of declaring debts bad. Whether a debt is bad, and when it became bad, are questions of fact to be determined in case of dispute not by the assessee or by the exercise of any 'option' on his part, but by the appropriate tribunal upon a consideration of all relevant and admissible evidence. In the circumstances of the present case it is not possible to say that the Income-tax Officer and the Assistant Commissioner should have allowed Rs.7,481-13-9 to the assessee on the same consideration on which the remaining amount of Rs.17,982 claimed by him was allowed."

Their Lordships will, accordingly, humbly advise His Majesty that this appeal should be allowed and the order of the Assistant Commissioner dated, April 25, 1927, restored so far as relates to the Rs.7,481-13-9.

There will be no costs of this appeal.

Appeal allowed

Solicitor, India Office—Solicitor for the appellant.

Hy. S. L. Polak and Co.—Solicitors for the respondent.

HIGH COURT

CIVIL

1932

June 21

MUKERJI, J.
BANERJI, J.
KING, J.

LACHMAN SINGH AND OTHERS (Defendants)

versus

SURENDRA BAHADUR SINGH AND OTHERS (Plaintiffs)*

Transfer of Property Act, Sec. 59, Evidence Act, Secs. 68 to 71 and Registration Act, Secs. 58 and 59—Suit to enforce mortgage—Execution and attestation not admitted—No specific plea that the deed, for want of proper attestation did not operate as a mortgage deed—What must mortgagee prove to obtain a decree—Signature of Sub-registrar and identifying witnesses—Whether sufficient attestation.

Where a mortgagee sues to enforce his mortgage and, on the one hand, the execution and attestation of the deed are not admitted and, on the other, there is no plea that the deed for want of proper attestation does not operate as a mortgage deed, the mortgagee need prove only this much that the mortgagor signed the document in the presence of the attesting witness called (or the attesting witness received from the executant a personal acknowledgment of his signature) and the attesting witness signed in the presence of the executant, provided the document on the face of it bears the attestation of more than one person.

But if the validity of the mortgage be specifically denied, in the sense that the document did not effect a mortgage in law, then it must be proved by the mortgagee that the mortgage deed was attested by at least two witnesses.

---

*F. A. 183 of 1929

Ram Dei v. Munna Lal, I.L.R. 39 All. 109, Uttam Singh v. Hukam Singh, I. L. R. 39 All. 112, Shib Dayal v. Sheo Ghulam, I. L. R. 39 All. 241 and Balbhadar Singh v. Lakshmi Bai, [1930] A. L. J. 623 discussed.

Neither the registering officer nor the witnesses identifying the executant at registration sign as attesting witnesses, and they cannot therefore be treated as such for the purpose of the validity of the mortgage.

Shiam Sundar Singh v. Jagannath Singh, 26 A. L. J. 28, Sarkar Barnard and Co. v. Alak Manjari Kuari, A. I. R. [1925] P.C., 89 relied on. Veerappa Chettiar v. Subramania Ayyar, I. L. R. 52 Mad. 1923 dissented from.

FIRST APPEAL from a decree of MAULVI TUFAIL AHMAD, Subordinate Judge of Etawah.

K. N. Katju, Baleshwari Prasad and S. N. Seth for the appellants.

P. L. Banerji and M. L. Chaturvedi for the respondents.

The judgment of the Court was delivered by

Mukerji, J.

MUKERJI, J.—This case has been referred to a Full Bench for decision of two points of law. They have been formulated as follows:—

1. When a mortgagee sues to enforce his mortgage, and execution and attestation of the deed are not admitted, what must the mortgagee prove in order to obtain a decree?

2. Whether the signatures of the sub-registrar and of the witnesses identifying the executant at registration are sufficient attestation of the deed for the purposes of the Transfer of Property Act, assuming that the sub-registrar and identifying witnesses did receive from the executant a personal acknowledgment of his signature or mark, and that they did sign in the executant's presence?

The first point as framed above is meant to decide whether when a plaintiff sues on a mortgage deed and, the mortgage deed not being admitted by the defendant or defendants, he has formally to prove it, it is necessary for him to give evidence of the fact that the deed had been attested by two witnesses; or whether it would be enough for him to comply with the provisions of Sections 68 to 71 of the Evidence Act. In other words, when it is not specifically in dispute whether there were two or more attesting witnesses to the deed or less than two, whether it is enough for a party seeking to prove the document to call a marginal witness to prove the signature of the executant and the witness's own signature on the margin, the deed itself bearing on the face of it the attestation of more than one attesting witness. Again, in other words, the question is whether in the three cases decided in this Court, Ram Dei v. Munna Lal[1], Uttam Singh v. Hukam Singh[2] and Shib Dayal v. Sheo Ghulam and Lachman Prasad[3], have been correctly decided.

The argument for the appellants as advanced by Dr. Katju was this. In order to make a mortgage deed admissible in evidence it may be enough for a party to examine only one attesting witness and to prove that the attesting witness attested the document and that the mortgagor signed it. To comply with the rules contained in Sections 68 and 69 of the Evidence Act it may be enough for the party propounding the document not to adduce any further evidence. But, if he contented himself with a bare compliance with Sections 68 and 69 of the Evidence Act, he may succeed in making the document capable of being read by the court, but the evidence would not be enough to prove that the document creates or created a valid mortgage, and, therefore, if a mortgage has to be enforced it must be proved that it was duly attested by at least two witnesses according to law.

---

[1] I. L. R. 39 All. 109

[2] I. L. R. 39 All. 112

[3] I. L. R. 39 All. 241

The argument on the other side is that in the absence of anything to show that a mortgage bond, which on the face of it is attested by two or more witnesses, was not actually so attested it is enough to prove that one marginal witness attested the deed and the mortgagor executed it.. It is urged in support of this argument that the presumption under Section 114 of the Indian Evidence Act would be that the mortgage deed had been executed in the manner required by law and that everything that was likely to have happened at the execution of a mortgage did happen. Certain English cases have been quoted in support of this contention, which rely on a presumption of the correctness of things, and these are Wright v. Sanderson[4] relied on in Uttam Singh v. Hukam Singh[5] and Harris v. Knight[6] and an Indian case Jagendra Nath v. Nitai Charan[7] has also been cited. The first two were cases of a will and the last one was a mortgage case. It was further argued on behalf of the respondents that the rules laid down in the three cases reported in I. L. R. Volume 39 have so long held good in this court that it would be undesirable to pronounce them bad law after such a length of time.

It becomes necessary to examine the three cases in Volume 39 of the Allahabad Series.

In Ram Dei v. Munna Lal[8] the pleadings of the parties do not appear from the report. We have sent for and examined the paper book. We find that the suit was by the mortgagee on a simple mortgage alleged to have been executed by one Bachchu Lal, the late husband of the defendant. The defendant pleaded that so far as she was aware Bachchu Lal never executed any mortgage deed in favour of the plaintiff as alleged by him. On these pleadings it was held that the plaintiff had done all that was needed of him by law if he examined one of the attesting witnesses who said that the mortgagor had signed in his presence and he (the witness) had signed the deed as an attesting witness. It was pointed out at page 111 of the Report that "It was not expressly proved that there was another attesting witness present who saw the mortgagor sign, but it was not proved to the contrary that there was not another attesting witness". The matter, therefore, stood thus. There was a denial on the part of the defendant of the execution of the mortgage deed by the mortgagor and there was no question as to whether the deed was operative or not, assuming that the mortgage deed had been executed (signed by the mortgagor after it had been written out). It was held that there was no necessity for the plaintiff to prove affirmatively that the execution had been witnessed by at least two of the attesting witnesses.

---

[4] L. R. 9 P. D. 149

[5] I. L. R. 39 All 112

[6] L. R. 15 P. D. 170 at 172

[7] 7 Cal. W. N. 384

[8] I. L. R. 39 All. 109

CIVIL

1932

LACHMAN SINGH v. SURENDRA BAHADUR SINGH

Mukerji, J.

In the second case of Uttam Singh v. Hukam Singh[9] the pleadings are not apparent on the face of the Report. We have examined the paper book in this case also and find that the plaintiff Hukam Singh sued on foot of a mortgage executed in favour of one Tulsi Singh by one Torhi Singh. Torhi Singh was dead and he was represented by his son and other members of the family. The defence of one set of defendants was that the execution and receipt of the consideration money of the mortgage deed sued on by Torhi Singh were not admitted (by the contesting defendant). Another set said that Torhi Singh did not execute and complete the mortgage deed sued on. The issue framed in the court of first instance was (1) "Did Torhi Singh execute the deed in suit for consideration? Does the deed in suit amount to a mortgage? Is the deed binding on the defendants?" The marginal witnesses who were three in number were all dead and the signatures of two were identified by their relations. There was no question raised as to whether the requirements of Section 59 of the Transfer of Property Act had been complied with or not, in the sense that at least two witnesses should have witnessed the execution of the deed by the mortgagor. It was held by the High Court that if the provisions of Section 69 had been complied with, the document had been proved as a deed of mortgage, and it was not necessary to prove further that the mortgage had in fact been executed by the executant in the presence of the attesting witnesses. As we have said, in deciding this case the learned Judges, namely, Richards, Chief Justice and Rafiq, J. relied on the case of Wright v. Sanderson[10]. In the third case of Shib Dayal v. Sheo Ghulam[11] the mortgage deed on the face of it appeared to have been attested by a large number of witnesses. The execution of the deed had been denied and one marginal witness was examined to prove the execution of the document by the mortgagor and the witness's own attestation. There was no proof that the mortgagor signed in the presence of two attesting witnesses; nor was there any proof to the contrary. It was held following the case of Uttam Singh v. Hukum Singh[12] that the requirements of the law had been complied with.

The principle laid down in these cases which were decided by four Judges was followed in this Court in Narain Das v. Dilawar[13] by Chief Justice Richards and Banerji, J., the Judges who decided the case in Ram Dei v. Munna Lal[14]. Again, the principle laid down in the case in I. L. R. 39 Allahabad was affirmed in Lalta Prasad v. Darshan Singh[15] and in Pateshwari Prasad v. Shankar Dayal[16]. It was argued by Dr. Katju that the cases in I. L. R. 39 Allahabad have really been dissented from by a Division Bench in this Court in the case of Balbhadar Singh v. Lakshmi Bai[17]. No doubt there are some dicta of Sen, J. which might be construed as going in favour of the appellants, but the learned Judge himself distinguished the case of Ram Dei v. Munna Lal. Indeed no occasion for dissenting from the decisions in Volume 39 of the Indian Law Report

[9] I. L. R. 39 All. 112

[10] L. R. 9 P. D. 149

[11] I. L. R. 39 All. 241

[12] I. L. R. 39 All. 112

[13] 17 A. L J. 141

[14] 39 All. 109

[15] [1924] A. I. R. 149

[16] [1924] A. I. R. 217

[17] [1930] A. L. J. 28 at 623

Allahabad series arose, because in the case of Balbhadar Singh v. Lakshmi Bai it had been found as a fact that when the donor put his name on the deed of gift only one attesting witness was present and the other two were not there. Thus it was clearly established on facts that the deed had never been completed as a deed of gift, as required by Section 123 of the Transfer of Property Act. We are, therefore, not prepared to say that the cases in I. L. R. 39 Allahabad were dissented from in Balbhadar Singh's case.

Now let us consider the merits of the arguments. For the appellants it is urged that by compliance with the provisions of Sections 68, 69 and 71 of the Evidence Act a party succeeds only in making the mortgage deed, or any other deed like a deed of gift required to be attested by at least two witnesses, admissible in evidence, but, in order to be able to show that the document is a valid deed of mortgage or a valid deed of gift, he must also prove further that it was attested by two witnesses. It is conceded on behalf of the respondents and indeed the matter cannot be disputed that where the validity of the deed propounded either as a deed of mortgage or as a deed of gift is specifically in question, on the ground whether or not the requirements of Sections 59 and 123 of the Transfer of Property Act had been complied with, the party relying on the deed must prove that it had been attested by at least two attesting witnesses. But the question is where the mere execution of a document has to be proved either because of the case being ex parte or because of a mere denial of the execution, whether it would still be necessary to prove that the document was attested by two attesting witnesses. The cases in I. L. R. 39 Allahabad lay down that it is not necessary. They relied on the express language of Sections 68 and 69 of the Evidence Act. These sections make a document which is attested admissible in evidence if the requirements of those sections are complied with. If the documents become admissible in evidence, they become admissible to prove what they contain, that is to say, they would become admissible to prove whether a mortgage had been executed or a gift had been made. There seems to be no warrant for an argument that a deed may be merely admissible, and yet may be incapable of being read as a document of the kind which it professes to be. When the Legislature enacted Sections 68 and 69 of the Evidence Act, they must have known that there might be titles for the creation of which attestation of the title deed by at least two witnesses would be necessary. It is true that in 1872 when the Evidence Act was enacted, the Transfer of Property Act had not come into force, but the latter was enacted in 1882 and, although 50 years have passed since it was enacted, the Legislature did not think it necessary to amend the Indian Evidence Act, which had been enacted ten years earlier. This circumstance would go to show that in order to make a mortgage deed admissible in evidence as a mortgaged deed or in order to make a deed of gift admissible in evidence as a deed of gift, it is enough to comply with the provisions of Section 68 or Section 69, as the case may be, of the Indian Evidence Act. But if the question be whether the document did create a mortgage or gift or not, it must be proved that the requirements of law as contained in Section 59 and Section 123 of the Transfer of Property Act have been complied with.

Thus on the merits, and on the ground that long established decisions of the Court should not be lightly interfered with, we are of opinion that we should answer the question No. 1 as follows:—

> Where a mortgagee sues to enforce his mortgage and the execution and attestation of the deed are not admitted, the mortgagee need prove only this much that the mortgagor signed the document in the presence of an attesting witness and one man attested the document; provided the document on the face of it bears the attestation of more than one person;
>
> But if the validity of the mortgage be specifically denied, in the sense that the document did not effect a mortgage in law, then it must be proved by the mortgagee that the mortgage deed was attested by at least two witnesses.

On the second point also there appears to be a conflict of decisions among the different High Courts. In Veerappa Chettiar v. Subramania Ayyar[18] it was held that where it was proved that the mortgagor admitted execution of the document before the sub-registrar and the two identifying witnesses who appeared at the registration, the requirements of Section 59 of the Transfer of Property Act had been complied with. In Bunkates Sewak Singh v. Rama Das[19] a more or less similar view was taken by a bench of two Judges of this Court. In Ram Charan v. Bhairon[20] the views taken in Bunkates Sewak Singh v. Rama Das and Veerappa Chettiar v. Subramania Ayyar were accepted without any examination. In Oudh a Division Bench has expressly dissented from the view taken in the cases quoted above, see Mt. Chandrani Kuar v. Lala Sheo Nath[21].

There being no question of upholding a current of decisions, we must decide the question on principle alone. Section 59 of the Transfer of Property Act requires that for the creation of a mortgage other than a possessory mortgage of a small value, (with which we are not concerned here) there should be a registered instrument "signed by the mortgagor and attested by at least two witnesses." The safeguards, therefore, that are needed are (1) the signature of the mortgagor on the instrument (2) attestation by at least two witnesses and (3). registration of the document. The object of having a document attested by two or more witnesses is to provide contemporaneous evidence and to safeguard against the admission of perjured and false evidence. With respect to a document which need not be attested for its validity any man can come forward and say that he saw it being executed. There is no guarantee that the witness was present at the execution of the document. On the other hand, if a document is required by law to be attested, there is this safeguard against fabrication of false evidence, that there would be at least two persons in whose presence the document would be signed or before whom the mortgagor would admit the execution of the document, either at the date of the execution of the document or immediately afterwards.

[18] I. L. R. 52 Mad. 123 (F.B.)

[19] 6 A. L. J. 737

[20] [1930] A. L. J. 1561

[21] A. I. R. 1931 Oudh 146

Under the definition of the word "attested" as it now stands, it is not necessary that the executant should sign the document in the presence of the attesting witnesses, but all that is necessary is that the executant should personally acknowledge his signature or mark on the document and the attesting witnesses should sign the instrument in the presence of the executant. Thus the executant will see before a document has the validity or force of a mortgage that his signature is there and at least there are two persons who have signed before him, the persons being such as have received a personal acknowledgment of the execution of the bond from him (the mortgagor).

After the deed has been signed and attested, it is to be taken to the registration office for registration. If we dispense with the previous signing of the document by the mortgagor and the previous attestation by the two marginal witnesses, we reduce the guarantee of genuineness required by Section 59 of the Transfer of Property Act. Further, if we permit the registration and what may happen at the time to take the place of execution and attestation which, according to the plain language of the section must precede registration, we break the entire spirit of the enactment.

The duty of a registering officer is contained in several sections of the Registration Act (1908). When the document is presented to him, he is to enquire of the person making the presentation, if he happens to be the person executing the document whether the presentor executed the document or where the presentor is not the executant, whether the person who professes to have executed the document really executed the same. Then he has to satisfy himself as to the identity of the person or persons appearing before him and alleging that they have executed the document. See Section 34, Sub-section (3), Clauses (a) and (b). Then Section 52 requires that the day, hour and place of presentation shall be endorsed on every document at the time of presentation. Then Section 58 requires that the signature and addition of every person examined in reference to a document as also the signature and addition of every person admitting the execution of the document shall be obtained. Where, therefore, the registering officer does not know the executant of the document personally and has to ask certain persons as to whether they know the executant, the signatures of these persons; ordinarily known as the identifying witnesses, have to be taken down. Section 59 requires that the registering officer shall affix the date and his signature to all endorsements made under Sections 52 and 58. Thus, we find that, although the registering officer receives a personal acknowledgment from the executant of the fact of his executing a document and although he puts down his signature under a statement recorded by himself or his clerk that the executant admitted the execution, he does not sign as an attesting witness. Section 59 requires that the registering officer shall affix the date and his signature on the same day on which the endorsements were made; thus he will do his duty according to law if all the endorsements are prepared in his presence and all signatures are taken in his presence and he at

CIVIL
1932
LACHMAN SINGH
v.
SURENDRA BAHADUR SINGH
Mukerji, J.

the end of the day's work, sits down and signs all the endorsements made in the course of the day. At that time neither the executants nor the identifying witnesses need be present.

An attesting witness is one who signs the document in the presence of the executant after seeing the execution of the document or after receiving a personal acknowledgment of the execution of the document by the executant. Thus, there is no guarantee that a registering officer shall sign the document in the presence of the executant and will thus fulfil the requirements of an attesting witness.

Then again, the identifying witnesses may be present when the executant admits the execution of the document in the presence of the sub-registrar, or they may not be so present. They may be sent for after the executant has made his admission. They sign the endorsement on the document only in token of the fact that they have identified the executant before the sub-registrar. Thus they do not sign as attesting witnesses, and they never profess to be attesting witnesses.

It follows that the guarantee as to the genuineness of the transaction, expected to be furnished by attesting witnesses, disappears. There is no guarantee that the registrar signed the document in the presence of the executant. There is no guarantee that the identifying witnesses signed the document in the presence of the executant. Again, there is no guarantee that the identifying witnesses heard the executant admitting the execution of the document. It would then remain for the mortgagee to try to persuade the sub-registrar and the identifying witnesses to appear in court and to state that, as a matter of fact, they heard the executant admitting execution and that they signed the registration endorsement in the presence of the executant, although they may have no recollection as to what had happened. In the case of an attesting witness, even if he does not remember what happened when he signed, if he is really an attesting witness, he can, on looking at his own signature at the margin of the deed, safely swear that, although he has no clear recollection of what had happened, he could say from his own signature that he was an attesting witness to the deed and that the mortgagor had either executed the document in his presence or had at least acknowledged the execution in his presence and that he (the attesting witness) had signed the document in the presence of the mortgagor.

Thus we see that the spirit of the enactment that a mortgage deed to be valid must be signed and attested by at least two witnesses is broken, if we accept the possibility of the sub-registrar or identifying witnesses coming forward as so many attesting witnesses.

There are again some other difficulties in the way of accepting the correctness of the decisions like Veerappa Chettiar v. Subramania Ayyar[22]. Section 47 of the Registration Act lays down that a registered document shall operate from the time from which it would have commenced to operate if no registration thereof had been required or made, and not from the time of its registration. Thus, the law understands that a document is presented

---

[22] I. L. R. 52 Mad. 123

CIVIL

1932

LACHMAN SINGH
v.
SURENDRA BAHADUR SINGH

Mukerji, J.

for registration after it has been completed as if there had been no law of registration in existence. Again, a similar deduction can be made from the language of other sections of the Registration Act, for example, under Section 34 the registering officer is required to inquire whether the document presented before him has been executed or not. This contemplates that the document is ready there and requires registration. The registration is a guarantee against fabrication. The document is operative by its own force, but registration gives a guarantee that it is not a fabricated document. The sub-registrar is required to make his "endorsements" on the document; see Section 52, Section 58 and Section 59. A document, therefore, must be a document which existed before the "endorsement" was made on it. The same conclusion may be drawn from the language of Section 59 of the Transfer of Property Act. There must be under Section 59 an 'instrument' signed by the mortgagor and attested by at least two witnesses before it can be registered. If signature and attestation be permissible at the registration, why should not a further attestation be possible after the registration? Suppose a person whom a sub-registrar knows presents before a sub-registrar a document professed to be a mortgage deed but bearing no attestation. The sub-registrar accepts the admission and signs the endorsement in the presence of the executant and thus, let us take it for granted, becomes an attesting witness. Then if the mortgagor takes the document to another man and asks him to sign on the margin as an attesting witness, the deed should be treated as a valid mortgage under Section 59, for, are there not two attesting witnesses according to the contention of the respondents? In our opinion, therefore, the document must be completed by the signature of the mortgagor and by the signature of the attesting witnesses before it is presented for registration.

In the case of Samu Patter v. Abdul Kadir Revuthan[28] their Lordships of the Privy Council quoted certain English decisions with approval. These decisions define an attesting witness (at page 614) as follows:—

> In Bryan v. White, [1850] 2 Rob. 315 at 317, Dr. Lushington in 1850 laid down that 'attest' means the persons shall be present and see what passes, and shall, when required, bear witness to the fact.

Again the Lord Chancellor summed up the conclusion in these words:—

'The party who sees the will executed is in fact a witness to it; if he subscribes as a witness, he is then an attesting witness'. Thus an attesting witness must sign a document as an attesting witness. If a man signs a document not with the idea of being an attesting witness, he cannot be called an attesting witness. Thus, we find that in the case of Shiam Sundar Singh v. Jagannath Singh[24] certain sons of a testator had been made to sign a will of a Taluqdar ostensibly as marginal witnesses. The testator said in the will:

> I have executed this will with the consent of all my sons and have got them to sign it as witness with this very purpose so that this will might be acted upon fully etc.

The testator himself believed that he had obtained the signatures of his sons as witnesses. Now a legatee by attesting a will forfeits the gift made by the document. Their Lordships of the Privy Council held that the sons did not lose the gifts because they could not be legally regarded as attesting witnesses. It is clear, therefore, that the mere fact that a man sees the execution of a document and signs it does not make him an attesting witness, unless he signs with the idea of bearing testimony to the execution and with the idea further of permitting himself to be cited as a witness, to prove the execution. This point was very clearly discussed in a Patna case in the judgment of the Patna High Court and the judgment was upheld by the Privy Council, the appeal being characterized as "hopeless"—see Sarkar Barnard and Co. v. Alak Manjari Kuari[25]. Here was a deed of mortgage which was actually attested by only one witness but it had been subscribed to by the husband of the executant in token of the fact that he approved of the transaction. The Patna High Court dismissed the suit on the ground that there were no two attesting witnesses to the deed. The Judge delivering the judgment of the Patna High Court said:

---

[28] I. L. R. 35 Mad. 607

[24] 26 A. L. J. 28

> I hold that that the Maharaj Kumar (the husband) not having subscribed as witness is not a witness. It follows that the mortgage bond was not attested by at least two witnesses, and it cannot be enforced against the mortgagors.

On the authority of these two cases it must be held that neither the registering officer nor the identifying witnesses signed as attesting witnesses, and, therefore, they cannot be treated as such for the purpose of the validity of the mortgage.

On behalf of the respondents Mr. Piare Lal Banerji has relied on certain decisions in Calcutta where it has been held that the requirements of a valid will, namely, its execution before two attesting witnesses, is sufficiently complied if an otherwise defective will is taken for registration purposes before a registrar and if the testator admits execution before the registrar and the identifying witnesses. We need not quote these cases, but we can take it as an established rule of law in the Calcutta High Court and also in the Patna High Court which follows usually the decisions of the Calcutta High Court. Mr. Piare Lal Banerji's argument is that the rule of attestation of a will is similar to the rule of attestation of a mortgage deed (since the word "attested" was defined in the Transfer of Property Act) and that, therefore, the same rule should apply to a mortgage deed.

We are of opinion that the argument is fallacious and should not be accepted. A will is not required by law to be registered. Thus, it might be enough for the compliance of the rule of execution and attestation if the testator actually admits execution before the sub-registrar and the identifying witnesses. Like a mortgage deed a will need not be executed and attested first before it is presented for registration. Only two safeguards are needed for a will, namely, execution and attestation. If these are supplied at the registration, the requirements are fulfilled. The case of a will, therefore, is entirely different from a case of a mortgage and cannot be relied upon as a clear guide.

---

[25] [1925] A. I. R. (P.C.) 89

Then it was argued by Mr. Piare Lal Banerji that the cases relating to a will decided by the Calcutta and Patna High Courts have been known to the Legislature, and in amending the rule as to wills by Act XXIX of 1925 the Legislature has not touched the rulings, and, therefore, it must be taken to have approved of them. It was further argued that as, after the introduction of the definition of the word "attested" in its final shape, the execution of a will and the execution of a mortgage deed are similar in nature and as the Legislature in amending the Transfer of Property Act in 1929 did not alter the law, it must be taken that it approved of the Calcutta decisions in respect of wills, as equally applicable to a case of mortgages. This argument, in our opinion, is fallacious and makes too many assumptions which are not warranted by facts. To start with, the Succession Act of 1865 was not amended by Act No. XXXIX of 1925. The Act of 1925 is only a consolidating Act putting together all the law that was to be found on similar subjects in many enactments. Thus it cannot be said that the Legislature had an opportunity to change the law as to wills and let it stand where it stood before. Secondly, the law as to wills as laid down in the Calcutta High Court was not applied except perhaps with one or two exceptions to the cases under mortgages. It cannot be said that the Legislature in the year 1929 was aware that it had been held that a mortgage could be validly executed by admission before the sub-registrar and the identifying witnesses. The Madras Full Bench ruling was delivered on September 4, 1928 and in all probability did not appear in the Law Reports till the end of 1929.

On a careful consideration of the entire arguments, we are of opinion that the answer to the second question must be in the negative and we decide so.

Let these our answers be sent to the Division Bench which made the reference.

Reference answered

PRIVY COUNCIL

MOHAMMAD SADIQ ALI KHAN (Defendant)
versus
FAKR JAHAN BEGAM AND OTHERS (Plaintiffs)*

Civil
1931
Oct. 19
Lord Thankerton
Sir John Wallis
Sir George Lowndes

Mohammedan Law—Gift of immovable property to wife—Deed stating possession delivered—Actual vacation by husband not necessary—Gift to infant daughter—Bona fide intention to give—Valid gift—Oudh Taluqdari Estate —Non-taluqdari properties—Presumption as to custom of descent—Rebuttal of presumption—Oudh Estates Act (I of 1869), Sec. 32A—Alleged accretions to Taluqa—Absence of statutory declaration.

A Mohammedan executed in favour of his wife a deed of gift of immovable property which declared that he delivered possession over it to her

---

*P. C. A. 131 and 132 of 1929

CIVIL

1931

MOHAMMAD SADIQ ALI KHAN v. FAKR JAHAN BEGAM

as absolute owner. The deed was handed over to the donee and remained in her possession, but there was no mutation of names. She did not take actual possession until after her husband's death, but during his life she frequently resided with him on the premises. Held, that the declaration made by the husband in the deed, followed by the handing over of the deed, were amply sufficient to establish a transfer of possession, and the gift was valid. In the case of an intended gift by a husband to his wife, Mohammedan Law does not require an actual vacation by the husband and an actual taking of separate possession by the wife. Muhammad Mumtaz Ahmad v. Zubaida Jan, 16 I. A. 205, Humera Bibi v. Najm-un-nissa Bibi, I. L. R. 28 All. 147 relied on.

A Mohammedan purchased immovable property, taking the conveyance in the name of his five years old daughter. The income was credited to a separate account, but it was in part applied to purposes with which she had no concern. On the occasion of her marriage the deed was placed upon a tray and sent for the inspection of her father-in-law. After the death of the donor it was contended that the purchase was benami. Held, that in the case of a gift by a Mohammedan father to his infant child, no transfer of possession is required, it is only necessary to establish a bona fide intention to give, which was established, and there was therefore a valid gift to the daughter. Though there may be no presumption of advancement in such cases in India, very little evidence of intention would be sufficient to turn the scale. Ameeroonissa Khatoon v. Abedoonissa Khatoon, 2 I. A. 87 at 104 applied.

Where a family custom which governs the succession to the taluqdari estate is of comparatively recent origin, two well-established instances of division of non-taluqdari property according to Mohammedan Law are sufficient to rebut the presumption based on Murtaza Husain Khan v. Mahomed Yasin Ali Khan, 43 I. A. 269, viz., that the family custom of primogenitary succession being established in respect of the taluqdari property, it must be held to govern also what is non-taluqdari. Zarif-un-Nisa v. Shafiq-uz-zaman Khan, 55 I. A. 303 at 316 followed.

Apart from the provisions of Sec. 32A of the Oudh Estates Act of 1869 as amended in 1910, there cannot be incorporation of acquisitions in the taluqdari estate. Rajindra Bahadur Singh v. Rani Raghabans Kunwar, 45 I. A. 134 followed.

APPEAL from a decision of the Chief Court of Oudh at Lucknow.

W. H. Upjohn, K.C. and L. Jopling for the appellant.

L. De'Gruyther, K.C., B. Dube, K.C. and W. Wallach for the respondents.

The following judgment was delivered by

Sir George Lowndes

SIR GEORGE LOWNDES—The principal question of the many, involved in these appeals is as to the right of succession to an important taluqdari estate in Oudh, known as Kunwa Khera. The last holder was Nawab Baqar Ali Khan, who died intestate on January 17, 1921. He left him surviving two widows, four sons, of whom Nawab Mirza Mohammad Sadiq Ali Khan was the eldest, and one daughter. The pedigree of the family, so far as it is necessary for the determination of the appeals, is as below, the names of females being printed in italics:—

CIVIL 1931
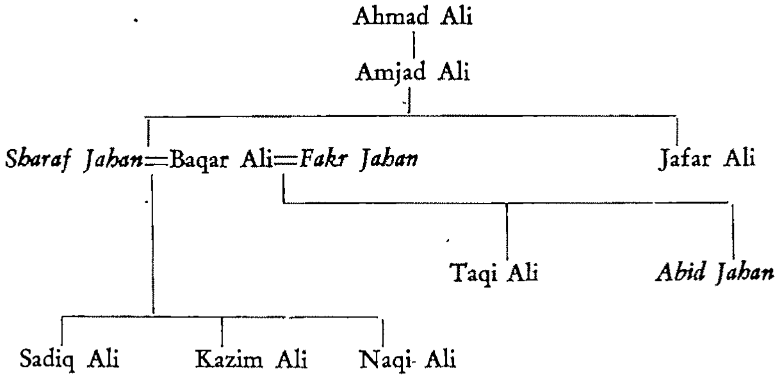
MOHAMMAD SADIQ ALI KHAN
v.
FAKR JAHAN BEGAM
Sir George Lowndes



The appeals arise out of two separate suits, the first of which was instituted by the junior widow, Fakr Jahan Begum, and her two children, Taqi Ali and Abid Jahan, who will be referred to in this judgment as the plaintiffs. They claimed their shares according to the Shiah Mohammedan law, to which the parties are subject, in the whole estate of Baqar Ali, including the Kunwa Khera property. To this suit the other widow and her three sons, and also Jafar Ali, the brother of Baqar Ali, were joined as defendants. Jafar Ali died pending the suit, and his heirs were brought on the record in his place, but took no part in the proceedings. Naqi Ali also died, pendente lite, and is now represented by his widow, Jaddo Begum. Neither she nor her assignee, Dilawar Ali, have appeared before the Board.

The second suit was brought by Fakr Jahan alone, claiming the sum of Rs.50,000 as due to her for dower out of the property left by Baqar Ali. To this suit all the other parties, with the exception of Jafar Ali, were defendants.

The first suit involved various questions as to Baqar Ali's estate, including the validity of a number of dispositions of property made by him during his lifetime, as to most of which there were concurrent findings of the Courts in India. There are now five appeals before the Board, which have been consolidated; four of them arise out of the first and principal suit and the remaining one out of the dower suit. The parties are ranged on different sides on the various questions involved, according to their individual interests. On the question as to the succession to the Kunwa Khera estate, with which their Lordships will first deal, Sadiq Ali, claiming as the eldest son by the rights of primogeniture, is opposed by all the other parties. His claim succeeded in both the Indian Courts, but is disputed before the Board.

The estate was the subject of two sanads, dated respectively in 1858 and 1861, by each of which it was granted to Amjad Ali, the father of Baqar Ali, subject to descent by the rule of primogeniture. The reason for the two sanads is unexplained. They are to all intents in the same terms.

Upon the passing of the Oudh Estates Act, I of 1869, Amjad Ali's name was included in the first and second of the lists prepared under Section 8 of the Act. Against his name in the first list was entered the estate of Kunwa Khera. By Section 10 the entry of his name in the lists is conclusive evidence that he was a taluqdar to whom the provisions of the Act applied; the effect of the inclusion of his name in the second list was a statutory declaration that the Kunwa Khera estate by family custom ordinarily devolved upon a single heir: Murtaza Husain Khan v. Mahomed Yasin Ali Khan[1]. By Section 22 of the Act, upon the death of Amjad Ali intestate the estate would descend upon his eldest son, Baqar Ali, and from Baqar Ali to Sadiq Ali, and, if the section applied, the claim of the plaintiffs, so far as the estate was concerned, would necessarily fail. Amjad Ali in fact left a will, dated March 16, 1874. By it he purported to provide for the division of his Sitapur property, which included at all events the greater part of Kunwa Khera, among his heirs according to Mohammedan law. The will, however, did not comply with the requirements of the Act. It has been held by both Courts in India to be invalid on this account, and their finding is not disputed before the Board. It would seem to follow that the title of Sadiq Ali to the estate was prima facie unassailable, but it is attacked by the plaintiffs and the defendants who side with them on three grounds.

In the first place, it is contended that though Kunwa Khera appears in list No. 1 as the taluqdari estate of Amjad Ali, the Act did not in fact apply to it. It was said that the definition of estate in the Act applies only to villages and lands named in the list attached to the kabuliyat executed by the taluqdar, and that the list in the case of Kunwa Khera was not executed by Amjad Ali, but by his slave Abdul, with whom the settlement was made on his behalf. Their Lordships think that there is no substance in this contention.

In the next place, it is contended that Baqar Ali did not take the estate under the Act, but by an independent title, and that therefore it devolved on his death by the ordinary Shiah Mohammedan law. In support of their contention reliance is placed upon certain transactions which took place after Amjad Ali's death and were, no doubt, inspired by the provisions of his will, to which reference has been made above. Amjad Ali died on March 7, 1875, and on different dates in April and June of the same year three deeds of compromise were executed between Baqar Ali, his brother Jafar Ali, and the other heirs of Amjad Ali, under which Baqar Ali's title to the Kunwa Khera estate was recognised, and that of Jafar Ali to another estate not concerned in these appeals, and provision was made for the other heirs. It is contended for the plaintiffs and their supporters that the effect of these compromises was that Baqar Ali took the estate by transfer from his brother and the other heirs and not by succession under the Act or under the sanads, and that it so became in his hands property which would be divisible on his death according to the ordinary rules of Mohammedan law. This contention has been rejected by both Courts in India, and their Lordships have no hesitation in affirming their conclusion. They think that it is impossible to regard the compromises as being in any way the root of Baqar Ali's title, which, even if the original sanad could be disregarded, was clearly established by the Act. The compromises were, in their Lordships' opinion, only a recognition of his right to succeed to the estate.

---

[1] 43 I. A. 269 at 280

The only remaining contention to which reference need be made on this part of the case is based upon a supposed deed of gift of June 1, 1857, by which Ahmad Ali, the father of Amjad Ali, is alleged to have transferred the estate to Baqar Ali, and it is said, therefore, that when the sanads were subsequently granted to Amjad Ali, and his name was entered in the lists provided for by the Act, he must be taken to have held the estate merely as a trustee, and that nothing in the Act applied to it in Baqar Ali's hands. Their Lordships think it sufficient to say, in answer to this contention, that the deed of gift has not been proved. Both the lower Courts have so held, and their Lordships see no reason to differ from the conclusion to which they have come.

In the result their Lordships are satisfied that the title of Sadiq Ali to the Kunwa Khera estate has been established; that it was not divisible according to the ordinary rules of Mohammedan law among the heirs of Baqar Ali, and that the plaintiffs' suit so far as it sought to effectuate this claim has failed.

Their Lordships now turn to the subsidiary questions raised by the various contending parties, which are many and diverse. It will be convenient to take up first the questions upon which Sadiq Ali is the appellant.

His main contention is that he is entitled to suceed not only to Kunwa Khera, as a taluqdari estate, but to all the property left by Baqar Ali to the exclusion of the other parties to these appeals. The ground of this claim is that the family custom of primogenitary succession being established in respect of the taluqdari property, it must be held to govern also what is non-taluqdari. The contention is based upon the decision of this Board in Murtaza Husain Khan v. Mahomed Yasin Ali Khan (supra). In that case Mr. Ameer Ali, in delivering the judgment of the Board, draws a distinction between the position of a Hindu family governed by the law of the Mitakshara and a Mohammedan family. In the former case, he points out, self-acquired property may go in a different line of succession to ancestral property, but the Mohammedan law allows of no such differentiation. In the case of a Mohammedan family, therefore, "if a custom governs the succession to the ancestral estate, the presumption is that it attaches also to the personal acquisitions of the last owner left by him on his death; and it is for the person who asserts that these properties follow a line of devolution different from that of the taluqa to establish it."

In the present case the Subordinate Judge by whom the suit was tried recognised the importance of this presumption, and held that it was for the plaintiffs to prove that in their family the succession to non-taluqdari property followed the ordinary Mohammedan law by which the family was governed. This he held that they had satisfactorily established, and the Appellate Court accepted his finding. There being thus concurrent findings on what is obviously a question of fact, the matter could not, according to the ordinary practice of the Board, be reopened here. But it was contended by Mr. Upjohn, who appeared for Sadiq Ali, that there was no evidence to support this finding. Their Lordships are unable to accept this contention. Without going into the evidence at length it is sufficient to state that in at least two cases of succession in the family non-taluqdari property has been divided according to Mohammedan law, there being no trace of any claim in either case that it was not so divisible by reason of a family custom.

It is admitted that Kwaja Safi, the paternal grandfather of Ahmad Ali, migrated from Persia to India. There is no suggestion of a custom so directly at variance with the Mohammedan law having been introduced from Persia, and their Lordships think that it can only have originated in India, and therefore at a comparatively recent date. It may well, they think, have been a special custom attached only to a special grant from the ruling authority in Oudh. That there may be such a custom affecting only the principal estate of a family is recognised by the judgment of Lord Phillimore in Zarif-un-Nisa v. Shafiq-uz-zaman Khan[2] also a Mohammedan case. This view receives further confirmation from the terms of the sanads of 1858 and 1861. In any case, however, their Lordships think that where a family custom is, as here, of comparatively recent origin, two well-established instances of division according to the Mohammedan law are not only material upon which the Courts in India might hold in favour of the plaintiffs upon this question, but are in themselves sufficient to rebut the presumption upon which counsel for Sadiq Ali relies. In the opinion of their Lordships, therefore, it has been rightly held that the property left by Baqar Ali other than the Kunwa Khera estate is divisible among his heirs according to Shiah Mohammedan law.

The next question to be considered is the claim by Sadiq Ali to a number of items as accretions to the taluqdari estate. They consist largely of subordinate interests in the estate which were owned by outsiders and had been bought up by Baqar Ali. Both Courts in India have rejected his claim to the alleged accretions. Sadiq Ali appeals against their decision and is opposed before the Board by all the other parties. Their Lordships think that the claim is clearly not maintainable. Both Courts have found that there was no intention on the part of Baqar Ali to incorporate any of these acquisitions in the taluqdari estate, and their Lordships would not be disposed to disagree with this finding. But the matter does not rest merely on the proof or disproof of such intention. Apart from the provisions of Section 32A of the Act of 1869 as amended in 1910, which, it is admitted, do not apply in the present case, no incorporation of other property would be possible. This is clear on the judgment of the Board in Rajindra Bahadur Singh v. Rani Raghabans Kunwar[3], which has been rightly interpreted by the Chief Court.

Another item of immovable property which is affected by similar considerations is what is called the Khairabad House, but is really the estate office of the taluqa. It was not part of the Kunwa Khera estate at the dates either of the sanads or the statutory lists, but was purchased by Baqar Ali.

---

[2] 55 I. A. 303 at 316

[3] 45 I. A. 134

CIVIL

1931

MOHAMMAD SADIQ ALI KHAN
v.
FAKR JAHAN BEGAM

Sir George Lowndes

Sadiq Ali claimed it as an "appurtenance" to the estate, and his claim was allowed both by the trial Judge and the Chief Court on appeal, who found that it had been so used for many years. In their Lordships' opinion, the principle affirmed in Rajindra Bahadur's case cited above applies with as much force to this property as to the alleged accretions, and Baqar Ali, not having availed himself of the provisions of Section 32A, could not by any form of user incorporate it in the taluqdari estate, or subject it to a rule of descent at variance with the Mohammedan law. Mr. Upjohn for Sadiq Ali does not deny that the property was purchased by Baqar Ali, but, founding upon a passage in the judgment in Rajindra Bahadur's case (at pp. 146-7), contends that a sanad from the Government should be presumed granting the house to the taluqdar. Their Lordships can see no possible foundation for this contention. The house was the property of Baqar Ali, and if he had desired to incorporate it in the taluqa he could have done so by the special procedure introduced in 1910. There was no necessity and no occasion for a sanad. The question of the Kaiser Bagh House in Rajindra Bahadur's case was on a different footing altogether. It was the property of Government and had been allotted to the taluqdar.

Their Lordships therefore think that the Courts in India were wrong in allowing Sadiq Ali's claim to this property, and that it forms part of the divisible assets of Baqar Ali in which all the heirs are entitled to share.

It will be convenient here to take up another and possibly more difficult question affecting a portion of the Kairabad property known as the Mahal Serai. By a duly registered deed of gift dated February 28, 1916, Baqar Ali purported to make over this serai to his wife, Fakr Jahan. The deed recites the donor's desire to arrange for her residence at Kairabad when she wishes to live there; sets out in detail the particular portions of the property which she is to have, and continues:—

> and I deliver possession over the gifted property to the aforesaid second wife of mine from this date, like myself. Now, the said wife has power to keep the gifted property in her proprietary possession, in whatsoever manner she desires and I or any heir of mine shall never have any occasion for raising any kind of objection. Now with effect from this date the gifted property has, with all the external and internal rights been transferred to the aforesaid Nawab Fakhr Jahan Begam in the capacity of an absolute proprietor like myself.

The gift is attacked by Sadiq Ali and his branch of the family upon two grounds, viz., (1) that the deed was merely colourable, there being no intention on the part of Baqar Ali to transfer the property to the lady, and (2) that the gift was not completed by such a change of possession as is requisite under the Mohammedan law to validate a gift of immovable property.

These two objections must be considered separately. The first is purely a question of fact; the second has been argued mainly as a question of law.

The trial Judge thought that the gift was fictitious, and held that nothing passed by it. The Chief Court disagreed with him, finding nothing suspicious in the transaction. It was not disputed, the learned Judges

CIVIL

1931

MOHAMMAD SADIQ ALI KHAN
v.
FAKR JAHAN BEGAM

Sir George Lowndes

say, that after the deed was executed the lady frequently visited Kairabad and resided on the premises. They therefore held that she had taken possession, and that the gift was effective.

The first objection being against the tenor of the deed, the burden of proof is clearly upon those who dispute the gift. No possible reason is suggested why Baqar Ali should have desired to put a portion of this property in anyone else's name, except, possibly, an inherent propensity for benami or ism farzi transactions. On the other hand, the reason recited in the deed that he desired to provide his favourite wife with an alternative residence at Kairabad is, to say the least of it, understandable. The portion assigned to her contained the zenana quarters, where she ordinarily put up when accompanying her husband on his apparently not infrequent visits to the kothi, and it is clear from the evidence of his other gifts to her which are now established that he had a great desire to provide for her future comfort on a generous scale. Against this all that can be said is that during his lifetime she exercised no individual acts of proprietorship over any portion of the Kairabad establishment; that in her and her husband's absence the serai was occupied by the servants of the estate; that such repairs as were necessary were done at Baqar Ali's expense, and that no mutation of names was made in the Government records. In their Lordships' opinion, these facts are not sufficient to establish that the transaction was merely colourable. The deed was handed over to the donee and remained in her possession, and their Lordships have no doubt that Baqar Ali intended to make a genuine gift of the property to her.

The second objection involves some consideration of the Mohammedan law. It is not disputed that a gift of immovable property must ordinarily be completed by a transfer of possession and there seems to be no difference on this point between Hanafi and Shiah law. The Chief Court thought it was clear that Fakr Jahan had taken actual possession, but it is pointed out that this was only after her husband's death. So long as Baqar Ali was alive she merely resided there with him, and no change seems to have been made in the method of their joint occupation. But in the first place the deed contains the statement "I deliver possession of the gifted property to my said wife", and this as a declaration of fact must be regarded as binding on the heirs of the donor: see Sheikh Muhummad Mumtazahmad v. Zubeda Jan[4]. In the second place, the deed of gift was handed over to the donee as soon as it was registered. In the case of a gift by a husband to his wife, their Lordships do not think that Mohammedan law requires actual vacation by the husband and an actual taking of separate possession by the wife. In their opinion, the declaration made by the husband, followed by the handing over of the deed, are amply sufficient to establish a transfer of possession. In Shaik Ibhram v. Sheik Suleman[5], West, J. laid it down as a principle for the determination of questions of this nature that "when a person is present on the premises proposed to be delivered to him a declaration of the person previously possessed puts him into possession". This statement of the law was cited and followed by Sir Lawrence Jenkins in

---

[4] 16 I. A. 205

[5] I. L. R. 9 Bom. 146

1905 (Bibi Khaver Sultan v. Bibi Rukhia Sultan[6], a case between Shiahs), and also independently in the same year by the Allahabad Appellate Court Humera Bibi v. Najm-un-nissa Bibi[7]. It has also been followed in two Madras cases, and is cited with approval in the late Mr. Ameer Ali's work on the Mohammedan Law, 3rd Ed., p. 71. It is not necessary for their Lordships to decide in the present case whether this principle is of universal application between Mohammedan donors and donees, but they think that as between a husband and his wife who are living together it is undoubtedly a reasonable interpretation of the requirements of the law, and they adopt it as applicable to the case before them. In their opinion, therefore, the gift of this portion of the Kairabad property by Baqar Ali to Fakr Jahan was effective, and the conclusion come to by the Chief Court was correct.

Their Lordships must now turn to the long series of cases where purchases in the names of one or other of the plaintiffs are charged as benami. These have been examined with great care by the trial Judge, and in nearly every case where they were disputed on appeal his findings were confirmed by the Chief Court. No adequate reasons have been suggested why these concurrent findings of fact should not be accepted by the Board in accordance with the ordinary rule, and it is therefore unnecessary to burden this judgment with their details. Mr. Dube, for the second plaintiff, Taqi Ali, disputes concurrent findings in 25 different instances, but his contentions amount to no more than that upon the evidence the Courts should have come to the opposite conclusion. In many cases the material documents have not been printed, and he is unable to give even the dates of the transactions which he is instructed to support.

There are, however, two cases in which the Courts in India have come to different conclusions, in addition to the case of the Mahal Serai at Khairabad, which has already been dealt with, and these require consideration.

The first concerns the village of Jiamau, which was conveyed to Fakr Jahan by a deed dated January 12, 1920. The purchase price of the property was Rs.51,000. Out of this two sums of Rs.1,000 and Rs.600 for earnest money, and a small additional sum for stamp duty were admittedly advanced by Baqar Ali. Fakr Jahan has sworn that these sums were repaid by her and that the balance came from her own funds. The trial Judge was not prepared to accept her statement without further corroboration. The Appellate Court thought that there was no reason to disbelieve it. As the lady's evidence was taken on commission, the Judges of the Chief Court were in at least as good a position to appreciate its credibility as the trial Judge, and their Lordships must naturally attach the greater weight to their estimate. They have perused the evidence in question, and see no reason to disagree with the conclusion to which the learned Chief Judge and his Indian colleague have come. It is not denied that Fakr Jahan was in possession of sufficient means to pay for the property; the purchase deed appears to have been all along in her possession and mutation was effected in her name. There is no affirmative proof that the balance of the purchase money was paid by Baqar Ali, nor does the admission as to the earnest money, even if it was not repaid, necessarily lead to this conclusion.

---

[6] I. L. R. 29 Bom. 468

[7] I. L. R. 28 All. 147

In their Lordships' opinion, the prima facie title of Fakr Jahan has not been displaced by the oral evidence, and they think that the finding of the Chief Court with respect to this property should be affirmed.

The other case is that of a property known by the picturesque name of "Sher Darwaza." It was purchased on November 12, 1910, by Baqar Ali, but the conveyance was taken in the name of his daughter, Abid Jahan, the third plaintiff, then an infant of about five years old. The property was during her minority managed by Baqar Ali in her name, and though the income was apparently credited to a special account, and certain sums were paid out of it to her husband, it seems clear that it was in part appropriated to purposes with which Abid Jahan had no concern.

In the case of a gift by a Mohammedan father to his infant child, no transfer of possession is required, it is only necessary to establish a bona fide intention to give: see Ameeroonissa Khatoon v. Abedoonissa Khatoon[8].

There is no doubt that Baqar Ali did in many instances, which have been fully discussed by the trial Judge, purchase immovable properties in the names of various members of his family without any intention, so far as the evidence adduced discloses, of benefiting the particular nominee, and the only question is whether there is sufficient in the case of the Sher Darwaza property to take it out of this category of benami purchases. The trial Judge thought there was not. The Chief Court came to the opposite conclusion. The deed, which was produced at the hearing by Fakr Jahan, was on the occasion of Abid's marriage in 1914 placed upon a tray and sent for the inspection of her father-in-law, and this was in the view of the learned Judges conclusive of Baqar Ali's intention.

The purchase of this property was a very natural provision by Baqar Ali for the daughter of his favourite wife, and though there may be no presumption of advancement in such cases in India, very little evidence of intention would be sufficient to turn the scale. The sending of the deed for the inspection of the lady's father-in-law, which the Chief Court held to be established, was clearly a representation that the property was hers, and their Lordships agree with the learned Judges in the conclusion to which they came. They think, therefore, that the Sher Darwaza property should be excluded from the divisible estate of Baqar Ali.

An attempt has been made to press the same argument in the case of a mortgage upon certain property in Husain Ganj and Baragaon, which was taken in the name of Abid Jahan, but both the trial Judge and the Chief Court have held against the third plaintiff as to this, and their Lordships see no reason to re-examine the evidence upon which they have come to this conclusion.

The next matter over which the parties are at variance concerns a sum of about five and a-half lakhs of rupees in Government Promissory Notes. This has been held by both Courts in India to belong to a charitable fund

---

[8] 2 I. A. at 104

Civil

1931

Moham-mad Sadiq Ali Khan v. Fakr Jahan Begam

Sir George Lowndes

known as the Radd-i-Mazalim, which is said to mean "Atonement for Crimes of Violence." It has accordingly been treated as outside the estate. Sadiq Ali apparently claimed to be the trustee of it, and the trial Judge acceded to his claim. The Chief Court, while affirming the trust, held that the question of the trusteeship was not before them. Sadiq Ali does not contest this before the Board, but supports the trust;, the other parties contend that the trust is bad under Mohammedan law, and that the notes form part of the divisible estate.

The ground of this contention is that Government Promissory Notes, being interest-bearing securities, cannot be the subjcet of a dedication to God, which is an essential feature of every Mohammedan Waqf. On this question there has been a conflict of opinion in India. The authorities were discussed in the Chief Court, and the learned Judges came to the conclusion that, taking modern ideas into account, the objection was unsustainable. They therefore agreed with the trial Judge that the notes did not form part of Baqar Ali's estate.

The origin of the fund is uncertain. The earliest reference to it to which their Lordships' attention has been drawn is in the will of Ahmad Ali, the grandfather of Baqar Ali, dated September 2, 1857. The notes in question were directed by his will to be applied as part of the Radd-i-Mazalim fund. It is clear on the terms of the will that the trust had been created in the previous generation. There is nothing to show of what it originally consisted, but the fund was evidently in the keeping of Ahmad Ali, and he seems to have allocated the notes in question to it either as representing its investment in his hands, or possibly only as the equivalent of a sum for which he regarded himself as accountable.

After Ahmad Ali's death a suit was instituted for the administration of his estate, to which Amjad Ali was a party. The suit eventually came up to this Board in 1867 (Nawab Umjad Ally Khan v. Mussumat Mohundee Begum[9]. The Radd-i-Mazalim fund figured in the proceedings as a "family religious and charitable fund." Trustees were appointed of it by the Court, and a scheme of management was directed, and these provisions were affirmed by the Order in Council.

Upon these facts, which have not been disputed on the present appeals, it seems difficult to see how the validity of the trust can now be questioned. It is not denied that the Wakf has been recognised by the members of the family for three-quarters of a century or more, and that the income of the fund has been applied, at all events in the main, consistently to charitable purposes. The notes clearly came into Baqar Ali's possession as representing the corpus of the fund, and even if they were an improper investment of it, as to which their Lordships express no opinion, this could not make them his property.

If the trust could be regarded as having been created by Ahmad Ali, and as originally invalid for the reason now suggested, the fund might have been divisible among his heirs, but that is not a question which arises in the present proceedings. So far as Baqar Ali was concerned, he was

---

[9] 11 Moo. I. A. 517

CIVIL 1931
MOHAMMAD SADIQ ALI KHAN
v.
FAKR JAHAN BEGAM
Sir George Lowndes

bound by the result of the suit above referred to, and in his hands the notes were clearly trust property.

Under the circumstances, their Lordships find it unnecessary to attempt a solution of the interesting problem of Mohammedan law which was propounded to the Chief Court. The only material question in these appeals is whether the fund formed part of Baqar Ali's divisible estate, and for the reasons given their Lordships have no doubt that it did not.

A small question has been raised by Mr. Wallach, who appears for the first and third defendants, Sharaf Jahan and Kazim Ali, as to the order for costs made by the Chief Court. In their appeal, No. 24 of 1926, which failed, they were directed to pay the costs of "the other side," separate sets of costs being allowed to each party or group, with the result that they have had to pay the costs of Jaddo Begum, the widow of Naqi Ali, and her assignee, Dilawar Ali, who were, apparently, separately represented in the Chief Court, but have not appeared before the Board. This, it is contended, is manifestly unjust, as Naqi Ali had made a joint defence to the suit with Mr. Wallach's clients. Their Lordships think that if this was a slip, the attention of the Judges should have been called to it in India. If it was not, as appears more likely, it is manifest that this Board is not in a position to review the discretion of the Appellate Court in such a matter. It is very rarely that the Board interferes in a matter merely of costs, and there is no reason why an exception should be made in the present case.

Their Lordships have now dealt with all the matters which have been submitted for their consideration in the first suit, and it only remains for them to deal with the question of dower, which was the subject of the second suit in which Fakhr Jahan is the sole plaintiff.

It is not disputed that the dower fixed on Fakhr Jahan's marriage was the sum of Rs.50,000, which she claimed from her husband's estate. The defence set up by Sadiq Ali and the other members of his branch of the family is that the debt was satisfied by payments made to her by Baqar Ali in his lifetime. It is admitted that she received sums of money from her husband which in the aggregate exceeded the Rs.50,000, but these payments were made from time to time in varying amounts, the largest of which was only Rs.3,000. There is no evidence that Baqar Ali allocated any of these payments to the dower debt, nor was there any attempt at the trial to show that the lady accepted them as such. She referred in her deposition to "presents" received from her husband in addition to a liberal allowance, but it does not seem to have been suggested to her in cross-examination that any of these moneys were payments on account of dower. The dower deed was produced by her at the trial, and no payments are endorsed or noted upon it. There is in reality nothing in the evidence to rebut her claim. Reliance is placed upon the maxim, "Debitor non-præsumitur donare," but their Lordships doubt if it has any application as between husband and wife—at all events when the relations between them are such as are established in the present case. It is certain that in many cases Baqar Ali did make presents to his wife quite irrespective of her dower,

Civil

1931

Mohammad Sadiq Ali Khan
v.
Fakr Jahan Begam

Sir George Lowndes

and it can hardly be presumed that a man in his position would desire to discharge such an obligation by driblets.

A previous dower case in the same family is also cited in favour of the defence: Iftikar-un-nissa Begum v. Nawab Amjad Ali Khan[10]. Here the dower debt was held to have been discharged after the husband's death by the transfer of Government Paper of substantially the equivalent in value of the debt, but their Lordships are unable to see any resemblance between the facts of the two cases.

The trial Judge held that the debt was satisfied by the aggregate of the payments and dismissed the suit. The Chief Court took the opposite view and allowed the claim of the plaintiff. Their Lordships think that the decision of the Chief Court was clearly right.

Before closing their judgment their Lordships would desire to express their appreciation of the great care with which these cases have been tried by both Courts in India. They are also indebted to the learned counsel who have appeared before them for their assistance in extracting the necessary material from a heavy record.

On the whole case, in their Lordships' opinion, the conclusion come to by the Chief Court were right and should be upheld, except in the matter of the Khairabad House, which was one of the subjects of Oudh appeal No. 20 of 1928, in the Chief Court. Their Lordships think that this question should have been decided in favour of the plaintiffs, and that the decree of the Chief Court on this appeal should be varied by declaring that the so-called Khairabad House, as apart from the Mahal serai, is not appurtenant to the taluqa of Kunwa Khera, but forms part of the divisible estate of Baqar Ali. They think that in all other respects the decrees of the Chief Court in both the suits should be affirmed, and they will humbly advise His Majesty accordingly. There will be no order as to the costs of these appeals.

Decree affirmed

Barrow, Rogers and Nevill—Solicitors for the appellant.

Hy. S. L. Polak and Chapman, Walker and Shepherd—Solicitors for the respondents.

---

[10] 7 Beng. L. R. 643

HIGH COURT

BADRI CHANDAN (Judgment-debtor)
versus
INDRAJIT PERTAB BAHADUR (Decree-holder)*

Civil

1932

March 3

Mukerji, J.
Bennet, J.

Civil Procedure Code, Sec. 60(1)(c)—Decree against assets of deceased person in the hands of his successor—Deceased not an agriculturist—Successor an agriculturist—House occupied by successor attached—Whether exempted from attachment.

A decree was passed against the assets of a deceased person (who was not an agriculturist) in the hands of his successor-in-interest (who was an agriculturist). The decree-holder attached a house, which was occupied by

---

*E. F. A. 546 of 1930

CIVIL

1932

BADRI CHANDAN v. INDRAJIT PERTAB BAHADUR

the successor, with a view to auction sale; held, that it is the occupation of the person in whose hands the assets are at the present time, which should be considered, and the house is therefore exempt from attachment and sale under Sec. 60(1)(c). Girwar Dayal v. Narain Singh, A. I. R. 1928, All. 211 relied on.

EXECUTION FIRST APPEAL from a decree of BABU BISHUN NARAIN TANKHA, Additional Subordinate Judge of Gorakhpur.

M. Waliullah for the appellant.

Sankar Saran for the respondent.

The judgment of the Court was delivered by

Bennet, J.

BENNET, J.—This is an appeal by a judgment-debtor whose house and shed, otherwise called bungalow, have been attached by a decree-holder with a view to auction-sale. The claim of the judgment-debtor is that the house and shed are exempt from attachment and sale, because they are those of an agriculturist, under Sec. 60(1)(c) C. P. C. which exempts "Houses and other buildings (with the materials and the sites thereof and the land immediately appurtenant thereto and necessary for their enjoyment) belonging to an agriculturist and occupied by him." The decree-holder's case is that the decree was passed against the assets of Ramjas, father of the appellant Badri, in the hands of Badri, and that the evidence shows, as the lower court has found, that Ramjas was not an agriculturist, but that he was a licensed stamp-vendor and a thekedar. The question, therefore, before us is whether under a decree such as the present against the assets of a deceased person in the hands of his successor, which person is to be an agriculturist, whether it is the person, who is deceased and against whose assets the decree has been made, or whether it is the person in whose hands the assets are at the present time? Now in this case Ramjas and Badri formed a joined Hindu family, and after the death of Ramjas, Badri was apparently the only adult male member of that joint Hindu family. The house and bungalow in question are now owned by the joint Hindu family and the decree states that there is a liability against the assets of the father which are in the hands of Badri. The ownership is with the present joint Hindu family, and for this reason we consider that it is the occupation of Badri which we should consider and not the occupation of Ramjas, his father. The intention of Section 60 in the Proviso in question is that an agriculturist should not be deprived of his means of livelihood by having his house and other buildings taken from him. That result would follow if we allow this execution appeal, as Badri is admittedly an agriculturist.

Learned counsel referred to the ruling of single Judge of this Court, reported in Girwar Dayal v. Narain Singh[1] which followed a previous ruling reported in Radha Kishen Hokumji v. Balvant Ramji[2]. These rulings liad down the principle of exemption in question in regard to assets of a deceased debtor. Accordingly we allow this appeal with costs.

Appeal allowed

---

[1] A. I. R. 1928, All. 211

[2] I. L. R. 7 Bom. 530

KAULPATI KUNWAR AND ANOTHER (Plaintiffs)
versus
RAM BARAN SINGH AND OTHERS (Defendants)*

Civil
1932
May 31
Sulaiman, C. J.
Mukerji, J.
Banerji, J.

Court of Wards Act (Local Act IV of 1912), Secs. 3 (3), 10, 12, 15, 55 and 37—Joint Hindu family—Of father and sons—Application by father under Sec. 10—Declaration—Notification—Entire joint property under management of Court of Wards—Whether sons, major or minor, deemed to be 'wards' and subject to disabilities under Secs. 37 and 55.

The plaintiffs sued to recover the money due to them under an agreement executed by the defendants. The defendants took the plea that they were 'wards' and no suit could be maintained against them in their names under Sec. 55 of the Court of Wards Act, 1912, and the contract made by them was void in law under Sec. 37 of the said Act. It appeared that the defendants and their father formed a joint Hindu family. The father made an application under Sec. 10, Court of Wards Act, for the ancestral property being placed under the superintendence of the Court of Wards. The Court of Wards made the declaration required by Sec. 10, and the order of assumption of superintendence was notified in the gazette. The names of the defendants did not appear in the notification. The entire property belonging to the joint family came under the actual management of the Court of Wards. The defendants remained in possession of the estate which they inherited from their maternal grandfather.

Held (1) that the sons having made no application under Sec. 10 and their names not appearing in the declaration and the notification, they did not come within the second portion of the definition of 'ward' in Sec. 3 (3); (2) that even if some of the sons were minors on the date of assumption of superintendence, they were never treated as minors whose property the Court of Wards in the exercise of its discretion under Sec. 12, decided to place under its own management, and they cannot therefore come under the first portion of the definition of 'ward' in Sec. 3 (3). The mere accident that their property is physically under the superintendence of the Court of Wards will not make them 'wards'; (3) that the defendants not being 'wards' did not suffer the disabilities enumerated for a ward in Sec. 37 and Sec. 55 of the Court of Wards Act.

Chotelal v. Brij Raj, 26 A. L. J. 90 overruled. Gulab Singh v. Gokal Das, I. L. R. 40 Cal. 784 distinguished.

SECOND APPEAL from a decree of HARISH CHANDRA ESQ., District Judge of Benares, confirming a decree of V. MEHTA ESQ., Additional Subordinate Judge.

The following is the Referring Order:—

BANERJI and KING, JJ.—This is a plaintiffs' appeal in a suit for recovery of money.

The plaintiffs and one Bhim Singh deceased were co-sharers in certain zamindari property situate in the districts of Rangpur and Bogra, in the Bengal Presidency as well as in the district of Ghazipur. Bhim Singh took a lease of the plaintiffs' share and on September 6, 1913 executed a qabuliat. Bhim Singh died on or about the year 1921 and the present plaintiffs had some claim for money on account of the agreement on September 6, 1913. The defendants are six in number and the plaintiffs stated that at the entreaties of the defendants who were in possession of the estate of Bhim Singh the plaintiffs did not institute a suit. The defendants admitted that Rs.2,416-8-0 were due to the plaintiffs and executed an agreement on August 20, 1921 by which they made themselves liable to the claim of the plaintiffs. That amount not having been paid on due date a suit was instituted out of which this appeal has arisen for recovery of the money due to the plaintiffs. The suit was decreed as against defendants 1 to 3 but defendants 4 to 6 entered a plea that the frame of the suit as against them was bad inasmuch as they being wards of court under the Court of Wards Act could not be sued in their personal capacity. A preliminary issue on this point was decided by the learned Subordinate Judge and he held that the defendants being wards of court the suit as framed was defective. An appeal by the plaintiffs against the decree dismissing the plaintiffs' suit as against defendants 4 to 6 was preferred to the learned District Judge of Benares. He having accepted the correctness of the view taken by the learned Subordinate Judge dismissed the appeal, hence this appeal before us. The courts below have followed a ruling of this Court in the case of Chhotey Lal v. Brijraj Singh, 26 A. L. J. 90. We have examined the Gazette Notification relating to Binda Prasad, father of defendants 4, 5 and 6. There is clearly no notification declaring defendants 4, 5 and 6 as wards of court. In the case of Lalta Singh v. Chhattar Singh, 19 O. C. 306 the interpretation put upon the relevant sections of the Court of Wards Act was different from that put in the case of Chhotey Lal v. Brijraj Singh. We are doubtful as to the correctness of the ruling in Chhotey Lal v. Brijraj Singh and we, therefore, direct that the case be laid before the learned Chief Justice to constitute a larger Bench for the decision of this case.

---

*S. A. 1810 of 1928

K. N. Katju for the appellants.

Mukhtar Ahmad and Mansur Alam for the respondents.

The judgment of the Court was delivered by

Mukerji, J.

MUKERJI, J.—This second appeal has been referred to a Full Bench because the learned Judges of the Division Bench before whom the appeal came in due course were doubtful of the correctness of a decision of this Court, namely, Chhotey Lal v. Brijraj Singh[1].

It appears that the defendants in the suit out of which this appeal has arisen undertook to pay a certain sum of money to the plaintiffs under an agreement, dated August 20, 1921 which was registered under the law of registration. The plaintiffs sued to recover the money due under the agreement, principal and interest. They were met with the plea on behalf of the defendants 4 to 6 that they were wards of the Court and no suit could be maintained against them in their names under Section 55 of the Court of Wards Act, 1912, and that the contract made by them was void in law under Section 37 of the said Act.

The defence found favour with the court of first instance and the suit was decreed only against the defendants 1 to 3 and as against the defendants 4 to 6 it was dismissed.

On appeal the learned District Judge upheld the decision of the first court and thereupon the plaintiffs filed this second appeal.

Section 55 of the Court of Wards Act of 1912 (local) lays down that "No ward shall be sued in the civil court otherwise than in the name of the Collector in charge of his property .". If, therefore, the defendants 4 to 6 be wards of the Court, the suit is not maintainable. Again under Section 37 of the said Act "A ward shall not be competent to enter into any contract which may involve him in peculiar liability . " Again if the defendants 4 to 6 be wards of the Court, the agreement of 1921 is void as against them and cannot be enforced in a court of law.

---

[1] 26 A. L. J. 90

We have to see whether in the circumstances of the case the defendants 4 to 6 are wards of the Court within the meaning of Section 3, Sub-section (3) of the United Provinces Court of Wards Act (Act No. IV of 1912).

As to the facts, the following seems to be common ground. The father of the defendants 4 to 6, Binda Prasad, owned a certain share in an estate in the district of Benares known as the Sakaldiha Estate. The defendants 4 to 6 (whom we shall describe hereafter as the defendants for the sake of brevity) and their father formed a joint Hindu family. Binda Prasad and his co-owners of the Estate of Sakaldiha made an application under Section 10 of the Court of Wards Act 1912 for their property being placed under the superintendence of the Court of Wards. The Court of Wards on being satisfied that it was expedient to undertake the management of the property made a declaration to that effect and under Section 15 of the Act issued a notification in the local gazette, being Notification No. 732 N|X-1117-12 dated May 30, 1914, to be found printed in the United Provinces Gazette, dated June 6, 1914, part II, page 1334. On the same page and under the same date and under No. 731 N|X-1117-72 there appears another notification by which it was declared that the Court of Wards had assumed the superintendence of the estate of the two minors mentioned therein who were part proprietors of the Sakaldiha Estate. The names of the defendants do not appear in either of the notifications. Possibly one of the defendants was at the date of the notifications a major and probably the other two were minors.

On these facts the question is whether the defendants are to be treated as wards of the Court within the definition of Section 3, Sub-section (3) of the Act.

On behalf of the respondents strong reliance has been placed on a decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Gulab Singh v. Gokul Das[2]. It is urged that their Lordships have held that it is open to a father of a joint Hindu family to hand over the entire estate to the court of wards where such act would be beneficial to the interest of the family. Reliance is placed on the observation of their Lordships to be found at page 799, namely, that "in their Lordships' opinion Maharaj Singh and Dulli Chand in making that application acted within their powers and authority as the managing members of the joint family". We have carefully considered this case, but we are of opinion that this case has no application to the facts of the case before us and to the question we have to decide.

What we have to decide is whether the sons of the person or persons who hand over the joint family property are to be treated or not as 'wards' within the meaning of the word to be found in Section 3 (Sub-section (3)) of Act IV of 1912 and whether the said sons are to suffer or not the disabilities enumerated for a ward in Section 37 and Section 55 of the Act of 1912. Their Lordships of the Privy Council never had this question to answer in the case of Gulab Singh v. Gokul Das and for this reason alone the decision has no bearing on the case before us. Secondly the decision was given under Act XVII of 1885 which is in many respects very different from the Act which we have to construe. A third point also differentiates the decision from the case before us and it is this; while the reason for the handing over of the management of the estate in Gulab Singh v. Gokul Das's case is clearly set forth in the judgment, we are entirely in the dark in this case as to the circumstances which led to the application by Binda Prasad and his co-owners for handing over the management of the estate to the court of wards.

---

[2] I. L. R. 40 Cal. 784

The first and third grounds for differentiation of the Privy Council case from the case before us do not call for any further remarks, but we shall say a few words as to the second ground. Act XVII of 1885 gives an entirely different meaning to the word "ward" from the definition to be found in Section 3 of the Act IV of 1912. Then again, we could not discover any provision in the Act of 1885 corresponding to the provision contained in Section 10 of the Act of 1912. In the Calcutta case, the property of Dulli Chand and Maharaj Singh had been handed over by them to the Court of Wards under Section 7, Clause (c) of the Act XVII of 1885 which provided for the property of those persons being taken over for management as were declared by the Chief Commissioner to be incapable of managing their own property on their own application. Again we do not find that all the drastic disabilities which are contained for a ward in Section 37 of the Act of 1912 are to be found in the Act of 1885 beyond what are stated in Sections 22 and 23 of that Act.

The question before their Lordships of the Privy Council was whether it was open to the Court of Wards to validly assume superintendence of the shares of the sons also of the applicants, and the case before us is whether assuming that the sons' share can be lawfully managed by the Court of Wards, the sons become by the fact of that management alone subject to the liabilities imposed on a ward under the Act of 1912.

We are of opinion that the present case is not governed by the decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Gulab Singh v. Gokul Das[8].

Now let us consider the provisions of Act IV of 1912. Section 3 of the Act defines a proprietor as "a person entitled as a proprietor to beneficial interest in a mahal". This would mean that a person, who has a share in a property in a mahal, is a 'proprietor' although his name may not be recorded in the khewat. It will also be noticed that where a joint Hindu family owns property, every member of that family is a proprietor, because every such member has a beneficial interest in a mahal. The definition does not give any encouragement to the argument that the father of the family alone is the proprietor and not the sons or that the father is entitled to assume the role of the sons or to act for them with reference to the provisions of the Court of Wards Act.

[8] I. L. R. 40 Cal. 784

Then we come to the definition of the word "ward". A ward may be of two kinds. One is a disqualified proprietor whose property or person is under the superintendence of the court of wards and the other is "a proprietor in regard to whose property a declaration has been made under Section 10". This takes us to a consideration of the provisions of Section 10 which runs as follows:—

> A proprietor may apply to the Collector to have his property placed under the superintendence of the Court of Wards and the court of wards may on being satisfied that it is expedient to undertake the management of such property make a declaration to that effect.

An application under Section 10 can be made only by a person who is an adult; for by definition a proprietor may be a minor and in that case he is incapacitated by the law of the land from acting on his own behalf. Section 10 does not say that a proprietor may apply on behalf of himself and on behalf of another proprietor even if that other proprietor be the applicant's son.

The provisions of Section 8 read with Section 12 show that the presence of minors interested in an estate, as in the case of minors in a joint Hindu family, need not in any way stand in the way of the Court of Wards exercising its beneficial functions over the property of the minors, even though the father or the guardian be not entitled to make an application on their behalf. By Section 8, minors by the very fact of their minority, are to be deemed disqualified to manage their own property. In that case it is open to the Court of Wards, in the exercise of its discretion conferred on it by Section 12, to assume the superintendence of the minors' property. Thus, if a father in a joint Hindu family consisting of himself and some sons, of whom, let us assume, some are majors and the others are minors, wants to hand over the management of the property to the Court of Wards, all that he has to do is to persuade his adult sons to make an application under Section 10 and to apply under that section to the Collector and to induce the Collector to ask the Court of Wards to take under its superintendence the property of the minors. Thus, without any difficulty whatsoever and without giving the father an authority to hand over the entire estate on behalf of the family, it is possible for a joint Hindu family to obtain the benefits of management by the Court of Wards. If in a joint Hindu family the father wants to hand over the estate belonging to the entire family to the Court of Wards but the adult sons decline to do so, we take it, it would not be possible for the Court of Wards to take over the management of the property under Section 10 of the Court of Wards Act, in the teeth of the adult sons' opposition, unless the adult sons can be declared disqualified proprietors unable to manage their own property under Section 8 of the Act.

From what we have said above, it follows that the ordinary scheme of the Act is that every adult person who has a beneficial interest in any property must apply under Section 10 and in the case of the minors action should be taken under Section 8. This is exactly what was done in this case, for we find from the notification in the U. P. Gazette (part II at page 1334) dated June 6, 1914, that in the case of adult co-owners applications were made under Section 10 and in the case of minor proprietors action was taken under Sections 8 and 12 of the Court of Wards Act. Both the notifications are under Section 15 of the Court of Wards Act 1912 which requires that the order of an assumption of management ought to be notified in the local gazette. Apparently the names of the sons of Binda Prasad, namely, the defendants, were not entered in the khewat and their existence was simply overlooked. Our guess may not be correct, but whether correct or not, the reason why the names of the defendants were omitted from the notifications does not affect our decision.

It is common ground that the entire property belonging to the joint family, namely, Binda Prasad and the defendants, is actually being managed by the Court of Wards through the Collector of Benares, the property being situated in the district of Benares.

Now the question is whether the defendants are to be treated as wards of the Court for the purposes of disabilities which are suffered by a ward.

We take it that in respect of the defendants there was no application under Section 10, and, therefore, there is no declaration under that section. The defendants do not come within the first portion of the definition of the word "ward"; for they have not been found to be 'disqualified proprietors whose property has been taken over by the Court of Wards under Section 12 of the Act.' Even if some of the defendants were minors in 1914, from the fact that they were never treated as minors whose property the Court of Wards decided to place under its own management, the defendants cannot come under the first head of the definition of a ward. In the definition the words "whose property is under the superintendence of the Court of Wards" mean and must mean "whose property is under the superintendence of the Court of Wards under the provisions of Act IV of 1912". In the case of persons whose property as such the Court of Wards never undertook to administer, the mere accident that their property is physically under the superintendence of the Court of Wards will not make them 'wards' within the meaning of the definition.

Then let us consider the second portion of the definition of ward. We have already said that we have got no material before us to show that in the case of the defendants there has been made any declaration under Section 10. The declaration under Section 10 must mention two things, first the name of the proprietor and the fact that it has been deemed expedient that his property is to be taken under the management of the Court of Wards. A mere description of the property of a person without mention of the name of that person will hardly be a good declaration under Section 10. Suppose a declaration said that the Court of Wards was satisfied that "Property A" should be taken under the management of itself, we take it, this would not make the owner of the property, whoever he may be, a ward; and the reason is plain. The law requires by Section 17 that, on the publication of a notification under Section 15, the Collector shall publish notices calling upon persons having claims on the estate to notify the same. It could hardly have been contemplated that creditors, some of whom may be entirely unsecured creditors, should find out from the notification who the proprietor was and then to find out whether the proprietor was their debtor or not. For a valid notification, therefore, the name of the proprietor must appear in the gazette and in the orders. We note that in the two notifications actually issued, the names of the proprietors appear and the mention of their property is in the vaguest possible manner.

In this view, although the defendants' property may be under the physical possession of the Court of Wards, who undertook to manage their father's property, it cannot be said within the meaning of Section 3, Sub-section (3) that the defendants are proprietors in regard to whose property a declaration has been made under Section 10. We need hardly repeat that a declaration under Section 10 could be made only in respect of a proprietor who has made the application and the defendants are not proprietors who have made any such application.

Where the language of the law is clear, it is not necessary to see whether the interpretation put on the law is likely to lead or not to hardships and to absurdities. But this test may be applied to see whether the interpretation is a sound one or not; for if a contrary interpretation is likely to lead to hardships, we may take it that the interpretation put which does not create any hardship is the correct one.

Take this case itself for consideration. The defendants, as grandsons of one Bhim Singh, have inherited a large estate. The defendants' ancestral property, let us assume, is in debt and has been taken over for management by the Court of Wards. If the defendants are wards of the Court, then their property, which has been inherited by them and which has nothing to do with the payment of the debts of the father of the family, will also be taken over for management by the Court of Wards and the defendants will be incapable of entering into any contract in respect of these properties, although the defendants themselves had never agreed as to their ancestral property being handed over to the management of the Court of Wards.

Assuming that it is open to a father to hand over the entire family property to the Court of Wards without the consent of his sons, it would not follow from the handing over of the property that the sons themselves would become wards of the Court. A ward with certain disabilities is a creation of law and can have no existence outside the law. A Division Bench of this Court in Mahabir Prasad v. Mahesh Prasad[4] held under the Bundelkhand Land Alienation Act that although the father of a joint Hindu family might be an 'agriculturist' within the meaning of Act II of 1903, (Local) it did not follow that his sons were also agriculturists. The case would be somewhat similar to the case of a father's insolvency. When a father becomes an insolvent, it is open to the receiver of the father's estate to sell the entire family property including the shares of the sons to pay the father's debts not tainted with immorality. But it does not follow that the sons' shares vest in the receiver and the sons are incapacitated from exercising their privileges which accrue to them by the fact of their having a share in the joint family estate, e.g., a right to seek pre-emption. This was held by their Lordships of the Privy Council in the case of Sat Narain v. Behari Lal[5]. See also in this connection the Full Bench decision of this Court in Anand Prakash v. Narain Das[6].

---

[4] 1931 A. L. J. 45

The result is that in our opinion the defendants, that is to say, the defendants Nos. 4 to 6 in the suit out of which this appeal has arisen are not wards of the Court, and there is no bar to the maintenance of the suit against them and the agreement, if any, that may have been entered into by these defendants with the plaintiffs is not void under Section 37 of the Court of Wards Act. In this view the case of Chhotey Lal v. Brij Raj[7] is not good law.

In the result, we allow the appeal, modify the decrees of the courts below and remand the suit so far as the defendants 4 to 6 are concerned through the lower appellate court to the court of first instance for decision according to law. Costs here and hitherto, so far as the defendants 4 to 6 and the plaintiffs are concerned, shall abide the result.

Appeal allowed

---

[5] I. L. R. 6 Lah. 1

[6] 1931 A. L. J. 122

[7] 26 A. L. J. 90

Civil
1932
April 22
Sulaiman, C. J.
Mukerji, J.
Banerji, J.
King, J.
Pullan, J.

KALU RAM (Defendant)
versus
BABU LAL AND ANOTHER (Plaintiffs)*

Court-Fees Act (VII of 1870), Schedule I, Art. 1, Sec. 7(iv)(c) and Schedule II, Art. 17(iii)—Suit for cancellation of an instrument (e.g., mortgage deed or compromise) under Sec. 39, Specific Relief Act—Suit for 'cancellation of a decree'—Whether relief declaratory—'Consequential relief'—Meaning of.

Where a suit is for the cancellation of an instrument under Section 39 of the Specific Relief Act, the relief is not a declaratory one. It falls neither under Sec. 7(iv) (c) nor under Schedule II, Art. 17(iii), but under the residuary Article, Schedule I, Art. 1. Karam Khan v. Daryai Singh, I. L. R. 5 All. 331 overruled.

The expression 'consequential relief' in Sec. 7(iv) (c) means some relief which would follow directly from the declaration given, the valuation of which is not capable of being definitely ascertained and which is not specifically provided for anywhere in the Act and cannot be claimed independently of the declaration as a substantive relief. If a substantive relief is claimed though clothed in the garb of a declaratory decree with a consequential relief, the court is entitled to see what is the real nature of the relief and if satisfied that it is not a mere consequential relief but a substantive relief, it can demand the proper court-fee on that relief irrespective of the arbitrary valuation put by the plaintiff in the plaint on the ostensible consequential relief.

Where the plaintiffs claim the following reliefs, viz., (1) that a certain registered mortgage deed may be adjudged void and ineffectual as against the plaintiffs, and that it may be cancelled; (2) that the compromise, the

---

*F. A. 345 of 1928

CIVIL

1932

KALU RAM
v.
BABU LAL

preliminary decree and the final decree in a certain suit may be cancelled. Held, (1) that relief No. 1 is governed by Schedule I, Article 1; (2) that relief No. 2 is one consolidated relief (and not distinct reliefs) and it also falls under Schedule I, Article 1 and the court-fee is payable on the value of the final decree only.

FIRST APPEAL from the decision of the Subordinate Judge of Jhansi.

The following is the Referring Order:—

KING, J.—This is a reference under S. 5 of the Court Fees Act 1870.

The plaintiffs claim the following reliefs:—

1. That a certain registered mortgage deed may be declared ineffectual as against the plaintiffs and may be cancelled.

2. That a compromise and decree passed against the plaintiffs in a certain suit may be cancelled.

The suit was valued at Rs.11,276-3-9 and a court-fee of Rs.20 only was paid. The Chief Inspector of Stamps contends that the court-fee ought to be paid on the jurisdictional value of the suit, that is, a fee of Rs.520 should be paid for the trial court and also for the court of appeal, as it is a suit for declaration with a consequential relief.

As regards the court-fee payable in respect of the first relief, the appellant relies upon the Full Bench ruling of this Court in Karam Khan v. Daryai Singh, I. L. R. 5 All. 331. That was a suit for the cancellation of a mortgage deed. The taxing Judge expressed an opinion that the suit was of the kind mentioned in S. 39 of the Specific Relief Act and that it was in the nature of a simple declaratory suit. The point was referred to a Full Bench of five Judges who delivered the following judgment: "We concur in the opinion expressed in this reference that the case is in the nature of a simple declaratory suit". On this view, a fixed court-fee of Rs.10 only is payable under Article 17 (iii) of the Second Schedule.

I think it must be conceded that the appellant's contention must prevail, so far as the first relief at least is concerned, if this Full Bench ruling is followed. The judgment is unfortunately brief and no reasons are given. I cannot understand why a suit for cancellation of an instrument, such as a mortgage deed, imposing liability upon the plaintiffs' property, should be held to be a suit for a mere declaration where no consequential relief is prayed. The cancellation of such an instrument seems to me to involve a substantial relief and to be quite different from a mere declaration. The legislature seems to have made a clear distinction between suits for cancellation of instruments, which are dealt with in Chapter V of the Specific Relief Act, and suits for declaratory decrees, which are dealt with in Chapter VI of the same Act. Prima facie therefore the legislature recognised a distinction between suits for cancellation of instruments and suits for declarations. There is moreover in my opinion a substantial difference between such suits. The cancellation of an instrument which imposes a liability upon the plaintiffs' property is a substantial relief and not equivalent to a mere declaration of non-liability.

This Full Bench ruling has been expressly dissented from or not followed by several High Courts. In Shamia Mavali v. Minammal, I. L. R. 23 Mad. 490 where the suit was for setting aside a registered sale deed, it was held that this was a suit for a declaration with consequential relief and the court-fee was payable under S. 7 (IV) (c) of the Court fees Act. The ruling in Karam Khan v. Daryai Singh was expressly dissented from.

In Parvati Bai v. Vishvanath Ganesh, I. L. R. 29 Bom. 207 the suit was for the cancellation of a sale deed. The court held that the suit was one for a declaration with a distinct prayer for consequential relief and expressly dissented from the ruling in Karam Khan v. Daryai Singh.

According to Desai's index (11th edition) the Allahabad ruling has also been expressly dissented from in Maung Kyin v. Po Thin, 2 L. B. R. 266 [1901]. Unfortunately the report of that case is not available in this library. That case was however referred to in the case of Sit Soe v. Ma Thin, 84 I. C. 201 which shows that the former ruling decided that a suit for setting aside documents affecting land must be treated as a suit for a declaration involving consequential relief.

In Arunachalam v. Rangasawmy, I. L. R. 38 Mad. 922 it was held by a Full Bench of the Madras High Court that a suit for a declaration that an instrument is not binding upon the plaintiff amounts to a suit for cancellation of the instrument and the court-fee is governed by S. 7(IV) (c). The ruling in Karam Khan v. Daryai Singh was cited and not followed. In Mst. Noowooagar v. Sridhar Jha, 3 Pat. L. J. 194 a suit for the avoidance of a registered deed of gift was held to involve consequential relief and the ruling in Karam Khan v. Daryai Singh was cited but not followed. In Kuber Saran v. Raghubir, A. I. R. 1929 Oudh 491 where the suit was for a declaration that certain deeds are voidable against the plaintiff and that the deeds should be cancelled, it was held that the suit was one for a declaration with a prayer for consequential relief. The ruling in Karam Khan v. Daryai Singh was discussed and not followed.

So far as I can ascertain, the only reported case in which the Allahabad Full Bench ruling was followed is Durga Bakhsh v. Mirza Mohammad Ali Beg, I. O. C. 123.

It appears therefore that the Allahabad Full Bench ruling has been dissented from, or referred to and not followed, in a number of rulings of other High Courts. Personally I regard the ruling as wrong for reasons already given, and the decision is certainly unsatisfactory, being so brief as to suggest that the question was not fully discussed and considered. In Radha Krishna v. Ram Narain, 1931 A. L. J. 235 to which decision I was a party, it was suggested that the ruling in Karam Khan v. Daryai Singh was unsatisfactory, but we were able to distinguish it for the purpose of deciding that case.

It has been held in Kachera v. Kharag Singh, 7 A. L. J. 842 that a division bench has no jurisdiction to hear a stamp reference even when it is referred to them by a taxing Judge. I think however there is no legal objection to referring the point to a Full Bench and this seems to be the only practicable course when it is necessary to decide whether a previous Full Bench ruling of this Court should be maintained or overruled.

As regards the second relief for cancellation of the decree there is abundant authority for the view that the suit should not be treated as one for a mere declaration, but as a suit for a declaratory decree where consequential relief is prayed or as a suit on which a court-fee is payable on the value of the decree. Even when the plaintiff has worded his relief so as to seek a mere declaration that a decree is void and ineffectual as against him, it has been held that it amounts to a suit for a declaration involving a consequential relief and that the court-fee is payable under S. 7(IV) (c). I may refer to the rulings in Arunachalam v. Rangasawmy, I. L. R. 38 Mad. 922, Sripal Singh v. Jagdish Narain, 24 O. C. 361, Deokali v. Kedarnath, I. L. R. 39 Cal. 704, Harihar Prasad v. Shyam Lal, I. L. R. 40 Cal. 615 and Ganesh Bhagat v. Sarada Prasad Mukerji, I. L. R. 42 Cal. 370.

The appellant has relied upon Radha Krishna v. Ram Narain, 1931 A. L. J. 235. But this ruling does not help him, as in that case the plaintiff sued for a mere declaration that a decree was not binding upon him and he deliberately omitted a prayer for cancellation of the decree. In the present case there is an express prayer for cancellation of the decree; so the ruling has no application.

It is also argued that the court-fee payable on the second relief is governed by the authority of the Full Bench ruling in Karam Khan v. Daryai Singh. I think that ruling can be distinguished since a decree cannot, I think, be held to be an "instrument" and therefore a suit for the cancellation of a decree would not come strictly within the terms of S. 39 of the Specific Relief Act. There is however undoubtedly some similarity between a suit for the cancellation of a decree and a suit for the cancellation of an instrument; so it is open to difference of opinion whether the ruling in Karam Khan v. Daryai Singh is applicable. This point may also be referred to a Full Bench. If it is held that a suit for the cancellation of an instrument or decree is not a suit "to obtain a declaratory decree where no consequential relief is prayed" the further question arises whether it should be held to be a suit "to obtain a declaratory decree where consequential relief is prayed" or a suit not specifically provided for, and so governed by Schedule I, Art. I.

This point is of some importance, since there is much authority for the view that, if S. 7(IV) (c) applies, the plaintiff's valuation of the relief must be accepted, however inadequate and arbitrary it may be.

I suggest that with the permission of Hon. Chief Justice the following questions be referred to a Full Bench:—

1. What provisions of the Court Fees Act determine the court-fee payable in respect of relief No. 1, i.e., that the mortgage deed in suit may be declared void and ineffectual as against the plaintiffs, and that it may be cancelled?
2. What provisions of the Court Fees Act determine the court-fee payable in respect of relief No. 2, i.e., that the specified compromise and decrees may be cancelled?

Let the case be submitted to Hon. Chief Justice for orders.

N. C. Vaish for the appellant.

U. S. Bajpai for the Crown.

The judgment of the Court was delivered by

King, J.

KING, J.—The Taxing Judge has referred two questions of law to a Full Bench. The case itself has not been referred to us. Section 5 of the Court Fees Act has in no way been contravened. The final order will be passed by the Taxing Judge himself in the light of the observations of this Full Bench.

The suit was instituted by the nephew and the son of Sunder Lal, who had executed a mortgage deed on December 20, 1918 in favour of the defendant-appellant Kalu Ram. In the mortgage suit the present plaintiffs also were impleaded under the guardianship of their grandmother. The suit was decreed and a preliminary decree was passed on September 16, 1925, which resulted in a final decree on April 2, 1927.

In the present suit the plaintiffs sought to avoid the mortgage deed on the ground that it was fictitious and without consideration and legal necessity, the compromise on the ground of fraud, and the decree on the ground of negligence and collusion of the guardian. Two main reliefs claimed were as follows:—

(1) The mortgage deed, dated December 20, 1918, and registered on December 21, 1918 may be adjudged void and ineffectual as against the plaintiffs and it may be cancelled.

(2) The compromise and the preliminary decree, dated September 16, 1925 and the absolute decree, dated April 2, 1927 of the court of the Subordinate Judge of Jhansi (in re) Kalu Ram v. Sunder Lal may be cancelled.

The plaintiffs valued the first relief at Rs.5,000 and paid Rs.10 as court-fee thereon and valued the second relief at Rs.6,276-3-9 and paid another Rs.10 on it. A difference arose between the Registrar, who is the Taxing Officer of this Court, and the appellant's counsel, and the former referred the matter to the Taxing Judge, who has referred the following questions to us:—

1. What provisions of the Court Fees Act determine the court-fee payable in respect of relief No. 1, i.e., that the mortgage deed in suit may be declared void and ineffectual as against the plaintiffs, and that it may be cancelled?

2. What provisions of the Court Fees Act determine the court-fee payable in respect of relief No. 2, i.e., that the specified compromise and decrees may be cancelled?

The main question for consideration is whether the reliefs fall under Section 7 (iv) (c), and are to obtain a declaratory decree where consequential relief is prayed, or under Article 17 (iii) of the Second Schedule to obtain a declaratory decree where no consequential relief is prayed, and if not, whether under Article 1 of the First Schedule, as a plaint not otherwise provided for in the Court Fees Act where the amount or value of the subject-matter in dispute can be ascertained, or under Article 17 (vi) of the Second Schedule, that is, a suit not otherwise provided for and where it is not possible to estimate at a money value the subject-matter in dispute. It is quite clear that if the reliefs fall under either of the first two provisions of law, the last two general articles would not be applicable.

The learned counsel for the appellant relies strongly on the Full Bench ruling of this Court in Karam Khan v. Daryai Singh[1] in which it was laid down that a suit in which the relief for the cancelment of a mortgage deed is claimed is in the nature of a simple declaratory suit. The report of the case is very brief and the judgment is also very short. The original plaint in the vernacular is not available in this Court. If the learned Judges meant to lay down that a suit for the cancellation of an instrument under the provisions of Section 39 of the Specific Relief Act was a mere declaratory suit under Schedule II, Article 17 (iii), then with great respect we are unable to agree with that view.

The only reported cases brought to our notice in which this ruling has been followed are Hira Lal v. Wali Bhagat[2] and Durga Bakhsh v. Mirza Mohammad Ali Beg[3]. We may point out that the Full Bench ruling has been expressly dissented from by some of the other High Courts, vide Samiya Mavali v. Minammal[4], Parvatibai Kom Mahadeo v. Vishvanath Ganesh[5] and Noowooagar Ojain v. Sridhar Jha[6]. But in these cases it has been taken for granted without any discussion of Section 39 of the Specific Relief Act that a relief for the cancellation of an instrument is a consequential relief.

Section 42 of the Specific Relief Act covers cases where a declaration can be granted to a person entitled to any legal character or to any right as

---

[1] I. L. R. 5 All. 331
[2] 1889 A. W. N. 124
[3] I. Oudh Cases 123
[4] I. L. R. 23 Mad 490
[5] I. L. R. 29 Bom. 207
[6] 3 Pat. L. J. 194

CIVIL
1932
KALU RAM
v.
BABU LAL
King, J.

to any property, except where the plaintiff being able to seek further relief than a mere declaration of title omits to do so.

Under Section 39 of the Act "any person against whom a written instrument is void or voidable, who has reasonable apprehension that such instrument, if left outstanding, may cause him serious injury, may sue to have it adjudged void or voidable; and the court may, in its discretion, so adjudge it and order it to be delivered up and cacelled". In the case of cancelling a registered instrument, the law further provides that the court shall also send a copy of its decree to the officer in whose office the instrument has been registered.

The illustration to the section makes it obvious that the relief is available even to persons other than parties to an instrument, and in respect of both void and voidable instruments. It is equally clear that a plaintiff need only ask for the instrument to be adjudged void or voidable, and need not in express terms ask for it to be delivered up and cancelled. Even though no relief of cancellation is asked for, a court may grant cancellation also. But this does not prevent a plaintiff from also asking in express terms a relief for its being delivered up and cancelled, if he feels that having it merely adjudged void or voidable would not be adequate for his purpose.

The court has discretion to adjudge a written instrument void or voidable and has also discretion to order it to be delivered up and cancelled. Section 39 cannot mean that where the court adjudges an instrument void or voidable, it is bound to order it to be delivered up and cancelled. It is easy to conceive of cases where the court, while adjudging it void or voidable, may not think it fit or possible to order it to be delivered up and cancelled. For instance, an instrument executed by another person may not bind the plaintiff and may yet bind the executant. In such a case it cannot actually be cancelled. Or the original registered instrument may have been lost, in which case it cannot be ordered to be delivered up.

A relief to have a registered instrument adjudged void or voidable with the possible result of its being delivered up and cancelled and a copy of the decree being sent to the registration office for a note to be made by the registering officer in his books, is much more than a mere declaratory relief. It is undoubtedly a substantial relief of a nature differing from a declaratory one.

We may note that Section 39 of the Specific Relief Act is in Chapter V which is headed "Of the cancellation of instruments", whereas there is a separate Chapter VI headed "Of declaratory decrees". Obviously the Legislature intended to draw a distinction between a decree adjudging a written instrument void or voidable, which may result in its cancellation, and a mere declaratory decree. Though the Specific Relief Act was passed some years after the Court Fees Act, the distinction existed before the Specific Relief Act was passed and it cannot be said that for the purposes of Court Fees Act a relief for adjudging an instrument void is of a declaratory nature.

In our opinion, the expression "consequential relief" in Section 7 (iv) (c) means some relief which would follow directly from the declaration given, the valuation of which is not capable of being definitely ascertained and which is not specifically provided for anywhere in the Act and cannot be claimed independently of the declaration as a substantive relief. A consideration of all the Clauses (a) to (f) of Sub-section (IV), S. 7 of the Court Fees Act leads to the same conclusion.

The Court has to see what is the nature of the suit and of the reliefs claimed, having regard to the provisions of Section 7 of the Court Fees Act. If a substantive relief is claimed though clothed in the garb of a declaratory decree with a consequential relief, the Court is entitled to see what is the real nature of the relief and if satisfied that it is not a mere consequential relief but a substantive relief it can demand the proper court-fee on that relief irrespective of the arbitrary valuation put by the plaintiff in the plaint on the ostensible consequential relief. Suppose a plaintiff asks for a declaration that the defendant is liable to pay him money due under a certain bond and also asks for recovery of that amount; or suppose that he asks for a declaration that he is the owner of certain property and is entitled to its possession and asks for recovery of its possession; surely the relief for the recovery of money or for the recovery of possession cannot be treated as a mere consequential relief which can be arbitrarily valued at any low figure and court-fees paid on that arbitrary valuation only. In our opinion where a suit is for the cancellation of an instrument under the provisions of Section 39 of the Specific Relief Act the relief is not a declaratory one. It falls neither under Section 7 (iv) (c) nor under Schedule II, Article 17 (iii), but under the residuary article, Schedule I, Article 1 of the Court Fees Act. We hold therefore that the court-fee payable on the first relief is governed by Schedule I, Article 1.

As regards the second relief, the prayer that the compromise may be cancelled is similar to a relief for the cancellation of the mortgage-deed and is governed by the same Article.

In our opinion a relief for the cancellation of a decree, or to be more accurate, for the setting aside of a decree, is not a declaratory relief only. The effect is not merely a declaration as to a person's character or status as contemplated by Section 42 of the Specific Relief Act, but the effect will be to render the decree void and incapable of execution and will free the plaintiff from all further liability under it. The claim, therefore, is not merely for a declaratory relief falling under Schedule II, Article 7 (iii). Nor does the relief fall under Section 7 (iv) (c). There is no prayer for a declaration that the decree is void, or for a declaration of any sort, so the relief that the decree be set aside cannot be regarded as a "consequential" relief in any sense of that word. We hold that the court-fee in respect of the prayer for cancellation of the decree is payable under Schedule I, Article 1 on the value of the decree.

As the compromise has merged in the final preliminary decree and the latter has merged in the final decree, we consider that the cancellation of the compromise, the preliminary decree and the final decree are not "dis-

Civil
1932
Kalu Ram
v.
Babu Lal
King, J.

tinct subjects" within the meaning of Section 17, but in reality only one subject. The court-fee for the second relief is payable on the value of the final decree only.

Accordingly our answers to the questions referred to us are as follows:—

(1) Relief No. 1 is governed by Schedule I, Article 1.

(2) Relief No. 2 is one consolidated relief (and not distinct reliefs) and it also falls under Schedule I, Article 1.

Reference answered

PRIVY COUNCIL

NISAR ALI KHAN (Defendant)

versus

MOHAMMAD ALI KHAN (Plaintiff)*

Civil
1932
April 21
Lord Blanesburgh
Lord Tomlin
Lord Russell of Killowen
Sir George Lowndes
Sir Dinshah Mulla

Will—Series of successive interests—Each legatee given powers like testator—Bequests of life-interests only—Tests for determination of—Evidence Act, Sec. 115—Principle of—Person entering into possession under an invalid instrument—When estopped—Whether his son not claiming through him also estopped.

Where a testator appointed A as the successor to his property and the will recited that whatever powers the testator had in respect of the property, the legatee shall have like himself, the very same powers with powers of possession and enjoyment as owner and on the death of A, B, if alive, was to be his successor with the same powers as were bestowed on A. Similarly after B, C was to be his successor. After all these three successors the property was to pass to some one or more persons selected in a specified manner. Held, that successive life-interests only were conferred on A, B and C. The dominant intention of the testator was that the property should pass to three persons in succession, and this intention was inconsistent with the idea of a series of absolute interests, and the gift in the will of the same powers as the testator had, must be read as a gift of such powers so far as was consistent with the subsequent provisions of the instrument.

By a deed, Government made a grant of property to A for his life. On A's death the deed laid down the mode of selection of his successor. A by his will bequeathed life-interests in the property to B and C in succession, and this portion of the will was invalid at any rate as against the Government as it was inconsistent with the terms of the grant. B went into possession of the property under the will. On B's death his son entered into possession of the property. On a suit for possession by C, who maintained that B's son was estopped from disputing the title of the remainderman under the will, B's son relied on his possession as a squatter. Held, that although B, as he went into possession under the will, might be estopped from denying the remainderman's title, his son entering into possession after his father's death without any title at all and not through his father, because his father had nothing to pass to him, cannot be affected by any such estoppel.

Board v. Board, L. R. 9 Q. B. 48 distinguished.

---

*P. C. A. 116 of 1930

CIVIL

1932

NISAR ALI KHAN
v.
MOHAMMAD ALI KHAN

Lord Tomlin

APPEAL from a decision of the Chief Court of Oudh at Lucknow.

L. De'Gruyther, K.C. and W. Wallach for the appellant.

A. M. Dunne, K.C. and J. M. Parikh for the respondent.

The following judgment was delivered by

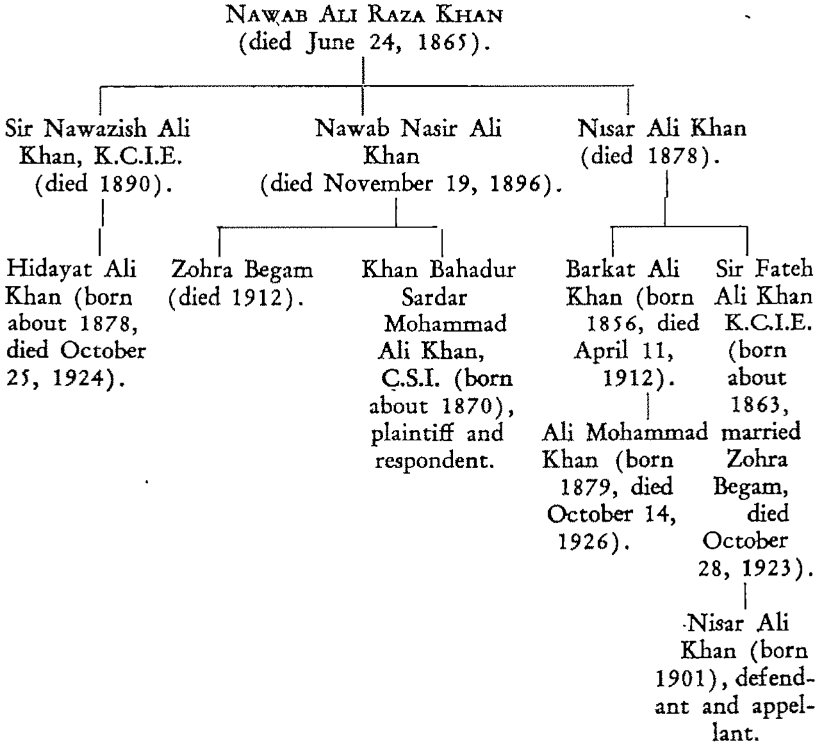
LORD TOMLIN—These consolidated appeals are concerned with four properties, one in Oudh and three in the Punjab, of which at his death on October 28, 1923, the late Sir Fateh Ali Khan, K.C.I.E., was in possession.

Nisar Ali Khan, who is the appellant in the first appeal and respondent in the second appeal, and is hereinafter called the appellant, is Sir Fateh's son.

Mohammad Ali Khan, who is the respondent in the first appeal and appellant in the second appeal, and is hereinafter called the respondent, is a first cousin of Sir Fateh, being a son of Sir Fateh's uncle Nawab Nasir Ali Khan, who died on November 19, 1896, in possession of the four properties.

On the death of Nawab Nasir, Sir Fateh entered into possession of the estates in question and remained in possession thereafter until his death.

The following pedigree sufficiently explains the descent of Sir Fateh and the positions in the family of the appellant and respondent respectively:—



NAWAB ALI RAZA KHAN (died June 24, 1865).
Sir Nawazish Ali Khan, K.C.I.E. (died 1890).
Nawab Nasir Ali Khan (died November 19, 1896).
Nisar Ali Khan (died 1878).
Hidayat Ali Khan (born about 1878, died October 25, 1924).
Zohra Begam (died 1912).
Khan Bahadur Sardar Mohammad Ali Khan, C.S.I. (born about 1870), plaintiff and respondent.
Barkat Ali Khan (born 1856, died April 11, 1912).
Sir Fateh Ali Khan K.C.I.E. (born about 1863, married Zohra Begam, died October 28, 1923).
Ali Mohammad Khan (born 1879, died October 14, 1926).
Nisar Ali Khan (born 1901), defendant and appellant.

The family are Shia Mohammedans of the Asna Ashari sect governed by the Imamia Law. By family custom women do not inherit.

Sir Fateh's grandfather, Nawab Ali Raza Khan, who died in 1865, was granted for distinguished service to the British Government a property in the Bahraich district of Oudh, described in the lists 1 and 5 attached to the Oudh Estates Act of 1869 as the estate of Nawabganj.

This property, being a Taluqa governed by the Act to which reference has been made, is held for a heritable and transferable estate. If the Taluqdar makes a will in accordance with the Act such will is valid irrespective of any personal law as to testamentary disposition to which he may be otherwise subject. Under Section 8 of the Act intestate succession to the estate is regulated by the rule of primogeniture.

On his death Nawab Ali Raza Khan was succeeded in this property by his eldest son, Sir Nawazish Ali Khan. This property is hereinafter referred to as the Oudh property.

By a deed dated May 9, 1868, Government, after the death of Nawab Ali Raza Khan, made a grant to Sir Nawazish Ali Khan of a property in the Lahore district known as and hereinafter called the Rakh Khamba property.

The deed granted the property to Sir Nawazish Ali Khan for life, then to his next brother Nasir Ali Khan for life, and then to his youngest brother Nisar Ali Khan for life. It then provided that on the death of the survivor the estate "shall go and belong to whichever of the lawful male heirs of the said Nawab Ali Raza Khan shall be chosen by the said male heirs as the fittest person to succeed to the said estate, his heirs and successors .. and in the event of the said male heirs being unable to agree within a reasonable time then to such one of the lawful heirs of the said Nawab Ali Raza Khan as His Honour the Lieutenant Governor may consider fittest to succeed to the said estate, his heirs and successors." There were certain conditions attached to the Grant including conditions that the holder of the estate should make due provision for the maintenance of certain persons and that the Local Government might at any time require the holder to set aside from the proceeds of the estate such sum as it thinks necessary for that purpose.

Nisar Ali Khan, the youngest son of Nawab Ali Raza Khan, was the father of Sir Fateh, and died in 1878 in the lifetime of Sir Nawazish.

By a deed dated September 23, 1871, there was conveyed to Sir Nawazish on a purchase by him from the Government a property in the Punjab called and hereinafter referred to as the Khalikabad property. This property was held for a heritable and transferable estate subject to the ordinary law of inheritance by which the family was governed.

By a deed dated April 25, 1886, Government granted to Sir Nawazish in full proprietary rights a property in Tahsil Lahore known as and hereinafter referred to as the Juliana property. This property was also subject to the ordinary law of inheritance by which the family was governed.

Sir Nawazish died in 1890, and on his death Nawab Nasir Ali Khan succeeded without dispute to all four properties—as to the Rakh Khamba property as the next tenant for life named in the grant, and as to the other three properties under a will of Sir Nawazish presumably in the case of the Khalikabad and Juliana properties with the consent of the heirs, as under the appropriate law only one-third of such properties could be disposed of testamentarily without such consent.

On January 1, 1892, Nasir Ali Khan was created an hereditary Nawab by a sanad granted by the viceroy. After the death of Nasir Ali Khan Sir Fateh was recognised by the Government as his successor in the Nawabship.

On June 17, 1892, Nasir Ali Khan executed a deed of endowment and the Khalikabad property was included in the wakf. He named himself as the first trustee and provided that after him "the trusteeship would revert to that person who would be my successor and this office would devolve in future upon other successors in the same manner." On his death Sir Fateh entered into possession of the property as trustee and remained in possession until his death.

On July 15, 1896, Nasir Ali Khan made two wills, one relating to the Oudh property and the other relating to the Juliana and Rakh Khamba properties. These wills were, with one exception to which attention will be directed, identical mutatis mutandis.

Both wills were signed by the respondent and his sister, but both Courts below have held that they did not sign as witnesses but to show their assent to the provisions of the will. The will relating to the Oudh property, according to the translation accepted in the Courts below, was as follows:—

> In the name of Allah the most beneficent and the most merciful.
>
> I am Haji Nawab Nasir Ali, son of the late Nawab Ali Raza Khan, may God forgive him, caste Qizilbash, malik (owner) and Taluqdar of Nawabganj Aliabad, Bahraich district in the Province of Oudh, at present resident of Lahore—whereas the borrowed life is transitory, wherefor considering the appointment of an executor and my successor one of the necessities and a duty—while in possession of sound senses and stable intellect, without repugnance and compulsion—do hereby affirm and write that whereas the estate comprising Taluqdar Nawabganj Aliabad, parganas Charda and Bhinga, district Bahraich, and also situate in Bahraich city proper, in the province of Oudh along with all property and articles movable and immovable, and all internal and external rights and right of easement, which was given to me by my elder brother the late Sir Nawab Haji Nawazish Ali Khan Sahib, may God forgive him, by means of the registered will dated February 14, 1882 A.D. made under Section 11 of Act I of 1869 A.D. and subsequently in 1889 A.D. the said Sir Nawab Sahib in his lifetime having got this very above-mentioned Taluqdari estate, with all rights and interests, mutated in my name made me like himself owner without anyone else's partnership, bila shirkat ghaire—accordingly I have been continuously and am still in possession (qabiz) and owner (malik) of this very Taluqdari estate from the date of mutation till to-day. Now, under Section 11 of Act I of 1869 A.D. I, by means of the will, do hereby appoint Nawab Fateh Ali Khan, son of my late brother Nawab Nisar Ali Khan, may God forgive him, my executor and successor of all this Taluqdari estate with all the rights and interests aforesaid and do hereby authorise the legatee that whatever Taluqdari powers over the above-mentioned > Ilaqa and over all the properties movable and immovable I the said declarant have, my legatee, to wit, Nawab Fateh Ali Khan, after my lifetime shall have like myself (misl maire), the very same powers with powers of possession and enjoyment as owner ('wohi ikhtiarat ba qabz-o-tasarruf-e-malikana') provided he be alive. Similarly after the lifetime of the legatee Nawab Fateh Ali Khan, my son Nawab Mohammad Ali Khan, shall, if alive, be his successor. He shall also have the very same powers as have been bestowed on Nawab Fateh Ali Khan by means of this deed of will. After the lifetime of my son Nawab Mohammad Ali Khan, Nawab Hidayat Ali Khan, son of the late Sir Nawab Haji Nawazish Ali Khan Sahib shall be his successor, provided he be alive. After all these three successors the fit amongst the descendants of the successors shall succeed. The last legatee shall have power to nominate his successor anyone whom he considers fit amongst the descendants of each of the three successors; and if the last legatee die without nominating a successor the male descendants of each of the three successors shall have power to appoint as successor whomsoever they consider fit and superior amongst themselves.

>
> The line of successors shall continue according to this very rule. In the event of disagreement the Government shall have power to appoint as successor anyone amongst the descendants of each of the three successors whom it considers the fittest. And if anyone amongst our family claims maintenance contrary to the wishes of the Taluqdars, to wit, my successors, he shall, in no way, be entitled as of right to get maintenance. The successors shall have power to give or not (?) maintenance in the event of good conduct and obedience. And if anyone of our family or heirs makes any claim of proprietary rights in respect of the said Ilaqa or any movable or immovable property whether in whole or in part, as against the successors, it shall then be invalid and unentertainable. I, therefore, execute this deed of will under Section 11 of Act I of 1869 A.D., so that it may remain a 'Sanad' (documentary proof) and may be of use in case of necessity.

In the will relating to the Punjab properties instead of the phrase "that whatever Taluqdari powers over the above-mentioned Ilaqa and over all the properties movable and immovable I the said declarant have" and the phrase "contrary to the wishes of the Taluqdars to wit my successors" there were substituted respectively the phrase "that whatever powers I, the declarant, have in respect of the said movable and immovable properties" and the phrase "contrary to the wishes of the grantee and owner (muafidar and malik) to wit my successors."

Nawab Nasir died on November 19, 1896, and the soem or third day ceremony after his death took place on the morning of November 21, 1896. In the afternoon of the same day the dastarbandi, or tying of the turban ceremony, took place.

There was at the trial a serious conflict of evidence as to what took place at this afternoon ceremony, it being alleged on the one hand by the appellant that Sir Fateh was then elected to succeed to the Rakh Khamba property in accordance with the terms of the grant, and on the other hand by the respondent that Sir Fateh, the respondent, and Sir Nawazish's son, Hidayat Ali Khan, were recognised by the family as successors to all four properties in accordance with the terms of Nawab Nasir's wills.

At any rate Sir Fateh entered into possession of all four properties,

Civil

1932

Nisar Ali Khan v. Mohammad Ali Khan

Lord Tomlin

but in the case of the Khalikabad property as trustee and remained in possession until his death on October 28, 1923.

On the death of Sir Fateh his eldest son, the appellant, took possession of the four properties, and on December 9, 1925, the respondent instituted in Oudh the suit out of which these appeals arise.

The trial Judge held that upon the true construction of the wills Sir Fateh took a life-interest only and that after his death the respondent succeeded to the properties which the wills affected either as next tenant for life or as heir of Nawab Nasir. He also held that so far as was necessary for the disposition of the entirety of any property affected by the wills the heirs of Nawab Nasir had assented to the wills. His conclusion therefore was that the respondent had made out his title to the Oudh and Juliana properties.

With regard to the Rakh Khamba property the learned Judge took the view that having regard to the terms of the grant Nawab Nasir had no power of testamentary disposition that there had been no election of a successor in accordance with the terms of the grant but that Sir Fateh had been recognised by the family as succeeding to this property under the will and that the defendant was estopped from denying that he had so succeeded.

As to the Khalikabad property the learned Judge held that he had jurisdiction (which the appellant questioned) to decide the matter and that the respondent having succeeded to Rakh Khamba property must be treated as successor of Sir Fateh and therefore trustee of the waqf.

The learned Judge therefore made a declaration of the respondent's right to possession of all four properties.

On appeal to the Chief Court of Oudh the judgment below was affirmed as to the Oudh and Juliana properties, but reversed as to the Rakh Khamba, and Khalikabad properties. As to the Rakh Khamba property the Chief Court took the view that Sir Fateh had been selected either by the heirs or by the Government in accordance with the terms of the grant to succeed to the Rakh Khamba property, and therefore that the appellant as his heir was entitled to this property.

As to the Khalikabad property the Court was of opinion that whoever succeeded to the hereditary Nawabship would be entitled to be trustee of the waqf, but that as no selection for the Nawabship had been made the respondent could show no title and the suit must fail against the appellant who was in possession. Both parties appealed to His Majesty in Council.

Before their Lordships' Board it was argued by the appellant that the Courts below were wrong with regard to the Oudh and Juliana properties because the wills of Nawab Nasir upon their true construction conferred a series of absolute interests, and therefore that Sir Fateh took absolutely as the taker of the first absolute interest, all subsequent interests and provisions being repugnant and bad.

It is a matter of difficulty to determine from translations the true effect of testamentary instruments framed in the vernacular by persons with customs and habits of mind differing widely from the customs and habits of mind of testators in this country, and it would be unwise to adhere too rigidly to rules of construction formulated for the interpretation of instruments created in a different environment.

Their Lordships have been referred to a number of decisions of the Board with reference to the word malik, and these decisions are in their Lordships' minds in arriving at their conclusions upon the wills in the present case.

Their Lordships are of opinion that there is no substantial difference between the two wills and that it would not be possible to give to one a meaning which the other would not bear. The dominant intention of the testator as displayed by each of the wills is in their Lordships' judgment an intention that the property should pass to three persons in succession and thereafter to some one or more persons selected in a specified manner. This intention is inconsistent with the idea of a series of absolute interests and could only be given effect to with such a series if each taker voluntarily denied himself the exercise of all power of alienation, inter vivos, and disposed of the property testamentarily to the next taker in accordance with the testator's scheme.

Without a succession of limited interests, the dominant intention cannot have effect regarding each will as a whole their Lordships are of opinion that life-interests only are conferred. This view receives additional support from the fact that the gift to each subsequent taker is expressed to be to him if alive or provided he be alive and after the lifetime of the previous taker and that the testator refers to all three named takers as his successors.

The gift in the Oudh will of Taluqdari powers and in the Punjab will of the same powers as the testator had, must in their Lordships' opinion be read as a gift of such powers so far as is consistent with the subsequent provisions of the instrument.

The appellant's appeal therefore fails as upon this construction their Lordships are of opinion that the respondent was entitled on Sir Fateh's death to succeed to the Oudh and Juliana properties as next tenant for life, both Courts below having held that the will was assented to by Nawab Nazir's heirs so far as was necessary to comply with Mohammedan Law in regard to the Juliana properties.

Their Lordships express no opinion as to the effects of the wills after the death of the respondent the third tenant for life being already dead.

The respondent on his own appeal seeks to restore the order of the trial Judge in regard to the Rakh Khamba and Khalikabad properties.

With regard to the Rakh Khamba property it is not sufficient for the respondent to displace the title of the appellant who is in possession. He must establish substantively a better title in himself. He sought to do so before their Lordships' Board by alleging some agreement between

CIVIL

1932

NISAR ALI KHAN
v.
MOHAMMAD ALI KHAN

Lord Tomlin

members of the family either in the life of Nawab Nazir or on his death that effect should be given to the Punjab will in regard to this property. There seems to their Lordships to be three fatal objections to this case, namely, (1) it has not been pleaded or proved, (2) the defendant was not born at the time and would not be given to the agreement at any rate as against the Government as it is inconsistent with the terms of the grant.

He further alleged that there was in the circumstances some estoppel against Sir Fateh which bound the appellant and precluded him from denying that the Punjab will had effect in regard to the Rakh Khamba property.

The following passage occurs in para 9 of the amended plaint:—

> Nawab Sir Fateh Ali Khan enjoyed full benefits given him by the wills and the deed of waqf aforementioned and it is not now open to the defendant to assert a title inconsistent with the terms of the said deeds.

Except for this passage their Lordships do not find that any case of estoppel was hinted at in the pleadings, but issue No. 12 was settled in the following terms: "Is the defendant estopped from claiming that any portion of the wills of 1896 is invalid?" and the learned trial Judge found that both by acceptance of the wills as a whole and by assertions which led the respondent to suppose that he was the accepted heir, Sir Fateh created an estoppel to the present claim of his son that one portion of the property, namely, the Rakh Khamba property, came to him by some means other than the will on which his original title was based.

Their Lordships are unable to accept the view that the assertions to which the trial Judge refers even if they were sufficient to estop Sir Fateh could create an estoppel against the appellant.

It was, however, said that Sir Fateh in fact went into possession under the wills and that upon the principle of the decisions in Board v. Board[1] and Dalton v. Fitzgerald[2], the appellant is estopped from disputing the title of remainderman under the wills.

Now the argument proceeds on the basis that there was no selection of Sir Fateh in accordance with the terms of the grant. Obviously if such a selection was proved, that fact would be inconsistent with the allegation that Sir Fateh went into possession under the wills.

Ex hypothesi, therefore, Sir Fateh had no title at all, and although if he went into possession under the wills he might be estopped from denying the remaindermen's title, their Lordships are unable to see upon what principle the appellant entering into possession after his father's death without any title at all because his father had nothing to pass to him can be affected by any estoppel.

In each of the cases cited the entrant into possession under the invalid instrument had acquired a good title from another source and his purchaser or devisee of that good title was not allowed to set it up, because as such purchaser or devisee he was a privy of him who was estopped by having entered under the invalid instrument.

---

[1] L. R. 9 Q. B. 48

[2] [1897] 1 Ch. 440 and [1897] 2 Ch. 86

Here on the hypothesis of no selection the appellant takes nothing through his father, and the mere fact that he would have succeeded as heir to his father if his father had left an heritable estate does not make him a privy of his father for the purposes of the rule in Board v. Board. He can rely on his own possession as a squatter.

It follows therefore in their Lordships' judgment that the respondent's appeal in respect of the Rakh Khamba property must fail, whether he proves or fails to prove that Sir Fateh entered under the wills. If he fails to prove it he has no basis for his plea of estoppel from which alone he seeks to evoke a title for himself. If he does prove it, he cannot in their Lordships' opinion for the reason already indicated support the plea of estoppel against the appellant.

In these circumstances it is unnecessary for disposing of this appeal to determine the issue of fact whether or not there was any selection of Sir Fateh to succeed to the Rakh Khamba property in accordance with the terms of the grant, and this issue will therefore remain open to be adjudicated upon on some future occasion should circumstances so require.

There remains the question of the Khalikabad estate. Here the respondent cannot succeed unless he shows that under the terms of the deed creating the waqf he is the trustee. That question depends upon the construction of the deed. It is a separate and different cause of action from those which found the proceedings in respect of the other three properties.

Their Lordships are unable to find any justification for bringing the suit in respect of this property elsewhere than in the Court of the district where the property is situate. Such justification cannot in their Lordships' judgment be found in Section 17 of the Code of Civil Procedure upon which the respondent relied.

There were certain ex parte applications made by the respondent at an early stage of the suit as the result of which he determined to combine and did in his plaint combine his claims in respect of all four properties in one suit in the Court in Oudh. The appellant in his written statement at once took objection to the jurisdiction so far as the claim in respect of the Khalikabad property was concerned.

There was nothing in what occurred in connection with the respondent's ex parte applications to render the appellant's objection to the jurisdiction inadmissible. That objection has been properly considered in the Courts below, and is proper to be adjudicated upon before their Lordships' Board. The objection in their Lordships' judgment succeeds and is fatal to the respondent's appeal in respect of the Khalikabad property.

It becomes therefore unnecessary to consider the true effect of the grant creating the waqf, and their Lordships must not be taken as expressing any views upon the conclusions reached on this matter in the Courts below.

CIVIL

1932

NISAR ALI KHAN v. MOHAMMAD ALI KHAN

Lord Tomlin

A number of minor issues were considered and dealt with in the Courts below but were not debated before their Lordships' Board.

In the result therefore both appeals fail and should be dismissed, and their Lordships will humbly advise His Majesty accordingly.

There will be no costs on either side except that as regards K. B. Sardar Mohammad Ali Khan's petition for the discharge of a receiver. K. B. Sardar Mohammad Ali Khan will pay to Sardar Nisar Ali Khan his costs of that petition as directed by Order in Council of July 23, 1931.

Appeal dismissed

Hy. S. L. Polak and Co.—Solicitors for the appellant.

T. L. Wilson and Co.—Solicitors for the respondent.

HIGH COURT

KING-EMPEROR

versus

MIRZA MOHAMMAD IBRAHIM*

CRIMINAL

1932

June 7

KENDALL, J.

Criminal Procedure Code, Secs. 498 and 561A—Bail granted by High Court—Conditions on which bail granted not violated—Whether it can cancel the order.

The High Court is not specifically empowered by Sec. 498, Criminal Procedure Code, to cancel bail granted by itself; but it can hardly be argued that it will be exercising the wide powers with which it is endowed by Sec. 561A improperly, if it follows the procedure that would be observed by a Sessions Judge or Magistrate, and directs the arrest of a person who has been released on bail under its orders, for the reason that there do now appear to be reasonable grounds for believing that he has committed a non-bailable offence.

U. S. Bajpai (Government Advocate) for the Crown.

P. L. Banerji, Mukhtar Ahmad and Saila Nath Mukerji for the opposite party.

The following judgment was delivered by

Kendall, J.

KENDALL, J.—This is an application on behalf of the Crown for the cancellation of an order passed by me on December 7, 1931, granting bail to one Mirza Mohammad Ibrahim. The arguments on the application have given rise to the legal question of whether when the High Court has passed an order under Section 498 Cr. P. C. granting bail, that order for bail may be cancelled without the accused person having done anything since the order to violate any condition on which bail was granted.

When an application for bail on behalf of Mirza Mohammad Ibrahim was made before me the position was that Mirza Mohammad Ibrahim was being prosecuted for offences under Sections 302 and 307 I. P. C. The actual enquiry had not started, but both the enquiring magistrate and the Sessions Judge had refused to release him on bail. I directed his release as appears from the order of December 7, 1931 on grounds that might have been the basis of an order under Section 497, Sub-section (2) of the Criminal Procedure Code, but there can be no doubt that the order was actually passed under Section 498. The discretion of this Court to release accused persons on bail under Section 498 Cr. P. C. is not fettered in any way, but an order under that section must of course be passed for judicial reasons and not arbitrarily. The reasons given in my order amount to this that the case against Mirza Mohammad Ibrahim was one instituted on complaint, that the evidence according to the affidavit against the accused was scanty and that the application had not been opposed by the Crown. It is not possible to say definitely that these were the only reasons, but in so far as any reasons are expressed they amount to this that there were no 'reasonable grounds for believing that the accused had committed a non-bailable offence' as expressed in Sub-section 2 of Section 497.

The Government Advocate has pointed out that the affidavit now

---

*Cr. Mis. 309 of 1932

CRIMINAL
1932
KING-EMPEROR
v.
MIRZA MOHAMMAD IBRAHIM
Kendall, J.

filed on behalf of the Crown proves that the Magistrate's enquiry has been completed, that the accused including Mirza Mohammad Ibrahim have been committed for trial, and then the Magistrate has expressed the opinion that a strong prima facie case has been made out against the accused. The position is therefore radically different from that which existed when the bail order was passed. Mr. P. L. Banerji, in opposing the application, has pointed out that the bail order was passed under Section 498 Cr. P. C. which contains no provision empowering the High Court to cancel a bail order passed under this section. The only section of the Code of Criminal Procedure by which the High Court is empowered to cancel such an order is, it is argued, Section 561A, viz:—

> Nothing in this Code shall be deemed to limit or affect the inherent power of the High Court to make such orders as may be necessary to give effect to any order under this Code or to prevent abuse of the process of any Court or otherwise to secure the ends of justice.

Now it is quite clear that there is no question here of giving effect to any order under this Code, and there is no evidence to show that Mirza Mohammad Ibrahim has done anything that could be interpreted as an abuse of the process of the Court, e.g., by breaking any condition on which he was allowed to be released on bail. It is not suggested that he has been trying to abscond or to tamper with witnesses, nor indeed was any condition expressed in the order directing his release. It is true that the court has inherent power to pass such orders as may be necessary ' to secure the ends of justice,' but it is argued that it has not been shown in the present case that any such order is necessary.

I have to consider that if the case had come before me now for the first time, and if it had been brought to my notice that Mirza Mohammad Ibrahim had been committed to sessions under Secs. 302 and 307 I. P. C. after an enquiry by the Magistrate involving the recording of evidence, and the application had been opposed as it has now been opposed on behalf of the Crown, it would not have been proper to pass an order releasing the accused on bail for the reason that there are not good grounds for believing that the accused has committed a non-bailable offence. Mr. Banerji has however argued that though Mohammad Ibrahim may have been lucky to be released, he has as a matter of fact been released, and he cannot legally be consigned to jail merely on the ground that he has now been committed for trial.

I agree with Mr. Banerji to this extent, that neither the Magistrate nor the Sessions Judge was empowered to cancel the bail and to consign the accused to jail in the face of my order of 7-12-31. They could not read into that order a direction which was not expressed there, to the effect that if at any time they were satisfied that there were reasonable grounds for believing that the accused had committed the offence they should be at liberty to cancel the bail. It has been suggested by the Government Advocate that such a direction was implied in the order, but with this I cannot agree, because as a matter of fact both the Magistrate and the judge appear to have been sufficiently satisfied about the case against Mohammad Ibrahim when application was made to them for his release on bail. My order of December 17, as it appears from the order itself, was passed on the ground that I did not agree with the Magistrate and Judge that there were reasonable grounds for believing that the accused had committed the offence.

The circumstances are now different, because neither of the two elements now exist which induced me to release Mohammad Ibrahim. It cannot be said that there are not reasonable grounds for believing that the accused has committed the offence, and the prosecuting authorities are pressing to have the bail cancelled. There can be no doubt that if Mohammad Ibrahim were now applying for bail his application would have to be dismissed. A Sessions Judge or a Magistrate who has released an accused person under Sub-section (2) of Section 497 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, is empowered by Sub-section (5) to cause that person to be arrested and committed to custody, and would no doubt do so in the circumstances of the present case. The High Court is not specifically empowered by Section 498 to cancel bail granted by itself; but it can hardly be argued that it will be exercising the wide powers with which it is endowed by Section 561A improperly, if it follows the procedure that would be observed by a Sessions Judge or Magistrate, and directs the arrest of a person who has been released on bail under its orders, for the reason that there do now appear to be reasonable grounds for believing that he has committed a non-bailable offence. I therefore order that Mirza Mohammad Ibrahim be arrested and committed to custody.

PRIVY COUNCIL

GOPAL SARAN NARAIN SINGH (Defendant)

versus

SITA DEVI (Plaintiff)*

CIVIL 1931
Nov. 19
LORD THANKERTON
LORD SALVESEN
SIR GEORGE LOWNDES

Grant—By Hindu in favour of Christian woman—Whom he married according to Arya Samaj rites—Deed described her as 'my wife'—Whether grant dependent upon validity of marriage—Whether a dum casta condition implied—Contract Act, Sec. 25 (1)—Whether applicable to such grant.

A Hindu executed a deed in favour of an Australian woman, whom he had married according to the rites of the Arya Samaj sect after she became a convert to Hinduism. By this deed he purported to grant to her, "her heirs, executors, administrators and assigns," a perpetual annuity charged upon specified immovable properties. In the deed he described her as "my wife", and the grant was expressed to be made out of "love and affection." Held, (1) that the deed was not a contract and was in form and substance a gift; (2) that the grant was not intended to be in any way dependent upon the validity of the marriage, and there was no room for the implication of a dum casta condition.

APPEAL from a decision of the High Court of Judicature at Patna. (For a report of the judgment under appeal see Sita Devi v. Gopal Saran Narain Singh, 111 In. Cas. 762).

L. De'Gruyther, K.C. and W. Wallach for the appellant.

The other side was not represented.

---

*P. C. A. 39 of 1931

CIVIL
1931
GOPAL SARAN NARAIN SINGH v. SITA DEVI
Sir George Lowndes

The following judgment was delivered by

SIR GEORGE LOWNDES—The question raised by this appeal is as to the right of the respondent to enforce the terms of a deed dated July 18, 1917, by which the appellant purported to grant to her, "her heirs, executors, administrators and assigns," a perpetual annuity of Rs.15,000 charged upon specified immovable properties. The Subordinate Judge by whom the case was tried held that the deed was unenforceable on various grounds. The High Court came to the opposite conclusion.

The suit out of which the appeal arises was instituted by the respondent in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Gaya. It was founded upon two deeds, both admittedly executed by the appellant. By the first, dated April 16, 1913, he purported to settle upon her a life annuity of Rs.36,000. The second was in the terms set out above, and in effect reduced the life annuity just referred to by Rs.15,000 per annum. The plaintiff claimed a declaration of her rights under the combined deeds and the payment of arrears. Both Courts in India have rejected her claim under the earlier deed. She has not appealed against this decision, nor has she appeared upon the present appeal.

The material facts of the case are not in dispute. The plaintiff was an Australian by birth, and apparently an actress by profession. On June 11, 1903, she was married in Capetown to an American of the name of Stillwell. On June 26, 1906, they were divorced by a decree of the Supreme Court of New South Wales. Subsequently she came to India and was associated with the appellant. In 1909 she became a convert to Hinduism, adopting the name of Sita Devi, and on May 2 of that year she was married according to the rites of the Arya Samaj sect to the appellant, who was by birth a Bhumihar Brahmin.

The parties admittedly lived together openly as husband and wife for a number of years, and seem to have been on the best of terms in 1917 when the deed in question in this appeal was executed. The annuities under the deeds were paid till 1921, when payment was stopped in consequence of her infidelity, which has been affirmed by the judgments of both Courts in India. The deed of 1913 has been held to be unenforceable on the ground that, being on the face of it a provision for her maintenance, a dum casta condition must be implied. As already stated, there is no appeal by the lady, and their Lordships are therefore not concerned with the correctness of this decision. The only question before them is as to the second deed, to which different considerations apply.

Various defences to the suit were raised by the appellant and many questions have been discussed in the Indian Courts upon which their Lordships do not find it necessary to come to any conclusion. It was, for instance, contended that the divorce of 1906 was obtained by fraud and was without jurisdiction, and that the marriage with the appellant in India was invalid under his personal law. Upon these questions there was a considerable divergence of opinion between the Subordinate Judge and the High Court, but they clearly could only be material if the deed of July 18, 1917, was conditioned upon the existence of a valid marriage.

CIVIL
1931
GOPAL
SARAN NARAIN
SINGH
v.
SITA DEVI
Sir
George
Lowndes

Reading the document as a whole in the light of the surrounding circumstances, their Lordships think that this is not the case. In their opinion, the reference to the respondent in the deed as the wife of the appellant is merely descriptive, and they have no doubt that the grant was not intended to be in any way dependent upon the validity of the marriage. It is also, their Lordships think, obvious that in this case there is no room for the implication of a dum casta condition.

But it is further contended for the appellant that the question of the marriage is raised at least indirectly by another aspect of the case. The deed, it is said, though in form unilateral, and purporting to be a grant by the appellant, is really in the nature of a contract between the parties, and founding upon Section 25 (1) of the Contract Act, it is contended that the grant being expressed to be made out of "love and affection," it would only be binding if the parties were validly married.

If their Lordships could regard the document as merely contractual, they might have to consider whether the words used in the sub-section above referred to, "between parties standing in a near relation to each other," would not be reasonably applicable to persons who had lived together as husband and wife for a number of years, even though their marriage might have been invalid for one or other of the reasons assigned in the present case. It would also be a matter for consideration whether the acceptance by the respondent of the reduction in her life annuity under the earlier deed would not of itself be sufficient to validate the later transaction. But, in their Lordships' opinion, the deed of July 18, 1917, was clearly not a contract at all. It was in form and substance a gift for which no consideration was necessary.

A last attempt to impugn the validity of the deed was made by reference to a passage cited from the Navada Smriti in Golapchandra Sarkar's well-known treatise on Hindu Law (3rd edition, p. 488). In this passage the compiler of the Smriti, in dealing with the subject of gifts, lays down that "what is given to a person not a proper object of the gift but representing himself, and mistaken by the donor through ignorance, to be a proper object" may be resumed. It is sufficient to say in answer to this contention that there is no evidence of misrepresentation by the respondent, or of the mistake or ignorance of the appellant. He did not in fact go into the witness-box, and there is no indication that he was deceived.

There was a suggestion that the respondent had improperly retained certain "family jewels" of the appellant, and that her claim under the deed should only be affirmed upon the condition of their return. The High Court was of opinion that there was "no evidence worth the name" to substantiate this allegation, and their Lordships are in complete agreement with their finding on this head.

For the reasons given their Lordships think that the decree passed by the High Court was right and that this appeal fails, and they will humbly advise His Majesty accordingly.

Appeal dismissed

Douglas, Grant and Dold—Solicitors for the appellant.

CIVIL

1932

March 3

LORD BLANESBURGH
LORD TOMLIN
SIR GEORGE LOWNDES

THE OFFICIAL LIQUIDATOR OF M. E. MOOLLA SONS, LIMITED

versus

MRS. PERRIN R. BURJORJEE*

Registration Act (XVI of 1908), Sec. 49—Admitted document—Not registered—When court compelled to take notice of non-registration—Practice—Appeal—Question of law raised for the first time—When to be entertained.

There is nothing in Sec. 49 of the Registration Act to compel the court to take notice of the non-registration of an admitted document unless at any rate such document must, if treated as effective, be the foundation of a judgment affecting immovable property comprised in such document.

When the only claim is one for damages for breach of an admitted agreement to purchase immovable property against an alleged undisclosed principal who denies he was a principal and the property affected by the agreement has passed out of the picture—the parties having arranged to minimise damages by concurring in a sale of the property and in handing the proceeds of sale to the respondent—, the proceedings do not in any respect affect any immovable property.

When a question of law is raised for the first time in a court of last resort upon the construction of a document or upon facts either admitted or proved beyond controversy, it is not only competent but expedient in the interests of justice to entertain the plea. Connecticut Fire Insurance Co. v. Kavanagh, [1892] A. C. 473 at 480 followed.

APPEAL from a decision of the High Court of Judicature at Rangoon.

W. H. Upjohn, K.C. and T. B. W. Ramsay for the appellant.

A. M. Dunne, K. C. and A. Pennell for the respondent.

The following judgment was delivered by

Lord Tomlin

LORD TOMLIN—This appeal is concerned with the question whether a creditor's proof lodged by the respondent in the liquidation of the company whose liquidator is the appellant and rejected by the liquidator was properly so rejected.

On December 23, 1929, the trial judge on the original side of the High Court of Judicature at Rangoon held that the proof was rightly rejected. On August 4, 1930, this decision was reversed on appeal to the appellate side of the Court.

The proof in question was for Rs.63,219-15-0, damages alleged to have been incurred by the respondent by reason of the failure of the Company to complete the purchase of property agreed to be sold by the respondent by an agreement dated July 27, 1921.

The only question in issue or debated at the hearing before the trial Judge, or on the appeal, was whether the agreement for sale (on the face of which the purchaser was one M. E. Moolla) had been entered into by Moolla on his own account or whether the Company was the undisclosed principal of Moolla in respect of such agreement.

The trial judge held that Moolla had entered into the agreement as principal and had afterwards transferred the benefit of it to the Company and that therefore the Company was under no liability to the respondent.

---

*P. C. A. 96 of 1931

The appellate court held that the Company was the undisclosed principal and was liable to the respondent and that the proof had been wrongly rejected.

Against this decision the liquidator appealed to His Majesty in Council and before their Lordships' Board raised the contention that the agreement of July 27, 1921, required registration under the Indian Registration Act, that it could not be used for any purpose whatever and ought to be ignored by the Court with the result that any claim for damages based by the respondent upon breach of that agreement must necessarily fail.

The questions therefore which arise for their Lordships' consideration are:—

(1) Ought the appellant to be allowed to raise now for the first time before the tribunal of last resort the question as to the registration of the agreement?

(2) If the question as to registration can now properly be raised (a) did the agreement, which admittedly was not registered, require registration, and (b) if it did require registration, what is the effect of non-registration in regard to the respondent's right to claim damages under the agreement?

(3) If the question as to registration cannot now be properly raised, or if it can be properly raised but upon consideration of the merits of the question, it is held that the non-registration of the agreement does not preclude the respondent from putting forward a claim for damages under the agreement, whether the Company was or was not the undisclosed principal of M. E. Moolla in regard to the agreement?

[Their Lordships then stated the facts so far as they were proved or admitted.]

The first question for consideration, therefore, is ought the applicant to be allowed at this stage to raise for the first time the point of non-registration?

In Connecticut Fire Insurance Company v. Kavanagh[1], Lord Watson, in delivering the judgment of their Lordships' Board, said as follows:—

> When a question of law is raised for the first time in a Court of last resort upon the construction of a document or upon facts either admitted or proved beyond controversy, it is not only competent but expedient in the interests of justice to entertain the plea. The expediency of adopting that course may be doubted when the plea cannot be disposed of without deciding nice questions of fact in considering which the Court of ultimate review is placed in a much less advantageous position than the Courts below. But their Lordships have no hesitation in holding that the course ought not in any case to be followed unless the Court is satisfied that the evidence upon which they are asked to decide, establishes beyond doubt that the facts if fully investigated would have supported the new plea.

Section 49 of the Registration Act, which states the results of non-registration is, so far as material, as follows:—

> 49. No document required by Section 17 to be registered shall—

[1] [1892] A. C. 473 at 480

> "(a) affect any immovable property comprised therein.
>
> * * * *
>
> or
>
> (c) be received as evidence of any transaction affecting such property , unless it has been registered.

Their Lordships are satisfied that there is nothing in the section cited when properly construed to compel the Court to take notice of the non-registration of an admitted document unless at any rate such document must, if treated as effective, be the foundation of a judgment affecting immovable property comprised in such document.

Here the agreement has been admitted throughout. Indeed, it was first put in by the appellant. Further, the proceedings do not in any respect affect any immovable property. The immovable property affected by the agreement long since passed out of the picture [the parties having arranged to minimise damages by concurring in a sale of the property and in handing the proceeds of sale to the respondent], and the only claim in these proceedings is a personal one for damages for breach of an admitted contract against an alleged undisclosed principal who denies he was a principal.

Their Lordships therefore regard themselves as free to consider upon general principles, whether the appellant ought to be allowed to raise the point of non-registration.

They are satisfied that he ought not to be allowed to do so. It has already been pointed out that the circumstances in which the appellant's petition founding these proceedings was launched are by no means clear. The parties are not agreed upon the facts. There are indications of a course of conduct or agreement on the part of the liquidator which would preclude him from raising any point in the proceedings except that as to the respective positions of the Company and Moolla in regard to the agreement of July 27, 1921.

In this state of the evidence, it would not in their Lordships' judgment be in accordance with the principles indicated by Lord Watson, in the judgment already cited, to take into consideration at this stage for the first time the point of the non-registration of the document.

It becomes therefore unnecessary to consider the second question as to the necessity for registration.

There remains the third and last question, one of fact upon which the Courts below have differed, viz., was the Company the undisclosed principal of Moolla in relation to the agreement of July 27, 1921.

Their Lordships are satisfied that the Company was the undisclosed principal of Moolla. All the contemporary documents support this view. There is nothing in Moolla's conduct inconsistent with it. There is much in his conduct which, though not necessarily inconsistent with the other view, points strongly in the direction of his having acted as the Company's agent throughout. His own evidence was obscure and contradictory, and he was not seen in the witness box by the trial Judge. In their Lordships' opinion the learned judges of the appellate side reached a correct conclusion upon the issue of fact.

In the result, therefore, the appeal fails and must be dismissed with costs.

Their Lordships will humbly advise His Majesty accordingly.

Appeal dismissed

Barrow, Rogers and Nevill—Solicitors for the appellant.

J. E. Lambert—Solicitor for the respondent.

Civil

1932

The Official Liquidator of M. E. Moolla Sons, Limited v. Mrs. Burjorjee

Lord Tomlin

MOHAMMAD RAZA, SINCE DECEASED (REPRESENTED BY SYED MOHAMMAD ABBAS AND OTHERS) AND OTHERS (Defendants) versus ABBAS BANDI BIBI (Plaintiff)*

Civil

1932

April 12

Lord Blanesburgh
Lord Tomlin
Sir Lancelot Sanderson
Sir George Lowndes
Sir Dinshah Mulla

Transfer of Property Act, Sec. 10—Absolute estate—By family settlement—Restraint against alienation outside the family—Whether repugnant.

In compromise of their conflicting claims a family settlement was come to between A and B, by which it was agreed that A should take an absolute estate in what she claimed, saddled with the condition that she would not alienate the property outside the family. Held, that an agreement of this nature was not contrary to justice, equity and good conscience and the condition was binding upon A. In re Macleay, L. R. 20, Eq. 186, Gill v. Pearson, 6 East 173 relied on.

Under Sec. 10, Transfer of Property Act, 1882, a partial restriction upon the power of disposition would not, in the case of a transfer inter vivos, be regarded as repugnant, and there is no authority suggesting that before the Act of 1882 a different principle was applied by the courts in India.

Quaere—Whether the Shia Law permits of the creation of a vested remainder in such an indeterminate body as the heirs of a living person.

Appeal from a decision of the Chief Court of Oudh at Lucknow. (For a report of the judgment under appeal see I. L. R. 4 Luck. 452).

A. M. Dunne, K.C. and W. Wallach for the appellants.

L. De'Gruyther, K.C. and Jopling for the respondent.

The following judgment was delivered by

Sir George Lowndes

Sir George Lowndes—The facts necessary for the decision of this appeal are within a small compass.

In 1868 one Sughra Bibi brought a suit against her cousin, Afzal Husain, claiming a half-share in certain immovable properties in Oudh which had been entered in his name at the post-mutiny settlement. The litigation ended in a compromise upon which a decree was passed in the suit on September 19, 1870. The compromise was in the following terms:—

> We are Musammat Sughra Bibi, plaintiff, claimant of a share in Mahal Shadipur, Nusha, &c., pargana Tanda, and Surhurpur, and Syed Afzal Hasan, son of Syed Tegh Ali Qanungo, Lambardar of the aforesaid Mahal, defendant.
>
> Whereas between the parties to the above-mentioned case in which a share is claimed an amicable settlement has been arrived at to the effect that the plaintiff's marriage by way of nikah with the defendant may be > performed in the next month, accordingly in view of a marriage settlement, there no longer exists any dispute regarding a share, and insomuch as the defendant's first wife, the daughter of Raja Syed Abbas Ali, deceased, is alive, it has been settled that both wives should, in accordance with this agreement, in their capacity as wives, from this very time be declared permanent owners [malik mustaqil] of a moiety each of the entire Mahal Shadipur, and that the names of Musammat Fatima Begam, the first wife, and Musammat Sughra Bibi, plaintiff, be entered in the public records as owners of half and half [bil munasfa milkiatan]. The said females shall not have power to transfer this property to a stranger; but the ownership thereof as family property shall devolve on the legal heirs of both the above-named wives, from generation to generation; and the management and collections of the entire estate of Shadipur shall be in the hands of their husband, Syed Afzal Husain, in his capacity of a husband; if on the part of the husband there is any act of neglect or estrangement towards either of the wives, then, in that case, the wife's only remedy will be to have the management of her share performed by the Government through the Court of Wards; but during the lifetime of Afzal Husain neither of the wives shall have the power on her own authority to have the management of the share which is owned by her performed by any member of her father's family, and if in contravention of this agreement the Defendant refuses to marry the plaintiff by way of nikah, then the plaintiff shall in accordance with this document remain owner of a moiety, and if the plaintiff acts contrary to the stipulation of nikah, she shall cease to have any rights whatever. If, God forbid, contrary to custom the divorce of either of the wives takes place, then, even in that case, ownership shall remain vested in the wives, as before, subject to the conditions mentioned above; provided that the divorced wife should regard herself as an undivorced wife, and like a woman without a husband continue to live in the house, and be it understood that the aforesaid conditions shall apply to whatever share exists in the villages comprised in Mahal Shadipur, as detailed below:—(1) Shadipur, (2) Ninawan, Behari, Daudpur, Nandapur, Qutubpur, Belahri, Daryapur; moreover, whatever property, such as Chitoi and Nausanda and Musha, &c., pargana Tanda and Halimpur and Lodhna and Nathupur, pargana Surhurpur, &c., exists at present, or may be acquired in future, shall, during the lifetime of Mir Teg Ali and myself (the Defendant), continue to remain in possession of the Defendant, and after me (the Defendant) this property also shall devolve on the two wives or their descendants (aulad) in equal shares.

---

*P. C. A. 97 of 1930

>
> Hence this agreement is made in writing in order that it may serve as evidence thereof and the pending case may be decided in accordance with its terms.

Afzal Husain thereafter duly married Sughra Bibi and died in 1872 childless, his first wife Fatima Begum having predeceased him in 1871. Sughra Bibi took possession of her share in the properties, but had sold or mortgaged it all before her death, which occurred on July 26, 1914. Her transferees remained in undisturbed possession for nearly 12 years after her death.

On March 26, 1926, the suit out of which this appeal has arisen was instituted by the respondent in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Fyzabad for the recovery of two-thirds of Sughra Bibi's share from the appellants, in whose possession the properties had come under the alienations above referred to.

The respondent's case was that under the compromise Sughra Bibi took only a life estate without power of alienation, and that on her death the half-share passed to her heirs of whom the respondent, in right of her mother Zainab Bibi, the sister of Afzal Husain, was one, her share being two-thirds. The other heirs, taking the remaining third, were said to be certain maternal relatives of Sughra Bibi, who apparently made no claim, and were not joined as parties to the suit, but it is not suggested that it is defective on this account. The present appeal therefore is concerned only with two-thirds of the property, and the rights of the parties depend in the first instance on the validity of the alienations by Sughra Bibi, the title of the respondent, if these alienations were invalid, not being disputed.

A preliminary issue which covered this question was raised and tried by the Subordinate Judge. It was in the following terms:—

> Was the restriction placed by the compromise deed dated September 19, 1870, upon Sughra Bibi's power of alienation valid and legally enforceable?

The learned Judge after a detailed but not very informing examination of the case law on the subject, held that the restriction imposed by the deed on the lady's power of alienation was invalid and inoperative, and he accordingly answered the issue in the negative.

The hearing of some 28 other issues in the case came subsequently before another Subordinate Judge, with the result that the suit was dismissed with regard to certain of the properties claimed, but decreed with regard to others.

Both sides appealed to the Chief Court. The case was heard by Raza and Pullan, JJ., who delivered their judgment on January 4, 1929, allowing the appeal of the present respondent, and dismissing that of the appellants, with the result that the suit was decreed in full. The questions other than that as to Sughra Bibi's power of alienation are not now material. They were in part disposed of by concurrent findings of fact of the two courts, and for the rest involve matters subsidiary to the main issue as to the validity of the alienations.

The learned Judges of the Chief Court discussed the meaning of the word malik which has been used throughout the compromise agreement, but came to the conclusion that having regard to the express provision that the ladies were not to have power to transfer the property to a stranger, they had only a "limited ownership," with a gift over to their heirs. They then considered whether under the Shia law, by which the parties were governed, such an arrangement would be valid and came to the conclusion that it would.

Before the Board the case law has been discussed at great length, but without throwing much light upon the construction of the particular document with which this appeal is concerned. It was urged for the appellants that the true effect of the document was to constitute the ladies full owners of the two moieties of the property, and that the attempt to restrict their power of alienation should be regarded as repugnant, special reliance being placed upon the judgment of the Board delivered by the late Sir Binod Mitter in Ragbunath Prasad Singh v. Deputy Commissioner, Partabgarh[1]. For the respondent it was contended that, having regard to the decisions of this Board, the use of the word "malik" did not necessarily imply full ownership, and that reading the document as a whole the ladies took only life estates with vested remainders in their heirs.

In support of the appellants' contention it was pointed out that the ladies were to be "malik mustaqil," i.e., permanent proprietors, and were to be entered as such in the public records; that their proprietorship was to take effect from the execution of the document, and that if Afzal Husain refused to marry Sughra Bibi, she was to "remain owner of a moiety" free from restriction of any kind; that other property, to which Sughra Bibi had made no claim, was also dealt with; that it was to remain in the possession of Afzal Husain during his life and the lifetime of his father Tegh Ali, and then was to "devolve on the two wives or their descendants in equal shares"—again, as the respondent's counsel concedes, without restriction. From this it is said to be clear that the draftsman of the document was quite competent to put a life estate into direct words if that had been the intention of the parties under the first part of the agreement. It is also suggested that the words upon which the respondent relies as constituting a gift over to the ladies' heirs, are only explanatory of the restriction against transfer to a stranger, which immediately precedes them, and it is pointed out with some force that if only life estates were intended the restriction would not have been confined to the case of strangers.

Their Lordships feel the weight of these contentions, and they might have some difficulty in holding that Sughra Bibi took nothing more than a life estate. But assuming in the appellants' favour that she took an estate of inheritance, it was nevertheless one saddled, under the express words of the document, with a restriction against alienation to "a stranger". Their Lordships have no doubt that "stranger" means any one who is not a member of the family, and the appellants are admittedly strangers in this sense. Unless, therefore, this restriction can for some reason be disregarded, they had no title to the properties which can prevail against the respondent.

On the assumption that Sughra Bibi took under the terms of the document in question an absolute estate subject only to this restriction, their Lordships think that the restriction was not absolute but partial; it forbids only alienation to strangers, leaving her free to make any transfer she pleases within the ambit of the family. The question therefore is whether such a partial restriction on alienation is so inconsistent with an absolute estate that it must be regarded as repugnant and merely void. On this question their Lordships think that Raghunath Prasad Singh's case (supra) is of no assistance to the appellants, for there the restriction against alienation was absolute and was attached to a gift by will. It is, in their Lordships' opinion, important in the present case to bear in mind that the document under which the appellants claim was not a deed of gift, or a conveyance, by one of the parties to the other, but was in the nature of a contract between them as to the terms upon which the ladies were to take. The title to that which Sughra Bibi took was in dispute between her and Afzal Husain. In compromise of their conflicting claims what

---

[1] 56 I. A. 372

CIVIL
1932
MOHAMMAD RAZA
v.
ABBAS BANDI BIBI
Sir George Lowndes

was evidently a family arrangement was come to, by which it was agreed that she should take what she claimed upon certain conditions. One of these conditions was that she would not alienate the property outside the family. Their Lordships are asked by the appellants to say that this condition was not binding upon her, and that what she took she was free to transfer to them.

The law by which this question must be judged is, their Lordships think, prescribed by Section 3 of the Oudh Laws Act, 1876, and failing the earlier clauses of the section which seem to have no application, "the Courts shall act according to justice, equity and good conscience," which has been adopted as the ultimate test for all the provincial Courts in India.

Is it then contrary to justice, equity and good conscience to hold an agreement of this nature to be binding? Judging the matter upon abstract grounds, their Lordships would have thought that where a person had been allowed to take property upon the express agreement that it shall not be alienated outside the family, those who seek to make title through a direct breach of this agreement, could hardly support their claim by an appeal to these high sounding principles, and it must be remembered in this connection that family arrangements are specially favoured in courts of equity.

But apart from this, it seems clear that after the passing of the Transfer of Property Act in 1882, a partial restriction upon the power of disposition would not, in the case of a transfer inter vivos, be regarded as repugnant; see Section 10 of the Act. In view of the terms of this section and in the absence of any authority suggesting that before the Act a different principle was applied by the Courts in India, their Lordships think that it would be impossible for them to assert that such an agreement as they are now considering was contrary to justice, equity and good conscience.

It was said by Lord Hobhouse in Waghela Rajsanji v. Shekh Masludin[2], that the expression "equity and good conscience" was generally interpreted as meaning English law, if found applicable to Indian society and circumstances. If this is to be the test there is authority that in England a partial restriction would be regarded as repugnant even in the case of a testamentary gift. So in In re Macleay[3], Sir George Jessel, M. R., upheld a condition attached to a devise in fee that the devisee should "never sell out of the family," pointing out that this had been the law from the time of Coke; and in Gill v. Pearson[4] Lord Ellenborough in the King's Bench affirmed the validity of a similar restriction.

Their Lordships see no reason therefore to hold that the provision in the compromise agreement that Sughra Bibi should not have power to transfer the properties in suit to a stranger was otherwise than binding upon her.

Their Lordships have heard much discussion of the question whether the Shia law permits of the creation of a vested remainder in such an indeterminate body as the heirs of a living person, but, in the view they take of the appellants' case, it is unnecessary for them to come to any conclusion upon this somewhat abstruse problem, or to consider the authorities that have been cited.

[2] 14 I. A. 89 at 96

[3] L. R. 20 Eq. 186

[4] 6 East 173

In their Lordships' opinion Sughra Bibi had no power to transfer any part of the properties to the appellants, and upon her death the respondent became entitled to the two-thirds share in the properties which she claims. They think that this appeal fails, and that the decree of the Chief Court, dated January 4, 1929, should be affirmed with costs, and they will humbly advise His Majesty accordingly.

Appeal dismissed

Hy. S. L. Polak and Co.—Solicitors for the appellants.

Watkins and Hunter—Solicitors for the respondent.

CIVIL
1932
May 5
LORD BLANESBURGH
LORD RUSSELL OF KILLOWEN
SIR DINSHAH MULLA

THE BENARES BANK, LIMITED (Plaintiffs)

versus

HARI NARAIN AND OTHERS (Defendants)*

*Hindu Law—Non-ancestral business—Joint family—Mitakshara—Father borrows money for business by mortgaging family property—Whether minor members bound.*

Money borrowed by the father as manager of a joint Hindu family governed by the Mitakshara for the purpose of a business which is not ancestral, is not borrowed for legal necessity and a mortgage granted as security for such a loan is not binding on the minor members of the joint family, and the mortgage being wholly invalid does not pass the shares even of the alienating co-parceners. Sanyasi Charan Mandal v. Krishnadhan Banerji, 49 Cal. 560 relied on.

APPEAL from a decision of the High Court of Judicature at Allahabad.

A. M. Dunne, K.C. and Douglas McNair for the appellants.

W. Wallach for the respondents.

The following judgment was delivered by

Sir Dinshah Mulla

SIR DINSHAH MULLA—This appeal involves questions which frequently arise in suits to enforce a mortgage against property which belongs to a Hindu joint family governed by the Mitakshara where the mortgage is executed by the father for himself and for his minor sons as their guardian.

The family in this case consisted of two brothers, Jagdish Narain and Raghubir Narain and their respective sons. Jagdish Narain had five sons, two of them, Suraj Narain and Dip Narain being adults, and the other three minors. Raghubir Narain had three sons, all of whom were minors.

On September 1, 1911, the adult members of the family borrowed Rs.28,000 from the Benares Bank, Limited, the appellants before this Board, and executed a deed whereby they mortgaged six properties belonging to the family, one situated at Allahabad, another at Manjhiari, and the rest in the Fatehpur district, to secure the debt and interest, each father signing as guardian of his minor sons. The mortgage deed recited that the mortgagors were in need of money to pay off two previous mortgages, one for Rs.7,000 in favour of Dwarka Bibi, and the other for Rs.11,000 in favour of Kishun Narain, and to carry on the mortgagors' business.

---

*P. C. A. 95 of 1930

In 1913 the mortgagors paid Rs.4,128 to the bank. In 1919 they sold one of the Fatehpur properties, and paid a further sum of Rs.29,700. Jagdish Narain died in 1921. The balance not having been paid, the bank brought the present suit in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Allahabad on April 27, 1923, against the surviving members of the family, who are respondents in this appeal, to enforce the mortgage against the remaining five properties.

The adult members of the family who had executed the mortgage did not defend the suit, but a written statement was filed on behalf of such of the sons of the two brothers as were minors at the date of the mortgage. The defence was that there was no consideration for the mortgage and no necessity for the loan. As to the business referred to in the mortgage deed, their case was that Jagdish Narain started a theka business in 1902 or 1903 and took building contracts from the Public Works Department at Benares, and that the business was the personal business of Jagdish Narain, and not a joint family business.

It would appear from the bank's books and other documents produced at the trial that Rs.18,000 was paid in cash by the bank to the mortgagors, and that the balance of Rs.10,000 was credited to the account of Suraj Narain pursuant to a letter dated September 24, 1911, addressed by the four adult members to the bank. It would also appear that Rs.6,342 out of the Rs.10,000 was transferred by the bank to the account of Bhagwati Prashad on the instructions of Suraj Narain, and the balance of Rs.3,658 was withdrawn by cheques drawn by Suraj Narain in favour of Ambika Prashad who attended to the theka business.

The Subordinate Judge found that the whole consideration was paid by the bank, that Rs.18,000 was applied in discharging the two previous mortgages, that Rs.6,342 was paid to Bhagwati Prashad to whom the family owed the amount, and that the balance of Rs.3,658 was used for the theka business which he held was a family business. He also held on some evidence given in the case (to be presently referred to) that the Allahabad and Manjhiari properties belonged to Jagdish Narain and Suraj Narain, and not to the joint family. On these findings he passed a preliminary mortgage decree for the whole debt and for costs.

On appeal to the High Court at Allahabad, the judgment of the Subordinate Judge was reversed on all points except as to Rs.18,000 which the defendants did not contest at the hearing of the appeal. As to Rs.6,342 the High Court decided that there was no evidence on the record to show that the family owed that amount to Bhagwati Prashad. As regards Rs.3,658 used in the theka business they held that the business was not a family business, but the personal business of some adult member of the family, and that even if it was a family business, it was not ancestral so as to render the minors' shares liable for that debt. As to the Allahabad and Manjhiari properties they took the view that they belonged to the joint family, and not to the two brothers. Their conclusion therefore was that the mortgage was valid to the extent only of Rs.18,000, and after taking certain accounts they passed a decree on August 8, 1928, in modification of the decree of the trial Judge in the following terms:—

It is ordered and decreed that this appeal be allowed in part, that in modification of the decree of the Subordinate Judge of Allahabad, the plaintiff's claim to the extent of Rs.18,000 with interest thereon, for which the mortgage in suit was valid and which has been paid up by the defendants, be dismissed as against the appellants and the mortgaged property, and that a simple money decree be and it hereby is passed in favour of the plaintiff-respondent as against Raghubir Narain, Dip Narain and Suraj Narain personally and against the heirs of Jagdish Narain deceased to the extent of the personal assets of the said deceased in their hands other than the mortgaged property, for recovery of Rs.24,794-8-0 (twenty-four thousand seven hundred and ninety-four and annas eight), viz., Rs.10,000 principal and Rs.15,242-8-0 interest at Re.0-12-0 per cent per mensem simple from the date of the bond up to August 8, 1928, the date of this Court's decree, in all Rs.25,242-8-0 minus Rs.448 excess amount paid by defendants, and that the sum of Rs.10,000 shall carry future interest at Re.0-12-0 per cent per mensem until realisation. It is further ordered that the parties shall bear their own costs throughout.

From this decree the bank has brought the present appeal to His Majesty in Council. The appeal is directed against all the points decided by the High Court against the bank.

As to the Allahabad and Manjhiari properties their Lordships were told by counsel for the bank that they were worth a good deal more than the amount claimed by the bank, and that if it were held that they belonged to Jagdish Narain and Raghubir Narain it would be unnecessary to consider the questions arising on the items of Rs.6,342 and Rs.3,658. This, no doubt, correctly represents the legal position, but their Lordships are unable to hold upon the facts that these properties belonged to the two brothers. [Their Lordships then discussed the evidence on this question.]

[Their Lordships next discussed the question relating to the item of Rs.6,342, and came to the conclusion that the mortgage as regards this item must be deemed to have been made for the payment of an antecedent debt of Jagdish Narain and Raghubir Narain and it was therefore binding upon their sons.]

The only other question is as to the item of Rs.3,658 borrowed for the theka business. It was urged on behalf of the bank that the business was ancestral and that the minors were liable for the debt to the extent of their interest in the joint family property. On the other hand it was contended that the business was the personal business of Jagdish Narain and the family had no interest in it. Their Lordships have examined the evidence, and they consider that the business was started by Jagdish Narain and Raghubir Narain as managers of the family. The business therefore cannot be said to be ancestral so as to render the minors' interest in the joint family property liable for the debt.

Next it was argued that a business started by the father as manager, even if new, must be regarded as ancestral. Their Lordships do not agree. It is in direct opposition to the ruling of the Board in Sanyasi Charan Mandal v. Krishnadhan Banerji[1]. The judgment in that case proceeded on the broad ground that the manager of a joint family has no power to impose upon a minor member of the family the risk and liability of a new business started by him. That, no doubt, was a Dayabhaga case, but there is no distinction in principle on this subject between a case under the Dayabhaga and one under the Mitakshara. The power of the manager of a joint family governed by the Mitakshara law to alienate immovable property belonging to the family is defined in verses 27 to 29 of Chapter I of the Mitakshara. The judgment of the Board in Hunooman-persaud Panday v. Mussumat Babooee Munraj Koonweree[2] relied on by the bank, was founded apparently on those verses. A new business, their Lordships think, is not within the purview of those verses. It does not make any difference that the manager starting the new business is the father. Their Lordships find that the balance of authority in India is in accordance with this view.

---

[1] [1922] L. R. 49 I. A. 108=49 Cal. 560

It was also urged on behalf of the bank that even if the business was not ancestral, the family was liable for the debt as the bank had made reasonable and bona fide enquiries which led it to believe that the business was ancestral and that there was a necessity for the raising of money for the purpose of the business. Their Lordships are not satisfied that the bank made reasonable inquiries as to the ancestral character of the business.

The mortgage as to Rs.3,658, being neither for a necessity recognised by the law nor for the payment of an antecedent debt, is, in their Lordships' view, wholly invalid under the Mitakshara law as applied in the United Provinces, and it does not pass the shares even of the alienating coparceners.

A further point was raised for the first time on behalf of the bank that the bank was at least entitled to a decree for the sale of the minors' interest in execution on the principle enunciated in the second of the five propositions laid down by the Board in Brij Narain v. Mangla Prasad[3]. But the point was not taken in the Courts below, and as it might involve, as was conceded, questions of fact not yet tried, it is not open to the bank to raise it at this stage.

The result is that the mortgage is valid to the extent of Rs.24,342 instead of Rs.18,000 as held by the High Court. This will reduce the personal liability of the adult members of the family named in the decree from Rs.10,000 to Rs.3,658.

The decree of the High Court quoted above was passed after an account had been taken as directed in their judgment. The following are the material portions of the judgment:—

> Although the plaintiff Bank did not ask for it, we think it is well entitled to a simple money decree for Rs.10,000; the amount of unsecured debt. In view of the payments made from time to time, and the clear acknowledgment of liability in a large number of documents, of which Exhibit 34, dated August 29, 1919, may be cited as an exemplar, the claim for a money decree is amply within limitation. We pass a simple money decree for Rs.10,000 against Raghubir Narain, Dip Narain and Suraj Narain personally and against the heirs of Jagdish Narain, limited in the case of these heirs to the extent of the personal assets of Jagdish

[2] [1856] 6 Moo. I. A. 393

[3] [1923] L. R. 51 I. A. 129=46 All. 95

> Narain in their hands other than the mortgaged property together with simple interest at twelve annas per cent per mensem from the date of the bond up to the date of realisation, subject to the further direction, which we proceed to give.
>
> The mortgage is valid to the extent of Rs.18,000 with interest at twelve annas per cent per mensem with six monthly rests. The mortgagors have already paid to the plaintiff Bank Rs.33,828-4-9. We direct that an account be taken of the sums due and the sums received up to the date in 1919 when Rs.29,700 was received by the plaintiff Bank. If after adjustments of the debits and credits any sum of money be found due to the plaintiff Bank, a decree for the said amount be passed under Order 34, Rule 4 of the Code of Civil Procedure. If no amount be found due, the plaintiff's claim against the appellants and the mortgaged property be dismissed. If after adjustment of the debits and credits, a surplus be found in favour of the mortgagors, the same should be applied towards the reduction of the simple money debt and the simple money decree be passed only for the balance.

The account was taken as directed by the High Court, and it showed a surplus of Rs.448 in favour of the mortgagors. The result was that the bank's claim in respect of the mortgage was dismissed, and the personal liability of the adult members was reduced by Rs.448 as appears from the decree.

The account directed by the High Court was taken on the footing that the mortgage was valid to the extent of Rs.18,000 only. The mortgage being valid, in their Lordships' view, for Rs.24,342, a fresh account will have to be taken on that footing, substituting Rs.3,658 for Rs.10,000 and Rs. 24,342 for Rs.18,000, in the judgment of the High Court quoted above.

Their Lordships will therefore humbly advise His Majesty (1) that this appeal should be allowed in part; (2) that it should be declared that the mortgage is valid to the extent of Rs.24,342; (3) that the case should be remitted to the High Court to take an account on that footing of what will be due to the bank on the mortgage, and to modify their decree as regards the form and figures according to the result of the account, and otherwise to give effect to their Lordships' opinion; and (4) that the decree of the High Court should be affirmed subject to the above variations and directions. The bank will have two-thirds of the costs before the Board and in the Courts below, and the costs will be tacked to the mortgage debt. The costs of further proceedings in India will be dealt with by the High Court.

Appeal allowed in part
Case remitted

HIGH COURT

NARSINGH NARAIN (Plaintiff)

versus

RAM CHANDER PANDEY AND OTHERS (Defendants)*

CIVIL

1932

June 6

SULAIMAN, C. J.
MUKERJI, J.
KING, J.

Pre-emption Act, Secs. 19, 11,12 and 4(1)—Suit for pre-emption against a stranger —By a co-sharer—Of less than 12 months' standing—Whether maintainable.

A person, who has purchased a share in a village can maintain a suit for pre-emption against a stranger who has subsequently purchased another share, although twelve months from the date of the registration of the plaintiff's deed of purchase have not expired and he himself is still liable to be pre-empted by other co-sharers. Ram Raj Pandéy v. Har Prashad, [1932] A. L. J. 109 relied on; Abdul Ghafur v. Ghulam Husain, I. L. R. 35 All. 296 considered.

SECOND APPEAL from a decree of BABU JAGANNATH SINGH, Additional Subordinate Judge of Basti, modifying a decree of BABU SHYAM BEHARI LAL, Munsif of Bansi.

The following is the Referring Order:—

SULAIMAN, C. J. and YOUNG, J.—This is a plaintiff's appeal arising out of a suit for pre-emption.

On February 23, 1926 Mst. Atraji sold to the present plaintiff Narsingh Narain a half pie share in patti Debi Prasad, village Jiwa, some shares in village Azamgarh and a house in Jiwa. Ganpat instituted a suit for pre-emption which was numbered as 174, for pre-emption of the share in Jiwa and half of the house. He was not a co-sharer in village Azamgarh and he claimed that the other half share in the house was his own property.

On May 1, 1926 a sale deed was executed by other persons in favour of the respondent Ram Chandar of 1½ pies share in patti Debi Prasad in Jiwa, a share in village Azamgarh and half the house. Suit No. 418 of 1927 was filed by the present appellant Narsingh Narain for pre-emption of this sale. During the pendency of this suit the plaintiff obtained a deed of gift on May 21, 1927 from a co-sharer of a small fractional share in patti Bhudeo, village Jiwa. Ganpat filed a suit No. 468 of 1927 to pre-empt this acquisition treating it as a purchase.

All the three suits were consolidated, and on January 13, 1928 the trial court dismissed Ganpat's suits Nos. 174 and 468, holding that the gift was genuine. It decreed Narsingh Narain's Suit No. 418. Three appeals were preferred to the District Judge. On June 14, 1928 the District Judge upheld the judgments in the suits Nos. 174 and 468, but modified that in suit No. 418, decreeing the claim of Narsingh Narain plaintiff with regard to village Azamgarh but dismissing it as regards Jiwa.

The main ground for the dismissal of Narsingh Narain's claim as regards village Jiwa was that he had not acquired an indefeasible title by virtue of the sale deed dated February 23, 1926 by the time the sale deed of May 1, 1926 was executed. The learned Judge took the view that the pre-emptor was not entitled to maintain a suit for pre-emption unless he had acquired an indefeasible title before the sale deed or at any rate had acquired such indefeasible title before the suit.

In appeal the learned Advocate for the plaintiff contends that the view taken by the learned District Judge is not correct. It is further urged that Narsingh Narain had become a perfect co-sharer in respect of half the house, because on the finding of the trial court which has not been set aside by the District Judge Mst. Atraji has been the owner of the entire house all along, and that in any case Ganpat in his suit for pre-emption had conveyed his claim to a half share only. This contention, however, does not help the plaintiff much, because the house stands on a joint land of which only a half pie share was sold under the deed. The house cannot be said to appertain to the half pie share sold, nor can the plaintiff be said to have acquired any definite portion of the site. By virtue of his getting a half share in the house he cannot claim pre-emption as regards the village properties.

---

* S. A. 2029 of 1928

The main question in the appeal is whether if a person purchased a share in a village, he can maintain a suit for pre-emption against a stranger, who has subsequently purchased another share, although 12 months from the date of the plaintiff's purchase have not expired and he is still liable to be pre-empted by other co-sharers. In Abdul Gafur v. Ghulam Husain, I. L. R. 35 All. 296, a Bench of this Court held that a person with a defeasible title was not a co-sharer for the purpose of Order 21, Rule 88 C. P. C. so as to claim pre-emption. But the definition of the word 'co-sharer' in Section 4(1) of the Agra Pre-emption Act does not apparently imply that he should himself have acquired an indefeasible title. We think that the question is not free from difficulty, and therefore requires an authoritative pronouncement.

We accordingly refer the following question to a Full Bench:—

Whether a person, who has purchased a share in a village, can maintain a suit for pre-emption against a stranger who has subsequently purchased another share, although twelve months from the date of the registration of the plaintiff's deed of purchase have not expired and he himself is still liable to be pre-empted by other co-sharers.

Mansur Alam for the appellant.

Sankar Saran for the respondents.

The judgment of the Court was delivered by

Mukerji, J.

MUKERJI, J.—The point that has been referred to Full Bench is as follows:—

> Whether a person, who has purchased a share in a village, can maintain a suit for pre-emption against a stranger who has subsequently purchased another share, although twelve months from the date of the registration of the plaintiff's deed of purchase have not expired and he himself is still liable to be pre-empted by other co-sharers.

The only facts that are necessary to be stated for the decision of this point are as follows:

One Mst. Atraji executed a sale deed to one Narsingh Narain on February 23, 1926. It was by virtue of this purchase that Narsingh Narain became a co-sharer in village Jiwa and by virtue of this purchase he claimed pre-emption of a subsequent transfer to be mentioned presently. On May 1, 1926, two persons Lakhpat and Mst. Kanika sold, among other properties, a share in village Jiwa to one Ram Chander. Two suits for pre-emption were brought, one against Narsingh Narain by Ganpat which was instituted on February 21, 1927 being suit No. 174 of 1927, and the other suit was filed by Narsingh Narain, seeking to pre-empt the second sale. This was instituted on May 3, 1927, being suit No. 418 of 1927. The question now is whether by virtue of his purchase dated February 23, 1926 Narsingh Narain is entitled to maintain his suit instituted on May 3, 1927, although his own purchase has not been of 12 months' standing when the second sale was held.

The case is governed by the Pre-emption Act of 1922 (Local). Sections 11 and 12 of the Act lay down in what cases a right of pre-emption accrues and who are the persons entitled to pre-emption. In S. 12 in Class IV are co-sharers in the mahal. If Narsingh Narain is a co-sharer in the mahal, he would be entitled to pre-empt the property in suit. A co-sharer is defined in S. 4(1) of the Act as follows:—"co-sharer" means any person, other than a petty proprietor, entitled as proprietor to any share or part in a mahal or village whether his name is or is not recorded in the register of proprietors. It will be noticed that to be a co-sharer within the meaning of this definition it is not necessary that the co-sharer should be of any particular standing. If he made a purchase one day earlier than the day on which the sales he proposes to pre-empt took place he would be entitled to take the step as a co-sharer. Under S. 11 of the Act, his right to pre-empt accrues as soon as the sale takes place. As the sale took place in this case subsequent to the purchase, the right to pre-empt accrued to Narsingh Narain on May 1, 1926.

The argument, however, on behalf of Ram Chander is as follows: The cases have laid down that under S. 19, a purchaser who obtains a transfer in his favour in order to defeat the plaintiff's right of pre-emption must obtain a transfer which is indefeasible. This was held in Kundan Gir v. Jaswant Singh[1]. It is therefore argued that if the defendant should possess an indefeasible title in order to be able to defeat the plaintiff's right to pre-empt, it is but fair that the plaintiff himself should possess an indefeasible title in order to pursue his remedy.

This argument no doubt sounds plausible but it is not in keeping either with the language of S. 19 or with the spirit of it.

Section 19 runs as follows:

> No decree for pre-emption shall be passed in favour of any person unless he has a subsisting right of pre-emption at the date of the decree .

All that is necessary in the case of the plaintiff is that he should have a subsisting right at the date of the decree. A subsisting right is one which merely exists and has not been lost. A right which is liable to be defeated or in other words is 'defeasible' may still be a subsisting right so long as it is not defeated.

The principle on which the ruling quoted above, namely, Kundan Gir v. Jaswant Singh was given was that we had to read Ss. 19 and 20 so as to make them consistent and not inconsistent. We need not go over the grounds which were given in that case for holding that in the case of a defendant who takes a transfer subsequent to the institution of the suit, he must acquire a title which is indefeasible. The fact that in the case of the defendant certain rules are necessary does not establish that the same rules are necessary for the case of a plaintiff. At any rate, we have not got any duty here to reconcile any two apparently inconsistent sections of the law and therefore so to read them as to make them consistent. Here, the language of the law is entirely clear and we cannot read the word "subsisting" as meaning "indefeasible".

When we are talking of a subsisting right it must of course be a subsisting right which will give the plaintiff preference over the defendant.

---

[1] 27 A. L. J. 1270

Civil

1932

Narsingh Narain v. Ram Chander Pandey

Mukerji, J.

The subsisting right must be also a preferential right, but that is a point which does not arise for decision in this particular case.

The view which we are inclined to take in this case is also supported by a ruling of a Bench of this Court in Ram Raj Pandey v. Har Prasad[2].

Reliance has been placed by the learned counsel for the respondent on the case of Abdul Ghafur v. Ghulam Husain[3]. That was a case in which it was held that a person to be a co-sharer entitled to pre-empt an auction sale under the provisions of Order 21, R. 88 C. P. C. must be a co-sharer of 12 months' standing, so that his right to pre-empt as a co-sharer might not be defeated later on. When this decision was given, the Pre-emption Act of 1922 did not exist and the Civil Procedure Code does not contain any definition of the word "co-sharer". Applying the common law of the land, the decision was given. In the particular case before us, we have to interpret the word "co-sharer" as defined in the Pre-emption Act of 1922 and therefore we cannot hold that the case of Abdul Ghafur v. Ghulam Husain has any bearing on the case before us.

In the result, we answer the question in the affirmative and direct that this answer be sent back to the Division Bench which made the reference.

Reference answered in the affirmative

[2] 1932 A. L. J. 109

[3] I. L. R. 35 All. 296

Civil

1932

June 6

Sulaiman, C. J.
Mukerji, J.
King, J.

AFZALI BEGAM (Defendant)
versus
KANHYYA LAL (Plaintiff)*

Civil Procedure Code, Or. 41, R. 11—Order under—Appeal to be admitted on payment of decretal amount within specified period—Whether ultra vires.

Where an appeal is put up for hearing under Or. 41, R. 11 C. P. C., the admission or rejection of the appeal is to be on the merits. Apart from the discretion to demand security for costs under Or. 41, R. 10(1), there is no power in the appellate court to make the order for issue of notice to the respondent conditional on payment of the decretal amount by the appellant.

Order on application of Mst. Afzali Begam.

A. M. Khwaja and S. B. Johari for the applicant.

The judgment of the Court was delivered by

Sulaiman, C. J.

Sulaiman, C. J.—This is an application in a first appeal from a preliminary decree passed under Order 34, Rule 4 in a mortgage suit for sale. The memorandum of appeal was presented in this Court and was duly admitted, and the appeal was ordered to be put up for hearing under O. 41, R. 11 either for dismissal or issue of notice. On December 8, 1931 a Bench of this Court passed the following order:—"If the appellant brings into court the sum of Rs.5,478 and Rs.500 for security for costs within four months from this date the appeal is to be admitted, otherwise the appeal is to stand automatically rejected and no further time will be given under any circumstances."

*Application in F. A. 372 of 1931

Before the expiry of the time allowed the appellant filed an application praying that the appeal should be unconditionally admitted and notice be issued to the respondent. There is no doubt that after the memorandum of appeal is admitted under O. 41, R. 9 and even before the issue of notice to the respondent under Rule 11, the appellate court has discretion under Rule 10(1) to demand from the appellant security for the costs of the appeal or of the original suit or of both. The rule goes on to provide that in certain cases such an order must of necessity be passed. But that discretion is confined to demanding security for the costs only and not for an order to deposit the whole of the decretal amount. It is only when an application for stay of proceedings of execution is made under Rule 5 that the court is given power to demand security for the due performance of such decree or order as may ultimately be binding upon the appellant.

Under Rule 11 (1) the court has power to dismiss the appeal obviously when it is of opinion that the appeal has no merits. Rule 12(1) then provides that unless the appellate court dismisses the appeal under Order 41, Rule 11, it shall fix a day for the hearing of the appeal. Similarly Rule 13 (1) provides that where the appeal is not dismissed under Rule 11, the appellate court shall send notice of the appeal to the court from whose decree the appeal is preferred.

It seems to us that apart from the discretion to demand security for costs, there is no power in the appellate court to make the order for issue of notice to the respondent conditional on payment of the decretal amount by the appellant. The admission or rejection of the appeal is to be on the merits. Where the case is a fairly arguable one and there is a reasonable prospect of success the court has to order notice to issue, and not to impose conditions on the appellant. On the other hand, if the case has no merits, the appeal should be dismissed forthwith.

We are, therefore, of opinion that the order quoted above, which demanded not only security for the costs, but also the full decretal amount, which was to be realised by the sale of the mortgaged property after the final decree is passed hereafter, was ultra vires. Although it purported to be a final order involving an automatic rejection of the appeal and was not a provisional order, we think that the order being ultra vires must be vacated, and the appeal even though the time for deposit has expired, must be deemed to be still pending particularly as the appellant filed an application for the reconsideration of the order before the expiry of the prescribed period.

We accordingly set aside that order leaving it open to the Bench hearing the appeal under Order 41, Rule 11 either to demand security for costs under O. 41, R. 10(1) or to deal with the appeal at once under O. 41, R. 11.

Order set aside

CIVIL

1932

March 31

MUKERJI, J.
BENNET, J.

DHAPO (Applicant)
versus
BAKRIDI (Opposite party)*

Limitation Act, Art. 181 and Civil Procedure Code, Sec. 144—Application for restitution—Limitation—Whether to be counted from the decree of the lower appellate court or from the decree of the High Court confirming that decree.

In an application for restitution under Sec. 144 C. P. C., the time to be reckoned under Art. 181, Limitation Act, should be counted from the decree of the lower appellate court and the applicant is not entitled to get deduction of the period occupied by the appeal to the High Court. Hari Mohan Dalal v. Parmeshwar Sahu, I. L. R. 56 Cal. 61 followed.

EXECUTION SECOND APPEAL from a decree of A. P. GHILDIAL ESQ., Additional Subordinate Judge of Meerut, reversing a decree of B. P. ELHENCE ESQ., Munsif.

U. S. Bajpai and S. B. L. Gaur for the appellant.

S. N. Gupta for the respondent.

The judgment of the Court was delivered by

Mukerji, J.

MUKERJI, J.—Two points have been raised in this appeal. One is really a question of fact, and the other is a question of law. If we had to decide the question of fact, we, probably, would have been inclined to remit an issue, but that is not necessary in the view we take of the point of law.

One Ramji Lal got a decree for money on August 29, 1925 against the respondent Baqridi. Having got his decree, Ramji Lal proceeded to realise by attachment of an immovable property. Ramzan, Baqridi's brother, laid claim to that property. The claimant and the decree-holder came to terms, and the property was released from attachment on Ramzan paying a sum of Rs.400 towards the decree.

Baqridi appealed against the decree passed in favour of Ramji Lal, and his appeal was allowed on May 6, 1926. Ramji Lal filed a second appeal which was dismissed on February 7, 1927.

Baqridi made an application under Section 144 of the Code of Civil Procedure against Ramji Lal's widow, Mst. Dhapo, the appellant before us, for recovery of the sum of Rs.400 which had been paid by Ramzan to Ramji Lal. This application was presented on January 16, 1930.

Mst. Dhapo objected to the application on two grounds; the first is that Baqridi is not entitled to recover the money, he himself not having paid it, and the second is that the application is time-barred.

The first court dismissed the application on the ground of limitation, and the second court has allowed the application.

As we have stated, there were two questions, one of fact and the other of law. The question of fact is whether it was Baqridi's money that was paid to Ramji Lal, or whether it was Ramzan's money that Ramji Lal got.

---

*E. S. A. 1374 of 1930

If Ramzan, in order to have a clear title to his property, paid money to Ramji Lal, Baqridi would have no right to recover it. As there was no clear finding on this point, if we had to decide it, it would have been necessary for us to remand an issue. But the appeal succeeds on the ground of limitation.

To this application of Baqridi Article 181 applies. This is the view taken in this Court. Then the limitation of three years begins to run from the date on which the right to apply accrues. The question is, did the right to apply for restitution accrue on May 6, 1926, or on February 7, 1927. The right to apply for restitution accrued as soon as Baqridi's appeal succeeded in the first appellate court. That right to apply for restitution was not in any way suspended by the fact that Ramji Lal filed a second appeal.

It has been argued that Baqridi took the precaution of waiting to see how the second appeal fared. That may be a matter of precaution, good for Baqridi to take, but that was no reason why he should wait for three years after the decision of the High Court. He had more than two years within which to apply after the decision of the High Court, and the taking of the precaution mentioned need not have hurt him. We have the simple words of the Third Column of Article 181 to interpret, and the only way in which we can interpret is to say that the right to apply accrued as soon as the decree in favour of Ramji Lal was reversed.

We are fortified in our opinion by the decision of three learned Judges of the Calcutta High Court in the case of Hari Mohan Dalal v. Parmeshwar Sahu[1].

The learned counsel for the respondent has referred us to the case of Ramjhujawan Thakur v. Bankey Thakur[2]. In that case the learned Judges considered that the second appellate court's date was the material date. But the facts were such as did not call for any inquiry as to whether the lower appellate court's date, or the date of the judgment of the High Court, was the material date. The application was one for ascertainment of mesne profits. That application could be made only when delivery of possession had been made in favour of the applicant. The delivery took place sometime in 1925, and the application was amply within three years from that date. In this view, the investigation of the learned Judges would appear to have been unnecessary. In any case, we prefer to follow the Calcutta case, which is in accordance with our own opinion.

We allow the appeal, set aside the decree of the lower appellate court and restore the order of the court of first instance, namely, dismissing Baqridi's application for restitution. The appellant will have her costs throughout.

Appeal allowed

---

[1] I. L. R. 56 Cal. 61

[2] I. L. R. 7 Pat. 794

CIVIL

1932

March 8

SULAIMAN, J.
YOUNG, J.

NANDAN SAHU (Defendant)
versus
HARI SHANKAR (Plaintiff)*

Civil Procedure Code, Or. 10, R. 4(2)—Power 'to make such order in relation to the suit as it thinks fit'—Whether includes power to dismiss suit for default of appearance under Or. 9.

The power given to a court under Or. 10, R. 4(2) 'to make such order in relation to the suit as it thinks fit', includes a power to dismiss the suit for default of appearance under Or. 9.

Kandath Puthiyadath Chengaru Chandu, 1921 A. I. R. (Mad.) 417 referred to.

CIVIL REVISION from an order of BABU KRISHNA CHANDRA SRIVASTAVA, Additional Subordinate Judge of Basti.

Harnandan Prasad for the applicant.

Shiva Prasad Sinha for the opposite party.

The judgment of the Court was delivered by

Sulaiman, J.

SULAIMAN, J.—This is a defendant's application in revision from an order of the court below setting aside the dismissal of a suit and restoring it to its original number on payment of some costs.

It is urged that the court below had no jurisdiction to act under Order IX C. P. C.

On two previous dates both the parties were absent and the court adjourned the case in order that they might attend in person, with a view to take down their statements. On this last date, namely, January 12, 1931, the defendant with his pleader was present, but the plaintiff was absent. It further appears that his learned pleader made a statement in court that he had no instructions to go on with the case. The result was that the plaintiff was absent.

The court passed the following order:—

> The plaintiff is absent today. He was absent on the last date of issues also and was warned through his advocate to attend court today as I wanted to examine him. Taking action under Order X, Rule 4(2) the suit is dismissed with costs to the defendant.

On a subsequent application for restoration of the suit professedly under Order IX, Rule 9 C. P. C., the court was satisfied that there was good cause for the non-appearance of the plaintiff and restored the case.

It is urged before us that the order having been made under Order X, Rule 4(2) C. P. C., it amounted to a pronouncement of judgment and could not be an order dismissing the suit for default.

We are unable to accept the contention that under Order X, Rule 4(2) a court has no power to dismiss a suit for default of appearance. Obviously there are two alternative courses open to the court. It may either "pronounce judgment against the absent party," or "make such order in relation to the suit as it thinks fit." There is nothing to preclude the court from not pronouncing judgment on the merits, but dismissing it for default of appearance. Order IX, Rule 12 expressly covers a case where a

---

*Civ. Rev. 369 of 1931

CIVIL

1932

NANDAN SAHU v. HARI SHANKER

Sulaiman, J.

party has been ordered to appear in person and does not appear in person or show sufficient cause for failing to appear. In such a case he is subject to all the foregoing provisions of that Order. The court, therefore, had clearly power to dismiss the suit for default of appearance.

The learned advocate for the applicant relies on the case of Kandath Puthiyadath Chengaru Chandu[1]. The reported judgment does not clearly indicate the exact form of the order which had been made by the court in that particular case. We are, however, not prepared to hold that the power given to a court under Order X, Rule 4(2) 'to make such order in relation to the suit as it thinks fit' does not include a power to dismiss the suit for default of appearance under Order IX.

We are also of opinion that the court in this particular case did not pronounce judgment on the merits, but really dismissed the suit for default of appearance. In fact it emphasised the fact that the plaintiff, in spite of a previous warning was again absent, and did not refer to the merits of the case.

We, therefore, think that there is no force in this application and it is accordingly dismissed with costs.

Application dismissed

---

[1] 1921 A. I. R. (Mad.) 417

CIVIL

1932

April 14

KING, J.
THOM, J.

RAM CHARAN LAL (Plaintiff)

versus

HANIFA KHATUN AND ANOTHER (Defendants)*

Mohammedan Law—Deceased debtor—Suit by creditor against his legal representatives—One defendant exempted—Liability of remaining defendants—Civil Procedure Code, Sec. 2(11).

Where in a suit, based on a bond executed by a Mohammedan debtor who died before the institution of the suit, the plaintiff originally impleaded the debtor's widow, father and minor daughter who were in possession of his property as his heirs and legal representatives, but subsequently the plaintiff discharged the daughter from the array of defendants, held, that the plaintiff was only entitled to a decree against the two remaining defendants (i.e., father and widow) for sums proportionate to the shares of the deceased debtor's estate which devolved upon them, and a decree should not be passed for the whole debt against these two legal representatives. Mst. Kaniz Abbas v. Lala Bala Din, A. I. R. 1925 Oudh 330 distinguished. Pirthi Pal Singh v. Husaini Jan, I. L. R. 4 All. 361 and Bussunteram v. Kamaluddin, I. L. R. 11 Cal. 421 relied on.

CIVIL REVISION from an order of BABU BRIJ MOHAN LAL, Judge of Small Cause Court of Budaun.

P. M. L. Verma for the applicant.

M. A. Aziz for the opposite parties.

The judgment of the Court was delivered by

King, J.

KING, J.—This is an application in revision against a decree of the court of small causes. The suit was upon the basis of a bond executed by one Zahur Ahmad. Zahur Ahmad died before the institution of the suit and the creditor impleaded his widow, his father and his daughter, who were alleged to be in possession of his property as his heirs and legal representatives. There was some difficulty in the appointment of a guardian ad litem for the daughter, who was a minor, and the plaintiff discharged her from the array of defendants. The plaintiff's claim was proved and the trial court passed a decree against the father and the widow only in proportion to their shares of inheritance in the property of Zahur Ahmad deceased, subject to the usual condition that the decree shall be executed against the defendants to the extent of Zahur Ahmad's assets in their possession. It is contended by the plaintiff in revision that the trial court was wrong in passing a decree against the two defendants only for sums proportionate to the extent of their respective shares in the estate of Zahur Ahmad. The applicant argues that the trial court should have passed a decree for the whole debt against the two defendants, namely, the father and the widow, although he concedes that the decree could only be executed to the extent of Zahur Ahmad's assets in their possession.

---

*Civ. Rev. 268 of 1931

The learned advocate for the applicant refers to the definition of "legal representative" in S. 2, Cl. 11 of the C. P. C. and argues that as the two defendants against whom the decree was passed are "legal representatives" of the deceased debtor, therefore a decree should have been passed for the whole debt against these two legal representatives. Several authorities have been cited for the applicant but we have not been shown any authority which clearly supports his contention. He has not established the proposition that each one of the legal representatives of a deceased debtor is necessarily liable, jointly and severally, for the whole debt, and that the creditor is entitled, in all circumstances, to a decree for the whole debt against any one of the legal representatives whom he chooses to implead. Much reliance is placed upon the ruling in Mst. Kaniz Abbas v. Lala Bala Din[1]. This was a case where a Mohammedan mortgagor died after a preliminary decree for foreclosure had been passed against him. He left a widow and a brother. His widow was in possession of his estate and her name was mutated with respect to the entire share of the deceased. The widow alone was impleaded as legal representative of the deceased and the final decree for foreclosure was passed. It was held that this final decree, passed against the widow, was binding on the brother also. Their Lordships took the view that the mortgagor's estate was sufficiently represented, for the purpose of the foreclosure decree by the widow. In our opinion, this ruling is no clear authority for the contention advanced by the applicant in this case. The suit which was the subject-matter of this ruling was of a totally different nature, and the decision was that the final decree for foreclosure which had been passed against the widow only was nevertheless binding upon the brother. We do not see how this ruling can have any application to the facts of this case. The suit is of a different nature, as already stated. Moreover we have this distinguishing feature that the daughter was originally impleaded and was expressly exempted by the plaintiff from the array of defendants. In such circumstances, we cannot see how a decree passed against the remaining defendants could possibly be held binding upon the minor daughter.

For the respondents several rulings have been cited which are directly in point. The case of Pirthi Pal Singh v. Husaini Jan[2] clearly supports the view taken by the trial court. In that case, the heirs to a deceased Mohammedan divided his estate among themselves according to their shares under the Mohammedan law of inheritance, a small debt being due from the estate at the time of division. Two of the heirs were subsequently sued for the whole of such debt. It was held that as such heirs had not, by sharing in the estate, rendered themselves liable for the whole of such debt, (Mohammedan law allowing the heirs of a deceased person to divide his estate, notwithstanding a small debt is due therefrom) and as a decree against such heirs would not bind the other heirs, a decree should not be passed against such heirs, for the whole of such debt, but a decree should be passed against them for a share of such debt proportionate to the share of the estate they had taken. The judgment of the court below is precisely in accordance with this ruling. This ruling has also been followed in Bussunteram v. Kamaluddin[3]. According to these two authorities which do not appear to have been overruled or even dissented from, it is clear that the plaintiff in the present case is only entitled to a decree against the two defendants, proportionate to the extent of the shares of Zahur Ahmad's estate which devolved upon them. This would be the result even if the plaintiff had inadvertently omitted to implead the daughter. In the present suit, the plaintiff's claim is further weakened by the fact that he has expressly exonerated the daughter from liability. It is inequitable that he should by exonerating one of the heirs, impose a greater liability upon the remaining heirs.

---

[1] A. I. R. 1925 Oudh 330

We do not see that the definition of "legal representatives" which was introduced into the Code of Civil Procedure of the year 1906 has altered the rule of law which has been enunciated in the decisions cited. No authority has been shown for the view that the law on this point has been altered.

In our opinion the trial court has correctly decided that the plaintiff, after exempting the daughter from the array of defendants, is only entitled to a decree against the two remaining defendants for sums proportionate to the shares of Zahur Ahmad's estate which devolved upon them.

We accordingly dismiss the application with costs.

Application dismissed

---

[2] I. L. R. 4 All. 361

[3] I. L. R. 11 Cal 421

CIVIL

1932

April 22

SULAIMAN, C. J.
MUKERJI, J.

MOHAMMAD ASGHAR AND OTHERS
versus
ABIDA BEGUM AND OTHERS*

Civil Procedure Code, Sec. 110—Application for leave to appeal—From decree in a suit for partition—Valuation—Whether value of whole estate to be taken into account.

Where an application is made for leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council from a decree in a suit for partition, the value of the whole estate is the value to be taken into account. The suit for partition could not be decreed without considering the value of the entire estate and the method in which the partition should take place and the decree therefore at least indirectly involved a question respecting the whole estate. Lala Bhugwat Sahay v. Rai Pashupati Nath Bose, 10 C. W. N. 564 followed.

APPLICATION for leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council.

Shiva Prasad Sinha for the appellants.

Mansur Alam for the respondents.

The judgment of the Court was delivered by

Sulaiman, C. J.

SULAIMAN, C. J.—This is an application for leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council from a judgment of this Court passed in a First Appeal from Order, reversing the judgment of the lower appellate court and restoring that of the court of first instance. The suit related to the partition of house properties, the plaintiffs' share in which was valued at less than Rs.10,000. It is conceded by the applicants before us that the value of the subject-matter in dispute, viz., the share of the plaintiffs in the disputed house is less than Rs.10,000. On the other hand it is not disputed by the respondents that the value of the entire house which is sought to be partitioned is more than Rs.10,000.

The parties had agreed to abide by the statement of a referee and this High Court considered that the proceedings were not in the nature of an arbitration but amounted to a compromise, and ordered that a decree should be prepared in terms of the statement made by the referee.

The question raised in appeal is whether the proceedings were in the nature of an arbitration or a compromise. On this point there is undoubtedly some conflict of opinion in India and the question is a substantial question of law.

There was also a question as to the correct interpretation of the statement made by the referee, the answer to which depends on a consideration of the entire proceedings relating to the reference. A translation of those proceedings was not before the Bench, but it will now have to be prepared.

An objection is taken on behalf of the plaintiffs-respondents that the case does not fulfil the requirements of Section 110 C. P. C. inasmuch as the value of the subject-matter in appeal to their Lordships of the Privy Council is less than Rs.10,000. On the other hand it is contended on behalf of the defendants that the decree of this Court indirectly involves a question respecting property of the value of more than Rs.10,000.

On this question also there is a conflict of opinion between some of the

---

*P. C. A. 6 of 1932

CIVIL

1932

MOHAMMAD ASGHAR
v.
ABIDA BEGUM

Sulaiman, C. J.

High Courts in India. It was held in the case of Lala Bhugwat Sahay v. Rai Pashupati Nath Bose[1] that in a suit for partition the value of the whole estate is the value to be taken into account when considering whether leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council should or should not be granted. On the other hand, the Bombay High Court in the case of John Joseph DeSilva Sr. v. John Joseph DeSilva Jr.[2] held that the value to be looked at is the value of the interests of the party prejudiced by the decree.

We think that inasmuch as the plaintiffs' claim was for the partition of the whole house and the claim could not be decreed without considering the value of the entire house and the method in which the partition should take place, it is very difficult to say that the decree does not at least indirectly involve a question respecting the whole house which is admittedly of the value of Rs.10,000. There is a difference between the language of the first paragraph and that in the second paragraph of Section 110 C. P. C. In the first the words used are "the amount or value of the subject-matter in dispute", whereas in the second we have "respecting property of like amount or value". Such "property" need not necessarily be the subject-matter in dispute in the suit. We are therefore of opinion that the defendants are entitled as of right to appeal to their Lordships of the Privy Council and at any rate the case involves a substantial and important question of law and in view of the conflict of opinion which has prevailed in India, it is also otherwise a fit case for appeal to His Majesty in Council under Section 109(c) of the Code of Civil Procedure. We accordingly order that a certificate be granted.

Certificate granted

---

[1] 10 C. W. N. 564

[2] 6 Bom. L. J. R. 403

CIVIL

1932

April 22

PULLAN, J.
NIAMATULLAH, J.

SUKHNANDAN SINGH (Decree-holder)
versus
RAMDEYI KUNWAR AND OTHERS (Judgment-debtors)*

Limitation Act, Art. 182—"Where there has been an appeal"—Meaning of—Whether include an appeal from an order dismissing an application to set aside an ex parte decree.

> The words "Where there has been an 'appeal'," used in Art. 182 of the Limitation Act, contemplate and mean an appeal from the decree, and do not include an appeal from an order dismissing an application to set aside a decree passed ex parte. Sheo Prasad v. Anrudh Singh, I. L. R. 2 All. 273 followed.

EXECUTION SECOND APPEAL from a decree of BABU KRISHNA DAS, Subordinate Judge of Ghazipur, confirming a decree of BABU KANHAIYA LAL SRIVASTAVA, Munsif of Saidpur.

Ram Nama Prasad for the appellant.

S. N. Verma for the respondents.

The judgment of the Court was delivered by

Pullan, J.

PULLAN, J.—The appellant is a decree-holder who obtained a final decree in a mortgage suit on March 5, 1926. He applied for execution of the decree on March 21, 1929 and his application has been dismissed as

---

*E. S. A. 812 of 1930

CIVIL
1932
SUKH-NANDAN SINGH
v.
RÁMDEYI KÚNWAR
Pullan, J.

being barred by time. In appeal the decree-holder asks us to consider that his application should be held to be within time because after the final decree was passed ex parte, an application was made by the judgment-debtor for setting aside the ex parte decree, and this application was not rejected till March 30, 1926, by an order which was affirmed on appeal on May 14, 1926. It is suggested that the application for execution may be made within three years of the date of the dismissal of the application for setting aside the final decree in appeal. Art. 182 of the Limitation Act gives the period of three years for an application for the execution of a decree from

(1) the date of the decree or order;

(2) where there has been an appeal, the date of the final decree or order of the appellate court, or the withdrawal of the appeal; and

(3) where there has been a review of judgment, the date of the decision passed on the review.

In the present case there was no appeal against the final decree, and it has been ruled by this Court, as far back as the year 1879 in the case of Sheo Prasad v. Anrudh Singh[1], that the words, "where there has been an appeal", contemplate and mean an appeal from the decree; and no other appeal. This view has been confirmed by the decisions of numerous other High Courts. We need only give the following instances:—

Jivaji v. Ramchandra[2], Rai Brijraj v. Nauratan Lal[3] and Fakirchand Mandal v. Daiba Charan Parni[4]. We have been shown no ruling of the Allahabad High Court which dissents in any way from the views expressed by the judgment to which we have referred (2 All. 273), and we ourselves see no reason for taking a different view.

It has, however, been suggested that the proceedings taken for setting aside the ex parte decree should be held to be proceedings for a review of judgment, and the final date of the decision on those proceedings should be taken as the date from which limitation for execution of the decree began to run. But although there is an analogy between an application for setting aside an ex parte decree and an application for review, we are of opinion that in Art. 182 of the Limitation Act the words "review of judgment" must be applied strictly to a review of judgment, as the words are used in other portions of the same schedule. The Limitation Act is of the year 1908, the same year in which the Civil Procedure Code was amended, and there is no reason to suppose that the words "review of judgment" have a different significance in the Limitation Act from that which they bear in the Civil Procedure Code; and we find that Articles 161 and 162 provide for limitation for applying for a review of judgment, whereas Article 164 deals with an application for setting aside an ex parte decree. Moreover the clause on which the learned counsel relies does not refer to an "application" for review but to cases where there has been a review of judgment. It has also been suggested that the appellant might take advantage of S. 14 or S. 5 of the Limitation Act. As to S. 14 it cannot be said that the appellant in the present case was prosecuting another civil proceeding against the same party for the same relief in a court which from

[1] I. L. R. 2 All. 273

[2] I. L. R. 16 Bom. 123

[3] 3 Pat. L. J. 119

[4] I. L. R. 54 Cal. 1052

defect of jurisdiction or other causes of a like nature was unable to entertain it; and as to S. 5 we do not consider that this section can be invoked in the case of an application for execution of a decree.

The appeal accordingly fails, and is dismissed with costs.

Application dismissed

CIVIL
1932
April 21
PULLAN, J.
NIAMAT-ULLAH, J.

ABDUL JALIL KHAN AND ANOTHER (Defendants)
versus
MOHAMMAD ABDUL SALAM KHAN AND OTHERS (Plaintiffs)*

Contract Act, Sec. 73, and Interest Act—Scope of—Suit by a co-sharer—For his share of profits—Whether plaintiff can be compensated for delay in payment by allowing an equitable rate of interest.

The observations of the Privy Council in Kalyan Das v. Maqbul Ahmad, I. L. R. 40 All. 497, do not give rise to the conclusion that interest can be allowed only under the provisions of the Interest Act or of Sec. 73, Illustration (n), of the Contract Act. There are circumstances in which interest can be allowed on general grounds of equity and Illustration (n) does not cover the whole of Sec. 73 of the Contract Act. Hamira Bibi v. Zubaida Bibi, I. L. R. 38 All. 581 relied on; Jwala Prasad v. Hoti Lal, I. L. R. 46 All. 625 dissented from.

In a suit for his share of rent of certain property against the defendant, who was a co-sharer with the plaintiff and collected rent on behalf of himself and the plaintiff, the plaintiff claimed an additional payment of interest as compensation for delay in making the payment of rent but there was no express contract to that effect; held, that the case fell under the third paragraph of Sec. 73, Contract Act, and the plaintiff was entitled to compensation on the basis of an equitable rate of interest.

FIRST APPEAL from a decree of MAULVI MUHAMMAD AHMAD ANSARI, Subordinate Judge of Dehra Dun.

K. N. Katju and N. A. Sherwani for the appellants.

A. M. Khwaja and B. Malik for the respondents.

The judgment of the Court was delivered by

Pullan, J.

PULLAN, J.—This appeal arises from a suit brought by Mohammad Abdul Salam Khan for a one-third share in the annual rent of a property known as Glanville owned by him and his two brothers who are defendants 1 and 2 in the case and leased to Messrs. Evans Fraser and Co., who are defendant No. 4. The third defendant Mr. Lindsay Smith is the agent who receives rent from defendant No. 4 for the lessors. The plaintiff has already brought one suit against his brothers in the year 1925, and there is no question that since that time the plaintiff has been attempting to get from his brothers his share in the profits of the family property and that the profits have been withheld from him. The present suit has been decreed for a sum of Rs.18,159-5-9 together with proportionate costs against the first defendant only. This sum includes the plaintiff's one-third share in the rent of the property and also interest at the rate of 1 per cent per month. Three points are raised in appeal by the first defendant Abdul

---

*F. A. 292 of 1928

Jalil Khan. He pleads in the first place that the claim for interest should have been disallowed; secondly, that the claim for the first six monthly instalment of the year 1925 falling due on March 1, 1925 cannot be granted as this was part of the subject-matter of the suit of 1925 and the decision in that suit must be held to operate as res judicata; and, thirdly, he claims credit for income-tax which has been paid by him on the total amount of rent collected for these premises. The second and third grounds of objection present no difficulty. We have read a copy of the plaint of the suit filed by the plaintiff in 1925. That suit referred to the period during which the present appellant was the agent of the plaintiff-respondent. That agency terminated in the year 1924, and there was no relief prayed in that suit for the rent accruing for Granville estate for the six months terminating in March 1925. Nothing therefore in the judgment of that suit can operate as res judicata in the present suit. As to the claim to credit for income-tax paid by the appellant on the profits of the Granville estate, we are of opinion that no such claim can be sustained by way of a set-off where it has not been specifically pleaded and a court-fee paid on the amount claimed. There remains the appellant's objection to the decree for interest. This is based mainly on the decision of a Bench of this Court reported in Jwala Prasad v. Hoti Lal[1]. The judgment in that suit which purports to follow a decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Kalyan Das v. Maqbul Ahmad[2] states that "the only grounds upon which interest can be claimed upon a sum of money when the liability for the sum is established are to be found either in Section 73 of the Contract Act, Illustration (n) or in the Interest Act No. XXXII of 1839". The learned Judges held that in the case before them interest was not recoverable on either ground. A similar view had already been expressed by another Bench of this Court in the case of Lalman v. Chinta Mani[3]. It must be noticed however that in both these cases reference is made to Illustration (n) of Section 73 of the Contract Act. The judgment of the Privy Council in the case of Kalyan Das v. Maqbul Ahmad does not refer to any section of the Contract Act. The dictum of their Lordships is in general terms. They say "interest depends on contract express or implied or on some rule of law allowing it" and as to the case before them they observed "there is no express contract for interest and none can be implied and no circumstances less capable of justifying the allowance of interest as a matter of law can be imagined". We do not consider that this observation of their Lordships gives rise to the conclusion that interest can be allowed only under the provisions of the Interest Act or of Section 73, Illustration (n) of the Contract Act. There are circumstances in which interest can be allowed on general grounds of equity and Illustration (n) does not cover the whole of Section 73 of the Contract Act. This has already been pointed out by a Bench of this Court in the case of Anrudh Kumar v. Lachhmi Chand[4], where the ruling referred to above in Jwala Prasad v. Hoti Lal[5], was considered. In the case of Hamira Bibi v. Zubaida Bibi[6] their Lordships of the Privy Council allowed a Mohammedan widow's claim to interest on her unpaid dower debt on the

[1] I. L. R. 46 All. 625
[2] I. L. R. 40 All. 497
[3] 17 A. L. J. 169
[4] 50 All. 818
[5] I. L. R. 46 All. 625
[6] I. L. R. 38 All. 581

Civil

1932

Abdul Jalil Khan v. Mohammad Abdul Salam Khan

Pullan, J.

ground that although there was no agreement that she should obtain any sum in excess of her actual dower, she was entitled on equitable considerations to some reasonable compensation "best calculated on the basis of an equitable rate of interest".

In the present case it is not necessary to rely merely on principles of equity. We consider that this is a case falling under the third clause of Section 73 of the Contract Act. The appellant was a co-sharer collecting rents on behalf of himself and the respondent. It was his duty to pay to the plaintiff his share of rent when that rent was collected, and although there was no express contract that he should compensate the plaintiff for delay in making the payment by an additional payment of interest, there was, in our opinion, "an obligation resembling those created by contract incurred by the appellant and not discharged by him to pay to the plaintiff his share of profit on due date", and the plaintiff being injured by the appellant's failure to discharge that obligation "is entitled to receive the same compensation from the party in default as if such person had contracted to discharge it and had broken his contract". Such injury can be compensated and in our opinion should be compensated by allowing an equitable rate of interest. The rate of interest allowed by the lower court is one per cent per mensem. We do not consider that that is an excessive rate. Thus the appeal fails on all grounds and is dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed

PRIVY COUNCIL

MAUNG SEIN DONE (Plaintiff)

versus

MA PAN NYUN AND OTHERS (Defendants)*

Civil

1932

April 12

Lord Russell of Killowen

Sir George Lowndes

Sir Dinshah Mulla

Civil Procedure Code, Sec. 11—Res judicata—As between co-defendants—When—Dismissal of previous suit depended upon an adjudication of conflict between co-defendants—Decision operates as res judicata between co-defendants.

A Burmese woman died leaving her surviving two sons and two daughters. The sons having entered into possession of the mother's property, one of the daughters instituted a suit claiming a 1|4th share alleging that the succession was regulated by Burmese Buddhist law under which the sons and daughters took equal shares. In this suit both the sons and the remaining daughter were made co-defendants. The relief claimed included administration of the estate of the deceased, accounts against the sons as executors de son tort of the deceased, and the appointment of a receiver of the estate. The sons filed a joint written statement, pleading that the succession was governed by the Chinese Customary law under which daughters were excluded from inheritance. The daughter-defendant filed no written statement but gave evidence on behalf of the plaintiff in support of her claim. The suit was dismissed on the finding that the Chinese customary law governed the succession and that under that law the sons only inherited and not the daughters. Subsequently the present suit was instituted by the other daughter against her two brothers for her 1|4th share in her mother's estate. Held, that the suit was barred by the rule of res judicata

---

*P. C. A. 7 of 1931

CIVIL

1932

MAUNG SEIN DONE v. MA PAN NYUN

as applied between co-defendants. This rule is applicable even if the previous suit was dismissed, provided such dismissal depended upon an adjudication of conflict between the co-defendants. Munni Bibi v. Tirloki Nath, 1931 A. L. J. 453=I. L. R. 53 All. 103 followed.

APPEAL from a decision of the High Court of Judicature at Rangoon.

A. M. Dunne, K.C. and R. W. Leach for the appellant.

A. Pennell for the respondents.

The following judgment was delivered by

Lord Russell of Killowen

LORD RUSSELL OF KILLOWEN—In this appeal their Lordships find it unnecessary to decide upon the merits of the case as in their opinion the plea of res judicata must prevail. In order, however, to explain how the plea arises, it is necessary to relate the facts in some detail.

The four parties to this appeal are two sons and two daughters of Chan Sit Shan and Ma Myit, his wife. Chan Sit Shan had three other children born of this wife, two of whom died before their father; the third died in 1903.

Chan Sit Shan was a Chinaman who was born in China and settled in Pyapon, Burma. There he married Ma Myit, a native of Pyapon, who before her marriage was a Burmese Buddhist. At some time, Chan Sit Shan went back to China and there married a second wife, a Chinawoman, named Ma Kee Ya. He returned to Burma with this second wife and a Chinese boy named Pwin Lit whom they had adopted. Subsequently his wife, Ma Kee Ya, bore him a daughter, who was named Ma Kyin Myaing.

Chan Sit Shan died in 1902 intestate. On his death, there was a division of property between his two families as a result of which no further claim has arisen from or on behalf of Ma Kee Ya, Pwin Lit, and Ma Kyin Myaing, or any of them.

When Chan Sit Shan died, the eldest of his five surviving children, offspring of Ma Myit, was only about 15 or 16 years old. Their mother took possession of and managed the property which had not, on the division, gone to the other family, and she seems to have remained in possession and management until her death, which took place on January 22, 1918.

She was survived by her two sons, the respondent Maung Sit Paung, and the appellant, Maung Sein Done, and her two daughters, the respondents, Ma Pan Nyun and Ma Sein. On her death her two sons took possession.

Thereupon one of the daughters instituted legal proceedings, the nature and course of which require consideration, inasmuch as these are the earlier proceedings upon which the defence to the present suit of res judicata is founded.

The suit was instituted in the District Court of Pyapon, the parties being Ma Sein, plaintiff, and her sister and two brothers defendants. The plaint is dated December 21, 1918. By it the plaintiff alleges that Ma Myit, a Burmese Buddhist, died intestate possessed of considerable movable and immovable properties, set out in an annexed schedule; that she left as her heirs and representatives under Burmese Buddhist law, her children, the plaintiff and the defendants; that the two sons had taken possession of her property without taking out letters of administration;

CIVIL
1932
MAUNG SEIN DONE
v.
MA PAN NYUN
Lord Russell of Killowen

that the plaintiff, as a daughter, was entitled to an equal fourth share in the estate and effects of the deceased; and that Ma Pan Nyun was also an heir and was joined as a formal defendant. The relief claimed included administration of the estate of Ma Myit, accounts against the sons as executors de son tort of the deceased, and the appointment of a receiver of her estate.

The two sons put in a joint written statement. By it they denied that Ma Myit left any property at her death, and alleged that the property in suit represented the natural growth and increase of Chan Sit Shan's property which, after his death, had been managed by Ma Myit. As to both Chan Sit Shan's property and the property (if any) owned by Ma Myit, the two sons by their written statement further alleged (1) that the succession thereto was governed by Chinese customary law and not by Burmese Buddhist law, because Chan Sit Shan was a Chinaman and Ma Myit had become a Chinawoman and had died a Chinese widow; and (2) that by Chinese customary law (females being excluded by that law in the presence of male issue), the plaintiff had no right to inherit from either parent, and that her suit was therefore not maintainable.

The daughter, Ma Pan Nyun, filed no written statement, but she gave evidence, at the hearing, on behalf of the plaintiff, and in support of her claim.

The suit was tried by a Burmese judge, the issues including (amongst others) the following:—

> 1. Was Ma Myit a Burman Buddhist at the time of her death?
>
> 4. Is the plaintiff entitled to inherit the estate of Ma Myit? If so, to what extent?
>
> 7. Are the parties legitimate children of Chan Sit Shan and Ma Myit and, if so, what law of succession should be applied?
>
> 8. What relief is the plaintiff entitled to?

The judge delivered judgment on February 18, 1921. After a detailed examination of the evidence he answered the first issue in the negative. He decided that she was a Chinese Buddhist at her death. The fourth issue he answered in the negative. His finding in regard to the seventh issue was that as both Chan Sit Shan and Ma Myit were Chinese Buddhists the Chinese customary law must be applied to them. Upon the eighth issue he said: "As I have held that Ma Myit was not a Burman Buddhist, the plaintiff is not entitled to a fourth share in her estate." He dismissed the suit with costs.

Ma Sein appealed to the High Court of Judicature at Rangoon upon the ground that Ma Myit was a Burmese Buddhist and that therefore Ma Sein was one of her heirs. The appeal was dismissed on January 21, 1924, upon the grounds (1) that upon the facts of the case Chinese customary law governed the succession to the property (if any) left by Ma Myit and (2) that under that law her sons and not her daughters would inherit.

Thus a suit to administer the estate of Ma Myit, to which Ma Pan Nyun was a necessary and proper party if she had any interest in her mother's estate, was dismissed upon the grounds that Chinese customary law applied to the succession to Ma Myit's property and that under that law no female could inherit in the presence of male issue.

The suit which has given rise to the present appeal was instituted on July 23, 1927, in the District Court of Pyapon. The plaintiff is the daughter Ma Pan Nyun; the defendants are the two sons and the other daughter who had been the plaintiff in the former suit. The plaint is, with the necessary alterations, substantially the same as the plaint in that suit. The relief sought is establishment of the plaintiff's right to a one-fourth share in Ma Myit's estate, and administration of that estate, the claim to that relief being based upon the allegation that Ma Myit died a Burman Buddhist leaving as her heirs her two sons and her two daughters. The defendant Maung Sein Done (who is the appellant before their Lordships' Board) filed a written statement in August, 1927, dealing briefly with the claim on the merits, but raising also the plea that the plaintiff's claim was "barred by res judicata" by reason of the previous litigation and the judgments and decrees therein. The other defendants did not defend.

A preliminary issue was tried, viz., "Is the suit barred by the doctrine of res judicata?" The District Judge delivered his judgment on November 24, 1927, answering the issue in the negative, and stating as his reason, without entering into particulars, that "all the conditions requisite for res judicata between parties who were co-defendants in a former suit, are not present in this case." He, however, dismissed the suit upon the ground that the High Court's ruling in the previous case was binding upon him, viz., that Ma Myit could have no share according to Chinese customary law in the estate of her deceased husband, and that since the plaintiff before him claimed through Ma Myit, she could have no better claim that Ma Myit. It seems to have been overlooked by the judge that Ma Pan Nyun's action related to her mother's estate and not to her father's estate. By his decree, dated November 24, 1927, it was ordered that the suit be dismissed with certain provisions as to costs.

Upon appeal (No. 9 of 1928) to the High Court the order of the District Judge was on June 7, 1928, set aside, and the case was returned to the District Court to be disposed of on the merits. The judges on appeal treated the judgment of the District Judge as founded on the view that the plaintiff could have no cause of action because a Bench of the High Court had ruled that her mother, Ma Myit, was a Chinese Buddhist and that ruling was binding upon him. If that was in truth the foundation of the decision it was obviously wrong; for unless the matter were res judicata, it would be open to the plaintiff upon sufficient evidence to obtain a different decision. Upon the question of res judicata the judges on appeal thought that the case did not fall within Section 11 of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908, because there was in the former suit "no active contest as to rights and no decision thereon as between Ma Pan Nyun and her co-defendants." By their decree dated June 7, 1928, it was ordered that the decree of November 24, 1927, be set aside, that the case be returned to the District Court for disposal on the merits, and that the costs do follow the event.

The suit was ultimately tried on the merits, with the result that on December 10, 1928 a decree was made ordering accounts to be taken of Ma Myit's estate from the date of her death to the date of the decree.

CIVIL

1932

MAUNG SEIN DONE v. MA PAN NYUN

Lord Russell of Killowen

Upon appeal (No. 296 of 1928) to the High Court a decree (dated April 1, 1930) was made confirming the decree of December 10, 1928, and containing certain provisions as to costs.

If, however, the plea of res judicata affords a decisive answer to the claim of Ma Pan Nyun, the trial should not have proceeded. Their Lordships accordingly do not propose to examine the evidence which was adduced, but proceed at once to consider whether the plaintiff is bound by what was decided in the earlier litigation.

It is unnecessary to consider whether the present case falls within the actual wording of Section 11 of the Code. It is well settled that the statement of the doctrine of res judicata contained therein is not exhaustive, and that recourse may properly be had to decisions of the English Courts for the purpose of ascertaining the general principles governing the application of the doctrine.

The well-known statement of Wigram, V.C. in Cottingham v. Earl of Shrewsbury[1] may, their Lordships think, properly be cited in reference to the present case, viz.: "If a plaintiff cannot get at his right without trying and deciding a case between co-defendants, the Court will try and decide that case, and the co-defendants will be bound. But if the relief given to the plaintiff does not require or involve a decision of any case between co-defendants, the co-defendants will not be bound as beeween each other by any proceeding which may be necessary only to the decree the plaintiff obtains."

Further, in a recent case, Sir George Lowndes, in delivering the judgment of this Board, stated what was required in applying the rule of res judicata as between co-defendants in the following language:—"In such a case, therefore, three conditions are requisite: (1) There must be a conflict of interest between the defendants concerned; (2) it must be necessary to decide this conflict in order to give the plaintiff the relief he claims; and (3) the question between the defendants must have been finally decided." See Munni Bibi v. Tirloki Nath[2].

Their Lordships now turn to a consideration of the first litigation.

The suit brought by Ma Sein was an administration suit, the purpose and object of which was to have the mother's estate divided among her four children as her heirs. To that suit all the alleged heirs were necessary and proper parties, for every one entitled to a share would be entitled to be heard upon the question whether or not an order for administration should be made. Further, no person who was not entitled to a share would be entitled to bring such a suit, or to have any voice upon the question of administration. From the outset, it was clear what was the issue to be decided. The plaintiff's only title to sue depended upon the answer to the question whether all the four children were heirs of the mother or whether only the sons were entitled to succeed to her property, and this, in turn, depended upon the answer to the question whether the succession to the mother's property was governed by Chinese customary law or by Burmese Buddhist law. In a word, the question to be determined was one between the sisters on the one hand and the brothers on the other. The rights of each sister in regard to the mother's estate were identical; they were either both of them co-heirs with their brothers or neither of them was entitled to any share.

---

[1] 3 Hare at 638

[2] 58 I. A. 158 at 165

The matter which was adjudged was that the succession to Ma Myit's estate was governed by Chinese customary law, and that her daughters, therefore, were not entitled to any share therein. The language actually used in the Appellate Court was as follows:—"I would hold that the Chinese customary law should be applied to her estate. Under that law her sons, and not her daughters, would inherit, and, therefore, appellant's suit was rightly dismissed." That is, in terms, a finding that neither Ma Sein nor Ma Pan Nyun was entitled to any share in the estate of Ma Myit.

It was urged that the doctrine of res judicata could not apply as between co-defendants to a previous suit, if no relief had been granted to the plaintiff in that suit. Their Lordships are aware of no principle or authority which justifies this contention. In Ma Sein's suit there had necessarily to be an adjudication upon the issues involved before the suit could have been dismissed. It was not any less an adjudication because its consequence was the dismissal of the suit, than it would have been if its tenour had been the other way.

The issues involved in the present suit of Ma Pan Nyun are identical with the issues in the earlier suit; and their Lordships are of opinion that in regard to those issues (1) there was in the earlier suit a conflict of interest between Ma Pan Nyun and her brothers; (2) this conflict would necessarily have had to be decided in order to give Ma Sein the relief which she claimed; and (3) the question between Ma Pan Nyun and her brothers (viz., whether she was entitled to any share in her mother's estate) was finally decided.

It follows, therefore, that the plea of res judicata raised in the present litigation ought to have been successful and the suit of Ma Pan Nyun ought, on that ground, to have been dismissed.

For these reasons their Lordships are of opinion that this appeal should be allowed. The decrees of June 7, 1928, December 10, 1928, and April 1, 1930, should be set aside and the decree of November 24, 1927, restored. In regard to costs, the respondent Ma Pan Nyun should pay to the appellant (1) his costs of the appeal No. 9 of 1928; (2) his costs of the suit incurred subsequently to June 7, 1928; (3) his costs of the appeal No. 296 of 1928; and (4) his costs of the appeal before their Lordships' Board. Any costs already paid by the appellant under any former decree in this litigation, should be repaid to him by the person or persons to whom, under such decree, they were payable.

Their Lordships will humbly advise His Majesty accordingly.

Appeal allowed

Cutler, Allingham and Ford—Solicitors for the appellant.

J. E. Lambert—Solicitor for the respondents.

Civil

1932

Feb. 29

Lord Russell of Killowen
Lord Salvesen
Sir Dinshah Mulla

PRAG NARAIN
versus
THE COLLECTOR OF AGRA*

Land Acquisition Act, Secs. 11 and 21—One piece of land (forming part of whole to be acquired)—More than one person interested—To be dealt with in one award—Award apportions compensation between owner and tenants—Tenants had by agreement accepted a lower sum—Whether owner entitled to the extra amount.

Sec. 11 of the Land Acquisition Act does not contemplate that where more than one person is interested in a parcel of land there should be more than one award relating thereto. This does not mean that the whole of the land at any time to be acquired under the Act must necessarily be dealt with in one award; but only that any one piece of land (forming part of the whole) in which more than one person has an interest for which he can claim compensation, ought not to be made the subject of more than one award. Each award should contain within its four corners the fixing of the value of the land with which it deals, and the apportionment of that value between the various persons interested in that land.

Where the compensation for one piece of land (forming part of the whole to be acquired) which was "spotted over with the houses of permanent tenure holders", was apportioned in the award in the proportion of one-fourth to the owner and three-fourths to the tenants, and the tenants had by agreement accepted a lower sum; held, that no objection ever having been made to the award as to apportionment, there was no foundation for the owner's claim to be entitled to the extra amount which the tenants might have received if they had not by agreement accepted three-quarters of a lower valuation. All that the owner could claim was his awarded proportion. The gain was a gain of the municipality which acquired the land. Rohan Lal v. The Collector of Etah, I. L. R. 51 All. 765 approved.

Appeal from a decision of the High Court of Judicature at Allahabad.

Dunne, K.C. and K. V. L. Narasimham for the appellant.

De'Gruyther, K.C. and Jardine for the respondent.

The following judgment was delivered by

Lord Russell of Killowen

Lord Russell of Killowen—This appeal is brought from a judgment of the High Court of Judicature at Allahabad relating to the compensation payable to the appellant under or by virtue of the Land Acquisition Act (I of 1894), which will be referred to as the Act.

The facts require to be stated in some detail for the proper appreciation of the points which are involved.

On July 9, 1923, the land acquisition officer of Agra (called hereinafter the officer) issued a general notice under the Act for the acquisition of a block of land in the city for the purposes of a new police station. The block measured just over 1 acre, and included certain land and houses belonging to the appellant, which were known by the name Katra Nandram, and which amounted in area to some 4,109 sq. yards.

There were 18 claimants to compensation in respect of the entire block of lands, including the appellant and one Dau Dayal. The appellant's claim (as finally amended) was for Rs.3,34,598, made up of

---

*P. C. A. 100 of 1930

Rs.2,46,780 for the land (i.e., at the rate of Rs.60 per sq. yard) and Rs.87,818 for the buildings.

The officer considered the cases of the 18 claimants and heard evidence, the hearing of which ended on December 23, 1923. As to the 16 claimants other than the appellant and Dau Dayal, an agreement was come to as to the amount of compensation payable to each for his interest; but for the purpose of acquiring a title under the Act the officer seems to have drawn up a formal award (dated December 31, 1923) relating to the compensation payable to those 16 applicants.

On January 10, 1924, he made his award, dealing with the claims of the appellant and Dau Dayal. In it he states that agreement had since the hearing been reached with the other claimants, that an award statement regarding them had been drawn up and the amounts paid, and that the present award related to the cases of the appellant and Dau Dayal only. By that award he divided the appellant's land into three zones, to which he attributed different figures, as follows:—1°. Four hundred square yards of land with a street frontage of 120 feet he put at Rs.13 per square yard. 2°. Four hundred and ninety-five square yards, "spotted over with the houses of permanent tenure holders," he put at Rs.6 per square yard; and 3°. the remaining 3,214 square yards, which consisted of the non-frontage land upon which there were no permanent tenure holders, he put at Rs.8 per square yard. These figures worked out at Rs.33,882 for land. For buildings he fixed a figure of Rs.34,537, making a total figure of Rs.68,419. To this sum had to be added the 15 per cent provided for by Section 23 (2) of the Act, so that the total compensation awarded by the officer to the appellant for his interest was Rs.78,682.

It would appear that, so far as concerned the 495 square yards, the sum to be paid to the appellant was reduced from Rs.8 per sq. yard (the full value of the non-frontage land) to Rs.6 per sq. yard owing to the interest therein of the permanent tenure holders.

Both the appellant and Dau Dayal were dissatisfied with the award and applied for a reference to the District Judge under Section 18 of the Act. In the case of the appellant the District Judge affirmed the award of the officer as to the buildings and allowed Rs.34,537. In regard to the land he allowed Rs.20 per sq. yard for all except the 495 sq. yards over which the permanent tenure holders had rights, making a further sum of Rs.72,280. As regards the 495 sq. yards, he only allowed Rs.220 as the capitalised value of the rents (Rs.5 or thereabouts) of which the appellant was in receipt. In addition, he allowed a sum of Rs.1,200 in respect of a claim for loss of rents, making a total sum of Rs.1,08,237 in respect of buildings and land, which with the 15 per cent above-mentioned, resulted in a total sum of Rs.1,24,292 fixed as compensation for the appellant.

From that decision the appellant appealed to the High Court at Allahabad, asking that the full amount of compensation claimed by him be allowed. The High Court allowed the appeal in part and modified the decree of the District Judge to the extent now to be mentioned. As regards the valuation of the land at Rs.20 per sq. yard, they agreed with the District Judge. As to his valuation of the buildings they increased the rate per 100 cubic feet allowed by him. As regards the 495 sq. yards, the High Court considered that the District Judge was not justified in assuming that the appellant's rights in this land were limited to the receipt of Rs.5 per annum. The learned Judges considered that since the appeal to the District Judge only related to amount and not to apportionment, he ought to have accepted the officer's rates of apportionment, viz., one-fourth to the tenants and three-fourths to the appellant. Applying these proportions to the 495 sq. yards, the result would be that the appellant would be entitled to Rs.15 per sq. yard in respect thereof. The appellant in the High Court claimed to be entitled to the whole Rs.20, less only the sums which by agreement had been paid to the tenants and accepted by them, but this contention was disallowed by the High Court. As a result it appeared that the judgment of the High Court involved an addition of Rs.11,231-15-0 to the amount allowed by the decree of the District Judge.

Encouraged no doubt by the knowledge that each of his previous applications has resulted in an increase in his compensation, the appellant has now appealed to His Majesty in Council.

In his case lodged here the only point taken was that the compensation awarded was too low, the valuations placed upon the land and buildings respectively being insufficient in amount. An appeal confined to these contentions had obviously small hope of success. It is well settled that this Board will not review the decree of an Indian Appellate Court merely upon questions of value; and in this connection it will be sufficient to cite the words used by Lord Buckmaster in delivering the judgment of the Board in the case of Narsingh Das v. Secretary of State for India in Council[1]:—

> it has been repeatedly laid down by the Board that in such cases they will not interfere with judgments of the Courts in India as to matters involving valuation of property and similar questions where knowledge of the circumstances and of the district may have an important bearing on the conclusion reached, unless there is something to show, not merely that, on the balance of evidence, it would be possible to reach a different conclusion, but that the judgment cannot be supported as it stands, either by reason of a wrong application of principle or because some important point in the evidence has been overlooked or misapplied.

Counsel for the appellant concentrated upon a different point. He contended that since the High Court had valued the 495 sq. yards at Rs.20 per sq. yard, the whole of the resultant sum of Rs.9,900 belonged to the appellant subject only to the payment thereout of what might be necessary to satisfy the claims of the tenants; and that since the tenants had by agreement accepted a sum amounting to Rs.990 (or Rs.2 per sq. yard), the appellant was entitled to the whole difference between these two sums (viz., Rs.8,910), and not merely to three-quarters of Rs.9,900.

Their Lordships are unable to take this view. Indeed, it appears to them that the possibility of raising such a contention has only arisen from a failure to observe strictly the provisions of the Act.

---

[1] 52 Ind. App. at 135

As their Lordships read the Act, the duty of the Collector under Section 11 of the Act is to make an award in regard to three matters, viz., (1) the area of the land included in the award; (2) the total compensation to be allowed for that land, and (3) the apportionment of that compensation among all the persons interested in that land.

The Act does not appear to contemplate that where more than one person is interested in a parcel of land there should be more than one award relating thereto.

Their Lordships do not by this mean that the whole of the land at any one time to be acquired under the Act must necessarily be dealt with in one award; but only that any one piece of land (forming part of the whole) in which more than one person has an interest for which he can claim compensation, ought not to be made the subject of more than one award. Each award should contain within its four corners the fixing of the value of the land with which it deals, and the apportionment of that value between the various persons interested in that land.

In the present case the difficulty has arisen from the fact that the officer has dealt with the land by two documents, and, so far as the 495 sq. yards are concerned, that particular parcel of land figures in both. Their Lordships, however, think that the two documents (the later of which specifically refers to the earlier) must be read together as constituting one award in relation to that parcel of land, by which the officer awards the compensation to be allowed for that land at a figure of Rs.8 per sq. yard and awards the apportionment of that compensation in the proportion of one-fourth to the appellant and three-fourth to the tenants.

The only objection ever taken by the appellant was to the amount awarded as compensation. No objection was ever made to the award as to apportionment; the apportionment accordingly stands and the appellant must be held bound thereby. There can therefore be no foundation for the appellant's claim to be entitled to the extra amount which the tenants might have received if they had not by agreement accepted three-quarters of a lower valuation. All that the appellant can claim is his awarded proportion of the Rs.20 per sq. yard. The gain is a gain of the Municipality which acquired the land, as it was held to be in the case of Rohan Lal v. The Collector of Etah[2].

The appellant further contended that he had been hardly dealt with in the Courts below as to costs, but their Lordships see no reason for suggesting any alteration of the decrees in this regard.

In the result this appeal fails and should be dismissed with costs. Their Lordships will humbly advise His Majesty accordingly.

Appeal dismissed

Barrow, Rogers and Nevill—Solicitors for the appellant.

Solicitor, India Office—Solicitor for the respondent.

[2] 51 All. 765

HIGH COURT

SHANTILAL

versus

AGHA DOST MOHAMMAD AND OTHERS*

CIVIL

1932

June 22

BANERJI, J.
KING, J.
NIAMATULLAH, J.

Court Fees Act (VII of 1870), Sec. 13—High Court remands case to lower appellate court under Or. 41, R. 23 C. P. C.—Whether appellant entitled to a refund of court-fee paid.

Where a court of second appeal remands a case to the lower appellate court under Or. 41, R. 23 C. P. C., the appellant is entitled under Sec. 13 of the Court Fees Act to a refund of the court-fee paid on the memorandum of appeal.

ORDER on application of applicant.

The following is the Referring Order:—

SEN and NIAMATULLAH, JJ.—The point raised in this case is one of general importance. We do not know whether this point was ever raised in any case before this Court and what decision was arrived at; but the point may very frequently arise. We have not been referred to any decision of this Court. The only case that we have been referred to is a decision in re: Nanak Chand Ram Lal v. Ahmad Din, 1930 A. I. R. Lah. 440. We feel considerable difficulty in endorsing the reasoning in support of the judgment. Section 13 of the Court Fees Act provides for a case where a 'suit' is remanded and not an 'appeal'. It has been contended that the remand of an appeal is virtually the remand of the suit. The applicant invites the aid of Order XLII, and Order III, Rule 4(3) of the Code of Civil Procedure. It is questionable how far it is permissible to refer to these provisions in having to construe Section 13 of the Court Fees Act. Mr. Panna Lal argues that appeal is a proceeding in the suit and points out that a fiscal enactment should be generously construed. In view of the importance of the question, we would refer this case to a larger Bench.

Let the case be put up before the Hon'ble Chief Justice with the recommendation that he may constitute a larger Bench for the hearing of the question.

Panna Lal for the applicant.

U. S. Bajpai (Government Advocate) for the Crown.

The judgment of the Court was delivered by

King, J.

KING, J.—The question of law which has been referred to this Full Bench may be stated as follows:—

When a court of second appeal has remanded a case to the lower appellate court under Order 41, R. 23, Code of Civil Procedure, is the appellant entitled under S. 13 of the Court Fees Act to a refund of the court-fee paid on the memorandum of appeal?

For the purpose of this reference we assume that the remand does not merely purport to have been made under Order 41, R. 23, and that the remand was in fact made on any of the grounds mentioned in Order 41, R. 23.

On this assumption the appellant is clearly entitled to a refund if it is held that the "suit" has been remanded to the lower appellate court.

The word "suit" has not been defined for the purposes of the Court-Fees Act, nor is there any definition of that word in the Code of Civil

---

*Application in S. A. 264 of 1929

Procedure. The argument of the stamp reporter implies that a "suit" terminates when the trial court passes a decree, and that further proceedings by way of appeal are not proceedings in the suit. On this view it is the appeal, and not the suit, which has been remanded to the lower appellate court and consequently S. 13 does not in terms apply. We think that this view gives too narrow a meaning to the word "suit" and that proceedings in appeal may be regarded as proceedings in the suit. When an appeal is admitted against the trial court's decree the suit becomes sub-judice again. The appellate court's decree does no doubt decide the appeal, but it also decides the suit. The appellate court frequently, in so many words, "decrees the suit" or "dismisses the suit" as the case may be. On this view the proceedings in first appeal and in second appeal are merely successive stages of the suit, and the suit does not terminate so long as any appeal is pending.

There are indications in the Court-Fees Act that the word "suit" has been given a wide meaning and that an appeal is treated as a proceeding in a suit.

In Schedule II, Articles 4, 5 and 17 we find the expression "memorandum of appeal in a suit". The appeal may of course be a second appeal. So even a second appeal is spoken of as an "appeal in a suit", implying that it is a proceeding in a suit.

Section 12 (ii) speaks of a suit coming before a court of appeal. This also indicates that in the contemplation of the legislature the appellate court deals with the suit, and that the appeal is only a proceeding in, or stage of, a suit. In Dayal Singh v. Ram Rikha[1] it was expressly held by a Full Bench of the Punjab Chief Court that in Sections 10 (ii) and 12 (ii) of the Court Fees Act the word "suit" includes an appeal, so that the appeal of a defaulting appellant must be dismissed on his failure to make up the deficiency in court-fees when called on to do so. Our own court has, by implication, taken a similar view in Narain Singh v. Chaturbhuj Singh[2] in which it was held that "if it were the appellant who was in fault and failed to pay the full court-fee due from him in the lower court, this Court certainly could stay the hearing of his appeal and, if the deficient fees were not paid, could dismiss his appeal, and no doubt would do so". This decision was approved and followed in the Full Bench ruling, Mohan Lal v. Nand Kishore[3]. There is therefore clear authority for the view that in the Court Fees Act the word "suit" can be given a wide meaning so as to include proceedings in appeal.

There is nothing in the subject or context of Section 13 showing that the word "suit" is to be understood in any specially restricted sense so as not to include a suit at the stage of first appeal. On the contrary it would be anomalous and unreasonable if the court-fee were refundable in the case of remand to the trial court, and not refundable in the case of remand to the lower appellate court assuming of course that the requirements of O. 41, R. 23 are strictly fulfilled in each case.

We hold that the "suit" has been remanded, within the meaning of S. 13 of the Court Fees Act, and the court-fee is refundable if the remand has been made upon the ground mentioned in O. 41, R. 23. Let this answer be laid before the Hon'ble Judge who made the reference.

---

[1] 109 P. R. 1912 [2] I. L. R. 20 All. 362 [3] I. L. R. 28 All. 270

Civil — 1932 — Shantilal v. Agha Dost Mohammad — King, J.

Reference answered

On return of the answer by the Full Bench the original referring judge, Niamatullah, J. delivered the following judgment:—

The question raised by the office report was whether court-fee paid in second appeal should be refunded where the "appeal" is remanded to the lower appellate court under Order XLI, Rule 23, Civil Procedure Code. The matter came before me sitting as a single Judge, and I referred the question to a Division Bench, which in its turn referred it to a Full Bench. It has now been authoritatively laid down by the Full Bench that the court-fee ought to be refunded if the remand is one under XLI, Rule 23 Civil Procedure Code.

The office report is based on the assumption that the remand was one under Order XLI, Rule 23, Civil Procedure Code. The decision of the Full Bench also proceeds on the same assumption. I have examined my order of remand, dated May 13, 1931, and find that though it purports to be one under Order XLI, Rule 23, Civil Procedure Code, it is in fact one under Section 107 or Section 151, Civil Procedure Code. It was not a case in which the lower appellate court had decided the appeal before it on a preliminary point and its decree on that point was reversed in second appeal. It had omitted to comply with the provisions of Order XLI, Rule 27, Civil Procedure Code, in receiving fresh evidence on appeal. The decree appealed from was reversed for that reason, and the appeal remanded to be heard afresh after due compliance with the provisions of Order XLI, Rule 27, in admitting or rejecting the fresh evidence which had been produced in the lower appellate court. Inadvertently I made reference to Order XLI, Rule 23, to distinguish it from a case in which issues for findings are remitted and the appeal is finally to be disposed of by this Court. In substance the order was, as already stated, under Section 107 or Section 151, Civil Procedure Code. In this view, Section 13 of the Court Fees Act is not applicable, though if the remand had been really one under Order XLI, Rule 23, Civil Procedure Code, the appellant would have been entitled to a refund of the court-fee in spite of the fact that the "appeal" as distinguished from "suit" in the narrower sense of the word was remanded. In these circumstances, the court-fee paid in second appeal shall not be refunded.

PRIVY COUNCIL

BRIJ INDAR KUAR (Plaintiff)

versus

JAI INDAR BAHADUR SINGH (Defendant)*

Civil — 1932 — May 9 — Lord Russell of Killowen, Sir George Lowndes, Sir Dinshah Mulla

Civil Procedure Code, Or. 40, R. 1—Decree for payment of annuities—Properties charged with payment—Receiver misappropriates money for payment of annuities—Whether annuitants can enforce charge—Or. 21, R. 1—Judgment-debtor makes payment to receiver—No order of court authorising payment—Payment to receiver at judgment-debtor's risk.

By his will the testator bequeathed the residence of his estate to the respondent, and by his codicil he left annuities to the appellant and other persons, and charged certain properties with the payment of the annuities. All the annuities fell into arrears, and the appellant brought a suit to recover the arrears of the annuity due to her, for the administration of the estate of the testator, and for the appointment of a receiver. The other annuitants were joined as defendants to the suit. A pleader was appointed receiver without security, and ultimately a decree was

---

*P. C. A. 56 of 1930

CIVIL

1932

BRIJ INDAR KUAR
v.
JAI INDAR BAHADUR SINGH

passed declaring the sums due to the appellant and other annuitants. The decree provided that the said sums were to be paid partly by sale of securities in deposit with a Bank and partly from money to be paid into court by the respondent. The decree also provided that all the annuitants were entitled to recover their annuities from the properties charged, and as regards future payments it was directed that they should be made every six months. Subsequently the receiver obtained possession of the securities from the bank and absconded. Having failed to recover the annuity due to her, the appellant presented an application for execution of the decree by sale of the properties charged. Held, (1) that the charge created by the codicil and affirmed by the decree was in no way affected or impaired by the embezzlement of the receiver, and the appellant was entitled to recover the annuity by sale of the properties charged. (2) that in the absence of any order of the court under which the respondent paid or even was authorised to pay the future annuities to the receiver, the respondent paid them to the receiver at his own risk, and the analogy of payment by a judgment-debtor to a bailiff charged with the execution of a warrant of arrest or attachment did not apply.

APPEAL from a decision of the Chief Court of Oudh at Lucknow.

A. M. Dunne, K.C. and Amiend C. D. Jackson for the appellant.

L. De’Gruyther, K.C. and W. Wallach for the respondent.

The following judgment was delivered by

Sir Dinshah Mulla

SIR DINSHAH MULLA—Thakur Rajindra Bahadur Singh died on October 18, 1912, leaving a will dated June 14, 1907, and a codicil dated October 4, 1912. By his will he bequeathed the residue of his estate to his nephew, who is the respondent before this Board. By his codicil he left a monthly sum of Rs.200 to the appellant, Rs.500 to his widow, Rs.300 to another daughter and Rs.30 to a female servant, and charged certain properties with the payment of the annuities.

All the annuities fell into arrears, and on January 30, 1920, the appellant, who was then a minor, brought the suit out of which the present appeal arises against the respondent to recover the arrears of the annuity due to her, for the administration of the estate of the testator, and for the appointment of a receiver. The other annuitants were joined as defendants to the suit.

Two other suits were also filed, one by the appellant's sister and the other by the servant, to recover the arrears of the annuities due to them.

All three suits were heard by the District Judge of Lucknow, and on October 14, 1922, a preliminary decree was passed for the administration of the estate. Babu Brijmohan Dayal, a pleader of the Court, was appointed receiver without security, with power to sell the properties, and a scheme was framed for the payment of past as well as future annuities to all the four annuitants. A schedule of the properties charged with the payment of the annuities was appended to the decree.

Against this decree the respondent appealed to the Court of the Judicial Commissioner of Oudh, proposing an alternative scheme for the payment of the arrears, which up to October 18, 1923, had amounted to Rs.73,950-8-0, and for the payment of future annuities. The Judicial Commissioner considered that the scheme was reasonable, and passed a

CIVIL
1932
BRIJ INDAR KUAR
v.
JAI INDAR BAHADUR SINGH
Sir Dinshah Mulla

decree on December 13, 1923, declaring that the appellant was entitled to Rs.26,400 for arrears up to October 18, 1923, and to a further payment of Rs.200 per month for her life, and providing for the payment of the Rs.73,950-8-0 out of two sums, one of Rs.47,668-15-6, being the aggregate of four of the items specified in the schedule to the decree, and the other of Rs.26,281-8-6 which the respondent was ordered to pay into Court to make up the Rs.73,950-8-0. The four items referred to above were:—

Rs. 3,493 0 0	Estimated value of cattle in the possession of the receiver.
Rs. 27,929 4 7	Represented by War Bonds purchased out of Rs.20,000 paid into Court by the Court of Wards under a decree for Rs.1,00,000, and deposited for safe custody with the Allahabad Bank, Lucknow.
Rs. 1,746 10 11	Price of cattle sold by receiver.
Rs. 14,500 0 0	Government promissory notes also deposited with the Allahabad Bank.
Rs. 47,668 15 6

It would appear that the respondent was restrained by an injunction from realising the decree for Rs.1,00,000 against the Court of Wards. It was directed by the decree that if the respondent paid into Court Rs.26,281-8-6 and executed certain hypothecation deeds on or before March 12, 1924, the injunction should be dissolved, otherwise the appeal should be dismissed. The decree also contained a clause providing that "all the annuitants shall be entitled to recover their annuities from the properties" specified in the decree. As regards future payments, it was directed that they should be made every six months instead of every month.

The respondent paid the Rs.26,281-8-6 into Court, and filed the hypothecation deeds within the time fixed by the Court, and the injunction was removed by an order made on March 18, 1924.

Subsequently the receiver complained to the Court that no cattle had come into his possession, nor had any been received by him, and that the value of the War Bonds and the Notes had been over-estimated. Thereupon the respondent undertook to pay into Court the two cattle items and the deficiency, if any, that might arise on a sale of the securities.

In July, 1924, the receiver obtained possession of the securities from the Allahabad Bank, and he absconded in September, 1925. It is not known what he did with the securities, nor is it known how much he paid to the other annuitants.

After several fruitless attempts to recover the annuity due to her, the appellant presented an application to the District Judge on April 5, 1928, for execution of the decree by sale of the properties charged with the payment of the annuities under the decree. She stated that, in addition to the Rs.26,400 awarded to her by the decree, a further sum of Rs.3,600 had become due to her from October 19, 1923, up to April 18, 1925, and that nothing had been paid to her. She also complained that the respondent had failed to pay into Court the several sums which he had undertaken to pay.

To this the respondent filed a reply raising various contentions as regards his undertaking. He also alleged that he had paid to the receiver three six-monthly instalments of Rs.6,180, Rs.6,000 and Rs.6,180 on account of annuities due from October 19, 1923, to April 18, 1925, and contended that if the receiver misappropriated the money and the securities, the loss should be borne by the appellant and the other annuitants.

The District Judge found against the respondent on all points, and by his order dated July 4, 1928, he directed execution to issue.

Against this order the respondent appealed to the Chief Court of Oudh. The learned Judge agreed with the District Judge that the respondent had failed to carry out his undertaking, but they held, differing from him, that the payment by the respondent of the three sums to the receiver was proved. The question as to who should suffer for the receiver's defalcations was, they thought, one of great importance, and they referred the following question to a Full Bench:—

> Where the judgment-debtor is proved to have paid money, due from him under a decree passed by the Court, to the Receiver appointed by the Court for realising certain sums of money and making payments to the decree-holder or decree-holders, or other money or property is proved to have come to his hands and the Receiver is found to have misappropriated the money and the property, on whom should the loss fall? Should the loss fall on the judgment-debtor or on the judgment-creditor?

The answer given by the Full Bench was that the loss should be borne by the judgment creditor, that is, the appellant.

After receipt of the opinion the learned Judges delivered their judgment. They held that, having regard to the opinion of the Full Bench, the only liability of the respondent was to pay what he had undertaken to pay into Court, which they fixed at Rs.13,621-14-10. Accordingly, they passed a decree on March 1, 1929, declaring that the respondent was liable to pay Rs.13,621-14-10, out of which the appellant was entitled to only a proportionate share, based apparently on the supposition that the other annuitants were in like case with the appellant, as to which there was no evidence. They also directed that unless the respondent paid the amount into Court on or before June 1, 1929, a sufficient portion of the properties should be attached and sold, but they seem to have given no direction as to the disposal of the sale proceeds in that event. From this decree the appellant has brought the present appeal to His Majesty in Council.

It was urged before their Lordships on behalf of the appellant that the charge created by the decree was not affected by the defalcations of the receiver, and that no payment having been made to her, she was entitled to be paid the full amount claimed by her out of the properties charged with the payment of the annuities. On the other hand, the respondent contended that except in respect of Rs.13,621-14-10, which the Appellate Court had ordered him to pay, the charge had been satisfied and the properties freed from all liability to the appellant except for future instalments of her annuity. Their Lordships are unable to accede to this contention. In their opinion, the charge created by the codicil and affirmed by the decree was in no way affected or impaired by the embezzlement of the receiver. The decree provides in express terms that all the annuitants are entitled to recover their annuities from the properties charged. The appellant has admittedly received no part of the annuity due to her. She is, therefore, entitled to recover it by sale of the properties, and that is all she has asked. She makes no claim against the respondent personally.

As regards the three half-yearly instalments, their Lordships think that it is clear that the respondent paid them to the receiver at his own-risk. Counsel for the respondent have been unable to point to any order of the Court under which the respondent paid or even was authorised to pay these sums to the receiver, and it would be impossible to hold that he was the agent of the appellant with authority to receive payment on her behalf.

The analogy relied on by the Full Bench of payment by a judgment-debtor to a bailiff charged with the execution of a warrant of arrest or attachment is fallacious, as every such warrant empowers the bailiff in express terms to receive payment from the judgment-debtor.

Their Lordships cannot conclude this judgment without referring to what seems to have been a grave dereliction of duty on the part of the Court which appointed the receiver in this case. It may be that under the Civil Procedure Code the Court has discretion to appoint a receiver without security, but it should obviously be done only in the most exceptional circumstances. In the present case all the parties to the suit, except the respondent, were females, and the appellant was until recently a minor. Under such circumstances their Lordships are unable to understand upon what ground the receiver could have been appointed without giving adequate security, and have been allowed to have the apparently unfettered control of money and securities to a large amount. Their Lordships think that the matter should be taken into consideration by the Chief Court and some very definite means devised whereby the recurrence of such a blot on the administration of justice may be avoided.

In the result their Lordships will humbly advise His Majesty that this appeal should be allowed, that the decree of the Chief Court dated March 1, 1929, should be set aside, and the order of the District Judge dated July 4, 1928, restored, subject to the variation that the properties should not be sold if the respondent pays Rs.30,000 into the Chief Court within eight weeks from the date of the service upon him of a copy of the Order in Council. The respondent must pay the costs of the appellant in the Chief Court and before this Board.

Their Lordships granted a petition of the appellant for the admission of further documents. The respondent must also pay the appellant's costs of this petition and the supplemental record.

Appeal allowed

James, Gray and Son—Solicitors for the appellant.
T. L. Wilson and Co.—Solicitors for the respondent.

CIVIL

1932

June 15

MUKERJI, J.
BENNET, J.

SECRETARY OF STATE FOR INDIA IN COUNCIL (Defendant)

versus

BHAGWAN PRASAD (Plaintiff)*

Land Acquisition Act (I of 1894), Secs. 19 and 18—Application under Sec. 18 barred by time—Collector makes reference to civil court—Whether civil court can entertain plea of limitation—Board Circulars I—VIII, Para 28, Note 2.

Where a 'person interested' who has not accepted the award, makes a time-barred application to the Collector under Sec. 18, Land Acquisition Act, that the matter be referred to the civil court, and the Collector makes the reference; held, on objection by the Secretary of State, that the civil court had no power to entertain the plea of limitation. The principle laid down by Board Circulars I—VIII, Para 28, Note 2, that the collector cannot refuse to make a reference, even if it is time-barred and that his duty is to bring the matter to the notice of the civil court is founded on a misconception of law. Secretary of State for India v. Bhagwan Prashad, [1929] A. L. J. 1186 followed. Ahmad Ali Khan v. Secretary of State, A. I. R. [1932] Oudh 180 not followed.

FIRST APPEAL from a decree of MAULVI MUHAMMAD TAQI KHAN, Subordinate Judge of Mirzapur.

U. S. Bajpai for the appellant.

N. Upadhiya for the respondent.

The judgment of the Court was delivered by

Bennet, J.

BENNET, J.—This is a first appeal by the Secretary of State for India against an order of the learned Subordinate Judge of Mirzapur under the Land Acquisition Act awarding a certain sum as further compensation to the applicant. The point which has been urged before us is "that the suit as brought by the plaintiff-respondent is barred by six months' limitation as provided in Section 18(2) of the Land Acquisition Act" and, secondly, "that the appellant is not estopped from pleading limitation even after the reference made by the Collector to the civil court for adjudication". The language quoted is that of the appellant, but it is obvious that the matter was not a suit but an application.

The facts of the present case are that the Land Acquisition Officer made an award on June 14, 1923. The applicant was absent and was not represented at the time. Accordingly, under S. 18(2)(b) of the Land Acquisition Act, the application should have been made "within six weeks of the receipt of the notice from the Collector under Section 12, Sub-section (2) or within six months from the date of the Collector's award, whichever period shall first expire". Notice was served on the applicant on January 18, 1924 and his objection was filed on February 12, 1924. He therefore complied with the term of six weeks from receipt of the notice, but he did not comply with the term of six months from the date of the Collector's award. The application therefore was barred by limitation under the proviso quoted. The Land Acquisition officer did not notice this point and he forwarded the reference to the civil court in the

---

*F. A. 397 of 1928 (Connected with 398 of 1928)

CIVIL

1932

SECRETARY OF STATE FOR INDIA IN COUNCIL v. BHAGWAN PRASAD

Bennet, J.

ordinary way. When the reference came before the civil court, on behalf of Government, the point was taken that the application was barred under S. 18 (2) of the Land Acquisition Act. The Court dismissed this objection. It is again taken in appeal. As far as this Court is concerned, the matter has been decided by a Bench in The Secretary of State for India in Council v. Bhagwan Prasad[1], in which it was held by a Bench of which one of us was a member that when a reference had been made under the Land Acquisition Act, it was not open to the Collector or the Secretary of State to say that the reference was wrongly made although the ground for saying so may be that the application by the owner was belated. The "Court" does not sit on appeal over the Collector and the Act does not give any authority to the "court", either in express terms or by implication, to go behind the reference and to see whether the Collector acted rightly or wrongly. It is the province of the Collector alone to decide for himself whether he should make the reference or refuse to do so.

Various rulings on the subject had been considered in that case and there is no need for us to consider them again. We are in agreement with the principles of law laid down in that case. The only new case that has been brought to our notice is the one of the Oudh Chief Court in Ahmad Ali Khan Alawi v. The Secretary of State[2] in which it has been held that the land acquisition officer cannot refuse to make a reference, even if it is time-barred and that his duty is to bring the matter to the notice of the court. We note that that is the principle which is laid down by Board Circulars I—VIII, Para 28, Note 2. In our opinion, this direction of the Board Circulars is founded on a misconception of law. We also note that the ruling of 27 A. L. J. 1186 was not mentioned in the recent case in the Oudh Chief Court. We dismiss this appeal with costs.

Appeal dismissed

---

[1] 27 A. L. J. 1186

[2] A. I. R. 1932 Oudh 180

RAM RATAN AND NANHWAN

versus

KING-EMPEROR*

CRIMINAL

1932

June 10

BANERJI, J.
KING, J.

Criminal Procedure Code, Sec. 366—Judgment—Delivered after vacating office of Sessions Judge—Conviction bad.

Where the Sessions Judge, delivered judgment in a criminal case a few hours after he had made over charge of his office to his successor, held, that he had no jurisdiction to deliver judgment and therefore the conviction was bad, and the case should be re-tried.

CRIMINAL APPEAL from an order of PANDIT KANHAIYA LAL NAGAR, Sessions Judge of Banda.

Krishna Murari Lal for the appellants.

U. S. Bajpai (Government Advocate) for the Crown.

The judgment of the Court was delivered by

King, J.

KING, J.—A preliminary point has been raised that Mr. Kanhaiya Lal Nagar, at the time of delivering judgment, had no jurisdiction as Sessions

*Cr. A. 206 of 1932

Judge and therefore the convictions and sentences are illegal. We have called for a report from Mr. Kanhaiya Lal Nagar. He states that he made over charge of the office of the Sessions and Subordinate Judge, Banda on the forenoon of February 25, 1932 and he delivered judgment in this case on the forenoon of the same day, so far as he recollects. He states that when he signed the charge-sheet the judgment was ready and only a fair copy was being typed. He delivered the judgment as soon as it was ready, after the charge-sheet had been signed.

We also have an affidavit sworn by Mr. Kutbuddin Ahmad, a pleader of Banda, who was engaged by the Crown to represent the two accused persons in the Sessions trial. He positively asserts that judgment in this case was delivered by Mr. Kanhaiya Lal Nagar between 1 and 2 P.M. on February 25, 1932. He gives further details which show that he has a distinct memory of the occurrences of that day. Mr. Kidwai, I. C. S. took over charge of the office of the Sessions and Subordinate Judge, Banda, on the forenoon of that date between 10 A.M. and 11 A.M. and actually heard some appeals on the bench between 11 A.M. and 1 P.M. It was after Mr. Kidwai rose for lunch at 1 P.M. that Mr. Kanhaiya Lal Nagar occupied the seat vacated by Mr. Kidwai and delivered judgment in this case. We must take it that this represents what actually took place and that the judgment was in fact delivered after 1 P.M. on February 25. It follows that Mr. Kanhaiya Lal Nagar had vacated the office of Sessions and Subordinate Judge, Banda before the time when he delivered judgment in the case. In our opinion, therefore, he had no jurisdiction to deliver judgment and the convictions and sentences are bad.

It seems clearly necessary that there should be a re-trial as the case is a very important one and clearly there must be a prima facie case against the accused persons. We therefore set aside the convictions and sentences and order that the case be re-tried by the Sessions Judge of Banda. The accused shall remain in custody pending the trial.

Conviction quashed
Retrial ordered

CRIMINAL
1932
June 2
KING, J.

KING-EMPEROR
versus
RAJA RAM AND ANOTHER*

Criminal Procedure Code, Sec. 337, Sub-sec. (2A)—Interpretation of—Whether approver must be committed to session.

Sec. 337, Sub-sec. (2A) of the Criminal Procedure Code means that where a pardon has been granted to one accused who has been examined as a witness, then the case against the other accused must be committed to session if a prima facie case against the latter is established and not tried by the magistrate himself. The Sub-section cannot be reasonably interpreted to mean that the approver must be committed for trial to the court of session.

Bhagwan v. Emperor, A. I. R. 1929 (Oudh) 190 followed.

CRIMINAL REFERENCE made by R. DAYAL ESQ., Sessions Judge of Mirzapur.

---

*Cr. Ref. 391 of 1932

CRIMINAL

1932

KING-EMPEROR v. RAJA RAM

King, J.

M. Waliullah (Assistant Government Advocate) for the Crown.

The opposite parties were not represented.

The following judgment was delivered by

KING, J.—This is a reference by the learned Sessions Judge of Mirzapur recommending that the commitment of two persons for trial under Section 395 I. P. C. be quashed.

It appears that Poghai and others were charged with dacoity under Section 395 I. P. C. and the District Magistrate tendered a pardon to two of the accused, namely, Raja Ram and Tulshi under Section 337 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. They were examined as witnesses in the court of the committing magistrate. The committing magistrate has committed not merely the accused persons to the court of session but has also committed the two approvers Raja Ram and Tulshi after framing charges against them. The committing magistrate was clearly under a misapprehension regarding the meaning of Sub-section 2A of Section 337. The magistrate interpreted Sub-section 2A to mean that he must commit the approvers for trial to the court of session as well as the other persons who are accused in the case. The language of this Sub-section has given rise to some misunderstanding, but its meaning has been explained in the case of Bhagwan v. Emperor[1] in which it was held that the meaning of Section 337, Sub-section (2A) is simply that where a pardon has been granted to one accused who has been examined as a witness, then the case against the other accused must be committed to session if a prima facie case against the latter is established, and not tried by the magistrate himself. I have no doubt that this interpretation is correct. The Sub-section cannot be reasonably interpreted to mean that the approver must be committed for trial to the court of session. The language of the Proviso to Section 339, Sub-section (1) confirms this view.

I accordingly accept the reference, set aside the commitment of Raja Ram and Tulshi and set aside the charges which have been framed against them.

Reference accepted

---

[1] A. I. R. 1929 (Oudh) 190

CIVIL

1932

June 10

YOUNG, J.

EDNA MAY OLIVIA HARDLESS (Petitioner)

versus

HAROLD RICHARD HARDLESS (Respondent)*

Legal Practitioner—When cannot appear for the other party—Definite retainer with a fee paid or relevant confidential information conveyed.

In order to prevent counsel appearing for the other party, he must have a definite retainer with a fee paid or he must have had such confidential information from one of the parties as would make it improper for him to appear for the other party.

Where in a suit by the wife for dissolution of marriage on the ground of adultery, the husband put in a petition praying that an order should be made prohibiting one C, a Barrister-at-Law, from appearing for the wife on the ground that he had conveyed confidential information to him in a

---

*Matrimonial suit 1 of 1932

CIVIL

1932

EDNA MAY OLIVIA HARDLESS v. HAROLD RICHARD HARDLESS

letter; and the letter merely referred to complaints that he had against his wife and he desired to take action so that he might obtain custody of the children but he did not definitely engage counsel's services, held, that there was nothing in the letter which would prejudice the husband if counsel appeared for the wife.

ORDER on application of Harold Richard Hardless.

K. O. Carleton and O. M. Chiene for the petitioner.

Saila Nath Mukerji and N. C. Ganguli for the respondent.

The following judgment was delivered by

Young, J.

YOUNG, J.—This is a petition by the respondent alleging that on December 24, 1931 he wrote a letter to Capt. Carleton, Barrister-at-Law, who now appears for the petitioner, engaging him in the case and giving him confidential information which might prejudice the respondent if Capt. Carleton continued to act for the petitioner. He asks that an order should be made prohibiting Capt. Carleton from appearing in the case. I have read the letter of December 24, and there is nothing whatever in the letter which would prejudice the respondent if Capt. Carleton appears for the petitioner. The petition is for dissolution of marriage on the ground of adultery. There is nothing in the letter alluding to the respondent's defence upon this charge. He merely refers to complaints that he has against his wife and he desired to take action so that he might obtain custody of the children. The letter did not definitely engage counsel's services. Capt. Carleton offered a consultation to the respondent in reply to this letter, but he thereafter sent a telegram cancelling the appointment and suggesting the next day instead, that is, January 3. The respondent did not answer the telegram or keep the appointment. He, thereafter, in the month of March, engaged a pleader of Chunar to act for him in the matter of the custody of his children. Capt. Carleton was thereupon engaged by the petitioner for the divorce suit.

This is an absurd petition. A great deal has to take place before counsel can be said to be engaged by a party to a suit, so that it would be unprofessional for him to appear on the other side. In order to prevent counsel appearing for the other party, he must have a definite retainer with a fee paid or he must have had such confidential information from one of the parties as would make it improper for him to appear for the other party. Nothing of this sort has occurred here. There is nothing of a confidential nature in the letter of December 24 which would prejudice the respondent if Capt. Carleton appears for the petitioner. If this sort of letter acted as a bar to counsel appearing for the opposite party, nothing would be simpler for a prospective litigant than to write to all the leading counsel in the court a letter such as this. He need not have the slightest intention of engaging any of them. The petition is rejected.

Petition rejected

CIVIL

1932

June 1

SULAIMAN, C. J.
BANERJI, J.

SAGHIR FATMA BIBI AND ANOTHER (Defendants)
versus
BRIJ RAJ SINGH AND ANOTHER (Plaintiffs)*

Pre-emption Act, Sec. 22—Property jointly purchased by two defendants—Right of pre-emption against one only—Pre-emption suit—Defendants cannot go behind sale-deed and set up a secret arrangement defining their shares—Suit to be decreed as against both.

Where property is jointly purchased by two persons against one of whom only there is a right of pre-emption and the sale deed does not specify their shares, they cannot go behind the sale deed and set up a secret arrangement defining their shares, and the right of pre-emption can be claimed as against both.

Sheopujan v. Bishnath, 1930 A. L. J. 842 distinguished.

SECOND APPEAL from a decree of R. K. AGHA ESQ., District Judge of Allahabad, confirming a decree of BABU HARDEO SINGH, Munsif of East Allahabad.

Zafar Mehdi and Hyder Mehdi for the appellants.

P. L. Banerji and N. Upadhiya for the respondents.

The judgment of the Court was delivered by

Sulaiman, C. J.

SULAIMAN, C. J.—This is a defendants' appeal arising out of a suit for pre-emption. The sale deed was taken by the two defendants jointly and there was no specification of any share in the document itself. One of them is supposed by the lower appellate court to be a co-sharer and the other is a stranger. In fact the former is an exproprietary tenant. They led oral evidence to show that under a secret arrangement between themselves they had taken the property in equal shares and accordingly pleaded that the suit should not be decreed against both the purchasers.

A second appeal has been preferred not by the tenant purchaser but by them jointly. He has again associated with him a stranger to the mahal and has made common cause with her. Strong reliance is based on behalf of the appellants on the case of Sheopujan v. Bishnath[1]. That was quite a different case. There an ostensible vendee, after taking the sale-deed, disclosed in the revenue court that he had associated with him three other persons who had paid the consideration and who had purchased the property to the extent of one-fourth share each. When the suit was brought by the plaintiff against all the four persons, Sheopujan acquired a small share by way of gift and claimed that the whole suit should fail. The plaintiff was allowed by the court to set up the admission of the defendant himself that he had joined with him other strangers to the mahal and that accordingly the whole claim could not be dismissed on account of the gift but that the plaintiff could only be compelled to give up his one-fourth share only. It was pointed out by the Bench that the plaintiff not being a party to the sale-deed, there was nothing to prevent him from establishing a fraud committed by Sheopujan who took the sale-deed in his own name, although there had been a secret arrangement between him and

---

*S. A. 1437 of 1930

[1] [1930] A. L. J. 842

Civil

1932

Saghir Fatma Bibi v. Brij Raj Singh

Sulaiman, C. J.

three other associates to purchase the property together and to pay the price thereof in proportion of their respective shares. That principle would not apply to the converse case where, although the plaintiff is suing to pre-empt the entire property, the defendants set up a secret arrangement by which they allege that there was an understanding that their shares would be specified. We think that they cannot be allowed to go behind the sale-deed which shows that the property was jointly acquired. Under Section 22 of the Agra Pre-emption Act where property is jointly purchased or forclosed by two persons against one of whom only there is a right of pre-emption, such right may be claimed as against both. The explanation added to that Section says that this Section does not apply where such purchaser acquires a defined interest. The defendants cannot be allowed to set up a specific share when it does not find a place in the sale-deed. The appeal is accordingly dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed

Civil

1932

May 20

Sulaiman, C. J.
Mukerji, J.

MAHADEO PRASAD AND ANOTHER (Defendants)
versus
SARJU PRASAD AND OTHERS (Plaintiffs)*

Damages—Defendant digs trench near foundation of kutcha house of plaintiff—Rain water accumulates in trench and percolates into plaintiff's ground—Damage caused to plaintiff's wall—Whether plaintiff entitled to recover damages.

Where the defendant digs a trench on his own land but adjoining the wall of the plaintiff's kutcha house, and by failing properly to cover it, permits rain water to accumulate in the trench in such quantities that it naturally percolates through the soil into the plaintiff's ground, so that damage is caused to the plaintiff's wall, the plaintiff is entitled to recover damages from the defendant.

Mohanlal Maganlal Sha v. Bai Jivkore, I. L. R. 28 Bom. 472 dissented from; Broder v. Saillard, [1876] 2 Ch. D. 692 and Whalley v. The Lancashire and Yorkshire Ry. Co., [1884] 13 Q. B. D. 131 relied on.

APPEAL under Section 10 of the Letters Patent, from a judgment of the HON'BLE MR. JUSTICE YOUNG.

N. P. Asthana and Shabd Saran for the appellants.

Shiva Prasad Sinha for the respondents.

The following judgment was delivered by

Young, J

YOUNG, J.—This is a second appeal from the court of the Additional Subordinate Judge of Allahabad. The plaintiff brought the suit for damages.

They alleged that the defendants had dug a trench on their own land, but adjoining the wall of the plaintiffs, so that the foundations of the plaintiffs' house were uncovered, and it being the rainy season, rain had accumulated in the trench and had percolated into and under the foundations of the plaintiffs' house, so that damage had been caused to the walls and floors of their house. The lower appellate court came to a conclusion in law that the defendants were not liable; but failed to come to a conclusion on the facts of the case. The plaintiffs have appealed. I remanded the case to the lower appellate court for findings on the questions of fact which arose in the case. Those findings have now been returned. The lower appellate court has found in fact that damage to the extent of Rs.200 was caused to the plaintiffs by the accumulation of rain water in the trench dug by the defendants, that the trench had been dug to the depth of from 4 to 6 feet and was in some places deeper than the foundations of the plaintiffs' wall, and that no proper precautions had been taken by the defendants to prevent rain water from accumulating in the trench. No question arises in this case as regards the removal of the lateral support to the plaintiffs' land.

---

*L. P. A. 38 of 1931

On the findings of fact, which are binding upon this Court, the question arises as to the legal liability of the defendants. This raises an interesting question of law.

There does not appear to be any authority on this point in this High Court. The Bombay High Court, however, on precisely similar facts, has come to the conclusion that the defendant would not be liable. See Mohanlal Maganlal Sha v. Bai Jivkore[1]. However, the Madras High Court has doubted the decision in the Bombay case, and for reason which I shall hereafter give, I am, with great respect, of the opinion that that case was wrongly decided.

It is contended on behalf of the defendants that a man may do anything he likes with his own land so long as he is using the land for a proper purpose, and if in that user of his land he does anything which occasions damages to the proprietor of neighbouring land, he is not liable; that is, taking the facts of this case, that any owner of land may dig a trench which may entirely uncover the foundations of his neighbour's house, leave that trench unguarded so that in the rainy season the trench may become filled with water to such an extent that his neighbour's house may be completely destroyed and yet he would be under no liability for the damage thus caused. This seems to me to be an extraordinary proposition, which I could only support on the clearest possible authority. The defendants' contention is based upon the distinction drawn in the well known case of Rylands and Fletcher between the natural and non-natural user of property. It is said that Rylands and Fletcher lays down that so long as there is a natural user of property the owner of that property may do anything he likes on that property, even although his act occasions damage to his neighbour. However, it has never yet been defined in any case of which I have knowledge what is a natural and what is not a natural user of land. Is it a natural use of land to build a house upon it? In one sense it undoubtedly would be. But equally there could be no more natural use of land than putting cattle to graze upon it; yet it has been held that if cattle so placed upon land stray, and do damage to neighbouring property the owner of the land is responsible. In my opinion, from a consideration of the authorities, a natural user of land in the rule in Rylands and Fletcher is confined to the use of the land in its natural condition with the exception perhaps of those cases which deal with mining operations, to which different considerations apply. Where any alteration is made from the normal in land, in my opinion, the owner of that land is liable for any damage which may accrue to his neighbour, if there has been want of care by the land-owner in making the alteration. In my opinion, the rule in Rylands and Fletcher has really no application in a case of this sort. The ordinary rule of law "sic utere tuo ut alienum non laedas" applies to and governs this case. This principle has been applied in England in two cases which were decided after Rylands and Fletcher. They are Broder v. Saillard[2] and Hurdman v. The North Eastern Railway Co.[3]. In the former case there was some made earth, that is, a heap of earth not naturally there, but which had been placed there by the defendants or their predecessors-in-title near to the plaintiff's house. That earth collected water, which in due course caused dampness in the plaintiff's house. The Master of Rolls in his judgment came to the conclusion that the plaintiff must succeed. He says at page 700:—"But however it comes, (i.e., water), if it comes through an artificial work which collects it, in the nature of a large artificial sponge, which absorbs it and keeps it together until it oozes out by reason of the nature of the sponge, it appears to me, I have to say, that an artificial work, a work made by men, is a work which if it causes a nuisance is a thing for which the owner of the land is responsible". It might have been argued in that case, that the defendants had made a perfectly natural use of their own land; but apparently it was not thought useful to advance any such argument. In the second case alluded to above the facts were that the surface of the defendant's land had been artificially raised by earth placed upon it, that rain had fallen and been absorbed by the earth and that because of that the rain water had percolated through the wall of the plaintiff's house and caused damage. The Court of Appeal decided in that case that an action would lie. Lord Justice Cotton in his judgment approved of the decision in Broder v. Saillard and laid it down: that "If any one by artificial erection on his land causes water, even though arising from natural rainfall only, to pass into his neighbour's land and thus substantially to interfere with his enjoyment, he will be liable to an action at the suit of him who is so injured". The learned Lord Justice distinguishes this case from those cases dealing with mines. It might be suggested that there is a further distinction in the mine cases, namely, that the plaintiff in those cases had altered the natural condition of the land himself by excavating the minerals, and therefore that he might be said to have brought the damage upon his own head. A mine owner might guard himself against percolation of water from a neighbouring mine by leaving sufficient barriers of coal between the two mines. If he likes, on the other hand, to take away in the course of his mining operations all the coal in seams, he cannot complain if his neighbour does the same. Lord Justice Cotton in this case laid it down that if a person by artificial means allowed things in themselves inoffensive to pass into a neighbour's property to the prejudice of his enjoyment thereof, then he would be liable for the damage occasioned. The digging of a trench, as in the case under discussion, is undoubtedly artificial. There is no difference in principle between an artificial erection and an artificial excavation. In both instances the legal maxim alluded

---

[1] I. L. R. 28 Bom. 472

[2] [1876] 2 Ch. D. 692

[3] [1878] 3 C. P. D. 168

CIVIL
1932
MAHADEO PRASAD
v.
SARJU PRASAD
Young, J.

to above would apply. See also Whalley v. The Lancashire and Yorkshire Railway Co.[4]. My opinion, therefore, is that if a land-owner digs a trench, and by failing properly to cover it, permits water to accumulate in the trench in such quantities that it naturally percolates through the soil into his neighbour's ground and damage is caused thereby, he is responsible for all the damage so caused. There can be no doubt in this case that the defendants were negligent in not taking care in a period such as the rains in India to cover up their trench and that the defendants' negligence was the occasion of the damage to the plaintiffs' house. The defendants could have prevented the damage and they owed a duty to the plaintiffs to take care. Under the ordinary law of tort the plaintiffs are entitled to recover from the defendants the damage so caused. The appeal is allowed and judgment will be entered for the plaintiffs for the sum of Rs.200 with costs.

The judgment of the Court was delivered by

Mukerji, J.

MUKERJI, J.—This is an appeal against the judgment of a learned single Judge of this Court. It was held by the learned Judge that where a neighbour digs a trench in the rainy season near the foundation of a kutcha house owned by the plaintiff, and rain water accumulates in the trench, with the result that the foundation of the plaintiff's kutcha wall collapses, the plaintiff is entitled to recover damages from the defendant. We are of opinion that the decision is very sound, and we have nothing to add to the judgment of the learned single Judge. The use of the land by the defendant was not ordinary use. He might have dug the trench, but it was his duty to prevent the rain water from accumulating in the trench. His failure to do so was negligence for which he must be held responsible, and this has been found as a fact. We dismiss the appeal with costs.

Appeal dismissed

---

[4] [1884] 13 Q. B. D. 131

MAHABALI PRASAD (Applicant)

versus

H. N. PALMER (Opposite party)[*]

CIVIL
1932
April 1
BOYS, J.
YOUNG, J.

Hire-purchase—Contract of hire with option of purchase on payment of instalments in full—Hirer has no option to terminate contract—Whether agreement amounts to 'hire-purchase'—Test.

An agreement whereby the plaintiff agrees to hire to the defendant certain goods at a certain rate with a condition that if so many months instalments are paid the property in the goods passes to the hirer and nowhere in the agreement is the defendant given the option to terminate the hiring, and the agreement further provides that if the defendant fails to pay hire in any one month in advance the whole transaction will be treated purely on the 'hire system'. Held, that the whole tenor of the agreement is that of a 'purchase' and not 'hire-purchase' and the plaintiff is entitled only to that part of the purchase price which has not been paid.

The distinguishing mark of a true hire-purchase agreement, as distinguished from a sale, is that the hirer should have a right to terminate the

---

[*] Civ. Rev. 442 of 1931

CIVIL

1932

MAHABALI PRASAD v. H. N. PALMER

agreement at his pleasure; and the distinguishing mark of an agreement which is a sale and not a hire-purchase agreement, is that the 'hirer' should be bound to pay the full value of the goods by way of instalments without any option to cancel the agreement. In each case, the substance of the transaction or agreement must be looked at and not mere words. Lee v. Butler, [1893] 2 Q. B. D. 318, Helby v. Mathews, [1895] A. C. 471 and Bhimji N. Dalal v. The Bombay Trust Corporation Ltd., 54 Bom. 381 relied on.

CIVIL REVISION from an order of J. K. DAR ESQ., Judge of Small Cause Court, Allahabad.

I. B. Banerji for the applicant.

Jawahar Lal for the opposite party.

The judgment of the Court was delivered by

Young, J.

YOUNG, J.—This is an application in revision from the judgment of the Small Cause Court Judge of Allahabad. The plaintiff brought a suit for the recovery of money due under what he alleged to be a hire agreement, whereby the defendant agreed to hire certain coir matting. He claimed Rs.150 as hire. An agreement was entered into between the plaintiffs on September 30, 1928, in the following terms:—

> Received from Mahabalee and Son the undermentioned articles on hire valued at Rs.92-8-0 (Ninety two annas eight) only, and I do hereby agree to pay to Mahabalee and Son at their business premises at Allahabad the sum of Rs.9-4-0 (nine annas four) only as monthly hire of the articles month by month in advance (part of a month charged for entire month) on the following terms:—
>
> (1) To have the articles in my custody, and not to remove, sell, pawn or mortgage them without the proprietor's previous consent in writing and to keep them in good order (fair wear and tear will only be accepted, and damage by fire or any other cause and breakage will be at the hirer's risk) and at any time to allow an employee of the said firm to inspect the articles.
>
> (2) That if I pay ten (10) months hire regularly in advance at Rs.9-4-0 (nine annas four) only per month, I shall become the purchaser of the articles (i.e., the articles will be my own property) without further payment and the full amount will be credited on the purchase system. (3) That if I fail to pay hire in any one month in advance, the owner may cancel the transaction and terminate the hiring, and I shall immediately return the articles and if I do not do so Mahabalee and Son may take proceedings in Court for the balance of hire due, at the above rate of Rs.9-4-0 per month with all attendant costs and damages. (4) Mahabalee and Son will not be bound to send monthly bill.
>
> (5) If I fail to pay hire in any one month in advance the whole transaction will be treated purely on the Hire System.
>
> (6) Unless and until such purchase be effected, articles will be considered the property of the owner and I shall remain bailee of the same.
>
> Received the articles.
>
> Fifty four yards coir matting.

It is to be noted that the agreement is headed by the value of the coir matting, viz., Rs.92-8-0, and that the defendant bound himself to pay to the plaintiff the sum of Rs.9-4-0 as monthly hire of the articles month by month in advance. It was further agreed that if he paid 10 months hire regularly on the due date, he should become the purchaser of the coir matting without further payment. If on the other hand he failed to pay regularly, the plaintiff had the option to cancel the transaction and terminate the hiring. It is important to note that nowhere in the agreement was the defendant given the option to terminate the hiring. In fact it appears to us that the effect of the agreement was that the defendant was bound to pay the full amount of the consideration, i.e., Rs.92-8-0 by monthly instalments and that the only way he could terminate the agreement was to take advantage of Clause (2) and pay 10 instalments regularly in advance on the due date. Under these circumstances the question that we have to decide is whether this is a hire purchase agreement or a sale of goods. There is no difficulty in construing a simple agreement of hire or an agreement for the sale of goods by instalments; the difficulty arises over agreements, whereby one party agrees to hire to the other party certain goods at a certain rate with a condition that if so many months instalments are paid the property in the goods passes to the hirer. This latter agreement is called a hire-purchase agreement.

In England, the question of hire-purchase agreements has been frequently considered by the courts. The leading cases are Lee v. Butler[1] and Helby v. Mathews[2]. On a consideration of these and other authorities, it appears to us that the distinguishing mark of a true hire-purchase agreement—as distinguished from a sale—is that the hirer should have a right to terminate the agreement at his pleasure, and that the distinguishing mark of an agreement which is a sale and not a hire-purchase agreement, is that the "hirer" should be bound to pay the full value of the goods by way of instalments without any option to cancel the agreement, if he so wished, before the full value of the goods is paid. These are the two criteria upon which all the decisions in England have turned. Lord Shand in Helby v. Mathews said:

> It is true that by that agreement Brewster undertook to pay to the appellant not only a first instalment of 10s. 6d. described as a "rent or hire instalment", but to pay the same amount on the 23rd of each succeeding month and that it was provided that on the payment of thirty six monthly instalments the piano should become his property. If these stipulations had been unqualified there could have been an absolute obligation or agreement by Brewster to acquire the instrument in property, and by purchase, although the instalments were described as for rent or hire, and the case of Lee v. Butler, [1893] 2 Q. B. 318, would have directly applied. But the whole obligations by Brewster were qualified by the stipulation: 'That the hirer may terminate the hiring by delivering up to the owner the said instrument. This provision appears to me to make it clear that there was no purchase and no agreement to purchase. The hirer need not continue the hiring a day longer than he desired; and he need not allow the transaction to become one of purchase unless he desired to do so.

The matter has been summed up in Volume I of Halsbury's Laws of England at page 554 in the following words:

> The difference between a contract of sale at a price payable by instalments and a contract of hire purchase is that in the former the purchaser has no option to terminate the contract and return the chattel, whereas, in the latter the hirer has. In the former there is an agreement to purchase,

---

[1] [1893] 2 Q. B. D. 318

[2] [1895] A. C. 471

CIVIL
1932
MAHABALI PRASAD v. H. N. PALMER
Young, J.

whereas, in the latter there is none. In each case, the substance of the transaction or the agreement must be looked at and not mere words.

See also Bhimji N. Dalal v. The Bombay Trust Corporation Ltd.[8].

Applying therefore the principles laid down above, we find in the agreement in this revision, that the defendant had no option of terminating the contract and returning the chattel. We find, too, that the whole price or value of the goods was to be paid by the defendant by instalments. We therefore think it clear in law that the agreement in question is clearly an agreement for the sale of the coir matting and not a hire-purchase agreement.

Counsel for the applicant has argued strenuously that the English cases can be distinguished, in that there is in this agreement Clause (5), viz., "If I fail to pay hire in any one month in advance the whole transaction will be treated purely on the Hire System". We do not think that this clause in any way distinguishes this case. The mere fact that the words used are "the hire system" does not make it in law a hire system. There still would be no right in the "hirer" to terminate the contract. The whole tenor of the agreement according to the decided cases is that of a "purchase" and not "hire-purchase". That being so, the plaintiff is entitled only to that part of the purchase price which has not been paid. The learned Judge of the Small Cause Court has not come to a finding upon this. We have ourselves looked at the evidence and we find that the defendant has sworn that he has paid nine instalments. The plaintiff on the other hand admits the payment of eight. The defendant says he paid one instalment on the signing of the agreement to the plaintiff's son, who is now dead. We are of opinion that an instalment certainly would have been paid upon the signing of the agreement, and therefore we believe the defendant's version. There has therefore been nine instalments paid and there is due to the plaintiff one instalment. The decree of the court below will be varied and there will be a decree for the plaintiff for Rs.9-4-0 with interest at six per cent. The application in revision therefore is dismissed with costs in both courts.

Application dismissed

[8] 54 Bom. 381

CIVIL
1932
April 29
SULAIMAN, C. J.
MUKERJI, J.

In re RASHID AHMAD*

Legal Practitioner—Counsel files application for leave to appeal to Privy Council —Deposit under Or. 45, R. 7 C. P. C.—Appeal succeeds—Whether counsel can claim lien on the deposit for the outstanding fees.

A counsel, who files an application for leave to appeal to Privy Council, is not entitled to claim a lien for the outstanding fees on the amount deposited by the appellant under Or. 45, R. 7 C. P. C. as security, in the event of the appeal succeeding, as this deposit was never the subject-matter of dispute and was not the fruit of the action. Ross v. Buxton, (1889) 42 Ch. D. 190 referred to.

Shiva Prasad Sinha for Dr. M. H. Faruqi.

The judgment of the Court was delivered by

*Mis. Case 853 of 1931

Sulaiman, C. J.—On an oral application made by Dr. Faruqi, notice was issued to the appellant to show cause why Rs.440 out of Rs.4,000 lying in deposit as security in this Court should not be paid over to Dr. Faruqi towards the payments of fees due to him.

It appears that Dr. Faruqi along with another counsel filed an application for leave to appeal to their Lordships of the Privy Council, though he had not appeared in the First Appeal itself. The appeal was admitted and was sent to the office of the Privy Council. Dr. Faruqi appears to have looked after the interests of the appellant and instructed the Solicitors in England. According to him the bulk of Rs.440 is the aggregate amount of the fees due to him for various works done. The appellant succeeded and the amount of security deposited by him for the cost of the respondents is now available to him for being returned.

The question is whether Dr. Faruqi is entitled to claim a lien for the outstanding fees on this amount.

It was held by a Full Bench of this Court in C. Ross Alston v. Pitambar Das[1] that a member of the English Bar, in accordance with the laws of England and the rules of the legal profession to which he belongs, renders and professes to render services of a purely honorary character and that in his professional capacity as an English Barrister he can neither sue nor be sued for his honoraria. Mr. Shiva Prasad Sinha contends before us that since the passing of the Bar Councils Act the status of a Barrister of England is identical with an ordinary Advocate, inasmuch as, according to the practice prevailing in this province, he combines in himself the functions of a Barrister as well as of a Solicitor. It is therefore urged that he is entitled to claim the same lien which an ordinary Solicitor would be entitled to in England. We think that it is unnecessary to decide this wider question in this case.

The amount of Rs.4,000 which was deposited by the appellants or by one of them as a security belonged to the person or persons depositing the amount and the proprietary interest in it never passed to the respondents. In case of the dismissal of the Privy Council Appeal it would have been open to the respondents to realise their costs out of this security. The appeal having succeeded, the liability of the appellant to make good the costs of the respondents out of this amount never arose. But this amount was not the subject-matter of the litigation and can in no sense be regarded as the fruits of the action earned by the counsel for his client. Mr. Sinha has strongly relied on the case of Ross v. Buxton[2] where the principle laid down by Stirling, J. was approved and it was stated that a party should not run away with the fruits of the cause without satisfying the legal demands of his attorney, by whose industry, and in many instances at whose expense, those fruits were obtained. In that case a sum of money was deposited into court under a compromise between the parties for the satisfaction of all claims for damages. The amount so deposited was obviously a compensation to the plaintiffs and was therefore the fruit of the action, and the plaintiffs' solicitor was held entitled to claim a lien on this amount.

The present case is entirely different. As pointed out above the sum of Rs.4,000 which had been deposited by the appellant to be available

---

[1] I. L. R. 25 All. 509

[2] 42 Chancery Division, 190 [1889]

Civil

1932

Rashid Ahmad In re

Sulaiman, C. J.

for the payment of the costs of the respondents in case their Lordships of the Privy Council ordered such costs to be paid, was never the subject-matter of dispute and is not the fruit of the action. We are therefore of opinion that no lien can be claimed on this amount.

The last point urged is that the order dated December 23, 1931, passed by a Bench of this Court on this application, has finally decided that the lien can be claimed. We are of opinion that it is not so. That was an order passed ex parte at the time of the issue of notice to Dr. Faruqi's clients, and the expression of opinion therein contained was obviously provisional and subject to any reasons to the contrary being shown by the appellant. As we are now asked to order the atual payment of the money to Dr. Faruqi, we cannot be bound by any expression of opinion which was made ex parte. We accordingly disallow the prayer of Dr. Faruqi. We make no order as to costs.

Application disallowed

Criminal

1932

May 11

Banerji, J.

SHARDA PRASAD

versus

KING-EMPEROR THROUGH PIARI*

Criminal Procedure Code, Secs. 488 and 489(2)—Civil suit for restitution of conjugal rights—Within a month wife takes proceedings under Sec. 488 Cr. P. C.—Civil suit decreed ex parte—Proceedings under Sec. 488 not bona fide—Whether criminal court should pass orders under Sec. 488 ignoring civil court decree.

A civil suit was instituted by the husband against his wife for restitution of conjugal rights. Within a month of the filing of the civil suit the wife took proceedings under Chapter XXXVI Criminal Procedure Code (Of the Maintenance of Wives) and the husband denied that he had ever ill-treated her and no specific questions were put to him to prove ill-treatment. The civil suit was decreed ex parte. Held, that the proceedings under Chapter XXXVI were not bona fide and were taken for the purpose of ignoring any decree that the civil court may pass, and the fact that the civil court decree was passed ex parte or after contest was immaterial, and this was not a case in which any order under Sec. 488 Cr. P. C. should be passed.

Rajpatti v. Emperor, 22 A. L. J. 806 distinguished.

Criminal Revision from an order of P. C. Plowden Esq., Sessions Judge of Bareilly.

Hari Pal Varshni for the applicant.

M. Waliullah (Assistant Government Advocate) for the Crown.

The following judgment was delivered by

Banerji, J.

Banerji, J.—This is an application in revision by one Sarda Prasad against an order of a magistrate directing payment of Rs.8 per month as maintenance to the opposite party, Mst. Piari. This order was confirmed by the learned Sessions Judge.

---

*Cr. Rev. 148 of 1932

CRIMINAL

1932

SHARDA PRASAD
v.
KING-EMPEROR

Banerji, J.

Although the order of the Special Magistrate 1st class directed the petitioner to pay Rs.8 per month to the applicant, it seems that the learned Sessions Judge in revision considered that that order was an order that the amount should be sent to the City Magistrate of Bareilly by money order. Why, I am unable to understand. The fact that the woman's father is the servant of the City Magistrate is no reason for considering that any order for payment of maintenance must mean that the amount should be sent through the City Magistrate.

It seems to me perfectly clear that the proceedings that were taken in the criminal courts at Bareilly were mala fide proceedings, taken for the purpose of nullifying any order that a civil court may pass in a pending suit in the Allahabad civil courts. On June 12, 1931 a civil suit was instituted by Sarda against his wife, Mst. Piari, for restitution of conjugal rights. This lady never took the trouble of defending the suit, but instead of defending the suit took proceedings on July 6, 1931 under Chapter XXXVI of the Code of Criminal Procedure. The application was originally filed in the court of the city magistrate, who is the employer of the petitioner's father, but the city magistrate very properly transferred it to a Special Magistrate of the 1st class.

I have read the judgment of the learned Special Magistrate. It seems to me that elaborate arguments were addressed to him. English cases were cited and the learned magistrate took great pains in deciding the first issue, which he has decided correctly, that he has jurisdiction to try the case. As regards the second point whether the civil court decree had any bearing or not it seems to me that the learned magistrate has gone wrong. The civil court decree, although ex parte, cannot be ignored by the criminal court. The ruling of Mr. Justice Boys, Rajpatti v. Emperor[1], referred to by the learned magistrate clearly has no application whatsoever to the facts of this case. In that case a civil court decree for restitution of conjugal rights had been passed and the wife had obeyed the decree and 13 months afterwards by reason of the husband's ill-treatment had left the husband's house and under those circumstances it was not considered incompetent for the criminal court to take action and pass orders under Sec. 488 Cr. P. C.

In this case it seems to me that this application of Mst. Piari was put in deliberately for the purpose of ignoring any decree that the civil court may pass. It is clear to me that under the Code of Criminal Procedure it was not the intention of the legislature that parties who wanted relief under Chap. XXXVI should ignore all decrees that may be passed by a civil court. In fact the 2nd clause of Sec. 489 makes it clear that if in consequence of any decision of a competent civil court any order under Sec. 488 requires to be amended, the court was to amend it or cancel the order. This, to my mind, shows clearly that the legislature never contemplated that a criminal court should ignore a civil court decree.

It is immaterial whether a civil court decree was passed ex parte or after contest. It may be that a party may consider that his or her statement is so ridiculous that no civil court will pay any attention. There are

---

[1] 22 A. L. J. 806

CRIMINAL

1932

SHARDA PRASAD v. KING-EMPEROR

Banerji, J.

well known rules which prevent a civil court from ordering restitution of conjugal rights against a wife where the wife can show reasons that such a decree should not be passed. In this case it seems to me that the proceedings that were taken were not bona fide and after examining the record I am of opinion that the finding of the learned Special Magistrate is in fact wrong. He has misread the two letters which he has referred to. I have had the letters read and my opinion is that those letters do not indicate anything of what the learned magistrate says they do.

Sarda has been examined in the case as a witness for his wife and he has denied that he had ever ill-treated his wife. If it had really been a fact that he had ill-treated his wife I have no doubt whatsoever that specific questions would have been put to him to prove the ill-treatment. I am not satisfied that this is a case in which any order under Section 488 Cr. P. C. should have been passed. I set aside the order of the Special Magistrate 1st class dated June 16, 1931 directing payment of a sum of Rs. 8 per month to the complainant Mst. Piari. I make no order as to costs.

Order set aside

CIVIL

1932

June 28

SULAIMAN, C. J.
MUKERJI, J
KING, J.

BHAJANI LAL AND OTHERS (Applicants)
versus
THE SECRETARY OF STATE (Opposite party)*

Land Acquisition Act, Sec. 18 and Civil Procedure Code, Sec. 115—Order passed by Collector under Sec. 18 refusing to make reference to the District Judge—Whether High Court has jurisdiction to revise the order.

The Collector, when acting under Sec. 18 of the Land Acquisition Act, is acting administratively and not judicially, and not as a 'court', and he could not in any case be acting as a court "subordinate to the High Court", and no revision therefore lies to the High Court under Sec. 115 C. P. C. from an order passed by the Collector under Sec. 18 refusing to make a reference to the Court of the District Judge.

Case law discussed.

CIVIL REVISION from an order of BABU SHAM CHANDRA, Land Acquisition Officer, L. S. Z. Railway, Jaunpur.

Kedar Nath Sinha for the applicants.

U. S. Bajpai for the opposite party.

The judgment of the Court was delivered by

King, J.

KING, J.—This reference arises from an application under Section 115 of the Code of Civil Procedure for the revision of an order passed by a Collector under S. 18 of the Land Acquisition Act, 1894, refusing to make a reference to the court of the District Judge.

A preliminary objection was raised that the High Court has no jurisdiction to revise the order as it is not an order passed by a court subordinate to the High Court. The division bench before which the application was heard was of the opinion that the case raised a substantial question of law requiring an authoritative pronouncement and accordingly directed the case to be laid before the Hon'ble Chief Justice for the constitution of a larger Bench.

Some land belonging to the applicant was acquired under the Land Acquisition Act. The Collector made an award. The applicant refused to accept the award on the ground that the compensation offered was quite inadequate and sent an application to the Collector requiring him to refer the matter under S. 18 to the civil court for determination.

The Collector passed the following order dated October 17, 1930:

> This application was received by post in contravention of Rule 2 Board Circulars II-6 and is unstamped. No action can therefore be taken upon it. Rejected and filed. Inform applicant.

The question is whether the High Court can interfere with this order in exercise of its revisional powers under S. 115 C. P. C.

There is much conflict of judicial authority on this point. The rulings which have been cited before us show that the High Courts at Madras, Bombay and Lahore take the view that no revision lies, whereas the High Courts at Calcutta and Patna and the Chief Court of Oudh are of the contrary opinion.

---

*Civ. Rev. 359 of 1931

The first question is whether the Collector, in refusing to make a reference under S. 18, is acting "judicially".

When we speak of the "Collector" we mean the Collector as defined for the purposes of the Land Acquisition Act. It has been authoritatively ruled by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Ezra v. The Secretary of State for India[1] that the proceedings of the Collector, resulting in the award, are administrative and not judicial. Their Lordships were only dealing with the award and the proceedings leading up to the award, and it has been held by certain learned Judges that a distinction should be drawn between the functions exercised by a Collector under Part II of the Land Acquisition Act (relating to the proceedings resulting in the award) and the functions exercised by him in Part III of the Act, which relates to the judicial determination of claims made by persons interested who have not accepted the award. For instance, it has been held in Administrator-General of Bengal v. The Land Acquisition Collector[2] that Part III of the Act relates to proceedings in court and that the Collector in rejecting the application under Section 18 was a "court" and was acting judicially, and therefore it was held that his order was subject to revision by the High Court. In Sarswati v. The Land Acquisition Deputy Collector, Champaran[3] the learned Judges held that under the statute the first step in the judicial proceeding was a reference by the Collector, and the first step in a judicial proceeding must be held to be a "judicial step". With due respect to the learned Judges, we are unable to agree to this view. We are bound to hold, on the authority of Ezra's case, that the Collector throughout the proceedings resulting in the award was acting as an administrative officer and not as a judicial officer. It seems to us very difficult to hold that the Collector, in making or refusing to make a reference under S. 18, has suddenly changed his official position and is acting judicially and not administratively. There must be a presumption of continuity. It is true that the Collector, when an application is made to him under S. 18, has to see whether the application is within time, and is otherwise in order, but we are not prepared to hold that merely because he has to consider certain points before making the reference, he therefore must be deemed to be acting judicially and not as an administrative officer. The functions which he performs under Part II of the Act are very similar to judicial functions. He even has the power of compelling the attendance of witnesses, as if he were a civil court and he certainly has to determine to the best of his judgment the proper compensation which should be given to the persons interested in the land. If the Collector in making such decisions is not acting judicially, we fail to see why he should be deemed to be acting judicially when making a reference under S. 18. Although Ezra's case does not directly decide whether the Collector is acting as an administrative officer or as a judicial officer when making a reference under S. 18, their Lordships expressly refer to S. 18 as one of the sections from which it could be inferred that the Collector is not acting as a judicial officer. Moreover, their Lordships approve the reasoning in the judgment of the Calcutta High Court which was under appeal, and in that judgment the High

---

[1] I. L. R. 32 Cal. 605 at 629

[2] 12 C. W. N. 241

[3] 2 Patna L. J. 204

Civil
1932
Bhajani Lal v. The Secretary of State
King, J.

Court had clearly taken the view that the Collector is in no sense of the term a judicial officer, nor is the proceeding before him a judicial proceeding. They also refer (at p. 619) to S. 18 as showing that the Collector is not a court. In our opinion, the Collector is not suddenly converted from an administrative officer into a judicial for the purpose of making or refusing to make a reference under S. 18, and he continues to act as an agent of Government, in an administrative capacity, throughout.

If it be conceded for the sake of argument that the Collector in refusing to make a reference under S. 18 is acting "judicially", then the question arises, whether he should be deemed to be a civil court. The word "court" is not defined for the purpose of S. 115 of the Code of Civil Procedure, but we think it must be an essential characteristic of a "court" that it should have power to determine questions in dispute, between litigants, upon the merits. The Collector has no power to determine upon the merits the questions raised by the application submitted to him under S. 18. He is merely required to refer the question for determination to the court of the District Judge. The only question that he himself is called upon to examine is whether the application is in conformity with the requirements of S. 18. Even if it be held that he decides that question judicially, it does not necessarily follow that he is a "court". A registration officer in deciding that a document should not be admitted to registration might be held to decide the question "judicially" but in our opinion the registration officer does not, for that reason, become a "court".

The argument advanced before us that the Collector must be considered a "component part" of the District Judge's court, because he initiates or refused to initiate judicial proceedings in that court, seems to us too far-fetched and unconvincing to merit discussion. We may add that the word "require" which is used in S. 18 with reference to the Collector seems more appropriate to an administrative officer than to a court. For these reasons we hold that the Collector is not a "Court".

Finally, if it be admitted for the sake of argument that the Collector is a "court", we think that he certainly is not a court subordinate to the High Court. The High Court has no appellate jurisdiction over the Collector and for that reason it is difficult to hold that the Collector is a court subordinate to the High Court, even if he is a "court" in any sense of the word. Section 55 of the Land Acquisition Act gives power to the Local Government to make rules for the guidance of officers in all matters connected with the enforcement of the Act. This would, in our opinion, include power to make a rule for the guidance of a Collector when receiving an application under S. 18. No authority is given to the High Court to make rules for the guidance of the Collector and for this reason also we think that the Collector cannot be held to be subordinate to the High Court.

As the Collector is an officer of the revenue department he would presumably be sitting as a revenue court, if he were sitting as a court of any description. In the present case, it is perfectly clear that the Collector believed himself to be acting as a revenue court, because he refused to accept the application on the strength of a rule made by the Board of Revenue for the guidance of revenue courts. The Board of Revenue are also clearly of opinion that a Collector acts under S. 18 either as a revenue officer or as a revenue court, because they have made rules (Board Circulars I—VIII, Rules 28 and 29) for his guidance. In our opinion he is acting as an administrative officer of the Revenue Department but not as a revenue court. In any case he is not subordinate to the High Court.

As we hold that the Collector was not acting judicially, and not acting as a "court", and that he could not in any case be acting as a court "subordinate to the High Court", we think it is clear that no revision lies under S. 115 C. P. C.

We agree generally to the views expressed by the Full Bench of the Madras High Court in Abdul Sattar v. Special Deputy Collector, Vizagapatam Harbour[4] but we would go further in holding that the Collector was not even acting "judicially".

The Bombay High Court in Balkrishna v. The Collector of Bombay Suburban[5] hold that no revision lies in such a case, but they were doubtful whether the Collector should be considered to be a "court" when acting under S. 18.

Our view is also supported by the Lahore High Court in Mushtaq Ali v. The Secretary of State[6].

We may also refer to a decision of our own High Court in the Secretary of State for India in Council v. Bhagwan Prasad[7]. In that case the question for decision was different, but the learned Judges clearly stated their opinion that the Collector when acting under S. 18 of the Land Acquisition Act, was acting in administrative capacity and not in a judicial capacity.

The Oudh Chief Court took a contrary view in Ahmad Ali Khan Alawai v. The Secretary of State for India[8]. They were of the opinion that as the proceedings in Part III of the Act are judicial, the reference by the Collector under S. 18 which starts the proceedings, should be treated as a judicial order. They seem to have assumed that if the Collector was acting judicially, he must be a "court" and must further be a "court subordinate to the High Court". With due deference, we cannot agree to this view and we note that the learned Judges relied upon the cases Secretary of State v. Jiwan Baksh[9] and T. K. Parmeshwara v. The Land Acquisition Collector, Palghat[10]. Apparently, it was not brought to their notice that both these cases had been overruled by subsequent decisions of the same High Courts.

It is objected that if the Collector's order refusing to make the reference is not open to revision by the High Court, then the applicant has no remedy. It would no doubt be open to the applicant to petition the commissioner or the Local Government to direct the Collector to make a reference. If any further remedy is considered necessary, then we think it is for the legislature to provide some appropriate remedy.

[4] I. L. R. 47 Mad. 357

[5] I. L. R. 47 Bom. 699

[6] A. I. R. 1930 Lah. 242

[7] 1929 A. L. J. 1186

[8] A. I. R. 1932 Oudh 180

[9] 67 P. R. 1916

[10] I. L. R. 42 Mad. 231

Civil
1932
Bhajani Lal
v.
The Secretary of State
King, J.

As we hold that we have no power of interference, it is unnecessary to express any opinion upon the merits of the Collector's order. We can only suggest that the Local Government should make it clear by statutory rules or departmental instructions, what procedure should be adopted by a Collector when receiving an application by post. It may be pointed out that in Shiva Sundari Dasi v. The Collector of Cawnpore[11] a Collector did receive such an application by post and raised no objection. The question of a court-fee upon the application might also be made clear. Under S. 19(22) of the Court Fees Act, an "application for compensation" under the Land Acquisition Act is expressly exempted from being chargeable with a court-fee. In the present case, the application is not for payment of compensation but it is for determination of compensation and the Collector might be in doubt whether any court-fee is chargeable on such an application.

As we have no power to interfere under S. 115, we dismiss the application with costs.

Application dismissed

---

[11] 2 A. L. J. 784

AN ADVOCATE OF BENARES—In the matter of*

Civil
1932
May 26
Young, J.
Pullan, J.
Niamatullah, J.

Legal Practitioner—Advocate made deliberately false imputations upon fairness of judicial officers—In proceedings connected with a case to which he was himself a party—Whether advocate can be punished by suspension or removal from practice.

Where an advocate deliberately made false allegations involving imputations upon the fairness and impartiality of two judicial officers in proceedings connected with an execution case to which he was himself a party; held, that it was not competent for the High Court to punish the advocate on the disciplinary side under the Indian Bar Council Act and to suspend or remove him from practice. All that the court could do was to punish him for contempt of court.

In the matter of Thomas James Wallace, L. R. Privy Council, Vol. I at 283 followed. Shashi Bhushan v. Sarbadhicari, I. L. R. 29 All. 95 distinguished.

Hasan Imam, A. Sanyal and Kumuda Prasad for the applicant.

U. S. Bajpai for the Crown.

The judgment of the Court was delivered by

Young, J.

Young, J.—Complaint having been made by one Suraj Prasad Dube on November 26, 1929 against Mr. Bahadur Lal, an advocate enrolled in this Court, this Court under the Bar Council Act, Section 10, referred the matter to the Bar Council for enquiry and report. In due course the Bar Council nominated a Tribunal for the above purpose. Several charges had been formulated against the advocate. Three charges were withdrawn by permission of the Tribunal and they also found as regards those charges that they were not proved. The charges which were pressed against the advocate were (1) that he deliberately made false allegations involving imputations upon the fairness and impartiality of two judicial officers in pro-

---

*Mis. Case 645 of 1931

CIVIL

1932

AN ADVOCATE OF BENARES In re

Young, J.

ceedings connected with an execution case to which he was himself a party, (2) that he made contradictory statements in two proceedings arising out of suit No. 236 of 1921 in the court of the Subordinate Judge of Benares, with the object of supporting the claim of his brother, Jawahir Lal in suit No. 60 of 1928, and (3) that he filed an objection in execution case No. 61 of 1928 in the court of the Additional Subordinate Judge of Benares, in which he set up a false settlement.

With regard to the first charge the Tribunal found that the judicial officers themselves accepted an apology from the advocate, that that amounted to a composition of the offence, that the composition amounted to an acquittal and that therefore the advocate must be deemed to have been acquitted of this charge. The Tribunal submitted on this that if they were right as to the effect of the apology, their finding would be that the charge was not proved, but that if their view was erroneous then their finding would be that the charge was proved. With regard to the second charge, the Tribunal found the charge proved, and with regard to the third charge, they found it also proved.

Notices have been served upon the advocate and the Government Advocate. The advocate is represented by Mr. Hasan Imam of the Patna Bar, and the Government Advocate represents the Crown.

With regard to the first charge, it is unnecessary for us to come to a conclusion as to whether the view of the Tribunal is correct in law or not. There is no doubt that the advocate committed a gross contempt of court in his allegations in the applications filed by him, against the judicial officers. He has admitted that the allegations were unfounded, and it is obvious to us that there was no foundation whatever for the gross attacks made upon the judicial officers. The question which we have to decide is whether it is possible for this Court to punish the advocate on the disciplinary side under the Indian Bar Council Act and to suspend or remove him from practice. We have been referred to a decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council in the matter of Thomas James Wallace[1]. In that case a barrister of the supreme court of Nova Scotia committed a gross contempt of court in his capacity as a private suitor and not in his capacity as an officer of the court. The court suspended the barrister from practising, and he appealed to the Privy Council. The Privy Council held that it was not competent for the court to punish him by suspension for the contempt. All that the court could do was to punish him for contempt of court. Their Lordships of the Privy Council said that it was an offence > committed by an individual in his capacity of a suitor in respect of his supposed rights as a suitor and of an imaginary injury done to him as a suitor, and it had no connection whatever with his professional character or anything done by him professionally, either as an advocate or an attorney. It was a contempt of court committed by an individual in his personal capacity only.

Their Lordships further found that there was no element of moral delinquency in the charge against the barrister, and that the offence might adequately be punished in the ordinary way as contempt of court. It would appear from this decision that this Court cannot deal with the advocate

---

[1] Vol. 1, L. R. Privy Council at 283

CIVIL

1932

AN ADVOCATE OF BENARES In re

Young, J.

in this case for professional misconduct. The learned Government Advocate relied upon the case of Shashi Bhushan Sarbadhicari[2]. In our view, that case is clearly distinguishable. The advocate concerned had been engaged as counsel in a case before the High Court. He was reprimanded by the court, and he thereafter in his capacity of editor of a newspaper published an article which amounted to a contempt of court. In that case the High Court suspended the advocate for four years, and he appealed to the Privy Council. Their Lordships of the Privy Council in their judgment distinguished this case from the case in re. Wallace on the ground that the matter arose through the conduct of the advocate in conducting a case in his professional capacity before the court, and the contempt which he committed was in order to vindicate his professional conduct as an advocate. We consider that in the case before us we are bound by the decision in re Wallace, and therefore cannot pass an order against him under the Bar Council Act on this charge.

[Their Lordships then discussed the evidence and held the second charge not proved and third charge proved, and continued as follows:—]

There only now remains the question of what sentence the court should pass. It is clear that the advocate has been guilty of misconduct involving moral turpitude. He has falsely verified an application and he has endeavoured to deceive the court and to deprive the decree-holder of money due to him. While we must look upon the misconduct of the advocate as serious, we have been impressed by the appeal of his counsel Mr. Hasan Imam in mitigation of sentence. We agree with the finding of the Bar Tribunal that the complainant did not file his complaint out of any high sense of public duty and that Raja Sir Motichand who has been engaged in litigation with the advocate in his personal capacity, is behind the application and has paid the expenses of the applicant. The application has been made out of a desire further to harass the advocate. The advocate himself has been engaged for some years in private litigation of an onerous nature. As regards the particular charge of which he has been guilty, it must have been extremely irritating to him to find the assignee of the debt purchasing it for such a small sum. There must have been great temptation, after having paid the sum of Rs.1,100 to the decree-holder, who had only paid Rs.125 for the debt to endeavour to avoid payment of the balance. Further the whole amount of the balance has since been made good to the decree-holder. We take also into consideration that the advocate was not acting for a client in this matter, but was engaged in his own litigation, and that in the end no one has suffered by his action. He has further been subjected to heavy expenses in defending himself upon all these charges, some of them, at any rate, being without any substance. On the whole we think that justice will be satisfied in this case by an order suspending the advocate from practice for the term of three calendar months, and we order accordingly.

Suspension ordered

---

[2] I. L. R. 29 All. 95

CIVIL

1932

Feb. 22

PULLAN, J.

KING-EMPEROR

versus

ABDUL alias ABDUL KARIM AND ABDUL HASAN*

Penal Code, Sec. 366—Offence under—When made out—Kidnapping or abduction from lawful guardianship—Necessary ingredient.

In order to prove an offence under Sec. 366 Penal Code, it is necessary to show that the girl or woman had been kidnapped or abducted from lawful guardianship.

A man who commits sexual intercourse with a girl in a field near her own home without having any intention of taking her away with him is not guilty of an offence under Sec. 366 Penal Code; but a man who has intercourse with a minor girl even with her consent is guilty of the offence of rape.

CRIMINAL APPEAL from an order of BABU RAM UGRAH LAL SRIVASTAVA, Sessions Judge of Bijnor.

K. O. Carleton for the appellants.

Sankar Saran (Government Pleader) for the Crown.

The following judgment was delivered by

Pullan, J.

PULLAN, J.—Musammat Buddo, a Chamar girl, who is said to be between 14 and 16 years of age, went to a police station on January 19, 1931 and made a report which is taken to be one under Section 354 I. P. C. against four persons, two of whom, Abdul Karim and Abdul Hasan, are now appellants in this Court. There is very little in the report and the girl's father Jagna was not satisfied with the fact that no investigation was made. He made a further complaint to the Superintendent of Police and investigation followed in which the following facts came to be known. The girl used to go to the house of these Mohammedans to do work. She knew them well and was on friendly terms with them. One day they called her into a sugar cane field and had sexual intercourse with her. They also dressed her up in some Mohammedan clothes which they subsequently removed. She never left the village and she was found shortly afterwards by her father on whose instigation she seems to have made the report on the following day. An attempt was made to show that these Mohammedans and others were in a conspiracy to abduct this girl to Simla for immoral purposes, but no such case is established by the evidence. It is, however, proved that the girl was seen with these men, that she went into a sugar cane field with them, and that she exchanged her clothes for Mohammedan clothes. Medical examination disclosed the fact that she was not a virgin, but no question was asked to the doctor as to whether she had been recently deflowered or was habituated to sexual intercourse. As she has never suggested that any violence was used to her, it is probable that she had submitted to these men on previous occasions. Both the appellants have been convicted of an offence under Section 366 I. P. C. In order that this offence may be proved, it is necessary to show that the girl or woman has been kidnapped or abducted from lawful guardianship. This girl was in the guardianship of her father as her gauna ceremony had

---

*Cr. A. 1013 of 1931

Civil

1932

King-Emperor v. Abdul

Pullan, J.

not been performed, but I am unable to hold that she has ever left the guardianship of her father. She never appears to have gone more than a very short distance from her own home and there is nothing to suggest to my mind that the accused had any intention of taking her away. No doubt they amused themselves with her and dressed her up in some fine clothes in order to please her but this does not prove that they intended to take her away from home or to do anything more than have sexual intercourse with her. A man who commits sexual intercourse with a girl in a field near her own home without having any intention of taking her away with him is not guilty of an offence under Section 366 I. P. C. but a man who has intercourse with a minor girl even with her consent is guilty of the offence of rape. In the present case the accused were not separately charged with rape but they were both asked whether they had intercourse with the girl and they both said that they had not. Sexual intercourse in fact forms the principal part of the allegations made by the girl and there is no doubt that technical rape was committed. Although no specific charge of this offence was made, a conviction for rape may be passed by this Court under the provisions of Section 237 Cr. P. C. In my opinion the offence is not one which calls for heavy punishment. Already the accused have been put to considerable expense and they have spent some days in jail. I consider that they have been sufficiently punished. I alter the conviction from one under Section 366 to one under Section 376 I. P. C. and sentence them to so much rigorous imprisonment as they have already undergone and I maintain the order of fine. If the fine has already been paid they need not surrender to their bail. I confirm the order by which the amount of fine was paid to the girl by way of compensation.

Conviction altered

PARSOTTAMANAND GIRI (Plaintiff)
versus
MAYANAND GIRI AND OTHERS (Defendants)*

Civil

1932

May 2

King, J.

*Court-fees Act, Sec. 7, Cl. (v)—Suit for possession as Mahanth of properties attached to math—*Ad valorem court-fee payable—"Possession"—Interpretation of.

Sec. 7 (v) of Court Fees Act is applicable to suits for possession of immovable property and no distinction is made between a suit for possession as a beneficial owner, and a suit for possession as a trustee or as the manager of a religious endowment.

Where the plaintiff alleged that the defendant who was a mahant of a math had lost his title to mahantship owing to his marriage, illegal transfers of properties and other wrongful acts, and that the plaintiff had been duly elected as mahant in his place, and the plaintiff sued for possession as mahant of the properties attached to the math, including the properties which had been unlawfully transferred; held, that the court-fee was payable ad valorem under Sec. 7 (v) upon the value of the properties of the math and in calculating the value of such properties the temple itself should be left out of consideration as having no market value.

---

*F. A. (not yet numbered) of 1930 (connected with F. A. 557 of 1930)

Case-law discussed.

REFERENCE under Section 5 of the Court Fees Act.

A. Sanyal for the appellant.

Gadadhar Prasad for the respondents.

The following judgment was delivered by

KING, J.—This is a reference under Section 5 of the Court Fees Act. The plaintiff alleged that defendant No. 1 who was a Mahant of a Math, had lost his title to Mahantship owing to his marriage, illegal transfers of properties and other wrongful acts, and that the plaintiff had been duly elected as Mahant in his place. The plaintiff sued for possession as Mahant of the properties attached to the Math, including the properties which had been unlawfully transferred. The suit was valued for the purposes of jurisdiction at Rs.2,30,242 and for the purposes of the court-fee at Rs.1,59,842 on which a court-fee for Rs.1,750 was paid. The plaintiff paid a further court-fee of Rs.525 under a subsequent order of the Court. The suit was partially dismissed and the plaintiff appeals. He has valued his appeal at Rs.1,59,842 and has paid a court-fee of Rs.10 only. He contends that it was by mistake that an ad valorem court-fee had been paid in the trial court and the proper court-fee would have been Rs.10 in the trial court and the same in the appellate court. The appellant's argument is that he is not claiming the property as a proprietor but is only seeking possession as manager or Mahant. He is only asking for such possession as pertains to the office of a Mahant, and the subject-matter in dispute is not capable of valuation, so a court-fee of Rs.10 only is payable under Article 17, Clause (vi) of Schedule II.

Apart from authority it would seem that the suit is for possession of immovable property and that the court-fee should be governed by Section 7, Clause (v). This clause is applicable to suits for possession of immovable property and no distinction is made between a suit for possession as a beneficial owner, and a suit for possession as a trustee or as the manager of a religious endowment.

The appellant has cited several rulings but none of them are directly applicable to the facts of this case.

In Thakuri v. Bramha Narain[1] the suit was under Section 539 of the old Code of Civil Procedure, which corresponds to Section 92 of the Code of 1908. The plaintiff sued for a declaration that certain property was endowed property and for the appointment of himself as superintendent of the endowment and for an injunction forbidding the defendant to interfere with his management. It was held that the relief regarding the appointment of the plaintiff as superintendent of the religious endowment was governed by Section 17, Clause (vi) as it was not capable of valuation. This case is distinguishable because the plaintiff did not seek possession of the property. On the other hand, he did not claim to be appointed as superintendent whereas the plaintiff in this case alleges that he has already been appointed as Mahant and seeks possession of the property.

---

[1] I. L. R. 19 All. 60

The case of Girdhari Lal v. Ram Lal[2] was also a suit under Section 539. The plaintiffs claimed that new superintendents should be appointed for the management of the endowed property and that the property should be taken from the defendant and placed in the possession of the new superintendents. Here, again, it was held that the court-fee was governed by Section 17, Clause (vi) but the case is distinguishable because the plaintiffs claimed nothing for themselves personally: they only asked that the trust property should be placed in the possession of the new superintendents whoever they might be. It was not contended that it was a suit for possession of trust property.

In Rajagopala Naidu v. Ramasubramania Ayyar[3] the plaintiff prayed for a declaration that he was entitled to manage a temple and to appoint and remove the trustees and prayed for possession of the temple and the properties attached thereto. It was held that the temple had no market value so the suit, in so far as it was a suit for the possession of the temple, was governed by Article 17, Clause (vi). It appears that the other properties which were attached to the temple, had been valued in the plaint and an ad valorem court-fee had been paid. This case therefore cannot be said to be any authority in favour of the appellant. The suit was held to be a suit for possession of immovable property and an ad valorem court-fee was paid on the value of the property attached to the temple but it was held that the temple itself had no market value. The question referred to the Full Bench "whether on a claim by a trustee for possession of trust properties for the purpose of proper administration of that trust he will have to pay court-fee on the value of the trust property, or whether in that case he is only bound to pay the nominal amount of Rs.10 or Rs.15" was left undecided.

In U. Pyinnya v. U. Dipa[4] the suit was by trustees for the possession of a Phongyi Kyanng which is a building for the residence of monks. The court held that such a building (Like a Hindu temple) had no market-value and Article 17, Clause (vi) was applicable to the suit for possession of such a building. The ruling in Rajagopala Naidu v. Ramasubramania Ayyar[5] was followed. In the present suit it is admitted that the properties attached to the Math have a market-value. The value of the temple itself should be excluded, on the strength of the rulings cited, but the properties attached to the temple have a market-value, and the Madras ruling is an authority for holding that a court-fee should be paid on the valuation of such properties.

Several rulings have also been cited by the stamp reporter in support of the contention that a court-fee should be paid ad valorem on the valuation of the property in suit.

In Basawa Singh v. Sardarni Bhagwan[6] the suit was for the removal of the manager of a religious institution. It was held by the Punjab Chief Court that this was "practically a suit for possession" of the endowed property and that a court-fee should be paid by ad valorem upon the value of the property. This ruling certainly supports the stamp reporter's contention.

---

[2] I. L. R. 21 All. 200

[3] I. L. R. 46 Mad. 782

[4] A. I. R., 1929, Rang. 134

[5] I. L. R. 46 Mad. 782

[6] 17 I. C. 270

In Sonachala v. Manika[7] the suit was for the removal of the manager of a charitable endowment and for the appointment of the plaintiff as manager. The plaintiff did not claim possession of the property but it was held that the plaintiff was bound to ask for possession and that a suit for possession of trust property falls under Section 7.

Manni Lal v. Radhe Gopalji[8] and Raghunath Ganesh v. Gangadhar Vikaji[9] have also been cited but they are not directly in point. They were both suits for a declaration that the plaintiff is the lawful manager of a religious endowment and for an injunction restraining the defendant from interfering with the plaintiff's management. It was held that a court-fee was governed by Section 7, Clause 4, Sub-clause (c) as the suit was for a declaration where consequential relief is prayed. Possession was not prayed for in either of these suits, so the rulings have no direct bearing upon the point under consideration.

In the case of Syed Mohammad Gouse[10] the facts were very similar to those of the case now in question. The suit was for a declaration that the plaintiff is the Sajjada Nishin of a Dargah and for possession of its properties. It was argued in that case also that the subject-matter in dispute was the right of management of a religious endowment and that such subject-matter is incapable of valuation. It was also argued that as the plaintiff was only suing for trusteeship and had no beneficial or personal interest in the properties, no ad valorem court-fee should be paid. Both these contentions were repelled and it was held that the court-fee was payable under Section 7, Clause (v). I agree with the learned Judge who decided that case that the question whether the plaintiff has or has not any beneficial interest in the properties does not make any difference as regards the court-fee payable by him. The Legislature lays down certain rules governing the court-fees payable on suits for possession of immovable properties and I see no justification for interpreting "possession" as meaning "possession as beneficial owner".

I hold that the court-fee is payable ad valorem under Section 7, Clause (v) upon the value of the properties of the Math. In calculating the value of such properties the temple itself should be left out of consideration as having no market value.

[7] I L R 8 Mad. 516

[8] I. L. R. 47 All. 502

[9] I L. R. 10 Bom. 60

[10] 83 I. C. 209

Civil

1932

April 20

Sulaiman, C. J.
Iqbal Ahmad, J.

QASIM HUSAIN BEG (Defendant)
versus
KANIZ SAKINA (Plaintiff)*

Majority Act, Sec. 2(a)—'To act in the matter of dower'—Meaning of—Mohammedan woman—Major by her personal law but minor under Majority Act—Whether capable of relinquishing her dower—Mohammedan Law—Dower—Relinquishment as consideration for obtaining khula—Right to reclaim dower cannot be exercised after expiry of period of iddat.

A Mohammedan woman who is a major by her personal law but a minor under the Indian Majority Act is capable of relinquishing her dower as consideration for obtaining Khula—a form of divorce recognised by the Mohammedan Law, inasmuch as to relinquish dower is 'to act in the matter of dower' within the meaning of Sec. 2(a) of the Indian Majority Act. Mozharul Islam v. Abdul Gani Ala, 80 I. C. 914 relied on. Ali Dhunimsa Bibi v. Mahammad Fathi Uddin, 41 Mad. 1026 dissented from.

Where a Mohammedan woman relinquishes her dower as consideration for obtaining Khula, it is open to her to reclaim her dower at any time during the 'iddat' and she cannot exercise the option after the expiry of the period of 'iddat', when the husband's right to revoke the divorce is automatically put an end to.

Second Appeal from a decree of J. Allsop Esq., District Judge of Aligarh, modifying a decree of Maulvi Sirajuddin, Munsif of Koil.

Zafar Mehdi and Hyder Mehdi for the appellant.

A. M. Khwaja and M. I. Khwaja for the respondent.

The judgment of the Court was delivered by

Sulaiman, C. J.

Sulaiman, C. J.—This is a defendant's appeal arising out of a suit for recovery of half the dower debt on the ground that the defendant has divorced the plaintiff and that there had been no consummation of marriage. The plaintiff's case was that the defendant without the knowledge or consent of the plaintiff and without any relinquishment of the dower debt pronounced divorce which put an end to the first marriage. The claim was resisted by the defendant on the ground that at the time of the marriage, fraud and misrepresentation were practised by the plaintiff's guardian, viz., her father, and the marriage was voidable and therefore no claim for dower could be maintained. It was further pleaded that owing to the fact that the plaintiff's maternal aunt was a woman of low caste, the defendant wanted to repudiate the marriage and then it was agreed that there could be a Khula in consideration for the relinquishment of the dower, and that the Khula was ultimately gone through by the plaintiff through the medium of her father in the presence of maulvies.

Both parties produced oral evidence. On behalf of the plaintiff, she herself, her father and other witnesses were produced who denied that there had been any relinquishment of the dower either by her or by her father and asserted that it was a simple case of divorce. They also tried to make out that there had been no disagreement on the ground of a subsequent discovery of the low parentage of the plaintiff. On the other hand, the defendant went into the witness-box and told a story that when he discovered the fraud and misrepresentation, he insisted on a separation and that it was agreed between the parties that a Khula should be obtained; that he actually went to the house of the plaintiff and at first the plaintiff relinquished her dower in order to obtain the Khula, that then the plaintiff's father and the defendant along with witnesses went to maulvies and in their presence the father stated that she had relinquished her dower and that he as her guardian also relinquished the dower and it was in consideration of such relinquishment that Khula was obtained and Talaq was pronounced by the defendant.

---

*S. A. 1049 of 1929

The learned District Judge has come to the conclusion that the defendant's part of the story is correct-and it appears that it was sometime afterwards when the defendant discovered that the plaintiff's grand-mother on her mother's side was a sweeper woman, he no longer desired to have anything to do with his wife: that the parties had never lived together and ultimately Qasim Husain and the plaintiff's father came to an arrangement. The learned Judge has mentioned that they went to a maulvi in whose presence the divorce was pronounced in the Khula form together with the Talaq form, and that it was agreed that the woman would give up her dower. To this extent the plaintiff's case that there had been no relinquishment of the dower was found to be untrue. The learned Judge has further found that she had attained the age of puberty being about 16 or 17 years of age at the time, but that she had not attained the age of 18 years so as to be a major under the Indian Majority Act. His conclusion is that the Indian Majority Act applied to her and that she was not competent to relinquish her dower and it was open to her to go back upon such relinquishment and reclaim the dower. He has however considered that it was never the case of either party that the marriage was still existing. Such a case was undoubtedly set up in the written statement, but does not appear to have been pressed before the learned Judge.

The learned Judge has not recorded a clear finding as regards the case, that the plaintiff herself had agreed to relinquish her dower debt. On that point the evidence of the parties was conflicting.

We have accordingly got the oral evidence read out to us and in particular we have had the statement of the plaintiff, her father, and the defendant read out to us. It seems to us impossible to believe that when the plaintiff was 16 or 17 years of age, her father would have agreed to go through the form of Khula on her behalf and relinquished her dower debt without consulting her in the first instance. We find it most difficult to conclude that he would have acted in such a manner without having previously obtained her consent and authority. It is quite obvious that he was confronted with the disclosure of the parentage of the plaintiff which had not been made known to the defendant at the time of the marriage and instead of creating a scandal he agreed to obtain Khula from the husband. The denial of the plaintiff and her father that there was never a relinquishment of the dower has been found to be untrue, and we have no hesitation in accepting the defendant's version, which is consistent with the probabilities of the case that the Khula form had been obtained with the approval and authority of the plaintiff.

It now remains to consider the questions of law which arise in this case. The Madras High Court in the case of Abi Dhunimsa Bibi v. Muhammad Fathi Uddin[1] expressed the view that > a relinquishment of her right to dower by a Mohammedan woman, who is a minor under the Indian Majority Act, is invalid under the Contract Act, inasmuch as to relinquish dower is not 'to act in the matter of dower' within the meaning of Section 2 of the Indian Majority Act.

This view has not been followed by a Bench of the Calcutta High Court in the case of Mozharul Islam v. Abdul Gani Ala[2] where it has been held that > if a Mohammedan minor who is a major by his personal law but a minor under the Indian Majority Act enters into a marriage, as he is capable of doing, he must himself enter into a contract for payment of dower.

We agree with the opinion expressed by the Calcutta High Court, that the settlement of dower or its relinquishment would come within the exceptions contained in Section 2 of the Indian Majority Act. That section provides that nothing contained in the Act "shall affect the capacity of any person to act in the following matters (namely), marriage, dower, divorce and adoption". The agreement to pay a certain amount of dower is a part of the contract of marriage, and there is no reason to suppose that although a person, who is a minor under the Indian Majority Act, but a major under the Mohammedan Law, is capable of entering into a contract of marriage, he is incapable of fixing the amount of the dower. We think that on the same ground an individual who is a major under the personal law is capable of relinquishing the dower as consideration for obtaining Khula. Khula is a form of divorce recognized by the Mohammedan Law and comes within the exception.

If the Indian Majority Act had applied and the girl would have been a minor incapable of relinquishing her dower, then, as pointed out by the learned Judge who has referred this case to a higher Bench, the father as her guardian would have been competent to relinquish her dower debt on her behalf, as a consideration for the Khula. But when the Indian Majority Act does not apply, the father could not by his own relinquishment have bound her unless she had agreed to such relinquishment. We have found that her consent must have been obtained in this case. Indeed the plaintiff in the witness-box admitted that she came to know of this divorce about a month after it took place. There is no suggestion that she asserted any right to re-claim her dower debt. As a matter of fact she could not put forward such a case when the position taken up by her was that there had been no relinquishment of the dower. The suit was undoubtedly instituted more than three years after the Khula and the plaintiff has now admittedly married a second husband.

Mr. Tyabji in his Principles of Mohammedan Law, 2nd Edition, page 236, Section 165 (3), in stating the Shiah Isma'ili Law on this point has remarked as follows:—

[1] 41 Mad. 1026

[2] 80 I. C. 914

CIVIL

1932

QASIM HUSAIN BEG v. KANIZ SAKINA

Sulaiman, C. J.

The Shiah 'Ithna' Ashari authorities are agreed that the wife may re-claim the consideration paid by her for a 'khul' at any time during her 'iddat', and if she does so, the husband may revoke the 'khul' at his option.

The text of the Sharaya-ul Islam quoted by Mr. Shama Churun Sircar (Tagore Law Lectures, 1874) on Mohammedan Law, at page 412 is as follows:—

> When a woman's father says to her husband—"Divorce her, and thou art free from her dower", and he does divorce her, the divorce is valid re-vocably, and she is neither obliged to discharge her husband from the payment of the dower, nor is her father responsible.

There is another text:—

> If a stranger obtained Khula for a woman from her husband, it is valid, provided it was with her consent and authority, because the man acted only as her vakil, or agent.

As the husband cannot revoke the Khula after the expiry of the period of 'iddat', an irrevocable obligation is cast upon the wife to re-claim the consideration open to her within the same period so that the husband may have an equal option to put an end to the contract. Had there been no such irrevocable obligation it would have been grossly unfair to the husband that the Khula should stand as against him after the expiry of the period of 'iddat' and nevertheless the consideration for the Khula should be re-claimed by the wife after such an expiry. Surrender of the dower is a part of the contract of Khula and in the event of the consideration failing, there would be an option to revoke the Khula. It was open to the plaintiff to re-claim her dower, but she could not exercise the option after the expiry of the period which would automatically put an end to the husband's right to revoke the divorce.

There is no suggestion in this case that any such claim was put forward within the period of 'iddat' and as pointed out above the suit was not instituted till several years afterwards. We think that after the expiry of the period of 'iddat' the plaintiff's right to re-claim the dower which had been relinquished by her to her husband could not be exercised.

We accordingly allow the appeal, set aside the decree of the lower appellate court, and dismiss the plaintiff's suit with costs in all courts.

Appeal allowed

CIVIL

1932

April 19

KING, J.
THOM, J.

AZIZ ULLAH KHAN AND OTHERS (Applicants)

versus

THE COURT OF WARDS, SHAHJEHANPUR (Opposite party)*

Civil Procedure Code, Secs. 151, 152 and 153—Property mortgaged—Misdescribed in mortgage deed, plaint, decree, sale certificate and dakhalnama owing to accidental slip—Court empowered to make corrections necessary for ends of justice.

The language of Sec. 152 C. P. C. is wide enough to cover the correction of mistakes made by the parties themselves. The power of the court to make corrections necessary for the ends of justice is not confined only to powers exercisable under Sec. 152. Extensive powers may also be exercised under Secs. 151 and 153.

---

*Civ. Rev. 379 of 1931

CIVIL

1932

AZIZ ULLAH KHAN v. THE COURT OF WARDS, SHAHJEHANPUR

Where by an accidental slip the property mortgaged in village "Nawadiya Zamania Nagla" was described in the deed as "Nagla Zamania Nawadiya", but this misdescription was discovered only when the mortgagee, who in his suit upon the mortgage had purchased the property, obtained sale certificate and formal delivery of possession, applied for mutation, held, that this was eminently a case in which the accidental slip in the plaint, decree, sale certificate and dakhalnama should be corrected as the correction was necessary for the ends of justice. Sheo Balak Pathak v. Sukhdei, 12 A. L. J. 185 followed. Ram Chander Sarup v. Munshi Mazhar Husain, 51 I. C 55 distinguished.

CIVIL REVISION from an order of BABU LAKSHMI NARAIN TANDON, District Judge of Shahjehanpur.

Krishna Murari Lal for the applicants.

U. S. Bajpai for the opposite party.

The judgment of the Court was delivered by

King, J.

KING, J.—This is an application in revision against an order passed by the District Judge to the effect that a mortgage decree and certain connected documents be amended.

The applicant before us mortgaged certain zemindari property in a village called "Nawadiya Zamania Nagla", but by an accidental slip the property was described in the mortgage-deed as being situated in the village "Nagla Zamania Nawadiya". The words are the same, but the order has been inverted by an accidental slip. It is admitted that there is no village bearing the latter name or, at least, that there is no village of that name in which the mortgagor has or ever had any interest. There was never any doubt as to the identity of the mortgaged property.

The mortgagee brought a suit upon the basis of the mortgage, obtained a preliminary decree, which was upheld by the appellate court, obtained a final decree and brought the property to sale. The mortgagee himself purchased the property at the auction sale, obtained a sale certificate and obtained formal delivery of possession. Throughout all these proceedings the property was described erroneously as being situated in "Nagla Zamania Nawadiya" in accordance with the wording of the mortgage deed. It was not until the mortgagee, as auction-purchaser, applied to the revenue court to have his name mutated as purchaser of the share that the mistake came to light. The revenue court refused the application for mutation on the ground that the auction-purchaser, according to the sale certificate, had not purchased the property in Nawadiya Zamania Nagla.

The mortgagee then applied to the trial Judge asking him under Section 152 to amend the decree. The Subordinate Judge rejected the application on the ground that his decree had become merged in that of the District Judge and he had no jurisdiction to amend the decree. The mortgagee then applied to the District Judge for amendment of the decree and the connected proceedings, but the District Judge also held that he had no jurisdiction to decide the application as the applicant should have appealed from the order of the Subordinate Judge. The mortgagee then went up to the High Court in revision. A Bench of this Court decided that the District Judge had jurisdiction to hear and decide the application and

CIVIL
1932
AZIZ ULLAH KHAN
v.
THE COURT OF WARDS, SHAHJEHANPUR
King, J.

returned the application to him for disposal. The District Judge having taken evidence to satisfy himself that there was, in fact, a misdescription of the property, granted the application for amendment.

It has been argued before us, firstly, that the court below purports to take action under Section 152 of the Civil Procedure Code and that that section applies only to mistakes made by the court or by its ministerial officers and not to mistakes made by the parties to the suit. The language of that section is, in our opinion, wide enough to cover the correction of mistakes made by the parties themselves. The applicant has relied upon a decision of this Court: L. Ram Chander Sarup v. Munshi Mazhar Husain[1]. In the judgment of that case their Lordships remarked:

> Section 152 deals with amendments of clerical errors in orders or decrees of the court itself which are drawn up not properly representing what the court decides.

In our opinion, this decision can be distinguished upon the facts. The correction, which the applicant in that case desired, was not the correction of a mere misdescription of property but a very substantial amendment. The applicant had, as a creditor, filed a claim for Rs.3,418 against the insolvent and had supported his claim by an affidavit. His claim was allowed to that extent. About two years later, he applied to the Insolvency Court stating that the real amount of his debt was about Rs.6,000 and by mistake he had stated that it was only Rs.3,418. The Insolvency Court decided that there had been no mistake and that the debt should remain entered in the schedule at the amount claimed by the applicant himself. Subsequently the applicant made a second application for correction to the same Court. The Insolvency Court rejected the application and it was held in revision by a Bench of this Court that Section 152 did not apply so as to enable the Insolvency Court, in the circumstances of that case, to make the amendment desired. The amendment in that case was, as we have already noted, of a very different nature from the amendment now in question. It was a very substantial and important amendment which would involve taking further evidence to ascertain the correct amount of the debt. This ruling moreover cannot be taken as a clear authority for the proposition that the Court is unable to correct a mistake made by the parties themselves. In an earlier portion of the judgment, the Court observed:

> No doubt the Insolvency Court has the same jurisdiction that the ordinary courts of law possess under the Civil Procedure Code to correct any mistake either of a clerk or of the parties themselves upon a question of fact, when a mistake is established.

This ruling therefore is no clear authority against the action taken by the court below in making the amendment.

Another ruling, Bala Prasad v. Kanoo[2] has been cited to support the applicant's contention. In that case a certain field was mortgaged and in the mortgage deed the field was described by a wrong number. The error was not noticed by the parties throughout the proceedings in the subsequent mortgage suit and a decree was given for sale of the mortgaged property described by the wrong number. When the error was discovered in the course of the execution proceedings the decree-holder instituted a suit for amendment of the decree. It was held by a single Judge of the Judicial Commissioner's Court of Nagpur that the suit was maintainable. Incidentally the question was discussed whether the plaintiff had a remedy under Section 152 of the Civil Procedure Code. The learned Judge expressed a very hesitating opinion on that point:

[1] 51 I. C. 55

[2] 14 I. C. 407

> I am inclined to think that Section 152 applies to mistakes which had an origin not anterior to the filing of the suit.

With due deference to the learned Judge we see no reason why the plain and literal meaning of the words should be restricted in the manner suggested.

For the opposite party we have been referred to a ruling of this Court in Sheo Balak Pathak v. Sukhdei[3] in which the Court ordered the amendment of the proceedings starting from the plaint right down to the decree. We have also been referred to an unreported decision of a Bench of this Court (of which one of us was a member) in Rai Bahadur Doctor Sarju Kumar Mukerji v. Sheikh Enayat Husain (Civil Revision No. 148 of 1929, decided on July 11, 1930). The facts of that case were very similar to the facts of the case before us and the Court ordered the correction of the documents in question, namely, the plaint, the decree and other documents. We see no reason why these decisions of this Court should not be followed as they are in accordance with the ordinary meaning of the language in Section 152.

It has been further argued that the court below purports to act under Section 152 C. P. C. only and that that section can only apply in terms to the amendment of the decrees and not to the amendment of the plaint, sale certificate and dakhalnama. This contention, no doubt, is correct, but the power of the court to make corrections necessary for the ends of justice is not confined only to powers exercisable under Section 152. Extensive powers may be exercised also under Sections 151 and 153. We consider that this is eminently a case which the accidental slip should be corrected as the correction is necessary for the ends of justice.

A further objection raised on behalf of the applicant is that the District Judge had no jurisdiction to amend the final decree which was passed by the Subordinate Judge and was not appealed against. In answer to this, we think, it is enough to say that it has been decided between the parties by the order of the High Court that the District Judge had jurisdiction to dispose of this application upon the merits and this point cannot be raised at this stage.

The learned advocate for the applicant has also submitted that the District Judge had no jurisdiction to call for evidence to satisfy himself whether there had, in fact, been a misdescription of the property in the mortgage-deed. In our opinion, this contention has no force as under Section 95 of the Evidence Act the court had jurisdiction to call evidence for the purpose of showing that the mortgage-deed did, in fact, relate to the property in Nawadiya Zamania Nagla.

[3] 12 A. L. J. 185

Civil
1932
Aziz Ullah Khan
v.
The Court of Wards, Shahjehanpur
King, J.

This is a clear case of an accidental slip in the description of property. The misdescription was not even noticed by the parties throughout the whole course of the proceedings in the mortgage suit. There was never any doubt as to the identity of the property. In the circumstances we think this is clearly a case in which the court should exercise its inherent power of making such corrections as are necessary for the ends of justice. It would be a blot upon the judicial administration if the courts were powerless to do justice in a case of this sort, where corrections are necessary in order to give effect to the intentions of the parties themselves and to the true meaning of the mortgage decrees.

We dismiss the application with costs.

Application dismissed

Civil
1932
April 28
Iqbal Ahmad, J.

THE SECRETARY OF STATE FOR INDIA IN COUNCIL THROUGH THE AGENT, E. I. RAILWAY, CALCUTTA (Petitioner)

versus

KESHO PRASAD SHEO PRASAD, BELANGANJ, AGRA, THROUGH KESHO PRASAD (Opposite party)*

Railway Act (IX of 1890), Sec. 72—Goods despatched under Risk Note forms A and B—Diversion of route—Delay in delivery and shortage in weight—Damages—Whether loss occurred at particular time—Burden of proof on bailee.

The exemption from liability afforded to the railway administration by the risk note forms A and B is operative and available to the railway administration only during the transit on the ordinary route and once the goods are diverted from that route the protection afforded by these risk notes ends.

Where, owing to the mistake of the Railway Co., certain goods despatched under Risk Note Forms A and B were diverted from the ordinary route for a short distance with the result that their delivery was delayed at the destination and there was a shortage in weight, held, that the consignor was entitled to damages for the shortage, and the railway administration could not invoke to its aid the benefits of Forms A and B, and its responsibility must be judged by reference to the provisions of Sec. 72 of the Railway Act untrammelled by the stipulations contained in the forms. G. I. P. Ry. Co. v. Jugul Kishore Mukat Lal, 1930 A. L. J. 297 relied on.

When the goods are solely under the control of the bailee, the fact as to when loss, destination or deterioration occurred, is a matter especially within his knowledge and therefore the burden of proving that the loss occurred at a particular time and not subsequently must, in view of the provisions of Sec. 106 of the Evidence Act, be on him; and in the present case the railway administration did not prove that the loss occurred prior to the commencement of default on its part, viz., the diversion of goods from the ordinary route.

CIVIL REVISION from an order of MAULVI S. M. SAIDUDDIN, Judge of Small Cause Court of Agra.

U. S. Bajpai for the applicant.

B. Malik for the opposite party.

---

*Civ. Rev. 599 of 1931

The following judgment was delivered by

IQBAL AHMAD, J.—This is a defendant's application in revision, from a decree of the court of small causes, and arises out of a suit brought by the plaintiff for damages for shortage in the goods consigned by him.

There is no controversy about the facts. On September 30, 1929, 160 bags of sugar weighing about 420 maunds were despatched under risk note forms A and B from Kantapokar to Agra city. The usual time taken for the goods to arrive from Kantapokar to Agra city, if transmitted across the ordinary route, is 5 or 6 days. The wagon containing the goods was taken on the ordinary route up to Tundla, but, owing to a mistake, instead of being sent from there to Agra city it was sent to Aligarh. The wagon remained at Aligarh for some time and then the goods were unloaded and were ultimately despatched to Agra on October 31, 1929, where delivery under protest was taken by the plaintiff. The consignment, when delivered to the plaintiff, was about 30 maunds short in weight and the plaintiff claimed damages with respect to the same.

The defendant contested the suit inter alia on the ground that the loss did not arise from any misconduct on the part of the railway administration and that the loss was due to the fact that the bags in which the sugar was consigned were insecure, and that the railway administration was protected by risk note forms A and B.

The learned Judge of the court below overruled the pleas in defence and passed a decree in the plaintiff's favour.

The learned counsel for the applicant contends that, notwithstanding the diversion of the goods from the ordinary route for a short distance, the railway administration is protected by risk notes forms A and B, and, that even if it is not open to the railway administration to take protection under either of the risk notes forms A and B, the burden lay on the plaintiff to prove that the loss was due to the goods being diverted from the ordinary route and that the shortage in weight had not occurred up to Tundla and, as the plaintiff had failed to prove that fact, the suit should have been dismissed.

I am unable to agree with the contention of the learned counsel for the applicant. Risk Note form A is used when the consignment tendered for carriage is either in bad condition or is defectively packed and is consequently liable to damage, leakage or wastage in transit. In the present case the consignment was in single gunny bags hook marked and weak at seams, liable to tear or burst and to sweat in transit from inherent moisture and, by signing form A, the consignor undertook to hold the railway administration.

> harmless and free from all responsibility for the condition in which the aforesaid goods may be delivered to the consignee at destination and for any loss arising from the same except upon proof that such loss arose from misconduct on the part of the railway administration's servants.

The consignor, further, in consideration of the consignment being charged at a special reduced rate instead of at the ordinary tariff rate, agreed, by signing form B, to hold the railway administration > free from all responsibility for any loss, destruction or deterioration of, or damage to, the said consignment from any cause whatever except upon proof that such loss, destruction, deterioration or damage arose from the misconduct of the railway administration's servants.

It appears to me that the exemption from liability afforded to the railway administration by the risk note forms A and B is operative and available to the railway administration only during the transit on the ordinary route and once the goods are diverted from that route the protection afforded by these risk notes ends. In the absence of a clear and unambiguous stipulation to the contrary the presumption is that the consignor, at the time of consigning his goods, contemplates that the goods would be transmitted across the ordinary route within a reasonable time and the railway administration must, in such cases, always be deemed to have accepted the goods for despatch by the ordinary route. The contract evidenced by risk note forms A and B does not contemplate the carrying of the goods otherwise than by the ordinary route, and if there is a diversion from the ordinary route, it does not matter for what distance, the railway administration cannot invoke to its aid the benefits of the said forms. The decision of this Court in G. I. P. Railway Company v. Jugul Kishore Mukat Lal[1] is direct authority for the proposition that, where owing to a mistake or negligence on the part of the railway company's servants, the goods are diverted from the ordinary route, with the result that considerable delay takes place in the arrival of the goods at their destination thereby causing loss to the consignor, the protection given to the railway company by the risk note B ceases to be operative as soon as the goods are taken out of their ordinary route. But it is argued that notwithstanding the diversion of the goods, the railway company is entitled to invoke to its aid the benefit of form A. This argument is untenable. Neither in risk note form B nor in risk note form A there is any exemption from liability given to the railway administration for any loss arising from the delay in the delivery of the goods at its destination owing to the goods not being taken on the ordinary route, and it seems to me that the reasons assigned in the case noted above for depriving the railway administration of the benefits of form B apply with equal force to the case of form A. In short, I hold that the moment the consignment was despatched from Tundla to Aligarh the protection afforded to the defendant by forms A and B ended, and the responsibility of the defendant must be judged by reference to the provisions of Section 72 of the Railway Act untrammelled by the stipulations contained in the said forms.

By Section 72 the responsibility of the railway administration is, subject to the provisions of the Railway Act, that of a bailee under Sections 152 and 161 of the Indian Contract Act, 1872. Section 161 of the Contract Act imposes on the bailee the duty of delivering the goods to the bailor at the proper time and, if owing to the default of the bailee, the goods are not so delivered, he is responsible to the bailor for any loss, destruction or deterioration of the goods from the time that they ought to have been delivered. In the present case the fact that the goods were not, by default of the railway administration, delivered at the proper time at their destination is undisputed. It is also a fact that the goods were short in weight at the time of delivery. The shortage in weight must have occurred either during the transit of the goods up to Tundla or when they were despatched from Tundla to Aligarh and were lying there, or partly up to Tundla and partly after the despatch from Tundla. It is argued that as the goods were insecurely packed and were liable to leakage and wastage in transit, the plaintiff is not entitled to hold the defendant liable for the shortage in weight, unless and until he proves that there was no shortage in weight till the goods reached Tundla. In other words, it is contended that the default of the bailee commenced only from the time that the goods, instead of being sent to Agra city direct from Tundla, were despatched to Aligarh and not before, and that the plaintiff must, as a condition precedent to a decree in his favour, affirmatively prove that the loss arose subsequent to the commencement of the default by the bailee. The argument, though ingenious is without substance. From the time that the goods were delivered to the defendant for carriage they were in his custody and control. The plaintiff had no means of access to them, nor had any means of discovering the exact quantity of leakage or wastage as the goods passed over every mile of the railway line from the station that they were despatched. To call upon the plaintiff to prove that no shortage in weight occurred up to Tundla would be tantamount to ask the plaintiff to do something which is impossible, and would be to reduce the statutory liability of a bailee, as provided for by Section 162 of the Indian Contract Act, to an absolute farce. In my judgment the moment the default of a bailee, in circumstances like those of the present case, is established and his responsibility falls to be determined by Section 161 of the Indian Contract Act, the burden shifts on to him to prove that the loss, for which he is sought to be made responsible by the bailor, occurred prior to the commencement of the default on his part. When the goods are solely under the control of the bailee the fact as to when loss, destruction or deterioration occurred, is a matter specially within his knowledge and, therefore, the burden of proving that the loss occurred at a particular time and not subsequently must, in view of the provisions of Section 106 of the Indian Evidence Act, be on him.

---

[1] 1930 A. L. J. 297

In the present case there was no evidence called by the defendant to prove that the shortage in weight occurred before the goods arrived at Tundla and, therefore, the plaintiff was in law entitled to a decree for damages for the shortage in goods. I hold that the defendant was liable to answer the plaintiff's claim and the suit was rightly decreed. I dismiss this application with costs.

Application dismissed

CIVIL

1931

Dec. 18

SULAIMAN, J.
YOUNG, J.

LACHHMI NARAIN GIRDHARI LAL THROUGH LACHHMI NARAIN (Applicant)

versus

MANSA RAM MURLIDHAR THROUGH RAM SARAN (minor) UNDER THE GUARDIANSHIP OF SATLA PRASAD AND ANOTHER (Opposite party)*

Civil Procedure Code, Or. 21, R. 53(6) and Sec. 64—Decree-holder seeks to execute decree by attachment of another decree—Judgment-debtor of attached decree, who had applied for leave to appeal to Privy Council, compromises with his decree-holder, who accepts a reduced amount—Application for leave to appeal dismissed—Whether attaching creditor is bound by compromise.

A simple money decree-holder sought to execute his decree by the attachment of another decree for the payment of money, which his judgment-debtor had obtained against a third person. When these execution proceedings were taken, an application for leave to appeal to the Privy Council by the judgment-debtor bound by the decree attached was pending in the High Court, and he entered into a compromise with his decree-holder under which the decree-holder agreed to give up a portion of the decretal amount, and this compromise was filed in the High Court, and the reduced decretal amount having been paid, the High Court dismissed the application for leave to appeal to Privy Council.

Held, that the compromise, which was not invalid by virtue of the provisions of Sec. 64 C. P. C., was in the nature of an adjustment of the attached decree and came within the purview of Or. 21, R. 53(6) C. P. C., and no adjustment of the attached decree with notice or knowledge of such attachment can have any effect as against the attaching creditors.

EXECUTION FIRST APPEAL from a decree of BABU KAULESHAR NATH RAI, Judge of Small Cause Court, Cawnpore.

P. L. Banerji and S. N. Verma for the appellant.

U. S. Bajpai, S. N. Seth and Benod Behari Lal for the respondents.

The judgment of the Court was delivered by

Sulaiman, J.

SULAIMAN, J.—This is an appeal by certain attaching creditors. It appears that the appellants Lachhmi Narain Girdhari Lal held a money decree of the year 1925 against Ram Din Hazari Lal respondent No. 2 who had obtained another decree from the High Court in 1929 for Rs.11,750 against Mansa Ram Murli Dhar respondent No. 1. The High Court had varied the decree of the first court and an application for leave to appeal to their Lordships of the Privy Council was filed by Mansa Ram Murli Dhar in October 1929. While that application was pending, the appellants executed their own decree and got the decree of Ram Din Hazari Lal against Mansa Ram Murli Dhar attached by the execution court on March 29, 1930. The findings of the court below do not make it clear whether Mansa Ram Murli Dhar received notice or had knowledge of this attachment before May 23, 1930. On April 12, 1930 Lachhmi Narain Girdhari Lal who had attached the decree of Ram Din Hazari Lal applied for the execution of the latter's decree. While these execution proceedings were pending a written compromise was filed in the High Court on May 23, 1930 entered into between Ram Din Hazari Lal and Mansa Ram Murli Dhar upon which the decree-holders agreed to reduce the amount of the decree from Rs.11,750 to Rs.3,000 in full satisfaction of their claim. There were certain conditions put down in the compromise as regards the payment of the amount up to the time of the verification of the compromise in the court below. On June 28, 1930 Rs.3,000 were deposited in court by means of an application which stated that there were a number of attaching creditors including the present appellant. On a report from the court below having been received the High Court passed the following order:

---

*E. F. A. 442 of 1930

> Let the application in P. C. A. No. 41 of 1929 be dismissed without costs, the appellant having fulfilled the terms of the compromise which has been entered into between the parties and which has been duly verified. The result is that the decree against the applicant has been fully satisfied.

In the course of the execution proceedings the attaching creditors took up the position that the compromise entered into between Ram Din Hazari Lal the decree-holders and Mansa Ram Murli Dhar the judgment-debtors, was in no way binding upon the attaching creditors as the decree had been attached. The court below has overruled this contention and has come to the conclusion that the deposit having been made for payment to the attaching creditors with the consent of the High Court and there being nothing to show that the compromise was collusive, the decree must be deemed to have been fully satisfied.

The attaching creditors have appealed and it is urged on their behalf that the compromise does not in any way affect their right.

The agreement between the decree-holders and the judgment-debtors to reduce the amount decreed by the High Court was in the nature of an adjustment of their claim because the application for leave to appeal to their Lordships of the Privy Council was pending and in that sense the High Court's decree had not become absolutely final. The case therefore does not strictly speaking fall within the scope of Section 64 C. P. C.; for in this case there was neither any private transfer nor delivery of the property attached nor of any interest therein or any payment to the judgment-debtor of any debt or money etc. It was on the face of it a compromise of a doubtful claim in order to put a stop to further litigation. The agreement of May 23, 1930 would therefore not be invalid by virtue of the provisions of Section 64 C. P. C.

Order 21, Rule 53 prescribes the method in which a decree of another court can be attached. The attachment is made by the issue to such court of a notice by the court which passed the decree requesting such court to stay the execution of its decree unless the notice be cancelled, or the holder of the decree sought to be executed applies to the court receiving such notice to execute its own decree. Sub-rule (6) provides that on the application for attachment having been given the court shall give notice of such order to the judgment-debtor bound by the decree attached and no payment or adjustment of the attached decree made by the judgment-debtor in contravention of such order after receipt of notice or of knowledge

CIVIL
1931
LACHHMI NARAIN GIRDHARI LAL
v.
MANSA RAM MURLIDHAR
Sulaiman, J.

thereof, either through the court or otherwise shall be recognised by any court so long as the attachment remains in force.

It is therefore clear that no payment or adjustment of the attached decree with notice or knowledge of such attachment can have any effect as against the attaching creditors.

Order 22, Rule 10 provides that in other cases of an assignment, creation or devolution of any interest the proceeding in a suit may be continued by or against the person to or upon whom such interest has come or devolved. Sub-rule (2) provides that > the attachment of a decree pending an appeal therefrom shall be deemed to be an interest entitling the person who procured such attachment to the benefit of Sub-rule (1).

It follows that if leave for appeal to their Lordships of the Privy Council had been granted, the attaching creditors might have applied to be impleaded as a party to the appeal. Ram Din Hazari Lal's decree having been attached, they were no longer free to deal with the subject-matter of the litigation and agree to give up a portion of the decretal amount to the prejudice of the attaching creditors without their consent and behind their back. There is no doubt that the compromise was in the nature of an adjustment of the attached decree and came within the purview of Order 21, Rule 53(6) C. P. C.

There is also no doubt that the adjustment was made on May 23, 1930 when the written application was filed and it cannot be deemed to have been kept in abeyance till the payment was made in pursuance of it.

A somewhat similar case came up for consideration before a bench of the Lahore High Court in Rattan Lal Sultan Singh v. Bishan Sahai Bhagwan Das[1] where also a compromise had been effected agreeing to receive a certain sum from the judgment-debtors in full satisfaction of the decree. The attaching creditors had however been impleaded in the suit and were no parties to the compromise. The bench held that in view of the provisions of Order 21, Rule 53(6) C. P. C. the alleged settlement cannot bind the attaching creditors as the attachment was still in force and the attaching creditors were not aware of the proceedings to get the satisfaction of the decree recorded by the court. In the present case the attaching creditors had not been impleaded at all. But that in our opinion does not make any difference. As a matter of fact it is startling circumstance that in the High Court notice was specifically drawn by counsel to the matter that the decree had been previously attached by the other creditors.

After the passing of the decree the High Court became functus officio and could not modify the decree or pass an order superseding it. If after payment of the appeal had been allowed by their Lordships of the Privy Council and the decree varied, the order would undoubtedly have been binding on the attaching creditors. But no order was passed by any competent court superseding the previous decree and the mere fact that the application for leave to appeal to their Lordships of the Privy Council was dismissed on the ground that a certain compromise had been entered into is not tantamount to a fresh order superseding the decree and passing a

[1] I. L. R. 10 Lah. 143

CIVIL
1931
LACHHMI NARAIN GIRDHARI LAL
v.
MANSA RAM MURLIDHAR
Sulaiman, J.

fresh decree in terms of the compromise. Such an order was not and could not have been passed. The parties before the High Court were agreed that the matter had been compromised and the terms of the compromise had been carried out. The High Court accordingly dismissed the application for leave to appeal summarily. The compromise was at best in the nature of a private agreement between the parties out of court and cannot have any higher effect. For the purposes of execution it was an adjustment of the attached decree which without notice or knowledge of the attachment could not in any way effect the rights of the attaching creditors, and could not be recognised by the execution court at all so long as the attachment remained in force.

As pointed out above there is no clear finding that the original judgment-debtors Mansa Ram Murli Dhar had notice or knowledge of the attachment of the decree of Ram Din Hazari Lal which had been passed against them, before they entered into the compromise of May 23, 1930. In order that Order 21, Rule 53 (6) may apply it is necessary to have a clear finding that they had such notice or knowledge of the attachment. We accordingly send down the following issue to the court below for determination:

1. Did the judgment-debtor of the attached decree, namely, the proprietor of Mansa Ram Murli Dhar have notice or knowledge through the court or otherwise, of the attachment by Lachhmi Narain Girdhari Lal of the decree of Ram Din Hazari Lal against the firm, on or before May 23, 1930?

As this is a fresh issue which is being sent down for determination, the parties will be at liberty to adduce fresh evidence. The findings should be returned within two months from this date if practicable. On receipt of the finding the usual ten days will be allowed for objections.

Issue remitted

CIVIL
1932
June 22
MUKERJI, J.
BENNETT, J.

KISHUN PIYARI AND ANOTHER (Defendants)
versus
GOPAL NARAIN (Plaintiff)*

Hindu Law—Widow—Right of residence in husband's house—Ancestral house mortgaged by son—Suit for sale on mortgage—Widow entitled to claim, as against auction-purchaser, a right to reside in a suitable portion of house.

A Hindu after mortgaging the ancestral house, made a gift of the house in favour of his mother. Later he along with his mother executed a second mortgage over the property. On a suit for sale of the house on the basis of the mortgages, the lower court made a decree jointly on the two mortgages and stated that the question of the right of residence of the mother did not arise at that stage of the proceedings. Held, that the mortgage decree as given by the court below should be split up and the two amounts separately payable under each decree should be shown. It would be open to the parties to the second mortgage to pay it off, and leave the plaintiff to bring the property to sale on the first mortgage. If this happens the mother would be entitled to claim, as against the auction-purchaser, a right to reside in a suitable portion of the house, having regard to the nature of the property and her requirements. The question as to what portion of the house, the right of residence of the mother should be confined, will be determined by the court executing the decree, after the sale has taken place.

---

*F. A. 138 of 1930

FIRST APPEAL from a decree of BABU MAHESHWAR PRASAD, Subordinate Judge of Allahabad.

N. U. A. Siddiqi for the appellants.

U. S. Bajpai and Ram Nama Prasad for the respondents.

The judgment of the Court was delivered by

Mukerji, J.

MUKERJI, J.—The appeal was originally filed by two ladies Kishun Piari and Sundar. Kishun Piari has died, and nobody has been brought on the record in her place. So the appeal has abated to that extent. The other appellant is Mst. Sundar, and her contention is that she has a right of residence in the property ordered to be sold, and we have to consider how far this contention is correct.

The facts appear to be these. Bishun Lal, the defendant No. 1, is related to the other defendants in this way. His wife was Ramdebi by whom Bishun Lal has a daughter Mst. Kamla, defendant No. 2. Mst. Kishun Piari, the deceased appellant and the defendant No. 3, was the sister of Bishun Lal. Defendant No. 4, Mst. Sunder, is the mother of Bishun Lal.

Bishun Lal mortgaged the house in question for a sum of Rs.5,000 in favour of the plaintiff by the mortgage of March 2, 1929. Then he made a gift of the house in favour of his wife, his sister and mother. Thereafter, concealing the fact that he had made a gift of the property, Bishun Lal borrowed further money on promissory notes from the plaintiff. It was eventually agreed that for the further advance of Rs.1,400 Bishun Lal, his mother, his sister and his wife should give a second mortgage over the property, and this mortgage was executed on April 19, 1926. Ramdebi being dead, her daughter Mst. Kamla has been brought on the record.

The plaintiff claimed two sums of money, namely, Rs.7,059-12-3 on the first mortgage and Rs.1,949-5-0 on the second mortgage. The two mortgages being distinct and the executants not being the same it was not quite correct on the part of the plaintiff to ask for a joint decree in respect of the joint sum of Rs.9,009-1-3.

Several defences were raised to the suit by Mst. Kishun Piari and Mst. Sundar. They having failed, the learned Subordinate Judge made a decree jointly on the two mortgages for a sum of Rs.10,000 and odd which includes interests and costs.

Mst. Kishun Piari and Mst. Sundar appealed against the whole decree, but they failed to pay the court-fee due on the amount decreed. The appeal was accordingly confined to the right of residence, if any, of Mst. Sundar. We have, therefore, to take it that the two mortgages have been proved to have been made for consideration and are binding on the mortgagors and their representatives.

The argument before us is that Mst. Sundar has a right of residence in her husband's house and that right cannot be taken away by her son executing a mortgage. The right of residence that does exist in Mst. Sundar was recognised by the court below, but the learned Judge stated that the question did not arise at that stage of the proceedings.

The fact that Mst. Sundar took a gift for her son cannot impair her right of residence. If the second mortgage be paid off, Mst. Sundar's right of residence in the house would remain unaffected by the earlier mortgage of March 2, 1926.

We are of opinion that the mortgage decree as given by the court below should be split up and the two amounts separately payable under each decree should be shown. It would be open to the parties to the second mortgage to pay it off if they be so advised and leave the plaintiff to bring the property to sale on the first mortgage. If this happens, the mother, Mst. Sundar, would be entitled to claim, as against the auction-purchaser, a right to reside in a suitable portion of the house, having regard to the nature of the property and her requirements. In view of these considerations, we modify the decree of the court below as follows:—

A fresh decree will be prepared in this Court which will state separately the amount due on each of the mortgages up to six months from this date which we fix for payment. Each mortgage will carry interest at the stipulated rate up to the said six months and thereafter at 6 per cent per annum. A decree will be framed under Order 34, Rule 4 C. P. C. costs being calculated proportionately to each item decreed. Thus the amount which would be proportionate to the larger amount of the decree will be added to that amount and the smaller portion of the costs to the smaller amount. If Mst. Sundar or any of the other defendants pay off the mortgage, Mst. Sundar will have a right of residence in the house or such portion of it as may be suitable. The question as to what portion of the house, the right of Mst. Sundar's residence should be confined, will be determined by the court executing the decree, after the sale has taken place. If the second mortgage is paid off, the property will be sold in execution of the first mortgage alone. Having regard to the facts of this case, we direct that the parties will pay their own costs of this appeal and the order as to costs in the court below will stand subject to the modification indicated above.

Decree modified

CIVIL
1932
April 13
PULLAN, J.
NIAMAT-ULLAH, J

SHIYAM DEI (Plaintiff)

versus

BANKEY LAL AND OTHERS (Defendants)*

Civil Procedure Code, Sec. 80—Insolvent—Receiver—District Judge, on being moved by creditors, orders receiver to attach property alleged to be insolvent's —Receiver attaches property—Plaintiff sues for a declaration that property belongs to him—Whether notice to receiver necessary.

Where, in the first instance, plaintiff sued for a declaration that a deed of gift executed by her be set aside as it was obtained from her by fraud; but finding that the property in respect of which the gift had been executed, had been attached by the official receiver of an insolvent's estate under order of the District Judge, who was moved by the creditors, as the property of the insolvent, the plaintiff claimed a second declaration that the property gifted belonged to her and could not be attached, and she made the donees, the receiver and the creditors parties to the suit, held:—

---

*F. A. 333 of 1928

Per Pullan, J.—that the cause of action arose from the execution of the deed of gift and in the first instance the plaintiff sought relief against the donees who had defrauded her, and as the receiver was impleaded in order that the plaintiff may obtain an ancillary relief, no notice to the receiver under Sec. 80 C. P. C. was necessary.

Per Niamatullah, J.—that the first relief claimed by the plaintiff was clearly one which had no reference to any act done by the receiver; and as regards the second relief, the suit cannot be considered to be one in respect of any act done by the receiver, the material portion of the plaintiff's cause of action having arisen from the act done by the creditors in successfully moving the District Judge to treat the property as the property of the insolvent, and notice to the receiver under Sec. 80 C. P. C. was therefore not necessary.

Skippers and Co., Ltd. v. E. V. David, I. L. R. 48 All. 821 relied on.

First Appeal from a decree of Maulvi S. Iftikhar Husain, Subordinate Judge of Pilibhit.

B. Malik for the appellant.

P. L. Banerji, S. Majid Ali, S. N. Seth and Ram Narain Verma for the respondents.

The following judgments were delivered:—

Pullan, J.

Pullan, J.—The plaintiff-appellant Musammat Shiyam Dei filed this suit on July 31, 1927, praying for a declaration that a deed of gift executed by her in favour of two persons Bankey Lal and Bishunath on June 10, 1926, had been obtained by fraud and should be cancelled, and she also sought as an ancillary relief for a declaration that the house purporting to be transferred by her in that deed of gift was her own property and could not be attached or sold in satisfaction of a decree or in satisfaction of any debt due by Nanhoon Mal insolvent who was the father of the alleged donees. The plaintiff impleaded the donees, the official receiver of Nanhoon Mal's estate and two creditors of Nanhoon Mal, on whose application he had been declared an insolvent and who had applied for the attachment of the house in suit by their application dated February 18, 1927.

The plaintiff's suit has been dismissed by the Subordinate Judge on his finding that the suit is barred as against the official receiver by Section 80 of the Code of Civil Procedure. It does not appear to me that this finding would necessarily bring the suit to an end for the main question raised by the plaintiff was her right to have the deed of gift executed by herself in favour of defendants 1 and 2 set aside and clearly she might be entitled to a decree as against them even if she failed to establish her case that the property could not be attached and sold in respect of a debt due by the insolvent Nanhoon Mal. But I am not of opinion that Section 80 of the Code of Civil Procedure should be applied to this suit. Section 80 lays down that no suit shall be instituted against a public officer in respect of any act purporting to be done by such public officer in his official capacity until the expiration of two months after notice in writing has been given. I do not consider that this is a suit instituted against a public officer

CIVIL
1932
SHIYAM DEI
v.
BANKEY LAL
Pullan, J.

in respect of an act purporting to be done by him in his official capacity. The suit is not one of the same nature as that to which the learned Subordinate Judge has referred and which is reported in Murari Lal v. E. V. David[1]. In that case the brothers of an insolvent brought a suit against the official receiver who had taken charge of the estate, claiming a two-thirds share of the house which was alleged by the official receiver to be part of the estate of the insolvent. This was clearly a case brought against the official receiver in respect of an act done by him in his official capacity. The present suit might have been brought even though the official receiver had taken no action whatever in respect of the property. The cause of action arose from the execution of a deed of gift which the plaintiff alleged to have been obtained from her by fraud, and in the first instance she sought relief against the donees who had defrauded her. The second portion of the relief claimed is no doubt directed in a manner against the official receiver as the plaintiff found that the property had been placed under attachment. But I am not prepared to find that every suit in which an official receiver is impleaded in order that the plaintiff may obtain an ancillary relief can be set aside on the ground that notice has not been given to the official receiver under Section 80 of the Code of Civil Procedure. Our attention has been drawn to a case reported in Skippers & Company Ltd. v. E. V. David[2], in which it was held > that Section 80 C. P. C. would not apply to a suit against an official receiver, where the suit was really a suit to establish and realize a charge over property, and the official receiver was impleaded not on account of any specific action taken by him in respect of the property concerned but merely because he was for the time being in charge of it.

It may be that in the present case the plaintiff was induced to file a suit because it came to her notice that the property was in danger owing to the action of the official receiver, but her cause of action was not what the official receiver had done but what she herself had been induced to do by the other defendants.

In my opinion this case should be sent back to the lower court for a decision on the other issues.

Niamat-ullah, J.

NIAMATULLAH, J.—I entirely agree and would add a few words of my own in support of the conclusions arrived at by my learned brother.

The appeal has to be decided on the allegations to be found in the plaint as the suit has been dismissed on the preliminary ground, namely, that the notice under Section 80 C. P. C. was not given to the third defendant, the receiver of the estate of the insolvent Nanhoon Mal. It is alleged in the plaint that the plaintiff is the widow of the insolvent's brother's son who was separate from the insolvent, a partition having taken place in the family long before the present controversy arose and that the property in dispute belonged exclusively to her husband on whose death it devolved upon her as his widow. As regards the deed of gift, the plaintiff's case is that it was obtained from her by practice of fraud, and that she became aware of the deed on March 9, 1927. The plaint proceeds to mention that defendants 4 and 5, the creditors of the insolvent, applied to the District Judge for attachment and sale of the property to which the deed of gift relates alleging that the same belonged to the insolvent. The application was granted by the District Judge under whose order the third defendant, the receiver, attached the property as belonging to the insolvent. On these allegations the plaintiff seeks two reliefs (1) a declaration that the deed of gift dated June 10, 1926, in favour of defendants 1 and 2 is void having been obtained by practice of fraud and by concealment of its real nature from the plaintiff, and (2) that the property to which the deed of gift relates is not liable to be attached and sold for satisfaction of the debts due to defendants 4 and 5.

---

[1] 22 A. L. J. 1116

[2] I. L. R. 48 All. 821

It should be observed that beyond a reference to the fact that the receiver attached the property on the application of defendants 4 and 5, no action of his is referred to or impugned in the plaint.

Section 80 of the Code of Civil Procedure, which requires two months' notice to be given in certain cases, can apply if the suit is "against a public officer in respect of any act purporting to be done by such public officer in his official capacity". It is clear to me that notice required by this Section is not necessary in every case in which a public officer is impleaded as a defendant. The suit must be against him in respect of any act purporting to be done by him in his official capacity which, in my opinion, implies that the plaintiff's cause of action is essentially based on some act attributable to the public officer. If the act of the public officer is not an essential part of the cause of action disclosed by the plaint, though having regard to his position in relation to the subject-matter of the suit, he is a necessary party, no notice is necessary. Skippers & Company Ltd. v. E. V. David[8], affords a clear instance in which the receiver was a necessary party and yet no notice under Section 80 C. P. C. was held to be necessary.

The present suit is of a declaratory character and is clearly based on Section 42 of the Specific Relief Act which provides that "any person entitled to any legal character, or to any right as to any property, may institute a suit against any person denying, or interested to deny, his title to such character or right." For the reasons given by my learned brother, the first relief claimed by the plaintiff is clearly one which has no reference to any act done by the receiver. As regards the second relief, I am of opinion that the application of defendants 4 and 5 to the District Judge alleging that the property in question belonged to the insolvent Nanhoon Mal, which implies a denial of the plaintiff's right, if read with the order of the District Judge granting it, afforded a good cause of action to the plaintiff for the declaration claimed by her. To a suit of this kind the insolvent is a necessary party, but as the insolvent's estate is vested in the receiver, the latter had to be impleaded. The attachment made by the receiver under the orders of the District Judge passed on the application of the creditors is merely the result of the successful denial by defendants 4 and 5 of the title of the plaintiff. In substance the suit is like an action contemplated by Order XXI, Rule 63 C. P. C. The only difference is that the debtor in this case is an insolvent and has to be represented by the official receiver whereas in a suit under Order XXI, Rule 63 the debtor

---

[8] I. L. R. 48 All. 821

CIVIL
1932
SHIYAM DEI v. BANKEY LAL
Niamat-ullah, J.

can himself be impleaded as a party to defend his title as against the rival claimant. A suit brought in the circumstances stated above cannot be considered to be one in respect of any act done by the receiver, the material part of the plaintiff's cause of action having arisen from the act done by the creditors in successfully moving the District Judge to treat it as the property of the insolvent.

Murari Lal v. E. V. David[4] was a case in which the suit was necessitated by the act of the receiver and it was his act which was alleged to afford a cause of action to the plaintiff. The only defendant was the receiver.

In DeSilva v. Govind Balwant[5] the only point decided was that a receiver appointed in an insolvency proceeding is a public officer within the meaning of Section 80 C. P. C. No question was raised as to whether the suit was in respect of an act purporting to have been done by a public servant in his official capacity. It was apparently common ground that if the receiver was a public officer within the meaning of Section 80 C. P. C. notice was necessary. It should be noticed that in this case also the only defendant was the receiver.

For the reasons stated above, I concur with my learned colleague in the order which he proposes to pass.

BY THE COURT—The appeal is allowed. The order of the lower court dismissing the suit on a preliminary issue is set aside. The case is sent back to the lower court for retrial on the main issues under Order XLI, Rule 23 C. P. C. Costs will abide the event. The appellant is entitled to a refund of court-fee under Section 13 of the Court Fees Act.

Appeal allowed
Case remanded

---

[4] 22 A. L. J. 1116

[5] I. L. R. 44 Bom. 895

CRIMINAL
1932
April 13
KENDALL, J.

KING-EMPEROR

versus

SOHAN AND OTHERS*

Criminal Procedure Code, Sec. 236, and Penal Code, Secs. 302 and 201—Persons charged with offence of murder—Evidence insufficient to prove participation in murder—Whether can be charged and convicted of an offence under Sec. 201.

Where a number of people are charged with carrying out a massacre in the course of a riot, and not with any individual act, or with throwing live persons into a river in the course of a transaction which otherwise amounted to an offence under Sec. 201 I. P. C., and the evidence was insufficient to prove their participation in the murder, they could be charged and convicted of the offence under Sec. 201 I. P. C.

Begu and others v. King-Emperor, 23 A. L. J. 636 relied on.

CRIMINAL APPEAL from an order of H. J. COLLISTER ESQ., Sessions Judge of Cawnpore.

A. Hoon, Saila Nath Mukerji and Basudeva Mukerji for the appellants.

Sankar Saran (Government Pleader) for the Crown.

*Cr. A. 908 of 1931

CRIMINAL

1932

KING-EMPEROR
v.
SOHAN

Kendall, J.

These appeals arose from a case in which thirty persons were charged under Sec. 302|149 I. P. C. and other sections with perpetrating a series of massacres. The portion of the judgment dealing with the question of law raised in the appeal is reproduced below.

KENDALL, J.—Mr. Mukerji for the defence has addressed to me a legal argument on this part of the case, to the effect that persons who are charged with the principal offence of murder cannot also be charged and convicted of the offence of causing evidence of the murder to disappear and in this contention he has quoted the cases of Empress of India v. Kishna and another[1], Queen-Empress v. Lalli[2], Queen-Empress v. Dungar[3] and Torap Ali v. Queen-Empress[4]. Of these cases the most important is Queen-Empress v. Lalli, as that is a Bench decision of this Court in which the finding was that

> The person who is concerned as a principal cannot be convicted of the secondary offence of concealing evidence of the crime.

Whether these decisions would apply in a case like the present, where a number of people are charged with carrying out a massacre in the course of a riot, and not with any individual act, or with throwing live persons into a river in the course of a transaction which otherwise amounted to an offence under Section 201, appears to me to be a matter of grave doubt. In a more recent decision of the Calcutta High Court, Teprinessa v. Emperor[5] it has been held by a Bench of two Judges that where, notwithstanding circumstances of grave suspicion, it is impossible on the record, as it stands, to hold that a person is the murderer or one of the murderers, his conviction under Sections 201 and 203 of the Indian Penal Code is not vitiated by the existence of such circumstances. That is precisely the case here. Still more important, however, is a recent decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council which has been referred to by the learned Sessions Judge. In the case of Begu v. King-Emperor[6] at a trial of five accused persons on a charge of murder, the High Court of Lahore had held that two of the accused intended to kill the deceased and were guilty of murder, and as to the remaining three the evidence was insufficient to prove their participation in the murder, but they had removed the body, and the court convicted them of that offence. That again is a case the facts of which appear to be closely analogous to those of the present one, and their Lordships held that the convictions were legal. It is true that the matter for decision was whether the accused could be convicted of the offence of removing the body although there had been no separate charge in respect of that offence. Their Lordships however referred to Sections 236 and 237 of the Criminal Procedure Code and held that the procedure of the courts in India had been a proper procedure. I have therefore no doubt whatever that the convictions under Section 201 of the Indian Penal Code are not bad in law.

[1] I. L. R 2 All. 713

[2] I. L. R. 7 All. 749

[3] I. L. R 8 All 252

[4] I. L. R 22 Cal 633

[5] I. L. R. 46 Cal. 427

[6] 23 A L. J. 636

Civil

1932

April 14

Boys, J.
Niamatullah, J.

THE DISTRICT BOARD OF FARRUKHABAD AND OTHERS (Applicants) versus IKHLAQUE HUSAIN (Plaintiff)*

Civil Procedure Code, Sec. 115 (c)—Interpretation of—When High Court can interfere.

Per Boys, J.—Under Sec. 115, Clause (c) C. P. C. any illegality or material irregularity may be a basis for revising the order of the lower court, and it is left entirely to the Revision Court, to determine whether there has been such illegality or material irregularity as will dispose it to interfere. If a question of jurisdiction is involved, the Court may act under Clause (a) or (b).

Per Niamatullah, J.—In view of authoritative judicial pronouncements the words of Sec. 115 (c) must be interpreted as implying that a mere error of law in deciding a case cannot be said to be an illegal or irregular exercise of jurisdiction. Raja Amir Hasan Khan v. Sheo Baksh Singh, 11 I. A. 237 and Yad Ram v. Sardar Singh, I. L. R. 45 All. 425.

Civil Revision from an order of Maulvi Syed Iftikhar Husain, District Judge of Farrukhabad.

U. S. Bajpai and G. S. Pathak for the applicants.

K. Verma, Mansur Alam and Krishna Murari Lal for the opposite party.

The following judgments were delivered:—

Boys, J.

Boys, J.—This matter came before me first of all sitting alone, and I referred it to a Bench of two judges, principally with the view to get a more binding interpretation, than would be the case when I sit alone, of Clause (c) of Section 115 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

It is a defendant's application in revision arising out of a suit by a plaintiff (a) for a declaration that the plaintiff was secretary of the District Board, and (b) for an injunction restraining the Board from interfering with the exercise by him of the duties of secretary.

The plaintiff eventually withdrew his prayer for a declaration on an objection being taken that he had given no notice to the Secretary of State. The Munsif refused to grant a temporary injunction for which the plaintiff also asked. On appeal to the District Judge, that court eventually gave the plaintiff a temporary injunction, and hence the defendant's present application in revision. The grounds are two-fold: first, that no appeal lay to the District Judge; secondly, that no temporary injunction should be given except in accordance with certain principles which were in effect stated to be capable of description as the principles applying to the grant of a perpetual injunction.

A third ground was pressed, largely no doubt in consequence of a suggestion made from the Bench, that there were some grounds for thinking that the learned Judge had not approached the case exercising a judicial discretion.

---

*Civ. Rev. 558 of 1931

As to the first ground that no appeal lies, the plaintiff's counsel in support of his right to file an appeal to the District Judge relies upon Order XXXIX, Rule 2, Order XLIII, Rule 1, Sub-section (r), and Lachhmi Narain v. Ram Charan Das[1]. I am satisfied that an appeal did lie.

As to the second and third points, a preliminary objection was of course raised that no revision lies. I say "of course raised" because it is raised in perhaps three out of four of the cases before this Court on the Revisional Side, and it was agreed before me by counsel on both sides, and has been agreed in numerous other cases before me, that it is utterly impossible to reconcile the various rulings, even by this Court, on the subject.

In considering the scope of Section 115, I think it is important to appreciate the meaning of the word "jurisdiction" for it is very frequently used as if it and the word "power" cannot be the same. I had occasion in another place to make a careful study of the scope of these words "jurisdiction" and "power" and of the related phrases "court of competent jurisdiction", "court competent to try" and "not empowered by law", and I came to the conclusion, and I have not since seen any reason to depart from that conclusion, that the characteristics of jurisdiction are merely:—

(a) power to deal with offences or matters of the class in question;

(b) power to deal with persons of the class in question. In some cases it has been suggested that the question of revenue is also a determining factor of jurisdiction, but that is not now the better opinion. The word "jurisdiction" has therefore in legal parlance a special signification though it is frequently used in judgments as if it connoted the same as "power". Frequently the word "jurisdiction" is merely used loosely for "power" and the decision would be the same, if the word "power" were substituted. In other cases where a court has found that a defect was so serious as to be normally incapable of remedy, it has been led to speak of the matter as if it was one of "jurisdiction". I may give a simple illustration of the distinction. A court may have power to hear an appeal in a particular matter, and it may have power over the particular persons concerned, it has then jurisdiction to hear the appeal, but if it proceeds to allow the appeal without giving notice to the other side, it has here exercised a power not vested in it.

The first two Clauses (a) and (b) of Section 115 have, so far as I am aware, seldom given rise to any difficulty, even where the distinction between "jurisdiction" and "power" has not been noted. It is the interpretation by the courts of Clause (c) in an effort to restrict the scope of this Clause which has given rise to difficulty. I have been referred by the opposite party here to a decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Balakrishna Udayar v. Vasudeva Ayyar[2] where at page 799 they say that the point taken exception to must be one "involving jurisdiction." Again, two Judges of this Court in Yad Ram v. Sundar Singh[3], have used phraseology to the effect that the irregularity must occur "in the matter of jurisdiction", "in relation to the question of jurisdiction". I trust that I am not failing in the respect that is due to these pronouncements when I point out that none of these phrases occur in Section 115. They are paraphrases of the words in the section. But at the same time I am manifestly bound to give effect to phrases used by their Lordships of the Privy Council, to the best of my ability.

---

[1] I. L. R. 35 All. 425

I confess that I am unable to understand, and therefore I am unable to apply, the distinction between a court assuming jurisdiction not vested in it [Sub-clause (a)] or failing to exercise jurisdiction vested in it [Sub-clause (b)] and on the other hand a court committing an illegality or irregularity "involving" jurisdiction.

A court must either have jurisdiction or not have it. If any of the elements of jurisdiction are missing, it has no jurisdiction. I am unable to appreciate how an irregularity can involve or affect jurisdiction or relate to jurisdiction without destroying that jurisdiction; it cannot destroy, so to speak, a percentage of the jurisdiction and not destroy it wholly. Nor is counsel for the respondent able to suggest any such case. He has suggested that if a court is hearing a case under Order XLI, Rule 11, which it has jurisdiction to hear, and considering the appeal to be a good one, instead of merely admitting and issuing a notice, decrees the appeal without hearing the other side, it has committed a material irregularity involving its jurisdiction. I cannot accept this as a true proposition. The court had full and complete jurisdiction and was exercising it, but in the exercise of its jurisdiction it was having recourse to a "power" which it was not granted by statute. Its jurisdiction was in no way "involved". It was merely exercising its jurisdiction and was committing a material irregularity while exercising that jurisdiction. The case would come within Section 115, Clause (c) not because the irregularity "involved" jurisdiction but because it was a very material irregularity, though no complaint could be made as regards jurisdiction. I would therefore hold that in considering Clause (c) all that the Legislature requires is, that the Court should consider whether the court below having jurisdiction in the matter, did in the exercise of its jurisdiction act illegally or with material irregularity. Any illegality or material irregularity may be a basis for revising the order of the lower court, and it is left entirely to the Revision Court to determine whether there has been such illegality or material irregularity as will dispose it to interfere. If a question of jurisdiction is involved, the court may act under Clause (a) or (b).

I have now to apply these considerations to the present case. The second point as I have set out above urged on behalf of the applicant here is that the lower appellate court did not decide the question whether a temporary injunction should be granted on the basis of certain principles alleged to be applicable to the grant of temporary injunctions, and when

[2] I. L. R. 40 Mad. 793

[3] I. L. R. 45 All. 425

Civil

1932

The District Board of Farrukhabad v Ikhlaque Husain

Boys, J.

counsel was asked what those principles are, he was forced to admit that the only principles which he could suggest were those which were applicable to perpetual injunctions. I am of opinion that there is no force in this contention. Order XXXIX provides for the granting of temporary injunctions, and Rule 2, Sub-rule (2) is particularly applicable.

> The court may by order grant such injunction, on such terms as to the duration of the injunction, keeping an account, giving security, or otherwise, as the court thinks fit.

Now Chapter IX of the Specific Relief Act deals with injunctions generally. As regards temporary injunctions, Section 53 expressly provides that they are regulated by the Code of Civil Procedure. Chapter X lays down a number of conditions involving the grant of perpetual injunctions. It would be strange indeed if the Legislature deliberately distinguished between temporary and perpetual injunctions in the Specific Relief Act, and yet it intended the very conditions which it applied to perpetual injunctions to be applied to temporary injunctions. In this contention therefore of the applicant here, I think there is no force.

The last point to which it is necessary to refer is the contention that the learned Judge did not apply a judicial discretion to the determination of the matter before him. The judgment does bear indications of haste and that the learned Judge did not deal with the matter quite so carefully as is his habit. But taking the judgment as a whole, I am not prepared to go so far as to hold that he did not really exercise a judicial discretion. The appearances on the face of the judgment, which lent some support to the contention may be only due to haste. In any event this does not call for a more careful examination, in view of the fact that the plaintiff has actually been reinstated to his position as Secretary of the District Board. This is aparently due to the fact that a new Board has been elected.

Mr. Gopal Sarup Pathak, who says that he appears both on behalf of Chhotay Lal, the rival quondam secretary, and also on behalf of the District Board, says that he was instructed by Chhotay Lal to pursue this revision, but he has no instructions at all, one way or other, from the District Board. Mr. Krishna Murari Lal says that he has heard definitely from his client, the plaintiff, that he has been reinstated in his position. If this is so it would appear that the only reasonable course would have been for the plaintiff to withdraw his suit, in which case, the present application would have automatically been struck off. It may not be that the plaintiff and the new District Board have actually brought themselves into contempt, but they have apparently approached doing so in allowing this litigation to proceed upon a false basis to the waste of public time and money. I would therefore dismiss this application, but I would make the parties to pay their own costs throughout.

Niamatullah, J.

NIAMATULLAH, J.—The facts which have given rise to this revision are stated in the judgment of my learned colleague and do not require to be supplemented for the purpose of my separate note on the question of law which emerges from them.

It is not disputed that the learned District Judge had jurisdiction to pass the order which he did. He cannot, therefore, be considered to have exercised a jurisdiction not vested in him by law. It is likewise admitted that he did not fail to exercise any jurisdiction vested in him. Section 115 (a) and (b) have, therefore, no application. His order granting a temporary injunction in appeal can be interfered with in revision only if Section 115 (c) is applicable.

The scope of Section 115 (c), C. P. C., has been the subject of consideration in numerous cases, and the difficulty which exists in construing that part of the section is greatly accentuated by numerous judicial dicta which have gathered around it. We are not, however, at liberty to disregard those dicta, some of which occur in the judgment of their Lordships of the Privy Council and Full Bench decisions of this Court. The difficulty is, to my mind, minimised if judicial pronouncements are construed with reference to the facts of the particular cases in which they occur and not as if they are part of statutory provisions.

Section 115 (c) empowers the High Court to interfere with an order passed by a subordinate court having jurisdiction to pass it, if it "acted in the exercise of its jurisdiction illegally or with material irregularity." These words were interpreted as far back as 1883 by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Raja Amir Hasan Khan v. Sheo Bakhsh Singh[4] as implying that a mere error of law in deciding a case cannot be said to be an illegal or irregular exercise of jurisdiction. Referring to the order passed by the subordinate court in that case, their Lordships observed > that they had perfect jurisdiction to decide the question which was before them and they did decide it. Whether they decided it rightly or wrongly, they had jurisdiction to decide the case; and even if they decided wrongly, they did not exercise their jurisdiction illegally or with material irregularity.

In a later case, Bal Krishn v. Basdeo[5], their Lordships again emphasised the view in the following words:—

> It will be observed that the section applies to jurisdiction alone, the irregular exercise of it or the illegal assumption of it. The section is not directed against conclusions of law or fact in which the question of jurisdiction is not involved.

These cases afford instances in which though an error of law was committed in deciding a case, jurisdiction could not be considered to have been exercised illegally or with material irregularity. It has been held in numerous cases decided by the High Courts that even where a question of limitation or res judicata has been erroneously decided, the High Court has no power to interfere in revision under Section 115 (c). The observations of their Lordships of the Privy Council in the two cases cited above were differently interpreted by different High Courts. We are bound to accept the view laid down by the Full Benches of this Court. I may refer to Yad Ram v. Sundar Singh[6] in which it was laid down that if the Court was competent to determine a question of law and did determine it, the High Court cannot interfere in revision merely because it considers that decision to be erroneous in point of law.

Applying the rule deducible from the cases mentioned above to the facts of the case before us, we have to accept that an appeal lay to the District Judge from the order of the trial court refusing to grant a temporary injunction, that the learned District Judge had jurisdiction to hear the appeal and to decide it and that if he decided the case before him wrongly, he cannot be considered to have acted in the exercise of his jurisdiction illegally or with material irregularity. The learned munsif expressed an opinion on the merits of the case on more than one important points in deciding the question whether a temporary injunction should be granted. The learned District Judge, on the other hand, expressed himself as follows:—

---

[4] L. R. 11 I. A. 237 at 239

[5] L. R. 44 I. A. 261

[6] I. L. R. 45 All. 425

> Further he (the munsif) discussed the question whether under law the condition of probation was legal or not. I am not going to discuss whether the condition of probation was legal or otherwise. The case is yet pending and in my opinion the case is to be decided after recording some evidence. Some oral and perhaps documentary evidence must be produced in support of what happened on July 26, 1931. That question is an important one in this case. Even if the condition of probation was legal, it is to be seen whether the proceeding of non-confirmation by the Board on July 26, 1931 was legally conducted. Therefore at this stage I refrain from expressing any opinion as to the question of law, because it would influence the learned munsif in his decision of the case.

In other words, the learned District Judge refused to pre-judge the merits of the case and proceeded to decide the case on a different ground, which he enunciated in the following words:—

> In my opinion, in cases of interim injunction we should see whether the plaintiff has a right or not, and if he has got a right, status quo should be maintained. I do not agree that the plaintiff would not incur any irreparable loss. He was a practising vakil. Now his practice, whatever it was, is totally gone; and if he starts practice again, it will take a long time to gain the same practice as he had before . . . . . So if he has a right, he would be entitled in his case to an injunction, and therefore the interim injunction should be granted.

There is an apparent inconsistency in the judgment of the learned District Judge in so far that he noted as one of the questions for decision whether the plaintiff had a right or not, but based his decision on his view that, unless a temporary injunction were granted, the plaintiff would suffer an irreparable injury, without expressing any opinion as regards the plaintiff's right. Reading his judgment as a whole, including the earlier part of it quoted above, he seems to have been of opinion that the case should be decided on a consideration of the balance of convenience and that the merits of the case should not be pre-judged. If this was his view, I do not think any error can be attributed to the learned District Judge. He might not have happily expressed himself; but there can be no doubt that he deliberately refrained from expressing any opinion on the question whether the plaintiff had the right which he claimed in the suit.

In granting or refusing to grant a temporary injunction a court has a wide discretion under Order 39, Rule 2, C. P. C. The exercise of that discretion should be in a judicial manner, depending upon the circumstances of each case. No hard and fast rule can be laid down for the guidance of the courts as regards the exercise of such discretion. If a court grants or refuses to grant a temporary injunction on the ground of balance of convenience, it is not correct to say that the discretion has been exercised otherwise than judicially only because the court of revision thinks that it would have passed a different order in the circumstances of the case.

For the reasons stated above, I agree with my learned colleague in dismissing the revision.

BY THE COURT—The application is dismissed. The parties will bear their own costs throughout.

Application dismissed

CIVIL
1932
April 22
PULLAN, J.
NIAMATULLAH, J.

SOHNI (Defendant)
versus
RAJ KUMAR SINGH JAIN AND OTHERS (Plaintiffs)*

Partition Act, Sec. 4—"Transferred"—Meaning of—"Undivided family"—Owns dwelling house—Share of one member sold in execution of a decree against him—Whether "transferred" to auction-purchaser.

Where the undivided share of one of the members of an undivided family, in a dwelling house belonging to the family, is sold in execution of a decree against him, it is 'transferred' to the auction-purchaser within the meaning of Sec. 4 of the Partition Act. The word 'transfer' in Sec. 4 of the Partition Act is used in its ordinary sense, namely, change of ownership from one to another; and the words "transfer of property," as used in Sec. 5 of the Transfer of Property Act, cannot be imported in Sec. 4 of the Partition Act.

Sultan Begam v. Debi Prashad, I. L. R. 30 All. 324 (F.B.) referred to.

SECOND APPEAL from a decree of BABU BIND BASNI PRASAD, Second Additional Subordinate Judge of Benares, confirming a decree of BABU MAHESHWARI DAYAL, city Munsif.

B. Malik for the appellant.

A. Sanyal, K. N. Malaviya and Sunit Kumar Tagore for the respondent.

The judgment of the Court was delivered by

Niamatullah, J.

NIAMATULLAH, J.—This is an appeal by one of the defendants in a suit for partition of two houses in the city of Benares. They were purchased in the names of Mst. Chunia and Mst. Sohni, the wives of Parshotam and Harkishen respectively. It is immaterial to determine whether the houses really belonged to the husbands or the wives as all the four were impleaded as defendants and set up a common defence. The plaintiff-respondent purchased the half share standing in the name of Mst. Chunia in execution of a simple money decree against her, and subsequently instituted the suit for partition which has given rise to this appeal. The defence was founded on S. 4 of the Partition Act. It was pleaded that the two houses which adjoin each other, are dwelling houses belonging to the undivided family consisting of Parshotam Das and Harkishun and their wives, and that the plaintiff-respondent is entitled to no more than the value of the half share which the defendants undertake to purchase. Both the courts below have overruled the defence and decreed the plaintiff's claim for actual partition. Mst. Sohni has preferred the present second appeal impleading the plaintiff and her co-defendants as respondents.

---

*S. A. 719 of 1930

Niamat-ullah, J.

The learned second Additional Subordinate Judge held that the houses in dispute are dwelling houses within the meaning of S. 4 of the Partition Act, and that the defendants' family is an undivided family as contemplated by the aforesaid Section. He, however, held that S. 4 of the Partition Act did not apply inasmuch as the word "transfer" in that Section does not include an auction sale and as the section applies only to cases in which only one house is sought to be partitioned. According to him it is inapplicable where more than one dwelling house is the subject-matter of a partition suit.

The learned advocate for the plaintiff-respondent has sought to support the decree appealed from not only on the grounds on which the judgment of the learned Subordinate Judge proceeds but on other grounds as well. Sec. 4 of the Partition Act runs thus:—

> (1) Where a share of a dwelling house belonging to an undivided family has been transferred to a person who is not a member of such family and such transferee sues for partition, the court shall, if any member of the family being a share-holder shall undertake to buy the share of such transferee, make a valuation of such share in such manner as it thinks fit and direct the sale of such share to such share-holder, and may give all necessary and proper directions in that behalf.
>
> (2) If in any case described in Sub-section (1) two or more members of the family being such share-holders severally undertake to buy such share, the court shall follow the procedure prescribed by Sub-section (2) of the last foregoing section.

The finding of the lower court that the houses in question are dwelling houses of the defendant's family has not been challenged before us. It has been held in Sultan Begam v. Debi Prasad[1], that S. 4 of the Partition Act is not limited to joint Hindu families but applies where the family is undivided qua the dwelling house. It is, however, argued that the defendant's family is not an undivided family in the above sense. Reference is made in this connection to the statement of Bachau, the husband of the appellant Mst. Sohni. He admitted:

> My brother and I have been living separately for 8 or 10 years. My brother also lived in the house in which I live. Both the houses adjoin each other, and are separate. The doors are separate.

It is argued on the strength of the passage quoted above that the two brothers had divided the houses, each taking one of them. This position is, however, wholly inconsistent with the plaintiff's case set forth in his plaint in which it is clearly alleged that he purchased the half undivided share of Mst. Chunia in each of the two houses, and that the defendants were not willing to have an amicable partition of them. That the plaintiff purchased an undivided half share in the two houses at the auction sale held in execution of the decree against Mst. Chunia also negatives the theory of partition. If the contention put forward before us be accepted, the necessity for a partition ceased to exist, and the plaintiff should be deemed to be the owner of one of the two houses. We must take it for the purposes of this case that both the houses are the joint property of the two brothers or their wives, and that the plaintiff purchased a half undivided share in each of them. The learned Subordinate Judge held against the plaintiff's contention on this part of the case, and we think rightly.

---

[1] I. L. R. 30 All. 324 (F.B.)

Niamat-ullah, J.

The view expressed by the learned Subordinate Judge in his judgment, namely, that S. 4 of the Partition Act does not apply to a case in which the plaintiff obtained a share in an undivided dwelling house at a sale held in execution of a decree is, to our mind, incorrect. The process of reasoning by which he arrived at that conclusion is not only faulty but unintelligible. S. 4 of the Partition Act applies to a case in which a share of 'a dwelling house' belonging to an undivided family has been "transferred" to a person who is not a member of such family. It is clear to us that where an undivided share of one of the members of an undivided family is sold in execution of a decree it is "transferred" to the auction-purchaser, and does not remain vested in the judgment-debtor. The learned Subordinate Judge refers to Ss. 2(d) and 5 of the Transfer of Property Act. The former merely declares the repeal of certain enactments as regards certain territories, and contains a saving clause to the effect that nothing contained in the Transfer of Property Act shall affect "any transfer by operation of law or by, or in execution of, a decree or order of a court of competent jurisdiction". It may be accepted that the provisions of the Transfer of Property Act do not affect any transfer in execution of a decree but the section cannot have any bearing on the interpretation of S. 4 of the Partition Act. S. 5 of the Transfer of Property Act provides that in certain specific sections of that Act "transfer of property" means "an act by which a living person conveys property, in present or in future, to one or more other living persons, or to himself and one or more other living persons". It is not possible to extend the operation of S. 5 to other parts of the Transfer of Property Act than those mentioned in S. 5. Much less can the words "transfer of property" as used in S. 5 be imported in S. 4 of the Partition Act. We are of opinion that the word "transfer" in S. 4 of the Partition Act is used in its ordinary sense, namely, change of ownership from one to another. It should be noticed that S. 5 of the Transfer of Property Act occurs in Chapter 2, which relates to "transfers of property by act of parties" and words "transfer of property" have, therefore, to be applied in the peculiar sense given by S. 5 in relation to cases dealt with in that chapter. For these reasons we hold that S. 4 of the Partition Act applies to the case before us, and that if the defence is otherwise a good one, it cannot fail only because the plaintiff-respondent purchased not by a private treaty but at an auction sale in execution of a decree against Mst. Chunia.

The second ground on which the judgment of the learned Subordinate Judge proceeds is still less cogent. He maintains that if two or more dwelling houses belonging to an undivided family are the subject of a partition suit, the defence contemplated by S. 4 is not admissible. Stress is laid on the words "a dwelling house" occurring in S. 4. The learned Subordinate Judge has obviously overlooked that each of the two houses is "a dwelling house" and is sought to be partitioned. In reference to Section 13 of the General Clauses Act which provides that unless a contrary intention is implied singular words occurring in a Statute should be taken to include the plural, the learned Subordinate Judge is of opinion that a contrary intention appears from S. 4 of the Partition Act, and therefore the singular should not be held to include the plural. We are unable to find any words in S. 4 of the Partition Act which preclude an application of the rule contained in S. 13 of the General Clauses Act. Apart from this consideration the provisions of S. 4 are general enough to apply to every dwelling house a share of which has been transferred to a person who is not a member of the undivided family to which the house belongs and is sought to be partitioned. If the family is large enough to need several dwelling houses to accommodate it, and the share of one of the members in all such houses is transferred to a stranger, on no principle can the other members of the family be precluded from availing themselves of the protection afforded by S. 4 of the Partition Act. We have no hesitation in holding that the view taken by the learned Subordinate Judge is unsustainable.

For the foregoing reasons we are satisfied that S. 4 of the Partition Act is applicable, and that the defendants having undertaken to buy his share, the plaintiff is only entitled to half of the value of the two houses. As both the courts below overruled the defence they did not have the houses valued to ascertain the amount which the defendants must pay to the plaintiff for his share in the two houses. In the view we have taken this becomes necessary. Accordingly we allow the appeal, set aside the decrees passed by the courts below, and remand the case to the court of first instance with a direction that it should make a valuation of the two houses and proceed in the manner required by S. 4 of the Partition Act. The appellant shall have her costs in all the courts up to date from the plaintiff-respondent.

Appeal allowed
Case remanded

Civil 1932
April 25
Sulaiman, C. J.
Mukerji, J.

MURLIDHAR AND ANOTHER (Defendant)
versus
JAINTI PRASAD AND OTHERS (Plaintiffs)*

Specific Relief Act, Sec. 9—Inapplicability of—Decree-holder put in formal possession by execution court—Plaintiff's objection under Or. XXI, R. 100 C. P. C. dismissed—Suit under Sec. 9 of Specific Relief Act—Whether maintainable.

After formal delivery of possession had been given to the defendants of a house purchased by them in execution of a decree, the plaintiffs filed an objection under Or. XXI, R. 100 C. P. C. The execution court, holding that plaintiffs had not been in possession, dismissed their objection. They then sued under Sec. 9 of the Specific Relief Act, and the lower court,

*Civ. Rev. 377 of 1931

CIVIL

1932

MURLIDHAR
v.
JAINTI
PRASAD

finding that plaintiffs had been in possession of the house and were wrongly dispossessed within 6 months of the suit, restored possession to them. Held: that formal delivery of possession was given to the defendants in due course of law and Sec. 9 of Specific Relief Act had no application, and the lower court acted without jurisdiction or, to say the least, with material irregularity, in decreeing the plaintiffs' claim under that section without going into plaintiffs' right to possession. (2) that as a regular suit under Or. 21, R. 103 was now barred by time, the plaintiffs should be allowed to amend the plaint and convert the suit into one for possession based on title or right to possession.

CIVIL REVISION against the decree of Second Munsif of Bulandshahr.

K. N. Katju and P. L. Kshetry for the applicants.

U. S. Bajpai, Shiva Prasad Sinha and S. B. L. Gaur for the opposite parties.

The judgment of the Court was delivered by

Sulaiman, C. J.

SULAIMAN, C. J.—This is an application in revision by the defendants arising out of a suit under Section 9 of the Specific Relief Act. The defendants in execution of their mortgage decree purchased a house at auction and applied for delivery of possession. On February 23, 1930, the Amin delivered possession to the defendants. The present plaintiffs filed objections under Order XXI, Rule 100 C. P. C. but their objections were ultimately dismissed. Instead of bringing a regular suit they filed a suit under Section 9 of the Specific Relief Act alleging that they had been wrongly dispossessed.

The learned Munsif has gone into the question of fact and has come to the conclusion that the plaintiffs were in possession of the house and were wrongly dispossessed within six months of the suit. He has accordingly restored possession to them.

The defendants have come up in revision and urge that no suit lay under Section 9 of the Specific Relief Act.

It seems to us that the contention of the defendants must be accepted. There is no doubt that formal delivery of possession was given to the defendants in due course of law through an officer of the court. It was not a case where the defendants themselves dispossessed the plaintiffs. The plaintiffs filed an objection in the court alleging that they were in possession and had been dispossessed by the holder of the decree. The court investigated their claim and held that they had not been in possession. It accordingly dismissed the objection.

Under Section 103 C. P. C. any party not being a judgment-debtor against whom an order is made under Rule 101, may institute a suit "to establish the rights which he claims to the present possession of the property", but subject to the result of such suit (if any) the order is conclusive.

The order of the execution court is conclusive against the present plaintiffs unless they can get a decree establishing their right which they claim to the present possession of the property. Their merely showing that they were in possession and had been dispossessed would not be sufficient. As a matter of fact the finding of the court that they were not in possession at all on that date is binding upon them. They must establish their right to possession on the assumption that they were not in possession on that date. The suit to establish the right to possession contemplated by Section 103 C. P. C. is, in our opinion, not one under Section 9 of the Specific Relief Act.

This is also clear from the language of Section 9 of the Specific Relief Act itself. It is only where a person has been dispossessed without his consent "otherwise than in due course of law" that he can recover possession in the summary proceeding. In a case where the execution court has put the auction-purchaser formally in possession and has dismissed an objection raised by the rival claimant, it is not a case of dispossession, otherwise than in due course of law. The delivery of possession was in fact in due course of law.

This view is further strengthened by the circumstance that whereas a period of six months is prescribed under Article 3 of the Indian Limitation Act for a suit under Section 9 of the Specific Relief Act, there is a period of one year under Article 11 (a) of the Act for a suit by a person to establish his right to the present possession of the property against whom an order has been passed by an execution court. Obviously the two classes of suits are of a different nature and fall in different categories.

We are accordingly of opinion that Section 9 of the Specific Relief Act had no application whatsoever to the present suit, and the court below has acted without jurisdiction or, to say the least, with material irregularity in decreeing the claim under that section without going into the plaintiffs' right to possession. .

We however find that if the present suit were dismissed and the plaintiffs were compelled to institute a fresh suit for declaration, their claim would be barred by time. We consider it unnecessary to decide whether any bar of res judicata arises against the plaintiffs in consequence of a previous declaratory suit brought by at least some of them, which failed.

We allow this revision and setting aside the decree of the court below, send the case back to that court with directions to fix a reasonable time for allowing the plaintiffs, if they be so advised, to amend their plaint, so as to convert it into one for a regular suit for possession either based on title or right to possession and to pay the additional court-fee for such relief. If the plaintiffs fail to amend the plaint, the court would dismiss the suit. If they amend the plaint, the defendants would be at liberty to file a supplementary written statement, and the case would then be disposed of according to law.

We direct that in any event the defendants must pay the costs of the plaintiffs of the present litigation in both the courts.

Revision allowed
Case remanded

CIVIL

1932

May 6

MUKERJI, J.
BENNET, J.

HIRA SINGH AND ANOTHER (Plaintiffs)
versus
CHANDAN SINGH AND OTHERS (Defendants)*

Tenancy Act (III of 1926), Sec. 121 and Schedule IV, Group D—Alleged tenants of a plot—Declaratory suit in Civil Court—Relief—'Owners of a pucca well'—Whether Civil Court has jurisdiction.

Plaintiffs alleging themselves to be tenants of a certain plot instituted a suit in the Civil Court for a declaration that they were owners of a pucca well in the plot, and the defendants who were admittedly zemindars of the land in question denied that the plaintiffs were tenants and alleged that the well had been made by them. Held, that the suit amounted to one for a declaration of the right of the plaintiffs as tenants, and such a suit will cover the question of the ownership of the well, and the revenue court alone had jurisdiction to entertain it.

ORDER on reference submitted by the District Judge, Aligarh, under Section 267 of the Agra Tenancy Act (III of 1926).

Krishna Murari Lal for the applicants.

M. L. Chaturvedi for the opposite parties.

The judgment of the Court was delivered by

Bennet, J.

BENNET, J.—This is a reference by a learned Munsif under Section 267 of the Agra Tenancy Act, Act III of 1926, enquiring for a direction of this Court as to whether the munsif has jurisdiction to entertain the suit in question. Learned counsel for defendants drew attention to the fact that one of the three defendants had died and he desired that the case should be adjourned for proceedings of abatement or substitution of names to be taken by the munsif. But we consider that we must first decide the question as to whether the munsif has jurisdiction to entertain the suit. The plaint asked for a declaration that the plaintiffs were owners of a pucca well in plot No. 326 of a certain village and that defendants had no connection with that well. The plaintiffs set forth in their plaint that they were the tenants of No. 326. The written statement denied that the plaintiffs were tenants of that number and alleged that the well had been made by the defendants. The plaint admitted that the defendants were the zamindars of the land in question. We consider that the case is governed by the provisions of Section 121 of the Agra Tenancy Act and that the suit amounts to a suit for a declaration of the right of the plaintiffs as tenants. Such a suit will cover the question of the ownership of the well which is situated in No. 326 claimed by the plaintiffs as their tenancy. The plaintiffs have omitted to ask for a relief in regard to No. 326 merely with the object of making their plaint resemble a plaint in which the civil court will have jurisdiction. Chapter VII of the Agra Tenancy Act deals with the question of improvements and all questions in regard to improvements are cognizable by the revenue court. The fourth schedule, Group (d) provides that applications under Chapter VII in regard to improvements are triable by Assistant Collectors in charge of sub-divisions. Under these circumstances we consider that the revenue court alone has jurisdiction, and we return this reference to the learned Munsif who should return the plaint to the plaintiffs for filing in the proper court. The plaintiffs will pay the costs of this reference and the costs of the court below.

---

* Mis. Case 739 of 1931

Reference answered

CIVIL
1932
May 23
IQBAL AHMAD, J.

BISHAMBHAR NATH
versus ACHAL SINGH*

Municipalities Act (II of 1916), Sec. 318 and Civil Procedure Code, Sec. 115—Order of District Magistrate—Passed in exercise of appellate jurisdiction conferred by Sec. 318—Whether revision lies to High Court,

The Court of the District Magistrate while deciding an appeal under Sec. 318 of the Municipalities Act is not subordinate to the High Court and accordingly no revision lies to the High Court.

CIVIL REVISION from an order of J. H. DARVIN ESQ., District Magistrate of Agra.

K. D. Malaviya for the applicant.

Baleshwari Prasad for the opposite party.

The following judgment was delivered by

Iqbal Ahmad, J.

IQBAL AHMAD, J.—A preliminary objection has been taken to the hearing of this application in revision. The order sought to be revised is an order of the District Magistrate of Agra purporting to have been passed by him in exercise of the appellate powers conferred on him by Section 318 of the Municipalities Act, Act II of 1916. The application before me purports to be an application under Section 115 C. P. C.

The revisional jurisdiction conferred on the High Court by that section is limited to cases decided by "any court subordinate to such High Court" and it is argued by the learned counsel for the opposite party that as the court of the District Magistrate when dealing with appeals under Section 318 of the Municipalities Act is not subordinate to the High Court this court has no jurisdiction under Section 115 C. P. C. to revise the orders passed by the District Magistrate under Section 318 of the Municipalities Act.

The learned counsel for the applicant contends that in view of the fact that by Section 319 of the Municipalities Act the court hearing an appeal under Section 318 can make a reference only to the High Court and that on such reference the High Court has not only to express its opinion but to decide the matter referred to it the court hearing an appeal under Section 318 must be deemed to be subordinate to the High Court and in support of this contention he has placed reliance on the case of Sadeck Abdulla v. Mahomed Abdulla Hasanali[1].

I am unable to agree with the contention of the learned counsel for the applicant. That the officer or the District Magistrate hearing an appeal under Section 318 is a court is put beyond doubt by reference to Section 320 of the Municipalities Act, and the only question that remains for consideration is whether or not that court is subordinate to this court within the meaning of Section 115 C. P. C. In the determination of this question no assistance can be had from Section 3 C. P. C. for the simple reason that the enumeration of subordinate courts in that section is not exhaustive and there may be courts not referred to in that section that may be subordinate to this court. It appears to me, however, that a court can be said to be subordinate to another court only if the latter court has appellate or revisional jurisdiction or power of superintendence given to it by some statutory provision over the former court and that the mere authority to decide a reference does not necesarily make the court making a reference subordinate to the court deciding the same. Further, as by Section 115 this court is given revisional powers only with reference to cases decided by subordinate courts, that section can only have reference to courts over which this court has a judicial and not a purely administrative power.

*Civ. Rev. 29 of 1932

[1] A. I. R. 1929 Bom. 190

Neither appellate nor revisional powers have been conferred on the High Court over the court of the District Magistrate by the Municipalities Act. On the contrary it is provided by Clause (2) of Section 321 of that Act that the order of the appellate court under Section 318 shall be final. Nor am I aware of any statutory provision conferring on this High Court power of superintendence over courts hearing appeals under Section 318 of the Municipalities Act. I, therefore, hold that the decision sought to be revised by this court is not the decision of any court subordinate to this court and, as such, the application for revision is incompetent.

In my judgment the Bombay case relied upon by the learned counsel for the applicant has no application to the case before me. It was decided in that case that with regard to questions arising in reference to cases to be stated by the Resident at Aden for the decision of the High Court of Judicature at Bombay under Section 8, Aden Courts Act (II of 1864) the Resident's court is subordinate to that High Court within the meaning of Section 115 C. P. C. The learned Judges who decided that case relied on the preamble to and on Section 31 of the said Act in support of the conclusion arrived at by them. By the preamble it is provided inter alia that

> It is expedient to provide for the superintendence or revision of such judgments and proceedings by the High Court of Bombay and by Section 31 the High Court at Bombay is authorized and empowered to make and issue general rules for regulating the practice and proceedings of the court of the Resident and to frame rules for every proceeding in the said court, etc.

In view of these provisions the learned judges held that the court of the Resident at Aden was a court subordinate to the High Court of Bombay within the meaning of Section 115 C. P. C. notwithstanding the fact that by Section 15 of the said Act it is provided that the Bombay High

CIVIL
1932
BISHAMBHAR NATH v. ACHAL SINGH
Iqbal Ahmad, J.

Court is not a court of appeal as regards the decisions by the court of the Resident at Aden.

The reasons assigned by the learned judges of the Bombay High Court for holding that that court has revisional powers over the President's Court at Aden have no application to the case before me. Provisions analogous to the provisions contained in the Aden Courts Act are not to be found in the Municipalities Act and as already stated the court of the District Magistrate under the Municipalities Act has not by any statutory provision been made subordinate to the High Court in matters decided by it under the Municipalities Act.

The mere fact that under certain circumstances the District Magistrate is authorized to make references under the Municipalities Act to this court, cannot, in my opinion, be a justification for holding that the District Magistrate is subordinate to this court in matters coming under the Municipalities Act. A reference has been made in the Bombay case to the decision in In the matter of John Thomas[2] in which it was observed that a reference was "a modified form of appeal" and the learned judges of the Bombay High Court appear to have been inclined to the view that the mere fact that a court is empowered to entertain a reference made by another court makes the court making the reference subordinate to the court deciding the same. With all respect I am unable to agree with this view. In the absence of a definite statutory provision to the effect that the decision of the court making the reference is to be in accordance with the decision of this court on the matter referred to it, I can discover no justification for holding that the court making the reference is subordinate to this court. There is no such provision in the Municipalities Act. The appellate court under that Act is no doubt empowered to make a reference to the High Court for the decision of the point on which it entertains doubts but it is not bound to decide the point referred to this court in accordance with the decision of this court. After deciding the matter referred to it under that section this court cannot enforce compliance with its decision and even if the appellate court in deciding an appeal under Section 318 decides the point referred to this court otherwise than in accordance with its decision, this court cannot interfere with that decision. To me there appears to be no analogy between a reference and an appeal. An appeal is preferred by an aggrieved party whereas a reference is made not by a party but by a court. The decision of the subject-matter of appeal is by the court entertaining the appeal whereas the decision of the matter about which a reference is made is not necessarily by the court deciding the reference.

For the reasons given above, I hold that the court of the District Magistrate while deciding an appeal under Section 318 of the Municipalities Act is not subordinate to this court and accordingly no revision lies to this court and the preliminary objection is well founded.

I dismiss this application with costs.

Application dismissed

---

[2] 6 Beng. L. R. 180

CRIMINAL

1932

July 18

BENNET, J.

CHIRANJI LAL
versus
MAHADEO PRASAD*

Criminal Procedure Code, Sec. 146(1)—Two joint owners both in joint possession fighting—Likelihood of breach of peace—Whether magistrate entitled to pass order under Sec. 146 and direct parties to file a partition suit in civil court.

The case of two joint owners both in joint possession is covered by the words "unable to satisfy himself as to which of them was in possession" in Section 146 Cr. P. C. as it is a case where the magistrate cannot decide which of them was in exclusive possession.

When two joint owners of barren land in an urban area are fighting and there is a likelihood of a breach of the peace between them, a magistrate is entitled to pass an order under Sec. 146 Cr. P. C. directing that the land should be kept in attachment pending the decision of the partition suit to be filed in the civil court within three months. Paramhans Pande v. Sheodarshan Singh, I. L. R. 48 All. 397 distinguished.

CRIMINAL REFERENCE by the Sessions Judge of Allahabad.

B. Malik for the applicant.

Balmakund for the opposite party.

The following judgment was delivered by

Bennet, J.

BENNET, J.—This is a reference by the learned Sessions Judge of Allahabad recommending that an order of a magistrate under Section 146 Cr. P. C. should be set aside. The order directs that certain landed property should be kept in attachment pending the decision of the civil court and the order directs the parties to file a partition suit in the civil court within three months. This order was first attacked on the ground that there was no finding by the magistrate that there was a likelihood of a breach of the peace. Under Section 145(1) the magistrate to whom a report is made by the police comes to a finding that he is satisfied of the likelihood of a breach of the peace and issues notices to the parties. There is such an order of the magistrate in the notices which he issued to the parties in this case that there was a likelihood of a breach of the peace. It is not necessary for the magistrate to again come to a finding on this point in his subsequent order.

The next ground on which the order of the magistrate has been attacked is that the conditions are not satisfied under which he can pass an order under Section 146 Cr. P. C. The facts which existed in the present case are that on January 15, 1924 the District Judge gave a decree in a civil appeal which was subsequently upheld by this Court. Under that decree the party of Chiranji Lal, the applicant in revision, was held to be entitled to possession of a certain area of about 5 biswas. It is admitted that the possession was joint with the opposite party. Certain observations were made by the Judge in regard to a portion of 2 biswas 9 dhurs, but I do not think that it is necessary to come to an exact interpretation of what that judgment meant in the present proceeding. It is sufficient that the

---

*Cr. Ref. 383 of 1932

Judge decided that there was certain property which was joint. The present dispute has admittedly arisen in regard to the same property. The question is whether when two joint owners are fighting and there is a likelihood of a breach of the peace between them, a magistrate is entitled to pass an order under Section 146 Cr. P. C. or not. The property in the present case is barren land in an urban area and possession can only be exercised by actual physical possession. The wording of Section 146(1) is

> If the Magistrate decides that none of the parties was then in such possession, or is unable to satisfy himself as to which of them was then in such possession of the subject of dispute, he may attach it until a competent court has determined the rights of the parties thereto, and the person entitled to possession thereof.

Do the words "unable to satisfy himself as to which of them was in possession" cover the case of two joint owners both in joint possession or do they not? I consider that these words do cover that case and that if there are two joint owners in possession jointly, it is a case where the magistrate cannot decide which of them was in exclusive possession. Learned counsel then argued that such a case of joint possession would not come under Chapter XII at all, or that the court should take security under Section 107 Cr. P. C. But the wording of Section 145(1) is "that a dispute likely to cause a breach of the peace exists concerning any land". The section does not define the land as being land in the possession of one party or another but merely that it is land and that there is a dispute and that that dispute is likely to cause a breach of the peace. All these elements exist in the present case where there is land and there is a dispute and the dispute is likely to cause a breach of the peace. The fact that the land is admittedly in joint possession of the parties merely in my opinion makes it unnecessary to produce evidence as to it being in the exclusive possession of one party, that is, if it is admittedly in possession of both parties. In any case the finding is apparently that it is in possession of both parties and it is on that account that the magistrate has ordered a partition to be obtained from the civil court.

The next ground which was argued was that there was nothing to refer to the civil court as has been held in the case of Paramhans Pande v. Sheodarshan Singh[1]. In that case the civil court had awarded joint possession to the parties and it was held by a learned single Judge of this Court that there was nothing more that the civil court could do except to partition the property. The court did not consider that partition would be a determination of a title or right to possession. But I consider that in a partition the title and right to separate possession of each portion of the joint property is determined for one of the parties and what has been formerly a subject of dispute between them would by a partition suit be determined. Further in the case which formed the subject of that ruling there was a question of the joint possession of 10 bighas of sir land. The court pointed out that such possession might be exercised by obtaining a share of profits. In the present case the land is not agricultural land and no possession can be exercised by obtaining a share of profits. The case is, therefore, different. Under the circumstances of the present case I consider that the order of the magistrate was correct and therefore I refuse this reference. I would point out to the learned Sessions Judge that when a magistrate tenders an explanation it is his duty to make a comment on that explanation, but in the present case the explanation has been forwarded without any comment. The parties in this proceeding will pay their own costs.

---

[1] I. L. R. 48 All. 397

Reference refused

CIVIL
1932
July 7
PULLAN, J.
NIAMATULLAH, J.

RAM NATH (Plaintiff)
versus
NANAK CHAND AND OTHERS (Defendants)*

Transfer of Property Act, Sec. 6(d)—Applicability of—Award—Co-sharer—To appropriate income—Condition in restraint of alienation during his life-time—Rights of transferee from him.

By an award, which partitioned the family property, specified shares in the shops in question were allotted to M. The award defined the rights of M in the shops as follows:—"He is the absolute owner thereof. He is to appropriate and maintain himself with the income and rent of such property, but he will have no power to make any transfer, such as sale, mortgage, lease, hypothecation as security and theka for a term or in perpetuity, etc., in respect of such property; and if he does make a transfer, the same shall be considered to be invalid. Besides M any one among his descendants will have power to make mortgage, etc." M while in possession assigned his rights in the shops to the plaintiff, who thereupon instituted a suit for partition, making M's co-sharers parties to the suit. Held, that subject to the condition in restraint of alienation, assuming it to be valid, the shares in the shops in question vested in M and no one else, and his right of enjoyment described as full ownership being unfettered, he could claim separate enjoyment of his share of the shops by partition, and the defendants, who had no locus standi to eject the plaintiff or to question his right of possession, could not question his right to obtain partition by virtue of his present possession of the shares of M in the shops in dispute; and Sec. 6(d) of Transfer of Property Act had no application.

SECOND APPEAL from a decree of PANDIT KEDAR NATH MEHRA, Additional Subordinate Judge of Farrukhabad, reversing a decree of MR. S. M. AHSAN KAZIMI, Munsif of Kanauj.

S. N. Sen and N. C. Sen for the appellant.

G. S. Pathak for the respondents.

The judgment of the Court was delivered by

Niamatullah, J

NIAMATULLAH, J.—This appeal arises out of a suit for partition of two shops, the plaintiff claiming a three-fourths share in one and half in the other. He claims title from Mangu Lal, defendant No. 3 under a sale deed dated December 15, 1919, executed by the latter. The deed purports to transfer to the vendee all rights which the vendor had. Mangu Lal himself did not contest the plaintiff's suit but one of his half brothers, the present respondent No. 1, resisted it on grounds which will presently appear. The plaintiff also claimed a subsidiary relief of damages amounting to Rs.500 on the allegation that defendant No. 1 completely demolished a portion of one of the shops and appropriated the materials thereof. The munsif, before whom the suit had been instituted, decreed the plaintiff's claim for partition and to damages amounting to Rs.120 to be paid by defendant No. 1. The lower appellate court dismissed the suit in its entirety on an appeal preferred by defendant No. 1. In the present second appeal by the plaintiff, the only contesting respondent is defendant No. 1, though other defendants including Mangu Lal, the plaintiff's vendor, have been impleaded as respondents.

---

*S. A. 227 of 1931

It is not disputed that the shops in question formed part of ancestral property in the hands of one Mathura Prasad, who had four sons. One of these sons is Mangu Lal, under whom the plaintiff claims and who was born of Mathura Prasad's first wife. Defendants Nos. 1, 2 and Basdeo, father of defendants Nos. 4 and 5 were the sons of Mathura Prasad by another wife. In consequence of certain disputes which arose in the lifetime of Mathura Prasad, the entire family property was partitioned through certain arbitrators, who gave an award on February 26, 1909. It provided, inter alia, that > the property specified below and entered under head C belongs to him (Mangu Lal), who is the absolute owner thereof (malik kamil hai). He is to appropriate, and maintain himself with the income and rent of such property, but he will have no power to make any transfer, such as sale, mortgage, lease, hypothecation as security and theka for a term or in perpetuity, etc., in respect of such property; and if he does make a transfer, the same shall be considered to be invalid (najaiz). Besides Mangu Lal any one among his descendants (aulad) will have power to make mortgage, etc.

Among the properties thus given to Mangu Lal are shares in the two shops now in question. As already stated, he was given a three-fourths share in one shop and half in another. Another part of the award provides that Mathura Prasad is to collect rent and pay to Mangu Lal his share thereof. Mathura Prasad subsequently died, and it does not appear who collected the rent of the joint shops; but it was admitted by defendant No. 1 in the court of first instance > that Mangu Lal was in possession of the shops, although he confines (sic) that possession to have been for maintenance only and through receipts of proceeds directly and indirectly.

This admission is noted in the judgment of the first court under issue No. 4, which relates to limitation and adverse possession—a plea raised by defendant No. 1.

It was pleaded in defence that Mangu Lal had transferred the property in dispute to the mother of defendant No. 1 by a sale deed, dated July 22, 1902, that the reference to arbitration and the award were null and void for certain reasons stated in the written statement, which it is not necessary to mention in detail, and that if the award is valid, Mangu Lal had no transferable interests in the shops so as to give any right to his transferee, the plaintiff. The only ground on which the plaintiff's right to claim partition has been challenged before us is that, Mangu Lal having been given no more than a right to maintain himself with the income of the property allotted to him by the award, his transferee, the plaintiff-appellant, acquired no rights which can entitle him to maintain a suit for partition. The validity of the reference and the award on the allegations mentioned in the written statement has not been questioned before us and so far as we can gather from the judgment of the lower appellate court, it was not challenged in that court also.

The court of first instance, which held that the condition in restraint of alienation, contained in the award, was unenforceable, relied in support of its view on S. 10 of the Transfer of Property Act. It is argued before us that that section applies to transfer and that an award is not a transfer. Reliance is placed on some observations of their Lordships of the Privy Council in the recent case of Mohammad Raza v. Abbas Bandi Bibi[1] in which a family arrangement was in question. Their Lordships expressed the view that S. 10 of the Transfer of Property Act was not applicable to a family arrangement which is not a transfer and the validity of which should be considered according to the rules of justice, equity and good conscience. Their Lordships, however, proceeded to consider the case on the assumption that S. 10 of the Transfer of Property Act was applicable and held that the condition in restraint of alienation in that case was not absolute and was, therefore, not void for repugnancy. It should be noted that in that case the question arose after the death of the transferor, between his heir and the transferee. We do not propose to decide this case with reference to S. 10 of the Transfer of Property Act. Mangu Lal being alive and a party to this case, it is not necessary to decide whether he has only a life interest, which will be the case if the condition in restraint of alienation, mentioned in the award, is valid, or he is an absolute owner, as the award declares him to be, and whether the subsequent condition depriving him of the right to alienate is void, being in derogation of full ownership conferred by the award. In the existing circumstances, the controversy is narrowed down to the question whether Mangu Lal, who is in possession, could claim separate enjoyment of his share of the shops by partition and, if so, whether he could assign his own right of enjoyment, jointly with his co-sharers or separately by partition, to the plaintiff-appellant.

The object of the arbitrator seems to have been to preserve the property for the descendants of Mangu Lal, who was probably a spendthrift and was considered likely to squander away his share of the family property; and therefore it was considered to be in the interest of his descendants (it should be noted that at the date of award Mangu Lal had no issue) that his right of full ownership, expressly recognized, be fettered by the condition to which reference has already been made. It seems to us that an alienation by Mangu Lal in contravention of that condition is not void but voidable as against Mangu Lal's descendants, who have been declared to be the ultimate beneficiaries, having power to transfer. Subject to that reservation, assuming it to be valid—a point on which we express no opinion—the property is vested in Mangu Lal and no one else. So long as Mangu Lal is alive, the right of enjoyment described as full ownership is unfettered. The award does not provide that in case Mangu Lal makes an alienation in violation of the aforesaid condition, he is to forfeit his right of enjoyment and the property is to pass to another person, nor has any other member of his family a present vested right which can entitle him to eject Mangu Lal's transferee, to whom he chooses to transfer his right of possession. The transferee, being in such possession as Mangu Lal had, can, at least, rely upon his possessory right against a person who can claim no right in himself. Even a trespasser can exercise acts of ownership, except as against the rightful claimant. This being so, it is impossible for defendant No. 1 to resist the claim of the plaintiff-appellant, who has for the time being stepped into the shoes of Mangu Lal. The latter does not contest his claim. The defendant No. 1 can have no more right to resist the claim of the plaintiff-appellant to obtain partition of the shops than he would have had if Mangu Lal himself had sued for partition. It may be mentioned incidentally that the award does not forbid partition of the shops at the instance of Mangu Lal.

[1] 1932 A. L. J. 709

The learned advocate for the contesting respondent relies on S. 6(d) of the Transfer of Property Act, which provides that > an interest in property restricted in its enjoyment to the owner personally cannot be transferred by him.

It is said that Mangu Lal has only a right to maintain himself with the usufruct of the shops. We are unable to accept this contention. If Mangu Lal's right is as limited as this contention presupposes, the property must be shown to be vested in some body else, so that a mere personal right of maintenance should be deemed to have been carved out and given to Mangu Lal, and the ownership is vested in some one else who can eject persons having no title. It is conceded that the property is not vested in any living person other than Mangu Lal. Cases between a landlord and the transferee of his tenant having no right to transfer or between a person in whom the paramount right is vested and the transferee from a holder under a maintenance grant, to which Sec. 6(d) may possibly be applicable are easily distinguishable. In all such cases the transferee is ejected by virtue of a right of re-entry contained in the lease or grant, or by virtue of proprietary right being vested in another person who can eject trespassers. In this class of cases the person in whom the paramount right is vested can be prevented from entering on the property only by the lessee or grantee, as the case may be, who has the right of enjoyment. Any other person, even though he may be a transferee of a person or grantee, who ex hypothesi acquires no right under his transfer, cannot question the right of the paramount owner to enter on his own land. If the lessee or grantee having no right of transfer has himself abandoned possession and transferred it to a third person, the person in whom the paramount title is vested can re-enter. All that he need establish in support of his right of re-entry is that the lessee or grantee abandoned his interest in the property restricted in its enjoyment to him personally. As already stated, Mangu Lal is the only person in whom the property is at present vested, and if he has chosen to place the plaintiff in the position he himself occupied there is no one who can eject the latter. The defendant No. 1 can have no locus standi to eject him or to question his right. In these circumstances, we hold that S. 6(d) of the Transfer of Property Act does not apply and, in any case, does not entitle the defendant No. 1 to question the right of the plaintiff to obtain partition by virtue of his present possession of the shares of Mangu Lal in the shops in dispute.

The learned advocate for defendant No. 1 relied on Kuldip Singh v.

CIVIL

1932

RAM NATH
v.
NANAK CHAND

Niamatullah, J.

Khetrani Koer[2] and Basangowda v. Irgowdatti, in which it was held that S. 10 of the Transfer of Property Act did not apply to cases of compromise and family arrangement. We have already referred to the Privy Council case on the point and have not considered it necessary to have recourse to S. 10. For the rest those cases have no bearing, as in the former the reversioners in whom the estate was vested sued for a declaration that the alienation was invalid, and in the second it was held that the widow's interest could not be attached by her creditors in execution of a simple money decree, she having been held on the construction of the compromise between her and her husband's reversioners to possess no 'disposing power' within the meaning of S. 60, Civil Procedure Code.

In the view of the case we have taken, this appeal must succeed. The learned Subordinate Judge did not arrive at any finding as regards the plaintiff's claim for damages. The munsif, however, clearly found on the evidence of one of the defendant's own witnesses that one of the two shops had fallen down and that defendant No. 1 appropriated its materials including galvanized iron sheets. The munsif also referred to other relevant matters and assessed the damages at Rs.120. We do not think it necessary to remand the case for determination by the lower appellate court of the amount of damages. We are satisfied that the finding of the munsif is correct. Accordingly we set aside the decree of the lower appellate court and restore that of the court of first instance. The plaintiff-appellant shall have his costs in this and the lower appellate court from defendant No. 1.

Appeal allowed

---

[2] I L. R. 25 Cal. 869

PRIVY COUNCIL

THE RIPON PRESS AND SUGAR MILL COMPANY, LIMITED, BELLARY

versus

V. GOPAL CHETTI AND OTHERS*

CIVIL

1931

July 28

LORD
BLANESBURGH
LORD
ATKIN
SIR LANCELOT
SANDERSON

Companies Act, Secs. 162(vi), 174, 183—Company—Winding up order on petition of share-holders—Appeal—Form of—Duty of liquidator—Solvent company—Court should have regard to wishes of contributories ascertained by meetings—Preponderating influence of one share-holder—Of itself no reason for winding-up—Lapse of time—Whether winding-up order wrongly made to be maintained.

Where a winding-up order is made upon the petition of share-holders, an appeal at the instance of other share-holders is properly brought in the name of the company. (In re Diamond Fuel Co., (1879) 13 Ch. D. 400 at 405). In such an appeal the only duty of the liquidator is from a position of complete impartiality, and in the interests of the whole body of his constituent contributories to be ready to inform the court of any facts and circumstances in relation to the company's affairs about which he might be asked or which in his judgment the court ought to know, and it is no part of his duty actively to oppose the appeal at the expense of the company.

*P. C. A. 95 of 1928

CIVIL

1931

THE RIPON PRESS AND SUGAR MILL COMPANY, LIMITED, BELLARY v. V. GOPAL CHETTI

Where a company ordered to be wound up has no creditors, so that the contributories only are interested in the result of the liquidation, the court, under Section 174 of the Companies Act, should have regard to their wishes, ascertained by meetings convened under Sec. 183(2).

Under Section 162(vi) of the Companies Act, 1913, which empowers the court to wind up a company if it is of opinion that such a course is just and equitable, the fact that one of the share-holders has a preponderating voice in the company by reason of his owning or controlling a large number of shares is of itself no reason for winding up the company.

Loch v. John Blackwood, [1924] A. C. 783 distinguished.

A winding-up order having been made in 1924 by the High Court on appeal, with effect from 1922, the Judicial Committee upon an appeal heard in 1931, although of opinion that the order was not justified when made, did not set aside the order except as to costs, having regard to the lapse of time and intervening events—the business of the company had ceased for years and its undertaking had been broken up, and the task of adjusting liability for the mischief which had resulted from that liquidation presented a prospect of far-reaching and ruinous litigation.

APPEAL from a decision of the High Court of Judicature at Madras.

K. V. L. Narasimham and Begum Farrukhi for the appellants.

W. H. Upjohn, K.C. and K. Rustomji for the respondents.

The following judgment was delivered by

Lord Blanesburgh

LORD BLANESBURGH—This is an appeal from a judgment and decree of the High Court of Judicature at Madras, dated November 13, 1924, reversing a judgment and order dated November 3, 1922, of a single Judge of the same High Court in its ordinary original civil jurisdiction. These orders were made in the matter of a petition presented to the Court on May 1, 1922, for the compulsory winding-up of the appellant company. By the order of November 3, 1922, Mr. Justice Kumarswami Sastri dismissed the petition with costs. On appeal his order was discharged by that of November 13, 1924, and the compulsory winding-up of the company was thereby decreed. This appeal from that order reached the Board for hearing more than six years after it had been made. Its discharge accordingly involved the supersession of all proceedings in a liquidation which as a result of it had then been in operation for more than eight years. To this fact are attributable the grave difficulties which have confronted the Board in disposing of the appeal.

The company was constituted in 1882 for the purpose (1) of erecting a cotton-pressing factory at Raichur in Hyderabad and (2) of erecting a sugar factory at Hospet in the Madras Presidency of British India. It was registered in Madras solely because part of its business was to be carried on in British India. But for the Hospet project it would have been registered in the Nizam's Dominions. And the Hospet factory did not materialise. It was definitely abandoned as a project in 1909. The company has never done any business in British India. Its sole activities have been centred at Raichur in connection with the factory which in due course was erected there. The fact that the fixed property of the company and its business have thus been in one jurisdiction and its place of incorporation and statutory obligations in another has always been a source of difficulty. It hampered the company in its competition with local rivals: it exposed it to the risk of double taxation: its accounts were necessarily kept at Raichur in the local vernacular, and the compilation of the annual statements at Bellary from these materials in a form to meet the requirements of the statute law of British India must always have been difficult and never quite satisfactory. It is unfortunate that in the liquidation no allowance appears so far to have been made for, or consideration given to, these difficulties inherent in the situation.

The company was not a private company, but its share-holders were never numerous. Its articles of association were those of Table A of the Act of 1882, with modifications introduced which did not affect its status as a public company. It had a nominal capital of Rs.1,25,000, divided into 250 shares of Rs.500 each. Of these, 200 shares were issued at the time of its formation, Rs.250 being then called up on every share. This paid-up capital sufficed for the establishment of the Raichur factory. The 200 shares with Rs.250 paid up were in May, 1922, in the hands of 24 holders or sets of holders.

The original articles of the company, Clauses 7 and 8, provided for the appointment of named persons, as secretaries and treasurers at an allowance of 5 per cent on nett profits, and as agents in charge of the factories at a like allowance. Between 1905 and 1909 K. Venkata Rao, of whom much will be heard in the sequel—it is around him that the whole controversy has raged—had become one of the two agents.

In 1909 and 1910 the original offices of secretary and treasurer and agent were abolished, and by special resolutions of the company, passed and confirmed unanimously on May 7 and 28, 1910, Clauses 7 and 8 of the company's articles of association were cancelled, and it was resolved that, in lieu thereof, the firm of K. U. S. Ramachander & Co. should be appointed treasurers of the company on condition of their retaining the company's moneys without interest, and lending moneys to the company without interest whenever required.

In view of the allegations of the petition with reference to this arrangement—operative, as it was, for so many years—it is convenient to note, in passing, the deliberation with which it was made—the special resolution of May superseding with a technical amendment an earlier special resolution adopted with similar unanimity in April, 1910. It is material also to note that under the arrangement the firm was called upon to discharge the duties which had therefore devolved upon the secretary, treasurer and agent combined, and that in any advantage that might accrue to it from the fact that, like a banker, it was not required to pay interest on the company's balances, was to be found the only counterpart for the 10 per cent on profits which, under the superseded arrangement, had to be found by the company.

The firm K. U. S. Ramachander & Co. was the family firm of Venkata Rao. From 1910 and earlier he had been at its head. In 1922 he was 73 years of age. It is impossible to read the record without seeing that, even at a later date, he remained a man of outstanding ability and strong personality. From 1910 his was undoubtedly the predominant influence in the firm, although he was only one of nine members, as also in the directorate of the company, although the evidence is clear to show that no

CIVIL

1931

THE RIPON PRESS AND SUGAR MILL COMPANY, LIMITED, BELLARY v. V. GOPAL CHETTI

Lord Blanesburgh

duly qualified share-holder who desired a seat on the Board was ever excluded therefrom. His influence, real, and, for anything that appears, thoroughly well deserved, was not, at all events, unwelcome. Everything points to the conclusion that the share-holders, for benefits resulting to them therefrom, were well content to leave the management of the company's affairs in Venkata Rao's hands.

At all relevant times a large number of shares in the company stood registered in his own name, and in the names of his firm and of different individual members of his family, some of them members of the firm. But the number which at any time he really controlled is left in complete uncertainty. His own personal holding was never large. He complains in his evidence that members of his family had become, prior to the date of the petition, at variance with him. The petitioners have put in the minutes of a meeting of June 23, 1917 (Record Part II, p. 7), at which K. Ramachander, his eldest son, is found voting against him in favour of a larger dividend. Indeed, their Lordships can find nothing in the record to show that if at any time any disagreement with Venkata Rao's action or policy had existed amongst the share-holders, it would not have found effective expression as, for the moment at all events, it did, at the meeting of August 21, 1921, to which reference will presently be made. The proceedings of the share-holders up to that date do not indicate that as the petition suggests they were there merely to register Venkata Rao's decree. They do show that up to 1921 there was never any serious disagreement amongst them.

The first trace of conflict originates with a resolution proposed by Venkata Rao as an extraordinary resolution at a general meeting of the company held on August 6 of that year. The resolution, in effect, was that in view of the complete abandonment of the Hospet venture and of difficulties resulting from its British Indian incorporation, the registration of the company should be transferred to Hyderabad. The proposal, as might, perhaps, have been expected from what has been already said, was accepted unanimously at that meeting. But Subhapati Rao, a share-holder, a vakil of 30 years of age, who now becomes as prominent in the drama as Venkata Rao himself, although the holder of a single share only, and with, therefore, it might perhaps have been supposed, no very extensive interest in dividends, detected in the resolution or thought or said that he detected a subtle device on the part of Venkata Rao to make the recovery of dividends more difficult. Accordingly, at the meeting held on August 27, 1921, to confirm the resolution, he proposed an amendment to the effect that the company should be wound up voluntarily. And his amendment was carried by a bare majority of the members present, and Venkata Rao's original resolution was therefore lost, although the amendment was not, of course, affirmatively effective.

From this incident must be dated the movement, such as it was, headed by Subhapati Rao, culminating in the petition and ultimately in the winding-up order which is now under review.

The petition, as has been said, was presented on May 1, 1922. There were six petitioners. Subhapati Rao is one; his brother, Lakshmikanta Rao, holding two shares, is another; a third has since died; and a fourth,

CIVIL
1931
THE RIPON PRESS AND SUGAR MILL COMPANY, LIMITED, BELLARY
v.
V. GOPAL CHETTI
Lord Blanesburgh

Sidabasappa, sold his 21 shares in the company on November 2, 1924, before the winding-up order was made. The whole six petitioners between them held no more than 32 shares out of the total of 200. Only one other share-holder, the respondent, Madam Venkayya, supported them. The company, in its opposition to the petition, represented the views of a preponderant majority. It was amply solvent. Creditors were in no way interested, if they existed at all.

The petition is an attack upon Venkata Rao from every angle. That that attack was inspired throughout by Subhapati Rao has never been questioned, while Venkata Rao has reiterated in evidence that it is from some unexplained enmity to himself on the part of Subhapati Rao and from that alone that everything has resulted—the winding-up petition, the appeal from the order dismissing it, and the whole course of the supervening liquidation so marked in its hostility to himself. Their Lordships are not prepared to treat these assertions lightly. They have never been contradicted by Subhapati Rao, although he has given evidence on two occasions and has made many affidavits in the course of the liquidation. No petitioner, except himself, has ever taken any part in the proceedings. The petition, for the terms of which Subhapati Rao is clearly, primarily, and not improbably exclusively responsible, is inexcusable in the recklessness and misleading character of its most serious allegations, and their Lordships have been compelled to note that throughout the recorded proceedings in the subsequent liquidation the activities of Subhapati Rao have been exclusive, constant, persistent, and officious, not to be explained by his insignificant material interest in the liquidation or its results. It is necessary to approach the consideration of the case with these most disturbing facts in mind. The learned trial Judge was able to dismiss the petition on what may be called its own demerits. Their Lordships will anticipate so far as to say that it is almost inconceivable that the High Court could have wound up the Company as and when it did or have justified its order by the reasons assigned had these matters been even remotely present to the minds of the learned Judges there. [Their Lordships then examined the evidence and agreed with the trial Judge that the charges against Venkata Rao were not established, and continued as follows:—]

In the result the learned Judge, as has been already noted, found that the charges made by the petition had not been proved in any particular. It had been conceded, he said, that unless the case could be brought within Clause 6 of Section 162 of the Indian Companies Act no order could be made: no misconduct had been proved against Venkata Rao or the other directors. The fact that Venkata Rao had a preponderating voice in the company by reason of his owning or controlling a large number of shares was of itself no reason for winding-up the company; the allegation that dividends had not been paid regularly was no ground for winding-up, but the trouble had only arisen in transmission cases. The petitioners had had inspection of all the accounts, and in no instance had these been shown to be wrong. As regarded the sum proposed to be spent on machinery, it was hardly likely that Venkata Rao, with his preponderating interest, would ruin the company for the pleasure of annoying the other share-holders.

Their Lordships subscribe to that judgment. The order dismissing the petition with costs was in their judgment, on the evidence before the Court, the only possible order. They think it both fair and right to add that on a careful consideration of all the evidence they can find no justification worthy of the name for the suggestion that during Venkata Rao's long tenure of office his management of the company's affairs had in view any other object than the welfare of the company in which as a share-holder he was, directly and indirectly, so largely interested. Nor have they in the evidence found any proof that moneys retained by the firm were normally in excess of reasonably possible prospective needs or that there was an impropriety on the part of the treasurers in retaining the moneys they did retain or on the part of the directors in recommending their retention. The balances were, in fact, the working capital of the company, even although some portion of them might without illegality or even inconvenience have been distributed as dividend had the share-holders so insisted.

The petitioners appealed to the High Court by notice dated November 17, 1922. For some unexplained reason the appeal was not disposed of until November 13, 1924—nearly two years later. There were no new materials placed before the appellate Court to account for this loss of time, which would not have been possible in England, where winding-up appeals are placed in an interlocutory list in order to be beyond any such risk. Their Lordships hope that this case is, in this, as in so many other respects, exceptional. But this delay ought to have weighed with the learned Judges in reaching a decision. The difficulties created by a winding-up order in November, 1924, with effect from May 22, 1922, which so soon became manifest in the liquidation, might have given them pause. It does not appear that these difficulties were even present to their minds.

Nor is it easy either to discover or to state the actual reasons of the Appellate Judges for making a winding-up order when they did or at all. They were apparently led to do so partly by the case of Loch v. John Blackwood[1], which, as they noted, had not been available for the trial Judge's consideration, but which, so far as their Lordships can see, bears no resemblance either in principle or detail to the facts as proved in this case. For the rest, while the learned Judges do not in terms reject the Trial Judge's findings of fact, they ignore them altogether. They seem to treat allegations in the petition as true merely because they are placed there. They find neither in its contradictions nor in its charges any room even for criticism. This omission in relation to the alleged threats by Venkata Rao to call up the unpaid share capital of the company is particularly unfortunate. The learned Judges appear, without examination, to accept these charges as proved, while from their statement of the first of them, it is apparent that the nature of the charge made was quite misunderstood. Perhaps their conclusions on the whole matter may, however, best be taken from their own closing words:—

> It is evident that the affairs of this company are carried on in such a way that the members of one family are able to exercise a predominating influence over the management of the company and to secure certain benefits for themselves. The minority are unable to protest effectively > against the actions of the directors because the majority of shares are in the hands of one family and the directors themselves are able to hold over the share-holders the fear of having to pay up the unpaid portion of their shares. This causes a lack of confidence in the management of the directors which there is no hope of improving so long as the present directorate continues and the funds are in the hands of the present treasurers. Under these circumstances, we think the only course we can take to secure the just rights of the share-holders is to direct the winding-up of the company.

[1] [1924] A. C. 783

Venkata Rao has sworn, and it has not been denied, that before the appeal was heard, two of the petitioners had notified to him their actual, although apparently not their formal, withdrawal from the proceedings. One had died; a fourth, Sidabasappa, as has been stated, had, before this judgment of the High Court, sold his shares. In active support of the petition, therefore, if Venkata Rao has sworn truly, there remained, at the date of the winding-up order, only Subhapati Rao and his brother, holding three shares between them, and Madam Venkayya, who had never even verified its allegations. A striking comment on the observations of the High Court when read in the light of the history already set forth.

But, presumably, these petitioning casualties were not—at least, all of them—known to the learned Judges, and Venkata's statement of them may have been exaggerated. Even so, the conclusions of the Appellate Court cannot, in their Lordships' judgment be supported. Their own examination of the petition leads them, on the evidence, to the inevitable conclusion that its allegations, so far as these were offensive, were entirely unproved. Its proper fate was the dismissal which it met with at the hand of the Trial Judge. The winding-up order on the materials before the High Court ought not to have been made. So far the present appeal is entirely justified.

But many further considerations emerging in subsequent events have to be weighed before it can be properly disposed of. To the statement and consideration of these, their Lordships now proceed.

At the instance of the directors, immediate steps were taken to have the order set aside. An application for leave to use the company's name as appellant was first made. This was strenuously opposed by Subhapati Rao, who, in an affidavit, challenged Venkata Rao to ascertain the contributories' views on the subject. At a meeting, in answer, held on April 2, 1925, 16 contributories holding 168 shares out of 200 declared themselves for an appeal in the company's name or, if that were not possible, for one in their own. Notwithstanding this declaration of their wishes (see Section 174 of the Act), the learned Judge in charge of the liquidation on November 19, 1925, refused the leave asked for, on the ground that Venkata Rao was then in default under an order made against him in the liquidation, and, on appeal to the Court, this refusal was, on December 18, 1925, upheld, on the expressed ground, the basis of which their Lordships are quite unable even to conjecture, that there was no reason to suppose that those who purported to be the company in the application "represented the wishes of the majority of the share-holders." This new misunderstanding of the position at another critical moment in the history is responsible for the further misfortune that an appeal against a winding-up order, so unusual in its occasion and circumstances, only became possible through the special leave granted by His Majesty on the recommendation of this Board two years later, on December 2, 1926. Four further years elapsed before the appeal was brought to a hearing—the greater part of that long interval having been apparently consumed in the preparation and printing of the supplemental appendices included in the record at the instance of the official liquidator.

The appeal, quite rightly, is in the company's name. The objection taken to its competence long persisted in was quite unfounded. In that respect it is in accord with a well-established practice, devised to meet the necessities of just such a situation as here arose.

But this is all mere form or style. The appeal is really that of the contributories who are behind it. They may be truly regarded as the appellants. See In re Diamond Fuel Company[2]. Of the respondents, the official liquidator alone has appeared to oppose. He has taken it upon himself to contest the appellants' case ab initio—the remaining respondents, with Madam Venkayya, their unpledged supporter, being all who remain of the original petitioners. They have kept themselves in the background throughout, doubtless by arrangement. The official liquidator in his printed case and at the Bar has said for them all that they could have said for themselves. Moreover, he has had printed and included in the record 364 pages of the proceedings in the winding-up, including a verbatim transcript of the depositions that have been taken in the course of it. What has really been attempted by this procedure is that the opposition to the appeal—the petitioners' business—shall be conducted even if it fails at the charge of the assets of the Company.

Such unusual partisan activity on the part of an official liquidator in relation to such an appeal clearly called for some justification, and this was sought to be supplied by referring to an order of November 14, 1928, by the Judge in winding-up, which directed the liquidator to oppose the appeal and do all the above things. Their Lordships have noted that the order referred to is really an affirmative answer by the learned Judge to questions asked by the liquidator on an ex parte summons, while the order made has been so liberally interpreted by the liquidator that in the second appendix he has had printed 124 pages of depositions, all taken after the date of the order and, save for a few lines here and there, entirely irrelevant, as their Lordships think, to any issue arising on the appeal.

Their Lordships are gravely concerned that such an order should ever have been asked for. They are even more concerned that it should have been acted upon with so little discrimination. The order, in principle, was sought to be justified by the representation doubtless made by the official liquidator to the learned Judge, and as a contention maintained before the Board, that in these appendices facts are disclosed which had they been known to the Court when the petition came before it would have made a winding-up order inevitable. It is merely an aggravation of the position that, in their Lordships' judgment, as will appear presently, no such facts are there disclosed. For, even if they had been, these were facts to be brought forward, if so advised, by the petitioner respondents at their own risk, and not by the liquidator at the charge of the assets.

---

[2] 13 Ch. D. 400, 405

Their existence would have been no justification for his becoming partisan in a dispute between two sets of contributories concerning the propriety of an order from which his authority alone proceeded. His only duty on an appeal against such an order was from a position of complete impartiality, and in the interests of the whole body of his constituent contributories to be ready to inform the Board of any facts and circumstances in relation to the company's affairs about which he might be asked or which in his judgment the Board ought to know.

In the present case the liquidator's attitude is peculiarly invidious. It appears from the depositions that he was put forward by the petitioners for his office on the resignation of the official first appointed, and that his appointment was opposed by the Venkata Rao party for that very reason. He, too, was an "enemy". From him, therefore, on appointment, an attitude of unqualified detachment was specially to be desiderated. His contention of detachment in relation to this appeal has been to ask for and to obtain ex parte and to interpret with an excess of liberality an order which has enabled him free of expense to the petitioners, in relief of their responsibilities, and already at a cost far in excess of any possible interest of theirs in assets, to fight their battle, with, as will be seen, no success and at what, except as to a trifling amount, must be the inordinate expense of their opponents. It is to be hoped that orders like that of November 14, 1928, will not in future be lightly made in the course of an Indian winding-up. The only results of the order in the present instance have been excessive delay and utterly useless expenditure, both of which will, like the delay already referred to, be found to have been operative to the prejudice of the appellants, in absence of whom the order was made.

It was upon these appendices and their contents that the real opposition to the appeal was based by the official liquidator. When examined, they strike their Lordships as being for the most part quite irrelevant to the conclusion which he asked the Board to draw from their perusal. [After dealing with the contents of the appendices the judgment continued as follows:—]

Accordingly, their Lordships have reached the conclusion that the proceedings in the liquidation, the details of which—at such great expense—the official liquidator has introduced into the appeal, do not, in any way, help the case he has sought to make. On the contrary, they operate further to imperil it. For what, in their Lordships' judgment, these proceedings do show is that, owing to the mistaken principles upon which the liquidation has been conducted, doubtful orders have been made in the past and that, unless the methods hitherto adopted are for the future discarded, nothing can result from the further progress of the liquidation but the dissipation of the company's entire assets in expenses. In other words the liquidator's appendices, properly appreciated, point to the discharge of the winding-up order being called for rather than to the continuance of the liquidation being beneficial. And the proper choice between these two alternatives becomes thus ever more difficult.

This statement requires some expansion.

The outstanding fact in relation to this winding-up which seems so far to have been entirely missed is that the contributories are alone interested

CIVIL
1931
THE RIPON PRESS AND SUGAR MILL COMPANY, LIMITED, BELLARY
v.
V. GOPAL CHETTI
Lord Blanesburgh

in its results. The company had no creditors. From this it followed that the liquidation was peculiarly one in which the Court, as to all matters affecting the contributories as a class, would have regard to their wishes as proved by any sufficient evidence (Act of 1913, Section 174) and one, also, in which the official liquidator (Section 183(2)), would lose no opportunity of summoning meetings of contributories for the purpose of ascertaining their wishes in respect of similar matters. Now, it is hardly too much to say that with consequences—serious in many other respects than excessive cost—these vital considerations have been consistently forgotten or ignored throughout the liquidation. [After pointing out two typical examples of the above and referring in detail to other orders made in the liquidation, the judgment continued:—]

Their Lordships have now detailed with much particularity the salient incidents in this long history. They have done so, laboriously they fear, but not finding it possible otherwise to make clear within the confines of a self-sufficient judgment the difficulty of the problem disclosed. What they find themselves faced with at the end of the day is a winding-up order, made two years after its presentation upon a petition which ought never to have been presented, for, even if not merely vindictive and malicious, the petition was entirely without proved merits. They find also that the winding-up order has in the liquidation been succeeded by a series of orders off-hand in form and on the face of them, at all events, made without full consideration of all relevant circumstances. Lastly, their Lordships find a liquidation in being which, if carried on as it has been begun, can, as they forecast it, end in nothing for the contributories but a call of all the unpaid capital to provide for payment of the costs and expenses. And for these disasters, one and all—with the exception only of the expense and trouble due to the recalcitrancy of Venkata Rao, the costs of which have already and rightly fallen upon him—the petitioners are mainly, if not indeed entirely, responsible. There is, therefore, so far, and even at this distance of time, everything to be said for the discharge of the winding-up order appealed against.

But what would now be the consequences of discharging that order? The business of the company has ceased for years: its undertaking has been broken up: its reconstitution except under new auspices is now probably quite impracticable: and the task of adjusting liability for the mischief which has resulted from the liquidation presents a prospect of far-reaching and ruinous litigation. Nor could these consequences be mitigated, nor could any bounds be set by their Lordships to the range and extent of future trouble if the winding-up order were now to be set aside. A direction to that effect would, their Lordships cannot doubt, be a calamity to all concerned. They cannot give it.

On the other hand, it seems to the Board by no means hopeless that if the liquidation be left operative, it may by a change of method be possible to avoid at least total disaster.

Their Lordships are, of course, well aware that it is not for them to dictate the future course of the liquidation. That is a matter for the learned Judge in winding-up. The judicial discretion in such matters is, at all events in the first instance, with him alone, and he may not divest himself or be divested of full responsibility for its exercise. The observations accordingly which immediately follow are made merely for his assistance. They are in no way directory. It is enough that they will have his attentive consideration. In their Lordship's view, then, it is essential, if complete disaster is to be avoided, that for the future this liquidation shall be conducted in a spirit of complete impartiality, as between different sets of contributories, and with due regard to the wishes of the contributories (Section 174). It will be for the learned Judge to consider whether this end can be attained under the present liquidator, who has identified himself so completely and, so far, so unfortunately, with the petitioners in their unworthy conflict with the main body of contributories, or whether it will not be necessary to place in the position of liquidator a man of no less high standing than the present official liquidator, but who has not hitherto been associated professionally or otherwise with either set of contributories, and who would be advised by a vakil, equally dissociated from either side, whose appointment would be authorised under Section 181 of the Act. It will further deserve most careful consideration at the hand of the learned Judge, whether in the future course of the liquidation, by whomsoever it is conducted, the audited accounts up to 1923 should not remain undisturbed for reasons similar to those which have led their Lordships to leave the winding-up order in being, and whether the accounts of the company for 1924 should not be taken on the best available materials and audited in order that on these accounts, as so taken, the actual amounts with which the treasurers are to be charged may appear as accurately as is now possible. Particularly, however, will it be for the learned Judge to determine if the liquidator should not be directed to consider, as a protection from all further litigation, whether the liquidation cannot be brought to an end by some scheme under which the whole remaining assets of the company would be taken over by the majority contributories on the terms of their providing for the authorised costs and expenses of the liquidation and a sum equivalent to the then existing value of the shares in the company of the remaining contributories; and whether, failing that, the liquidator should not be directed in relation to the dividend declared on December 22, 1924, and notwithstanding the orders on that subject previously made, either to complete its distribution out of the assets in his hands or enforce payment from each recipient of the dividend paid to him. In their Lordships' judgment, the preferable course, if funds permit, is, with the sanction of the Court, to complete the distribution. All these observations, however, as their Lordships have explained, express their own views only. They form no part of the order following.

The actual order now to be made should, their Lordships think, be as follows: That the winding-up order of November 13, 1924, although not justified when made, be, by reason of the lapse of time and intervening events, maintained except as to costs. As to these, the order will be discharged.

And their Lordships will humbly advise His Majesty accordingly.

As to costs, as the winding-up is allowed to continue, the petitioners cannot be ordered to pay the company's costs either of the petition or of the appeal to the High Court, proper though such an order would be.

CIVIL
1931
THE RIPON PRESS AND SUGAR MILL COMPANY, LIMITED, BELLARY
v.
V. GOPAL CHETTI
Lord Blanesburgh

But they must not have costs in either Court, and if these costs have been paid by the official liquidator they must be repaid. The official liquidator must pay out of the assets the costs of the company—that is, the majority contributories—of the petition, of the appeal to the High Court and of this appeal. There will be no costs of this appeal to the petitioner respondents or Madam Venkayya. The Registrar will tax the costs of this appeal of the official liquidator, who will have liberty to apply in the liquidation for payment out of the assets of these costs or of such part of them as the Judge, in winding-up, may, in view of this judgment, allow, the official liquidator having further liberty reserved to apply to the learned Judge for payment otherwise than by the majority contributories of such of his taxed costs as may be disallowed out of assets.

It will be the duty of the official liquidator when applying for his costs to bring this judgment of their Lordships to the notice of the learned Judge.

Hy. S. L. Polak—Solicitor for the appellants.

Watkins & Hunter—Solicitors for the respondents.

HIGH COURT

CIVIL 1932
May 25
SULAIMAN, C. J.
YOUNG, J.

SARABDEO BHARTHI (Plaintiff)
versus
RAM BALI AND ANOTHER (Defendants)*

Limitation Act, Sec. 144—Religious Endowment—Transfer by manager without necessity—Adverse possession against idol—Time from which period begins to run.

When property does not vest in the Mahant, but vests in the idol and the Mahant purports to transfer it in his capacity as the manager of the idol, adverse possession against the idol commences from the very moment possession is taken under the sale deed, and it cannot be deemed to have been postponed until the Mahant is dead.

FIRST APPEAL from a decree of S. M. ALAM ESQ., Subordinate Judge of Gorakhpur.

K. Verma for the appellant.

Shiva Prasad Sinha for the respondents.

The judgment of the Court was delivered by

Sulaiman, C. J.

SULAIMAN, C. J.—This is a plaintiff's appeal arising out of a suit brought by the plaintiff alleging himself to be the duly installed mahant, for possession of certain properties transferred by the former mahant.

In the connected appeals we have held that the plaintiff has established his claim as the chela of the last mahant, that it is proved that that mahant abdicated and resigned his mahantship and that he could validly do so, and that the present plaintiff was duly installed as his successor by election. It follows that the plaintiff was entitled to maintain the suit for recovery of possession of property transferred by the last mahant, provided there was no legal necessity for the transfer and provided his claim was within time.

---

*F. A. 471 of 1928

This appeal relates exclusively to a sale deed dated November 18, 1912 executed by the former mahant, Ram Prasad, for Rs.3,499-15-0 in favour of Mst. Ureha, predecessor of defendants Nos. 3 and 4 in respect of village Batelpur. The court below has held that there is no legal necessity for this sale deed also, but has dismissed the claim on the ground of limitation.

In appeal it is urged that the view taken by the court below on the question of limitation is wrong.

Before 1929 there was at one time some authority for the view that a suit brought by a succeeding mahant to recover possession of property transferred by his predecessor was governed by Article 134 of the Limitation Act; but in the case of Vidya Varuthi Thirtha v. Balusami Ayyar[1] their Lordships of the Privy Council distinctly laid down that a mahant cannot be treated as a trustee to whom property had been conveyed in trust within the meaning of that article, and that therefore Article 134 would not be applicable. Their Lordships applied Article 144, which is the general article for suits for recovery of possession of immovable property.

The learned advocate for the appellant, however, relies on the concluding portion of that judgment for the proposition that adverse possession can never become adverse during the lifetime of the trustee who made the transfer. That case, however, was a special case, in which the plaintiffs were claiming rights as permanent lessees and they had been allowed to remain in possession by the succeeding mahant. Their Lordships came to the conclusion that the proper inference to be drawn from the circumstances of that case was that the new trustee who had power to continue the tenancy had continued it, and consequently the possession of the lessee never became adverse until his death. Where a person is claiming as a permanent lessee and is allowed to remain in possession by a succeeding trustee as lessee, he need not necessarily acquire adverse rights so as to become a permanent lessee in perpetuity. The case of an out and out transfer obviously stands on a different footing. In such a case the transferee from the very moment of his taking over possession asserts adverse title and remains in possession as an adverse proprietor.

Their Lordships of the Privy Council in the case of Lal Chand Marwari v. Mahant Ramrup Gir[2] do not think that the point was clearly covered by Vidya Varuthi Thirtha's case.

There has been a slight conflict of opinion in this country as a result of the last mentioned pronouncement. But a Bench of the Madras High Court in the case of Rama Reddy v. Rangadasan[3] came to the conclusion that adverse possession could only begin to run after the death or retirement of the last trustee who had made the transfer. On the other hand, the contrary view has been accepted by another Bench of the Madras High Court in the case of Vadlamudi Sastrulu v. Thalluri Venkataseshayya[4], by the Patna High Court in the case of Badri Narain Singh v. Mahant Kailash Gir[5] and the Lucknow Chief Court in the case of Mahant Parkas Das v. Mahant Janki Ballabh Saran[6] and also by the Calcutta High Court in

[1] 44 Mad. 831=20 A. L. J. 497

[2] 24 A. L. J. 105 at 112

[3] I. L. R. 49 Mad. 543

[4] 110 I. C. 894

[5] I. L. R. 5 Pat. 341

[6] I. L. R. 2 Luck. 239

CIVIL
1932
SARABDEO BHARTHI v. RAM BALI
Sulaiman, C. J.

Debendra Nath Sadhukhan v. Nahrmal Jalan.

It seems to us that when the property does not vest in the mahant, but vests in the idol and the mahant purports to transfer it in his capacity as the manager of the idol, adverse possession against the idol commences from the very moment possession is taken under the sale deed, and it cannot be deemed to have been postponed till the mahant died. So far as the vendee is concerned, his possession certainly becomes adverse from the very moment of the sale. We, therefore, think that there is no justification for holding that adverse possession would not commence to run in the case of an out and out transfer until the mahant is dead.

This view finds support from the rules laid down by their Lordships of the Privy Council in the cases of A. S. S. Subbaiya Pandaram v. Mahamad Mustapha Maracayar[7] and Damodar Das v. Adhikari Lakhan Das[8] in both of which their Lordships held that adverse possession commenced from the date of the transfer.

We may also point out that the legislature itself realised the difficulty and hardship that might in some cases arise, and has accordingly intervened. Act I of 1929 adds Article 134(b) in the schedule, under which the suit by a new trustee can be brought within 12 years from the date of death, resignation or retirement of the transferor. We are accordingly of opinion that the view taken by the court below on the question of limitation was correct. The appeal fails, and it is hereby dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed

---

[7] 21 A. L. J. 731

[8] 37 I. A. 147

CIVIL
1932
May 27
SULAIMAN, C. J.
MUKERJI, J.

KISHAN CHAND AND ANOTHER (Applicants)
versus
LACHHMI CHAND AND OTHERS (Opposite parties)*

Civil Procedure Code, Sec. 109—'Final order'—Meaning of—Order passed on appeal by High Court setting aside the ex parte decree—Whether amounts to 'final order'.

A final order within the meaning of Sec. 109 C. P. C. need not be a final order passed in the suit itself but may be a final order in any other proceeding or case arising subsequent to the suit. If that order finally terminates that proceeding and determines the rights of the parties so far as the question in controversy between the parties in that proceeding arose, it is a final order within the meaning of that section.

On appeal to the High Court from an order of the lower court rejecting an application under Or. IX, R. 13 C. P. C. for setting aside an ex parte decree, the High Court allowed the appeal and set aside the ex parte decree with the result that the original suit was restored to its original number to be tried de novo. Held, that the order of the High Court is a final order within the meaning of Sec. 109 C. P. C. and is therefore appealable.

APPLICATION for leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council.

Mansur Alam for the applicants.

K. N. Katju and S. N. Seth for the opposite parties.

---

*P. C. A. 8 of 1932

CIVIL
1932 KISHAN CHAND
v.
LACHHMI CHAND
Sulaiman,
C. J.

The judgment of the Court was delivered by

SULAIMAN, C. J.—This is an application for leave to appeal to their Lordships of the Privy Council from an order passed by a Bench of this Court.

A suit was brought by the plaintiffs for a declaration of title as to property in Schedule B attached to the plaint on the basis of a private partition and for other reliefs against the defendant No. 1. At his own instance defendant No. 2, the son of defendant No. 1, was made a party. There was a written compromise filed and signed by the plaintiffs and defendant No. 1 which, it was alleged, at one time had been provisionally agreed to by the pleader for the defendant No. 2. This compromise, however, was not verified by the pleader who was absent on the date fixed. The first court decreed the claim in terms of the compromise against the defendant No. 1 and decreed it ex parte against defendant No. 2 in terms of the compromise.

An application was later on filed on behalf of the defendant No. 2 for the setting aside of the ex parte decree passed against him. The court after considering the case came to the conclusion that the decree should not be set aside and it rejected the application. This application was numbered as Miscellaneous Application No. 200 in the original suit. A first appeal from order was preferred to this High Court from the order rejecting the application and a Bench of this Court allowed the appeal and set aside the ex parte decree as against both the defendants with the result that the original suit was restored to its original number to be tried de novo.

The defendants wish to appeal to their Lordships of the Privy Council from the order passed by the High Court.

Preliminary objections are taken by the learned advocate for the respondents that the valuation is less than Rs.10,000 and that there is no right of appeal because the order of this Court was not a final order within the meaning of Section 109 C. P. C.

As regards the first objection, no doubt the valuation of the suit as put down in the plaint was Rs.5,100 and the court-fee paid was on the basis of the Government revenue. But it is conceded on behalf of the respondents that the value of the property in Schedule B was more than Rs.10,000. It seems to us that the suit, being one relating to a declaration of title to the property in Schedule B and for other reliefs in respect of it, was one involving directly or indirectly a claim or question to or respecting property of the amount or value exceeding Rs.10,000. Section 110 C. P. C. does not speak of the valuation of the suit as put in the plaint but of the value of the subject-matter in dispute or of the value of the property affected by it. We, therefore, overrule this objection.

The second objection requires some consideration. Their Lordships of the Privy Council in the leading case of Saiyid Mazhar Hossein v. Musammat Bodha Bibi[1] laid down that an order is a final order when it comprises the decision of the High Court upon the cardinal issue in a suit, that issue being one which goes to the foundation of the suit, and one which can

---

[1] I. L. R. 17 All. 112

CIVIL
1932 KISHAN CHAND
v.
LACHHMI CHAND
Sulaiman, C. J.

never, while this decision stands, be disputed again. In that case their Lordships actually entertained the appeal from an order remanding the case on a finding reversing the decree of the original court that the gift in dispute was valid. The only two cases which have been brought to our notice and in which their Lordships of the Privy Council held that no appeal could lie were Radha Kishan v. The Collector of Jaunpur[2] and Ramchand Manjimal v. Goverdhandas Ratanchand[3].

In Radha Kishan's case an application for setting aside an ex parte decree was disallowed by the original court without the courts being satisfied by any investigation as to whether or not the defendant had been prevented by any sufficient cause from appearing when the suit was called on for hearing; and the High Court reversed that order and sent the case back for investigation as to whether the defendant had sufficient cause for non-appearance. It is noteworthy that the ex parte decree was not set aside by the High Court and the whole case was not reopened, but the application itself was sent back for further enquiry. Their Lordships of the Privy Council emphasised this distinction in their judgment on page 226 and pointed out that what was remanded was merely the application immediately before the court, to wit the application to set aside the decree and it was this application which the Subordinate Judge would under the remand proceed to dispose of. Such an order, therefore, was held to be a mere interlocutory order, directing procedure and not deciding the cardinal point in the case itself.

Ram Chand's case was entirely different. A suit for damages was brought inspite of a previous arbitration agreement between the parties. The defendant applied under Section 19 of the Indian Arbitration Act for a stay of proceedings with a view to the issues being referred to arbitration under that section. The trial Judge granted the stay but the Judicial Commissioner reversed that order and refused to stay the proceedings. Their Lordships held that the order was not a final order as it did not finally dispose of the rights of the parties but left them to be determined by the courts in the ordinary way. It is to be noted that under Section 19 of the Indian Arbitration Act the court had a discretion to stay proceedings where there had been a previous submission. The appellate court in the exercise of that discretion had declined to stay proceedings. That case, therefore, is clearly distinguishable.

It seems to us that as soon as the ex parte decree was passed by the court, the court became functus officio and the suit terminated for the time being. A fresh proceeding was initiated by an application under Order IX, Rule 13 C. P. C. for the setting aside of the decree. The application, of course, related to the previous suit but it was a miscellaneous application separately numbered which was a proceeding in itself. The matter in controversy in this new proceeding was not the merits of the original suit but the question whether the plaintiffs should be deprived of the rights which had accrued to them by virtue of this ex parte decree. If there was no sufficient cause for setting aside the ex parte decree, the decree

[2] I. L. R. 23 All. 220

[3] I. L. R. 47 Cal. 918

CIVIL
1932 KISHAN CHAND
v.
LACHHMI CHAND
Sulaiman, C. J.

would stand and the defendants would be bound by it and would not be allowed to reagitate the matter by a separate suit. The rights acquired under an ex parte decree are substantive rights independently of the merits of the original suit. The trial court held that no good cause had been shown and that, therefore, the ex parte decree had been validly passed and the plaintiffs were entitled to the benefit of that decree. On appeal this court came to a contrary conclusion. The result is that the ex parte decree in favour of the plaintiffs has been finally set aside and, so far as the proceedings relating to the setting aside of that decree are concerned, they have finally terminated by the order of this High Court and now it is the original suit which has been reopened and restored to its original number. The order of this High Court cannot be questioned again in the course of the trial of the suit or by way of appeal except to their Lordships of the Privy Council.

In the case of Radha Mohan Datt v. Abbas Ali Biswas[4] it was held by a Full Bench of this Court, of which one of us was a member, that the propriety of an order setting aside an ex parte decree under Order IX, Rule 13 C. P. C. cannot be questioned in an appeal from the decree ultimately passed in a suit and that the proceeding relating to the setting aside of the ex parte decree was a separate case which was decided by that order.

The learned advocate for the respondents further contends that an order cannot be a final order unless it actually decides the rights of the parties, that is to say, the merits of the case itself. He argues that in the present case all that has happened is that the defendants have been allowed a further opportunity to produce fresh evidence which is a matter of procedure only. It seems to us that the final order within the meaning of Section 109 need not be a final order passed in the suit itself but may be a final order in any other proceeding or case arising subsequent to the suit. If that order finally terminates that proceeding and determines the rights of the parties so far as the question in controversy between the parties in that proceeding arose, it is a final order within the meaning of that section.

This view finds full support from two decisions which have been cited before us, Meghraj v. Bidyabati Koer[5] and Lachmi Narain v. Balmakund[6]. In these case the plaintiff's suit had been dismissed for default and the remand order by the High Court merely reopened the case. Nevertheless both the Calcutta and the Patna High Courts held that it was a final order inasmuch as the controversy between the parties in that proceeding was finally determined. We are not aware that any objection was taken before the Privy Council.

The language of Section 109 C. P. C. is wide enough to cover this case, and in the absence of any clear authority to the contrary we must hold that the order in question is a final order and is, therefore, appealable.

It is not necessary for us to express any opinion whether when on appeal the High Court refused to record a compromise which has been

---

[4] [1931] A. L. J. 377

[5] 21 Cal. L. J. 279

[6] 6 Pat. L. J. 116

CIVIL
1932 KISHAN CHAND
v.
LACHHMI CHAND
Sulaiman, C. J.

recorded by the court below, an appeal would lie; vide Bhagwati Dayal v. Dhan Kunwar[7]. We may have to reconsider this point when a question directly arises. We may in passing remark that the case cited above may be distinguished on a supposition that the alleged compromise was entered into in the course of the suit itself and not in any separate proceeding. Nor is it necessary for us to express any opinion whether when questions of res judicata or limitation arise and are disposed of by the High Court as a preliminary point, a cardinal point has been decided.

In our opinion the case fulfils the requirements of Sections 109 and 110 C. P. C. and the applicants are entitled to appeal, and we certify accordingly.

Leave granted

---

[7] 24 A. L. J. 331

CIVIL
1932
May 23
MUKERJI, J.
BENNET, J.

RAM SHANKER (Plaintiff)
versus
THE SECRETARY OF STATE FOR INDIA IN COUNCIL AND ANOTHER (Defendants)*

Provincial Insolvency Act (V of 1920), Secs. 59(c), 57 and 56 and Government of India Act, Sec. 32—Official receiver makes a contract—Liability on contract—Property of insolvent liable if court's sanction obtained, otherwise receiver personally liable—No liability on Secretary of State for acts of receiver.

The proprietor of a printing press was adjudicated insolvent and the official receiver of the time, who was appointed receiver of the insolvent's estate, arranged with the plaintiff that the press should remain for a period in the house of the plaintiff where the press was, at the rent which was paid by the insolvent. The official receiver failed to pay the sum due to the plaintiff, and the plaintiff thereupon brought the present suit to recover the sum due, making the Secretary of State party to the suit.

Held: that all that the official receiver can do by making a contract is in the first place to render the property of the insolvent liable for the performance of the contract, if the receiver has obtained the sanction of the insolvency court to the making of the contract, and if he has not obtained that sanction, then he is personally liable on the contract. Under no circumstances there is any liability imposed on the Secretary of State in Council by an official receiver making a contract. Even if it were shown that he is in any sense an agent of the Secretary of State or the Government, the official receiver has no authority to make contracts on behalf of the Secretary of State or the Government.

Where the official receiver was appointed by the Government to perform certain duties under the Provincial Insolvency Act, the duties being imposed by statute, the Government has no liability for whatever the official receiver has done in the discharge or supposed discharge of his duty or supposed duty.

The Regulations of the East India Company, which govern the liability of the Secretary of State in virtue of Sec. 32 of the Government of India Act, drew a distinction between the acts of executive officers for which a certain liability might be assumed under Regulation III of 1793, Chapter XI,

---

*Civ. Rev. 479 of 1931

CIVIL
1932
RAM SHANKER
v.
THE SECRETARY OF STATE FOR INDIA IN COUNCIL
Bennet, J.

and the acts of courts for which Regulation I of 1823, Sec. 38, disclaimed all responsibility.

CIVIL REVISION from an order of MAULVI S. M. SAIDUDDIN, Judge, Court of Small Causes at Agra.

S. C. Das for the applicant.

U. S. Bajpai for the opposite parties.

The judgment of the Court was delivered by

BENNET, J.—This is a case which has come before a bench of this Court on revision on the application of the plaintiff one Ram Shanker, who brought a suit against the Secretary of State for India. The chief grounds put forward in the application in revision are that the Judge of the Small Cause Court Agra, had no jurisdiction to review his ex parte decree and that sufficient grounds were not made out for that review. Further that the claim of the plaintiff should have been allowed on the merits.

The claim of the plaintiff as set forth in his plaint was that one Damodar Das proprietor of a printing press was adjudicated insolvent and the official receiver of the time was appointed receiver of the insolvent's assets and that the official receiver took possession of the press and the premises which were leased at a rent of Rs.55 to the Damodar Printing Press by the plaintiff. Further that the official receiver on April 1, 1927 agreed to pay the said rent and that the official receiver kept possession of the house until February 19, 1928. A sum of Rs.605 was therefore due to the plaintiff for use and occupation of the said premises and that the official receiver had failed to pay. The Secretary of State was represented before the Small Cause Court and the claim of the plaintiff was decreed apparently after a contest on February 26, 1931. The only issue which had been framed in that suit was "For what amount, if any, is the defendant liable?" On March 12, 1931 Mr. Akhtar Ali, the Government Pleader made an application to the Judge of the Small Cause Court stating that in this suit which had been decided a most crucial issue had not been framed which was "is the Official Receiver an agent or servant of the Secretary of State and is the Secretary of State liable for the acts of the official receiver?" He further stated that he had produced rulings to show that the Secretary of State was not liable. A review was therefore prayed for. The learned Small Cause Court Judge held that as the necessary issue had not been framed, therefore the review should be granted and he directed that the issue should be framed accordingly. An application bearing no date but with a stamp dated June 21, 1931 was then made on behalf of the plaintiff asking that the official receiver be added as a defendant. The Secretary of State therefore became defendant No. 1 and the official receiver became defendant No. 2. The suit therefore was again tried by the learned Judge of the Small Cause Court and he dismissed the suit of the plaintiff by an order of July 18, 1931. The grounds of dismissal are firstly that the evidence falls short of proving any contract with the former official receiver, that a suit for compensation for use and occupation was also not maintainable, that the insolvency court had refused permission to sue the present official receiver, that the suit was barred by three years limitation against the official receiver and was not maintainable against him for want of notice under Section 80 C. P. C., that the suit could not succeed against the Secretary of State because the official receiver had done nothing for which his principal may be held liable even if he were to be considered for certain purposes an accredited agent or servant of the Secretary of State.

The grounds on which the revision has been urged in this Court are mainly that the order for review of judgment was without jurisdiction, because the Secretary of State had not paid the decretal amount or furnished sufficient security along with the application for review. In the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act, Section 17 it is laid down that at the time of the application for review of judgment such deposit must be made or such security must be filed and there is no exception made on behalf of the Secretary of State. This argument is undoubtedly correct, and we consider that if the attention of the learned Small Cause Court Judge had been drawn to this provision of the Small Cause Courts Act he should not have granted the review in question. But apparently this point was not raised before him. However, we are now dealing with a question of revision under Section 25 of the Small Cause Courts Act and there is a discretion given by this section to the High Court. The words used in this section are that the High Court may call for the case and pass such order with respect thereto as it thinks fit. We are therefore to consider not merely whether the learned Small Cause Court Judge has made a technical error in his procedure, but we are to consider whether the order at which he has finally arrived is an order which substantially does justice between the parties. We therefore consider that it is incumbent on us to see whether there is any liability on the Secretary of State for the alleged acts of the former official receiver. It is not now contended before us that there is any liability on the present official receiver and we are clearly of opinion that there is no such liability. As regards the position of the official receiver we are of opinion that it would have been necessary to give him the two months notice prescribed by Section 80 C. P. C. and we are further of opinion that as his name was not brought on the record until a period of three years had elapsed from the origin of the cause of action according to the plaint, therefore the suit against him would be time-barred.

We now turn to consider the general question which is of much greater importance, namely, whether there is any liability of the Secretary of State for the acts of an official receiver. Under Section 56 of the Provincial Insolvency Act V of 1920 the court may appoint any person as a receiver. There is nothing in this section which indicates that the Government or the court have any liability for the acts of a receiver. On the contrary it is laid down in Section 56(4) that where a receiver appointed under this section occasions loss to the property by his wilful default or gross negligence, the court may direct that his property be attached and sold and may apply the proceeds to make good any balance found due from him for any loss so occasioned by him, that is, that a receiver can be made personally liable for his negligence as regards the property entrusted to him. It is obvious from the section that the liability of a receiver as regards his actions towards other persons would be personal and that he would not involve the court or the Government in any liability as regards other persons. Section 57 states that the Local Government may appoint certain persons as official receivers and that such persons shall be receivers for all cases of insolvency unless the court for special reasons otherwise directs. It is also provided in Sub-sections 3 and 4 that sums payable in respect of the services of official receiver shall be credited to a fund and the official receiver shall receive remuneration out of that fund, but not beyond a fixed rate. In Section 59 it is provided for both classes of receivers that they may by leave of the court carry on the business of the insolvent so far as may be necessary for the beneficial winding up of the same. Apparently the former official receiver was acting under this provision in Section 59 (c) when he arranged with the plaintiff that the press should remain for a period in the house of the plaintiff where the press was. It is important to note that that arrangement should have been made by leave of the Court and it is not shown in the present case that any such leave was obtained.

We now turn to deal with the general question of liability of the Secretary of State. It is laid down in the Government of India Act, 9 and 10 Geo. V, Ch. 101, Section 32 as follows:—

> (1) The Secretary of State in Council may sue and be sued by the name of the Secretary of State in Council as a body corporate.
>
> (2) Every person shall have the same remedies against the Secretary of State in Council as he might have had against the East India Company if the Government of India Act, 1858, and this Act had not been passed.

It is therefore necessary for us to examine what would have been the liability of the East India Company in a case like the present. The earliest law dealing with the liability of the East India Company is contained in Bengal Regulation III of 1793, and this is the foundation of the liability in question. It is provided in the preamble and in Sections 10 and 11 as follows:—

> Preamble:—They have resolved that the authority of the laws and Regulations so lodged in the courts shall extend not only to all suits between native individuals, but that the officers of Government employed in the collection of the revenue, the provision of the Company's investment, and all other financial or commercial concerns of the public, shall be amendable to the courts for acts done in their official capacity in opposition to the Regulations; and that Government itself, in superintending these various branches of the resources of the state, may be precluded from injuring private property they have determined to submit the claims and interests of the public in such matters, to be decided by the courts of justice according to the Regulations, in the same manner as suits between individuals.
>
> X. Collectors of the revenue and their assistants and native officers, commercial residents and agents and their assistants and native officers employed in the provision of the investment, salt agents and their assistants

CIVIL

1932

RAM SHANKER v. THE SECRETARY OF STATE FOR INDIA IN COUNCIL

Bennet, J.

> and native officers concerned in the manufacture of salt, the collectors of the customs and their assistants and native officers employed in the collection of the customs, the mint and assay masters and their assistants and native officers, are declared amenable to the zillah or city court in the jurisdiction of which they may reside or carry on the public business committed to their charge, for any acts done in their official capacity, in opposition to any Regulation printed and published in the manner directed in Regulation XLI 1793.
>
> XI. If a native, or any other person not being a British subject shall consider himself aggrieved under any Regulation printed and published in the manner directed in Regulation XLI 1793, by an act done by any of the officers of Government described in Section X pursuant to a special order originating with the Governor-General in Council or the Board of Revenue or of Trade, the officer by whom the Act may be done is not to be liable to be sued for it. In such cases, Government is to be considered as the defendant; and the person deeming himself aggrieved is to present a petition to the Judge of the Dewanny Adawlut of the zillah or city to which the officer by whom the act complained of may have been done shall be amenable in his public capacity, stating wherein he considers himself injured under the Regulations, and praying that the Governor-General in Council will order the court of Dewanny Adawlut in which the cause may be cognisable to try the points or matters contested agreeably to the Regulations .

Now it is also provided in Bengal Regulation 1 of 1823, Section 38 as follows:—

> It is hereby declared and enacted, that Government is not and shall not be held liable for any error or irregularity which may have occurred, or shall occur, in any order, proceeding, or decree of any court of Judicature, whether a revenue or other officer of Government may or may not have been, or shall or shall not be, employed in giving effect to the order, proceeding, or decree deemed to be erroneous or irregular. Nor shall any officer of Government be held liable for anything done or suffered in conformity with an order, proceeding, or decree of a court as aforesaid and if any person or persons shall sue Government, or any officer of Government, for anything done or suffered under an order, proceeding, or decree of court as aforesaid, such person or persons shall be nonsuited, with costs. The same principle is and shall be held applicable to all orders, proceedings, or decree made, held, or passed by any public officer, in virtue of powers vested in him for the judicial cognizance of any pleas, suits, complaints, or informations whatsoever, unless otherwise specially provided.

From these two Regulations the whole of the case-law of the liability of the Secretary of State has evolved. We may point out in the beginning that in England it was not possible to bring a suit against the Crown and that the only procedure for a person who wishes to have a remedy against the Crown is by a petition of right which is left at the Crown office and if the law officers of the Crown approve then a fiat is granted. "Let justice be done and the suit proceeds between the petitioner and the Crown". The East India Company did not occupy the same position in India as the Crown did in England, and therefore the procedure arose under the rule of the Company that a certain liability attached for certain purposes to the East India Company. That liability has been continued against the Secretary of State by the Act of 1858 and the Act of 1920. It is true that in

Civil

1932

Ram Shanker v. The Secretary of State for India in Council

Bennet, J.

most cases which have come before the courts the contest has been on the liability of the Secretary of State for torts committed by Government officers in India and the question has not so often arisen on account of liability on contract, because it is easier to ascertain the liability on a contract by the simple criterion of whether the officer in question was authorised to bind the Secretary of State by his contract. We may refer to some of the earlier rulings. In the case of Ghackjee Dadajee v. The E. I. Company[1] a police officer under a warrant from the Governor in Council of Bombay trespassed into a house. Sir Erskine Perry held that an action against the Company would not lie, as they were a governing body and were only liable for personal misconduct. In Shibhajan Durga Prasad v. Secretary of State[2] there was a suit for negligence of a police officer for property seized under the Cr. P. C. and Jenkins, C. J. quoted the above case and held that the Secretary of State was not liable as the East India Company had never been held liable for the illegal acts of Governors and Members of Council. The case of Dhakjee Dadajee v. Secretary of State for India in Council was also quoted in Ross v. Secretary of State[3], where the Government was held not to be liable as a principal for the acts of its servants as agents. The court also quoted from Story on page 63 as follows:—

> Section 319—It is plain, that Government itself is not responsible for the misfeasances, or wrongs, or negligences or omissions of duty of the subordinate officers or agents engaged in the public service, for it does not undertake to guarantee to any of persons the fidelity of any of the officers or agents, whom it employs, since that would involve it, in all its operations, in endless embarrassments and difficulties and losses, which would be subversive of the public interests.

This passage is also cited with approval in the Secretary of State for India in Council v. Kasturi Reddi[4]. Similarly in a recent case of Mackenzie v. The Corporation of Chilliwack[5] their Lordships of the Judicial Committee appear to have been of opinion that a local authority can be made responsible for the misconduct of a constable appointed by it, if at all, only on the ground that the appointment was not fitly or properly made. A different class of case is P. & O. S. N. Co. v. The Secretary of State for India in Council[6]. Here the P. & O. Company sued for damages caused by the servants of the Government dockyard at Kidderpore. It was held that the Secretary of State was responsible as this was a business undertaken by Government. The ruling distinguished acts done in the exercise of what are usually termed sovereign powers and acts done in the conduct of undertaking which might be carried on by private individuals without having such powers delegated to them. Acts of the sovereign power are said to be the maintenance of the Army, the Navy and the Judicial service. It will be noted that in Regulation III of 1793, Section 10 laid a certain liability on collectors of revenue which might be adopted by the East India Company. Cases in which this liability has been held to lie on the Secretary of State are reported in Hari Bhanji v. Secretary of State in Council[7], where the collector had illegally levied a duty and Government was held liable if Government had ratified the act, and in Dayaram v. Secretary of State[8] where it was held that the person who pays takavi under protest has a right to sue in the civil court under Section 183 of the Land Revenue Act.

---

[1] 2 Morley's Digest, 307 (1843)

[2] 37 Mad. 55 (1913)

[3] 28 Bom. 314 (1904)

[4] 26 Mad. 268

[5] [1912] 107 L. T. 570

[6] 5 Bom. H. C. R. Appendix (1861)

[7] 4 Mad. 344 (1879)

There is an important doctrine in English law to the effect that the Crown cannot be liable for the acts which its servants perform in accordance with statutory provisions. This has been recognised in 37 Mad. 55 at page 67 where there is a reference to Tobin v. The Queen[9] for the proposition that independently of the doctrine that the queen can do no wrong, the Crown could not be made liable for the action of a Naval Captain purporting to act under the Slave Trade Acts in seizing and destroying the plaintiff's vessel, as he was not acting in obedience to the command of her Majesty but in the supposed performance of a duty imposed on him by Act of Parliament. This doctrine was also applied in 28 Bom. 314 (1904) where it was held that the Secretary of State in Council could not be made liable for the negligence of a chief constable about the custody of hay seized by him under the Cr. P. C. At page 352 the quotation is made, but it is settled law that where the duty to be performed is imposed by law and not by the will of the party employing the agent, the employer is not liable for the wrong done by the agent in such employment. We would point out that in the present case the official receiver was appointed by Government to perform certain duties under the Provincial Insolvency Act. Those duties were imposed by statute and therefore the Government has no liability for whatever the official receiver has done in the discharge or supposed discharge of his duty or supposed duty. There is one other ruling of this court dealing with this question of liability of the Secretary of State reported in Secretary of State v. Sukhdeo[10], where the plaintiff's property was wrongfully seized by a magistrate and sold for a fine which was really against another person. It was held by each of the two Judges that the Crown was not liable to pay compensation for the illegal acts of its servants, but it was bound to make restitution to the extent it had benefited by the illegal acts. The two Judges were agreed on this point of the non-liability of the Crown although they differed on other points.

We may now turn to the question of contracts. Part III of the Government of India Act, 9 and 10, Geo. V is headed Property, Contracts, and Liabilities and in that part it is laid down in Sections 29, 29-A and 30 what contracts can be made under that Act. Then follows Section 32 stating the liability of the Secretary of State to which the plaintiff has made reference in the present case. It would appear prima facie that the liability of the Secretary of State on contracts was limited to the contracts laid down in the previous sections, and if so the present case would clearly not involve the Secretary of State in any liability as the contract in question was not one which would come under any of the sections of Part III. We also find in Manual of Government Orders, Paragraph 1455, which states:

---

[8] 25 A. L. J. 1002

[9] [1864] C. B. N. S. 310 at 349

[10] [1898] A. W. N. 173

Civil

1932

Ram Shanker v. The Secretary of State for India in Council

Bennet, J.

> The rules regulating the powers of the Government of India and Local Governments to enter into or sanction contracts and agreements involving liabilities on the part of the State are contained in Appendix 34.

Appendix 34 of the Manual of Government Orders lays down certain definite conditions which must be observed for contracts. It is obvious that the alleged contract in the present case does not comply with the necessary conditions in Appendix 34. There is moreover nothing to show that a person in the position of an official receiver has any authority whatever to bind the State by his contracts. We are of opinion that all that he can do by making a contract is in the first place to render the property of the insolvent liable for the performance of the contract, if the receiver has obtained the sanction of the insolvency court to the making of the contract, and if he has not obtained that sanction, then he is personally liable on the contract. Under no circumstances do we find that there is any liability imposed on the Secretary of State in Council by an official receiver making a contract. Even if it were shown that he is in any sense an agent of the Secretary of State or the Government, it has not been shown that the official receiver has any authority to make contracts on behalf of the Secretary of State or the Government. We are of opinion that the Regulations of the East India Company drew a distinction between the acts of executive officers for which a certain liability might be assumed under Regulation III of 1793, Chapter XI, and the acts of courts for which Regulation 1 of 1823, Sec. 38 disclaimed all responsibility. For the reasons which we have set forth we are of opinion that the Secretary of State in Council was not liable for the alleged act of the official receiver in the present case. Accordingly we consider that the final order of the Small Cause Court Judge dismissing the suit of the plaintiff is an order which has done substantial justice between the parties. We therefore think that this is a case in which we should not interfere and we dismiss this application in revision. We direct that the applicant should pay the costs of the Government Advocate in the present case.

Application dismissed

BHAGWAN SAHAI AND OTHERS
versus
RAM CHANDER AND OTHERS*

Civil

1932

May 6

Mukerji, J.
Bennet, J.

Tenancy Act (III of 1926), Sec. 121—Co-tenants—Suit for determination of shares in occupancy holding—Cognizable by revenue court alone.

> A suit for the determination of the quantity of share held by each co-tenant in an occupancy holding is covered by Sec. 121 of the Tenancy Act (III of 1926) and is cognizable by the revenue court.

Reference under Section 267, Clause (2) of the Agra Tenancy Act (III of 1926) submitted by the Additional Subordinate Judge, Bulandshahr.

Hari Pal Varshni for the applicants.

The opposite parties were not represented.

---

*Mis. Case 753 of 1931

CIVIL

1932

BHAGWAN SAHAI
v.
RAM CHANDER

Mukerji, J.

The judgment of the Court was delivered by

MUKERJI, J.—This is a reference by a learned Munsif under Section 267 of the Agra Tenancy Act on the question of jurisdiction to entertain a certain suit.

The plaintiffs' case is as follows:—

An occupancy holding originally belonged to four brothers, one of whom, now represented by the defendants, separated taking a fourth share in the lands. After this separation there came into existence two holdings one independent of the other. The holding which was held by the three brothers became the property of the plaintiffs' ancestor alone, because two of the brothers died without any issue. Later on, out of the larger holding 4 bighas were given to the defendants by way of concession with the result that out of the holding the plaintiffs' share is 21 bighas 13 biswas and the defendants' share is 4 bighas and 10 biswas. The plaintiffs went to the revenue court asking for a partition. There the defendants denied the title of the plaintiffs to the larger amount of the share claimed by the plaintiffs and the revenue court directed the plaintiffs to obtain a declaration as to their title. The plaintiffs accordingly asked for a declaration that certain specified plots together bearing an area of 21 bighas 13 biswas were the plaintiffs' property, while certain other plots together bearing an area of 4 bighas 8 biswas belonged to the defendants, although the total area formed in the revenue papers only one holding. In the alternative, the plaintiffs asked for a declaration that in the entire holding of 26 bighas and odd the plaintiffs' share was 21 bighas and 13 biswas.

The learned Munsif was doubtful as to whether the suit could be taken cognizance of by him, and, therefore, he made the reference.

No body has appeared on behalf of the defendants, in this court. We are of opinion that the suit is cognizable by the revenue court and revenue court alone. It is a fact admitted by the plaintiffs that the defendants are co-tenants of the holding. The dispute is about the quantity of share held by each party. Under Section 121 a tenant may sue any person claiming through the landholder, that is to say, any person who claims to be a co-tenant, for a declaration of his right as a tenant. The suit, in our opinion, is covered by Section 121.

A suit for division of tenancies under Section 37 is also cognizable by the revenue court and revenue court alone (see Fourth Schedule, Group B, serial No. 1).

We hold that the suit is cognizable by the revenue court and direct the learned Munsif to return the plaint for presentation to the proper court. The plaintiffs must pay the costs of this reference and the costs incurred by the defendants in the court below.

Reference answered

BADRI PRASAD MISIR (Plaintiff)

versus

BIJAI NAND TEWARI AND ANOTHER (Defendants)*

Civil

1932

May 25

SULAIMAN, C. J.
YOUNG, J.

Pre-emption Act, Sec. 4(10)—Vendor sells property not in his possession—Vendee recovers property from third party—Whether transaction amounts to sale and is pre-emptible.

Where a person, who is not in possession of his property and is unable to raise money to sue for its recovery, sells the same to the defendant for cash consideration, and the defendant recovers the property from the third party by a suit, the transaction falls within the definition of 'sale' under Sec. 54 of the T. P. Act and such sale is pre-emptible on payment of all that the vendee has had to pay.

Kalyan v. Desrani, I. L. R. 49 All. 488 distinguished.

SECOND APPEAL from a decree of PANDIT RUP KISHAN AGHA, District Judge of Allahabad, modifying a decree of MAULVI MUHAMMAD TAQI KHAN, Munsif of Mirzapur.

S. N. Verma for the appellant.

Shiva Prasad Sinha for the respondents.

The judgment of the Court was delivered by

Sulaiman, C. J.

SULAIMAN, C. J.—This is a plaintiff's appeal arising out of a suit for pre-emption of a part of the property sold under a sale deed by the vendor in favour of the vendee. At the time of the sale the property transferred was not in the possession of the vendor but was held by a third party against whom a suit had to be instituted in order to recover its possession. The vendor was not in a position to raise money and was consequently unable to sue for recovery of the property and merely transferred his entire proprietary interest to the vendee for a sum of Rs.5,000 which included certain prior debts as well.

The vendee then brought a suit and subsequently recovered the property from the third party. It was after this that the present suit for pre-emption was instituted by the plaintiff.

The learned Subordinate Judge in a careful judgment came to the conclusion that the sale was pre-emptible and that the plaintiff should pay the market value of the property as it now stands free from all debts. On appeal the lower appellate court has dismissed the suit holding that the sale was not pre-emptible at all. In our opinion the view taken by the lower appellate court was quite wrong. Under the sale deed the only benefit which the vendor obtained was the receipt of Rs.5,000 as consideration. He was not to get any more advantage if afterwards the vendee succeeded in recovering the property from the vendor. He was also not liable if the suit failed. Thus the total consideration which passed to the vendor was the sum of Rs.5,000 neither more nor less. He transferred his entire ownership in the property to the vendee in exchange for this cash consideration. The transaction therefore falls within the definition of "sale" under Section 54 of the Transfer of Property Act. Under Section 11 of the Agra Pre-emption Act such sale is pre-emptible.

---

*S. A. 1534 of 1930

CIVIL

1932

BADRI PRASAD MISIR v. BIJAI NAND TEWARI

Sulaiman, C. J.

The learned advocate for the defendants relies on the case of Kalyan v. Desrani[1]. In that case the vendor had not sold the whole of the property which was in the possession of a third party to the vendee, but had transferred only a part of it for cash consideration. In addition to paying the price mentioned in the deed the vendee undertook to fight out the litigation and incur all the costs in restoring the vendor's share to him free from all trouble. Thus the total consideration which the vendor received was cash plus an undertaking to restore his property to him. It was merely held by the Bench of this Court that such a transaction was not a "sale" pure and simple, as defined in Section 54 of the Transfer of Property Act. The present case is obviously distinguishable, because here the vendor got no other consideration except the cash consideration mentioned.

The next question is whether the vendee is entitled to any compensation for the improvement that has been effected in removing the cloud on the title. We have already pointed out that the vendee might have waited for the expiry of one year during which a suit for pre-emption could be brought. The result of the litigation launched by him has certainly improved the value of the estate. The vendee should both on the principles of equity and on the analogy of the Mohammedan Law get at least a proportionate amount of the total costs incurred by him whether in court or out of court, in recovering possession of the property. We do not think that he is entitled to claim the enhanced value of the property as it now stands, after the cloud has been removed, independently of the costs incurred by him. The enhanced value subsequent to the sale deed is in the nature of an acquisition to the estate and we do not see why the vendee should get the benefit of it when there was no pressing necessity for him to sue within a year. The pre-emptor is entitled to step into the shoes of the vendee and to take the whole estate and pay for all that the vendee has had to pay. The benefit of the subsequent enhancement in value would go to him. In this view of the matter we think that the vendee can only insist upon payment to him of a proportionate amount of the actual costs incurred by him. The courts below have gone into the present market value of the property, but they have not decided what costs the vendee had to incur in recovering the estate. We cannot dispose of the appeal finally without a clear finding on the last mentioned question. We accordingly remit the following issue to the court below for a finding:—

What was the proportionate amount of the total costs actually incurred by the vendee in recovering the estate from the third party?

The burden of proving this lies upon the vendee, and both parties will be at liberty to produce any fresh evidence which they are advised to produce. The findings should be returned within three months, if convenient. The usual ten days will be allowed for objections.

Issue remitted

---

[1] I. L. R. 49 All. 488

SHAHZAD SINGH (Plaintiff)
versus
JIACHHA KUNWAR AND OTHERS (Defendants)*

CIVIL

1932

June 1

SULAIMAN, C. J.
BANERJI, J.

Specific Relief Act, Sec. 27(b)—Agreement between parties—Term of—'In case of contemplated transfer, property to be transferred to other party for proper price—Deed of exchange executed between representatives of one party and a stranger—For value and without notice—Previous agreement unenforceable against transferee.

Two sets of persons entered into an agreement in 1874 that in case of a contemplated transfer of certain property, it would be transferred to the other party for proper price. In 1928 a deed of exchange was executed between the representatives of one party and a stranger. In a suit for enforcement of the previous agreement brought by the representatives of the other party, the lower court found that the transferee had no notice of this agreement. Held, that no matter what principle or statute governed the obligation of the representatives, the provisions contained in Sec. 27 of the Specific Relief Act must apply and the transferee for value without notice was protected and the contract could not be enforced against her.

Aulad Ali v. Ali Athar, I. L. R. 49 All. 527 distinguished.

SECOND APPEAL from a decree of S. MAITRA ESQ., Additional District Judge of Ghazipur, confirming a decree of BABU KRISHNA DAS, Subordinate Judge.

Haribans Sahai and S. N. Verma for the appellant.

P. L. Banerji, Janki Prasad and A. P. Pandey for the respondents.

The judgment of the Court was delivered by

Sulaiman, C. J.

SULAIMAN, C. J.—This is a plaintiff's appeal arising out of a suit for specific performance of a contract entered in an agreement dated January 24, 1874 between the predecessors of the parties. Two sets of persons agreed that in case of a contemplated transfer the property dealt with in the agreement was to be transferred to the other party for a proper price.

On July 30, 1928 a deed of exchange was executed between the representatives of one of the parties and Mst. Jiachha Kunwar. The representatives of the other party brought a suit to enforce the previous agreement. Both the courts below have dismissed the claim. The lower appellate court has distinctly found that Mst. Jiachha Kunwar had no notice of this deed of agreement when she took the property for valuable consideration.

The learned advocate for the plaintiff in second appeal first urges that this finding must not be accepted because the plea was not clearly taken in the written statement that there was no specific issue on the point, and because Mst. Jiachha Kunwar was not examined on oath. We however find that in Paragraph 5 of her written statement she stated that she had no knowledge of this agreement. The issue framed by the first court was very comprehensive and was to the effect:

> Is the plaintiff entitled to get the property in suit by virtue of the agreement and has the plaintiff any preferential right of pre-emption as against the defendant first set.

---

*S. A. 1372 of 1930

CIVIL

1932

SHAHZAD SINGH
v
JIACHHA KUNWAR

Sulaiman, C. J.

Both the courts below have gone into this question and found that she had no notice. It seems to us that when there was a denial by her in the written statement and when she led evidence and produced her son who was looking after her affairs that she had no knowledge of it, and when the agreement was more than 56 years old and there was no evidence whatsoever to show that she could have had any knowledge of it, the court below was justified in recording the finding that she had no notice, particularly as she was a stranger to the family and an illiterate "pardanashin' lady and there was nothing which would excite her suspicion or put her on inquiry. We think that the finding of the lower appellate court that she had no notice of the deed of agreement must be accepted in second appeal.

The learned advocate for the appellant relies on the Full Bench case of Aulad Ali v. Ali Athar[1]. That case is undoubtedly an authority binding upon us that a contract of this kind not only binds the parties thereto but also their representatives. In that case one of the parties to the agreement was the defendant transferor who obviously had knowledge. The transferee from him did not apparently plead want of notice, and this point was not pressed before the Full Bench which accordingly did not decide it.

In the present case the transferee has been distinctly found to have been a bona fide transferee for value without notice. It seems to us that whether Section 37 of the Indian Contract Act or general principles of equity, justice and good conscience applied to the heirs of the promisor, the transferee for value was protected. If the principles embodied in Section 40 of the Transfer of Property Act were applicable, even then the obligation cannot be enforced against a transferee for consideration and without notice of it, nor against the property in his hands. The contract in dispute was entered into in 1874, before the coming into force of the Transfer of Property Act, but after the Contract Act had been passed. It is clear that the specific performance of the contract can be enforced only under Sec. 27 of the Specific Relief Act which section makes an exception in favour of a transferee for value who has paid his money in good faith and without notice of the original contract. We therefore think that no matter what principle or statute governs the obligation of the representatives, the provisions contained in Section 27 of the Specific Relief Act must apply, and the defendant, who is a transferee for value without notice, is protected and the contract cannot be enforced against her.

The plaintiff alleged that the transaction was one of sale, but the finding of the lower appellate court that it was a transaction of exchange is conclusive against him. The suit has therefore been rightly dismissed and we dismiss this appeal with costs.

Appeal dismissed

---

[1] I. L. R. 49 All. 527

SALONA BIBI (and after her death) ZUBAIDA BIBI (Plaintiff)
versus
BU ALI KHAN AND OTHERS (Defendants)*

Civil
1932
June 2
Pullan, J.
Niamat-ullah, J.

Mohammedan Law—Waqf by Shia—Waqif reserving to himself as mutwalli a larger sum for collections and mutwalli's dues than for succeeding mutwallis—Whether waqf valid.

Where the waqif, who was an old man when he dedicated the property and had retained only a very small property for himself, assigned to himself as mutwalli a larger sum for collections and mutwalli's dues than he assigned to those who were to come after him and for whom collection would be a matter of no difficulty and little expense; held, that in making this distinction between himself and the succeeding mutwallis, the waqif was not reserving to himself any portion of the profits, but was merely making allowance for additional expense which would be incurred during his life-time in carrying out the purposes of the waqf, and the waqf was therefore valid under the Shia Law.

Abadi Begum v. Kaniz Zainab, 25 A. L. J. 51 referred to.

FIRST APPEAL from a decree of BABU CHATUR BEHARI LAL, Additional Subordinate Judge of Jaunpur.

K. N. Katju and Hyder Mehdi for the appellant.

B. E. O'Conor and Mushtaq Ahmad for the respondents.

The judgment of the Court was delivered by

Pullan, J.

PULLAN, J.—This is a plaintiff's appeal from the decision of the First Additional Subordinte Judge of Jaunpur, dismissing the plaintiff's suit. One Shabbir Ali Khan died on June 25, 1925. He had been a comparatively wealthy man, but he had, at the time of his death, disposed of all his property. He had made two deeds of gift on December 22, 1914 and January 30, 1916 in favour of Bu Ali who was his wife's nephew, and he had made two sale deeds on December 22, 1915 and January 17, 1925 in favour of Mst. Tahir Bibi who is Bu Ali's wife. All the rest of his property had been made, on January 30, 1916, the subject of a wakf, and he himself had remained mutwalli until his death. The office of mutwalli had descended in accordance with the deed of wakf on Bu Ali.

The present suit has been brought by Mst. Salona Bibi, who claimed one-third share in the estate of Shabbir Ali, being one of his heirs under Shia law. She sought to set aside all the deeds of transfer made by Shabbir Ali Khan on the ground that he was a man of weak intellect and was under influence exercised by Bu Ali Khan and his wife. There is nothing, in our opinion, to show that Shabbir Ali Khan was a man of weak intellect, or that the influence exercised upon him by Bu Ali Khan and Bu Ali Khan's wife was of such a nature that it can be described as undue influence. It appears that he had brought up Bu Ali Khan, who was his wife's nephew from childhood, and Bu Ali Khan's wife, Mst. Tahira Bibi, was the niece of the present plaintiff, and therefore related to Shabbir Ali Khan by blood. The family tree shows that Shabbir Ali Khan had no near relations. The plaintiff was his uncle's grand-daughter, and the dispositions made by him in favour of Bu Ali Khan and his wife, who looked after him in his old

---

*F. A. 352 of 1928

CIVIL

1932

SALONA BIBI v. BU ALI KHAN

Pullan, J.

age, were, in our opinion, prompted by affection and cannot be challenged on the grounds set up by the plaintiff.

The wakfnama, however, has been attacked on the ground that it is void under Shia law in that the wakif Shabbir Ali Khan reserved a benefit under the wakfnama for himself. The property dedicated is valued at Rs.6,000. It is landed property consisting of small shares in various villages. The income is stated in the wakfnama to be Rs.581-12-4 and the Government revenue is Rs.246-3-4. The annual profit is stated to be Rs. 335-9-7 which should be Rs.335-9-0. The wakif took from this Rs.110 as collection dues and his dues as mutwalli, and agreed to spend the balance on various charitable and religious objects. By a subsequent clause he reduced the sum to be taken by the mutwalli, if the mutwalli was Bu Ali Khan or any male or female descendants of his, from Rs.110 per annum to Rs.50 per annum, and there is a further clause enacting that if Bu Ali or any other mutwalli failed to carry out the objects of the wakf, the leaders of the Shia community might see that the mutwalli carried out the objects of the wakf, and in this case the mutwalli was to get only Rs.23 for collection, that is to say, he was to be entitled only to receive Rs.25 as the cost of collecting rents and so forth, but was to receive nothing for his other duties as mutwalli. It is not disputed that under the Shia law a wakf in which the wakif has reserved to himself during his lifetime the profits of the property is void ab initio. Where, however, the wakf is a mutwalli, he can take the salary fixed for mutwallis generally in the same way that if one should make an appropriation for poor and should himself become poor, or for lawyers and himself become a lawyer, there is no objection to his participating in its benefits (Baillie's Digest of Mohammedan Law, Part II, page 218). In the case of Abadi Begum v. Kaniz Zainab[1], their Lordships of the Privy Council stated that in that case they were disposed to hold that the two principal wakfnamas were wholly invalid by reason of the reservation in the wakif's favour finding that in that case > the settler under colour of fixing her salary as mutwalli was really reserving for her lifetime a portion of the income or usufruct of the property far in excess of what was assigned in the deed to future mutwallis or could reasonably have been assigned to them.

It is true that in the present case Shabbir Ali Khan assigned to himself as mutwalli a larger sum for collections and mutwalli's dues than he assigned to those who were to come after. We find, however, that the sum assigned to himself was only Rs.110 per annum, and he was required to collect Rs.581 in rents from different villages. He was an old man when he dedicated the property, and he retained at that time only a very small property for himself, having surrendered the bulk of his property in the villages in which the dedicated property is situated to Bu Ali. It is probable, therefore, that in order to make these collections and carry on the work of the wakf it would be necessary for Shabbir Ali Khan to employ a servant to collect the rents and conduct the business of the property. For this purpose a sum of some Rs. 9 per month was in no way excessive. The case of Bu Ali and his immediate descendants is different. Bu Ali already

---

[1] 25 A. L. J. 51

CIVIL
1932
SALONA BIBI
v.
BU ALI KHAN
Pullan, J.

owned property in all these villages through the gifts made in his favour by Shabbir Ali Khan. It may easily be understood that the collection would be a matter of no difficulty and little expense to Bu Ali Khan. This fact may account for the difference in the amount reserved for Shabbir Ali Khan and the amount reserved by him for Bu Ali Khan for expenses of collection, and in our opinion we are entitled to hold that in making this distinction between himself and the succeeding mutwallis Shabbir Ali Khan was not reserving to himself any portion of the profits, but was merely making allowance for additional expense which would be incurred during his lifetime in carrying out the purposes of the wakf. In our opinion the wakf is valid under the Shia law, and neither the wakf nor the other transfers are liable to be set aside at the instance of the plaintiff. We accordingly dismiss the appeal with costs.

Appeal dismissed

CIVIL
1932
June 7
SULAIMAN, C. J.
BANERJI, J.

SHRI KISHAN LAL AND OTHERS (Defendants)
versus
BIJAI SINGH (Plaintiff) AND LACHHMI NARAIN
AND OTHERS (Defendants)*

Tenancy Act (Local Act III of 1926), Sec. 82—Grove—Sold in execution of decree against grove-holder—Landholder's suit for possession of grove alleging that transfer was prohibited by custom—Lies in revenue court only.

> Where a grove was sold in execution of a decree against the grove-holder after the enforcement of the new Tenancy Act, the landholder could sue for the recovery of the grove from the auction-purchaser on the allegation that there was a custom prohibiting transfers of groves, in the revenue court only, under Sec. 82 of the Tenancy Act, impleading both his tenant and the transferee, and an appeal in such a suit lay to the revenue court.

SECOND APPEAL from a decree of BABU GAURI PRASAD, Additional District Judge of Mainpuri, reversing a decree of BABU RAJA BAHADUR, Munsif.

Shiva Prasad Sinha for the appellants.

U. S. Bajpai, G. Agarwala, S. B. L. Gaur and K. N. Agarwala for the respondents.

The judgment of the Court was delivered by

Sulaiman, C. J.

SULAIMAN, C. J.—This is a defendants' appeal arising out of a suit brought by the landholder for a declaration that the property in dispute, which is a grove land, was not liable to be sold in execution of a money decree against the landholder's grove-holder and for possession of the property. In substance the plaint is for the ejectment of the purchaser of the grove on the allegation that such a transfer was invalid and the landholder was entitled to recover possession of the grove. The defendants pleaded that the grove was transferable as there was no custom prohibiting such a transfer. There was no plea taken that the civil court had no jurisdiction to entertain the suit. The plaintiff, however, put forward the case that there was a custom prohibiting transfers of groves.

The suit was instituted on September 6, 1927, after the coming into force of the new Tenancy Act, and the auction sale of the grove also took place shortly after the coming into force of the new Act. The first court dismissed the suit but on appeal the lower appellate court has given the plaintiff a decree against the auction-purchaser on the ground that there is a custom under which sales of grove are prohibited.

---

*S. A. 1570 of 1929

In second appeal the point is taken that the civil court had no jurisdiction to entertain the suit. As the point goes to the root of the matter and is one of jurisdiction, and as an appeal would lie to the Commissioner if a suit were filed in the revenue court, we are bound to entertain this objection if it is valid. The question of costs however is another matter.

In Sec. 3 (2) of the Agra Tenancy Act "land" means land which is let or held for agricultural purposes, or as groveland or for pasturage. It is clear that a grove under the new Act is land within the meaning of the Act. It is also clear that under Section 197 (a) a grove-holder is a non-occupancy tenant.

It follows that under Sec. 3, Sub-clause (8) a grove is a holding. On the plaintiff's own showing there is a custom under which transfers are prohibited, with the result that no transfer can take place under Sec. 197 (b). It follows that the holding would be non-transferable under Sec. 23 and also under Sec. 34 of the Act. It then follows that according to the case put forward by the plaintiff there has been a transfer in contravention of the two sections and it is therefore void under Sec. 34(1). But Sec. 82 provides that if a tenant transfers his holding or any portion thereof contrary to Sub-section (1) of Sec. 34, both he and any person who may have obtained possession of the whole or any portion of the holding in pursuance of any such attempted illegal transfer, shall be liable to ejectment at the suit of the landholder, and to every such suit both the tenant and the transferee shall be made parties.

It is therefore obvious that if Sec. 82 were applicable to the transfer of a grove in execution of a decree and were not confined to voluntary transfers by the tenant, the landholder can sue both the tenant and the transferee in the revenue court. It would then follow that adequate relief could be claimed in the revenue court. As a suit for such relief would be expressly provided for in Sec. 82, no other court but the revenue court can take cognisance of such a suit. This is made clear by Sec. 230. The explanation to that section shows that if the cause of action is one in respect of which adequate relief might be granted by the revenue court, it is immaterial that the relief asked for from the civil courts may not be identical with that which the revenue court could have granted.

The learned counsel for the respondents however contends that the provisions of Sec. 82 cannot apply to a sale in execution of a decree. There is no doubt that if the words were to be taken too literally, there may be some force in this contention, but it seems to us contrary to the general policy of the legislature, as indicated in the various sections of the Act, to hold that there is a distinction between a voluntary and an involuntary transfer in Sec. 82. After all both are transfers of a tenant's holding and there is no reason why in the case of a voluntary transfer the landholder should be bound to sue in the revenue court, whereas in the case of an in-

CIVIL
1932
SHRI KISHAN LAL v. BIJAI SINGH
Sulaiman, C. J.

voluntary or compulsory transfer he should go to a civil court. Under the new Act provision has been made for institution of suits by landholders against tenants and their representatives in the revenue courts only.

We may also point out that a similar expression occurs in Sec. 52 of the Transfer of Property Act where the words are "the property cannot be transferred by any party to the suit". It has been held in numerous cases and there is now a consensus of opinion that the word 'transfer' in that section is wide enough to cover both voluntary and involuntary transfers.

It may also be pointed out that for the purpose of declaring that a non-occupancy tenancy is not transferable, Sec. 23 (1) would have been sufficient. Nevertheless the legislature has gone on to provide in Sec. 34 that every transfer made by a tenant in contravention of the provisions of this Act shall be void. We think the legislature could not have intended to leave out involuntary transfers from the scope of this provision. If a private transfer is void, so must be an involuntary transfer. The intention seems to be that where the transfer is void it cannot be validated by the consent of the landholder. We are therefore of opinion that Sec. 82 applies to this case and although the transfer was by means of a sale in execution of a decree against the tenant, the remedy of the landholder was to sue in the revenue court under Sec. 82 of the Tenancy Act impleading both the tenants and his transferee. We may point out that Sec. 82 falls under Schedule 4, Group B, Serial No. 10 of the Tenancy Act and an appeal in such a suit lies to the revenue court. In this view of the matter it is unnecessary to go into the question of custom. We therefore allow the appeal, set aside the decree of the lower appellate court and send the case back to the court of first instance with instructions to return the plaint for presentation to the proper court.

The plea of jurisdiction was not taken in the written statement; it appears to have been urged only at the time of the arguments. The defendants should not be allowed their costs in the first court. The trial court found the point in favour of the defendants and the lower appellate court has not considered it. The defendants will have their costs in the lower appellate court and in this court.

Appeal allowed

RAM CHARAN SAHU (Judgment-debtor)
versus
JUMNA PRASAD SAHU (Decree-holder)*

CIVIL
1932
June 7
SULAIMAN, C. J.
BANERJI, J.

Civil Procedure Code, Or. 21, R. 66—Proceedings under—Order fixing valuation to be entered in the sale proclamation—Whether appealable.

An order passed by the Executing Court in proceedings under Or. 21, R. 66 to the effect that "in the sale proclamation the valuation be fixed at 50 times of the land revenue", does not amount to a decree and is not appealable.

Nathu Lal v. Yashodha Devi, 1931 A. L. J. 1084 relied on.

*E. F. A. 203 of 1931

CIVIL

1932

RAM CHARAN SAHU v. JUMNA PRASAD SAHU

Sulaiman, C. J.

EXECUTION FIRST APPEAL from a decree of BABU CHARU DEB BANERJI, Subordinate Judge of Azamgarh.

A. P. Bagchi for the appellant.

Shiva Prasad Sinha for the respondent.

The judgment of the Court was delivered by SULAIMAN, C. J.—This is a judgment-debtor's appeal purporting to be an appeal from an order passed in execution. The order in question is in the following words:—

> In the sale proclamation the valuation be fixed at 50 times of the land revenue.

This order was passed when there was a dispute as to the valuation to be entered in the proclamation of sale. It is obvious that there has been no adjudication of the rights of the parties and such an order therefore does not amount to a decree within the meaning of Sec. 47 read with Sub-section 2 of the Civil Procedure Code. This view is supported by the case of Ajudhia Prasad v. Gopi Nath[1] and followed in Nathu Mal v. Yasodha Devi[2]. We agree with the view that every order passed in proceedings under O. XXI, R. 66 cannot be a decree within the meaning of Sec. 47, unless it amounts to an adjudication on the rights of the parties.

In the case of Shiam Lal v. Roshan Lal[3] Piggott, J. was careful not to decide this point but all the same remarked:

> It might be equally dangerous to lay down that all orders passed by an executing court in the course of proceedings held under O. XXI, R. 66 of the Code of Civil Procedure are decrees and appealable as such.

The opinion of Walsh, J. in that case is in favour of the appellant. We are however not prepared to say that every order passed in proceedings held under O. XXI, R. 66 is a decree. In our opinion the order in question is not a decree and is therefore not appealable at all. The appeal is dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed

---

[1] I. L. R. 39 All. 415

[2] 1931 A. L. J. 1084

[3] 14 A. L. J. 363

CIVIL

1932

June 8

PULLAN, J.
NIAMAT-ULLAH, J.

RAM KUMAR AND OTHERS (Defendants)
versus
GIRDHARI LAL AND ANOTHER (Opposite party)*

Civil Procedure Code, Or. 44, R. 1—Application to file an appeal in forma pauperis —Whether applicant entitled as of right to be heard.

> On an application to file an appeal in forma pauperis, which was laid before the District Judge with a report by the Munsarim drawing his attention to Or. 44, the District Judge passed an order as follows:—"I see no reason to allow this appeal. Application rejected." Held, that the applicant is not entitled as of right to be heard, and the order complied with the law.

CIVIL REVISION from an order of P. C. PLOWDEN ESQ., District Judge of Bareilly.

G. S. Pathak for the applicant.

G. Agarwala and K. N. Agarwala for the opposite parties.

*Civ. Rev. 589 of 1931

Civil

1932

Ram Kumar v. Girdhari Lal

Pullan, J

The judgment of the Court was delivered by

Pullan, J.—This is an application in revision of an order of the District Judge of Bareilly, who refused to entertain the applicant's application to file an appeal in forma pauperis. The order passed by the District Judge is as follows:—

> I see no reason to allow this appeal. Application rejected.

It is submitted that this order was passed in chambers, that it is not in accordance with the requirements of the law and that the applicant should have had a chance of being heard before the District Judge.

Order 44, Civil Procedure Code, prescribes that a court shall reject such an application, unless upon a perusal thereof and of the judgment and decree appealed from it sees reason to think that the decree is contrary to law or to some usage having the force of law or is otherwise erroneous or unjust. Thus the duty of the judge in this case was to reject the application, unless he was satisfied that the judgment was wrong; and the manner in which he was so to satisfy himself was by reading the judgment and the decree. The Code does not provide for the presence of the parties or for any hearing of the application. We find that in the present case the application was laid before the judge with a report by the munsarim drawing his attention to the terms of Order 44 of the Civil Procedure Code. We cannot assume that the judge, in face of this report, passed an order saying that he saw no reason to allow the appeal without reading the judgment and the decree. It is, in fact, certain that the judge did read the judgment and that he came to the conclusion that there was no case made out by the appellant for setting that judgment aside. It is possible that the judge might have come to a different opinion had he heard arguments; but the law does not provide that he should hear arguments, and the intention of the Legislature is clearly expressed in O. 44, and that is that persons who do not pay the costs of an appeal are entitled to be heard only if the judge, after reading the judgment, is of opinion that on the face of it the judgment is wrong. We cannot find that the judge in this case acted with material irregularity. His order was brief; but we are satisfied that he complied with the law. We accordingly dismiss this application with costs.

Application dismissed

AN ADVOCATE OF BENARES—IN THE MATTER OF*

Civil

1932

June 10

Sulaiman, C. J

Mukerji, J

Civil Procedure Code, Secs. 109(c) and 151—High Court passes order of suspension against an advocate—Leave to appeal to Privy Council granted—Whether High Court can order that suspension should remain in abeyance.

Where leave to appeal to Privy Council is granted to an advocate from an order of suspension passed against him by a Full Bench, the High Court has inherent jurisdiction to order that the order for suspension should remain in abeyance till the appeal is disposed of by the Privy Council.

Application for leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council.

A. Sanyal for the applicant.

U. S. Bajpai (Government Advocate) for the Crown.

*P. C. A. 27 of 1932

The judgment of the Court was delivered by

SULAIMAN, C. J.—This is an application by an advocate of this Court for leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council from an order of suspension passed against him by a Full Bench on May 26, 1932. He has been suspended for a period of three months with effect from that date.

It appears that this High Court has on previous occasions treated such applications as falling under Section 109(c) C. P. C. and granted leave in fit cases. The words of that section are no doubt general and leave to appeal from any order is allowed when the case is certified to be a fit one for appeal to His Majesty in Council.

In re: Parbati Charan Chatterji[1], in re: Rajendra Nath Mukerji[2] and in re: S. B. Sarbadhicary[3] leave was applied for and granted by this Court. It also does not appear that any objection was taken to the granting of such leave before their Lordships of the Privy Council.

We think that inasmuch as an advocate has been ordered to be suspended from practice he is entitled to have the propriety of the order re-examined on appeal. We accordingly direct that leave be granted and we certify that this is a fit case for appeal to His Majesty in Council.

There is a further prayer that pending the disposal of the appeal to His Majesty in Council the order suspending the advocate from practice may not be carried into effect. No doubt this is not a case analogous to a decree in execution which can be stayed. But it is akin to a conviction for criminal offence. It is true that the order has already come into operation and is in force but it is equally true that the appeal before their Lordships of the Privy Council would take much more than three months for disposal. By the time it is finally disposed of, the order of suspension would have been exhausted and the appeal will in one sense become infructuous. The loss suffered by the advocate during this period would not be recouped in case his suspension is set aside.

We think that in a case of this kind we have inherent jurisdiction to order that the order for suspension should remain in abeyance till the appeal is disposed of by their Lordships of the Privy Council. We my refer to the case of Ram Saroop v. Emperor[4] for purposes of analogy.

The applicant has already undergone suspension for a period of fifteen days. We order that his suspension for the rest of the period should be held in abeyance till the matter has been finally disposed of. If his appeal is dismissed by the Privy Council he will have to undergo suspension for the remaining period.

Leave granted

---

[1] I. L. R. 17 All 498

[2] I. L. R 22 All. 49

[3] 34 I. A. 41

[4] 25 A. L. J. 97

Civil

1932

June 13

Sulaiman, C. J.

Banerji, J.

KANAUJI LAL (Applicant)
versus
CHIRAUNJI LAL AND OTHERS (Opposite parties)*

Tenancy Act (III of 1926), Sec. 253 and Sec. 115 C. P. C.—Order of Assistant Collector setting aside dismissal for default of appearance—Whether revision lies to High Court.

No revision lies to the High Court from an order of the Assistant Collector setting aside a dismissal for default of appearance in a suit for profits. The language of Sec. 253 of the Tenancy Act of 1926, which has replaced the provisions of Sec. 115 C. P. C., precludes the High Court from entertaining the revision, because no appeal lies to the District Judge from the order sought to be revised.

CIVIL REVISION from an order of MR. MUHAMMAD SULTAN HYDER, Assistant Collector of Farrukhabad.

Shiva Prasad Sinha for the applicant.

M. N. Raina, Ram Nama Prasad and Kanhaiya Lal for the opposite parties.

The judgment of the Court was delivered by

Sulaiman, C. J.

SULAIMAN, C. J.—This is an application in revision by the defendant from an order setting aside a dismissal for default of appearance in a suit for profits in the revenue court. The Assistant Collector rightly or wrongly came to the conclusion that there was sufficient cause for the non-appearance of the plaintiff, and has therefore ordered that the dismissal for default be set aside and the original suit be restored to its number.

It is quite clear that no appeal lies from an order setting aside such a dismissal. Section 248(3) of the Agra Tenancy Act makes only such orders as are mentioned in Sections 47 and 104 and O. 43 appealable. This is not such an order.

It follows, therefore, that although if a decree were passed in a suit, an appeal might have laid to the District Judge, no appeal lies to him from the order in question. The language of Section 253 of the Agra Tenancy Act, which has replaced the provisions of Section 115 C. P. C., therefore precludes us from entertaining a revision, because no appeal lies to the District Judge from the order sought to be revised. The language of the section is in clear contrast with the language of Section 252 where the Board may call for the record of any case which has been decided by a subordinate revenue court in which no appeal lies either to the District Judge or to the Board.

The learned advocate for the applicant relies strongly on the case of Misir Krishna Saroop v. Misir Raj Bahadur Singh[1] in which a revision under Section 115 C. P. C. was entertained by another Bench of this Court. A preliminary objection does not appear to have been taken, and the question therefore was not expressly decided. It also appears that the attention of the Bench was not drawn to an earlier case of this Court, namely, Jagdeo Singh v. Kesho Prasad Singh[2], where it was clearly held that Section 115 does not apply to revenue court cases at all. Our jurisdiction in revision is confined strictly within the four corners of Section 253. In the circumstances, we do not think that that case is any binding authority upon us.

---

*Civ. Rev. 263 of 1931

[1] 1931 A. L. J. 962

[2] I. L. R. 51 All. 1020

Sulaiman, C. J.

The language of Section 253 is quite clear. It cannot mean that in a suit in which, if a decree were passed ultimately, and appeal would lie to the District Judge, the High Court can interfere with every interlocutory order passed by the subordinate court. The jurisdiction is confined to cases where when a suit or application has been decided, an appeal lies from that order to the District Judge and no appeal lies to the High Court. It is not necessary for us to express any opinion whether the Board of Revenue can entertain a revision under Section 252 by holding that a case has been decided by a subordinate revenue court. The application is accordingly dismissed. We direct that the parties should bear their own costs of this revision.

Application dismissed

CIVIL
1932
June 13
SULAIMAN, C. J.
BANERJI, J.

RAM AGYAN PANDEY (Plaintiff)*
versus
CHATRUGHUN SINGH AND ANOTHER (Defendants)*

Tenancy Act (III of 1926), Secs. 99 and 230—Tenant ejected from holding by a landholder—And not by the entire body of landholders—Tenant must still sue for possession in the revenue court.

According to Sec. 99 of the Tenancy Act of 1926 read with Sec. 230, a tenant ejected from his holding by his landholder or any person claiming as landholder to have a right to eject him, must sue such persons for possession in the revenue court, and it is not necessary that all the proprietors of the mahal should eject a tenant in order to give jurisdiction to the revenue court. Subedar Singh v. Komal Singh, A. I. R. 1929 All. 656 followed.

FIRST APPEAL from the order of the Subordinate Judge of Azamgarh.

A. P. Pandey for the appellant.

K. L. Misra for the respondents.

The judgment of the Court was delivered by

Sulaiman, C. J.

SULAIMAN, C. J.—This is a plaintiff's appeal arising out of a suit for recovery of possession of a holding. In the plaint the plaintiff frankly admitted that defendant No. 2 is one of several zamindars in the village and defendant No. 1 is a ryot of defendant No. 2 and that the two defendants forcibly ejected the plaintiff from his holding and sowed crops. The relief claimed was a decree for possession and mesne profits. The first court came to the conclusion that the defendant's plea that the claim was not cognisable by the civil court could not be entertained. On appeal the lower appellate court came to a contrary conclusion. It is admitted that the dispossession took place after the coming into force of the new Tenancy Act and the case is no longer governed by the old Tenancy Act.

No doubt for some 3 years prior to the passing of the new Tenancy Act there were a few rulings of this Court in which it was laid down that an ejectment to come within the scope of Sec. 79 of the old Tenancy Act

---

*F. A. F. O. 14 of 1931

Civil

1932

Ram Agyan Pandey
v.
Chatrughun Singh

Sulaiman, C. J.

must be an ejectment by the entire body of landholders and not by few individual landholders. An ejectment by a large body of landholders acting jointly hardly ever occurs. Anyhow the case is now governed by Sec. 99 read with Sec. 230 of the new Tenancy Act. According to that section a tenant ejected from or prevented from obtaining possession of his holding or any part thereof by his landholder, or any person claiming as landholder to have a right to eject him, must sue such persons in the revenue court. The present section is much wider than the corresponding section of the former Act and there is no doubt that under the new section a tenant ejected by any person who is a landholder or who is a person claiming as a landholder, has his remedy only in revenue court, and the jurisdiction of the civil court is ousted. The policy of the legislature obviously is that disputes between tenants and landholders as regards agricultural holdings must be settled by the revenue court alone. If the mere fact, that there are some other landholders in the village in existence, were allowed to take the case out of the jurisdiction of the revenue courts, the result would be that many of the disputes between tenants and zamindars would have to be tried by the civil courts.

In the case of Subedar Singh v. Komal Singh[1] Dalal, J. held that the old rulings cannot be now considered to be binding because the wordings of Sec. 99 are now different from those of Sec. 79. He correctly laid down that it is not now necessary that only the landholder, that is, all the proprietors of the mahal, should eject a tenant in order to give jurisdiction to the revenue court; and that it is sufficient if any person claiming to have the right to eject as landholder has ejected the plaintiff. The learned Judge rightly distinguished the previous rulings on the ground that they were under the old section. We are in full agreement with the view expressed by him and hold that a suit of this nature could lie under Sec. 99 of the Agra Tenancy Act and that therefore the jurisdiction of the civil court is completely barred. The plaint has been rightly returned for presentation to the proper court. The appeal is accordingly dismissed with costs in all the courts.

Appeal dismissed

[1] A. I. R. 1929 All. 656

BARMHA SINGH AND OTHERS
versus
EMPEROR THROUGH MADHO SINGH*

Criminal

1932

June 13

King, J.
Thom, J.

Criminal Procedure Code, Secs. 145(1) and 537—Order under Sec. 145—Omission or irregularity in the proceedings—When High Court can set aside order.

A court of revision is absolutely prohibited from setting aside an order under Sec. 145 Cr. P. C. on account of any omission or irregularity in the proceedings (e.g., the omission of the magistrate to record his order strictly in accordance with the provisions of Sub-section (1) of Sec. 145), unless such omission or irregularity has in fact occasioned a failure of justice. Madan Mohan Lal v. Sheoraj Kunwar, [1932] A. L. J. 503 followed. Abdul Rahman v. King-Emperor, 54 I. A. 96 referred to.

*Cr. Rev. 21 of 1932

CRIMINAL
1932
BARMHA SINGH v. EMPEROR
King, J.

CRIMINAL REVISION from an order of BABU GANGA PRASAD, Sessions Judge of Fatehpur.

Durga Charan Singh and Govind Das for the applicants.

M. Waliullah (Assistant Government Advocate) for the Crown.

The judgment of the Court was delivered by

KING, J.—This is an application in revision against an order passed by a Magistrate under Section 145 of the Criminal Procedure Code.

The application raises the question whether the magistrate's omission, to record in his order under Section 145 (1) the grounds of his being satisfied that a dispute likely to cause a breach of the peace exists concerning some immovable property, vitiates the subsequent proceedings.

One Madho Singh made an application under S. 145 of the Code of Criminal Procedure alleging that there was a dispute between him and the persons of the opposite party regarding the possession of a certain field, and that there was a likelihood of a breach of the peace on account of the interference by the opposite party. He stated that the land was his sir and he had begun cutting his crop when the opposite party came with lathis and drove him away by force and threatened to kill him if he came near the field again. The magistrate called for a police report and also took evidence under S. 202 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. On March 13, the application was dismissed because Madho Singh failed to deposit the necessary process fees. On March 17, Madho Singh renewed his application. His statement was recorded and it was ordered that the application be put up next day with the previous papers. Next day the magistrate perused the previous papers and the police report and then passed an order in the following words:—

> Summon the parties to file written statements, and the property attached will not be released, if not yet so done.

It seems that the magistrate had authorised the police officer to attach the property if necessary.

Undoubtedly this order was not in the form required by Section 145 (1). The magistrate did not state the grounds of his being satisfied that there was a likelihood of a breach of the peace concerning the disputed plot of land. It is obvious that he was so satisfied by the police report and by the statements of the complainant and his witnesses, but he omitted to state in his order the grounds of his being so satisfied as he should have done, in conformity with S. 145 (1).

It has been argued for the applicants that even if no prejudice was caused to them, and even if no failure of justice has been occasioned, the omission in the magistrate's order had the effect of depriving him of jurisdiction to proceed further, and that the subsequent order passed under S. 145 (6) must be held to have been passed without jurisdiction.

Several rulings have been cited in support of this view: Behari Lal v. Chhajju[1], Dan Pershad v. Ganesh[2], Nathu Ram v. Emperor[3] and Banka Singh v. Gokul[4]. These rulings do no doubt support the applicant's contention that the magistrate had no jurisdiction to pass an order under a subsequent Sub-section of S. 145 without having made a preliminary order under Sub-section (1) in conformity with the requirements of that Sub-section.

---

[1] 2 A. L. J. 272
[2] 11 A. L. J. 696
[3] 15 A. L. J. 270
[4] 25 A. L. J. 246

For the Crown, we have referred to a very recent case Madan Mohan Lal v. Sheoraj Kunwar[5] in which Boys, J. expressly considered three of the Allahabad rulings to which we have referred and expressed the view that S. 145 (1) is not mandatory except in this sense that the court will set aside an order passed under the latter clauses of S. 145, if there is any reason to believe that the omission of an order, or the passing of an order not strictly in the terms of Section 145 (1), led to some prejudice to one or other of the parties. It would be quite unjustifiable and unreasonable to set aside lengthy proceedings under Section 145 when the facts indicate that the parties could not conceivably have been prejudiced by the absence of a formal order, where it is manifest that they knew well all the facts and contested the matter with the advantage of the knowledge of the whole of the facts. The omission to draw up an order under S. 145 (1) has nothing to do with the question of jurisdiction.

That case is very much on all fours with the case before us now, and we endorse the reasoning adopted by the learned Judge in that case. In our opinion, the magistrate had power to deal with the matter in question, and with the persons in questions, and therefore had jurisdiction in the case. The magistrate also satisfied himself from the police report and from the evidence recorded that there was a likelihood of a breach of the peace concerning the field in dispute. If he omitted to record the grounds of his being so satisfied, in his order passed under Sub-section (1), he did not by reason of that omission lose "jurisdiction" to take further proceedings, although he was guilty of an omission or irregularity in procedure. The breach of a mandatory provision of the Code of Criminal Procedure does not necessarily amount to such an illegality as vitiates the whole trial or proceedings. For this proposition we rely upon the ruling of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Abdul Rahman v. King-Emperor[6]. In that case, a mandatory provision of the Code had been broken. But their Lordships held nevertheless that it was merely an irregularity which was curable under Section 537 of the Code, as no failure of justice had been occasioned and the accused had not been in any way prejudiced.

It is important to bear in mind the fact that the provisions of S. 537 are also mandatory. A court of revision is absolutely prohibited from setting aside an order under Section 145 on account of any omission or irregularity in the proceedings, unless such omission or irregularity has in fact occasioned a failure of justice. In view of the Privy Council ruling it is no longer open to a High Court to hold that S. 537 will not apply when there has been a breach of a mandatory provision of procedure, on the ground that such a breach is in illegality and not a mere irregularity. As a matter of fact most of the rules of procedure are mandatory. When anything is left to a magistrate's discretion, he can hardly be held guilty of an irregularity if he exercises a wrong discretion.

We think it is clear that we are not empowered to set aside the magistrate's order unless we hold that his omission to state his grounds for being

[5] [1932] A. L. J. 503

[6] 54 I. A. 96

CRIMINAL

1932

BARMHA SINGH
v.
EMPEROR

King, J.

satisfied that there was a likelihood of a breach of the peace has in fact occasioned a failure of justice.

In the present case, we are satisfied that the omission of the magistrate to record his order strictly in accordance with the provisions of Sub-section (1) of S. 145 has not occasioned any failure of justice and has not in any way prejudiced the applicants, who have had a perfectly fair trial upon the merits. They raised no objection to the defect in the magistrate's order under Section 145 (1).

We agree with the learned Sessions Judge who relied upon a ruling of this Court in Mst. Har Piari v. Nathe Lal[7].

We accordingly dismiss the application and uphold the magistrate's order, but we would warn the magistrate to be more careful in future to follow strictly the procedure laid down in the Code.

Application dismissed

---

[7] 18 A. L. J. 1140

CIVIL

1932

June 13

MUKERJI, J.
BENNET, J.

ANAND SINGH AND ANOTHER (Defendants)
versus
THE COLLECTOR OF BIJNOR (Plaintiff) AND UDAI RAJ SINGH AND OTHERS (Defendants)*

Contract Act, Sec. 134—"Act or omission of the creditor"—Meaning of—Failure of creditor to bring suit within limitation against principal debtor—Whether amounts to 'omission'—Sec. 145—Liability of principal debtor to indemnify surety—Limited to amount surety bound to pay at date of suit by creditor against surety.

Sec. 134 of the Contract Act intends that the act or omission of the creditor should be something in the nature of a breach of the contract on his part. The failure of the creditor to bring a suit within the period of limitation against the principal debtor is not an omission on the part of the creditor which would bring the matter within the provisions of Sec. 134 of the Contract Act.

The liability of the principal debtor to indemnify the surety is limited to the amount which the surety was bound to pay at the date of the suit instituted by the creditor against the surety. The liability of the principal debtor is not affected by a compromise under which the surety undertook to pay the creditor after a specified period with contractual interest including compound interest up to the date of payment.

FIRST APPEAL from the decision of the Deputy Commissioner exercising the powers of Subordinate Judge of Naini Tal.

S. K. Dar and S. N. Seth for the appellants.

U. S. Bajpai and H. P. Sen for the respondents.

The judgment of the Court was delivered by

Bennet, J.

BENNET, J.—This is a first appeal by defendant No. 1 Kunwar Anand Singh with whom his son Kunwar Sundar Singh has been joined as an appellant. The lower court has granted a decree in favour of the plaintiff, the Collector of Bijnor in charge of the Kashipur Estate under the court of wards, the estate being owned at present by the Raj Kumar Hari Chand

*F. A. 482 of 1928

Civil

1932

Anand Singh
v.
The Collector of Bijnor

Bennet, J.

Raj Singh minor. The transactions out of which this suit has arisen are as follows:—

On June 14, 1911 the appellant Kunwar Anand Singh borrowed Rs.20,000 on a simple bond payable on demand from Bisheshwar Nath and Gauri Shankar, the rate of interest being annas 0-12-0 per cent per mensem with six monthly rests. On the same date defendant No. 2, the brother of Kunwar Anand Singh, Raja Udai Raj Singh, who was at that time the Raja of Kashipur, executed a surety bond by which he mortgaged certain property in Naini Tal called Strawberry Hall and Kashipur house. The deed set forth that he stood surety for the appellant and if the appellant failed to pay the sum of Rs.20,000, the Raja would pay the amount with interest and that he hypothecated the property for that purpose. Now on July 22, 1916, the appellant applied to be declared an insolvent and he was adjudicated an insolvent apparently in that year, although the exact date is not given. The limitation on the bond would have expired on June 14, 1917. On the day previous to that, on June 13, 1917, the creditors brought a suit against the Raja of Kashipur, defendant No. 2. They did not sue the principal debtor apparently because he had been declared an insolvent. A decree was obtained on a compromise on October 1, 1917 which was to the effect that the parties had agreed that the plaintiff's claim be decreed with costs and contractual interest including compound interest up to the date of payment and interest pendente lite with the provision that the defendant be not liable to pay any thing under the decree until after the expiry of seven years and that he be liable to pay them only such amount as may not have been paid in the interval by Kunwar Anand Singh, his heirs or receivers of his estate. Nothing was paid by Kunwar Anand Singh appellant and that as a result of this transaction the interest has very largely increased and the sum now claimed is Rs.66,000 and odd. On October 22, 1924, the creditors made an application for a final decree against the surety and the decree was passed on May 6, 1925. The claim had then increased to Rs.52,369-12-0. Subsequent to this decree on June 4, 1925, defendant No. 2, the Raja of Kashipur, executed a deed of relinquishment of his estate in favour of the minor plaintiff his son. This document is printed at page 71. In this document he stated that he transferred the estate > to the transferee for ever subject to and charged with the payment of all lawful debts, liabilities and obligations (except such as are now barred by any rule or law of limitation) of the transferor and existing at the date of these presents the estimate amount of which is Rupees 3 laks or thereabouts and the transferee hereby covenants with the transferor that the transferee will duly pay and discharge all such debts, liabilities, etc.

Accordingly the plaintiff assumed the liability to pay the decree which had been passed on May 6, 1925 against the Raja. Eventually payments were made on May 7, 1926 and October 18, 1926 by the court of wards of a total amount of Rs.57,664-12-0 and interest. The plaintiff now sues to recover this amount from defendant No. 1 on the ground that the plaintiff has succeeded to the rights of the surety and that the defendant No. 1 is the principal debtor.

The first point with which we may deal is the question whether the

CIVIL
1932
ANAND SINGH
v.
THE COLLECTOR OF BIJNOR
Bennet, J.

plaintiff has the right of a surety to obtain a decree against the principal debtor. It is true that the Raja of Kashipur, defendant No. 2, did transfer his liabilities to the plaintiff but he did not transfer the right which would accrue to him as surety on paying the amount due from the principal debtor. Accordingly we are of opinion that any decree which can be granted should be granted to defendant No. 2 the Raja and not to the plaintiff.

The next point which we may deal with is the question of the amount of interest which would be due to the decree-holder if his claim is valid. Learned counsel for the appellant argued that the compromise of 1917 should not affect the liabilities of the appellant. By that compromise the surety undertook to pay after a period of seven years and the claim has now been swollen by the accumulated compound interest during this period of seven years. The appellant was no party to that compromise and no allegation has been made in the plaint to the effect that the appellant agreed to the compromise. There was therefore no pleading in the written statement on the point. We are of opinion that the liability of the appellant should be limited, if there is a liability, to the amount which the surety was bound to pay at the date of the suit against the surety which was at the expiry of the period of limitation plus the pendente lite interest at 6 per cent and simple interest at 6 per cent until the date of payment. Various other grounds were argued to show that there was no liability of the appellant. It was argued in the first place that at the date of suit there was a period of one day only within which the claim against the principal debtor became barred and that after June 14, 1917 the debt against the principal debtor was time-barred. Therefore it was said that the surety should have made a defence in the suit of the creditors that the debt had become time-barred against the principal debtor and that under Section 134 of the Indian Contract Act the surety would be thereby released. Various rulings were shown to us for this proposition. Salig Ram Misir v. Lachhman Das[1], Jagmohan Singh v. Gatali[2] and some earlier rulings, Hazari v. Chunni Lal[3], Radha v. Kinlock[4] and Ranjit Singh v. Naubat[5]. In these cases the suit against the principal debtor was barred on the date on which the suit was brought against the surety, and, therefore, the rulings will not apply to the present case. We are of opinion that Section 134 of the Contract Act does not apply to a case of this nature. That section says that the surety is discharged by any contract between the creditor and the principal debtor, by which the principal debtor is released, or by any act of omission of the creditor, the legal consequence of which is the discharge of the principal debtor, that is, the section applies where there is either a release or a discharge. The illustrations indicate the kind of release or discharge which is intended by the section. The illustrations of course are not intended to be exhaustive, but they do illustrate that the section intends that the act or omission of the creditor should be something in the nature of a breach of the contract on his part. In the present case it is suggested that the failure of the creditor to bring a suit within the period

[1] I. L. R. 50 All. 211
[2] [1930] 28 A. L. J. 1084
[3] I. L. R. 8 All 259
[4] I. L. R. 11 All. 310
[5] I. L. R. 24 All. 504

of limitation against the principal debtor is an omission on the part of the creditor which would bring the matter within the provisions of Section 134 of the Indian Contract Act. We are of opinion that the act or omission contemplated by that section is not an act or omission of this nature at all. We consider that in the present case it was not necessary for the creditors to sue the principal debtor, because at the time of suit against the surety the principal debtor had already become an insolvent, and, therefore, it was obvious that the creditors could not sue him without the permission of the insolvency court which was unlikely to be granted. It is true that the creditors made an application in insolvency and that application was rejected on the ground that their debt was time-barred. This of course was subsequent to the suit against the surety.

The next ground on which argument was made arises from this action of the creditors in making an application to the insolvency court. The order of the insolvency court was passed on September 21, 1918 and it is as follows:—

> Kunwar Anand Singh's pleader, Pandit Chandra Datta, objects on the ground that the Raja had taken over the debt, and applicant has himself in a previous case stated that he did not hold Kunwar Anand Singh liable. The debt appears to be time-barred and the objection of Kunwar Anand Singh is allowed regarding parts. I therefore order this debt of Rs.20,000 to be struck off the schedule of debts owed by the insolvent Kunwar Anand Singh.

This order shows that the debt of the creditors was struck off from the schedule of debts on the ground that it was time-barred. Nevertheless learned counsel argued that the subsequent discharge of the insolvent would release the insolvent from this debt in question. The discharge of the insolvent was on September 22, 1919. Under the Insolvency Act then in force, Act III of 1907, Section 45 (2) provided > save as otherwise provided by Sub-section (1) an order of discharge shall release the insolvent from all debts entered in the schedule.

The debt of the creditors had been expunged from the schedule and therefore the discharge of the insolvent could not release the insolvent from the debt in question.

Some further argument was made in regard to the contingent debt which would arise when the surety, the Raja of Kashipur, paid the debt in question. It will be noted that no payment was made by the surety until long after the discharge on September 22, 1919. It was argued however that the surety defendant No. 2 might have applied to be entered as one of the creditors on account of this contingent liability. The section referred to in Act III of 1907 is Section 28. This section provides that a contingent liability to which a debtor may become subject before his discharge shall be deemed to be a debt provable under the Act. Now even if the Raja had made an application and had been entered as a contingent creditor, under the facts of this case the obligation did not arise before the discharge, as the payment was not made before the discharge and therefore the debt would not have been a debt to which the Act would have applied. As a matter of fact the Raja did not apply to have his contingent debt

CIVIL

1932

ANAND SINGH v. THE COLLECTOR OF BIJNOR

Bennet, J.

entered in the schedule, and therefore we do not consider that the question arises in this case, that is to say, that even if the Raja had applied and had been entered as a creditor on this contingent liability at the time of distribution of assets, the Raja had not made any payment and would not have been entitled to any distribution and that therefore the Raja could not have remained as a scheduled creditor and it would have been necessary to remove his name from the list of scheduled creditors, and therefore under Section 45, Sub-section (2) the order of discharge would not have released the insolvent from the contingent debt of the Raja.

Some further argument was made that the judgment between the creditors and the insolvent by the insolvency court holding that the debt of the creditors was time-barred would operate as res judicata between the plaintiff and defendant No. 1. In the insolvency order of September 21, 1918 there was no issue decided between defendant No. 1 and defendant No. 2 and the present plaintiff was not a party to those proceedings. We may note that the argument that the plaint is in any way time-barred is founded apparently on Section 140 of the Contract Act. That section lays down where a surety makes payment he is invested with all the rights which the creditor has against the principal debtor. But this is not the only section of the Contract Act under which the surety has a right. The surety also has a right under Section 145 of the Contract Act which states as follows:—

> In every contract of guarantee there is an implied promise by the principal debtor to indemnify the surety; and the surety is entitled to recover from the principal debtor whatever sum he has rightfully paid under the guarantee, but no sums which he has paid wrongfully.

There would be no question of the right of the surety under Section 145 being limited to the rights of the creditor against the principal debtor.

For the reasons stated above we allow this appeal in part to the extent indicated, that is, a decree will be granted in favour of Raja Udai Raj Singh defendant 2 and the decree will be limited to the amount of the decree obtained by the creditors against the principal debtor as already stated, that is, the Rs.20,000 and interest at the contractual rate for six years and thereafter simple interest at 6 per cent per annum on the total amount up to the date of payment. As regards costs we consider that the objection which has been taken by the appellant that the plaintiff was not entitled to sue is an objection which might have been taken at an earlier date in the court below and if it had been taken learned counsel for the respondent No. 1 states that defendant No. 2 would be joined as a plaintiff. Under these circumstances we consider that the correct order as to costs will be that the decree-holder defendant No. 2 will receive proportionate costs in each court in accordance with the amount of his success on this decree and the appellant will receive proportionate costs in each court in accordance with the amount of his success.

Appeal allowed in part

Civil

1932

June 15

Sulaiman, C. J.

Banerji, J.

SRI RAM (Judgment-debtor)
versus
JAI KISHUN LAL AND OTHERS (Opposite parties)*

Civil Procedure Code, Sec. 53—Decree against Hindu lambardar for amount collected and also remaining uncollected—Lambardar dies before attachment—Son brought on record—Whether decree can be executed as against son.

A suit was brought against a Hindu lambardar and a decree was obtained against him, which was both for the amount collected by him and also for the amount remaining uncollected on account of his negligence. Before any property could be attached, the lambardar died. His son was brought on the record as his legal representative and execution was sought against him by the attachment and sale of the joint family property. Held, that in view of the provisions of Sec. 53 C. P. C. the decree can be executed as against the son to the extent of the joint family estate in his hands.

Bharat Singh v. Tej Singh, I. L. R. 40 All. 246 and Rudor Pratap Singh v. Sharda Mahesh Prashad Singh, A. I. R. 1925 All. 471 followed; Bhagwati Saran v. Deo Saran, A. I. R. 1928 All. 166 dissented from.

Execution Second Appeal from a decree of Babu Lakshmi Narain Tandon, District Judge of Shahjahanpur, confirming a decree of Babu Bhup Narain Avasthi, Assistant Collector, first class.

A. M. Khwaja and Harnandan Prasad for the appellant.

Shiva Prasad Sinha and M. A. Aziz for the respondents.

The judgment of the Court was delivered by

Sulaiman, C. J.

Sulaiman, C. J.—This is a judgment-debtor's appeal arising out of an execution proceeding. It appears that the appellant's father was the lambardar of a village, and he did not pay the full share of the profits to the respondents decree-holders. A suit was brought against the father and a decree was obtained against him, which was both for the amount collected by him and also for the amount remaining uncollected on account of his negligence. Before any property could be attached, the lambardar died. His son was brought on the record as his legal representative and execution was sought against him by the attachment and sale of the joint family property. Objection was taken on behalf of the judgment-debtor that the decree could not be executed against him because he had received no assets from the deceased debtor, and that the debt was not binding upon him because it was based on the negligence of the deceased. Both the courts below have allowed the execution and overruled the objection of the judgment-debtor.

No doubt there were certain earlier rulings in which it was doubted whether the son of a Hindu lambardar could be liable for the amount of profits which remained uncollected owing to the lambardar's negligence or misconduct. But in the Full Bench case of Bharat Singh v. Tej Singh[1] Banerji, J., with whose judgment the other learned Judges concurred, laid down that the legal representative of a deceased lambardar is, so far as the assets of the deceased in his hands are concerned, liable to the same extent as the lambardar, that is to say, not only for the money actually collected

---

*E. S. A. 297 of 1931

[1] I. L. R. 40 All. 246=16 A. L. J. 193

CIVIL
1932
SRI RAM v. JAI KISHUN LAL
Sulaiman, C. J.

by the lambardar, but also for money left uncollected owing to his negligence or misconduct. That is a binding authority for us, and shows that a Hindu son is liable for the amount or profits payable by his deceased father, whether actually collected by him or left uncollected owing to his negligence or misconduct. Such a debt cannot be treated as a debt tainted with illegality or immorality so as to exempt the son from his pious obligation to pay it. This being the view of a Full Bench of this Court, we must accept it as laying down the correct law.

In the case mentioned above, a decree was passed against the son of the deceased after the lambardar's death. The present case is much stronger, inasmuch as a decree had been passed against the father himself before he died. Had there been an attachment of the family property before his death, no doubt could possibly have arisen. But even if there was no such attachment, we are clearly of opinion that the decretal amount was a debt due from the father, which, in view of the pronouncement of the Full Bench, was a debt for the payment of which the joint family property, under the Hindu law, was liable.

This being the position, the decree can undoubtedly be executed as against the son to the extent of the joint family estate in his hands. Prior to 1908 there was considerable conflict of opinion as to whether when the father dies after the decree and before attachment, the decree can be executed against the joint family property in the hands of the son. That conflict has now been set at rest by the enactment of Section 53 C. P. C. under which property in the hands of a son or other descendant which is liable under the Hindu law for the payment of the debt of a deceased ancestor, in respect of which a decree has been passed, shall be deemed to be the property of the deceased which has come to the hands of the son as his legal representative. For purposes of execution proceedings the joint family property in the hands of the son must be deemed to be assets received by the son from the deceased father. See Rudra Pratap Singh v. Sharda Mahesh Prasad Singh[2]. The learned advocate for the appellant relies strongly on a single Judge decision of this Court in Bhagwati Saran v. Deo Saran[3]. The learned Judge in that case followed the reasoning of the earlier decision of this High Court and expressed doubt as to the liability of the son for the payment of debts incurred by the father in his capacity as lambardar based on his negligence or misconduct. The learned Judge thought that the joint family property in the hands of the son cannot be treated as a part of the private assets of the deceased, because the property comes to the son by right of survivorship and not by inheritance. The attention of the learned Judge was apparently not drawn to the new Section 53, for there is no reference to it in the judgment. We do not think that that case can be taken as an authority for the proposition put forward by the appellant. If it was intended to lay down that in spite of the provision of Section 53 the joint family property in the hands of the son cannot be treated as the assets of the father, then we dissent from that ruling. The appeal is accordingly dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed

---

[2] 1925 A. I. R. All. 471

[3] 1928 A. I. R. All. 166

BHAROSA SHUKUL (Plaintiff)
versus
MANBASI KUER AND ANOTHER (Defendants)*

Civil

1932

June 14

PULLAN, J.
NIAMATULLAH, J

Hindu Law—Widow—Property acquired by her out of the savings of her husband's estate—When to be regarded as "accretion to her husband's estate"—Test for determination.

Where a Hindu widow acquired by pre-emption an undivided share in the same property in which she had already acquired the undivided share of her husband, out of the savings of her husband's estate, and treated the two properties as one, and seven years after her purchase by pre-emption she gifted the property to her brother's son, held, on a suit by the reversioner, that the widow intended that the property acquired by pre-emption should be treated as an accretion to her husband's estate, and her subsequent transfer to one who was no heir of her husband does not disprove the widow's intention at the time of the purchase.

Nabakishore Mandal v. Upendrakishore Mandal, 20 A. L. J. 22 and Isridat Koer v. Mst. Hansbatti Koerain, 10 I. A. 150 relied on. B. Sheolochan Singh v. B. Saheb Singh, 14 I. A. 63, Rajah of Ramnad v. Sundara Pandiyasami Tevas, 42 Mad. 581 and Ayiswaryanandaji Saheb v. Sivaji Raja Saheb, 49 Mad. 116 referred to.

SECOND APPEAL from a decree of BABU C. DEB BANERJI, Subordinate Judge of Azamgarh, modifying a decree of MAULVI S. EJAZ HUSAIN, Second Additional Munsif.

A. P. Pandey for the appellant.

S. S. Shastry for the respondents.

The judgment of the Court was delivered by

Pullan, J.

PULLAN, J.—The plaintiff sued as the reversionary heir of one Ramnarain Shukul for a declaration that a deed of gift executed by Manbasi Kuer, widow of Ramnarain Shukul, in favour of one Sabhapat Pande, is void as against the plaintiff. The property gifted is partly the property of Ram Narain Shukul and partly property obtained by pre-emption by the widow. The suit was decreed by the Munsif, but in appeal the Subordinate Judge held that the plaintiff was entitled to a decree only in respect of that portion of the property which belonged to Ramnarain. As to the other half he held that although it would have been considered to be an accretion to the husband's estate if the widow had died without making any disposition of it, the fact that the widow had actually disposed of it in her lifetime shows it to have been her own exclusive property, and the transaction as to this portion of the property cannot be challenged by her husband's heirs. We have been asked in second appeal to consider that there is in this case a presumption that the acquisition made by the widow must be regarded as an accretion to her husband's estate. It is not disputed that any profits which may accrue to a widow during her possession of her husband's estate become her stridhan, and can be used by her to acquire property for herself; but in certain reported cases a presumption has been drawn that the acquisitions so made are to be treated as accretions to the husband's estate unless she indicates a contrary intention. The first case cited is that of Isridat Koer v. Mst. Hansbutti Koerain[1], in which it was held that where a widow invested the unexpected income of her husband's estate and alienated the property so purchased together with the original estate of her husband for the purpose of changing the succession, the accretion was clearly established. In the present case the property acquired by the widow by pre-emption was an undivided share in the same property in which she had already acquired the undivided share of her husband. She treated the two properties as one and gifted them to her brother's son. In a later case B. Sheolochan Singh v. B. Saheb Singh[2], their Lordships took the view that where a widow invests the income derived from her husband's property in the purchase of other property, prima facie "it is the intention of the widow to keep the estate of the husband as an entire estate and that the property purchased would prima facie be intended to be an accretion to that estate." Both these cases appear to us to favour the appellant's claim. That the property acquired by the widow was acquired from the savings of her husband's estate is, in our opinion, a finding of fact of the courts below, and it is clear that she treated the property so acquired as one with the property received from her husband, and alienated the property so united in such a manner as to defeat the claim of the reversioners. In the latest ruling of their Lordships of the Judicial Committee which has been reported in Nabakishore Mandal v. Upendrakishore Mandal[3], there is a passage which may, in our opinion, be quoted with advantage in the present case:—

---

*S. A. 1359 of 1929

> There remains only the transaction which was entered into later on May 5, 1895. That was entered into by the survivor of the two widows, Prasanna Kumari. The alleged justification for this depends on different considerations. It is said that the property sold had been acquired by the widow out of her stridhan, and that consequently she was quite free to deal with it as she thought best. Now there can, their Lordships think, be no doubt that whatever stridhan she possessed was due to the accumulated savings from the income of the property which she received from her husband's estate, and though it is true that when that property had been received it would be possible for her so to deal with it that it would remain her own yet it must be traced and shown to have been so dealt with and in this case there is no sufficient evidence of this having been done. Further, in this particular case it appears that part, at least, of the property had been purchased from the tenants of the estate itself. This does not mean that the inheritance had been so acquired, but that, owing, it may be, to difficulties which had arisen in connection with the occupiers, their tenant rights had been bought in part by the release of the arrears of rent and in part by a payment of cash, and having so acquired their interest, it was the property which they had formerly occupied which was sold under the kobala of May 5, 1895. If that be the true transaction no question could arise about the right of the widow in connection with her stridhan, because the tenant rights so acquired would be an obvious accretion to the husband's property, which if it were possible for her to segregate, would require some more unequivocal act for the purpose than anything to be found in this evidence.

[1] 10 I. A. 150

[2] 14 I. A. 63

[3] 20 A. L. J. 22

Civil

1932

Bharosa Shukul v. Manbasi Kuer

Pullan, J.

We consider that in the present case it is proper to hold that the widow, when she acquired by pre-emption a second undivided share in the property and added it to the undivided share of her husband, which she already possessed, was making, in the words of their Lordships, "an obvious accretion to her husband's property", and even if we consider the subsequent alienation to a stranger to be an indication that at the time of the alienation she did not wish to treat the property so united as being her husband's estate, we are still met with the difficulty that the alienation was not made until seven years after the purchase of the property by pre-emption. We do not consider in the circumstances of this case that the fact that the widow made such an alienation in her lifetime is any proof that when she made the purchase she had no intention of making an accretion to her husband's property, and as a matter of fact she herself stated that she made the purchase and the transfer in pursuance of her husband's wishes, indicating thereby that she did not wish to treat the property so acquired as her stridhan. The Subordinate Judge was in error in supposing that the matter can be decided simply on the finding that the widow is still alive but so far as the question of presumption goes, we have been referred to a ruling of their Lordships of the Judicial Committee reported in Rajah of Ramnad v. Sundara Pandiyasami Tevas[4] in which their Lordships suggest that there is authority for holding that the presumption may be the other way and this view has been taken by the Madras High Court in several cases, notably that of Ayiswaryanandaji Saheb v. Sivaji Raja Saheb[5]. That was a case in which the ladies who made the purchase had not been in possession of the corpus of the estate, and as the learned Judges held, there was consequently no room to presume the widows' intention to make them accretions to their husband's estate, and the decision of the Privy Council on which they relied (42 Mad. 581) appears to us to determine the true method in which this question must always be solved. Their Lordships observed:

> At the outside it is a presumption and it is a question of fact to be determined if there is any dispute whether a widow has or has not so dealt with her property.

We take this principle as our guide. We have no doubt that when the widow, acting as she says at her husband's wish, rounded off the property which she had received from him by acquiring another portion of the same estate, she intended the property so acquired to be treated as an accretion, and her subsequent transfer to one who was no heir of her husband involving as it does an unlawful transfer of her husband's own estate to a stranger, does not disprove the widow's intention at the time of the purchase. Indeed the authority of their Lordships of the Judicial Committee may, as we have shown above, be cited to indicate that such a transfer proves rather than disproves the widow's intention to make an accretion to the estate of her husband. (10 I. A. 150). In our opinion the plaintiff in the suit was entitled to the decree which he sought. We accordingly set aside the decree of the lower appellate court and allow the appeal with costs and restore the decree of the court of first instance.

Appeal allowed

[4] 42 Mad. 581

[5] 49 Mad. 116.

Civil

1932

June 15

Sulaiman, C. J.

Banerji, J.

SHANKAR LAL (Plaintiff)

versus

HASHMI BEGAM AND ANOTHER (Defendants)*

Limitation Act, Sec. 19 and Pre-emption Act, Sec. 4(9)—Whether pre-emptor is a person deriving his title through the vendee within the meaning of Sec. 19.

A pre-emptor is not a person deriving his title through the vendee within the meaning of Sec. 19 of the Limitation Act so as to make an acknowledgment of the vendee made in his written statement filed after the claim for pre-emption has been brought, an acknowledgment of his predecessor in title binding upon the pre-emptor.

SECOND APPEAL from a decree of G. O. ALLEN ESQ., District Judge of Agra, confirming a decree of MAULVI MUHAMMAD JUNAID, Subordinate Judge.

B. Malik and N. P. Asthana for the appellant.

S. K. Dar, Baleshwari Prasad and M. A. Aziz for the respondents.

The judgment of the Court was delivered by

Sulaiman, C. J.

SULAIMAN, C. J.—This is a plaintiff's appeal arising out of a suit for sale on the basis of a mortgage deed dated July 15, 1916, executed by Mohammad Abdus Salam in favour of the plaintiff, L. Shankar Lal. It appears that after this mortgage Abdus Salam sold the equity of redemption on September 1, 1919 to Narain Das. A suit for pre-emption was brought by Mst. Hashmi Begam on July 13, 1919. In his written statement dated October 26, 1920 Narain Das admitted the existence of this previous mortgage. The suit was decreed on December 2, 1920 under a compromise and Mst. Hashmi Begam deposited the pre-emption money and got the property. Subsequently on February 18, 1924 she sold the property to Mst. Nizami Begam.

The present suit was instituted on July 13, 1929 against Hashmi Begum without originally impleading Nizami Begum. She was subsequently impleaded on October 19, 1929 and the plaint was amended and an addition was made that time was extended as against her by virtue of the acknowledgment contained in the aforesaid written statement of Narain Das.

It is obvious that if the acknowledgment does not help the plaintiff the suit against Nizami Begum would be barred by time; on the other hand, it would be in time if the plaintiff could take advantage of that acknowledgment.

Both the courts below have held that the pre-emptor Hashmi Begum cannot be said to have derived title through the vendee Narain Das and that therefore the acknowledgment made by Narain Das was of no avail under Sec. 19 of the Indian Limitation Act.

Section 19 provides that where before the expiration of the period of limitation an acknowledgment of liability has been made in writing signed by the party against whom such property or right is claimed, or by some person through whom he derives title or liability, a fresh period of limitation shall be computed from the time of the acknowledgment. The

---

*S. A. 1588 of 1930

Civil

1932

Shankar Lal
v.
Hashmi Begam

Sulaiman, C. J.

question is whether a pre-emptor can be said to be a person deriving title through the vendee against whom he sues and obtains his decree.

It was pointed out by Mahmud, J. in Govind Dayal v. Inayat Ullah[1] that the right of pre-emption is not a right of 'repurchase' either from the vendor or from the vendee, involving any new contract of sale; but it is simply a right of "substitution" entitling the pre-emptor, by reason of a legal incident to which the sale itself was subject, to stand in the shoes of the vendee in respect of all the rights and obligations arising from the sale under which he has derived his title. The claim for pre-emption is based on the principle of an infringement of the pre-emptor's right when the vendor instead of offering the property to him sells it to the vendee. The pre-emptor obviously has a paramount title as against the vendee and sues to enforce his right by displacing the vendee and by getting himself substituted in his place. The result of a decree in the pre-emption suit is not a resale of the property by the vendee to the pre-emptor involving any fresh contract or conveyance. When the decree is for pre-emption which places the pre-emptor in the shoes of the vendee thereby becoming the representative of the original vendor, the court enforces the original obligation of the vendor to offer the property to the pr-emptor and substitutes the pre-emptor in place of the vendee because the transfer to the latter has taken place in violation of the pre-emptor's preferential right. It follows, in our opinion, that a pre-emptor, although he is substituted in place of the vendee and steps into his shoes, is not a representative of the vendee and therefore cannot be said to derive title through the vendee. As has been pointed out by the trial court in this case there are various considerations which support this view. Sec. 4 (9) of the Pre-emption Act defines the right of pre-emption as the right to be substituted in place of the transferee by reason of his right of pre-emption. The decree in a pre-emption suit under Or. 20, R. 14 directs the delivery of possession of the property to the pre-emptor whose title, however, accrues from the date of the payment of the pre-emption money. It does not direct the execution of any sale deed by the vendee in favour of the pre-emptor. Moreover the old view as now incorporated in Sec. 24 of the Pre-emption Act makes all transfers made by the vendee subsequent to his purchase voidable at the option of the decree-holder. If the latter were a representative of the vendee it would be difficult on principle to hold that he is not bound by the previous transfers. We therefore think that it is not possible to hold that a pre-emptor is a person deriving his title through the vendee within the meaning of Sec. 19 of the Indian Limitation Act so as to make an acknowledgment of the vendee made in his written statement filed after the claim for pre-emption has been brought, an acknowledgment of his predecessor in title binding upon the pre-emptor. It is to be noted that there was no acknowledgment of this mortgage made by the vendor Abdus Salam in his sale deed. The plaintiff relies exclusively on the acknowledgment made by the vendee Narain Das in his written statement. That in our opinion does not help him. The appeal is accordingly dismissed with costs. Appeal dismissed

---

[1] I. L. R. 7 All. 775

CRIMINAL

1932

June 20

IQBAL AHMAD, J.

LAXMI NARAIN
versus
KING-EMPEROR*

Criminal Procedure Code, Secs. 107, 202 and 203—Magistrate requested to take action under Sec. 107—Whether magistrate can refer matter to police for enquiry and report independently of Sec. 202—Notice issued under Sec. 112—Right of Crown to conduct case.

A magistrate is not competent to proceed under Secs. 202 and 203 of the Cr. P. C. when dealing with a petition requesting him to take action under Sec. 107, but he can, independently of those sections, refer the matter to the police for enquiry and report before issuing a notice under Sec. 112 in the exercise of his absolute discretion. In acting under Secs. 107, 108, 109 or Sec. 110 of the Cr. P. C. the magistrate does not, so long as he does not record an order in writing in accordance with Sec. 112 calling upon any person to show cause, act judicially. P. Sangiri Reddy v. K. Koneri Reddi, I. L. R. 49 Mad. 315 followed; Hari Singh v. Jagta, A. I. R. 1928 Lah. 649 dissented from.

The moment a notice is issued under Sec. 112, the Crown has the right to conduct the case against the person called upon to show cause and Sec. 495 of the Cr. P. C. gives discretion to the magistrate to permit the prosecution to be conducted by any person mentioned in that section.

CRIMINAL REVISION from an order of J. V. LYNCH ESQ., Magistrate first class of Cawnpore.

Basudeva Mukerji for the applicant.

M. Waliullah (Assistant Government Advocate) for the Crown

The following judgment was delivered by

Iqbal Ahmad, J.

IQBAL AHMAD, J.—This is an application in revision against an order of a Magistrate of the first class ordering that proceedings under Section 107 of the Criminal Procedure Code, that have been initiated against the applicant, be conducted by the police.

On July 30, 1931, one Manni Lal filed a petition before the learned Magistrate alleging that the applicant, along with certain other persons, was likely to commit a breach of the peace or disturb the public tranquility, and prayed that the persons named in the petition be bound down under Section 107 of the Cr. P. C. The learned Magistrate sent the petition to the police for enquiry and report. The police submitted a report on October 7, 1931, recommending that the applicant and the other persons named in the petition be bound down.

The Magistrate then issued a notice under Section 112 of the Cr. P. C. and directed the Sub-Inspector, who had submitted the report above referred to, to bring all the evidence and produce the same in court on February 24, 1932. On that date an application was filed on behalf of the applicant requesting the learned Magistrate to prevent the police from prosecuting the case. The learned Magistrate rejected the application.

Against the order of the learned Magistrate the applicant went in revision to the learned District Magistrate. The learned District Magistrate holding that the case "has become a Crown one and the Crown has to attend to the important work of prosecuting it" dismissed the application in revision.

*Cr. Rev. 208 of 1932

Now the applicant has come to this Court. The learned counsel for the applicant contends that as the petition of Manni Lal was not a complaint as defined by Section 4(1) (h) of the Criminal Procedure Code, the learned Magistrate had no jurisdiction to proceed under Section 202 of the Code and send the same for enquiry to the police and, accordingly, the police had no locus standi to prosecute the case and to lead evidence against the applicant. In support of this contention he relies on a decision of the Lahore High Court, reported as Hari Singh v. Jagta[1]. In that case an application under Section 107 of the Cr. P. C. was presented by a man named Hari Singh and the Magistrate, after recording his statement, sent the case to the local zaildar for report. The zaildar reported that there was no sufficient ground for proceeding under Section 107 and dismissed the application. The learned District Magistrate, being of opinion that a Magistrate before whom an information contemplated by Section 107 of the Cr. P. C. is laid "may either at once refuse to proceed" or, if in his opinion, there is sufficient ground for proceeding, may act in the manner provided for by Chapter 8 of the Code, and that it is not open to him to refer to a zaildar or anyone else before deciding whether to proceed, made a reference to the High Court recommending that the order of the Magistrate dismissing the petition be set aside. The High Court held that as a proceeding under Section 107 of the Code cannot be regarded a complaint within the meaning of Clause (h), Sub-section (1), Section 4 of the Code, the Magistrate had no jurisdiction to deal with the case under Sections 202 and 203 of the Code and, accordingly, quashed the order of the Magistrate dismissing the petition and directed him to try the case in accordance with law.

If it was intended to lay down in that case that it is not open to a Magistrate, before whom a petition is filed requesting him to take action under Section 107 of the Code, to send the same for enquiry and report to the police, I, with all respect, am unable to agree with that decision. Such a petition is no doubt not a complaint and, therefore, it is manifest that the procedure prescribed by Sections 202 and 203 of the Code, which are confined in their operation to complainants as defined by the Code, has no application to such a petition. It follows, therefore, that a Magistrate is not competent to proceed under Sections 202 and 203 when dealing with such a petition, but I can discover no justification for holding that he cannot, independently of those sections, refer the matter to the police for enquiry and report.

It is to be noted that Section 107 of the Cr. P. C. is in Part IV of the Code which is headed "Prevention of Offences". The Magistrate is responsible for the maintenance of peace in the district. This responsibility is cast on him in his administrative and not in his judicial capacity. He is the sole authority to decide whether or not it is imperative for maintenance of peace to set the law in motion by initiating proceedings under Section 107 or other preventive sections in Chapter VIII of the Code. His discretion in this respect is absolute and unqualified. Accordingly his discretion to initiate proceedings under Section 107 or other preventive sections in Chapter VIII of the Code has not been trammelled by such conditions the fulfilment of which is a condition precedent to the issue of a process to a person to answer a charge formulated against him in a complaint. Complaints are for the redress of wrongs already committed, and from the moment a Magistrate takes cognizance of a complaint he acts judicially and, therefore, is bound to proceed in accordance with law, and in coming to a decision one way or the other to take cognizance only of such matters that constitute legal evidence in the case. But in acting under Sections 107, 108, 109 or Section 110 of the Code the Magistrate does not, so long as he does not record an order in writing in accordance with Section 112 of the Code calling upon any person to show cause, act judicially. In those sections complete discretion is given to the Magistrate either to act or not to act on the information received by him. The discretion to issue a notice under Section 112 in pursuance of an information received by him is absolute and uncontrolled by any conditions whatsoever. It is nowhere provided that the information contemplated by those sections must be information gathered from legal evidence, nor is there any provision as to the source from which the information may be received. The information may be conveyed to the Magistrate by a private individual or by an officer of the police. But in either case he is given a discretion to issue a notice to the person against whom he has received the information to show cause why he should not furnish security for keeping the peace or to be of good behaviour. With a view to satisfy himself as to the desirability or urgency of issuing a notice under Section 112 the Magistrate has, for obvious reasons, the right to test the accuracy of the information received by him before issuing the notice. The manner in which he is to do so is not provided for in the Code. The reason is not far to seek. The above sections being enacted simply with a view to prevent commission of offences and being a part of the administrative machinery for maintaining law and order, the Legislature did not think it fit to circumscribe the administrative powers of the Magistrate under those sections by making it obligatory on them to follow the procedure that by law they are bound to follow while dealing with complaints. A reference to Section 117 of the Code makes it clear that it is only after an order has been made under Section 112 that the Magistrate is to "proceed to enquire into the truth of the information upon which action has been taken, and to take such further evidence as may appear necessary". Clause 2 of that Section provides that "such enquiry" is to be made in the manner prescribed in the Code for "conducting trials and recording evidence" either in summons cases or in warrant cases as the case may be. It is only from the stage that the enquiry under Section 117 begins that the proceedings before the Magistrate become judicial proceedings. Before that stage the proceedings are more or less of an administrative character, and the Magistrate till then is not bound by rules of evidence. For the maintenance of law and order Magistrates have control over the police, and it is open to them to seek their assistance in the discharge of their duties. If a Magistrate before issuing a notice under Section 112 thinks it fit to consult the police in order to form an opinion as to whether or not he should issue such a notice, there is

---

[1] A. I. R. 1928 Lah. 694

CRIMINAL

1932

LAXMI v. KING-EMPEROR

Iqbal Ahmad, J.

nothing in the Code to prevent him from doing so. It follows, therefore, that, apart from the provisions of Section 202 of the Code, a Magistrate proceeding under Chapter VIII has the right to call for a report from the police before issuing a notice under Section 112. The view that I take is in consonance with the view taken in the case of P. Sanjivi Reddy v. K. Koneri Reddi[2].

The moment a notice is issued under Section 112, the Crown has the right to conduct the case against the person called upon to show cause and Section 495 of the Cr. P. C. gives discretion to the Magistrate to permit the prosecution to be conducted by any person mentioned in that section. That person may or may not be a police officer. In the present case, therefore, the Magistrate was fully competent to direct the police to adduce evidence in the case.

For the reasons given above, I dismiss this application.

Application dismissed

---

[2] I. L. R. 49 Mad. 315

BADRI NATH AND ANOTHER (Plaintiffs)

versus

RAJA RAM AND OTHERS (Defendants)*

CIVIL

1932

June 20

MUKERJI, J.
BENNET, J.

Civil Procedure Code, Or. 22, R. 9—Preliminary decree—Death of decree-holder—Application by sons for making final decree without any prayer for setting aside automatic abatement—Final decree passed—Whether passed without jurisdiction.

On the death of the decree-holder after the passing of the preliminary decree, his sons made an application to the court for making the final decree without any prayer for setting aside the abatement which had automatically taken place on the failure of the sons to obtain a substitution of names within 90 days of the death of their father, and a final decree was passed. Held, on a suit for a declaration that the final decree was a nullity, that the nature of an abatement is not a final disposal of the case either by dismissal or by decreeing it and the court does not cease to have jurisdiction in the matter in which an abatement takes place, and the final decree is not therefore bad for want of jurisdiction.

Bibi Khozaima v. Official Liquidator of Kayestha Trading and Banking Corporation Ltd., I. L. R. 2 Pat. 168 dissented from.

FIRST APPEAL from a decree of BABU RAM UGRAH LAL SRIVASTAVA, Subordinate Judge of Basti.

K. N. Katju and M. N. Kaul for the appellants.

P. L. Banerji and H. P. Sen for the respondents.

The judgment of the Court was delivered by

Mukerji, J.

MUKERJI, J.—This appeal is by two of the plaintiffs in the original suit. The history of the case is this. One Ram Harakh Pande obtained a preliminary decree against certain defendants, including the plaintiffs of the suit out of which this appeal has arisen. This decree was made on January 24, 1924. Ram Harakh died some time in November of that year. On February 3, 1926, Ram Harakh's four sons made an application to the court which had passed the preliminary decree for making the preliminary decree final. Notices were issued to the defendants and nobody appeared to contest the application.

---

*F. A. 47 of 1929

A final decree was passed on April 24, 1926. On April 26, 1928, the plaintiffs instituted the suit to obtain a declaration that the final decree passed against them was null and void.

The defence was various and the principal defence was that the suit was barred by res judicata. We may point out there that one of the grounds taken in the plaint was that the final decree had been obtained by fraud on court and the defendants. As to this they replied that there was no fraud.

The court below dismissed the suit, and hence this appeal by two only out of the five plaintiffs.

We have to consider two points; first, whether there was any fraud in obtaining the final decree and, secondly, whether the final decree was passed without jurisdiction, and, therefore, is null and void.

On the first point the only evidence on the record is the statement of Sadhu Saran, one of the plaintiff-appellants, to the effect that he received no notice alleged to have been issued before the preparation of the final decree. Supposing that Sadhu Saran did not receive any notice, it does not follow that there was any fraud perpetrated by the decree-holders, and therefore, the issue must be decided against the appellants. On the second point the argument is that the decree that was passed on April 24, 1926 was a nullity inasmuch as the court had no jurisdiction to entertain the application for making the final decree without setting aside the abatement which had automatically taken place on the failure of the sons of Ram Harakh to obtain a substitution of names within 90 days of the death of their father. We are of opinion that this argument is not at all sound. The nature of an abatement is not a final disposal of the case either by dismissal or by decreeing it. The word "abatement" literally means lessening or shortening and is now very little used except in legal phraseology. When a court is unable to proceed with a case pending before it for the reason that the proper parties are not before it, it is said that the case has abated. When an application is made to bring the necessary parties before the court, the court brings the proper parties before it and proceeds with the hearing. An application for setting aside an abatement may be made long after the case has actually abated. A cause may be shown by the party asking for the setting aside of the abatement as to why the application was not made earlier; Section 5 of the Limitation Act applies to such an application. If on the abatement of a suit, the court ceases to have jurisdiction, how is it possible for it to entertain an application for setting aside of the abatement made long after the three months' period ordinarily allowed for setting aside of the abatement has elapsed? We are, therefore, of opinion that the court does not cease to have jurisdiction in the matter in which an abatement takes place. In this view we are not prepared to accept the dictum of Mr. Justice Coutts of the Patna High Court in Mussammat Bibi Khozaima v. the Official Liquidator of the Kayestha Trading and Banking Corporation Limited[1] where the learned Judge made the following remark:—

---

[1] I. L. R. 2 Pat. 168

> The abatement must, however, be set aside before the substitution can be made and in making the substitution without setting aside the abatement, the Court certainly acted without jurisdiction.

We have in this Court definitely held in a Full Bench decision in Churya v. Baneshwar[2] that an abatement takes place automatically and does not require an order of the court to be passed to that effect. Before this decision was given, the view taken by a Division Bench of this Court was that an abatement could take place only by the passing of an order to that effect—see Gujrati v. Sital Misir[3]. Assuming that, where a suit abates, the Court ceased to have jurisdiction to hear it, till the abatement is set aside, as held by the Patna High Court, in the view of this Division Bench the court would not cease to have jurisdiction simply because a certain party in a cause had died, for, according to that view, an abatement could take place only when an order to that effect has been made.

The Full Bench decision in Churya v. Baneshwar[2] was given on January 11, 1926 and could not have been published in Indian Law Report till, say, the end of the year. Even in unauthorised reports, it could not have been published till a few months later. When Ram Harakh Pande died on November 4, 1924, the earlier ruling of Gujrati v. Sital Misir, which was given in 1923, was the view of this Court and one can easily see, therefore, why, in the application of February 3, 1926 for the making of the final decree, there was no prayer for setting aside the abatement. As regards that application it was argued by Dr. Katju that it showed the mala fides of the sons of Ram Harakh, inasmuch as they did not mention the date of the death of their father. But if no abatement had taken place, for there was no order of the court in existence declaring an abatement, surely it was not necessary for the sons of Ram Harakh to mention the date of Ram Harakh's death and to apply for setting aside the abatement. We cannot, therefore, infer any bad faith from the application.

Now the question is whether the decree of 1926 is a nullity. We have found that the court which made the decree was possessed of jurisdiction. Thus the decree cannot be bad for want of jurisdiction on the part of the court making it. No other ground remains for arguing that the decree is a nullity.

We are clearly of opinion that the decree of 1926 operates as res judicata against the appellants, and it is not open to them to challenge it by a separate suit.

When the decree was passed in 1926 the defendants had either been served with a notice or not; in either case, the decree would be binding on the defendants. If, as we have found, there was no fraud in the passing of the decree, the only way in which it could be set aside was by an application under Order IX, Rule 13 of the Civil Procedure Code. No such application was made. On the other hand, we find that when execution was taken out and notices were served on the plaintiffs and the present appellants, they filed objections to the execution of the decree, but none of the grounds stated that the decree had been passed without any previous

---

[2] I. L. R. 48 All. 334=24 A. L. J. 369

[3] I. L. R. 44 All. 459

Civil — 1932 — Badri Nath v Raja Ram — Mukerji, J.

information given to the objectors. The decree having not been taken exception to, in the only way it could be taken exception to, is binding on the plaintiffs and on the appellants, and it cannot be challenged by a separate suit.

In the result, the appeal fails and we hereby dismiss it with costs.

Appeal dismissed

Civil — 1932 — June 22 — Mukerji, J. Bennet, J.

SAHDEO DAS (Defendant)

versus

RAJA RAM AND OTHERS (Plaintiffs)*

Civil Procedure Code, Sec. 92—Temple—Maintained by public subscriptions—Open to public for "Darshan"—Suit by worshipper for removal of manager—Trust for public benefit—Whether temple private or public—No presumption.

There is no presumption that any particular temple is public or private, and whether it is public or private depends on the facts proved in each case. V. K. Kelu v. C. S. Siva Rama Pattar, A. I. R. 1928 Mad. 879 followed.

A temple, which had been held by professed ascetics in succession from Gurus to Chelas, came to defendant by his being a Chela of his Guru and not by any deed of gift or will. The temple was maintained by public subscriptions and it was open to the members of the public attending it for "Darshan" or "worship" to make offerings. On a suit brought by plaintiffs, who were in the habit of worshipping at the temple and of making offerings and giving subscriptions, the defendant was removed from the office of manager on the finding that he had wasted the temple property. Held, that the endowment was a public endowment and the temple was a trust for the benefit of the public and therefore Sec. 92 C. P. C. applied and plaintiffs were entitled to maintain the suit.

First Appeal from a decree of Babu Preo Nath Ghosh, District Judge of Azamgarh.

S. D. Sinha for the appellant.

Janaki Prasad for the respondents.

The judgment of the Court was delivered by

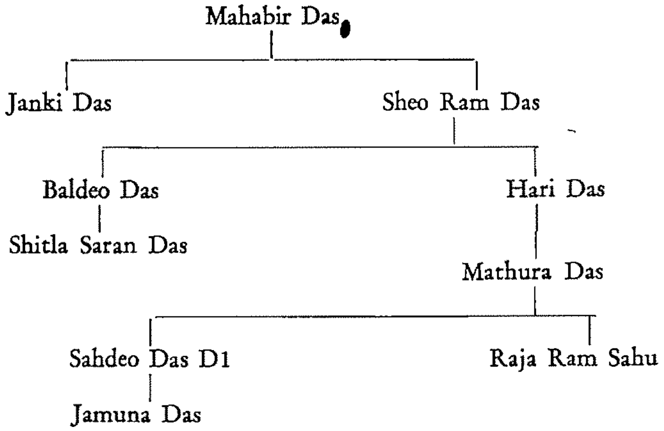
Bennet, J.

Bennet, J.—This is a first appeal by the defendant No. 1, Sahdeo Das, against a decree of the District Judge of Azamgarh passed under Section 92, C. P. C. directing the removal of the appellant from the office of manager of a temple at Bahadurpur within a mile of Dohrighat in Azamgarh district. The chief point which has been raised before us in appeal is whether this temple is a public temple or a private temple. In other words, whether it is a trust created for public purposes of a religious nature which would come within the wording of Section 92 of the Civil Procedure Code and whether the plaintiffs are persons having an interest in the trust. The plaintiffs have shown that they have obtained the permission of the Legal Remembrancer to bring the present suit. The descent of the Gurus and Chelas of this temple is contained in the following table which is admitted by both parties.

---

*F. A. 71 of 1929

CIVIL
1932
SAHDEO DAS
v.
RAJA RAM
Bennet, J.



The history of the building is also common ground. Sheo Ram Das built this Thakurdwara in Bahadurpur and installed the idols of Ram and Janki in it. Hari Das, his disciple, purchased some property in the name of the deity. The present defendant-appellant has succeeded by virtue of his being Chela of Mathura Das. We do not agree with the proposition of law laid down by the learned District Judge in the following terms:

> All Hindu temples are presumed to be open to the public for worship and any one who alleges that a certain temple is private has to prove that fact.

We consider that a correct statement of the law is contained in V. K. Kelu v. C. S. Siva Rama Pattar[1], which is that there is no presumption that any particular temple is public or private, and whether it is public or private depends on the facts proved in each case. Now having considered the evidence on both sides we find that there are the following facts proved in the present case.

(1) This temple has been held by professed ascetics in succession from Gurus to chelas.

(2) The zamindari which belonged to the temple was purchased by the Gurus in the name of the deity.

(3) There are subscriptions received from the public to maintain the temple. These subscriptions do not follow any very definite rule as to what amount they are but it is shown by the evidence of several witnesses for the plaintiffs that merchants who import grain by river or by train into Dohrighat pay a small proportion of half a seer or more per maund. The defence witnesses admit that it is open to any one visiting the temple to make an offering.

(4) The public visiting the temple could perform Darshan. A certain amount of confusion has been introduced into the paper book by the translator at one place using the word "worship" as a translation of "pooja" and at another place using the word "worship" as the translation of "Darshan". "Pooja" is the ceremony performed by a pujari and "darshan" is the worship which members of the public render when they attend a temple. It is also admitted, as stated already, that members of the public attending the temple may make offerings (charahwa).

---

[1] I. L. R. 1928 Mad. 879

(5) The property came to the defendant by his being a Chela of his Guru Mathura Das. It did not come to him by any deed of gift or will. The case therefore differs from those cases in which there was a definite deed creating a religious foundation of a private character. The mere fact that offerings were received in a case where there was a deed creating a private endowment would not in our opinion be sufficient to alter the private nature of the endowment. But in the present case there is no deed creating any private endowment. The evidence before us, in our opinion, shows that the endowment was a public endowment, and that this was a trust for the benefit of the public and therefore that Section 92 applies.

As to the right of the plaintiffs to bring the present suit they have established that they were in the habit of worshipping at this temple and of making offerings and of giving subscriptions. We consider that in virtue of these facts they are entitled to apply for the permission of the Legal Remembrancer which they have obtained and therefore they are entitled to maintain the suit under Section 92 C. P. C. There was ample evidence before the lower court of breaches of trust. At one period between 1909 and 1918 the defendant made transfers by mortgage deeds of the entire zamindari property of this temple. A suit was then brought against him with the permission of the Legal Remembrancer, and he entered into a compromise on December 8, 1920 by which he was removed from the management. He then went on pilgrimage. Jamuna Das who had been appointed manager died about 1923 and the defendant again took possession of the temple. Since 1923 the defendant is proved to have sold various groves and executed leases for seven years to various tenants. The only landed property left to the defendant is certain occupancy holdings and the patwari produced on behalf of the defendant stated that the occupancy holdings had been leased to sub-tenants for seven years on the terms that the sub-tenants paid Rs.31 to the zamindar and Rs.29 per annum to the defendant. The only income therefore from the endowed property is Rs.29 per annum. It is obvious that the temple must depend on offerings for its maintenance. We consider that the defendant has clearly wasted the property. The order of the learned District Judge removing the defendant from the management is correct. Accordingly we dismiss this appeal with costs.

Appeal dismissed

PRIVY COUNCIL

SORABJEE

versus

DWARKADAS RANCHHODDAS AND OTHERS*

CIVIL

1932

May 24

LORD THANKERTON
SIR JOHN WALLIS
SIR GEORGE LOWNDES

Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), Sec. 63 and Trusts Act (II of 1882), Sec. 90—Scope of—Suit for redemption—Occupancy rights acquired by mortgagee—Mortgagor claims them as accretions to suit mortgage—When entitled.

> Sec. 63 of the Transfer of Property Act cannot be read as entitling the mortgagor on redemption to recover acquisitions made by the mortgagee for his own benefit in circumstances which do not bring him within Sec. 90 of the Trusts Act, 1882, that is to say, when he did not have any special advantage by reason of his position as mortgagee in acquiring them.
>
> Where in a suit for redemption the mortgagor claimed occupancy rights acquired by the mortgagee, who was also a co-sharer with him in the mauza, subsequent to the creation of the mortgage, as accretions to the suit mortgage, held, that it was incumbent on the mortgagor to show that the occupancy rights were acquired under such circumstances as to bring them within the provisions of Sec. 90, Trusts Act.

APPEAL from a decision of the Court of the Judicial Commissioner of the Central Provinces.

L. De'Gruyther, K.C. and J. M. Parikh for the appellant.

W. H. Upjohn, K.C. and S. Hyam for the respondents.

The following judgment was delivered by

Sir John Wallis

SIR JOHN WALLIS—This appeal was originally before the Board on February 12, 1932, when, upon a preliminary objection taken by the appearing respondents, their Lordships agreed humbly to advise His Majesty that the certificate of the Court of the Judicial Commissioner of the Central Provinces admitting the appeal was wrongly granted but that special leave to appeal ought to be granted to the appellant upon lodging a petition for that purpose. This petition was duly lodged, and their Lordships' report was approved by Order in Council on March 17, 1932.

The case, which comes here on appeal from a judgment and decree in second appeal, raises a question of some importance as to the right under the existing law in India of a mortgagor of proprietary rights to recover on redemption subordinate tenures acquired by the mortgagee during the subsistence of the mortgage. This question came before this Board in Rajah Kishendatt Ram v. Rajah Mumtaz Ali Khan[1], before the enactment in 1882 of the Indian Trusts Act and the Transfer of Property Act. In that case the mortgagee of the proprietary rights of a talookdar had acquired during the continuance of the mortgage certain subordinate tenures in the taluq known as birts, and their Lordships found out the facts of that case that the mortgagee taking advantage of his position as de facto talookdar had acquired the birts on very favourable terms and had allowed them to merge in the taluq, and that it would be inequitable to allow him on redemption to revive the birts for his own benefit. They accordingly held that the mortgagor was entitled to redeem the estate as then enjoyed by the mortgagee on paying the original mortgage money plus the purchase money of the birts. They at the same time made it clear that they were not prepared to affirm the proposition that every purchase of a sub-tenure by the mortgagee must be held to have been made for the benefit of the mortgagor. The judgment reads:—

*P. C. A. 2 of 1931

[1] 6 I. A. 145

> Their Lordships are not prepared to affirm the broad proposition that every purchase by a mortgagee of a sub-tenure existing at the date of the mortgage must be taken to have been made for the benefit of the mortgagor, so as to enhance the value of the mortgaged property, and make the whole, including the sub-tenure, subject to the right of redemption upon equitable terms.
>
> It may well be that when the estate mortgaged is a zemindary in lower Bengal, out of which a putnee tenure has been granted, or one within the ambit of which there is an ancient mokurreree istimrari tenure, a mortgagee of the zemindary, though in possession, might purchase with his own funds and keep alive for his own benefit that putnee or mokurreree. In such cases the mortgagee can hardly be said to have derived from his mortgagor any peculiar means or facilities for making the purchase which would not be possessed by a stranger, and may therefore be held entitled, equally with a stranger, to make it for his own benefit. In such cases also the putnee, if the putneedar failed to fulfil his obligations, would not be resumable by the zemindar, and the zemindary would always have been held subject to the mokurreree.

At the close of their judgment their Lordships referred to the English decisions which they observed were only applicable because they were agreeable to general equity and good conscience, and said:—

> It seems to their Lordships that, although some of the earlier cases may have been qualified by more recent decisions, the general principle is still recognised by English law to this extent, viz., that most acquisitions by a mortgagor enure for the benefit of the mortgagee, increasing thereby the value of his security; and that, on the other hand, many acquisitions by the mortgagee are in like manner treated as accretions to the mortgaged property, or substitutions for it, and, therefore, subject to redemption. The law laid down in Rakestraw v. Brewer, [2 P. Wms. 511] as to the renewal of a term obtained by the mortgagee of the expired term, being, 'as coming from the same root,' subject to the same equity, has never been impeached.

The equitable principles applied by their Lordships in that case to acquisitions by a mortgagee have now been embodied by Section 90 of the Indian Trusts Act, 1882, in a wider rule dealing with acquisitions by tenants for life, co-owners, mortgagees and other qualified owners. The section is as follows:—

> 90. Where a tenant for life, co-owner, mortgagee or other qualified owner of any property, by availing himself of his position as such, gains an advantage in derogation of the rights of the other persons interested in the property, or where any such owner, as representing all persons interested > in such property, gains any advantage, he must hold, for the benefit of all persons so interested, the advantage so gained, but subject to repayment by such persons of their due share of the expenses properly incurred, and to an indemnity by the same persons against liabilities properly contracted in gaining such advantage.

>
> Illustrations
>
> (a) A, the tenant for life of leasehold property renews the lease in his own name and for his own benefit. A holds the renewed lease for the benefit of all those interested in the old lease.
>
> (b) A village belongs to a Hindu family. A, one of its members, pays nazrana to Government and thereby procures his name to be entered as the inamdar of the village. A holds the village for the benefit of himself and the other members.
>
> (c) A mortgages land to B, who enters into possession. B allows the Government revenue to fall into arrear with a view to the land being put up for sale and his becoming himself the purchaser of it. The land is accordingly sold to B. Subject to the repayment of the amount due on the mortgage and of his expenses properly incurred as mortgagee, B holds the land for the benefit of A.

It has, however, been suggested in an Indian case, Ram Brich Narain Singh v. Ambika Prasad Singh[2], which was cited for the appellant both below and here, that Section 63 of the Transfer of Property Act goes further than Section 90 of the Indian Trusts Act, and entitles the mortgagor on redemption to treat subordinate tenures acquired by the mortgagee for his own benefit as accessions to the mortgaged property without regard to the question whether the mortgagee had any special advantage by reason of his position as mortgagee in acquiring them. It would be strange indeed if these two measures, which were drafted by the Indian Law Commission in England and passed into law in the same session of the Indian Legislature, should be found to contain inconsistent provisions as to the same state of facts, but in their Lordships' opinion no such inconsistency is to be found. Sections 63 and 64 of the Transfer of Property Act are as follows:—

> 63. Where mortgaged property in possession of the mortgagee has, during the continuance of the mortgage, received any accession, the mortgagor, upon redemption, shall, in the absence of a contract to the contrary, be entitled as against the mortgagee to such accession.
>
> Where such accession has been acquired at the expense of the mortgagee, and is capable of separate possession or enjoyment without detriment to the principal property, the mortgagor desiring to take the accession must pay to the mortgagee the expense of acquiring it. If such separate possession or enjoyment is not possible, the accession must be delivered with the property, the mortgagor being liable, in the case of an acquisition necessary to preserve the property from destruction, forfeiture or sale, or made with his assent, to pay the proper cost thereof, as an addition to the principal money, at the same rate of interest.
>
> In the case last mentioned the profits, if any, arising from the accession shall be credited to the mortgagor.

---

[2] 17 C. W. N. 586

> Where the mortgage is usufructuary and the accession has been acquired at the expense of the mortgagee, the profits, if any, arising from the accession shall, in the absence of a contract to the contrary, be set off against interest, if any, payable on the money so expended.
>
> 64. Where the mortgaged property is a lease for a term of years, and the mortgagee obtains a renewal of the lease, the mortgagor, upon redemption, shall, in the absence of a contract by him to the contrary, have the benefit of the new lease.

Section 64 may be said to give statutory effect to the rule in Rakestraw v. Brewer[3], which was referred to by their Lordships in the passage already cited, as it was apparently thought better to provide expressly for this particular acquisition by a mortgagee instead of leaving it to be governed by the general provisions of Section 90 of the Indian Trusts Act, but in their Lordships' opinion there is nothing inconsistent with that section in the provisions of Section 63 of the Transfer of Property Act as to accessions to mortgaged property and the terms on which the mortgagor may upon redemption obtain the benefit of them. The word accession is not defined in the Act, but the section deals expressly with accessions which have been acquired at the expense of the mortgagee and would appear to be clearly applicable to cases in which a subordinate tenure has admittedly been acquired by the mortgagee as an accession to the mortgaged property. Whether the term accession as used in this section should also be held to cover acquisitions which the mortgagee has made for his own benefit but is bound under Section 90 of the Indian Trusts Act to hold for the benefit of the mortgagor need not be decided. Section 90 itself provides for the mortgagor bearing the cost of the acquisition in such a case, but Section 63 goes somewhat further and contains as well an express provision as to profits arising from the accession where the mortgage is usufructuary. In the present case it is sufficient to say that their Lordships are clearly of opinion that Section 63 of the Transfer of Property Act cannot be read as entitling the mortgagor to recover acquisitions made by the mortgagee for his own benefit in circumstances which do not bring him within Section 90 of the Indian Trusts Act.

Their Lordships have thought right to make these observations because there would appear to have been much misconception on this subject in the present case with which they will now proceed to deal.

In November, 1908, one Rajaram mortgaged with possession his four annas proprietary share in mauza Khandwa Tarf Kunbi, together with numerous other properties to the predecessors of defendants 1 to 4. Two of these four one anna shares in this mauza were subsequently sold to the mortgagees in 1912; another was brought to sale in court auction and purchased by the fifth defendant, and the remaining one anna share was also brought to sale and acquired in 1918 from the auction purchaser by the plaintiff, who instituted the present suit for redemption in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Khandwa on December 23, 1921.

Mauza Khandwa Tarf Kunbi is more than 4,000 acres in extent, but the present appeal only relates to two Survey Numbers 451 and 452 of 5½ and 3 acres respectively. The mortgagees were apparently anxious to acquire them on account of their proximity to the town of Khandwa, and are found to have erected a ginning press on one of them at a cost of Rs.8,000.

---

[3] 2 P. Wms. 511

As regards Survey No. 452 the mortgagees in 1906, more than two years before the execution of Rajaram's mortgage in their favour, had obtained from his brother and co-sharer Govindram, who was also the owner of a four annas share in the mauza, a sale deed in which he purported as malguzar and lambardar to sell them the whole proprietary rights in this Survey Number. Subsequently to the date of the mortgage on October 8, 1910, they obtained a deed from the occupancy tenants by which the latter gave up their tenancy right for ever and surrendered it to the predecessors of defendants 1 to 4 as proprietors on receipt of Rs.2,135 on account of tenancy rights and improvements.

As regards Survey No. 451 the occupancy tenants on May 22, 1915, purchased from Rajaram's uncle Totaram the remaining co-sharer in the mauza his eight annas proprietary share in this Survey Number for a consideration supplied by the predecessors of defendants 1 to 4, in whose favour they executed on the following day a sale deed of the proprietary and tenancy rights in the Survey Number. The sale deed recited that they had formerly been occupancy tenants and had subsequently purchased the malikana or proprietary rights from Totaram.

In paragraph 10 of his rejoinder the plaintiff alleged that after the execution of the mortgage deed there had been accretions to the mortgaged property as shown in Schedule K filed therewith. In Schedule K the occupancy rights acquired in these two Survey Numbers subsequent to the creation of the mortgage were claimed as accretions to the mortgage, but as half the mortgagor's proprietary rights in the mauza had been acquired by the mortgagees subsequent to the mortgage, only half of each Survey Number was claimed as an accretion to the mortgage. "The defendants' possession over half of this field at least," it was alleged as regards each of these Survey Numbers, "must be deemed to be that of mortgagees as the acquisition thereby made was that of an occupancy holding." In other words the whole occupancy rights acquired by the mortgagees in these Survey Numbers were claimed as an accretion or accession to the mortgage, although the mortgage was only of Rajaram's four annas share in the mauza, and although the mortgagees had acquired Govindram's four annas share in Survey Number 452 and Totaram's eight annas share in Survey Number 451. This claim was the subject of issues 17 and 18.

> 17. Whether there have been accretions to the mortgaged property as shown in the plaintiff's Schedule K?
>
> 18. If so, are defendants 1 to 4 bound to deliver possession of the same to plaintiff on redemption and on what terms?

In the first Court the Subordinate Judge saw no ground for holding that the mortgagees as such had acquired the occupancy rights in these Survey Numbers. He accordingly disallowed the claim, but observed that the plaintiff's claim to share in this land would have to be determined in the partition suit which was then pending apparently between the co-sharers in the mauza, in which the plaintiff was entitled to intervene as the owner of a one anna share.

The judgment of the Subordinate Judge on this point was reversed by the District Judge of Nimar who held that defendants 1 to 4 must surrender half the land as claimed by the plaintiff and account for half the profits, but that the plaintiff would have to bear half the costs of acquisition. The suit was remanded to ascertain the amount of the profits and costs of acquisition, and when the case came back, a decree was passed ordering the plaintiff to be put in possession of half the Survey Numbers, the claims of the 5th defendant, who had also acquired a one anna share from the mortgagor but had not appeared in the suit, being apparently overlooked. The District Judge's reasons are not very clear, but he referred to Ram Brich Narain Singh v. Ambika Prasad Singh[1], and appears to have held on the authority of that decision, on which their Lordships have already commented, that, as the occupancy rights had been acquired by the predecessors of defendants 1 to 4 while they were mortgagees in possession of Rajaram's four annas share of the mauza, the mortgagor was entitled to them on redemption as an accession to the mortgaged property under Section 63 of the Transfer of Property Act. On a second appeal preferred by defendants 1 to 4 this contention was again put forward and was rightly rejected by the Judicial Commissioner of the Central Provinces who allowed the appeal and restored the judgment of the Subordinate Judge, holding that the surrenders of the respondents' occupancy rights had been obtained by the predecessors of defendants 1 to 4 as an accession to the proprietary interest which they claimed to have acquired in these Survey Numbers and not as mortgagees in possession of their mortgagor's four annas share.

In their Lordships' opinion these occupancy rights were acquired by the mortgagees of Rajaram's share, who were also co-sharers with him in the mauza, for their own benefit, and to give the plaintiff any claim to them as the owner of a one anna share in the mauza it was incumbent on him to show that they were acquired under such circumstances as to bring them within the provisions of Section 90 of the Indian Trusts Act. No such case was set up in paragraph 10 and Schedule K of the plaintiff's rejoinder in which these occupancy rights are claimed as accretions to the suit mortgage, no issues have been framed in regard to it and it has not been considered or decided in the lower courts.

In their Lordships' opinion the plaintiff's appeal fails and should be dismissed and their Lordships will humbly advise His Majesty accordingly. The appellant must pay the first three respondents' costs including their costs of the proceedings of February 12, 1932, and of the petition for special leave to appeal.

Appeal dismissed

[1] 17 C. W. N. 586

HIGH COURT

AMRAJ SINGH AND OTHERS (Plaintiffs)

versus

SHAMBHU SINGH AND OTHERS (Defendants)*

CIVIL

1932

July 8

SULAIMAN, C. J.
MUKERJI, J.
KING, J.

Hindu Law—Joint family property—Mortgaged for satisfying pre-emption decree —Neither "benefit of the estate" nor "legal necessity" proved—Mortgage unenforceable against family property mortgaged—Alienation by father— When unjustified.

Where two brothers mortgaged ancestral property for the sake of raising a loan for satisfying a pre-emption decree but it was not proved that the loan was raised for legal necessity or for discharging an antecedent debt or for the benefit of the estate, held, that the mortgage was not within the authority of the executants and that therefore it was unenforceable against the family property mortgaged.

Per SULAIMAN, C. J.—The money required for a new business started even by the father as the manager of the family, involving as it does a risk and liability on the minor members of the family, cannot justify an alienation.

Case-law discussed at length.

FIRST APPEAL from a decree of BABU CHARU DEB BANERJI, Subordinate Judge of Azamgarh.

The following is the Referring Order:—

SULAIMAN, C. J. and YOUNG, J.—This is a plaintiffs' appeal arising out of a suit No. 89 of 1927 which was for sale on the basis of a mortgage deed executed by the father of defendants 1 to 3 and by defendant No. 4.

It appears that the executants obtained a pre-emption decree conditional on payment of Rs.3,000. They appear to have had Rs.1,000 in their hands but stood in need of borrowing an additional sum of Rs.2,000 in order to deposit the decretal amount. This amount was borrowed under the mortgage deed in suit. The whole amount was deposited and possession of the pre-empted property was taken. This property is in the possession of the defendants.

The defendants pleaded that the mortgage deed was without legal necessity and was not binding on the other members of the family.

The learned Subordinate Judge following two cases of this Court has held that it is not open to a father governed by the Mitakshara Law to encumber joint ancestral property to acquire necessary funds to pre-empt other properties and has also held that it cannot be argued that there is a benefit by the loan because purchase by pre-emption by borrowing money is no benefit to the estate. In the view that there is "no legal necessity and no benefit of the estate" he has held that the loan cannot be binding on the joint ancestral property. There is no doubt that his finding is mainly influenced by the rulings which he has quoted.

The point urged in appeal is that the money borrowed by the father to pay the amount due under the pre-emption decree justified the alienation of the joint ancestral property as the transaction was for the benefit of the estate and has in effect benefited the family and that the defendants cannot keep the property so acquired and yet repudiate the loan taken for its acquisition.

On this point there is a clear conflict of opinion between the decision in Nathu v. Kundan Lal, 7 A. L. J. 182=I. L. R. 33 All. 242 and Kapildeo v. Thakur Prasad, 11 A. L. J. 961, on the one hand, and Shankar Sahi v. Baichu Ram, 23 A. L.

---

*F. A. 501 of 1928

J. 204 and Kishan Sahai v. Raghunath Singh, 27 A. L. J. 110, on the other hand. The case relied on in the last two mentioned cases was that of Inspector Singh v. Kharak Singh, 26 A. L. J. 577, which was doubted in the case of Rattan Chand v. Sri Thakur Ram Kishan Murarji, 26 A. L. J. 777, and overruled on one point in the case of Jagat Narain v. Mathura Das, 26 A. L. J. 843. The case of Niladri Sahu v. Mahant Chaturbhuj Das, 53 I. A. 253 at 261 and 265 is also relied upon on behalf of the plaintiffs as showing that a benefit is sufficient even if there were no legal necessity.

We think that there is a conflict of opinion which requires to be set at rest one way or the other. We accordingly direct the case to be laid before the Chief Justice for the constitution of a larger Bench.

P. L. Banerji and H. P. Sen for the appellants.

No one appeared for the respondents.

The following judgments were delivered:—

Sulaiman, C. J.

SULAIMAN, C. J.—I concur in the conclusion that the mortgage deed in dispute not having been proved to have been for legal necessity or for the benefit of the family, cannot be held to be binding on the defendants.

It seems to me that the answer to the question is not capable of being stated broadly. On the one hand, it cannot be said that money required by the manager of a joint Hindu family in order to pay the pre-emption money and costs for the acquisition of fresh property is in all cases without legal necessity or benefit to the family estate, and is therefore always outside the authority of the father. Nor can it be laid down, on the other hand, that every manager is entitled to borrow money in order to acquire fresh property by pre-emption. The answer to the question must depend on the special circumstances of each case. Where a pre-emption claim is in reality in the nature of a speculation or is not in the best interests of the family, the action of the manager would be without justification. But there may, for instance, be a case where a rival proprietor wishing to become a co-sharer in the village and thereby causing considerable interference in the management of the family estate, purchases property when it is highly beneficial to the family and the estate, if not actually necessary, to exclude him from the village so as to avoid all future trouble; or there may be a case where a substantial share in the ancestral village has been sold very cheap and its acquisition will bring about a considerable improvement in the comfort and support of the family owning a small share in the village and a better enjoyment of the ancestral share. When satisfied that the acquisition was not speculative, but in the best interests of the family and for its benefit as well as for the benefit of the family estate, which an ordinary prudent manager would make, it would be open to a court to hold that the transaction is binding on the other members of the family, even though it is nothing but the raising of a loan on a mortgage of family property for the sake of satisfying the pre-emption decree.

A Full Bench of this Court in the case of Jagat Narain v. Mathura Das[1] considered the previous authorities and came to the conclusion that transactions justifiable on the principle of benefit to the estate are not limited to those transactions which are of a defensive nature. It must be borne in mind that the same original texts have been differently interpreted under the Mitakshara and the Dayabhag Law, the former restricting the manager's power of alienation to a considerable extent, while the latter giving him almost full disposing power. The text of Brahaspati quoted in the Mitakshara, which allows a transfer of immovable property "during a season of distress, for the sake of the family, and specially for pious purposes," has been commented upon in the Mitakshara. The illustrations given by the commentator need not necessarily be exhaustive and may be illustrative only. They have been responsible for a considerable judge-made law based upon the pronouncements of their Lordships of the Privy Council made from time to time. Taking the words " for the sake of the family" literally, the expression may be even wider in scope than the words "for the benefit of the family." It is to be remembered that the manager of a joint Hindu family, particularly a father, is not merely like an agent of the other members of the family, but is a coparcener and has full power to manage the family property in the most beneficial manner as a prudent owner would do. He represents the family to the outside world, and authority for his actions is not always to be derived from the consent of the other members of the family, some of whom may be minors, and therefore incapable of giving a valid consent. The authority of the Full Bench in Jagat Narain v. Mathura Das is based on previous case-law, and is binding on us so long as it is not overruled by their Lordships of the Privy Council or dissented from by a larger Full Bench.

[1] I. L. R. 50 All. 969

I do not think that there is anything in the recent case of the Benares Bank, Ltd. v. Hari Narain[2] which would compel us to hold that the above mentioned Full Bench of this Court has by implication been overruled. In that case the theka business started by the manager of the family was not an ancestral business. Their Lordships of the Privy Council laid down that the manager of a joint Hindu family has no power to impose upon a minor member of the family the risk and liability of a new business as started by him, and that a new business is not within the purview of the verses Nos. 27-29 of Chap. 1 of the Mitakshara, and it makes no difference that the manager starting the new business is the father himself. Their Lordships came to the conclusion that the balance of authority in India is in accordance with this view.

This pronouncement conclusively lays down that the money for a new business started even by the father as the manager of the family, involving as it does a risk and liability on the minor members of the family, cannot justify an alienation.

The business in that case was in the nature of taking contracts from the Public Works Department relating to buildings and also some plumber's business, which might have been more or less of a sporadic character and had an element of speculation in it. It had never been suggested on behalf of the Benares Bank that the business had been started for the benefit of the family or that it had been necessary for its support and maintenance, for instance, to save the family from starvation. There is nothing in the judgment of their Lordships of the Privy Council which necessarily goes against the view expressed by the Full Bench of this Court. I am, therefore, unable to hold that the authority of the Full Bench has been in any way shaken by this recent pronouncement.

---

[2] [1932] A. L. J. 714

Coming to the facts of the case before us, no attempt was made on behalf of the defendants to show that the aquisition of the property by the right of pre-emption was necessary for the family or even that it was for the benefit of the family and the family estate. Both parties appear to have considered as if the question was purely one of law and not a mixed one of law and fact. The learned Subordinate Judge had to record a finding that there was "no legal necessity and no benefit of the estate." In the absence of any such proof, the claim must fail. I would accordingly dismiss the appeal.

Sulaiman, C. J.

Mukerji, J.

MUKERJI, J.—This case has been referred to the Full Bench. The facts briefly are as follows:—

Two brothers, Tulshi Prasad Singh and Deonath Singh, brought a suit for pre-emption, being suit No. 140 of 1917, against Tilakdhari Singh and others. The suit was decreed on condition of payment of Rs.3,000 as the purchase-money to the vendees. The brothers had no money except a sum of Rs.1,000 and they raised the balance of Rs.2,000 by mortgaging their ancestral property to some of the plaintiffs and predecessors of others in the suit out of which this appeal has arisen. Tulshi Prasad Singh having died, the present suit has been brought against his sons and Deonath Singh to recover the money by sale of the property hypothecated.

The defendants 1 to 3 are the minor sons of Tulshi Prasad Singh and their case is that for the purposes of paying the price of a pre-empted property their father or their uncle were not authorised by the Hindu Law to mortgage the joint family property and, therefore, the suit must fail.

The learned Subordinate Judge who heard the suit agreed to this contention and dismissed the suit, so far as it was for enforcement of the mortgage; but he gave a simple money decree against Deonath Singh on foot of the personal covenant contained in the mortgage-bond.

Deonath Singh has not appealed. The plaintiffs have filed this appeal and they contend that the mortgage was a prudent and beneficial one and should be upheld. There was another plea taken that the sons could not both retain the benefit acquired with the plaintiffs' money and at the same time refuse to pay the same. This plea cannot be substantiated on facts. It appears from the written statement of Deonath Singh and there is no evidence to the contrary that the property acquired by pre-emption has been lost to the family because of a suit brought by a minor member of the family of the vendors. The appeal came up for hearing before two learned Judges of this Court, and having regard to the conflict of decisions on the question of the power of a manager of a Hindu family to raise money on the security of joint family property for the purchase of new property they referred the whole case to a larger Bench.

The view which I have taken of the manager's authority to raise money in the circumstances stated above is contained in the judgment in Kishen Sahai v. Raghunath Singh[3] and Inspector Singh v. Kharak Singh[4].

[3] I. L. R. 51 All. 473

[4] I. L. R. 50 All. 776

As the point has been referred to a larger Bench so that the law on the point may be settled, I think it necessary for me to discuss the entire law on the point.

To get hold of the principle on which the appeal is to be decided, we must look to the Hindu Law; for the question is one of Hindu Law and Hindu Law alone. The constitution of a Hindu family with property and the powers of the father or the manager to mortgage the family property has been dealt with and stated by Vijnaneshwar in his book, the Mitakshara. I shall read the statement of the law made by Vijnaneshwar from the translation of Colebrooke.

In Chapter I, Section 1, Paragraph 27 Vijnaneshwar says:

> Therefore it is a settled point, that property in the paternal or ancestral (grand paternal) estate is by birth, although the father has independent power in the disposal of effects other than immovables, for indispensable acts of duty and for purposes prescribed by texts of law, as gifts through affection, support of the family, relief from distress, and so forth: but he is subject to the control of his sons and the rest, in regard to the immovable estate, whether acquired by himself or inherited from his father or other predecessor; since it is ordained: 'Though immovables or bipeds (this probably means slaves) have been acquired by a man himself, a gift or sale of them should not be made without convening all the sons. They, who are born, and they who are yet unbegotten, and they who are still in the womb, require the means of support, no gift or sale should, therefore, be made'.

The rule, therefore, is that the family property is for the support of those who are in existence, those who are in the womb and those who are not yet begotten, and, therefore, the property cannot be disposed of by the father without the consent of his sons. The same rule applies when the manager is not the father but say an uncle. He must have the consent of all other members of the family, in order to transfer the same, because they have a right in the property. This being the state of the law, it might work to the disadvantage of the family in cases where some of the members are minors and yet there is an urgency to raise money. An exception, therefore, is made and mentioned in the next Paragraph No. 28. It reads as follows:—

> An exception to it follows:—'Even a single individual may conclude a donation, mortgage, or sale, of immovable property, during a season of distress, for the sake of the family, and especially for pious purposes.'

This is a quotation made by the author of the Mitakshara from the Smriti of Brihaspati cited by Ratnagar. Having quoted the text, Vijnaneshwar proceeds to explain the meaning of the text quoted.

He says in Paragraph 28:

> The meaning of that text is this: while the sons and grandsons are minors, and incapable of giving their consent to a gift and the like; or while brothers are so (minors) and continue unseparated; even one person, who is capable, may conclude a gift, hypothecation, or sale, of immovable property, if a calamity affecting the whole family require it, or the support of the family render it necessary, or indispensable duties, such as the obsequies of the father or the like, make it unavoidable.

The exception to the general rule which was mentioned in the text required explanation and what has gone above is the meaning put to it by Vijnaneshwar. The three conditions in which a single member is allowed to transfer the property are (1) a season of distress, (2) for the sake of the family and (3) pious purposes. Vijnaneshwar says that in the case of No. 1, there should be a calamity affecting whole family and the calamity cannot be averted without the transfer. His language is "if a calamity affecting the whole family require it". The second case (sake of the family) is explained by Vijnaneshwar as meaning that the support of the family renders it necessary to make the transfer. It will be noticed here that what has been translated as 'sake of the family' has been understood by Vijnaneshwar as meaning the support of the family and not the aggrandizement of it and not the adding of wealth to the family. The third case (pious purposes) has been understood by Vijnaneshwar as meaning indispensable duties such as the obsequies of the father or the like, duties which cannot be avoided. The making of a gift out of sheer charity may be a pious duty but that is not the sort of pious duty that Vijnaneshwar understands. The pious duty must be one that cannot be avoided. Such being the state of the Hindu Law, as explained by Vijnaneshwar, whose authority in this part of the country is paramount we have to see whether a purchase of property, or acquisition of property by pre-emption, which is the same thing only more costly and more speculative, on the security of the joint ancestral property comes within the exception. In an ordinary case of pre-emption, the purpose is neither the avoidance of a calamity nor support of the family nor performance of an indispensable duty like a Sradh. It has been argued that it may be that the person who has purchased the property is a very bad man with tyrannical habits and it might be feared that, if he was allowed to purchase the property, he might in course of time, swallow up the whole family property. If a case like that can be made out it is possible to say that the pre-emption would be an act to avoid a calamity which affects the whole family. The calamity must be one which affects the whole family. This cannot be forgotten. No such allegation has been made in this case and we need not consider such a hypothetical case.

On a bare reading of the Mitakshara, therefore, the mortgage in question must be held to be unjustified, and, therefore, not binding on the family property.

It appears that their Lordships of the Privy Council, in the case of Hunoomanpersaud Pandey v. Mst. Babooee Munraj Koonweree[5] considered the powers of the manager of an infant heir to charge the minor's estate. In that case the mother of the infant heir had made a mortgage and the validity of the mortgage was in question. Their Lordships laid down the extent of the power of the manager in the following well-known passage which will bear quotations:—

> The power of the manager for an infant heir to charge an estate not his own, is, under the Hindu Law, a limited and qualified power. It can only be exercised rightly in a case of need, or for the benefit of the estate. But where, in the particular instance, the charge is one that a prudent owner would make, in order to benefit the estate, the bona fide lender is not affected by the precedent mismanagement of the estate. The actual > pressure on the estate, the danger to be averted, or the benefit to be conferred upon it, in the particular instance, is the thing to be regarded.

---

[5] 6 Moore's I. A. 393

This law was laid down as between a minor and his manager and has no direct reference to the conditions of the joint Hindu family in which there are certain minor members. But this very passage has been quoted from time to time as also covering the case of a joint family. It has been understood from this statement of the law, that it is only in the case of a necessity and necessity alone that the manager of a Hindu family in which there are minors can charge the estate. In discussing the liability of the sons for the father's debts, in the well-known case of Brij Narain v. Mangal Prasad[6] their Lordships of the Privy Council mentioned the somewhat illogical state of things, namely, the limited power of the father in charging the property and the unlimited liability of the sons to pay the father's antecedent debts. In discussing the situation their Lordships said, at page 101:

> On the one hand it is settled law that the manager as such cannot bind the estate at his own free will and without any compelling cause so as to bind the reversioneries. He can bind it for necessity, the necessity being the necessity of the family . . . . .

It will be noticed that this is in accordance with the law as propounded by Mitakshara. The calamity should be one which affects the whole family. The rest of the discussion of their Lordships relates the liability of the son to pay his father's debt. In concluding the judgment their Lordships laid down the law in five propositions and the first one is:

> (1) The managing coparcener of a joint undivided estate cannot alienate or burden the estate qua manager except for purposes of necessity.

As the present case is not a case of a debt of a father, it is not necessary to consider the other propositions of law laid down by their Lordships. From this case we find that apart from the question of payment of father's debt, a father as the manager of the family can burden the estate only for the purposes of necessity and that necessity, to quote the language of their Lordships again at page 101, must be a "compelling cause" and the necessity must be a necessity of the family. It is difficult to believe that their Lordships of the Privy Council had not in their mind the rule laid down by the Mitakshara quoted in the beginning of the judgment. In their Lordships' opinion the test of a single member's authority to burden the family property is confined to the existence of "compelling necessity", which is a 'necessity of the whole family.' If we analyse the three cases in which Vijnaneshwar permits the manager to transfer immovable property belonging to himself and members of the joint family some of whom are minors, we shall find that the single test applied by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Brij Narain's case is enough. The 'compelling necessity of the whole family' will cover the case of calamity, will cover the case of support of the family and will cover the case of a death in the family and the performance of the obsequial rites. It has been urged that the statement of manager's power laid down by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Hanoomanpersaud's

---

[6] I. L. R. 45 All. 95

CIVIL
1932
AMRAJ SINGH
v.
SHAMBHU SINGH
Mukerji, J.

case gives wider powers to the manager and he can burde property in order to "confer benefit on the estate". Ther doubt that their Lordships do use the words "benefit to the passage quoted above from Hanoomanpersaud's case. But t to see what was in their Lordships' mind when they used t "the benefit to be conferred upon it." Did their Lordship benefit which was not a case of a necessity or was it the case pression "benefit to be conferred on the estate" was meant t valent of the words "for the sake of the family" to be found i translation in Paragraph 26, Chapter I, Section 1 of the Mi we suppose that the expression "benefit to be conferred" was a benefit which was not the kind of benefit expressed by t "for the sake of the family" (Paragraph 28 Mitakshara and w explained in Paragraph 29 by Vijnaneshwar) then there is a tween the statement of the law in Hanoomanpersaud's case a ment of the law contained in Raj Brij Narain's case. Their L fine the authority of the manager to a case of compelling n

In my opinion there is no conflict between Hanoomanp and Raja Birj Narain's case. The benefit to be conferred page 423 of the report in Hanoomanpersaud's case is a benefit character as has been described in the Mitakshara as "for th family" and which has been further explained in Mitakshar support of the family render it necessary." That this is so from the illustrations given by their Lordships themselves in persaud's case and in subsequent cases.

In Hanoomanpersaud's case the illustrations given by Council were "the actual pressure on the estate" and "the averted". These were really explained by the words tha namely, "or the benefit to be conferred upon it, in the partic is the thing to be regarded." According to my reading of their Lordships described the two instances quoted, namely, t and the "danger" as two instances where by their removal, be conferred on the estate.

This idea will be made clearer from a more recent cas their Lordships, nemely, Palaniappa Chetty v. Sreemat De In this case which was a case of a Mahant burdening the Ma their Lordships are reported to have said at page 718:

> It is impossible, their Lordships think, to give a precise d (benefit) applicable to all cases, and they do not attempt t preservation, however, of the estate from extinction, the d hostile litigation affecting it, the protection of it or portion or deterioration by inundations these and such like things w be benefit. The difficulty is to draw the line as to what are nections to be taken as benefits and what not.

It will be noticed that the three instances quoted by th were all cases where a danger was to be averted, which were necessity. The words "and such like things" used by their L templated that other instances of "benefit to the estate" were same nature as the three illustrations given. It is true, the stated, that it was difficult to draw the line, but with all respect, they were bound to say so, because it was humanly impossible to mention all cases of the necessity which may legitimately drive the manager to raise funds on the security either of the family property or of the Math property. But, in my opinion, there is nothing in the passage to indicate that their Lordships were contemplating any case in which benefit was to be conferred by adding more property to the Math or family, by alienating or by mortgaging the existing property.

[7] I. L. R. 40 Mad. 709

In Sanyasi Charan's case[8] their Lordships of the Privy Council refused to hold that a minor member of a family was bound by the liabilities that arose out of a business started by the adult member of the family, although he was the manager of it. No doubt this was a case under the Dayabhaga Law, but the principle to be applied was the same. To take the case of a common illustration, can a man who has been appointed guardian to a minor by the District Judge attempt to acquire property by raising money on the security of the minor's property? Even if the District Judge's permission for the purpose were not necessary, on general principles, such a power will be denied to the manager.

In the latest pronouncement of their Lordships of the Privy Council the same view, as was taken in Sanyasi Charan's case, was reiterated. This is the case of Benares Bank Limited v. Hari Narain[9]. This was a case in which two adult members of a joint family in which there were minors started a business and, for that purpose, borrowed some money. Their Lordships said:

> Next it was argued that a business started by the father as manager, even if new, must be regarded as ancestral. Their Lordships do not agree. It is in direct opposition to the ruling of the Board in Sanyasi Charan v. Krishna Dhan Banerji, L. R. 49 I. A. 108. The judgment in that case proceeded on the broad ground that the manager of a joint family has no power to impose upon a member of the family the risk and liability of the new business started by him. That no doubt is a Dayabhag case, but there is no distinction in principle on this subject between a case under the Dayabhag and one under the Mitakshara. The power of a manager of a joint family governed by the Mitakshara Law to alienate immovable property belonging to the family is defined in verses 27 to 29 of Chapter I of the Mitakshara. The judgment of this Court in Hanoomanpersaud Panday v. Mt. Babooee Koonweree relied on by the Bank was founded apparently on those verses. A new business, their Lordships think, is not within the purview of those verses. It does not make any difference that the manager starting the new business is the father. Their Lordships find that the balance of authority in India is in accordance with this view.

This case is an express pronouncement that the law contained in Hannoomanpersaud's case is the same law as is laid down by the Mitakshara in verses 27 to 29 of Chapter I (Section 1) of the Mitakshara, and that, therefore, a starting of a new business by the managers cannot be regarded as coming within the three cases given by Mitakshara as the cases in which a single member of the family can alienate the joint family property.

---

[8] I. L. R. 49 Cal. 56

[9] [1932] A. L. J. 714

This case, further, leaves no room to doubt what was meant by their Lordships of the Privy Council by the expression "benefit to be conferred on the estate" in Hanoomanpersaud's case. As I have said above, the five illustrations which their Lordships give, two in Hanoomanpersaud's case and three in the case of Palaniappa Chetty v. Sreemat Devasikamony[10], they all indicate cases of necessity or "compelling cause" or "necessity, the necessity being the necessity of the family", expressions used at page 101 in Brij Narain's case.

Examining then the case in view of the Hindu Law and the pronouncements of their Lordships of the Privy Council and also on general principles, it is clear that a case of raising money on the security of the joint family property for the purpose of acquiring fresh property cannot come within the three cases cited as 'cases of exception' in Paragraphs 28 to 29 of Chapter I, Section 1 of the Mitakshara.

I need hardly mention that the property being the property of several persons, one or two persons, who happened to be the adult members at the time, have no right to jeopardize it by a mortgage, especially when the raising of the money is not necessary for the support of the family or for avoidance of a calamity affecting the whole family or for performing the funerals of a deceased member of the family. If any adult member thinks that it would be conducive to the interests of the family or himself to acquire more property, he is at liberty to have a partition effected and he can proceed as he likes by raising money on the security of his own share. The funds which are regarded as the funds for the support of the living and the persons in the wombs of their mothers and those who are yet unbegotten cannot be utilised on the off-chance of doing good to the family.

It was argued that a self-acquisition might be made a part of the joint family, by the acquired property being thrown into the joint stock, and that, therefore, when that property has gone in to the joint stock, it should be open to the manager to raise money on the security of the family property in order to benefit the thing which has become now the joint family property. By way of illustration it is said, "suppose the father with minor sons starts a business and makes money; he can make what was his own separate business the family business by throwing that business into the common stock." But the business can be thrown into the common stock only in the sense that the father declares that it is no longer his separate property but it is the property of himself and his minor sons. We may assume that the consent which would be necessary to accept a property given by one to another may be supplied in this case of minor sons by the father himself. But this gift, by the method of throwing the business into the common stock, will not and should not allow the manager, even if he be the father, to utilise the joint family property, which, it must be remembered, is a fund for the support of the existing and yet-to-be-born members of the family. That this is so has now been clearly pronounced by their Lordships of the Privy Council in the case of Benares Bank v. Hari Narain.

Having then dealt with the case on the basis of Hindu Law, on the basis of Privy Council rulings and on the basis of general principles, let us

---

[10] I. L. R. 40 Mad. 709

Civil

1932

Amraj Singh v. Shambhu Singh

Mukerji, J.

look to the decisions of our High Court. I may mention here that no case of any other High Court has been cited to us.

Going to earlier cases, we find that in Nathu v. Kundan[11] a manager who was the father was allowed to mortgage the family property in order to pay the price of a pre-empted property on the ground that the pre-emption decree created a "debt" of the father. With all respect I am unable to accept this view. It is neither a debt nor an antecedent debt. The money had not been borrowed in any sense of the word. The liability had no doubt been contracted, but that was a liability which cannot be called a debt. The price which a man has to pay for a property agreed to be purchased is not a debt at all, at any rate till the property has already come into the hands of the purchaser and the price remains unpaid. In that case it might be said that the purchaser owes money, and, therefore, a debt to the seller. In the case of a pre-emption the property is to be obtained only on payment and if no payment is made, the property cannot be got. A similar view was taken in the case of Bhup Singh v. Chedda Singh[12]. The case is to be distinguished because there was a clear finding that the purchase was to be beneficial to the family and the mortgagee who had advanced the money had made such inquiries as would result in his holding a good mortgage. No such circumstances appear in this case. It is a simple case of pre-emption.

The view taken in Nathu's case and which had been followed in the case of Kapildeo v. Thakur Prasad[13] was dissented from in the case of Chaturbhuj v. Govind Ram[14]. The learned Judges held that the pre-emption money was not an antecedent debt and would not support a transfer of the family property.

The same view was taken in Sankar Sahai v. Bechu Ram[15] and it was remarked that the benefit to be conferred mentioned in Hanoomanpersaud's case was a benefit of a "defensive character." This view, taken in later cases, as regards pre-emption, was again taken by a Bench of this Court of which I was a member, in Kishen Sahai v. Raghunath Singh[16].

It was urged that the Full Bench decision in Jagat Narain v. Mathura Das[17] has really disapproved of the opinion that the benefit to the estate must be of a 'defensive' nature. As pointed out by me in the case of Kishen Sahai v. Raghunath Singh, the decision ultimately arrived at by the Full Bench on the facts of the case before them might have been arrived at without laying down that the "benefit to be conferred" need not be of a defensive character, for the facts brought the case within the purview of the decision of the case of Sankar Sahai v. Bechu Ram where it was laid down that the benefit was to be of a defensive character. The facts of the Full Bench case were that the property that was sold by the adult members of the family was situated 19 miles away from the home of the family and it was very difficult for them to manage the property successfully and to the benefit of the family. If the property was not yielding anything, we may say that the sale was made for the support of the family, for the property from its situation, did not support the

---

[11] I. L. R. 33 All. 242

[12] I. L. R. 42 All. 597

[13] I. L. R. 36 All. 17

[14] I. L. R. 45 All. 407

[15] I. L. R. 47 All. 381

[16] I. L. R. 51 All. 473

[17] I. L. R. 50 All. 969

Mukerji, J.

family. However, without drawing this distinction, it must now be admitted that the authority of the Full Bench case has been entirely destroyed by reason of the decision in the case of the Benares Bank v. Hari Narain. The learned Judges of the Full Bench were requested to consider the law as laid down in the Mitakshara, but they refused to do so. At page 973 of the report the learned Judges are said to have remarked:

> We were invited to consider passages from the Mitakshara but their Lordships had those passages before them and they interpreted them in certain language and that language we must and do of course readily accept.

The interpretation referred to was the interpretation contained in Hanoomanpersaud's case. If the learned Judges had read the Mitakshara with the interpretation put on it by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Hanoomanpersaud's case, I have not the least doubt that they would have arrived at the same conclusion at which I have arrived. With all respect, it was not right to ignore the very source of the law, the Mitakshara, and to try to read the gloss although the gloss was put by their Lordships of the Privy Council as if it were the language of a statute. I have done my best to explain with reference to the Mitakshara what their Lordships meant by "benefit to be conferred", and now as their Lordships themselves have again interpreted the Mitakshara in the case of the Benares Bank, little room is left to doubt that their Lordships never meant to depart from the strict law laid down by Vijnaneshwar. In my opinion we should now formally overrule the case of Jagat Narain v. Mathura Das.

I hold that the mortgage in suit was not within the authority of the executants and that it is not enforceable against the family property mortgaged.

King, J.

KING, J.—I agree that the mortgage is not binding upon the joint family property.

In the first place, the loan was not taken to discharge an antecedent debt. The question of "antecedent debt" arises in this case, because the contesting defendants are the sons of Tulshi Prasad Singh, one of the mortgagors. The pre-emption decree gave to the pre-emptors the option of acquiring certain zamindari property upon payment of a certain sum of money within a specified time. The pre-emptors were not under any legal liability to pay the pre-emption money. Therefore it was not a debt. I agreed to the view taken on this point in Chaturbhuj v. Govind Ram[18] and in Shankar Sahai v. Bechu Ram[19] and in Kishan Sahai v. Raghunath Singh[20] and respectfully dissent from the decision in Nathu v. Kundan Lal[21]. The case of Kapildeo v. Thakur Prasad[22] is distinguishable as in that case the mortgagor had bound himself under penalty to deposit in court a certain sum of money by a certain date.

In the second place, it is not proved that the loan was taken for legal necessity. There is no allegation that the acquisition of the property, by exercising the right of pre-emption, was necessary for the support of the

---

[18] I. L. R. 45 All. 407
[19] I. L. R. 47 All. 381
[20] I. L. R. 51 All. 473
[21] I. L. R. 33 All. 242
[22] I. L. R. 36 All. 17

Civil

1932

Amraj Singh
v.
Shambhu Singh

King, J.

family; or that the would-be purchaser is an implacable and unscrupulous enemy of the family who would, by buying the property, be in a position to work mischief to the family and to imperil their enjoyment of their ancestral estate. I am not prepared to hold that the acquisition of new property, by pre-emption or otherwise, can in no circumstances be held to be justified by legal necessity. In Chotkanu Lal v. Ganga Singh[23] a bench of this court held, upon the facts of that case, that where a loan had been taken, upon a mortgage of joint family property, for the purpose of satisfying a pre-emption decree, the loan must be regarded as taken for legal necessity, because it was necessary to exercise the right of pre-emption in order to safeguard the interest of the pre-emptor's family. In the present case, however, no sort of necessity for the loan has been established.

In the third place, it is not proved that the loan was taken for the benefit of the estate. In certain circumstances it might be held that the acquisition of new property by pre-emption was a beneficial and purdent act such as would justify a mortgage of joint family property by the manager. But the facts showing that the transaction was beneficial and prudent must be proved. I cannot accede to the contention that the acquisition of new zamindari property, with money raised upon a mortgage, must necessarily benefit the estate. It might be prudent and beneficial to acquire certain property for Rs.1,000 but neither prudent nor beneficial to acquire the same property for Rs.3,000. Then again the property in question might have a special value to the family owing to its position. Its acquisition by the family might promote the profitable enjoyment of their ancestral estate, and its acquisition by an outsider, especially by a hostile outsider, might be harmful to the interests of the family. In the present case, no facts have been brought to our notice from which we could conclude that the acquisition of the new property, by borrowed money, was a prudent act and beneficial to the family.

Certain cases have been cited before us, e.g., Tula Ram v. Tulshi Ram[24], Jado Singh v. Nathu Singh[25] and Jagat Narain v. Mathura Das[26] in which it was held that an alienation of joint family property by a manager, for the purpose of buying new property, was valid and binding upon the estate. The reason in each case was that the transaction was prudent and beneficial to the estate or family. These decisions have no application to the facts of the present case.

If it had been found in the present case that the acquisition of the new property by pre-emption was "for the benefit of the estate" (in the plain and ordinary meaning of that expression) and such as a prudent owner would make in order to benefit the estate, then we should have had occasion to consider certain further important questions, e.g., whether the rule laid down in Hanoomanpershaud Panday's case, that a manager can charge the estate for the benefit of the estate (as well as "in case of need"), has been tacitly overruled or dissented from in Birj Narain's case; or whether the expression "for the benefit of the estate" should be given a very restricted meaning, so as to apply only to transaction of a "defen-

---

[23] A. I. R. 1927 All. 219

[24] I. L. R. 42 All. 559

[25] I. L. R. 48 All. 593

[26] I. L. R. 50 All. 969

Civil

1932

Amraj Singh v. Shambhu Singh

King, J.

sive" nature, practically co-extensive only with transactions justifiable also by legal necessity.

But in the present case the trial court has found that the transaction was not for the benefit of the estate, and all the members of this Bench have concurred in that finding. We also agree that the loan was not taken for legal necessity or for discharging an antecedent debt. On these findings I think the appeal is concluded. The further questions, suggested above, do not arise and therefore I refrain from expressing any opinion on them. I would only add that I agree with Sulaiman, C. J. that the authority of the Full Bench ruling in Jagat Narain v. Mathura Das[27] has not been shaken by the decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council in the Benares Bank Ltd. v. Hari Narain. The two cases are clearly distinguishable upon the essential facts. In the latter case the loan was taken for starting a new business, and it was not even argued and presumably therefore it was not even arguable upon the facts that it was a prudent transaction, or for the benefit of the estate. In the Full Bench case the loan was taken for a totally different purpose, and it was held that the transaction was prudent and beneficial.

I agree that the appeal should be dismissed.

By the Court—We dismiss this appeal but without any order as to costs as no one appears for the respondents.

Appeal dismissed.

[27] I. L. R. 50 All. 969

Civil

1932

June 25

King, J.

PARMESHAR KURMI and another (Plaintiffs)

versus

BAKHTAWAR PANDE and others (Defendants)*

Court Fees Act (VII of 1870), Schedule I, Art. 5—Court-fee on application for review—Calculation—Basis of—Effect of U. P. Stamp Act, 1932.

The court-fee on the application for review must be calculated on the basis of the fee leviable on the memorandum of appeal according to the law in force when the memorandum was filed.

Review of judgment against the order of the Hon'ble Mr. Justice Mukerji and Mr. Justice Bennet.

Haribans Sahai and B. Malik for the applicants.

The following judgment was delivered by

King, J.

King, J.—This reference raises the question of the proper interpretation of Schedule I, Art. 5 of the Court fees Act, 1870.

The application for review of judgment was made on May 13, 1932. The judgment to be reviewed is dated February 16, 1932, and the memorandum of appeal, on which the judgment was passed, was filed on February 5, 1932.

The court-fee leviable on the application for review is governed by Art. 5 and is therefore "one-half of the fee leviable on the memorandum of appeal."

If the words are construed in their plain and ordinary meaning we must hold that the proper fee is one-half of the fee leviable on the memorandum of appeal which was filed on February 5, 1932, i.e., one-half of Rs.295. On this interpretation the proper court-fee has been paid.

*Stamp Ref. in S. A. 169 of 1930

The Court Fees Act has been amended in its application to the United Provinces by an amending Act which came into force on May 1, 1932. Under this amending Act the scale of ad valorem fees has been enhanced. In my opinion the amending Act does not affect the amount of fee leviable on the application for review. The memorandum of appeal, which determines the fee leviable on the application for review, was filed before the amending Act came into force. The question is what fee was leviable on the memorandum of appeal at the time when it was filed. This question is not affected by the subsequent commencement of the amending Act.

Precisely the same question arose in Nandi Lal Agrani v. Jogendra Chandra[1]. The question was fully discussed by the learned Judges who held that the fee on the application for review must be calculated on the basis of the fee leviable on the memorandum of appeal according to the law in force when the memorandum was filed. I agree to the reasoning and the conclusions of the learned Judges and hold that the proper court-fee has been paid.

[1] 28 Cal. W. C. 403

PRIVY COUNCIL

MOHAMMAD AFZAL KHAN (Plaintiff)

versus

ABDUL RAHMAN AND OTHERS (Defendants)*

Civil
1932
July 14
Lord Wright
Sir Lancelot Sanderson
Sir Dinshah Mulla

Co-sharers—Mortgage by one, of his undivided share—Subsequent partition between—Mortgage applies only to property allotted to mortgagor—Civil Procedure Code, Sec. 64—Partition of undivided property made through award—Subsequently filed in court—Not a private transfer.

> Where one of two or more co-sharers mortgages his undivided share in some of the properties held jointly by them, the mortgagee takes the security subject to the right of the other co-sharers to enforce a partition and thereby to convert what was an undivided share of the whole into a definite portion held in severalty. If the mortgage, therefore, is followed by a partition, and the mortgaged properties are allotted to the other co-sharers, they take those properties, in the absence of fraud, free from the mortgage, and the mortgagee can proceed only against the properties allotted to the mortgagor in substitution of his undivided share. Byjnath Lall v. Ramoodeen Chowdry, [1874] L. R. 1 Ind. App. 106 followed. Such partition effected by an award made out of court which was subsequently filed in court and a decree passed thereon, does not amount to a private transfer within the meaning of Section 64 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

Appeal from a decision of the Court of the Judicial Commissioner of the North-West Frontier Province.

A. M. Dunne, K.C., Narasimham and V. Shrinivas Rao for the appellant.

L. De'Gruyther, K.C. and J. M. Parikh for the respondents.

*P. C. A. 102 of 1931

The following judgment was delivered by

SIR DINSHAH MULLA—The questions involved in this appeal relate to the effect of a partition of joint properties effected by a decree, where the decree is one made on an award, on a prior mortgage and a prior attachment of the share of one of the co-owners in some of the properties.

Haji Malik Rahman, a Mahommedan, died in or about 1910, leaving a will dated June 12, 1910, whereby he devised certain immovable properties to his son Malik Mohib Ali, who is the third respondent in this appeal, and his two grandsons Sardar Ali and Sabz Ali, in three equal shares. On the death of Haji Malik Rahman, the third respondent entered into possession of the properties and recovered the rents and profits thereof on behalf of the family. Sabz Ali died in 1914 leaving two children, who are the first and second respondents in this appeal, and on his death his one-third share in the above-mentioned properties passed to them. The first and second respondents were both minors at the date of their father's death and also at the date of the suit out of which the present appeal arises.

On April 26, 1923, the third respondent and his son Sardar Ali executed a mortgage of some of the properties in favour of the appellant to secure payment of Rs.1,00,000, lent and advanced to them by the appellant. The mortgage purported to be one with possession.

On the same day the appellant granted a lease of the mortgaged properties to the mortgagors at an annual rent of Rs.12,000.

Some time thereafter Sardar Ali died without leaving any issue, and on his death his one-third share passed to his father, the third respondent, as his heir. The third respondent thus became entitled to a two-thirds share in the properties, the remaining one-third being the share of the first and second respondents.

The rent under the lease fell into arrear, and the appellant obtained three decrees for arrears for various periods against the third respondent, and in execution of the decrees attached four immovable properties, being properties other than those comprised in the mortgage, but forming part of the properties bequeathed by the will of Haji Malik Rahman.

Subsequently, on August 19, 1926, Musammat Tajwar Sultan was appointed guardian of the person and property of the first and second respondents. Soon after her appointment she demanded their one-third share in all the properties from the third respondent. This was followed by a reference to arbitration on September 4, 1926, and an award was made on January 7, 1927. The third respondent made a statement before the arbitrators, but he did not disclose the mortgage to them. By their award the arbitrators awarded to the first and second respondents in lieu of their one-third share and the mesne profits thereof (1) some of the properties comprised in the mortgage, and (2) all the four properties attached as aforesaid. On February 10, 1927, a decree for partition was passed in terms of the award under Clause 21 of Schedule II of the Civil Procedure Code, and the first and second respondents were in execution of the decree put in possession of the properties allotted to them. It is upon the effect of this award and decree that the decision

Civil

1932

Moham-mad Afzal Khan v. Abdul Rahman

Sir Dinshah Mulla

of the questions in this appeal depends.

Subsequently an application was made on behalf of the first and second respondents under Order 21, Rule 58, of the Code, to release the four properties from attachment, and the attachment was raised by an order dated January 18, 1928.

Thereupon, on December 13, 1928, the appellant brought the suit out of which this appeal arises in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Peshawar to establish his right to attach the two-thirds share of the third respondent in the four properties, and for a declaration that he was entitled to proceed against the mortgaged properties to the extent of the two-thirds share of the third respondent in them. The plaint stated that the arbitration proceedings were collusive, and that even if they were not, neither the award nor the decree made on it could affect the appellant's right under the mortgage or the attachment, as they both were of a date prior to the reference to arbitration. It would appear from the plaint that the appellant conceded that neither the mortgage nor the attachment was binding on the one-third share of the first and second respondents.

The Subordinate Judge held that the arbitration proceedings were collusive, and passed a decree for the appellant on November 22, 1929.

On appeal the Court of the Judicial Commissioner, North-West Frontier Province, considered that the suit was one under Order 21, Rule 63, of the Code, and that no claim in respect of the mortgage could be included in such a suit, and the claim was accordingly not entertained. As to the attachment they held that there was no evidence to show that the award was obtained by fraud, and that the order releasing the properties from attachment was therefore correct. Accordingly they reversed the decree of the Subordinate Judge, and dismissed the plaintiff's suit. It is from this decree that the present appeal to His Majesty in Council has been brought.

Two contentions were raised on behalf of the appellant before their Lordships. The first was that where one of several co-sharers mortgages his undivided share in some of the properties held jointly by them, and the properties so mortgaged are allotted on a partition by arbitration without the intervention of the Court to the other co-sharers, the partition, being subsequent in date to the mortgage, cannot affect the rights of the mortgagee to enforce his charge against the share of the mortgagor in the mortgaged properties. The second was that where the interest of one of several co-sharers in some of the properties held jointly by them is attached in execution of a decree against him, and those properties are subsequently allotted to the other co-sharers on a partition by arbitration without the intervention of the Court, a transfer by the judgment-debtor of the interest so attached to the other co-sharers is a private transfer within the meaning of Section 64 of the Civil Procedure Code, and therefore void as against the claim of the attaching creditor, even if the transfer was made pursuant to a decree passed on the award. It was not contended before their Lordships that the partition was unfair or that it was made with the object of defrauding the appellant.

The respondents abandoned before their Lordships the contention as to misjoinder of claims that had prevailed with the Appellate Court, and invited their Lordships to decide the question in respect of the mortgage on its merits.

As regards the first point, their Lordships are of opinion that where one of two or more co-sharers mortgages his undivided share in some of the properties held jointly by them, the mortgagee takes the security subject to the right of the other co-sharers to enforce a partition and thereby to convert what was an undivided share of the whole into a defined portion held in severalty. If the mortgage, therefore, is followed by a partition, and the mortgaged properties are allotted to the other co-sharers, they take those properties, in the absence of fraud, free from the mortgage, and the mortgagee can proceed only against the properties allotted to the mortgagor in substitution of his undivided share. This was the view taken by the Board in Baijnath Lall v. Ramoodeen Chowdry[1]. In that case the partition was made by the Collector under Regulation XIX of 1814 (Bengal), and the mortgagee was seeking to enforce his remedy not against the properties mortgaged to him, but against the properties which had been allotted to the mortgagor in lieu of his undivided share; but the Board held that not only he had a right to do so, but that it was in the circumstances of the case his sole right, and that he could not successfully have sought to charge any other parcel of the estate in the hands of any of the former co-sharers. Their Lordships think that the principle enunciated in that case applies equally to a partition by arbitration such as the one in the present case. Their Lordships are therefore of opinion that the appellant is not entitled to enforce his charge against the properties allotted to the first and second respondents. The third respondent (the mortgagor) has not appeared before their Lordships, and their Lordships express no opinion as to any other rights which the appellant may have in respect of his mortgage.

It was brought to their Lordships' notice that on October 27, 1926, a suit had been brought by the appellant on the mortgage in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Peshawar, and that a decree for money was passed in his favour on February 27, 1928, which was altered into a mortgage decree on January 29, 1931. No argument was addressed to their Lordships as to the effect of these proceedings on the present suit, and their Lordships express no opinion as to this either.

The second question falls to be decided under Section 64 of the Civil Procedure Code, which is as follows:—

> Where an attachment has been made, any private transfer or delivery of the property attached or of any interest therein contrary to such attachment, shall be void as against all claims enforceable under the attachment.

A decree for partition may be made (1) in a suit for partition heard and decided by the Court itself; or (2) it may be made on an award in a similar suit, where the matters in difference between the parties to the suit are referred to arbitration by an order of the Court made on the application of the parties; or (3) it may be made on an award, where

---

[1] [1874] L. R. 1 Ind. App. 106

Civil

1932

Mohammad Afzal Khan
v.
Abdul Rahman

Sir Dinshah Mulla

the matters in difference are referred to arbitration without the intervention of the Court, as in the present case.

It was not disputed before their Lordships that a transfer of property made pursuant to a decree in the first two cases was not a "private" transfer. But it was argued that a transfer made pursuant to a decree in the third case stands on a different footing, for the proceedings in that case originate not with a suit but with a private agreement to refer, and the transfer, therefore, must be regarded as a private transfer within the meaning of Section 64 and void as against the attaching creditor. Their Lordships are unable to accept this argument. They think that a transfer made pursuant to a decree in the third case is as much a transfer under an order of the Court as a transfer in the first two cases, and not a private transfer. As in the first two cases, so in the third, if the party against whom the decree is passed fails to transfer the property as required by the decree, the transfer may be enforced by proceedings in execution, and this is what actually happened in the present case. The third respondent did not deliver possession to the first and second respondents of the properties allotted to them under the decree until after execution had been taken out against him. Such a transfer cannot be said to be a private transfer within the meaning of Section 64, because the initial step which led eventually to the decree was not a suit for partition, but an agreement to refer the question of partition to arbitration. Their Lordships, therefore, consider that the appellant is not entitled to proceed in execution against the properties allotted to the first and second respondents.

In the result, their Lordships are of opinion that this appeal fails, and that it should be dismissed, and their Lordships will humbly advise His Majesty accordingly. The appellant must pay the costs of the first and second respondents before this Board.

Appeal dismissed

Ram Singh Mehra—Solicitor for the appellant.
T. L. Wilson and Co.—Solicitors for the respondents.

Civil

1932

June 21

Lord Thankerton
Sir John Wallis
Sir George Lowndes

LASA DIN (Plaintiff)
versus
GULAB KUNWAR AND OTHERS (Defendants)*

Limitation Act, Art. 132—Mortgage deed—Stipulated period—Money becomes due after expiry of.

A mortgage deed provided that the principal sum would be paid within 6 years and the stipulated interest every year and further that in case of default in punctual payment of interest the mortgagee shall, within the expiry of the stipulated period of 6 years, have power to realise the entire mortgage money and the remaining interest and compound interest due to him in a lump sum through court by sale of the mortgage property. There was default in payment of interest, but the mortgagee did not avail himself of the option given to him. He sued upon the mortgage after 12 years from the date of such default but within 12 years from the date of the expiry of the stipulated period of six years. Held, that

---

*P. C. A. 63 of 1931

CIVIL

1932

LASA DIN v. GULAB KUNWAR

the suit was within time. Money became due within the meaning of Article 132 only after the expiry of six years. Gaya Din v. Jhamman Lal, I. L. R. 37 All. 400 and Shib Dayal v. Meharban, I. L. R. 45 All. 27 overruled.

APPEAL from a decision of the Chief Court of Oudh at Lucknow.

J. M. Parikh for the appellant.

The other side was not represented.

The following judgment was delivered by

Sir George Lowndes

SIR GEORGE LOWNDES—The only question in this appeal is as to the date upon which the principal money became due under a mortgage of certain immovable property in the Lucknow District. Upon this hangs an important question of limitation, and the issue of the appeal.

The mortgage is dated July 26, 1912, and purports to be for six years from that date. Apart, therefore, from the provisions of a particular clause in the deed, to be presently referred to, the mortgage money would have become due on July 26, 1918, and under Art. 132 of the first schedule to the Limitation Act, 1908, the mortgagee would have a further 12 years in which to bring his suit. The article runs as follows:—

Description of suit	Period of limitation	Time from which period begins to run
132.—To enforce payment of money charged upon immovable property.	Twelve years.	When the money sued for becomes due.

The appellant is the mortgagee. He brought a suit praying for a mortgage decree in the usual form on February 28, 1928, i.e., within 12 years from July 26, 1918. He joined as defendants the widow of the mortgagor, who was then dead, and certain puisne encumbrancers, who alone defended the suit. They are respondents to this appeal, but have not been represented before the Board.

The main defence was limitation. The Subordinate Judge of Lucknow, in whose Court the suit was instituted, held that it was out of time, and this decision was affirmed on appeal, first by the District Judge and then by the Chief Court of Oudh. The appellant comes before the Board upon special leave. Other issues raised at the hearing of the suit in the Court of the Subordinate Judge have not been tried.

By the mortgage deed the mortgagor covenanted to pay interest yearly at 12 per cent, and that if the interest for any year was not paid, it should be added to the principal and carry interest at the same rate. Then followed the clause upon which the defence was founded:—

> In case of default, the said creditor shall, at all times, within and after the expiry of the stipulated period of six years aforesaid, have the power to realise the entire mortgage money and the remaining interest and compound interest due to him, in a lump sum, through Court, by attachment and sale of the said mortgaged share, as well as from my person and all other kind of my property, both movable and immovable, > together with costs of Court, and I, my heirs, relations and representatives shall have no occasion for objection and refusal; that the aforesaid rate of interest, fixed by me, shall stand within and after the stipulated period and after the decree till payment of the entire demand hereunder and that I shall at no time demand reduction in interest.

The mortgagor defaulted in the payment of interest for the first year, and it was contended for the defendants that immediately upon this default the principal moneys became due within the meaning of the article of the Limitation Act set out above, and consequently that the statutory period of 12 years had expired before the institution of the suit. The question their Lordships have to determine is whether this view, upon which the judgments under appeal are all based, is correct.

Clauses of this nature in mortgage deeds have been before the Indian Courts in many cases, and there has been a considerable divergence of judicial opinion as to their effect upon limitation. The Chief Court of Oudh, following a majority decision of the Allahabad Full Bench in 1915, had more than once held that in such cases time ran against the mortgagee from the date of the first default, and the judgments in the present case add little to the elucidation of this problem. The Subordinate Judge thought it clear that the clause gave the mortgagee an option either to sue at once or to wait till the expiry of the mortgage term, but he held himself concluded by authority on the question of limitation. The District Judge thought there was no option, and that the mortgagee "was bound to sue" immediately upon the default. In the Chief Court, Srivastava, J. noted the conflict of authority, and certain observations of this Board in a recent case, which seemed to throw doubt upon the soundness of the Allahabad decision, but thought it his duty to adhere to the decisions of his own Court so long as they were not definitely overruled. Wazir Hasan, J. agreed, but expressed himself rather more confidently on the principle involved. In his opinion, the right of the mortgagee to enforce payment on default made the principal money immediately payable within the meaning of Section 60 of the Transfer of Property Act, 1882, and therefore entitled the mortgagor to redeem regardless of the six years' term.

The principal authority in favour of the view taken by the Chief Court is the Full Bench case already referred to, Gaya Din v. Jhumman Lal[1], in which the opinions of Richards, C. J. and Tudball, J. prevailed over that of Banerji, J. The gist of the majority judgments was that the money became "due" as soon as it could be legally demanded, i.e., upon the first default. The Chief Justice fortified himself by extracts from the judgments of the Court of Appeal in this country in Reeves v. Butcher[2], which he seems to have regarded as decisive. Banerji, J. took the opposite view. He thought the clause in question was clearly inserted for the benefit of the creditor, and that it was at his option to treat the money as being immediately due or not. He referred to previous Allahabad decisions which seem to support his argument, and in particular to a dictum of this Board in a case decided under the Limitation Act XIV of 1859, which will be noted presently.

[1] I. L. R. 37 All. 400

[2] [1891] 2 Q. B. 509

CIVIL

1932

LASA DIN
v.
GULAB
KUNWAR

Sir George Lowndes

Gaya Din's case seems to have been doubted in subseqı the Allahabad Court, but was affirmed by another Full Ber Shib Dayal v. Meharban[3].

The authority of these cases is, however, in their Lordsh weakened by a more recent decision of the same High C Husain v. Chatar Bhuj[4], in which Sir Grimwood Mears, C. J refused to extend the principle beyond the limits of the d Their Lordships think that if, under a clause of this nature, money "becomes due" within the meaning of Art. 132 imme default by the mortgagor in payment of interest or of an i must equally become due upon the breach of any other condit a similar provision is attached.

Turning now to the other High Courts, their Lordships fi decision of 1896, which adopts the same line of reasoning a Sitab Chand Nahar v. Hyder Malla[5]. It has been suggested t Court ten years later in Rup Narain v. Gopi Nath[6], followe principle, which would favour the appellant, but this decisi with reference to another article of the Limitation Act, Lordships think, of no assistance in the present case. Sitab was no doubt decided under Act XV of 1877, but the wordi ticle in that Act was the same as in the Act of 1908.

No authority has been cited from Bombay*, but the H Madras (Narna v. Ammani Amma[7]), following the judgmen J. in the first of the Allahabad Full Bench cases, and the H Patna (Ganga Bishun v. Lala Raghunath[8]), have taken t view.

Similar questions have been discussed on two occasion Board, but in neither case was it necessary to decide the p fairly definite indications were given in each of the view th inclined to take.

In Juneswar Dass v. Mahabeer Singh,[9] a case falling un of 1859, a similar argument was put forward for the appe which has prevailed in the Oudh Courts and Allahabad, th based upon the application of a six years' period of limit decision was against the appellant on the ground that th twelve years and not six. But Sir Montague Smith, who judgment of the Board, after expressing himself to this effect,

> Their Lordships must not be supposed, in coming to th give any countenance to the argument of Mr. Arath appellant] that this suit would have been barred if the lin years under cl. 16 had been applicable to it. They th construction of this bond that there would be good reaso

---

[3] I. L. R. 45 All. 27

[4] I. L. R. 50 All. 328

[5] I. L. R. 24 Cal. 281

[6] 11 Cal. W. N. 903

[7] I L. R. 39 Mad. 981

[8] I. L. R. 10 Patna 173

[9] L. R. 3 I. A. 1

*There appears to have been a case in Bombay, not in the authorised reports in Court followed Gaya Din's case but the judgment adds nothing to the reasoning Laxman Naik v. Chanbasapagowda, All Ind. Rep. 1923, (Bom.).

†NOTE.—A fuller report of the arguments appears in the Calcutta Report, I.

> that the cause of action arose within six years before the commencement of the suit.

It is, their Lordships think, worth noticing that this case was not referred to in Sitab Chand Nahar v. Hyder Malla (supra). The dictum cited was, however, much relied upon by Banerji, J. in his dissenting judgment in Gaya Din v. Jhuman Lal.

The question came up for consideration again before the Board, half a century later: Pancham v. Ansar Husain[10]. In this case the Allahabad High Court had, following the decision in Gaya Din's case, dismissed a mortgagees' suit as out of time, it not having been brought within twelve years of the mortgagor's default in payment of an instalment, which gave the mortgagees the right (as in the present case), without waiting for the expiry of the stipulated period, to enforce their security.

The judgment of the Board was delivered by Lord Blanesburgh, and the material portion of it runs as follows:—

> Applying certain previous decisions of that Court, and in particular a Full Bench decision in Gaya Din v. Jhumman Lal, I. L. R. 37 A. 400, the High Court held that under a clause in the above form a single default on the part of the mortgagors, without any act of election, cancellation or other form of response or acceptance on the part of the mortgagees and even, it would appear, against their desire, operates, eo instanti, to make the money secured by the mortgage 'become due,' so that all right of action in respect of the security is finally barred twelve years later, that is, in the present case, on February 21, 1906. All this the High Court held, notwithstanding that the mortgage is for a term certain, a provision which may be as much for the benefit of the mortgagees as of the mortgagors, and notwithstanding that the proviso is exclusively for the benefit of the mortgagees. The decision also apparently proceeds upon the view that the words of the English Limitation Act and the English decisions thereon apply without question to the words of Art. 132 of schedule to the Indian Act—a conclusion which, as it seems to their Lordships, may involve, and, on the critical point when applied to such a proviso as the present, a large assumption.
>
> Their Lordships are fully alive to the seriousness of the view so taken by the High Court, emphasised and perhaps extended as it has been by a later Full Bench decision to the same effect: see Shib Dayal v. Meharban, I. L. R. 45 A. 27. Moreover, upon the correctness of it there has been in different High Courts of India a sharp conflict of judicial opinion. It is accordingly manifestly desirable that, so soon as may be, this Board should finally pronounce not only upon the question wehther the principle of the two Allahabad decisions above referred to is correct, but also upon the further question whether, even if it is, these decisions have any application to a proviso framed as is that now in suit. Their Lordships would be reluctant, however, to pronounce on either question in the absence of full argument, and it is accordingly a satisfaction to them to find that the present case, in which they have had no assistance from the respondents can, as they think, regardless of the general question, be decided on its own special circumstances, which, apparently, the High Court was not concerned to note.

The judgment then proceeds to deal with the "special circumstances" upon which the actual decision turned; they have no relevance to the present case.

---

[10] L. R. 53 I. A. 187

It is no doubt true that the question now before the Board was advisedly left open for future discussion, but the considerations referred to by Lord Blanesburgh are of great weight, and it is difficult to find an answer to them. They clearly affected the decision in the latest Allahabad case, but though the judgment in Pancham's case was cited in the Chief Court of Oudh, the learned Judges of that Court would make no further attempt at the solution of the problem.

Under these circumstances, it is a matter of great regret to their Lordships that they should now have to pronounce upon these important and difficult questions without the assistance of counsel for the respondents. But the case has been placed before them very fully and with conspicuous fairness by Mr. Parikh, who appeared for the appellant, and they have given their most anxious consideration to all the judgments which have been referred to.

Their Lordships think that no valid distinction can be drawn between the material provisions of the deed in the present case and those upon which the judgments in the Allahabad cases were founded, and that the question to be decided is one of principle.

There can be no doubt that, as pointed out by Lord Blanesburgh, a proviso of this nature is inserted in a mortgage deed "exclusively for the benefit of the mortgagees," and that it purports to give them an option either to enforce their security at once, or, if the security is ample, to stand by their investment for the full term of the mortgage. If on the default of the mortgagor—in other words, by the breach of his contract—the mortgage money becomes immediately "due," it is clear that the intention of the parties is defeated, and that what was agreed to by them as an option in the mortgagees is, in effect, converted into an option in the mortgagor. For if the latter, after the deed has been duly executed and registered, finds that he can make a better bargain elsewhere, he has only to break his contract by refusing to pay the interest, and "eo instanti," as Lord Blanesburgh says, he is entitled to redeem. If the principal money is "due," and the stipulated term has gone out of the contract, it follows, in their Lordships' opinion, that the mortgagor can claim to repay it, as was recognised by Wazir Hasan, J. in his judgment in the Chief Court. Their Lordships think that this is an impossible result. They are not prepared to hold that the mortgagor could in this way take advantage of his own default: they do not think that upon such default he would have the right to redeem, and in their opinion the mortgage money does not "become due" within the meaning of Art. 132 of the Limitation Act until both the mortgagor's right to redeem and the mortgagee's right to enforce his security have accrued. This would, of course, also be the position if the mortgagee exercised the option reserved to him.

Their Lordships are not greatly oppressed by the authority of Reeves v. Butcher (supra). It is, they think, always dangerous to apply English decisions to the construction of an Indian Act. The clause there under consideration differed widely from that now before their Lordships, and indeed from the clauses with which the Allahabad Court had to deal; the question for decision would have fallen in India, not under Art. 132, but under Art. 75, which is in very special terms; and Section 3 of the

Civil
1932
Lasa Din
v.
Gulab
Kunwar
Sir George Lowndes

statute of James, with which the Court was concerned, made the time to run, not from the date when the money became due, but from the date when the cause of action arose. If in the Indian cases the question were "When did the mortgagee's cause of action arise?"—i.e., when did he first become entitled to sue for the relief claimed by his suit—their Lordships think that there might be much to be said in support of the Allahabad decisions. Judged by the Indian criterion, "when the money sued for became due," upon the best consideration their Lordships have been able to give to this difficult question, they think that the decision of the Chief Court of Oudh was wrong, and that they should have held that the appellant's suit was within time.

For these reasons their Lordships will humbly advise His Majesty that this appeal should be allowed; that the decrees of all the Oudh Courts should be set aside; and that the suit should be remitted to the Court of the Subordinate Judge for trial of the other issues which have not been decided. The respondents 2-6 must pay the costs of the appellant in both the District Court and the Chief Court, and before this Board. All other costs of the suit will be dealt with upon the further trial.

Appeal allowed

T. L. Wilson and Co.—Solicitors for the appellant.

SHIBA PRASAD SINGH (Defendant)
versus
PRAYAG KUMARI DEBI AND OTHERS (Plaintiffs)*

Civil
1932
April 7
Lord Blanesburgh
Lord Thankerton
Lord Salvesen
Sir John Wallis
Sir Dinshah Mulla

Hindu Law—Impartible estate—Ancestral—Junior members of family—Right of survivorship for purposes of succession—Separation from, how effected—Incorporation of other acquired with impartible estate—Possible and how effected—Incorporation of movables.

In the case of ordinary joint family property the members of the family have (1) the right of partition, (2) the right to restrain alienations by the head of the family except for necessity, (3) the right of maintenance and (4) the right of survivorship. The first of these rights cannot exist in case of an impartible estate, though ancestral, from the very nature of the estate. The second is incompatible with the custom of impartibility and so also the third. To this extent the general law of the Mitakshara has been superseded by custom and the impartible estate, though ancestral is clothed with the incidents of self-acquired and separate property. But the right of survivorship is not inconsistent with the custom of impartibility and still remains. To this extent therefore the estate still retains its character of joint family property and its devolution is governed by the general Mitakshara law applicable to such property. Though the other rights which a coparcener acquires by birth in joint family property no longer exists, the birth-right of the senior member to take by survivorship still remains. This right is not mere spes successionis but a right which is capable of being renounced and surrendered. In order to establish that a family governed by Mitakshara in which there is an ancestral impartible estate has ceased to be joint, it is necessary to prove an intention, express or implied on the part of the junior members of the family to renounce their right of succession to the estate. Such a renunciation is not to be presumed merely from mere separation in food and worship.

---

*P. C. A. 7 of 1930

On a question whether a member of a joint family has incorporated his self-acquired property with the joint family property, the crucial test is intention and the intention may be expressed by the blending of income or in some other way. It may be done by declaring expressly or impliedly his intention to do so. On the same principle a member of a joint family who is the holder of an impartible estate, may declare his intention to incorporate his self-acquired property with the impartible estate. By so doing he expresses his intention to alter the course of devolution of the self-acquired property. Such incorporation of the self-acquired property will follow the impartible property under the law and be heritable by the rule of primogeniture. The power to incorporate being a power inherent in every Hindu owner applies as well to a customary impartible Raj unless it is excluded by statute or custom; but where a Raj is an estate granted by the Crown, its boundaries cannot be enlarged by any additions being made to it so as to make it descend under the law by the rule of primogeniture. Movable property cannot however form accretion to an ancestral impartible Raj, nor can even the income of such an estate be an accretion to the estate. The income when received is the absolute property of the owner of the impartible estate. It does not attach to the estate as does the income of an ordinary ancestral estate attach to that estate.

Case-law discussed at length.

APPEAL from a decision of the High Court of Judicature at Fort William in Bengal.

L. DeGruyther, K.C., A. M. Dunne, K.C., J. M. Parikh and Gupta for the appellant.

W. Upjohn, K.C. and B. Dube, K.C. for the respondents.

The following judgment was delivered by

Sir Dinshah Mulla

SIR DINSHAH MULLA—The questions involved in these appeals relate to the right of succession to an estate known as the Jheria Raj, situated in the district of Manbhum, and other property, movable and immovable, left by Raja Durga Prasad.

The suit out of which the appeals arise was instituted by the widows of Raja Durga Prasad in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of the 24-Perganas against Shiba Prasad Singh, a distant agnatic relation of the Raja, to recover the estate and other property. On November 3, 1921, the Subordinate Judge passed a decree whereby he allowed the suit in part and dismissed it as to the rest. Both parties appealed to the High Court at Calcutta, and the High Court by its decree dated August 17, 1925, allowed the appeals in part. From this decree of the High Court both parties have appealed to His Majesty in Council.

The parties are governed by the Mitakshara School of Hindu law. The Raj is ancient and ancestral, and it is impartible by custom, and succession to it is governed by the rule of lineal primogeniture. The last holder of the estate was Raja Durga Prasad, who died childless on March 7, 1916, leaving three widows and Shiba Prasad Singh, his second cousin.

The pedigree of the family, so far as it is necessary for the determination of the appeals, is as below:—

CIVIL

1932

SHIBA PRASAD SINGH v. PRAYAG KUMARI DEBI

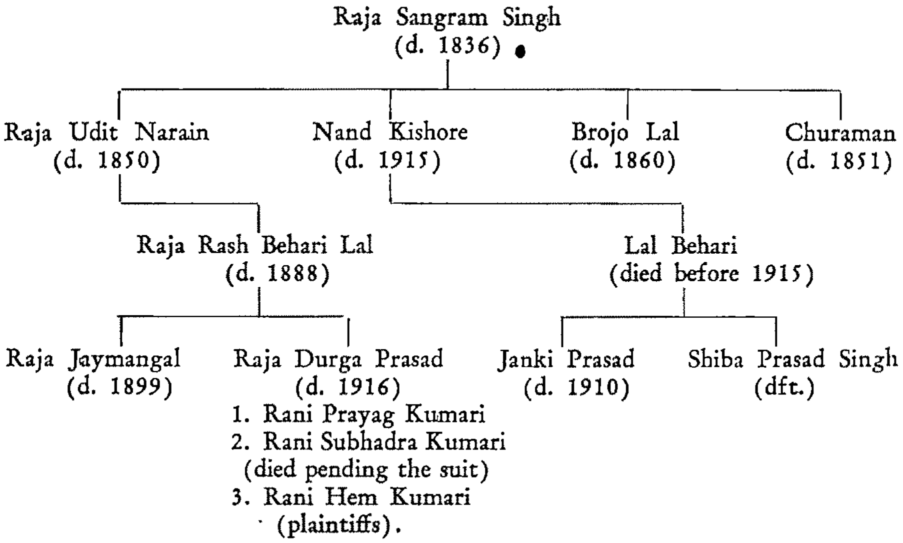
Sir Dinshah Mulla



Raja Sangram Singh
(d. 1836)
Raja Udit Narain
(d. 1850)
Nand Kishore
(d. 1915)
Brojo Lal
(d. 1860)
Churaman
(d. 1851)
Raja Rash Behari Lal
(d. 1888)
Lal Behari
(died before 1915)
Raja Jaymangal
(d. 1899)
Raja Durga Prasad
(d. 1916)
1. Rani Prayag Kumari
2. Rani Subhadra Kumari
(died pending the suit)
3. Rani Hem Kumari
(plaintiffs).
Janki Prasad
(d. 1910)
Shiba Prasad Singh
(dft.)

Raja Sangram Singh died in 1836, leaving four sons. The Raj then devolved successively on Raja Udit Narain, Raja Rash Behari Lal, Raja Jaymangal, and Raja Durga Prasad. Shiba Prasad Singh is the great-grandson of Raja Sangram Singh.

On August 27, 1915, Raja Durga Prasad made a will whereby he purported to dispose of some of the properties in dispute. The will is governed by the Hindu Wills Act, 1870. Several sections of the Indian Succession Act, 1865, are thereby made applicable to wills governed by the Act. Amongst them is Section 187, which provides that "no right as executor or legatee can be established in any Court of Justice, unless a Court of competent jurisdiction in British India shall have granted probate of the will under which the right is claimed, or shall have granted letters of administration with the will . . . annexed." No executor has been appointed under the will of Raja Durga Prasad nor have any letters of administration with the will annexed been obtained by any person. None of the parties, however, to this litigation seeks to establish any right as a legatee under the will. On the contrary, both parties claimed in the Courts in India, and they claim here, on the footing of intestacy. Their Lordships have been assured by counsel in the case that no person other than the parties to these appeals is interested in the succession to any of the properties in dispute. The will, it may be observed, had been held to be genuine by both the Courts in India.

After the death of the late Raja, Shiba Prasad Singh entered into possession of the estate and other properties. Shortly afterwards disputes arose between him and the widows, and on August 5, 1916, three bantannamas were executed, one by each widow, whereby for the consideration mentioned in those writings they acknowledged Shiba Prasad Singh as the rightful successor of the late Raja, and relinquished their claim as the heirs of their husband to all properties left by him.

On March 6, 1919, the present suit was brought by the three widows against Shiba Prasad Singh. In their plaint they stated that Raja Udit

CIVIL

1932

SHIBA PRASAD SINGH v. PRAYAG KUMARI DEBI

Sir Dinshah Mulla

Narain had separaed from his brothers, that they as the heirs of their husband were entitled to succeed to the Raj and all other properties left by him, that the bantannamas were obtained by Shiba Prasad Singh by fraud and undue influence, that he had wrongfully taken possession of the Raj and the properties, and they claimed possession and other reliefs. As regards the Raj it was also alleged that if all the three widows together were not entitled to it, at least the senior widow was. The widows are hereinafter referred to as the plaintiffs and Shiba Prasad Singh as the defendant.

The properties in dispute are described in two schedules annexed to the plaint, being Schedule ka and Schedule kha, which their Lordships were told correspond to the Schedules ka and kha annexed to the decree of the Subordinate Judge. Schedule ka consists of seven items. Schedule kha contains a number of items and sub-items. It will be convenient to group these properties under the following heads:—

(1)	The impartible estate or Raj	Sch. ka, 1.
(2)	Immovable properties acquired by Raja Rash Behari Lal, the father and Raja Jaymangal, the brother, of the late Raja, and come to his hands	Sch. ka, 2-7.
(3)	Immovable properties acquired by the late Raja .	Sch. kha, 1-8.
(4)	Improvements on the Raj estate .	Sch. kha, 9-19.
(5)	Jewellery	Sch. kha, 20 (1-23).
(6)	Furnishings and equipments of the palace, etc. .	Sch. kha, 20 (24-83), etc.
(7)	Cash and deposits in banks .	Sch. kha, 21.

Besides the above, the plaintiffs claimed all other properties, both movable and immovable, left by the late Raja, which might on inquiry be found to have come to the hands of the defendant.

The defendant by his written statement denied that the bantannamas were obtained by him by fraud or undue influence. He also denied that Raja Udit Narain had separated from his brothers, and alleged that he and the late Raja were, at the time of the Raja's death, members of a joint undivided family, and he claimed the Raj by survivorship. He based his claim to the other properties on a family custom, according to which, it was alleged, all accumulations and acquisitions made by the Raja for the time being passed to his successor together with the Raj. He also claimed those properties on the alternative ground that they had been incorporated with the Raj. There was a further plea that females were excluded by custom from succession to this Raj.

The Subordinate Judge found that the bantannamas were obtained by the defendant by fraud and undue influence, and they were set aside. He also found that the two customs alleged by the defendant were not proved. On the issue whether the family was joint, he found that no separation had taken place, and that the defendant and the late Raja were members of a joint family at the time of the Raja's death. All these findings were affirmed by the High Court on appeal.

It is necessary, however, to state here a point of difference between the two Courts as regards the issue as to jointness. One of the elements considered by both the Courts in determining that issue was whether the two branches of the family were joint in worship. The Subordinate Judge found that they were. The High Court, differing from him, found that they were not, but they held that this in itself was not sufficient to constitute a complete separation, and the family, therefore, was still joint.

On his finding that the family was joint, the Subordinate Judge awarded to the defendant the impartible estate [Schedule ka, 1], on the ground that he was entitled to it by survivorship, and the improvements on the estate [Schedule kha, 9-19], on the ground that they formed part and parcel of the estate. He also awarded to the defendant the self-acquisitions of Raja Rash Behari Lal and Raja Jaymangal [Schedule ka, 2-7], on the ground that they were incorporated with the impartible estate. As to the properties acquired by the late Raja [Schedule kha, 1-8], he held that they had not been incorporated with the impartible estate, and he awarded them to the plaintiffs. This part of the decree was affirmed by the High Court, but as to items 3 to 7 of Schedule ka on different grounds. The High Court, while agreeing with the Subordinate Judge that item 2 of Schedule ka was incorporated with the estate, held that items 3 to 7 were not. They then proceeded to deal with the whole group of items 2 to 7, and said:—

> But properties Nos. 2 to 7 of Schedule ka were either the ancestral properties or properties which devolved upon Raja Durga Prasad on Raja Jaymangal's death, and we do not think they can be claimed by the plaintiffs as the self-acquisitions of Raja Durga Prasad. If Telo and the other properties which were acquired by Raja Jaymangal were not incorporated with the estate, they would devolve upon his [Raja Jaimangal's] widow, Rani Chalur Kumari, and not upon the plaintiffs. We accordingly agree with the Court below so far as properties 2 to 7 of Schedule ka are concerned.

As to the movables, the Subordinate Judge held that the plaintiffs were entitled to all the jewellery, cash and deposits in banks. He also awarded the greater part of sub-items 24 to 83 of item 20 of Schedule kha to the plaintiffs. He held that the defendant was also entitled to retain some furniture and other articles. Dealing with this part of the case, he said:—

> Plaintiffs are certainly not entitled to the furniture in the European guest house, Dheiya pleasure house, Raja's Khash Cutcherry, Sadar Cutcherry of the Raj estate, and Purulia bungalow. I also do not allow the claim for electric light, punkhas and machineries, etc., in the Rajbari, as they would follow the estate.

This part of the decree was affirmed by the High Court subject to certain variations as to sub-items 24 to 83.

The Subordinate Judge had not dealt with the plaintiffs' claim to the rents, royalties and other monies which had accrued in the lifetime of the late Raja, but had been realised by the defendant after his death. The High Court held that these belonged to the plaintiffs.

The High Court also directed an inquiry as to all other movable and immovable property that might have been left by the late Raja and had come to the defendant's hands, and ordered that it should be delivered to the plaintiffs.

From this decree of the High Court both parties have appealed to His Majesty in Council. The defendant is the appellant in the first two appeals (Nos. 71 and 72 of 1925), and the plaintiffs are the appellants in the third appeal (No. 79 of 1925).

The main contention of the plaintiffs before their Lordships was that the Courts below had erred in holding that the family was joint. They maintained that the findings of the two Courts in India on the issue as to jointness were not concurrent, and that the facts as found by them did not establish that the family was joint, but, on the contrary, that there was a separation; if so, they claimed that they as the heirs of their husband were entitled to the Raj and all other properties.

The defendant relied on what he alleged were the concurrent findings of the Courts below in his favour as to jointness, and urged that if he was entitled to the impartible property as a member of the joint family, he was also entitled to the other properties, both movable and immovable, on the ground either that they passed with the Raj by the family custom alleged by him or they had been incorporated with the impartible estate. Failing these, he maintained that he was entitled at the least to the furnishings and equipments of the palace and other buildings on another ground. This and other subsidiary questions raised by him will be referred to later.

The defendant accepted the concurrent findings against him as to the bantannamas and as to the two customs that had been pleaded by him. Eliminating these matters, the principal questions that remain for their Lordships' consideration are as follows:—

First, whether the late Raja and the defendant were, at the time of the Raja's death, members of a joint undivided Hindu family.

Second, whether the holder of an impartible estate has the power to incorporate other properties belonging to him with the estate. And, if so,

Third, whether any such properties had in fact been incorporated with the estate, and, if so, which?

First, as to whether the family was joint. The rules as to what constitutes separation in the case of an ordinary joint family are well established by the decisions of the Board. Generally speaking, "the normal condition of every Hindu family is joint. Presumably every such family is joint in food, worship and estate. In the absence of proof of division, such is the legal presumption": Tipperah case[1], at p. 540. Separation from commensality and joint worship does not necessarily effect a division of a joint undivided Hindu family. Such a separation may be due to various causes, and the family may yet continue joint in estate: Suraj Narain v. Ikbal Narain[2]. To constitute separation there must be a clear and unambiguous declaration by a member of his intention to separate himself from the family: Girja Bai v. Sadashiv-Dundiraj[3]; Kawal Nain v. Prabhu Lal[4].

---

[1] [1869] 12 Moo. I. A. 523

[2] [1816] L. R. 43 I. A. 151

[3] [1912] L. R. 40 I. A. 40, at 46

[4] [1917] L. R. 44 I. A. 159

Similar rules have been applied by the Board in the case of impartible estates. Thus in Chowdhry Chintamun Singh v. Mussamat Nowlukho Konwari[5], Sir J. Colvile, in discussing whether a document operated as a separation of a joint family in respect of an ancestral impartible estate, said (p. 271):—

> "There is nothing in the transaction which evinces any intention on the part of the junior members of the family to part with or to transfer any right or contingent right of property which they might have,"

and it was held that the family had not separated in respect of that estate. A similar test was applied in Jagadamba v. Narain Singh,[6] where their Lordships said:—

> The cases of Girja Bai v. Sadashiv Dhanjiraj and Kawal Nain v. Prabhu Lal [both cited above] are clear decisions that it is competent to a member of a joint family to separate himself from the family by a clear and unequivocal intimation of his intention to sever; but as in that case the person separating forfeits his chance of inheriting the whole of the estate by survivorship, it requires strong evidence to establish such separation. The latter case illustrates this. It was there found that the separation relied on was a complete separation in worship, in food, and in estate; and, further, that there was good reason for the complete separation, and that consequently the requisite evidence was forthcoming. In this case these conditions are lacking.

The latest case on the subject is Konammal v. Annadana,[7] a case from Madras. In that case their Lordships, after observing that it had been established by the judgment of the Board in Baijnath Prasad Singh v. Tej Bali Singh,[8] that an impartible estate must be considered as the joint property of the family for the purposes of succession, and after referring to some of the earlier authorities, said as follows:—

> Those authorities, in their Lordships' opinion, go far to support the inference deduced by Ramesam, J. from an examination of the cases that in order to establish that an impartible estate has ceased to be joint family property for the purposes of succession, it is necessary to prove an intention, expressed or implied, on behalf of the junior members of the family to give up their chance of succession to the impartible estate.

In the present case it was admitted for the plaintiffs that there was no evidence of any intention on the part of the junior members of the family to renounce their right of succession to the Raj. The only argument, therefore, open to the plaintiffs was that in the case of an impartible estate a separation merely in food and worship was sufficient to effect a severance of the joint status of the family. But this position could not be maintained in the face of the decision in Baijnath's case, as understood by the Board in Konammal v. Annadana. It was accordingly argued, relying upon Sartaj Kuari v. Deoraj Kuari,[9] that in the case of an impartible estate there was no co-ownership and therefore no jointness in estate; that Baijnath's case did not decide that there was co-ownership even for the purposes of succession; that the interest of a junior member, if any, was only a spes successionis, and that there was, therefore, nothing in the case of an impartible estate for the junior members to renounce.

---

[5] [1875] L. R. 2 I. A. 263

[6] [1923] L. R. 50 I. A 1

[7] [1927] L. R. 55 I. A. 114

[8] [1921] L. R. 48 I. A. 195

[9] [1888] L. R. 15 I. A. 51

The decisions prior in date to Baijnath's case, so far as they are material for the present purpose, fall to be divided into two classes, namely, (1) those relating to succession to an impartible estate, and (2) those relating to other rights in such estate. The first class begins with the Shivagunga[10] case in 1863. The question in that case was one of succession to an impartible zemindary, the rival claimants being the representatives of a widow and those of the nephews of the last holder. The actual decision proceeded on the ground that the zemindary was self-acquired property, but the judgment contains the following passages:—

> The zamindary is admitted to be in the nature of a Principality—impartible, and capable of enjoyment by only one member of the family at a time. But whatever suggestions of a special custom of descent may therefore have been made (and there are traces of such in the proceedings), the rule of succession to it is now admitted to be that of the general Hindu law prevalent in that part of India, with such qualifications only as flow from the impartible character of the subject. Hence, if the Zemindar, at the time of his death, and his nephews were members of an undivided Hindu family, and the zemindary, though impartible, was part of the common family property, one of the nephews was entitled to succeed to it on the death of his uncle. If, on the other hand, the Zemindar, at the time of his death, was separate in estate from his brother's family, the zamindary ought to have passed to one of his widows, and, failing his widows, to a daughter, or descendant of a daughter, preferably to nephews, following the course of succession which the law prescribes for separate estate.

The Shivagunga case was governed by the Mitakshara law, and the principle enunciated above was followed by the Board in subsequent Mitakshara cases, where it was held that the selection of a successor in the case of an ancestral impartible estate descendible by primogeniture was to be determined by survivorship.

The second class of cases begins with Sartaj Kuari v. Deoraj Kuari, decided in 1888 (supra). In that case the holder of an ancestral impartible estate executed a deed of gift of part of his estate in favour of his younger wife. A suit was brought by the son by his elder wife for a declaration that the estate being ancestral, the Raja had no power to alienate any part of it. The High Court of Allahabad held that the Raja had no power to alienate, but the Board reversed the High Court and upheld the gift. The decision proceeded on the ground that the inability of the father under the general law of the Mitakshara to alienate an ancestral estate arises from the proprietary right which the sons acquire at birth in such an estate, and that this right is so connected with the right to a partition that, where that right does not exist, as where the estate is impartible, the proprietary right falls with it. The Shivagunga case and the other cases following it were distinguished on the ground that the question in all those cases was one of succession, and not of alienation, and that all that was decided in those cases was "that for the purpose of determining who was entitled to succeed, the estate must be considered as the joint property of the family." The decision in Sartaj Kuari's case was followed in the first Pittapur[11] case, where the right of the

---

[10] 9 Moo. I. A. 543

[11] [1899] L. R. 26 I. A. 83

CIVIL
1932
SHIBA PRASAD SINGH
v.
PRAYAG KUMARI DEBI
Sir Dinshah Mulla

last holder to alienate the estate by will was upheld, and in the second Pittapur[12] case, where the right of the junior members of the family to maintenance out of the estate (except by custom) was negatived. Here ends the second class of cases.

Then came Baijnath's case in 1921. The contest was as to succession to an ancestral impartible estate. The parties were governed by the Mitakshara law and the family was joint. If the rule of survivorship applicable to ancestral property were applied, the respondent would be entitled to succeed; on the other hand, if the rules of succession to separate property were applied, the appellants would be entitled to succeed. It was argued for the appellants before the Board that Sartaj Kuari's case had established that there was no coparcenary in an impartible estate, that that decision was logically extended to the question of maintenance in the second Pittapur case, and that it should be equally logically extended to succession; in other words, that the estate should descend, not as coparcenary, but as separate property, But this argument was not accepted, and it was held that the estate being the ancestral property of the joint family, the successor was to be designated by survivorship. The earlier decisions were examined at great length by the Board, and Sartaj Kuari's case was distinguished on the ground that "the right of the other members that was being considered [in that case] was a presently existing right. The chance which each member might have of a succession emerging in his favour was obviously outside the sphere of inquiry." Similar observations were made as to the second Pittapur case. It was also observed that it would have been possible to decide Sartaj Kuari's case differently if the theory had been accepted that impartibility, being a creature of custom, though incompatible with the right of partition, yet left the general law as to restraint against alienations as it was. Their Lordships consider that the judgment in Baijnath's case reaffirmed the earlier decisions of the Board as to succession to an impartible estate.

The question again arose, though in a different form, in Protap Chandra Deo v. Jagadish Chandra Deo[13] in 1927. In that case the last holder of an ancestral impartible estate died leaving a will whereby he bequeathed the Raj to the respondent. The case was on all fours with the first Pittapur case, where the right to alienate such an estate by will was recognised. But it was argued on behalf of the appellant that the will was inoperative, and this was put upon the ground that the judgments of the Board in Sartaj Kuari's case and the first Pittapur case had proceeded on the view that there was no co-ownership and therefore no right of survivorship in an impartible estate, that that view was inconsistent with Baijnath's case, which decided that there was a real right of survivorship and no right, therefore, to alienate by will, and that it was open to the Board to choose between the two lines of decision, and that the decision in Baijnath's case was correct in Hindu law. But the Board held that there was no inconsistency between the two lines of decisions, and the will was upheld.

The keynote of the whole position, in their Lordships' view, is to be found in the following passage in the judgment in the Tipperah[14] case: "Where a custom is proved to exist, it supersedes the general law, which, however, still regulates all beyond the custom." Impartibility is essentially a creature of custom. In the case of ordinary joint family property, the members of the family have (1) the right of partition, (2) the right to restrain alienations by the head of the family except for necessity, (3) the right of maintenance, and (4) the right of survivorship. The first of these rights cannot exist in the case of an impartible estate, though ancestral, from the very nature of the estate. The second is incompatible with the custom of impartibility as laid down in Sartaj Kuari's case and the first Pittapur case; and so also the third as held in the second Pittapur case. To this extent the general law of the Mitakshara has been superseded by custom, and the impartible estate, though ancestral, is clothed with the incidents of self-acquired and separate property. But the right of survivorship is not inconsistent with the custom of impartibility. This right, therefore, still remains, and this is what was held in Baijnath's case. To this extent the estate still retains its character of joint family property, and its devolution is governed by the general Mitakshara law applicable to such property. Though the other rights which a coparcener acquires by birth in joint family property no longer exist, the birth-right of the senior member to take by survivorship still remains. Nor is this right a mere spes successionis similar to that of a reversioner succeeding on the death of a Hindu widow to her husband's estate. It is a right which is capable of being renounced and surrendered. Such being their Lordships' view, it follows that in order to establish that a family governed by the Mitakshara in which there is an ancestral impartible estate has ceased to be joint, it is necessary to prove an intention, express or implied, on the part of the junior members of the family to renounce their right of succession to the estate. It is not sufficient to show a separation merely in food and worship. Admittedly there is no evidence in this case of any such intention. The plaintiffs, therefore, have failed to prove separation, and the defendant is entitled to succeed to the impartible estate. Being entitled to the estate, he is also entitled to the improvements on the estate, being the immovable properties specified in items 9 to 19 of Schedule Kha. These improvements, in fact, form part of the impartible estate.

---

[12] [1918] L. R. 45 I. A. 148

[13] L. R. 54 I. A. 289

[14] 12 Moo. I. A. 523 at 542

The second question is whether it is competent to the holder of an ancestral impartible estate to incorporate with the estate other properties belonging to him. Questions of incorporation have been dealt with in several decisions of the Board, but the competency of incorporation was not challenged in any of them. The point, however, was raised in a Madras case which is referred to later. The question now under consideration embraces all other properties in dispute, and it is one of wide importance. It may be as well to consider first what was actually decided in the cases referred to.

The first of them is Srimati Rani Parbati Kumari Debi v. Jagadish Chunder Dhadal[15]. The contest there was a regards succession to an ancestral impartible estate and 4 mouzahs that had been purchased on behalf of the last holder out of the savings of the estate. It was contended that the mouzahs had been incorporated with the estate and therefore passed with the estate. It was in evidence that the rents of the estate were collected by the same servant and the collection papers were kept with the papers of the estate. In dealing with this part of the case, the Board said:—

---

[15] [1902] L. R. 29 I. A. 83

> Their Lordships do not find in these meagre facts adequate grounds for holding that the Raja intended to incorporate the four mouzahs with the ancestral estate for the purposes of his succession. The four mauzahs must therefore follow the rule of the Mitakshara as to self-acquired property.

The next case is Janki Pershad Singh v. Dwarka Pershad Singh[16]. This was a case under the Oudh Estates Act, 1869. The properties alleged to have been incorporated were all immovable properties. In dealing with the question of incorporation, their Lordships said:—

> As has been pointed out by this Board in the case of Srimati Rani Parbati Kumari Debi v. Jagadis Chunder Dhadal, the question whether properties acquired by an owner become part of the ancestral estate for the purposes of his succession depends on his intention to incorporate the acquisitions with the original estate.

It was held upon the facts of the case that the evidence was not sufficient to establish such an intention.

Similar observations were made in Murtaza Husain Khan v. Mahomed Yasin Ali Khan[17]. Here again the properties were immovable.

The last case cited before their Lordships was Rani Jagadamba Kumari v. Wazir Narain Singh[18]. In that case the properties alleged to have been incorporated consisted partly of movables and partly of immovables, and had all been acquired by the late Raja out of the income of the Raj. The facts relied upon to show that there was an intention to incorporate were not very different from those in the first case cited above. The High Court of Calcutta held that the whole of the property so acquired, except certain Government promissory notes, represented an accretion to the estate and descended with it. On appeal, the Board held that no part of the property constituted an accretion to the estate. Their Lordships observed that the income of an ancestral impartible estate was the absolute property of the owner of the estate, and not an accretion to the estate, as in the case of an ordinary joint family estate. Referring to the judgment of the High Court, the Board said:—

> It is possible that this confusion is due to the consideration of the position with regard to an ordinary joint family estate. In such a case the income, equally with the corpus, forms part of the family property, and if the owner mixes his own moneys with the moneys of the family—as, for example, by putting the whole into one account at the bank, or by treating them in his accounts as indistinguishable—his own earnings share with the property with which they are mingled the character of the joint family property; but no such considerations necessarily apply to the income from impartible property . Whether it be possible in any circumstances to treat movable property as an accretion to a landed estate of this character is a matter not arising for decision In both Janki Pershad Singh v. Dwarka Pershad Singh and Murtaza Husain Khan v. Mohomed Yasin Ali Khan, the addition of family property to the original raj is considered. Both these cases dealt with property other than movable property. In the present case their Lordships can see no evidence in the facts stated of any sufficient intention to treat the acquired pro-

---

[16] [1913] L. R. 40 I. A. 170

[17] [1916] L. R. 43 I. A. 269, 281-282

[18] [1923] L. R. 50 I. A. 1

perties, whether the mauzas, mortgages or other personal estate, as part of the original Raj.

The actual point of the decision in the above case was that where the estate is impartible, no such presumption as to an intention to incorporate can be drawn from the blending of the income of self-acquired property with the income of the estate as in the case of ordinary joint family estate. The case does not decide that if the estate is impartible, there can be no incorporation at all. On the contrary, there is an implication, and that too a strong one, that there can be an incorporation at least as regards immovable property.

The power of incorporation now under consideration has also been recognised in several cases in India: Lakshmipattu v. Kandasami[19]; Ramasami v. Sundaralingasami[20]; Sabajit Partap v. Indarjit Pertap[21]; Gurusami v. Pandia Chinna[22]. The first of these cases was decided in 1893.

The arguments advanced on behalf of the plaintiffs may now be considered. First, it was said that the estate in this case is one of the estates within Bengal Regulations 11 of 1793 and 10 of 1800, and that there are indications in those Regulations that no addition could be made to those estates. Their Lordships think that neither of these Regulations contains any such indication.

Next, it was argued that there was no principle of law on which the power to incorporate could be supported.

The Mitakshara recognises two modes of devolution according to the nature of the property. Ancestral or joint family property devolves by survivorship; self-acquired property descends to the heirs of the last owner in the order prescribed by the law. The Hindu law, however, enables persons governed by that law to alter the course of devolution of their property from one channel into another by declaring, expressly or impliedly, their intention to do so. Thus, if a member of a joint family declares his intention to separate from the other members, there is, as already stated, an immediate separation, and his undivided interest in the joint family property will on his death pass not to the surviving members of the family, but to his heirs. Similarly, a Hindu possessing self-acquired property may incorporate it with the joint family property, in which case it will pass on his death not to his heirs, but to the surviving members of the family. The material text of the Mitakshara on this subject is as follows:—"Among unseparated brothers, if the common stock be improved or augmented by any one of them, through agriculture, commerce or similar means, an equal distribution nevertheless takes place: and a double share is not allotted to the acquirer" (Mit., ch. i. sec. 4, verse 31). This verse means that if a member of a joint family augments joint family property, whatever may be the mode of augmentation, the property which goes to augment the joint family property becomes part of the joint family property, and he is entitled on a partition to an equal share with the other members of the family, and not to a double share as in some other cases dealt with in the preceding verses. This is the verse on which the whole doctrine of merger of estates by the blending of income is founded: Gooro-

---

[19] [1893] 16 Mad. 54

[20] [1894] 17 Mad. 22 at 444

[21] [1905] 27 All. 203

[22] [1921] 44 Mad. 1

churn Doss v. Goluckmoney Dossee[23].

If a member of a joint family blends the income of his self-acquired property with the income of the joint family property, it raises a presumption of an intention to incorporate the self-acquired property with the joint family property: Rajani Kanta Pal v. Joga Mohan Pal[24]. But no such presumption can arise if a member of a joint family who is the holder of an ancestral impartible estate mixes the income of his self-acquired property with the income of the estate. Blending of income, however, is not the only mode of indicating the intention to incorporate. A member of a joint family may possess self-acquired property which yields no income for the time being, as where it is land not yet brought into cultivation. If he desires to incorporate such property with the joint family property, it may be done by declaring, expressly or impliedly, his intention to do so. The crucial test in all such cases is intention, and the intention may be expressed by the blending of income or in some other way. On the same principle a member of a joint family, who is the holder of an ancestral impartible estate, may declare his intention to incorporate his self-acquired property with the impartible estate; by so doing he expresses his intention to alter the course of devolution of the self-acquired property. This, their Lordships think, he is entitled to do, though the ancestral estate is impartible. All that can be said against it is that he may alienate the self-acquired property the moment after the declaration of his intention to incorporate. It is true that he can alienate the property, but that is not because the property still retains the character of self-acquired property, but because on incorporation with the impartible estate it is impressed with all the incidents of that estate, one of which is that he can alienate it at his pleasure. The mere fact, however, that he may alienate the property after incorporation does not conclude the matter, for he may not alienate it at all. Surely, then the property will pass not as his separate property, but by survivorship as joint property—devolution by survivorship being another incident of an impartible estate. The fact is that when self-acquired property is incorporated with an ordinary joint family estate, the property so incorporated is impressed with all the incidents which attach to an ordinary joint family estate; and when self-acquired property is incorporated with an ancestral impartible estate, the property so incorporated is impressed with all the incidents which attach to an ancestral impartible estate. The mere possibility, therefore, of the holder alienating the property after incorporation is no reason for denying to him the power which the Hindu law gives him of changing the mode of descent to his property. Nor is there anything in that rule of law which is inconsistent with the custom of impartibility. Apart, therefore, from the question of succession by primogeniture presently to be considered, their Lordships are of opinion that the holder of an impartible estate is entitled to incorporate other properties belonging to him with that estate.

Lastly, it was argued that the holder of an impartible estate cannot so incorporate his self-acquisitions with the estate as to make them inheritable by the rule of primogeniture. In support of this argument two passages were cited from the Tagore case[25], namely, (1) "A private individual, who

---

[23] [1843] 1 Fulton 165 at 173-174

[24] [1923] L. R. 50 I. A. 173 at 178

[25] L. R. Sup., Vol. 47 at 65

CIVIL

1932

SHIBA PRASAD SINGH v. PRAYAG KUMARI DEBI

Sir Dinshah Mulla

attempts by gift or will to make property inheritable otherwise than the law directs, is assuming to legislate, and the gift must fail, and the inheritance takes place as the law directs"; and, (2), "Upon this point it is unnecessary to repeat what has already been said as to the incompetency of an individual member of society to make a law whereby a particular estate created by him shall descend in a novel line of inheritance, differing from that described by the law of the land." Reliance was also placed upon a passage in Rajindra Bahadur Singh v. Rani Raghubans Kunwar[26], which is as follows:—"The Crown has in British India power to grant or to transfer lands, and by the grant, or on the transfer, to limit in any way it pleases the descent of such lands. But a subject has no right to impose upon such lands or other property any limitation of descent which is at variance with the ordinary law of descent of property applicable in his case." In that case a taluq had been granted by the Crown to a Hindu under a sanad, subject to descent by primogeniture, and it was held that the grantee could not incorporate other lands with lands comprised in the taluq. This decision was followed in a recent case, Nawab Mirza Mohammad v. Nawab Fakr Jahan Begam[27].

On the authority of the above rulings it was argued that to allow the holder of an impartible Raj to incorporate his self-acquisitions with the Raj would be to allow him to impose upon the self-acquisitions a line of descent at variance with the ordinary law applicable to his case. Their Lordships do not think that the principle of the above decisions applies to the present case. The Raj has not been granted by the Crown, nor has any line of descent been prescribed by any sanad. It is an ancient ancestral estate. It is impartible by custom. It descends by the rule of primogeniture by a family custom. The family is joint. The parties are governed by the Mitakshara School of Hindu law. Under that law ancestral property devolves by survivorship to all surviving members of the joint family. In the present case the estate devolves not on all, but only on one member of the family, and that is by virtue of the family custom.

A Hindu family, no doubt, cannot by agreement between its members make a custom for itself of succession to family property at variance with the ordinary law. But where a family is found to have been governed as to its property by a customary rule of succession different from that of the ordinary law, that custom is itself law. The rule of succession in such a case is recognised by the State as part of the law of the family, though it is no more than the result of a course of conduct of individual subjects of the State constituting the family. "Under the Hindu system of law, clear proof of usage," even if it be a family usage, "will outweigh the written text of the law": Collector of Madura v. Mootoo Ramalinga Sathupathy[28].

Had the Raj been an estate granted by the Crown under a sanad subject to descent by primogeniture, as was the taluq in the Rajendra Bahadur case, the boundaries as defined by the sanad could not have been enlarged by any Raja, nor could he have added other properties to it so as to make them descendable by the rule of primogeniture. But the Raj here is not held under any sanad. It is impartible by custom, and it descends by primogeniture by custom. The boundaries, therefore, of such an estate, if they could be circumscribed at all, could only be circumscribed by statute or custom. The power to incorporate being a power inherent in every Hindu owner applies as well to a customary impartible Raj unless it is excluded by statute or custom. There is no question of any statute here. Nor is there any evidence of any custom excluding such a power. If so, there is no reason why the Raja could not enlarge the Raj by adding other properties to it. He is not by so doing creating another and a separate estate distinct from the Raj itself. He is not assuming to legislate, nor is he creating another Jheria Raj or any other Raj. If other properties are added to the Raj estate, they will not form a new estate, but will be an accretion to the Raj estate, and will pass, on the death intestate of the last holder, as one entity with that estate. To such a case the rule in the Tagore case does not apply nor the rule in Rajendra Bahadur's case. A similar conclusion was reached by the High Court of Madras in Gurusami v. Pandia Chinna already referred to.

---

[26] [1918] L. R. 45 I. A. 134, 143

[27] P. C. Appeals Nos. 131 and 132 of 1929

[28] [1868] 12 Moo. I. A. 397 at 436

None of these considerations, however, apply to movable property. Such property, their Lordships think, cannot form an accretion to an ancestral impartible estate. The income even of such an estate is not an accretion to the estate. As was said by the Board in Jagadamba Kumari v. Narain Singh (supra), "the income when received is the absolute property of the owner of the impartible estate." It does not attach to the estate as does the income of an ordinary ancestral estate attach to that estate.

The conclusion to which their Lordships have come on this part of the case is that while immovable property can be incorporated with an impartible estate, movable property cannot.

This leads to the consideration of the third question, whether there was an incorporation in fact. The movables having been excluded, the enquiry under this head is confined to immovable properties only. These are properties that were acquired by Raja Rash Behari Lal and Raja Jaymangal, being items 2 to 7 of Schedule ka, and those acquired by the late Raja, being items 1 to 8 of Schedule kha.

Considerable evidence, both oral and documentary, was produced before the Subordinate Judge on this part of the case. The defendant also relied upon the will of the late Raja as evidence of past incorporation. Both the Courts in India held that there was no indication in the will of any past incorporation. The Subordinate Judge held upon other evidence in the case that items 2 to 7 of Schedule ka were incorporated with the estate, and awarded them to the defendant. The High Court found that item 2 only was incorporated, but items 3 to 7 were not. These they awarded to the defendant upon other grounds already stated. Those are legal grounds founded upon facts unconnected with incorporation. In the view which their Lordships take of this branch of the case, it is unnecessary to consider whether they are good grounds. All that their Lordships need say is that they are highly debatable grounds.

Both Courts concurred in holding that items 1 to 8 of Schedule kha were not incorporated with the estate, and they awarded them to the plaintiffs.

It was argued on behalf of the defendant before their Lordships that the will contained unmistakable indications of a past incorporation with the impartible estate of all immovable properties which the late Raja possessed at the date of the will, and reliance was placed on the second paragraph of the will. That paragraph is in these terms:—

> The entire Parganas, Jheria and Jainagar, in the district of Manbhum, are my ancestral zamindaries in respect of which revenue is payable to Government, and besides these I have other immovable properties in Manbhum and other districts. Whoever will be my heir on my death, shall get the said properties, and it is not necessary to make any direction with regard to them. But six annas of the diamonds and other jewelleries, gold and silver, etc., mentioned in the schedule hereto, which I have, and those which I shall purchase hereafter besides these, and all cash moneys, notes, gold and silver, etc., which will be there in my own Tehbil or in the Bank of Bengal or any other bank at the time of my death, shall form part of my zamindary, and whoever will get the zemindary at any time shall possess and enjoy the same, and my wives (those who will be living at the time of my death) shall get the remaining ten annas of the said diamonds, and other jewelleries, the notes, cash moneys, silver and gold, etc., in equal shares, and they shall have absolute right of ownership thereto, that is to say, they shall be competent to give away and sell the same at their pleasure and no one shall ever be competent to object thereto.

The opening sentence of the above passage relates to the Jheria Raj and other immovable properties. As to all these the Raja says, "Whoever will be my heir on my death shall get the said properties, and it is not necessary to make any direction with regard to them." He then goes on to say: "But six annas of the diamonds and other jewelleries," etc. In other words, as their Lordships read it, the Raja says that it is not necessary to give any testamentary directions as to the immovable properties: they will go as a matter of course to the next heir to the Raj; but it is necessary to give such directions as to diamonds and other jewellery, etc. This, their Lordships think, is the only reasonable interpretation that can be put upon those words. They indicate that the Raja had, before he made this document, treated the immovable properties as part of the Raj. The word "but" brings into contrast the immovable properties, as to which he says it is not necessary to give any directions, with diamonds and other jewellery, as to which he proceeds to give testamentary directions. The words "shall get the said properties" in this part of the document are not, in their Lordships' view, words of disposition; they are equivalent to "will get the said properties." The only inference that can be drawn from this part of the document is that the Raja had treated the immovable properties which he then possessed as part of the Raj and that they were incorporated with the Raj estate. Their Lordships may add, to prevent any misconception, that had they considered on the construction of the document that the passage relating to immovable properties contained a testamentary disposition of those properties, their Lordships could not have given any effect to it, as the document has not been proved as a will.

For the reasons stated above, their Lordships are of opinion that the defendant is entitled not only to items 2 to 7 of Schedule ka, but also to items 1 to 8 of Schedule kha, and that the Courts in India were wrong in rejecting his claim as to the latter items.

The Hight Court by its decree has directed an enquiry as to whether the late Raja left any other immovable properties acquired by him, and ordered that if any such be found, the defendant should deliver them to the plaintiffs. In view of the opinion already expressed by their Lordships and having regard to the terms of the will, this part of the decree must be varied by declaring that such of these properties as might have been acquired by the late Raja on or before the date of the will will pass to the defendant, but those acquired after that date will pass to the plaintiffs, unless it is shown by the defendant that they were added by the late Raja to the impartible estate with the intention of incorporating them with that estate, in which case such of them as were so added will pass to the defendant.

Their Lordships will now turn to the subsidiary questions raised by the defendant in regard to movables and to accounts.

The defendant recovered after the death of the late Raja rents, royalties and other monies that had accrued due to the Raja in his lifetime. The decree of the Subordinate Judge is silent as to these items. The High Court, on appeal, awarded them to the plaintiffs. As to these items, the defendant urged before their Lordships that no claim for them was made in the plaint, and that even if it was, the Court of the Subordinate Judge who tried the case had no jurisdiction to entertain the claim. On the question of jurisdiction it was argued that the suit was essentially one for the recovery of immovable property within the meaning of Section 16 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and that no cause of action in respect of the rents, royalties and other monies could be joined with a claim for such property without the leave of the Court in view of the provisions of Order 2, Rule 4, of Schedule I to the Code. The material part of that rule is as follows: "No cause of action shall, unless with the leave of the Court, be joined with a suit for the recovery of immovable property, except . . . (c) claims in which the relief sought is based on the same cause of action."

Their Lordships think that both these contentions must fail. The claim is sufficiently covered by the plaint, and it was fully considered by the High Court. As to jurisdiction, their Lordships are of opinion that the cause of action in respect of the rents, royalties and other items was the same as that in respect of the immovable properties, namely, wrongful withholding of possession by the defendant, and that the case falls under clause (c) of rule 4.

One other matter on which there is controversy between the parties is as to an item of Rs.48,249-3-9, alleged to have been paid by the defendant to the plaintiffs at the time of the execution of the bantannamas. The bantannamas were executed on August 5, 1916. Two schedules are attached to each bantannama, Schedule I purporting to be a list of jewellery, cash and deposits in banks left by the late Raja, and Schedule 2 showing the shares allotted to each party. All three bantannamas, including the schedules, are similar in terms. It appears from Schedule 2 that eight items of jewellery, Rs.448,400-4-0 out of the deposits in banks, and Rs.112,249-3-9 out of the cash were allotted to the plaintiffs. From the last item a sum of Rs.64,000 was deducted, which left

Rs.48,249-3-9 to be paid to the plaintiffs, and it is this item which is now in dispute. As to the Rs.64,000, it was stated in the bantannamas that this money was in a safe which was in the possession of the plaintiffs, and that it had been agreed between the parties that the plaintiff should retain it and that it should be deducted out of the plaintiffs' share in the cash. As to the deposits, it was arranged that they should be divided when received from the banks.

The defendant alleged that the jewellery that came to the plaintiffs' share was made over to them in the morning of August 5, 1916, and that the sum of Rs.48,249|3|9 was paid to them in the evening of that day. The plaintiffs denied receipt of any jewellery or cash. They also denied that the safe contained Rs.64,000 or any other sum. A vast mass of evidence, both oral and documentary, was recorded by the Subordinate Judge on this branch of the case. The Subordinate Judge prefaces his judgment by characterising all oral evidence in the case as "untruthful or biased," except the evidence of Colonel Brown, who, however, did not depose to any of the facts now in dispute. The Subordinate Judge then says: "I shall not rely upon oral evidence unless it is corroborated by documentary evidence, or unless under the circumstances disclosed in the particular matter under investigation it seems to be natural and probable." He found that no jewellery was given to the plaintiffs nor was there any sum of Rs.64,000 in the safe, as alleged by the defendant. As to the item of Rs.48,249-3-9, however, he found that it was paid to the plaintiffs. On appeal, the High Court, while agreeing with the Subordinate Judge as to the findings in respect of jewellery and Rs.64,000, differed from him on the finding as to the Rs.48,249-3-9, and found that the amount was not paid. The defendant contends that this finding of the High Court is erroneous.

It is in evidence that the bantannamas were executed by the plaintiffs behind a purdah in a room in the Andar-mehal, and that the only person amongst those present who had access to the plaintiffs was Pran Krishna, a brother-in-law of the second plaintiff. The defendant's case is that Rs.48,000 was paid in currency notes of Rs.1,000 each, and that the balance of Rs.249-3-9 was paid partly in small notes and partly in cash, that he gave the notes and the cash to Pran Krishna, when the bantannamas were executed, for payment to the plaintiffs, and that Pran Krishna paid the whole amount to the plaintiffs behind the purdah. Pran Krishna was not called as a witness; nor is the fact of payment endorsed by the Sub-Registrar, who was present at the time, on the bantannamas, probably because the money was not paid in his presence, nor was any admission of receipt of consideration made in his presence.

It has been the practice of this Raj for several years past to keep a register of currency notes. This register contains entries of notes with their numbers received by the Raja from banks against cheques drawn by him, and entries also of payment out of notes and their numbers. The entries in the register relating to the 48 notes alleged to have been handed over to the plaintiffs were exhibited at the trial of the case.

It appears that certain properties belonging to one Sinha had been sold in execution of a mortgage decree obtained by T. Lal and S. Lal

CIVIL
1932
SHIBA PRASAD SINGH
v.
PRAYAG KUMARI DEBI
Sir Dinshah Mulla

against him in the Court at Bhagalpur. The mortgagor raised money by selling the properties to Thakur Prasad, a son of a sister of the third plaintiff. The sale deed was executed on October 26, 1916, and the purchase money, which consisted of currency notes, was paid to the pleader of the decree-holders. These notes were sent by the decree-holders to the Benares Bank at Bhagalpur and they were credited to their account with the bank. It appears from the register of the bank that 26 of these notes bear the same numbers as 26 out of the 48 notes in the Raja's register. The halves of five of these notes, which are preserved in the Currency Office, purport to bear the signature of the third plaintiff on the back. It was admitted by the first plaintiff, who was examined on commission, that the third plaintiff sent a lac of rupees in currency notes with a messenger from Jheria for payment of the purchase money on behalf of Thakur Prasad. Behari Lal De, a Tehsildar in the employ of the Jheria Raj, deposed that the signature on each of the five halves was the signature of the third plaintiff. The third plaintiff did not give evidence in the case.

The plaintiffs being Purdahnashin ladies, the onus was on the defendant to prove the payment, but the identity of 26 notes having been established, and the signature on five of them having been sworn to as being the signature of the third plaintiff, the burden shifted upon the plaintiffs, and it was then for them to show that these notes came into the hands of the third plaintiff, not in the way alleged by the defendant, but in some other way, and that the signature on the five notes was not her signature. But no adequate explanation is forthcoming as to the identity of the notes, nor is there any denial of the signatures by the third plaintiff. It appears to their Lordships that the evidence of the Tehsildar, standing uncontradicted as it does, is fatal to the plaintiffs' case. The only criticism made against it was that he, having admitted that he had never seen the plaintiffs in the Andar-mehal, could not have seen the third plaintiff sign, and he could not therefore know her signature. But a signature may be proved in other ways, and that is what was done in this case. As to the identity of the notes, it was argued that the share of the third plaintiff being one-third, she could not have received, even if the 48 notes had been handed over to the plaintiffs, more than 16 notes, while the notes alleged to bear the same numbers were no less than 26. As against that, however, there is this fact, that no less than five halves have been deposed to as bearing her signature, and she has not denied her signature. It was also urged, on the strength of the evidence of the first plaintiff and that of Mukhdeshwar Baral, a Mohurrir, that the plaintiffs used to get from the Raja's treasury large notes in exchange for small notes, and small notes in exchange for large notes. But there is no evidence that any of the notes which bear the signature of the third plaintiff were so obtained. In fact, the plaintiffs are confronted at every point of their case with the signature of the third plaintiff on the five halves. Such being the evidence, their Lordships find themselves unable to agree with the finding of the High Court as to the item of Rs.48,249-3-9, and they agree with the Subordinate Judge that the amount must be taken to have been paid.

CIVIL

1932

SHIBA PRASAD SINGH v. PRAYAG KUMARI DEBI

Sir Dinshah Mulla

The defendant also claims credit for the expenses of the funeral and sradh ceremonies of the late Raja and for all monies paid by him to the plaintiffs since the death of the Raja. Particulars of this claim appear in part in paragraph XIX of the petition for leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council, and more fully in ground No. 30 of the grounds of appeal. Ground No. 30 is in these terms:—

> For that in any case this Honourable Court should have held that the defendant is entitled to get credit for the expenses of the funeral and Sradh of late Raja Durga Prasad Singh and for all his debts and liabilities paid by him and also for all monies paid to the plaintiffs in cash since the death of their husband under whatever denomination such payments may have been made, including the sum of Rs.50,000 paid on March 16, 1920, and the aggregate sum of Rs.44,000 (made up of Rs.900) a month paid from August 5, 1916, to the middle of October, 1916, and Rs.1,500 a month paid from January 28, 1920, to March 27, 1921.

This was also a ground of appeal to the High Court. The High Court allowed the defendant's claim in respect of the debts and liabilities of the late Raja, but no directions have been given in respect of the other claims.

As to the expenses of the funeral and sradh ceremonies, the defendant contended before their Lordships that if the movables left by the late Raja were awarded to the plaintiffs, those expenses should be borne by them. On the other hand, it was urged for the plaintiffs that if the defendant's claim to succeed to the Raj was allowed, he as the successor to the Raj was bound by custom to perform those ceremonies. These are questions of fact on which no evidence appears to have been led by the defendant before the trial Judge. Their Lordships are therefore unable to entertain this claim at this stage.

The facts as to the defendant's claim for monies alleged to have been paid by him to the plaintiffs appear to be as follows:—Shortly after the institution of this suit the plaintiffs applied for the appointment of a receiver. The application terminated in a compromise, and on January 28, 1920, the parties filed a petition containing the terms of the compromise. Paragraph 4 of the petition is as follows:—

> Defendant to pay month by month to each of the plaintiffs Rs.500 (Rupees five hundred) on account of maintenance from the date hereof. This without prejudice to the rights of the parties as to the amount of maintenance or otherwise which may be ultimately payable to the plaintiffs.

Paragraph 9 is in these terms:—

> The defendant will advance to the plaintiffs Rupees two lacs and fifty thousand out of the money withdrawn by him from the Bank of Bengal in part payment of their dues. Defendant will further pay to the plaintiffs a further sum of Rupees fifty thousand on account of arrears of maintenance, but it is expressly agreed between the parties that this amount will be subject to adjustment when and if the rate of maintenance is ascertained by Court.

The decree of the Subordinate Judge directs that credit should be given to the defendant for Rs.2,50,000, but no directions are given in the decree either of the Subordinate Judge or of the High Court in regard to the item of Rs.50,000 or the payments alleged to have been made by the defendant of Rs.300 per month to each plaintiff under the terms of the bantannamas or of Rs.500 per month under the terms of the compromise.

It is clear that the bantannamas having been set aside, the defendant is entitled prima facie to a refund of all payments made by him under them. It appears, however, from the judgment of the High Court that the plaintiffs applied to the Court to remand the case to the trial Judge to determine what maintenance they were entitled to, but the defendant objected on the ground that the plaintiffs could not have both the property and maintenance, and the High Court refuse to direct any inquiry and left the question of maintenance to be decided in a separate suit.

It does not appear, at least from the judgment, that the defendant at that time asked the High Court to make any order as regards the payments alleged to have been made by him to the plaintiffs. It may be that the High Court intended to leave this question also open. However that may be, their Lordships see no reason why the defendant's claim should not be considered in the present proceedings, and why, if the plaintiff's claim maintenance in addition to the properties awarded to them, their case also should not be considered together with the plaintiffs' claim. A separate suit would involve a repetition of a good many facts already recorded in this suit.

The only question that remains to be considered is as to some of the movables, being the furniture, furnishings and equipments of the palace and other buildings situated in the Manbhum district and elsewhere. The Subordinate Judge, as already stated, awarded to the defendant the furniture in the cutcherries and four other buildings on the ground that "they would follow the estate." This decision was affirmed by the High Court on appeal. As regards sub-items 24 to 83 of item 20 of schedule kha, the Subordinate Judge awarded the greater part thereof to the plaintiffs. This part of the decree was varied by the High Court to some extent. No reasons are given by either Court in support of its view.

The claim made by the defendant to the movables on the ground that they were incorporated with the impartible estate has failed; and so also the claim based on the ground that all property, whether movable or immovable, left by the last holder passed to the next succeeding Raja by a family custom. The defendant having failed on both these grounds, the movables in question should pass to the plaintiffs in the ordinary course of succession, unless the defendant can establish his claim to them on some other ground. The only ground urged on his behalf was that the very conception of a Raj involved that the Raj should carry with it all such furniture, furnishings and equipments as were necessary for the support of the dignity of the Raja and the gaddi and such as were provided for use and service with the palace and the land and buildings connected with it. Their Lordships are unable to adopt this view. The question is purely one of fact, and there is no evidence on the record to support the claim. The claim could possibly have been founded on custom, but no such custom was alleged or proved. Their Lordships think that the Courts in India were wrong in awarding any of the furniture, furnishings and equipments to the defendant, and that they should all pass to the plaintiffs.

In the result, their Lordships will humbly advise His Majesty that the appeals preferred both by the plaintiffs (No. 79 of 1925) and by the defendant (Nos. 71 and 72 of 1925) should be allowed in part, and that the decree of the High Court be affirmed subject to the following directions and modifications:—

(1) That it should be declared that the defendant, and not the plaintiffs, is entitled to the immovable properties specified in items 1 to 8 of Schedule kha annexed to the decree of the Subordinate Judge.

(2) That it should be declared that if as a result of the inquiry directed by the High Court by their decree it be found that Raja Durga Prasad left any immovable properties other than those specified in Schedules ka and kha annexed to the decree of the Subordinate Judge, the defendant shall be entitled to such of them as were acquired on or before the date of the Raja's will dated August 27, 1915, and that the plaintiffs shall be entitled to such of them as were acquired after that date, unless it is shown by the defendant that they were added by the Raja to the impartible estate with the intention of incorporating them with that estate, in which case such of them as were so added will pass to the defendant; and that there should be an inquiry to ascertain whether any of them were so incorporated.

(3) That it should be declared that the defendant is entitled to credit for Rs.48,249-3-9, with interest thereon at the rate of 6 per cent per annum from August 5, 1916, and that this amount should be deducted from the amount payable by the defendant to the plaintiffs as provided by the decree of the Subordinate Judge.

(4) That it should be declared that the plaintiffs are entitled to all the furniture, furnishings and equipments left by Raja Durga Prasad, and that the defendant should be directed to deliver them to the plaintiffs, or to pay the value thereof as determined by the High Court.

(5) That the case be remitted to the High Court.

(i) To inquire into and determine the matters specified in clause (2) above;

(ii) To determine whether the defendant is entitled to credit for the amounts, or any of them, alleged to have been paid by him to the plaintiffs, and referred to in ground No. 30 of the grounds of appeal in his petition (No. 71 of 1925) for leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council (other than the expenses of the funeral and sradh ceremonies of Raja Durga Prasad), and to determine also any claim that may be made by the plaintiffs in respect of maintenance; and

(iii) To give effect to the above declarations and directions.

The plaintiffs will pay one-third of the defendant's costs of all the three appeals. The costs of further proceedings in India will be dealt with by the High Court.

On November 2, 1922, an Order in Council was made disposing of two appeals, being appeals Nos. 2 and 3 of 1922, preferred by the defendant from an order of the High Court dated February 9, 1922. As to the costs of these two appeals, liberty was reserved to the parties to apply to His Majesty in Council after the determination of the appeals from the decree of the Subordinate Judge which were then pending in the High Court. The plaintiffs will also pay one-third of the defendant's costs of those appeals.

Appeal allowed in part.

Stanley, Johnson and Allen—Solicitors for the appellant.
Watkins and Hunter—Solicitors for the respondents.

CIVIL
1932
SHIBA PRASAD SINGH
v.
PRAYAG KUMARI DEBI
Sir Dinshah Mulla

HIGH COURT

BHOLA UMAR AND AFTER HIS DEATH MT. PURKI (Defendant)
versus
KAUSILLA AND OTHERS (Plaintiffs)*

CIVIL
1932
July 8
SULAIMAN, C. J.
MUKERJI, J.
KING, J.

Hindu Widow's Remarriage Act (XV of 1856), Sec. 2—Meaning and scope of—Widow remarrying in accordance with custom of her caste—No forfeiture of her rights in the estate of her first husband—Hindu Law—Widow Remarriage—Mere proof of custom—Insufficient to involve forfeiture—Proof of custom of such forfeiture necessary.

Section 2 of the Hindu Widows' Remarriage Act (XV of 1856) does not apply to the case of those widows who are entitled under the custom of their caste to remarry and are not bound to take advantage of the provisions of the Act. Accordingly there is no forfeiture of the Hindu widow's estate on remarriage under the Act in such a case.

The proof of mere custom of remarriage would not be sufficient to involve forfeiture under the Hindu Law. It would be necessary for the party claiming that the estate has been forfeited on account of remarriage to prove that there is a custom of such forfeiture in such a contingency. Har Saran v. Nandi, I. L. R. 11 All. 330, Matungini Gupta v. Ram Rutton Roy, I. L. R. 19 Cal. 289, Ganga Pershad Sahu v. Jhalo, I. L. R. 38 Cal. 862, Vithu v. Gobinda, I. L. R. 22 Bom. 321, Vitta v. Chatakondu, I. L. R. 41 Mad. 1078, Mt. Parji v. Mangta, 1930 A. I. R. Lah. 1028 and Santla Bewa v. Badaswari Dasi, I. L. R. 50 Cal. 727 referred to and discussed by MUKERJI, J.

FIRST APPEAL from a decree of BABU CHATUR BEHARILAL, First Additional Subordinate Judge of Jaunpur.

The following is the Referring Order:—

PULLAN AND NIAMATULLAH, JJ.—The principal plaintiff in this suit is Mst. Kausilla, a Hindu widow of the Umar Bania caste, who has contracted a second marriage. She sued to recover the property of her first husband from the possession of members of her first husband's family, and her suit has been decreed on the basis of a long course of rulings by Division Benches of this Court commencing with the case reported in 11 All. 300, Har Saran Das v. Nandi. The view taken in that judgment was that Act XV of 1856, the Hindu Widow Remarriage Act, was not intended to place under disability persons who could remarry a second time before the Act was passed, and consequently a widow who did not by any custom forfeit her interest in her first husband's property by remarriage before the passing of the Act was not affected by the operation of the Act. This judgment was followed in the case of Ranjit v. Radha Rani, reported in 20 All. 476, and in that judgment reference is made to other decisions which have been unreported, and a reported case, Dharam Das v. Nand Lal Singh in Weekly Notes, 1889, p. 78. The Judges in the case of Ranjit v. Radha accepted the view of law stated in the earlier cases, and held that those decisions formed a consistent cursus curiae of the Court. From that time onwards this High Court has followed on the lines laid down in that judgment, and on at least two occasions a Division Bench has refused to refer the matter to a larger Bench on the ground that it was proper to abide by the previous decisions of this Court. One of us was a member of a Bench which received such an application in the case of a second appeal Mangat v. Bharto, reported in 49 All. 203. It is true that this has been the position taken by several Benches of this Court during a long period of years, but at least three Judges have indicated that they are personally not in agreement with the view of law taken by the Allahabad High Court, and prefer the view taken by the Full Benches of the Bombay, Madras and Calcutta High Courts which are directly opposed to the view taken by this Court. This Bench is of the opinion that if the Allahabad view is to be maintained it should at least have the support of a reasoned judgment of a Full Bench considering the law as laid down in the Full Bench decisions of the other High Courts, and we do not think that we should adhere so rigidly to the principle of stare decisis that we should close our eyes to the decisions of all other High Courts in India which interpret an Act of the legislature in a contrary sense to that adopted previously by this Court.

---

*F. A. 523 of 1928

We accordingly recommend to the Hon'ble the Chief Justice that this appeal may be laid before a larger Bench for determination of the following question:—

Does a Hindu widow who remarries in accordance with a custom of her caste forfeit thereby her rights in the estate of her first husband?

B. E. O'Conor and Ram Nama Prasad for the appellant.

P. L. Banerji, R. K. Malaviya, Shiva Prasad Sinha, Kedar Nath Sinha and Lakshmi Saran for the respondents.

The following judgments were delivered:—

Sulaiman, C. J.

SULAIMAN, C. J.—There has undoubtedly been considerable controversy as to whether Act XV of 1856 was applicable to all Hindu widows or not. The Allahabad High Court from the very beginning has laid down that the Act does not apply to such Hindu widows as were entitled under their custom to remarry and who were not bound to take advantage of the Act. Opinion in the other High Courts has considerably varied, and the Allahabad view has been openly dissented from. But it appears that with the lapse of time opinion in the other High Courts, particularly the Madras High Court, has come round towards the view of this Court, at least so far as the applicability of the Act is concerned.

The Judges who have held that all widows are governed by the provisions of Section 2 of the Act, have based their view on the wide language of that section. It reads:

> All rights and interests which any widow may have in her deceased husband's property shall upon her remarriage cease and determine as if she had then died.

If the section were to be taken in its widest scope, it would have to be conceded that the provision of law applies to any widow whatsoever. It would then include not only all Hindu widows, but even Christian and Muslim widows. Such a construction of the section would lead to

CIVIL
1932
BHOLA UMAR
v.
KAUSILLA
Sulaiman,
C. J.

absurdity. It is, therefore, impossible to say that Section 2 of the Act can be interpreted without reference to the other provisions of the Act and without reference to the preamble. Were it possible to interpret Section 2 standing by itself and independently of everything else, there might have been some force in saying that it applied to all Hindu widows. But we are forced to restrict its scope so as to exclude at least Christian, Muslim, Parsi or Buddhist widows. In order, therefore, to find out the true scope of the section, one is compelled to look to the provisions of that Act contained in Section 1, as well as to the preamble. No doubt a preamble can never control or restrict the substantive provisions of an Act. It merely supplies a key to the interpretation of those sections. But where there is an ambiguity in the sections or where there is any doubt as to the true scope of the provisions of that enactment, the preamble may be of some guidance.

The Act was professedly passed with the object of removing all legal obstacles to the marriage of Hindu widows. The preamble stated that it was known that Hindu widows, with certain exceptions, are held to be, by reason of their having been once married, incapable of contracting a second valid marriage, and the offspring of such widows by any second marriage are held to be illegitimate and incapable of inheriting, whereas many Hindus believed that this imputed legal incapacity, although in accordance with established custom, was not in accordance with the precepts of their religion, and desired that the law should no longer prevent those Hindu widows who may be so minded from adopting a different custom. The Act was intended to relieve all such Hindus from this legal incapacity complained of and to remove all legal obstacles to the marriage of Hindu widows.

It is, therefore, obvious that the legislature recognised that there were certain exceptions to the general practice of widows not being allowed to remarry. Obviously the intention of the legislature was to remove the legal obstacles in the way of remarriage, and not to impose another penalty or restriction on those who did not stand in need of any legislation. It is, therefore, most unlikely that the legislature would have intended to deprive Hindu widows who by the custom of their caste were entitled to remarry and to retain the property of their husbands from holding the estate. The object of the Act professedly was to enable those widows, who were incapacitated from marrying, to remarry. But as it was considered that remarriage, where it is not allowed by custom, should not disturb the relations of the deceased husband or their estate, there was an express provision made in Section 2 that all their rights and interests in the deceased husband's property shall cease and determine.

The Allahabad High Court has accordingly held that the Act could never have been intended to apply and did not apply to those Hindu widows who by the custom of their caste had independently of the Act a right to remarry. The point does not appear to have been emphasised in any of the previous cases, nor does it appear to have been refuted in cases taking the contrary view, that there is no option but to restrict the scope of Section 2. That section cannot apply to all widows. It can only apply to a particular class of widows for whom the Act was intended. To ascertain that class one is compelled to look to the preamble, which shows that that class of widows consisted of those who were incapable of contracting a second valid marriage. This obstacle in their way was removed and their children were declared by enactment to be legitimate. The Act was intended to render remarriage valid and to legalise the legitimacy of children. It conferred a benefit on those who could not remarry, but at the same time imposed a restriction on them. It was not intended to deprive those, who already possessed the right to remarry, of whatever rights they enjoyed in their deceased husband's properties.

The cases of the various High Courts have been considered at length by Mukerji, J., and it is unnecessary for me to cover the same ground. The Madras High Court proceeded on an assumption of prevalence of a custom of forfeiture on remarriage which is not true so far as those provinces are concerned. In most cases where a custom of remarriage was established, the right to retain the estate was also put forward and upheld. Indeed no case has been brought to our notice where a custom to remarry was established and yet the widow was held not to be entitled to retain the estate of her deceased husband. The later view in Calcutta appears to be based more on the supposed principles of Hindu Law than on the provisions of the Act. In Madras, this is the opinion of the majority of the learned Judges in the Full Bench case of Vitta Fayaramma v. Chatakondu Sivayya[1]. But in these cases it was simply taken for granted that the Hindu law enforces a forfeiture of the estate, and there appears to be neither any elaborate discussion of the point, nor direct reference to any authorities. The main argument appears to be that because in the Hindu conception of marital relations a wife is considered to be half the body of her husband and the surviving widow remains that half, she cannot retain his estate after remarriage. There is also the supposition that a widow can hold the estate only till her widowhood, and as she ceases to be the surviving half of the body of her husband on her remarriage and cannot thereafter confer spiritual benefit on his soul, she must give up the estate. The notion that a widow is the surviving half of her deceased husband has been called by Sir Seshagari Iyer in the Full Bench of the Madras High Court referred to above as "picturesque metaphor". Certainly this principle is not the sole basis of her right to succession to his estate. Similarly when an unchaste widow, who could hardly be imagined to confer spiritual benefit on her deceased husband to whose marital relations she is disloyal, does not cease to hold the estate, the conferment of the spiritual benefit cannot be the indispensible condition for the retention of the estate. The question was thoroughly examined by their Lordships of the Privy Council in the leading case of Moniram Kolita v. Keri Kolitani[2] when considering the question of unchastity, their Lordships had to examine the text of Vrihat Manu and of Catyayana, two verses of which are as follows:—

---

[1] I. L. R. 41 Mad. 1078

[2] I. L. R. 5 Cal. 776

CIVIL

1932

BHOLA UMAR v. KAUSILLA

Sulaiman, C. J.

> (1) The widow of a childless man, keeping unsullied her husband's bed, and persevering in religious observances, shall present his funeral oblation and obtain his entire share. (2) Let the childless widow, keeping unsullied the bed of her lord, and abiding with her venerable protector, enjoy with moderation the property until her death. After her let the heirs take it.

Their Lordships distinctly ruled that these texts related to the right of succession to the estate and not to its retention, and that the conditions of "keeping unsullied her husband's bed", "preserving in religious observances" and "abiding with her venerable protector" were not conditions precedent to the continuance of the widow's estate, and that even if any or all of these conditions were broken, no forfeiture was involved. The right to hold the estate of her husband is based on distinct texts, and the notion of her being a half of her husband's body has in no text cited before us been made the sole basis for the continuance of her estate.

It is to be admitted that there is no express text which lays down that a forfeiture of the Hindu widow's estate will follow upon her remarriage; nor is there any text which expressly says that her right to hold the estate will terminate on her death or on remarriage. On the other hand, the verse of Catyayana quoted above allows her to enjoy the property until her death, and the heirs are to take it only after her. It has been suggested that the idea of a Hindu widow retaining her property is incompatible with the conception of Hindu Law. But when once the estate has vested in her, there can be no forfeiture unless there is a clear authority for that view, and forfeiture cannot be inferred because of some notional view deducible from some supposed principle underlying the Hindu law of succession. When it is now well settled that unchastity does not involve any forfeiture, it would prima facie follow that remarriage would not. It would be putting a premium on unchastity to hold that she can retain the property so long as she remains notoriously unchaste, but the moment she remarries she will forfeit it. The expression "widow's estate" is an English expression and does not imply that the estate continues so long as she continues to be a widow. In one sense she still remains the widow of her deceased husband, even after her remarriage. Th expression in Hindu Law for "widow's estate" is "stridhan", which would literally mean "woman's estate", and not necessarily widow's estate. It would be offering an inducement to a widow to be immoral if she were told that she would be in a worse position by validly remarrying than by living in open adultery. A change of religion like a discontinuance of chastity involves no forfeiture. There seems to be no good reason for holding that a remarriage recognised by law does so. In the absence of an express text, the Hindu law should be interpreted so as not to cause a shock to one's moral conscience. Obviously the strict Hindu law never contemplated a remarriage for the higher classes. The rules laid down, therefore, do not provide for remarriages. In the eye of the pure Hindu law remarriage was hardly anything better than concubinage. When remarriage was not recognized it was tantamount to unchastity. In this view of the matter her position should not be any worse than if she were unchaste. Undoubtedly the estate vests in her on the death of her separated husband dying issueless. The burden is on the party who alleges it to

CIVIL
1932
BHOLA UMAR
v.
KAUSILLA
Sulaiman,
C. J.

show that there is some well settled rule of law which divests her of her estate. In the absence of any authority to the contrary, her widow's estate must continue. If the Act does not apply, then her estate continues even though she remarries under the custom which allows it.

When nothing more than a mere custom of remarriage is established, there is no presumption that under the Hindu law she forfeits the estate. The party who is alleging that there has been a forfeiture must establish a further incident of the custom that forfeiture is a necessary consequence. Where such additional custom is established, she would of course lose the estate, if she were claiming it under the Act; and she would also lose it if she were claiming the right to remarry under the custom. But where nothing more is established than a mere right to remarry under a custom, it cannot be presumed that forfeiture is a necessary consequence. The burden to prove a custom involving forfeiture is on the party asserting it, and in the absence of such proof it must be held that she could remarry and retain the estate and would not forfeit it. Of course no custom can be established which would override the provisions of a statutory enactment, but where the Act does not apply at all, custom being a part of the Hindu law, must override the general principles of that law. But a party must go the whole length of proving the full custom on which he relies. By establishing only one part of it, he cannot ask the court to infer the other. I would, therefore, have no hesitation in saying that unless it is affirmatively established that in addition to the custom of remarriage there is the further custom of forfeiture of the husband's estate, she is entitled to retain the estate even after remarriage and till her death.

I should like to add that even if I had not been independently convinced of the correctness of the view which has prevailed in this Court, I would have felt bound by the long course of unanimous decisions which have been given here. So far as these provinces are concerned, people have acted upon the belief that in the absence of any custom to the contrary, a widow who is entitled to remarry under the custom of her caste, does not forfeit her estate. Many a title would be upset if this interpretation of the law were to be reversed. There must be many transferees of property who have purchased it in the expectation that their right would continue at least till the death of the widow, who would lose it by her voluntary act of remarriage. It would be extremely dangerous to shake the authority of long established decided cases of this Court, which not being manifestly erroneous, have stood for a long period of time unchallenged in this Court and have been always followed. Affecting rights in property they must be treated as having passed into the accepted law of these provinces. Of course where decisions are directly contrary to a statute, it is the duty of a Full Bench to overrule the precious decision even though they might have stood for a very long time. But where the Act is at least ambiguous and the Court does not feel absolutely able to overrule them, it would be unsafe to disturb the course of rulings. No doubt these decisions have been questioned in some of the other High Courts in India, but even there the opinion has varied and in recent times has been converging to the view taken in this Court. The reversion of the estate on remarriage would alter the course of succession and would let the property go to a different individual. Many a reversioner must have refrained from suing immediately on her remarriage in the expectation that succession would open out later on her death. The rulings of this Court must have affected diverse contracts and dealings between man and man. On the principle of stare decisis it is our clear duty to adhere to those rulings so long as the legislature does not intervene or their Lordships of the Privy Council do not rule that they are wrong.

Sulaiman, C. J.

Mukerji, J.

MUKERJI, J.—The following point has been referred for decision to the Full Bench, namely:

> Does a Hindu widow who remarries in accordance with a custom of her caste forfeit thereby her rights in the estate of her first husband.

I take it that in this case the Hindu widow contracted a valid marriage and the marriage was in accordance with and recognised by her caste, and would be recognised by the Courts as a valid marriage.

The question put to us does not say whether we have to consider the question on the basis of Act XV of 1856 (The Hindu Widows' Remarriage Act) or whether we should consider it from the point of view of the Hindu law. In certain cases decided by Courts other than this Court, it has been held that where a Hindu widow remarries validly according to the custom of her caste, she does not forfeit her late husband's estate under the Act (Act XV of 1856) but she does forfeit it under the Hindu Law. As the question put to us is not restricted, we shall have to consider it from both points of view.

To start with, I proceed to consider the question with reference to Act XV of 1856. The Hindu Widows' Remarriage Act of 1856 contains a rather long preamble which indicates that conflicting opinions were held in Hindu society as to the validity of Hindu widows' marriage, and on account of there being some uncertainty about the view that might be taken in the Courts about the validity or otherwise of such marriages, the Governor-General in Council was approached to pass a law legalising such marriages. The preamble is rather long but is very important in order to find out whether the Act was meant or not to apply to the case of those Hindus among whom a custom sanctioned the validity of a widow marriage.

Before I read the preamble I must express my agreement with the opinion which has been expressed from time to time that if there be a conflict between the preamble and the Act itself, the preamble cannot govern the Act. In such cases of conflict, it must be taken that the Legislature in framing the Act has failed to achieve its object and therefore the language of the Act must prevail over the wishes of the Legislature, as expressed in the preamble. As an example I may cite the case of the Mohammadan Waqf Act of 1916 in which there was a conflict between the preamble and the Act; the preamble professed to give the waqf a retrospective effect but the body of the Act failed to convey that idea and it was held that in spite of the preamble, the Act had no retrospective effect. The preamble runs thus:—

> Whereas it is known that, by the law as administered in the Civil Courts as established in the territories in the possession and under the Government > of the East India Company, Hindu widows with certain exceptions are held to be, by reason of their having been once married, incapable of contracting a second valid marriage, and the off-springs of such widws by any second marriage are held to be illegitimate and incapable of inheriting property; and whereas many Hindus believe that this imputed legal incapacity, although it is in accordance with established custom, is not in accordance with a true interpretation of the precepts of their religion, and desire that the Civil Law administered by the courts of Justice shall no longer prevent those Hindus who may be so minded from adopting a different custom, in accordance with the dictates of their own conscience and whereas it is just to relieve all such Hindus from this legal incapacity of which they complain and the removal of all legal obstacles to the marriage of Hindu widows will tend to the promotion of good morals and to the public welfare; it is enacted as follows:

The preamble notes that there are certain exceptions to the rule that the marriages of Hindu widows were held to be illegal and not sanctioned by the Shastras. The preamble then says that it is just to relieve "all such Hindus from this legal incapacity of which they complain" and the Act proceeds to remove the legal obstacles to the marriages of Hindu widows. It is clear therefore that the Legislature wanted to give relief only to such Hindus as complained of their incapacity to contract for their widows a marriage. The Act therefore is an enabling Act and was never meant to create a disability where none existed. But, as I have said, if the body of the Act does create a disability which may not have been intended, that disability will have to be recognised.

Now let us read the Act itself.

The first section legalises the marriages of Hindu widows. It is in most general terms and nothing turns upon the language of this section. The section mentions the history of the Legislation by pointing out that certain Hindus did hold that a widow marriage was against the true interpretation of Hindu Law, while others held that it was in accordance with Hindu Law.

The second section is in most general language and lays down that whenever a widow contracts a second marriage she would forfeit all her right to maintenance or inheritance from or in her late husband's property. If this section were read literally, it would apply to widows who were not Hindus but were Mohammedans or Christians, in fact, to all widows within British India. This could hardly have been intended and therefore this section must be read as being controlled by the preamble. If we have once to bring in the preamble to read the section, should we not see what was the object of the Act as expressed in the preamble? The preamble recognised that there are exceptions where a widow marriage was regarded to be valid and those cases did not require any relief. It follows, therefore, that the Act was meant to apply only to the cases of those Hindus among whom a widow marriage was not permitted by the caste but as regards whom it was contended that although the caste did not permit such a marriage the Shastras permitted it. If we thus read Section 2 and the preamble together, we shall find that there is no conflict between the preamble and Section 2. On the other hand, the preamble helps us to find out the true application of Section 2. Thus read, Section 2, in my opinion, applies only to cases where the custom of the caste does not permit of a valid widow marriage.

It is not difficult to see that the rule of forfeiture or loss of the right of maintenance was enacted by way of a compromise between extreme views. One party contended that a widow marriage was permitted by the Hindu law and another party contended that it was not so permitted and if allowed would create dissension and trouble in the family. The rule therefore was laid down that the widow of a caste where remarriage was not customary may have personally the benefit of the Act but she must cease to have anything to do with her late husband's property so that feuds and disturbances in the family affairs and the property may be avoided.

Whether this be or not the real object and genesis of the rule, it seems to me clear, as already stated, that Section 2 does not apply to the cases of widows who have a right to remarry and who are entitled to remarry validly under the rules of their castes.

Now let us consider the authorities of cases decided in other High Courts.

The learned Judges who have made the reference mentioned some cases, beginning with the case of Har Saran v. Nandi[3]. Upto this date, for a space over 40 years, this Court has consistently held the view that Section 2 of the Hindu Widows' Remarriage Act did not apply to the case of a widow whose remarriage was permitted by her caste. The cases are numerous and at least 11 reported cases have been cited before us. These are:—Har Saran v. Nandi, Ranjit v. Radha Ram[4], Khuddo v. Durga Prashad[5], Gajadhar v. Kausilla[6], Mula v. Partab[7], Mangat v. Bharto[8], Ramdeo v. Kishendei,[9] [1925] A. I. R. All. 440, [1930] A. L. J. 1439, I. L. R. 35 All. 466 and 12 A. L. J. 196.

We have been told that the other High Courts have taken a different view. The cases that have been cited before us are numerous and all the cases do not require any detailed discussion. Thus I propose to examine only the more important ones.

In Akora Suth v. Boreani,[10] a Hindu died leaving a widow, a minor son and a daughter. The son succeeded under the Hindu Law and he died subsequently. Before the son died the widow had married again and on the death of the son claimed the inheritance as the mother. It was held that the suit was maintainable. It appears that there was a difference of opinion between the Judges who heard the case first and there was a Letters Patent Appeal. Sir Barnes Peacock, the Chief Justice, in deciding the Letters Patent Appeal expressed the opinion that the object of the Act was to remove all legal obstacles to the marriage of Hindu widows. In this case when the widow remarried she was not possessed either of her son's property or of her husband's property and therefore she had nothing to forfeit and Section 2 was no bar to her succeeding to the son's estate on the latter's death. This case, therefore, is not in point and does not deal with the question of any remarriage under caste rules and forfeiting property already inherited. Unless there is a discussion of the question it cannot be said that the case is an authority for the proposition which he did not consider and expressly decide.

---

[3] I. L. R. 11 All. 330

[4] I. L. R. 20 All. 476

[5] I. L. R. 29 All. 122

[6] I. L. R. 31 All. 161

[7] I. L. R. 32 All. 489

[8] I. L. R. 49 All. 203

[9] 32 I. C. 338

[10] 2 Beng. L. R. 199

The next case that I consider is that of Matungini Gupta v. Ram Rutton Roy[11]. This case does not consider the position of a widow who married according to the custom of the caste. It was a case where a widow declared that she was not a Hindu and remarried under the Special Marriage Act (Act III of 1872). It was held by the majority of the Full Bench that she forfeited her interest in her first husband's property. The dissenting Judge Prinsep held that the Act applied only to those Hindus who remarried as Hindus and under the Hindu Law. We have nothing to do with the controversy that was raised in that case. When the case was before the Division Bench, Wilson, J. expressed the opinion that if he had to decide the case under the principles of Hindu Law and without reference to express legislative enactments, he would be disposed to hold that widow's estate was determined by her marrying a second time and he thought that this would not in any way be inconsistent with what was held by the Privy Council in the case of Moniram Kolita v. Keri Kolitani[12]. This dictum has been very much relied upon on the second question which I shall have to consider and I will consider it later on. I may however point out here that the lady who remarried was a lady of a twice born class being a Viadya by caste and in Bengal a widow of her caste could not validly remarry according to the popular notions. This case therefore is no authority for the point before us.

The next case from Calcutta is the case of Rasul Jehan Begam v. Ram Surun Singh[13]. This is a two Judge case and it was held by the learned Judges that a Hindu widow on remarriage forfeited the estate inherited from her former husband although according to custom prevailing in her caste a remarriage was permissible. At page 584 the learned Judges remarked that the question whether a widow in whose caste remarriage was permitted lost her late husband's property owing to remarriage did not properly arise before them but they said that if it was necessary, they were prepared to follow the Madras case of Murugayi v. Niramakali[14]. In that case the view was taken which was approved of by Wilson, J. in the case already considered, Matungini Gupta v. Ram Rutton Roy, that a widow took her husband's property as the surviving portion of her husband and when she remarried, it could not be supposed that the law which her caste followed would permit the remarried widow retaining the property. This point was decided, if it was decided at all, on the basis of Hindu Law and not on the basis of Act XV of 1856. In concluding the judgment the learned Judges said that their attention had been drawn to the case of Har Saran v. Nandi of the Allahabad High Court, (already referred to) to the effect that a widow belonging to a caste in which remarriage is permitted did not upon her remarriage forfeit her interest and Section 2 of Act XV of 1856 did not apply. Having said so, they further remarked that it appeared to the Judges that the true position of a Hindu widow inheriting the estate of her husband was not considered in that (Allahabad) case. It follows that the learned Judges

---

[11] I. L. R. 19 Cal. 289 (F.B.)

[12] I. L. R. 5 Cal. 776

[13] I. L. R. 22 Cal. 589

[14] I. L. R. 1 Mad. 226

CIVIL

1932

BHOLA UMAR
v.
KAUSILLA

Mukerji, J.

decided the case on what they supposed were the principles of Hindu Law and not on Act XV of 1856.

The next case is of Ganga Pershad Sahu v. Jhalo[15]. This was a case relating to the right of guardianship of a widow who had remarried according to her caste rules. The Judges had to construe Section 2 of Act XV of 1856 and held that the Act did not apply. At the bottom of page 870 the learned Judges accepted the second contention of the counsel for the lady and quoted the case of Parekh Ranchor v. Vakhat[16] in support of their case. The learned Judges however remarked that the forfeiture of her first husband's property would take place under the Hindu Law. This case therefore does not support the view that there would be a forfeiture under the Act.

In Mohammad Umar v. Mt. Man Kuer[17] their Lordships professed to follow the case of Rasul Jehan Begam v. Ram Surun Singh[18] and held that whether Act XV of 1856 applied or not, there would be a forfeiture under the Hindu Law, see top of page 918 per Sanderson Chief Justice. The same view was expressed by the other Judge. This case therefore does not support the view that the Act applies.

The case of Santala Bewa v. Badaswari Dasi[19] was the case of a widow belonging to a caste who had recently adopted the Hindu customs, being an originally non-Hindu of aboriginal tribe; yet it was held that the widow forfeited her first husband's property under the Hindu Law. At page 735 the learned Judges remarked that in their opinion the case was governed by the ordinary Hindu Law and they further said that Section 2 contemplated the case of any widow including the widow of a class among which remarriages are allowed. The case does not discuss any principle, does not discuss the language of the Act and follows what are supposed to be the earlier cases of the Court. I have already pointed out that some restriction will have to be placed on the word "A widow" in Section 2 of Act XV of 1856, for it would, otherwise, cover the case of a Mohammedan widow or a Christian widow who, nobody would contend, came within its true meaning.

As a summary of the Galcutta cases we find that the consensus of opinion is that Hindu Law governs even those among whom a widow remarriage is permitted and there would be a forfeiture under the Hindu law whether the Act of 1856 applied or not. There is no discussion anywhere as to the effect of the preamble and the effect of the recognition by the Legislature that there were certain exceptions in which a widow's marriage was regarded as valid.

Now let us look to the Bombay cases. They are not many that were cited before us. In Parekh Ranchor v. Vakhat[20] which has already been cited in connection with a Calcutta case it was held that Section 3 of the Act did not apply to the case of a widow who had remarried.

The next case is the Full Bench case, Vithu v. Gobinda[21]. Will all respect the authority of this case is very much vitiated by the large assumption that was made that throughout India the practice prevailed that a widow of a caste among whom remarriage was allowed forfeited her first husband's property. This fact, it was further assumed, was known to the Legislature and was acted upon in framing the Act. We may however point out that in none of the reported cases coming before this Court the plea was ever raised that the widow claiming the inheritance of her first husband had forfeited, as a matter of custom, her husband's property. This case in 22 Bom. 321 goes to the full length of supporting the contention that Act XV of 1856 applies. One of the learned Judges pointed out that the preamble was at variance with the body of the Act and therefore must give way to the latter. I have already discussed the point and pointed out that such was not the case.

---

[15] I. L. R. 38 Cal. 862

[16] I. L. R. 11 Bom. 119

[17] I. L. R. 21 Cal. W. N. 906

[18] I. L. R. 22 Cal. 589

[19] I. L. R. 50 Cal. 727

[20] I. L. R. 11 Bom. 119

[21] I. L. R. 22 Bom. 321

Coming to Madras the case of Murugayi v. Viramakali[22] is based on the view of the Hindu law that a widow on remarriage forfeits her first husband's property. The matter came before a Full Bench in Vitta v. Chatakondu[23]. Three learned Judges took part in this case and there is no unanimity on any point decided. In this case a Hindu widow had become a Mohammedan and had remarried as a Mohammedan. It was held by two learned judges, Seshagiri Ayyar, J. dissenting, that the claimant forfeited her right under the Hindu Law. The two other learned Judges held that Act XV of 1856 did not apply, the third learned Judge being of a contrary opinion. Seshagiri Ayyar, J. was of opinion that neither the Hindu Law applied nor Section 2 of Act XV applied and there was no forfeiture. It can hardly be said that the Madras view is that Section 2 of Act XV of 1856 is applicable to the case before us. The question of custom does not seem to have been discussed in this case. In a later case of Gajapali Naida v. Teevammal[24] a learned single Judge held that Section 2 applied even where remarriage was permitted by the caste.

Coming to the Lahore High Court only one case has been cited before us, namely, the case of Mt. Parji v. Mangta[25]. It appears to have been held there that the Act did not apply in the circumstances of the case like this but there would be a forfeiture unless a contrary custom was proved.

In Patna the view seems to have been held that Section 2 applied to all cases of Hindu widows' remarriages even if remarriage of a widow was permitted by the caste. In this case the widow had become a Mohammedan and had then remarried. The learned Judges remarked that it was a matter of first impression and that the decisions in Calcutta, Madras and Bombay were unanimous that a Hindu widow lost her property. As pointed out in this judgment as to the decisions in Calcutta, Madras and Bombay, it cannot be said that the three High Courts are unanimous that the Act applied. In the Madras Full Bench case two learned judges held that the Act did not apply. In the Calcutta Full Bench case of Matungini Gupta v. Ram Rutton Roy[26] there is no unanimity and in Bombay, Vithu v. Gobinda[27], the Act was held to be applicable because it was based on an alleged custom believed to have been universal in the whole of India. Then the learned Judge who delivered the judgment of the Bench agreed

---

[22] I. L. R. 1 Mad. 226

[23] I. L. R. 41 Mad. 1078

[24] A. I. R. 1929, Mad. 765

[25] [1930] A. I. R. Lah. 1028

[26] I. L. R. 19 Cal. 289

[27] I. L. R. 22 Bom. 321

CIVIL
1932
BHOLA UMAR
v.
KAUSILLA
Mukerji, J.

with the majority of the judges in the Calcutta Full Bench case and held that Section 2 applied. But he mainly based his judgment on the Hindu Law. He said > even if this interpretation (of Section 2 of Act XV of 1856) be wrong —in such circumstances we are relegated in coming to a decision to the general rule of Hindu law.

The learned judge does not discuss the effect of a custom and indeed it was not a case relating to a custom.

I have tried to show above that on an independent reading of Act XV of 1856 it is difficult to say that Section 2 applies to the case before us. I would decide accordingly and answer the question in the negative so far as Act XV of 1856 is concerned.

Now I turn to the question of Hindu law. I have read the judgments of the various High Courts which deal with the Hindu law as affecting forfeiture of the widows' property and I am afraid I cannot concur with the view taken. The main argument advanced is this, a widow inherits because she is one-half of the body of her husband, and if she remarries, she ceases to be one-half of her husband's body and, therefore, forfeit the right of inheritance. Nothing can be more fallacious, with all respect, than this argument when applied to the case of people who permit the remarriage of their widows. If these people believed that a wife was one-half of the body of her husband and on the death of her husband one-half of his body survives in the widow, how could they possibly have allowed the widow to remarry, how could possibly one, who was one-half of one man's body, have become the one-half of another man's body by second marriage? If a true rule of Hindu law be that a widow inherits because of being one-half of her husband's body, then a widow's marriage cannot possibly be legal under the Hindu law. Yet not only is there a considerable body of opinion which regards the remarriage of a widow valid according to the Hindu Shastras, but also there is a considerable body of people who are supposed to be within the fold of the Hindu religion and yet they permit widow marriages. It must follow that those people who allow their widows to make a valid remarriage never believe in the doctrine that a wife is a one-half of the body of the husband and that the widow survives the husband as one-half of his body.

If we look at the discussion in the Mitakshara, for example, as to the right of a wife to inherit, we shall see how difficult the struggle of the author of the Mitakshara was in granting a right of inheritance to the widow. In the Mitakshara as translated by Colebrooke, Chapter 2, Section 1, Paragraphs 5 to 29 are devoted to discussions of the conflicting texts and the conclusion is drawn in Paragraph 30 that a chaste wife inherits. Thereafter the author discusses the question whether the widow inherits only a portion just enough for her maintenance or the whole of the husband's property. A further discussion and struggle commences and in the last Paragraph 39, the conclusion is drawn as follows:

> Therefore it is a settled rule that a wedded wife being chaste takes the whole estate of a man who being separated from his co-heirs and not subsequently united with them dies leaving no male issue.

Vijnaneswar does not even quote, much less does he consider the text of Brihaspati quoted by Jimut Vahana in Dayabhag (Chap. XI, Sec. 1, Para. 2) which says that a wife inherits because she is one-half of her husband's body. In view of this discussion of what are all regarded as sacred but conflicting texts, how can you say that this is the particular reason why a widow is permitted under the Hindu law to inherit and because that rule is broken in the case of a remarriage, the widow must forfeit what she has lawfully inherited? The Calcutta cases deal with Jimut Vahana's commentary on the Daya Bhag, and even there you will find a discussion of the contradictory texts, some laying down the right of a widow to inherit and others denying it. The author of the Daya Bhagh devotes no less than 66 paragraphs to the discussion and in Paragraph 67 says: "Thus has the widow's right of succession been explained". See Chapter XI of Daya Bhagh (translation) as published by V. Kalyano Ram Iyer and Co., edition of 1911 with introduction by Mr. Setlur. The man would indeed be bold who would say that the only reason why a wife inherits under the Hindu law on the death of her husband, is that she is one-half of her late husband's body. That no doubt is one of the reasons given by Jimut Vahan when he held that the widow should inherit. I have already pointed out that there was a considerable body of opinion against the right of a widow to inherit.

The fact of the matter is that Hindu law was a growing set of rules and at any particular time, the practice of a particular body of people residing at a particular place generally determined the character of the law. It is for this reason that so many schools of law have arisen, although each school of law holds in veneration the same sacred laws known as Smirthis.

It is a matter of history and it is well known that the Hindu religion holds within its fold many people who have never had in any sense of the term, anything to do with the Aryan civilization. When the (Hindu) Aryans came to India and conquered the aboriginal races and spread their dominion, they naturally drew within their folds many of the aboriginal tribes who gradually out of sheer veneration started following some of the customs and manners of the Aryan races. The Aryan races never admitted most of these people entirely into their own folds and kept them apart by calling them shudras, as persons belonging to the fourth class. It was only the privilege of the first three classes, the Brahmans, the Kshatrias and Vaishias to read the Shastras and the sacred laws and to abide by them. The duties of the Shudras as laid down by Manu was to serve the three higher classes. Chapter 1, Verse 91. Indeed Manu himself says in the clearest terms that his laws were meant mostly for the benefit of the three regenerate or higher classes and not for the shudras. The Vedic rights were meant for the three higher castes alone who were known as twice born ones. In Chapter 2, Sl. 24, Manu states that the twice born people were to make their home within a particular area known as Arya Varta or 'the country of the Aryans' but the Shudra was allowed to adopt any country as his home. From Sl. 26, Chapter 2 commence the rules for the purification of a child of the Dwija or twice born class and the rules that fully relate to the duties of the twice born. You may read through the whole of Manu and you will find that although in the beginning of his Smirthi he says that he is laying down the rules for all the four castes, he concerns himself with only the three higher castes and only distantly with the Shudras.

This being the case, it is not correct that the fine reasons which have been advanced from time to time by the sages as the basis of the Hindu law apply equally to the Shudras, simply because the latter call themselves Hindus.

As I have already observed, if we follow one of the reasons given by the founder of the Bengal school for the right of a widow to inherit, namely, her being one-half of her husband's body, she can never remarry and her remarriage cannot be valid. Thus it is clear that the caste which allows a widow to remarry does not recognise the reason given by some of the Rishis for the right of inheritance of a widow and therefore it is not right to say that as those reasons fail in the case of a remarriage, there should be a forfeiture. The castes amongst whom widow remarriage is recognised are mostly treated as Shudras and you cannot apply the fine reasonings of the Rishis for deducing the logical result of the acts of those who are practically beyond the closed precincts of the laws for the three twice born castes. Gautama in Chapter XI, Sloks 19 and 20 says that the administration of justice shall be regulated by the Vedas, the Institutes of the Sacred Law, the Angas, the Uppavedas and the Puran. The laws of the country, castes, and families, which are not opposed to these sacred records have also authority. Cultivators, traders, herdsmen, money-lenders and artisans have authority to lay down rules for their respective classes—See page 25 of Ghose's Hindu Law, third edition Vol. 1. Again there is a text of Vyasa quoted in Vyavahara Mayukha which runs as follows (see the same book, page 35):—

> The custom of traders, artisans, etc. and those who earn their livelihood by means of agriculture or the stage are not capable of being ascertained by others. Disputes among them should be decided by those of their own class.

I think I have said enough to establish that even the framers of the Hindu law never professed to lay down rules for those who were never really within the narrow fold of the three regenerate classes.

In the case of Santla Bewa v. Badaswari Dassi[28] the dispute was among Rajbansis and they were originally non-Aryans belonging to Kooch Behar and a non-Hindu aboriginal tribe. It was because they had outwardly adopted Hinduism as their religion the strict Hindu law was applied to them by the two learned Judges of the Calcutta High Court and on the ground of oneness of the husband and wife's body a widow was deprived of what she had inherited from her first husband. With all respect this was not administering the law of the parties before the court but the law of a different people. Mr. T. N. Mittra in his Tagore Law Lectures delivered as early as 1879 on Hindu Widows (at page 214) makes the following observations:

> I have been considering up to this time the marriage of widows as authorised by Act XV of 1856. There are however certain classes of Hindus among whom the marriage of a widow was allowed by custom. These I

---

[28] I. L. R. 50 Cal 727

CIVIL

1932

BHOLA UMAR
v.
KAUSILLA

Mukerji, J.

take it will be governed by the custom on the subject rather than by Act XV of 1856, as among them the remarriage of the widow owes its origin to custom so the incidents connected with that marriage must be governed by the same custom.

This opinion implies that there can be no forfeiture unless there is a custom to that effect.

Loss of caste or ostracism for society or community for acts which bring on "degradation" under the Hindu Law, cannot now involve loss of property (Act XXI of 1850).

Under no system of law other than the strict Hindu law, as the orthodox Hindus understand it, it is possible to say that a widow who has inherited some property from her husband should forfeit it, because of her remarriage. No Mohammedan, no Christian can think of it. Therefore it cannot be said that it is a matter of natural justice that a widow on remarriage should forfeit the property of her first husband. Unless therefore we have got most cogent reasons or a clear rule of law, for ordering a forfeiture, we must not do so. On the other hand, the widow is authorised to hold her inheritance for her life, by the following text of Katyayana. It has been held by the Privy Council that the injunction that she shall maintain chastity was only a direction the breach of which did not entail a forfeiture, see the case of Moniram Kolita v. Keri Kolitani[20] (quoted in Sarkar's Hindu Law, 6th Ed., p. 613).

There is yet another ground for holding in favour of the widow. Assuming that the strict rule of Hindu law applies to a caste which does not recognise the strict Hindu Law in that case, the remarriage of a widow can only be regarded as an immoral act. The orthodox Hindus would not recognise the marriage as valid although the caste people may recognise it as valid and although the British Indian Courts may regard it as valid. It has been held by their Lordships of the Privy Council that a widow who has once inherited her husband's property does not forfeit it by reason of her subsequent immorality. The widow after inheritance may lead openly the life of a common prostitute yet she may not forfeit her property under the Hindu Law as interpreted by their Lordships of the Privy Council. Yet it is said that if instead of leading the life of a common prostitute, the widow should remarry and thereby lead what the world generally regards as a moral life, must it follow that she should forfeit her first husband's property? The orthodox Hindu, as I have said, does not regard the marriage as valid, to him it is no marriage; then why should the marriage be regarded as anything worse than the grossest immorality? Can it be an act of justice to say that living as the wife of one single man would be followed by a punishment, while the grossest immorality cannot be? It was argued that this may be so but such was the Hindu Law.

I as a Hindu Judge refuse to believe that such is the Hindu Law. I emphatically deny that such is the Hindu Law. The Hindu Law lays down not at one place, but at many places, that the Shashtras can never be interpreted apart from dictates of conscience and reason. In Chapter 2, Sl. 12, Manu says:—which when translated would mean "the Vedas, the Smirthi, good conduct and the dictates of one's own conscience are called by the wise the four sources of dharma. Dharma is nothing but good law. In Sanskrit the word 'dharma' is the proper rendering for the word law. Again Brihaspati says:—

---

[20] I. L. R. 5 Cal. 776

(See Ghosh's Hindu Law 3rd Ed., p. 1034) which when translated means "do not arrive at a conclusion by merely discussing the Shastra or following its letter for if you follow the law or the shastras without recourse to reasons, you incur thereby a sin." Again Narada says:—

Ch. IV, Sec. 40 quoted by Ghosh in his Hindu Law, 3rd Ed., p. 1030. This means that where the texts of Shastras are conflicting, one should apply one's own reason. In the teeth of these injunctions to follow your conscience and your reasons, are you justified in saying that it is the Hindu Law that the grossest immorality would not entail a forfeiture of property and yet a remarriage would?

The only answer can be an emphatic negative.

For the reasons given above I hold strongly that under the Hindu Law as strictly interpreted or as liberally interpreted, there can be no forfeiture and the answer to the question must be in the negative.

King, J.

KING, J.—The chief question for our determination is whether a Hindu widow, who remarries in accordance with the custom of her caste, forfeits thereby her rights in the estate of her first husband under Section 2 of the Hindu Widows Remarriage Act, 1856. In other words, the question is whether Section 2 of Act XV of 1856 applies to a Hindu widow, who can remarry in accordance with the custom of her caste.

The language of Section 2 is certainly very wide, and if the section is read alone, without regard to the preamble and to the other sections of the Act, it would undoubtedly apply to the present case. Section 2 purports to lay down a general rule that all rights and interests which "any widow" may have in her deceased husband's property shall upon her remarriage cease and determine, as if she had then died. The words "any widow" would not only cover the case of a Hindu widow who is authorised by custom to remarry, but would also apply to a Christian or Muslim widow who had never been a Hindu at any time. I think it could not be seriously argued that a woman who has been a Muslim from her childhood and who married a Muslim husband who died in her life-time would forfeit all rights in her deceased husband's property under Section 2 of the Hindu Widows Remarriage Act if she married again. It is clear therefore that the wide language of Section 2 must be controlled and restricted with reference to the preamble and to the provisions of the Act as a whole. The only question is how far should the language be restricted. The object and the scope of the Act can be ascertained from the preamble. The Act is described as "an Act to remove all legal obstacles to the marriage of Hindu widows". It is further explained that by the law administered in the civil courts, Hindu widows with certain exceptions are held to be, by reason of their having been once married, incapable of contracting a second valid marriage, and as many Hindus believe that this imputed legal incapacity is not in accordance with a true interpretation of the precepts of their religion, and as it is just to relieve all such Hindus from this legal incapacity of which they complain and the removal of all legal obstacles to the marriage of Hindu widows will tend to the promotion of good morals and the public welfare, therefore the Act has been passed. It is clear therefore that the Legislature intended to remove all legal obstacles to the marriage of Hindu widows. It could not have been intended to apply to Christian widows or Muslim widows who were able to remarry without taking advantage of the provisions of the Act. For the same reason I think the Act could not have been intended to apply to Hindu widows who were able to remarry in accordance with the custom of their caste without taking advantage of the provisions of this Act. Sections 1 and 2 seem to be closely connected and enact that a Hindu widow who is not permitted by custom or by any interpretation of Hindu Law to remarry may nevertheless remarry, but if she does so she must forfeit all rights and interests in her deceased husband's property. In other words, I think Section 2 applies only to those Hindu widows who would not have been able to remarry if the Act had not been passed, and does not apply to Hindu widows who can remarry in accordance with the custom, quite apart from any thing contained in the Act. The act is an enabling Act for the benefit of Hindu widows who would not otherwise be allowed to remarry, and I think it could not have been the intention of the legislature to impose a penalty of forfeiture upon Hindu widows who can remarry in accordance with the custom and who need not rely upon the provisions of the Act to validate their remarriage. The Act was intended to remove legal obstacles to the marriage of Hindu widows and not to impose liability upon widows who could remarry apart from the provisions of the Act.

This interpretation of Section 2 of the Act has been consistently adopted by the Allahabad High Court in a long series of decisions beginning with Harsaran Das v. Nandi[80]. Certain judges have expressed doubts regarding the correctness of this interpretation, but the current of authority has consistently been followed.

There has been a difference of opinion between the judges of the Calcutta High Court on this point. The most important case is Matungini Gupta v. Ram Ratan Roy[81] which was decided by a Full Bench. In that case a Hindu widow married a second husband not a Hindu, in the form provided by Act III of 1872. The majority of the Full Bench held that by her second marriage, she forfeited her interest in her first husband's estate under Section 2 of Act XV of 1856. The ruling is not directly applicable to the question now under consideration because it did not deal with the case of a Hindu widow who remarried in accordance with the custom of her caste. The learned judges however had to consider the meaning and scope of Section 2 of Act XV of 1856 and some of their observations are applicable to the present question. Wilson Judge in his referring order (at page 294) holds that Section 2 refers to any widow falling within the class to which the Act applies and (at page 293) he holds that the Act applies to Hindu widows other than those who could, without the aid of the Act, remarry according to the custom of their caste. His view is therefore that Section 2 does not apply to a Hindu widow who could remarry without the aid of the Act according to the custom of her caste. .Banerji judge (on page 296) holds that the words "any widow" in Section 2 must be taken to mean any widow to whom the Act applies and for whom it was intended. It is doubtful whether he would have held the section to apply to a Hindu widow who could marry according to the custom of her caste, as it could hardly be held that the Act was intended for such a widow. The majority of the Full Bench interpreted Section 2 in a wider sense and held that the section applied to all persons who being Hindus become widows. According to that interpretation Section 2 would no doubt apply to a Hindu widow who is entitled to remarry according to the custom of her caste, but it must be remembered that the learned judges were not directly concerned with that question. Prinsep Judge dissented from the opinion of the majority and held that Section 2 was limited only to the cases provided for by the Act, namely, Hindu widows remarrying the Hindus under Hindu law as provided by that Act. In his view, therefore, Section 2 would not apply to a Hindu widow remarrying according to custom without the aid of the Act. It will be seen therefore that there was a conflict of opinion between the learned judges on the point whether Section 2 would be applicable to a Hindu widow who could remarry without the aid of the Act.

[80] I. L. R. 11 All. 330

[81] I. L. R. 19 Cal. 289

In Rasul Jahan Begum v. Ram Saran Singh[32] it was held that a Hindu widow on remarriage forfeits the estate inherited from her former husband although according to custom prevailing in her caste a remarriage is permissible. This decision is based upon the general principles of Hindu Law and not upon Section 2 of Act XV of 1856. It is true that at the end of the judgment their Lordships referred to Har Saran Das v. Nandi and dissented from it, but they did not expressly dissent from the view that Section 2 of the Act does not apply. Their opinion seems to have been that whether Section 2 applies or not a Hindu widow upon her remarriage forfeits her interest in her deceased husband's estate under the general principles of Hindu Law.

In Ganga Prasad Sahu v. Jhalo[33] the learned judges appear to agree with the Bombay High Court in holding that Section 3 of Act XV of 1856 has no application to a case where the widow belongs to a caste in which remarriage is permitted the object of the statute being to enable widows, who were unable to marry previously, to remarry, the statute ought to be considered as a whole, and such of its provisions as impose a disability ought not to be applied to cases where it is needless for the parties to seek the benefit of the provisions which recognise the right of a widow to remarry. They proceed to point out however, that even if Section 2 does not apply to such a case the same result might follow from an application of the fundamental rules of Hindu Law.

In Santola Bewa v. Badaswari Dasi[34] it was held that a Rajbansi widow after remarriage forfeits her deceased husband's estate even though there is a custom of remarriage in her caste. The learned judges held that Section 2 of the Act includes even a widow of a caste in which remarriages are permitted by caste custom. In support of their view they state that it is a fact that in almost all castes in which a remarriage is allowed by

---

[32] I. L. R. 22 Cal. 589

[33] I. L. R. 38 Cal. 862

[34] I. L. R. 50 Cal. 727

CIVIL

1932

BHOLA UMAR
v.
KAUSILLA

King, J.

custom such marriages are followed by forfeiture of the first husband's estate. No authority is given for the statement of fact and there is reason to doubt as I shall presently show whether the alleged custom of forfeiture of the first husband's estate is by any means so universal as alleged.

The earlier view of the Bombay High Court in Parekh Ranchor v. Bai Vakhat[35] was that Section 3 of Act XV of 1856 has no application to the case of a widow belonging to a caste in which remarriage is permitted. If Section 3 does not apply to such a case, I think it would follow that Section 2 would also not apply. In the later Full Bench case Virthu v. Govinda[36] the contrary view was taken, and it was expressly held that under Section 2 a Hindu widow belonging to a caste in which remarriage has always been allowed who has inherited property from her son, forfeits by remarriage her interest in such property. In discussing the interpretation of Act XV of 1856 it was admitted that the preamble to the Act was at variance with its enacting clauses. The preamble evidently favoured the view that the Act was not intended for all classes of Hindu widows, whereas the enacting clauses are as wide and general as they can be. Their Lordships observed that the variation between the preamble and the enacting clauses was not the result of any oversight, but that the legislature deliberately used the more general words in Section 2 of the Act, because it was found that while the custom of prohibiting remarriage obtained in certain castes, and did not obtain in others, in the matter of forfeiture by the widow of all interest in her first husband's estate, there was no such divergence. They referred to certain researches into the customs of castes in the Bombay Dekhan which indicated that there was not a single caste in which any custom to the contrary prevailed. Hence their Lordships concluded that Section 2 was only declaring by statute what was already a universal practice. With due respect to their Lordships I do not think it can safely be inferred that even if the legislature knew that among the tribes or castes of the Bombay Dekhan a custom was in force that a Hindu widow should forfeit her rights in her husband's estate upon her remarriage, this would furnish an adequate ground for enacting by a statute applicable to the whole of British India, the rule that forfeiture of interest in her deceased husband's estate must be a necessary consequence of the remarriage of every Hindu widow whatever the custom of her tribe or caste may be. The Bombay Dekhan is only a small part of British India and it appears that the rule of forfeiture is by no means universal in this province at least among those castes in which widows are permitted to remarry. In most of the long series of cases decided by the Allahabad High Court the plea was never raised, in cases where a custom of remarriage was admitted, that remarriage entailed forfeiture of interests in her deceased husband's estate. If forfeiture of such interests was a necessary incident of the custom of remarriage it is inconceivable that such a customary incident should not have been pleaded. In Ranjit v. Radha Rani[37] a custom of forfeiture upon remarriage was alleged, but it was held to have been disproved upon the evidence. In Mangat v. Bharto[38] it was held that when a widow re-

[35] I. L. R. 11 Bom. 119 at 130

[36] 22 Bom. 321

[37] I. L. R. 20 All. 476

[38] I. L. R. 49 All. 203

married according to custom then it was customary for her to retain her interest in her deceased husband's estate. The same custom, of retaining her interest in her deceased husband's estate, was proved in Mst. Ramdei v. Mst. Kishen Dei[39]. In Narpat v. Janka[40] it was held that forfeiture was not one of legal incidents of the custom under which an Ahir widow is allowed to remarry. It appears, therefore, from an examination of the cases on this point in the United Provinces that where the custom of remarriage has been admitted or proved, then the custom of forfeiture has usually not been even pleaded as a legal incident of the custom of remarriage; when it has been pleaded it has never been proved and in some cases a contrary custom has been proved affirmatively. In my opinion therefore it is erroneous to assume that in cases where Hindu widows are allowed by custom to remarry forfeiture of interests in their deceased husband's estate is universally recognised as a legal incident of the custom of remarriage. It cannot therefore be safely inferred that the legislature when enacting Section 2 of Act XV of 1856 in very wide terms were only giving statutory sanction to a universal custom. The authority of the Bombay and Calcutta rulings is weakened by their reliance upon an erroneous assumption.

There has been some difference of opinion in the Madras High Court on the question whether Section 2 would apply to a case of this sort. The most important case is Vitta Tayaramma v. Chata Kondu Sivayya[41]. This dealt with a case where a Hindu widow became a Mohammedan and married a Mohammedan husband, so it is not directly in point. But the views expressed by the judges on the applicability of Section 2 have some bearing upon the question before us. Phillips, J. (at page 1080) held that Section 2 was applicable to the facts of that case. Krishnan, J. took a contrary view. He remarked that having regard to the scope and objection of the Act as stated in the preamble and seeing that it is a purely enabling Act, its provisions should not be applied to affect the property of persons who do not and could not take advantage of it. He came to the conclusion that the words "remarriage" in Section 2 referred only to a remarriage under the Act and not to any remarriage whatsoever. He clearly held that Section 2 would not apply to the case of a Hindu widow who is permitted by custom to remarry, and he dissented from the reasoning in the Bombay Full Bench case in the following words:

> With all deference I am to follow this method of interpretation, nor am I satisfied that the practice of widows forfeiting their right in their first husband's property on remarriage is so universal in India as is stated. If there are castes which allow widows to remarry and keep their estates at the same time (and I am not sure there are not any) I can see no reason to think that the legislature in enacting Act XV of 1856 intended to interfere with the rights of such widow.

I emphatically endorse these remarks. Wallis, J. thought that Section 2 is wide enough to cover the case of any Hindu widow remarrying, whether or not the marriage would otherwise be prohibited by any custom or interpretation of Hindu Law. The other two learned judges, Oldfield, J. and Sheshagiri Ayyar, J., both held that Section 2 would not apply to the facts of the case before them and the remarks of Oldfield, J. would also clearly apply to the case of a Hindu widow permitted by custom to remarry.

---

[39] 32 I. C. 338

[40] 24 O. C. 11

[41] I. L. R. 41 Mad. 1078

In view of this conflict of opinion it cannot be said that the Madras High Court are committed to the view that Section 2 applies to Hindu widows permitted by custom to remarry.

The Lahore High Court in Mst. Parji v. Mongta[42] held that the Act does not apply to the case of a Hindu widow who remarries according to the custom of her caste. The Patna High Court in Mst. Suraj Jote Kuar v. Mst. Attar Kumari[43] took the contrary view following the Calcutta High Court in Matungini Gupta v. Ram Rutton Roy[44]. The Judicial Commissioner's court and Chief Court of Oudh have consistently taken the view that Section 2 would not apply to a case of this sort. I may refer to Narpat v. Janka[45], Bhagwan Din v. Indrani[46] and Ram Lal v. Mst. Jwala[47].

In spite of the fact that certain judges of certain other High Courts have taken a contrary view I think the long series of Allahabad rulings which take the view that Section 2 of the Act does not apply to the case of a widow who is permitted to remarry by the custom of her caste, are correct. There is no adequate ground for upsetting the law which has been settled by judicial authority in this province.

A further question arises whether the widow upon her remarriage would not forfeit her interest in her deceased husband's estate under the general principles of Hindu Law even if she did not do so under Section 2 of Act XV of 1856.

It appears to me that the general principles of strict Hindu law could not be properly applicable to a caste in which a custom of remarriage is admitted. If the members of the caste recognise the remarriage of a widow as valid then it follows that they do not accept the theories of orthodox Hinduism which would make a legal remarriage impossible. If such theories are rejected by the caste for the purpose of permitting remarriage, it seems illogical to invoke the very same theories for the purpose of holding that if the widow does remarry, then she must forfeit her rights in her deceased husband's estate. Mukerji, J. has dealt with this aspect of the case at length, and I need only say that I concur in the view which he has expressed. In my opinion if there is a recognised custom permitting a widow to remarry then there must also be a custom either of retention of interests or forfeiture of interests in her deceased husband's estate. Retention or forfeiture of interests is merely a legal incident of the custom of remarriage, and in cases where a Hindu widow's right to remarry is governed by the custom of her caste, then I think the question of retention or forfeiture of her interests in her deceased husband's estate must also be governed by custom. Unless a custom of forfeiture is proved, then the widow would retain the interests which have vested in her.

[42] A. I. R. 1930, Lah. 1023

[43] I. L. R. 1 Pat. 706

[44] 19 Cal. 289

[45] 24 Oudh Cases 11

[46] 24 O. C. 297

[47] I. L. R. 3 Luck. 610

CIVIL

1932

BHOLA UMAR v. KAUSILLA

King, J.

My answer to the reference is: "No, unless a custom is proved whereby the widow forfeits her rights in the estate of her first husband in consequence of her remarriage."

BY THE COURT—In our opinion Section 2 Act XV of 1856 does not apply to the case of those widows who are entitled under the custom of their caste to remarry and are not bound to take advantage of the provisions of the Act. Accordingly there is no forfeiture of the Hindu widow's estate on remarriage under the Act in such a case.

We are further of opinion that the proof of mere custom of remarriage would not be sufficient to involve forfeiture under the Hindu law, and that it would be necessary for the party claiming that the estate has been forfeited on account of remarriage to prove that there is a custom of such forfeiture in such a contingency.

Let our answer to the reference be sent to the Bench concerned.

Reference answered

PRIVY COUNCIL

THE AUSTRALIAN INVESTMENT TRUST, LIMITED
versus
THE STRAND AND PITT STREET PROPERTIES, LIMITED*

CIVIL

1932

July 7

LORD TOMLIN
LORD THANKERTON
LORD MACMILLAN
LORD WRIGHT
SIR JOHN WALLIS

Company—Shares—Agreement to pay commission or discount for subscription of—Illegal—Agreement to underwrite—Payment of commission or discount—Illegal.

An agreement by a company to pay commission to a person in consideration of his subscribing in praesenti for a definite number of shares in the company's capital would be ultra vires the company. The law enacts that every member who takes shares in the company in return for cash shall either pay or become liable to contribute their full nominal value and an arrangement whereby he is allowed a rebate or discount on the amount payable by him for the shares for which he agreed to subscribe is illegal. An agreement to underwrite under which a party agrees to take up by way of subscription in a new company or new issue a certain number of shares if and so far as not applied for by the public, stands on the same footing and a payment of any commission or discount as a consideration for an agreement to underwrite is illegal and not binding on the company. Ooregum Gold Mining Co. of India v. Roper, [1892] A. C. 125 followed. Re Licensed Victuallers' Mutual Trading Association ex. p. Audain, 42 Ch. D. I. distinguished.

APPEAL from a decision of the Supreme Court of New South Wales.

G. T. Simonds and J. H. Stamp for the appellants.

F. D. Merton, K.C. and G. A. Rink for the respondents.

The following judgment was delivered by

Lord Tomlin

LORD TOMLIN—This is an appeal brought pursuant to leave granted by the Supreme Court of New South Wales from an order dated April 9, 1931, of that Court in its equitable jurisdiction (Long Innes, J.), allowing the respondents' demurrer to the appellants' statement of claim in the action.

---

*P. C. A. 116 of 1931

In the action the appellants are seeking to have the share register of the respondents rectified by the deletion therefrom of the name of the appellants as the holders of 16,308 shares of £1 in the capital of the respondents.

The question at issue is whether an underwriting agreement made on April 15, 1929, and subsequently adopted by the respondents pursuant to which the shares in question were allotted to the appellants is, as the appellants allege, ultra vires the respondents.

Both parties to the appeal are companies limited by shares incorporated in New South Wales under the provisions of the New South Wales Companies Acts, 1899 to 1918.

The New South Wales Companies Acts, 1899 to 1918, contain no provision expressly authorising the payment of underwriting commissions such as that first introduced in England by Section 8 of the Companies Act, 1900, and now embodied in Section 43 of the Companies Act, 1929, and both sides agree that the law applicable in New South Wales to the question involved in this appeal can be treated as identical with that which prevailed in England before Section 8 of the Companies Act, 1900, came into operation.

It is upon a consideration of the English law as it stood before Section 8 of the Companies Act, 1900, came into operation, that the learned judge in the Court below reached his conclusion, and that their Lordships have now to determine the appeal.

The facts as appearing in the statement of claim demurred to are in effect as hereinafter stated.

On April 15, 1929, by means of two letters the first from the appellants to one Keith Williams as trustee for a company then about to be formed and registered and the other from Keith Williams to the appellants an agreement for the underwriting by the appellants of a proposed issue of capital of the proposed company was entered into.

The first of such letters was as follows:—

> STRAND & PITT STREET PROPERTIES LIMITED
>
> (A Company about to be formed and registered under the provisions of the New South Wales Companies Acts 1899—1918 and herein referred to as 'the Company'.)
>
> CAPITAL: £250,000 Shares of £1 each.
>
> To KEITH WILLIAMS, Esquire,
> 17, O'Connell Street,
> Sydney, N. S. W.
> (as Trustee for the Company).
>
> Sir,
>
> 1. With reference to the proposal to offer one hundred and seventy-five thousand ordinary shares in the Company to the public for subscription at One pound per share and for the considerations hereinafter mentioned THE AUSTRALIAN INVESTMENT TRUST LIMITED a Company formed and incorporated under the New South Wales Companies Acts and carrying on business at Sydney aforesaid (hereinafter referred to as 'the Trust') hereby underwrites the whole of the said One hundred and seventy-five thousand shares so to be offered with a right to make a firm and irrevocable application for sixty thousand of such shares.

Civil

1932

The Australian Investment Trust, Limited v. The Strand and Pitt Street Properties Limited

Lord Tomlin

2. The Trust's application and subscription are to be on the terms of the Company's prospectus to be finally settled and issued PROVIDED ALWAYS that it shall be issued within sixty days from the date hereof and that such Prospectus as finally settled and issued does not differ in any material particular from the draft prospectus as now published a copy of which is annexed hereto and signed by Frederick John Leslie Dunlop on behalf of the trust.

3. The Trust's firm application for sixty thousand shares or any part thereof if and when made is to be viewed as marked in relief of its underwriting and in respect to such underwriting the Trust or its nominee is not to be allotted any greater number of shares than the number which it has underwritten.

4. All applications which may be initialled by or for the Trust and (subject to that which is hereinafter mentioned) approved by you and sent in by the Trust to you or to the Company prior to the time fixed by the prospectus for closing the list of subscribers are to be applied primarily in relief of the Trust's underwriting and shall not be reckoned as subscriptions by the public ALWAYS PROVIDED that prior to such closing due notice is given to you by the Trust that it requires such initialled applications to be so applied as in relief of its own application.

5. All such applications as are mentioned in the last preceding paragraph shall be approved and accepted by the Company provided that they are presented on a form of application approved by the Company that the applicants are responsible persons and that the applications are accompanied by application moneys according to the terms of the Prospectus. In the event of any dispute arising as to whether any applicant is a responsible person every applicant shall be deemed to be a responsible person if any Bank be of opinion that such applicant is a responsible person or company to take up the number of shares applied for.

6. The Trust hereby irrevocably, authorises you or the company by any one of its officers in the name or on behalf of the Trust to sign and put in an application in the form referred to in the Prospectus as published for the number of shares underwritten by the Trust and to take an allotment in its name in respect thereof and the Trust hereby agrees to pay to the Company the application and allotment moneys immediately after receiving notice of allotment.

7. Subject as hereinafter mentioned the Company shall within fourteen days after it shall have become entitled to commence business pay to the Trust a commission in cash of one shilling per share on the shares hereby underwritten including those firmly applied for by it but no commission is payable until the application moneys payable on the shares have been paid to the company and notice of allotment given to the applicant.

8. No allotment to the Trust is to be made before the expiration of seven days after the first issue of the prospectus.

9. The obligations of the Trust hereunder are to hold good notwithstanding any variation between the draft prospectus annexed hereto and the prospectus as finally settled and published provided that the amount of the capital of the Company namely two hundred and fifty thousand pounds divided into two hundred and fifty thousand shares of one pound each is not altered and that the terms of subscription namely five shillings per share on application five shillings per share on allotment and the balance in calls of not more than five shillings per share at intervals of not less than three months are not altered and provided further that such prospectus as finally settled and published does not differ in any material particular from the draft prospectus attached hereto.

10. You are to be at liberty on behalf of the Trust to concur with the Company in making a contract under which the Company is to take your place for the purposes hereof and thereupon you will be released from any liability hereunder.

11. Any notice to the Trust may be served by sending the same by post addressed to the Trust at the address under stated and shall be deemed to be served on the day following that on which it is posted.

Be so good as to notify the Trust of your Acceptance of this proposal.

Dated this fifteenth day of April, 1929.

THE AUSTRALIAN INVESTMENT TRUST, LIMITED

Signature: F. J. L. Dunlop, Managing Director.
Address: Brook House, 17, O'Connell St., Sydney.

The second letter was as follows:—

ACCEPTANCE OF UNDERWRITING PROPOSAL.
STRAND AND PITT STREET PROPERTIES LIMITED.

(A Company about to be formed and registered under the provisions of the New South Wales Companies Acts 1889—1918.)

CAPITAL: £250,000 in 250,000 Shares of £1 each.

THE AUSTRALIAN INVESTMENT TRUST, LIMITED,
17, O'Connell Street,
Sydney.

Dear Sirs,

Referring to your letter to me of the Fifteenth day of April 1929 proposing to underwrite One hundred and seventy-five thousand ordinary shares of One pound each in the above named company I HEREBY as Trustee for the Company Strand and Pitt Street Properties Limited AGREE to accept same upon the footing and subject to the conditions referred to in your said letter.

Dated the Fifteenth day of April, 1929.

KEITH WILLIAMS,
Trustee for the proposed Company.

The respondents (the Company contemplated by the letters of April 15, 1929) were duly incorporated on April 23, 1929, with a capital of £250,000 divided into 250,000 shares of £1 each.

A prospectus was issued offering 175,000 shares for public subscription. This prospectus which presumably was substantially identical with the draft prospectus copy of which was annexed to the first letter of April 15, 1929, contained (inter alia) the following passages:—

UNDERWRITING AGREEMENTS

A copy of the underwriting agreement dated Fifteenth of April 1929 between Keith Williams as trustee for Strand and Pitt Street Properties Limited of the one part and The Australian Investment Trust Limited of the other part may be inspected at the offices of Messrs. Alfred Rofe & Sons, Solicitors to the Company, Rofe Chambers, O'Connell Street, Sydney.

A clause in the former agreement meaning thereby the underwriting agreement provides that the underwriters shall have the right to make firm application for and be allotted 60,000 of the shares now offered for subscription.

> BROKERAGE
>
> The underwriters will pay a brokerage of 6d. per share on allotments in respect of applications identified as coming through members of any recognised Stock Exchange. The directors reserve the right to reject any application without giving reasons therefor.

On June 11, 1929, by an agreement in writing between the appellants, Keith Williams and the respondents, the agreement contained in the two letters of April 15, 1929, was duly adopted by the respondents and made binding on the appellants and respondents, and Keith Williams was discharged from liability thereunder.

On June 30, 1930, the appellants set up that the underwriting agreement was, ultra vires, the respondents and unenforceable.

On October 9, 1930 the respondents, in pursuance of the underwriting agreement, allotted to the appellants 16,308 shares of £1 each in the capital of the respondents.

On October 29, 1930 the appellants filed the statement of claim in the suit out of which this appeal arises, alleging that the taking up of any of the shares pursuant to the underwriting agreement involved payment by the respondents out of their share capital of commission in respect of such shares, and claiming to have the share register rectified by the deletion therefrom of the name of the appellants as the holders of any of the 16,308 shares.

The respondents demurred ore tenus on April 9, 1931. Mr. Justice Long Innes, in a valuable judgment in which the authorities are carefully reviewed, and which has been of much assistance to their Lordships, reached the conclusion that the demurrer should be allowed. At the same time, the learned Judge gave the appellants liberty to amend the statement of claim within 21 days, and ordered that in default of amendment within that time the suit should be dismissed.

Leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council was subsequently obtained from the Supreme Court of New South Wales.

The decision of the House of Lords in Ooregum Gold Mining Co. of India v. Roper[1] made it plain that a company limited by shares could not issue its shares as fully paid up for a money consideration less than their nominal value.

In his speech in that case Lord Watson at p. 136 after referring to the relevant sections of the Companies Act 1862 said:—

> In my opinion these enactments read together indicate the intention of the Legislature that every member who takes shares from the company in return for cash shall either pay or become liable to contribute their full nominal value.

and later on he said:

> Consequently, if shares are issued against money, it appears to me that any payment to the company less than the nominal amount of the share must, by force of this statute, and notwithstanding any agreement to the contrary, be treated as a payment to account, the member remaining liable to contribute the balance when duly called for. A company is free to contract with an applicant for its shares; and when he pays in cash the nominal amount of the shares allotted to him, the company may at once > return the money in satisfaction of its legal indebtedness for goods supplied or services rendered by him. That circuitous process is not essential. It has been decided that, under the Act of 1862, shares may be lawfully issued as fully paid up, for considerations which the Company has agreed to accept as representing in money's worth the nominal value of the shares.

---

[1] [1892] A. C. 125

The difference between subscribing for shares and placing shares had been previously well explained by Lord Justice Mellish in Gorrissen's case[2] where he said:

> It appears to me that an agreement to place shares, even although the person making it binds himself within a specified time, or within a reasonable time, he will place a certain number of shares, is a materially different thing from an agreement to take a certain number of shares. If a person agrees to take shares then by agreeing to take shares he does at that moment become a shareholder and the company are entitled and are indeed bound at that moment to put him on the register. But if he agrees to place shares he does not agree to become a shareholder nor are the company entitled to put him on the register as a shareholder but he simply agrees that he will procure other persons to take the shares.

The principles indicated in the foregoing quotations are in no respect impinged upon by the decision that payment by a company of brokerage to brokers for placing its shares with other persons is legitimate (see Metropolitan Coal Consumers Association v. Scrimgeour[3].

The point as to the validity of commission paid by a company to a person for subscribing for or underwriting its share capital was however never clearly decided in England before the passing of the Companies Act 1900 unless as has been urged before their Lordships such a decision is to be found in the case of Licensed Victuallers' Mutual Trading Association ex. p. Audain[4], which will be examined presently.

Upon this point of commission Lord Lindley in the Sixth Edition of his work on Companies published in 1902 at p. 43 expressed himself as follows:

> After some doubt it was decided before the Companies Act 1900 was passed that a limited company might pay a reasonable sum to brokers by way of brokerage for placing its shares but the better opinion seems to have been that such a company could not make any payment out of capital to a person for subscribing for or underwriting its shares.

When the matter was before the judge below the parties agreed that for the purpose of construing the letters of April 15, 1929 the word "underwrite" should be taken to mean "to agree to take up by way of subscription in a new company or new issue a certain number of shares if and so far as not applied for by the public." This is a definition which seems to express accurately the meaning of the word underwrite in the sense in which it is commonly used.

Now it is not disputed that an agreement by a company to pay a commission to a person in consideration of his subscribing in præsenti for a definite number of shares in the company's capital would be ultra vires the company. It would in effect be an arrangement whereby he was allowed a rebate or discount on the amount payable by him for the shares for which he agreed to subscribe.

---

[2] 8 Ch. 507 at 515

[3] [1895] 2 Q. B. 604

[4] 42 Ch. D. 1

But it is said that the position is different where as in an underwriting agreement, on the one hand, the obligation of the subscriber is to subscribe only for such number of shares, if any, as the public may not take up, so that in the result he may not be under liability to subscribe for any share at all, while, on the other hand, the consideration for the obligation to subscribe, namely the commission, is payable in any event and is not in amount related to the number of shares, if any, which ultimately have to be taken up under the agreement.

For the purpose of determining whether such an underwriting agreement is within the powers of the company their Lordships are content to apply the test suggested by Lord Watson in the passages already quoted from his speech in Ooregum Gold Mining Co. of India v. Roper ubi supra. What are the services rendered by the underwriter in return for the commission over and beyond his agreement to subscribe for shares? In their Lordships' opinion the answer must be that there are none.

In the case of an agreement to subscribe for a definite number of shares in præsenti it could not be suggested that there was any consideration for the commission beyond the agreement to take shares. What further obligation is imposed on the underwriter or what further service does he undertake to render because the number of shares (if any) which he becomes bound to take up depends upon a contingency, namely, the course the public will take in regard to the issue?

The learned judge below has said:

> In substance an underwriting agreement is a contract of guarantee or indemnity whereby the underwriter in effect guarantees that the whole of the shares in question will be subscribed by undertaking that to the extent to which they are not otherwise subscribed he will apply for them himself. It is in effect equivalent to a contract of insurance and might be expressed as such.

With all respect to the learned judge their Lordships are of opinion that the ambit of the obligation of the underwriter cannot be altered or enlarged by changing the language by which the contract is described. The obligation in fact is and remains nothing more or less than an obligation to subscribe for shares in the company. It is true that it is an obligation to subscribe for shares only on the happening of a contingent event the number if any of the shares to be taken up depending upon the magnitude of the event, but this is an obligation of the same nature as an obligation to subscribe for a definite number of shares in præsenti though of more uncertain burden until it is crystallised by the happening of the contingency.

In both cases the commission is agreed to be paid to induce the same thing namely the undertaking of the obligation to subscribe. No other service than undertaking this obligation is in either case rendered by the receiver of the commission. In both cases he in effect receives from the company a discount or rebate upon the amount payable upon the shares which he has to take up. It cannot make any difference that under the underwriting agreement he may not in the event have to take up any share and may yet get his commission all the same.

It is true that the benefit to the company of an underwriting agreement may be great but to resolve the question now under consideration the benefit to the company in not a relevant matter. The solution must be found in the obligation undertaken by the underwriter.

It has however been contended before their Lordships that this view of the matter is inconsistent with the decision of the English Court of Appeal to which Lord Lindley (then Lord Justice Lindley) was a party in Re Licensed Victuallers Mutual Trading Union ex. p. Audain[5]. Two points only were decided in that case. First after hearing expert evidence the Court determined the meaning of the term "underwriting" and secondly the Court held that the phrase in the underwriting agreement "at 15 per cent discount" did not mean discount but commission. The question whether an agreement to underwrite shares for a commission was intra vires or ultra vires the company does not appear to have been argued by counsel or considered by the Court. Their Lordships are therefore unable to obtain any assistance from this decision.

The reference in the prospectus in the present case to payment of brokerage by the underwriters (a matter not mentioned in the underwriting agreement) does not in their Lordships' opinion affect the matter. Applying the considerations which have been already indicated their Lordships reach the conclusion that the learned judge below was in error in allowing the demurrer and that the appeal must succeed. The order of Mr. Justice Long Innes should be discharged and in lieu thereof the demurrer of the respondents should be dismissed and their Lordships will humbly advise His Majesty accordingly.

The costs here and below will be borne by the respondents.

Appeal allowed

K. C. Ashurst, Morris, Crist and Co.—Solicitors for the appellants.
Gwyn, Davis and Co.—Solicitors for the respondents.

---

[5] 42 Ch. D. 1

TSANG CHUEN (Defendant)
versus
LI PO KWAI alias LI KAN (Plaintiff)*

Civil

1932

July 19

Lord Blanesburgh
Lord Tomlin
Sir Lancelot Sanderson

Estoppel—Assignment—Assignor acknowledging receipt of consideration—Deed registered—Assignor estopped from setting up fictitious nature of transaction—Evidence Act, Sec. 115.

If a grantor conveys in a form actually and actively misleading, so that any persons reading the conveyance necessarily conclude that the grantees are the absolute owners, the grantor cannot subsequently be heard to say that this is not the real transaction but that the grantees take on a secret trust not disclosed in the conveyance. Re King's Settlement, [1931] 2 Ch. 294 approved.

If a man acknowledges that he has received the whole of the purchase money from the person to whom he transfers property, he voluntarily arms the purchaser with the means of dealing with the estate as the absolute legal and equitable owner free from every shadow of encumbrance or adverse equity, and he cannot be heard to say that he has not received such purchase money. Rimmer v. Webster, [1902] 2 Ch. 163 approved.

Where words of any written instrument are free from ambiguity and where external circumstances do not create any doubt or difficulty as to the proper application of those words to claimants under the instrument, or the subject-matter to which the instrument relates, such instrument is always to be construed according to the strict plain common meaning of the words themselves and in such case evidence dehors the instrument for the purpose of explaining it according to the surmised or alleged intention of the parties to the instrument is utterly inadmissible.

Where a father executed an assignment in the shape of a sale-deed in favour of himself (in an assumed name) and his son jointly for a stated consideration and the deed recited that the consideration had been received and the document was registered under the law of Registration, held, that the son was competent to convey a good title to his mortgagee and the father was estopped from setting up the fictitious nature of the transaction.

Appeal from a decision of the Supreme Court of Hong Kong.

Gover, K.C., Wilfred Hunt and C. Shaweross for the appellant.

Spers, K.C. and D. Adrews Uthwartt for the respondent.

The following judgment was delivered by

Lord Blanesbugh

Lord Blanesburgh—The question at issue on this appeal is whether the respondent has shown a title in himself to the entirety of certain leasehold properties in Hong Kong, freed and discharged from a legal mortgage upon an undivided moiety thereof held by the appellant from Li Nga Ching, the second son of the respondent. In the Courts of Hong Kong, the respondent has established his claim. The appellant's title as mortgagee has, following deliverances of great elaboration, been set aside, and he has been ordered to reassign to the respondent freed from his mortgage the undivided moiety in question. The order to that effect made on April 8, 1930, by the Supreme Court of Hong Kong in its original jurisdiction was, on appeal, affirmed in the Full Court by its judgment of August 28, 1930. This is the mortgagee's appeal therefrom.

---

*P. C. A. No. 93 of 1931

The respondent is a Chinaman of position resident in Hong Kong. His dispute with the appellant concerns an undivided moiety of one of three separate parcels of leasehold properties, held under Crown leases for long terms of which in 1912 the respondent became possessed, on the division of his deceased father's estate.

The particular leaseholds the undivided moiety of which is now in question are described in terms both elaborate and identical in a deed of assignment of them of March 9, 1917, and in a memorial of that deed duly registered under the Land Registration Ordinance of 1844. For present purposes it will suffice compendiously to describe the properties as Nos. 18 and 20 Wing Kut Street, Victoria, Hong Kong, and it will be convenient hereafter to refer to them as the properties in question.

By the deed of March 9, 1917, these properties were assigned by the respondent to one Li Kan and to Li Nga Ching already mentioned as joint tenants for the residues of the terms granted by the Crown leases under which they are held at the appointed rents adjusted with the Crown. The deed upon the terms of which much in this case will be found to depend is one of purchase and sale. The respondent party to it of the one part, and, as such, described throughout as "the vendor," is named as "Li Hung Cheung alias Li Po Kwai of Victoria in the Colony of Hong Kong, gentleman." The parties to it of the other part and as such described throughout as "the purchasers" are named and described as "Li Kan and Li Nga Ching, both of Victoria aforesaid, gentlemen." The deed contains a recital that "the vendor" has agreed with "the purchaser" for the sale to them of the properties in question at the price of $16,000. The assignment is expressed to be made in pursuance of that agreement and in consideration of $16,000 to the vendor then paid by the purchasers. The receipt of the $16,000 is acknowledged by the respondent as vendor in the body of the deed. It is made also the subject of a separate endorsement signed by the respondent in his vendor name and witnessed by his solicitor. The assignment of the properties in terms extends to all the estate right title interest property claim and demand whatsoever of the vendor in or to the same and the deed contains the usual full covenants for title given on a sale by a vendor to purchasers as also a covenant by the purchasers with the vendor to pay the apportioned rents and perform the covenants in the leases under which the properties in question are held so far as relating to these properties, with a further covenant by them to indemnify the vendor against such rents and covenants.

The respondent in executing the deed signs his vendor name in Chinese characters: the execution signature of "Li Kan" is in English characters. The attesting witness to both executions is the respondent's solicitor.

Li Nga Ching was, as has already been stated, a son of the respondent, but there is nothing either in the deed or anywhere else to suggest the existence of that or of any other relationship between them: nor is there any hint of the fact, for the first time set up in this litigation, that Li Kan, the other "purchaser" is the same person as the vendor. On the contrary the deed is so framed as to represent that the vendor is a separate person from either of the purchasers: that the transaction is an out and out sale and that the vendor, as a result of it has parted with all estate and interest of every kind in the properties assigned. In entire accordance with its expressed effect the deed was stamped $80 the ad valorem stamp on the stated purchase price.

On October 11, 1927, a lease of 20 Wing Kut Street, parcel of the properties in question was granted by "the purchasers" to a tenant for a term of five Chinese years from September 26, 1927, subject to the rent therein mentioned. The lease is expressed to be executed by Li Kan in Chinese characters and by Li Nga Ching in English characters. The deed of assignment had not been executed by Li Nga Ching. The execution by him of this sub-lease of October 11, 1927, to anyone perusing the two deeds, manifests his acceptance, if any such manifestation were necessary, of the deed of assignment from which was derived his only sub-lessor's interest in the properties in question. The respondent now states, it will be seen, that it was he who executed the lease in Li Nga Ching's name on his behalf.

As already indicated there has been in force in Hong Kong since 1844, a system of registration of deeds under the Land Registration Ordinance, 1844, and memorials, both of the deed of assignment and of the lease just referred to, were duly registered by the respondent in the register at the Land Office. It will be convenient before considering in detail the terms of these memorials—and more particularly those of the memorial of the assignment—to refer to some of the immediately relevant provisions of the ordinance under which both were registered.

First of all its preamble, in striking contrast with that of the Yorkshire Registry Act of 6 Anne c. 20, from which many of the procedure and other clauses of it have clearly been taken, is in its concluding terms very significant:—

> Whereas it is expedient to prevent secret and fraudulent conveyances and to provide means whereby the title to real and immovable property may be easily traced and ascertained.

Section 2 declares that the Land Office shall be a public office for the registration of deeds, conveyances and other instruments in writing, and wills and judgments, and provides for the entry and registration in that office of any of these documents by which any parcels of ground tenements or premises in the colony may be affected. Section (3) (2) provides that any such instruments which are not registered shall (as against any subsequent bona fide purchaser or mortgagee for valuable consideration of the same premises), with a proviso not presently material, be null and void to all intents and purposes.

Section 4 has no counterpart in the Yorkshire Act of Anne, and is very material:—

> No notice whatever, either actual or constructive, of any prior unregistered deed, conveyance or other instrument in writing or will or judgment shall affect the priority of any such instrument as aforesaid as is duly registered.

The particulars required to be stated in every memorial are set forth in the 1st schedule to the ordinance, and in striking contrast to what

Lindley, M.R., in Kettlewell v. Watson[1] described as the "very little information given" by the memorials required by the Yorkshire Act, are so complete as to be really exhaustive.

They are in these terms:—

1. Date of instrument or will.
2. Nature and object thereof.
3. Names and additions of the parties or of the devisors or divisees.
4. Names and additions of the witnesses thereto.
5. Description of the land or premises conveyed in or affected by the instrument or will.
6. Name and description of the place where situate.
7. Consideration and to whom and how paid.
8. Any other particulars which the case may require.

Section 7 requires that every memorial shall be verified by the oath of some competent person that the same contains a just and true account of the several particulars therein set forth, which oath shall be taken before a Justice of the Peace.

The memorial of the deed of assignment was registered by the respondent on March 14, 1917. As required by the ordinance, the memorial is in effect a complete statement of the deed of assignment. That deed is therein described as being one made between "Li Hung Cheung alias Li Po Kwai (who and whose executors and administrators were thereinafter called the vendor of the one part) and Li Kan and Li Nga Chin (who and the survivor of them and the executors and administrators of such survivor their or his assigns were therein called the purchasers) of the other part." The assignment is stated to have been made in consideration of $16,000 "to the vendor then paid by the purchasers." The premises in question described in the identical terms of the assignment with "all the estate right title interest property claim and demand whatsoever of the vendor therein or thereto," are expressed to have been assigned by the vendor to the purchasers as joint tenants for the residue of the terms of years stated in detail and subject to the apportioned rents specified and to the covenants in the Crown leases affecting the properties in question. It may be said as definitely of the memorial as it has already been said of the deed itself, that there is nothing in its terms to suggest even remotely the existence of any relationship between the respondent and Li Nga Ching, nor is there any hint that the respondent, the "vendor" is the same person as Li Kan, the other of "the purchasers."

Two further facts of real significance in relation to the memorial, and very relevant in the present dispute, are that its correctness is verified by the oath of the clerk to the respondent's solicitors and that it is actually signed by the respondent himself in his "vendor" name.

The memorial of the lease of October 11, 1927, also registered at the Land Office, took the form of a full copy of the original. It was registered on October 16, 1927, and was like the other memorial verified by the oath of the clerk of the respondent's solicitors.

Some facts relating to the dealings by the respondent with the two or other long leaseholds to which he became entitled in the division of his father's estate may, at this point, be collected. The respondent has four sons. In 1917 his three younger sons, the first of whom was Li Nga Ching, were aged, respectively, 21, 19, and 14 (Chinese reckoning). Evidence was given to show that on the same March 9, 1917, on which the respondent executed the assignment already stated he executed another relating to the second of the leasehold properties to the same "Li Kan" and his third son as joint tenants, and an assignment of the third leasehold property to "Li Kan" and his fourth son as joint tenants. The form of each of these assignments was the same as that of the assignment of the properties in question, but with different sums expressed as the purchase consideration.

---

[1] 26 Ch. Div. 501

These two assignments are relied upon by the respondent as confirmatory of the case he makes with reference to the deed now in question. But it is not suggested that the existence of these deeds or of either of them was known to the appellant or his solicitors prior to the institution of these proceedings. It would appear, indeed, that had these deeds been known to the appellant before he took his mortgage, he would have tended to confirm rather than otherwise the complete regularity of the assignment now in question. For it was stated on behalf of the respondent in the Trial Court as a reason for the non-production of the first of the two deeds that the properties comprised therein had since been sold, presumably under the title thereby conferred.

The association of the appellant with the properties in question came about in the following way. He is a banker, a partner in, and in the transaction of mortgage now to be stated, the nominee of the Han Chuen Bank of Victoria, Hong Kong. In March, 1929, he was approached in the ordinary course of business by a mortgage broker with a proposal that he should lend $25,000 for six months to Li Nga Ching on the security of his half-interest in the properties in question. Li Nga Ching may now be conveniently referred to as the mortgagor. The appellant did not know him, nor had he previously heard of the respondent. He himself inspected the properties, was satisfied with the sufficiency of the security offered; was prepared favourably to consider the loan proposal, and he instructed his solicitor to proceed leaving it to him to make all enquiries.

It is matter of admission that, prior to the mortgage which followed, the appellant's solicitor searched the register at the Land Office in reference to the properties in question and that he inspected the registered memorial of the assignment and that he proceeded with the preparation of the mortgage deed and the completion of the transaction of loan as a result of that inspection. He did not see the assignment itself. That he asked for it and was informed that it was in the possession of Li Kan joint tenant with the mortgagor is not improbable in view of his letter later to be mentioned asking Li Kan for a loan of the deeds in order to make copies of them to keep with the mortgage deed. But it is not proved that any such inquiry was made. The solicitor did not give evidence. The fact that he did not do so was a source of real embarrassment to the learned counsel for the appellant in their argument before the Board. In the view which their Lordships take of the case his non-appearance as a witness is less serious than it might well have been, and it may have seemed to him that his activities being to a large extent matters of admission the desirability of a full account from him of what he did was unimportant. It is right to add that no suggestion is made that either the appellant or he had actual notice or any suspicion, when the mortgage was accepted and the advance made, of any defect in the mortgagor's title to an undivided moiety of the properties in question.

The advance of $25,000 was made by the appellant to the mortgagor on March 7, 1929. By the mortgage deed of that date, after a recital that the properties in question were vested in Li Kan and the mortgagor for the residues of the terms of years under the said Crown leases, the mortgagor in consideration of the loan assigned the undivided moiety of the property in question to the appellant for the unexpired residues of the terms of years subject to the usual proviso for redemption. A memorial of the mortgage deed was, on its execution, duly registered pursuant to the ordinance.

At the date of its registration there was no entry in the register of any estate or interest in the properties in quesion being possessed or retained by the respondent; no memorial, indeed of any subsisting interest therein other than that of "the purchasers" under the deed of assignment and of their tenant under the registered lease.

It appears, however, that shortly before this date information had reached the respondent that his sons, or one of them, were attempting to deal with properties standing in their names. The respondent's reaction was to insert in a newspaper what one of the learned Judges describes as a perfectly futile advertisement: he made no warning entry on the register.

On March 11, 1929, four days after the advance was made the appellant's solicitors in a letter addressed to "Mr. Li Kan" at the address of the respondent gave him notice of the mortgage by the mortgagor. The letter proceeded:

> As our client is informed the title deeds are in your possession we are instructed to request you to lend us the title deeds to enable us to make attested copies thereof to accompany the mortgage to our client.
>
> We shall be glad if you will lend us the title deeds upon the usual understanding.

The reply of the respondent's solicitor of March 14 is, it must be agreed, a somewhat inapt description of his case as finally made in Court.

> We are instructed by our client, Mr. Li Po Kwai, who in the names of Li Kan and Pi Lo respectively is the co-owner of the above properties to reply to your letter of the 11th inst. Mr. Li Nga Ching, the mortgagor, had no beneficial interest in any of these properties the funds for which were provided by our client and he had no right to mortgage them.

Fourteen days later, on March 28, 1929, the respondent commenced the action out of which this appeal emerges. The defendants were the appellant and the mortgagor. The mortgagor did not appear: indeed he was never served with the writ. His whereabouts were said to be unknown to the respondent.

The respondent gave evidence at the trial. He gave the account already set forth of his connection with the properties in question and with his other inherited leasehold properties. He proceeded to say that "Li Kan," the joint purchaser, was himself. The name was his milk name —a name given to him when a baby by his mother. Other persons knew it. "Li Po Kwai" was an alias and he was mostly known to the public by it. He admitted that except in the three assignments to which reference has been made he had never taken any transfer of property in the name of "Li Kan." His only object in putting the leasehold properties into the joint names of himself and his three younger sons respectively was, he asserted, to mark them out so that in case of his death the properties might be handed to his sons later on. In cross-examination he said, with reference to the properties in question:

> The sum of $16,000 was mentioned as the purchase price. I gave instructions that the sum should appear as purchase price. When making deed I knew I would have to pay solicitors' costs and stamp duty. I intended to mark out the property so that it might go to my son at my death if he behaved properly. But not automatically. If he did not behave properly I thought I had a right to cancel the assignment. If he behaved properly I would not have allowed the assignment to operate. I would have left my property by will.

The respondent went on to say that it was a Chinese custom to mark out property in this way: that in fact no money had passed and that he retained the assignments and earlier deeds in his possession and collected the rents and paid the outgoings. The mortgagor's signature to the lease of October 11, 1927, was attached by himself, he said. He had authority so to sign as the mortgagor was his son. He denied that the assginments were executed to escape or save death duty. None of his sons knew of them at the time they were made. The respondent did not explain how or when the mortgagor heard of the assignment in his favour, nor did he suggest that he had ever told the mortgagor that the assignment was not intended to confer any beneficial interest on him or that he was to hold any estate of his thereunder in trust for himself. Indeed, no evidence of any kind was adduced by the respondent to show that the mortgagor was ever aware that any trust was intended by himself, much less that one had ever been assumed by the mortgagor. Nor was any explanation offered why, if the assignment in question was to have no other function than that averred by the respondent it was appropriate that it should have been registered at all, to say nothing of the circumstance with which registration was in fact made.

Chief Justice Kemp observes in his judgment on appeal:—

> When Li Nga Ching discovered the fact of the assignment he may have believed that his father had intended to transfer a beneficial interest to him, as he may well, and not unreasonably, have thought that his father's object as suggested on behalf of the [Appellant] was either to avoid the payment of estate duty or to obviate the necessity of legal representation.

Their Lordships agree. But, as will be seen later, they do not so readily accept the learned Chief Justice's observation which immediately follows:—

> This point, however, appears to be irrelevant for the purposes of this judgment.

The evidence of the respondent to the effect just stated was given subject to objection taken to its admissibility. It was also contended on the appellant's behalf that it was in essentials entirely unreliable. In this regard, the evidence was, in that result, although with some hesitation,

CIVIL
1932
TSANG CHUEN
v.
LI PO KWAI
Lord Blanesburgh

believed by the learned Trial Judge. He accepted, but not without some reserve, the rspondent's assertion that the transaction had not been put through by him to escape death duty or for some other ulterior purpose. The complete futility of registration, from the respondent's alleged point of view, does not seem to have struck the learned Judge. Upon the point of its admissibility he held the evidence to be receivable in order to rebut the presumption of advancement and to show that there was a resulting trust of the properties in question in favour of the respondent. There was in his view no estoppel, while the omission of the appellant to demand production of the deed of assignment from the mortgagor before making the advance to him constituted such gross negligence on his part as to deprive him as against the respondent of the protection of his legal estate. Accordingly, to adopt the language of another jurisdiction, he decreed the respondent's suit.

On appeal by the appellant to the Full Court the trial judgment was affirmed. The learned Judges there, as the learned Trial Judge had done, accepted the respondent's evidence as reliable, but, it would seem, mainly if not exclusively because of their reluctance to interfere, on a pure question of fact, with the finding of a Trial Judge who had seen and heard the witness concerned.

They agreed with the learned Trial Judge's view that the reception of the evidence was permissible to rebut the presumption of advancement while its effect was to disclose the existence of a resulting trust for the respondent. True it might be that neither the appellant nor his solicitor had either notice or suspicion of the existence of such a trust, but their ignorance was the result of gross negligence on the part of the solicitor in not insisting upon the production of the deed of assignment before any advance to the mortgagor was made. The fact that the respondent had always retained that deed in his possession entitled him, as they thought, notwithstanding his registration of the memorial, to assume that no dealings with any property comprised in it would take place without reference to himself. Kettlewell v. Watson[2], showed that even a system of registration did not dispense an intending purchaser or mortgagee from the duty of inquiring for or examining deeds, memorials of which were registered. Had the application of March 11, 1929, for inspection of the deed been addressed to the respondent when the loan was only in prospect and not after it had been made, the appellant would have ascertained that the mortgagor had no interest in the properties in question and was not in a position to offer any security whatever over them. Oliver v. Hinton[3] was the authority in point. The appellant had been guilty of negligence in the transaction so gross that it would be unjust to deprive the respondent's resulting trust of its priority over his subsequently registered mortgage.

The above is a compendious summary of the ruling considerations which led the learned Judges in the Courts below to their conclusions in favour of the respondent. Their Lordships must say at once that they are not prepared to accept the correctness of these conclusions nor the soundness of the elaborate reasoning on which they depend. If regard be had, as it must be, to the admitted or accepted facts of the case and to the well recognised principles of law and equity applicable thereto, the respondent's action must, their Lordships think, necessarily fail. It was because so much depended thereon that they have been at pains in the earlier part of this judgment to examine these facts in their appropriate setting. That examination has satisfied them that the conclusions of the learned Judges can only be reached by ignoring essential principle and by refusing to attribute their proper consequences to the conduct and actions of the respondent, even as avowed in his own evidence which, with a reluctance no less than that of any learned Judge below, their Lordships also accept at its face value.

---

[2] 26 Ch. Div. 501, 508

[3] [1899] 2 Ch. 264

The outstanding fact disclosed by the examination is that the evidence of the respondent, admitted by both Courts, and essential to support the judgment in each, was evidence which directly contradicted the terms of his own deed. It ought not to have been received at all.

Chief Justice Tindal's statement of the law on this subject in Shore v. Wilson,[4] has never been departed from. It may be useful to recall his words:—

> "The general rule," he says, "I take to be, that where words of any written instrument are free from ambiguity in themselves and where external circumstances do not create any doubt or difficulty as to the proper application of those words to claimants under the instrument, or the subject matter to which the instrument relates, such instrument is always to be construed according to the strict plain common meaning of the words themselves and that in such case evidence dehors the instrument for the purpose of explaining it according to the surmised or alleged intention of the parties to the instrument is utterly inadmissible. If it were otherwise no lawyer would be safe in advising upon the construction of a written instrument nor any party in taking under it for the ablest advice would be controlled and the clearest title undermined if, at some future period, parol evidence of the particular meaning which the party affixed to his words or of his secret intention in making the instrument or of the objects he meant to take benefit under it might be set up to contradict or vary the plain language of the instrument itself.

These observations apply with peculiar force here. Perhaps the evidence of the respondent tendered and accepted may euphemistically be termed evidence to rebut the presumption of advancement and incidentally establish a resulting trust, but it was in fact tendered to show that the deed of assignment, followed by its attested registration, was an elaborate make-believe with, so far as the operative provisions of the deed were concerned, no word of truth in it from beginning to end. There were no "purchasers"; there had been no sale to anyone; no purchase money had either been paid or received; it was a mere assignment by the respondent to himself. It is unnecessary, however, to dwell on more than one of these contradictions—that which sought to deny the payment and receipt of purchase price acknowledged in the deed by the respondent and attested by his solicitor.

As Sir George Farwell says in Rimmer v. Webster[5]:—

> If a man acknowledges that he has received the whole of the purchase money from the person to whom he transfers property 'he voluntarily arms the purchaser with the means of dealing with the estate as the

---

[4] 9 Cl. and Fin. 355, 565

[5] [1902] 2 Ch. 163, 173

CIVIL

1932

TSANG CHUEN v. LI PO KWAI

Lord Blanesburgh

absolute legal and equitable owner free from every shadow of encumbrance or adverse equity,' and he cannot be heard to say that he has not received such purchase money.

It is not, Sir George Farwell goes on to say, as if the purchase money had been paid out of money found by the vendor himself or by some third person, and that fact was being deposed to. The distinction between the two cases is obvious:—

> There is no contradiction of the deed in saying 'True the purchase money was paid by him but out of some third person's money.' There is a direct contradiction in saying that it was never paid at all.

Evidence to that effect was accordingly under Chief Justice Tindal's rule here inadmissible "to establish either a lien for unpaid purchase money or that there was a resulting trust for the vendor." Indeed it appears from the authorities examined before their Lordships that the cases in which parol evidence when objected to is, apart from fraud or mistake, receivable to correct written instruments are cases where, for example, the evidence supplements but does not contradict the terms of the deed; where the provisions of the deed leave the question doubtful whether merely a mortgage and not an out and out sale was intended, or where the language sought to be explained in evidence is language in an ordinary conveyancing form not exhaustively accurate but without an actual misstatement of fact. Instances of each of these will be found in Haigh v. Kaye,[6] re Duke of Marlborough,[7] Barton v. Bank of New South Wales,[8] Carritt v. Real and Personal Advance Company[9]. But the present position is that correctly described by Farwell, J., in the recent case of re King's Settlement,[10] where he says:—

> If a grantor conveys property in a form actually and actively misleading, so that any persons reading the conveyance necessarily conclude that the grantees are the absolute owners, the grantor cannot subsequently be heard to say that this is not the real transaction but that the grantees take on a secret trust not disclosed in the conveyance.

And this statement brings into clear relief the respondent's position in these proceedings. If he fails to establish a resulting trust which requires no writing to support it, his claim must fail. He cannot set up an effective express trust against the appellant for at least four reasons. First, no agreement by the mortgagor to be a trustee for him has been established, and the respondent's own evidence negatives the possibility of the existence of such an agreement. Secondly, to be valid, that agreement must have been in writing. Thirdly, if it were in writing it would, even if known to the appellant, have been of no avail against his registered mortgage unless it had been first registered. (See Ordinance, Section 4.) Fourthly, such a trust has never been registered. The truth, indeed, is that after the execution of his deed of assignment, the respondent's claim had to be rested on an express declaration of trust by the mortgagor. But such a trust unregistered would have been useless to him as against the appellant. His essential task, accordingly, was to establish a resulting trust, which, in the circumstances, alone could help him. This he has sought to do by evidence inadmissible for its purpose. On this ground alone, therefore, as it seems to their Lordships, the respondent's case must fail. He proves no resulting trust whatever.

---

[6] 7 Ch. 469

[7] [1894] 2 Ch. 133

[8] 15 App Cas. 379

[9] 42 Ch. D. 263

[10] [1931] 2 Ch. 294, 299

But not only on this ground does his case disappear. It fails also because of estoppel. To their Lordships it seems clear that by his registration of the memorial of his deed of assignment the respondent is estopped as against the appellant who took his registered mortgage in reliance on that memorial from denying its correctness in any essential particular. The memorial is a complete statement of the deed of assignment, including therein a statement as to receipt of the purchase price. Its correctness, as required by the ordinance, is duly attested. Its registration is, in terms of the ordinance, a means whereby the title to this immovable property may be easily traced and ascertained. The respondent has been acquitted of any fraudulent intent or ulterior purpose in registering it, but his avowed purpose in executing the deed would have been fully attained without any registration at all, and the respondent by the registration of the memorials both of the deed and the lease must be taken, in the absence of any other explanation, to have intended "to produce faith" by such registrations—to adopt a phrase of Fry L. J. in Bickerton v. Walker[11]. It is not to be disputed—Rimmer v. Webster, ubi supra, would be authority for the proposition if it were—that if the actual deed of assignment had been produced by the mortgagor to the appellant before he took his mortgage, the respondent would have been estopped from disputing its correctness and the appellant have been relieved of any imputation of negligence had he refrained from inquiry of the respondent as to any rights or claims of his. (See Bickerton v. Walker, ubi supra, p. 158.) Their Lordships can see no reason why the respondent should not have put the appellant in precisely the same position towards himself, so soon as it is proved or admitted that on the faith of the memorial the appellant advanced his money to the mortgagor. Their Lordships have some difficulty in appreciating the real relevance of the decision in Kettlewel v. Watson,[12] on this point. That was a Yorkshire Registry case, under the statute of Anne and before "the law on the subject of registration as regards land in Yorkshire was revolutionised by the Yorkshire Registries Acts, 1884, and 1885. (See Dart, Vendors and Purchasers, 7th ed., vol. 1, p. 607.) Lindley L.J. there said that the registered memorials under the earlier Act gave very little information. He added that the object of the statute of Anne seemed rather to be to let people know what they were to inquire about than to dispense with inquiry respecting deeds and documents, memorials of which are registered—a passage from his judgment already referred to. All of which is, of course, true with reference to that statute. But the statute contained no preamble corresponding to that in the Hong Kong ordinance; it required no memorial in any sense complete. There was, for instance, no obligation to disclose the purchase consideration, and in the memorial in question in Kettlewell v. Watson there was no such disclosure. (See 21, Ch. D. at p. 699) nor did the subsequent purchasers or mortgagees there ever inspect the register. The memorial accordingly in that case could have worked no estoppel. But Fry, J. in the course of his judgment (21 Ch. D., p. 703) indicates how much the facts of the present case would have influenced him:—

[11] 31 Ch. Div. 151, 159

[12] 21 Ch. D. 685; 26 Ch. Div. 501

> The registration of the deed is not notice to all the world of the receipt of the purchase money, because the memorandum does not state the receipt for the purchase money and therefore it appears to me that it cannot interfere with the right of the vendors to the lien which was created by the mere fact of the non-payment of the money.

The learned Judge indicates in that passage not obscurely what his view would have been had he been dealing with a memorial like that in the present case and, in fact, relied upon by the subsequent mortgagee.

On this ground also, in their Lordships' judgment, the respondent's case fails.

But lastly it fails also on a comparison of the conduct of the respondent and the appellant in this matter, the ground selected by the Courts below for their decision in favour of the respondent. How first of all may the respondent's conduct in relation to the transaction be described? He placed upon the register an assignment which he now asserts was no assignment at all. He thereby made a representation which induced the appellant to advance money to his son; he misinformed as to his position all persons searching his title in a public record; and when he heard of attempts by his son to raise money he published a futile advertisement and entered no warning notice on the register. In the face of that catalogue their Lordships have difficulty in following Kemp, C. J. when in his judgment he says that of "the respondent it cannot be said that he did anything which he was under a duty not to do, or that he omitted anything which he was under any duty to do."

And where was the "gross negligence" of the appellant's solicitor? It consisted, so it is said, in not demanding from the mortgagor production of the deed of assignment, a deed quite naturally in the possession of his co-tenant. Now, that the solicitor by refraining from demanding production of the deed exposed his client the appellant to the grave risk of being postponed to some mortgage by deposit made by "the purchasers" after the date of the assignment to them is not after the decision in Oliver v. Hinton ubi supra to be gainsaid. But that is not the equity which is now being set up by the respondent against the appellant. That was an equity of which the custody of the deeds was a concomitant. The equity here sought to be set up by the respondent is one in no way dependant upon the whereabouts of the deeds: it is an equity upon the existence of which the production of the deed of assignment would cast no light at all. For the protection of the appellant against such a concealed equity as this production of the deed, when a memorial of it had been already considered, would have been of no assistance. The appropriate question for the appellant's solicitor to have asked would have been, not where is the deed of assignment, but whether the respondent had thereby reserved to himself any interest in the properties in question. And why should the solicitor have troubled himself to ask any such question when the possibility of the existence of any such interest was negatived by the terms of the registered memorial of the deed vouched by the respondent himself?

CIVIL
1932
TSANG CHUEN
v.
LI PO KWAI
Lord Blanesburgh

The inquiry as it seems to their Lordships would have been impertinent, and the solicitor cannot be said to have been guilty of any negligence for not having made it. The respondent having put his hand to and registered his deed of assignment was not entitled to suppose that any inquiry with regard to that or any other reserved equity would ever be addressed to him. And the appellant with no notice of that equity has now had assigned to himself for value the legal estate. Between the respondent and the appellant in this matter, so far as the conduct of either is questionable, there is in their Lordships' judgment no room even for comparison.

The judgments in favour of the respondent on this point in the Courts below have been based on what their Lordships cannot help thinking is a misunderstanding of the decision of the Court of Appeal in Oliver v. Hinton, ubi supra. There the contest in a non register County was between a person in the position of the appellant and one, not in the position of the respondent, but of a mortgagee from him by deposit made subsequent to the date of his purchase deed. "The defendant has been cheated by Hill, but she has not been in any way cheated by the plaintiff," says Lindley L. J. In that passage Hill corresponds roughly to the respondent, and the plaintiff to his subsequent mortgagee by deposit. No production of the deeds was required by the purchasing defendant. The plaintiff was entirely blameless in the matter. On these facts the Court held that the defendant had been guilty of such gross negligence in not asking for the deeds as would render it unjust to deprive the plaintiff who held them of his priority. Their Lordships can see no analogy between that case properly understood and the present. It is not necessary to say that the respondent here was as bad as Hill was there. But it is through the respondent's representations that the appellant has been led to part with his money. That which then was gross negligence in relation to the possibility of a prior equitable charge, is not necessarily any negligence at all in relation to the possibility of a resulting trust. It is only of the latter negligence, if any there be, that the respondent can claim the benefit. There is nothing in Lord Lindley's judgment to indicate that the protection which he exended to the entirely blameless mortgagee by deposit he would have thought of extending to the respondent in the present case.

For all these reasons their Lordships are of opinion that this appeal should be allowed: that the judgment of the Full Court of the Supreme Court of Hong Kong of August 28, 1930, and the judgment of that Court in its original jurisdiction of April 8, 1930, should both be discharged: and that the respondent's action should be dismissed and with costs in both Courts.

And Their Lordships will humbly advise His Majesty accordingly.

The respondent must pay to the appellant his costs of this appeal.

Appeal allowed

Gibson and Weldon—Solicitors for the appellant.

Sharpe, Pritchard and Co.—Solicitors for the respondents.

Civil

1932

June 16

Sulaiman, C. J.
Kendall, J.

HIGH COURT

KISHORI LAL
versus BALKISHAN*

Civil Procedure Code (V of 1908), Sec. 24—High Court or District Judge—Whether empowered to transfer case to another court which has pecuniary but not territorial jurisdiction—'Competent'—Meaning of.

The High Court or the District Judge, acting under Section 24 C. P. C. has power to transfer a suit pending in one subordinate court to another subordinate court, which has pecuniary, but not territorial jurisdiction to try that suit.

The word "competent" as used in Section 24 C. P. C. must be taken to refer to pecuniary jurisdiction only.

Ram Das v. Habib Ullah, 1931 A. L. J. 1061 overruled. Sheikh Jannat Husain v. Sheikh Ghulam Kutubuddin Ahmad, 52 I. C. 522 dissented from.

Order on application of Seth Kishori Lal.

U. S. Bajpai and S. B. L. Gour for the applicant.

N. P. Asthana for the opposite party.

The following judgments were delivered:—

Sulaiman, C. J.

Sulaiman, C. J.—This is an application for the transfer of a suit pending in the court of the Munsif of Kasganj. A question arose whether the suit could be transferred to the court of another Munsif in the same district and my learned brother, entertaining a doubt as to the correctness of the ruling in Ram Das v. Habib Ullah,[1] has referred the point of law to a Division Bench.

The question for consideration is whether the High Court or the District Judge, acting under Section 24 C. P. C. has power to transfer a suit pending in one subordinate court to another subordinate court, which has pecuniary, but not territorial jurisdiction to try that suit.

In one sense it might be said that the present question did not strictly arise in the case mentioned above, because the Bench came to the conclusion that the order of the District Judge directing a transfer of the case when he did not proceed suo motu, but on an application made by a party, was illegal and irregular inasmuch as no notice had been issued to the defendant. The order could have been set aside on that ground alone. It however appears that the learned advocate for the applicant pressed the other question as well, presumably because he did not want that the case should be transferred to the particular Munsif to whose court it had been transferred. Bajpai, J., in whose judgment I concurred, accordingly expressed that view following a Patna case, namely, Sheikh Jannat Hussain v. Sheikh Ghulam Kutubuddin Ahmad[2] and gave directions to the District Judge to bear that view in mind. It is therefore not possible to say that the last observation was altogether an obiter dictum.

Under Section 25 of Act XIV of 1882, the High Court and the District Court were given power to transfer a suit pending in a subordinate

*Mis. Case 166 of 1932

---

[1] 1931 A. L. J. 1061

[2] 52 I. C. 522

court to any other subordinate court "competent to try the same in respect of its nature and the amount or value of its subject-matter". These words have been slightly altered, and in their place we now have in Section 24 the words "competent to try or dispose of the same". Under the old section there could be no doubt that all that was required of the subordinate court to which the case was to be transferred was that it should have pecuniary jurisdiction to try the suit. The deletion of those words from the new section may prima facie suggest that the competence of the court now required may be either pecuniary or territorial. If the words were to be taken literally, it might be open to argument that the word "competency" includes both pecuniary and territorial jurisdiction. Although the change in the words in the section was not emphasised, this view was certainly expressed by the learned Chief Justice of the Patna High Court in the case of Sheikh Jannat Husain v. Sheikh Ghulam Kutubuddin Ahmad. He was of opinion that the word "competent" was very wide and included both kinds of jurisdiction. The headnote of the case did not show that the other learned judge had expressed some doubt as regards this view and had reserved his opinion. The unfortunate omission of the words which appeared in the old section have made the new section somewhat ambiguous, but on reconsideration I am satisfied that the words have been deleted because they were considered redundant or unnecessary by the legislature. To hold that it is necessary that the court to which the case is transferred must have territorial jurisdiction would make it impossible for a High Court to transfer a case pending in the court of a District Judge to that of the District Judge of another district, for these District Judges would not have concurrent territorial jurisdiction. The section would, therefore, be nullified if the interpretation put upon it in the case of Ram Das v. Habib Ullah were to be accepted. In order not to render the section useless, I am constrained to hold that the word "competent" must be taken to refer to pecuniary jurisdiction only.

Cases of concurrent jurisdiction where two courts have both pecuniary and territorial jurisdiction to try a suit are dealt with in Section 22. The same words "competent to try the suit" occur in Section 11 C. P. C. as also in Section 15. It is quite clear that for purposes of res judicata it is not necessary that the two courts must have concurrent territorial jurisdiction, which depends entirely on the subject-matter in dispute. The provision in Section 15 would point to the same conclusion. It may also be pointed out that a distinction has been drawn in the Code as regards territorial jurisdiction, and Section 21 provides that no objection as to the place of suing shall be allowed, unless such objection was taken in the court of first instance at the earliest possible opportunity, and in all cases where issues are settled at or before such settlement, and unless there has been a consequent failure of justice.

On a reconsideration I am, therefore, of opinion that the observation made in the last portion of the judgment in Ram Das's case, in which I concurred, did not lay down the correct law.

KENDALL, J.—I concur.

BY THE COURT—In our opinion it is open to the High Court or a

CIVIL
1932
KISHORI LAL
v.
BALKISHAN

District Judge to transfer a case pending in a subordinate court to another court which has pecuniary jurisdiction to try the suit although it may not at the moment possess territorial jurisdiction to try it. We accordingly direct that this case be laid before the learned judge who has referred it to this Bench, for disposal on the merits.

Reference answered

CIVIL
1932
April 27
SULAIMAN, C. J.
MUKERJI, J.

JAUHARI AND ANOTHER (Defendants)
versus
TUNDAY (Plaintiff)*

Mortgage—Several mortgagors—A co-mortgagor redeems property from the mortgagee—Another co-mortgagor redeems property from the co-mortgagor who has already redeemed it—Whether right of subrogation arises—Transfer of Property Act, Section 92 (as amended in 1929).

One of several co-mortgagors having redeemed the mortgaged property, the appellants, who had purchased the share of one of the co-mortgagors, redeemed the property from the co-mortgagor who had already redeemed it on payment of the mortgage money. The plaintiffs, who were the other co-mortgagors, then brought a suit to recover possession of their shares without paying their proportionate shares of the mortgage debt. Held:

Per SULAIMAN, C. J.—That although the appellants had no right to redeem more than their own shares against the will of the mortgagee, nevertheless they were entitled to redeem the whole property with the mortgagee's consent. Having redeemed the whole property with the mortgagee's consent they cannot be dispossessed unless the plaintiffs pay their proportionate shares of the mortgage debt. As defendants in possession they can set up their payment as a shield. At the very least they are licensees of the mortgagee and not mere trespassers.

Per MUKERJI, J.—That the appellants were only entitled to redeem their own shares and had no right to redeem the shares of the plaintiffs also. When they paid the mortgage debt due upon the plaintiffs' shares they did so as volunteers, and have no right to retain the property or to be reimbursed. For these reasons the appellants are nothing but trespassers and are bound to hand over the property to the plaintiffs without receiving any payment.

Per KING, J. (on reference)—That the principle of Section 95 Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882) was applicable to cases where a co-mortgagor redeems the whole property, with the mortgagee's consent, although he might have compelled the mortgagee to permit redemption of his own share only, and the appellants are therefore in possession of the plaintiffs' shares as mortgagees and not as trespassers, and the plaintiffs cannot recover possession without paying their proportionate shares of the mortgage debt.

LETTERS PATENT APPEAL from the judgment of the HON'BLE MR. JUSTICE BAJPAI.

N. P. Asthana and S. S. Sastry for the appellants.

Baleshwari Prasad for the respondent.

The following judgments were delivered:—

Mukerji, J.

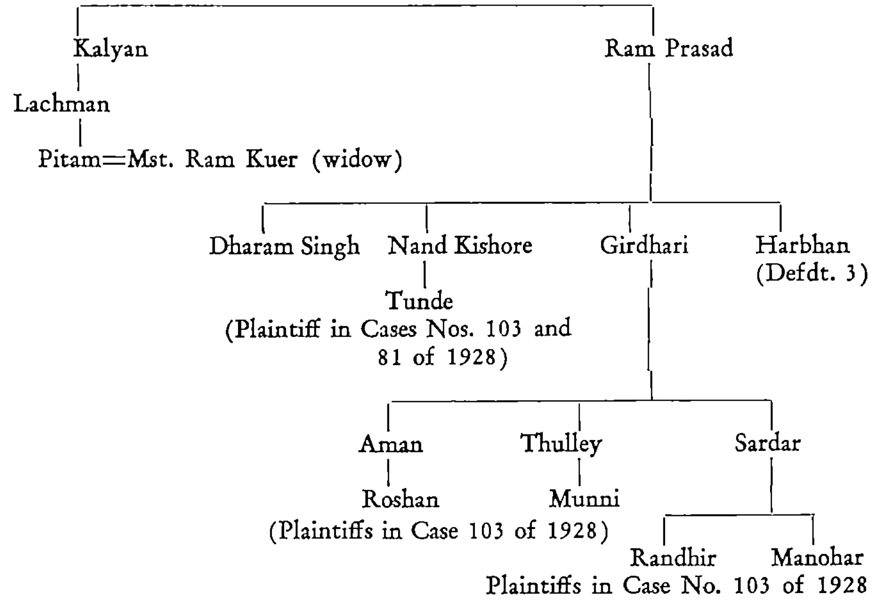
MUKERJI, J.—The facts of the case are given in the judgment of the learned single Judge against whose judgment this Letters Patent appeal

---

*L. P. A. 52 of 1931

CIVIL
1932
JAUHARI
v.
TUNDAY
Mukerji, J.

has been filed. I will state the facts only briefly so that the discussion involved in this judgment may be properly understood. The following pedigree will be useful:—



Kalyan
Ram Prasad
Lachman
Pitam=Mst. Ram Kuer (widow)
Dharam Singh
Nand Kishore
Girdhari
Harbhan
(Defdt. 3)
Tunde
(Plaintiff in Cases Nos. 103 and 81 of 1928)
Aman
Thulley
Sardar
Roshan
Munni
(Plaintiffs in Case 103 of 1928)
Randhir
Manohar
Plaintiffs in Case No. 103 of 1928

The two original owners Kalyan and Ram Prasad owned a 2 biswa share in a certain village and they mortgaged the same to one Lakshmi Chand on a date which has not been disclosed. All that we are told is that the mortgage is an ancient one. In course of time the 2 biswa share was split up into three complete Mahals. One Mahal consisting of 1 biswa was named after Pitam, the son of Lachman. Another Mahal was known after Girdhari, one of the four sons of Ram Prasad. This Mahal consisted of a half biswa of the original Mahal and was owned by Dharam Singh and Girdhari, two of the four brothers. The third Mahal was named after Harbhan and consisted of a half biswa original share and was given to Harbhan and Nand Kishore, the two remaining of the four brothers being sons of Ram Prasad.

Girdhari's half share in Mahal Girdhari was sold at an auction sale and was purchased by one Khem Singh. It has been found by the learned single Judge of this Court that Dharam Singh had died after the auction sale, therefore, so much of the share of Dharam Singh as was inherited by Girdhari was not sold by the auction sale. The correctness of this finding was impeached by the learned counsel for the appellants, but I am satisfied that this finding is correct and the finding of the lower appellate court on this point was vitiated by the fact that the lower appellate court thought that there was no evidence as to the date of Dharam Singh's death. Girdhari's one-quarter biswa in the original Mahal which is equivalent to one-half of Girdhari's Mahal passed by the auction sale to Khem Singh on December 1, 1890. Khem Singh redeemed the mortgage in favour of Lakshmi Chand on June 26, 1898 and thus became the owner of Girdhari's original share and became entitled to hold possession over the other shares till the co-owners redeemed the original mortgage in his hands.

Pitam's widow Ram Kuer sold the entire Mahal Pitam to the appellants for a sum of Rs.600 and directed that out of this sum of Rs.600, Rs.210 should be paid by the purchasers in satisfaction of the mortgage.

The appellants paid the sum of Rs.210 to Khem Singh and we are told that Khem Singh handed over to the appellants not only the Mahal Pitam to which alone the appellants were entitled but also all other properties mortgaged including the property purchased by Khem Singh himself. This redemption was by private treaty and took place on March 26, 1920.

The appellants, it seems, purchased the whole of Mahal Harbhan. Two suits were instituted in respect of property against the appellants. One was by Tunde, son of Nand Kishore, in the right of his own father's original share in Mahal Harbhan. He claims one-half of Mahal Harbhan without offering to pay anything to the defendants on the allegation that the property belonged to him in his own right and Harbhan had no right to sell it, on July 19, 1920. This was suit No. 81 of 1928. The second suit was instituted by the four grandsons of Girdhari and Nand Kishore's son Tunde for recovery of the share of Dharam Singh inherited by them. They claimed twelve shares out of 27 shares in Mahal Girdhari, but they have obtained a decree for nine shares out of 27 shares or one-third. Their case was as follows:—On the death of Dharam Singh his half share in Mahal Girdhari was inherited in three equal shares by Nand Kishore, Girdhari and Harbhan. Nand Kishore thus got one-sixth in the Mahal and Girdhari got one-sixth share in the Mahal and Harbhan got one-sixth. Harbhan sold his share and therefore two one-sixths remained with Nand Kishore and Girdhari which the plaintiffs in Suit No. 103 of 1928 claimed. They did not offer to redeem the mortgage.

Both the suits succeeded in the lower appellate court but in Suit No. 103 the plaintiffs got a decree on condition of payment of a sum of Rs.70-2-4. Tunde in Suit No. 81 got a decree for possession of the share claimed without any condition of payment.

The learned single Judge of this Court held that the mortgage of Lakshmi Chand was paid with the money left by Pitam's widow out of the sale proceeds with the appellants. The appellants paid off the mortgage with the money of Pitam's widow and therefore were not entitled to be repaid in giving up the property claimed by the plaintiffs. In other words, the appellants did not hold, according to the opinion of the learned single Judge, as mortgagees.

The defendants have appealed. The plaintiffs are not only satisfied with the decree of this Court made by the single Judge, but they have also not appeared in the Letters Patent appeals.

The points that have been urged before us are:—(1) The appellants have paid off Khem Singh and having been put in possession of the plaintiffs' shares in the two suits are in the position of a mortgagee and therefore the plaintiffs cannot get possession without payment of a proportionate share of the mortgage money. (2) As the date of the mortgage is not established and as it cannot be said that the claim is within time, the suit must be dismissed. I have already disposed of the third point raised, namely, the share of the plaintiffs in Suit No. 103 of 1928 which was filed by Tunde and the four grandsons of Girdhari was less than 9|27 or 1|3 as Dharam Singh died before Girdhari's share was sold.

It is clear that if my answer on the point No. 1 be that the appellants do not hold as mortgagees, the second question raised by them does not arise.

It is settled law that when one of several co-mortgagors redeems, he holds his own share free from mortgage and he holds the remaining shares with the same rights as the mortgagee had. This position of the redeeming co-mortgagor is due to the fact that the co-mortgagors are in the eye of law not only principal debtors but also are sureties for one another for the payment of the mortgage money. When a surety satisfies a principal debt, he is entitled to hold the securities held by the creditor, in order to realise the sums which the co-mortgagors or co-debtors are liable to contribute towards the satisfaction of the principal debt. This is the principle of contribution as enacted in Section 82 of the Transfer of Property Act and this is the principle of subrogation as enacted in Section 92 of the Transfer of Property Act, as amended in 1929.

The question then is: when a co-mortgagor has redeemed the mortgaged property and when one of the co-mortgagors seeks to recover his property from the co-mortgagor who has redeemed, is the co-mortgagor entitled to recover not only his own share but the shares of other co-mortgagors who have not yet contributed towards the payment of the mortgage debt? It was conceded by the learned counsel for the appellants before us that the co-mortgagor seeking redemption from his co-mortgagor is entitled only to take possession of his own share and not the shares of the other co-mortgagors. There is a conflict of opinion on this point among the various High Courts. But so far as this Court is concerned, the decisions except one are all one way and lay down that the co-mortgagor is entitled to his own share alone. This was held in Kallan Khan v. Mardan Khan[1], Zebun-nissa v. Parbhu Narain[2] and Kuray Mal v. Puran Mal[3]. A contrary view was taken in the case of Shiam Saran v. Banarsi Das[4]. But a Bench of this Court in Ahmad Husain v. Qasim[5] preferred to follow the three earlier cases to the case of Shiam Saran v. Banarsi Das. The principle on which these cases are decided is that the integrity of the mortgage has been broken. The only object of one of the mortgagors being compelled to redeem the whole mortgage (being for the benefit of the mortgagee) no longer subsists. A co-sharer as such is not entitled to possession over the share of other co-sharers. The co-sharer who has redeemed the mortgage initially, holds shares other than his own simply for the sake of being able to enforce payment to himself. That object does not exist in the case of the other co-sharers. These pay their proportionate share in the mortgage money and take their own property from the redeeming co-mortgagor. This principle has been applied to cases where out of the usufruct of the mortgaged property entire mortgage money is paid off. In such a case, it has been held that one of the co-mortgagors is entitled to recover possession of his own share alone and it has been further held that if one of the co-mortgagors takes possession of more than his legitimate share, he holds adversely to the owner of the excess share (see Fakir Baksh v. Sadat Ali[6] and Gobardhan v. Sujan[7]. It is in the last-mentioned case that the possession of the co-mortgagor who had obtained more than his share of the property was held to be adverse to the owner of the excess share. This must be so as there is no fiduciary relationship among the co-sharers as such.

---

[1] I. L. R. 28 All. 155

[2] I. L. R. 2 All. 565

[3] I. L. R. 39 All. 618

[4] 20 A. L. J. 258

[5] I. L. R. 48 All. 171

In this view of the law, the appellants on payment to Khem Singh had no right to take possession of the property belonging to the plaintiffs in the two suits and held by Khem Singh as security for a proportionate share of the mortgage money paid by him to the heirs of Lakshmi Chand. I may remark here that I am unable to agree with the learned single Judge of this Court that the mere fact that the mortgage money was paid out of the sale proceeds of the share sold by Mustt. Ram Kuer will deprive the appellants of their right to hold the redeemed property as mortgagees in order to secure payment of proportionate mortgage money to themselves. That is to say, if the appellants had paid off Lakshmi Chand's heirs, that is to say, to the mortgagees themselves and not Khem Singh, a co-mortgagor, who had redeemed in the first instance, in my opinion, the appellants would have been entitled to hold the shares other than their own till the owners of those shares redeemed them. The money has actually been paid by the transferee and it is immaterial whether it was described as part of the purchase price. The purchase price was Rs.600 and out of this sum Rs.210 were left to pay Lakshmi Chand's heirs. The same transaction may very well have been described as a sale of property subject to mortgage for a sum of Rs.600 minus Rs.210 or for Rs.390.

The argument on behalf of the appellants, however, is that although it may be correct in law that the appellants were not entitled to recover from Khem Singh any property other than the Mahal Pitam Singh, the property sold to the appellants, yet they having paid more than their legitimate share to Khem Singh and having recovered other shares from Khem Singh, they are in the same position as Khem Singh. I am unable to accept this position in law. If the appellants have no right to recover anything beyond their own share and if they recovered anything more they are pure trespassers with respect to the extra share recovered by them. If they paid a little money due by others, they paid as mere volunteers. No body asked the appellants to pay and they cannot recover. I need hardly repeat that Khem Singh's rights arose on the principle of subrogation which is expressly granted to a co-mortgagor redeeming property. On the other hand I find no warrant in Section 92 of the Transfer of Property Act as amended in 1929 or in decided cases any warrant for the proposition that a right of subrogation can arise on redeeming property from a co-mortgagor who has already redeemed it.

For the reasons given above, in my opinion, the appellants are nothing but trespassers and are bound to hand over the property to the plaintiffs in the two suits and they asked for the same.

Now remains to notice one more argument of the learned counsel for the appellants. It is this. Assuming that the appellants have no title to the property and they are not to be reimbursed for what they have paid, the plaintiffs have no right to recover the property as they have not paid off the mortgage. The answer to this argument is in my opinion simple. The "owner" of the property is the morgtagor at all times although the same property may have been mortgaged more than once. This question was discussed at length in the case of Sohan Lal v. Mohan Lal[8] and the view taken by the majority of the Judges in that case (see especially pages 991 and 992 and 999 to 1001) is in accordance with general principles. In view of that case the plaintiffs are the owners of the property and they are entitled to recover the same from any person who has got possession of the same for less than twelve years. In the case of Amir Hasan v. Nazir Hasan[9] the widow of a deceased Muhammedan was in possession in lieu of dower. She sold her right to dower to a legal practitioner who was debarred from purchasing an actionable claim, and put him in possession. It was held that an heir of the deceased could recover the property from the transferee without paying the dower. This was because the plaintiff had a title and the defendant had none. The suit is based on title and to such a suit Article 144 of Schedule I of the Limitation Act applies, as held by their Lordships of the Privy Council (see the case of Rani Chattar Debi v. Mohan Vikram Shah[10]. This view had already been taken by two learned Judges of this Court in the case of Kanhaiya Lal v. Girwar[11]. This last-mentioned case has been followed by me and Bennet, J. in other cases.

---

[6] I. L. R. 7 All. 376

[7] I. L. R. 16 All 254

The title being thus with the plaintiffs the only person who could resist their claim for possession was either Lakshmi Chand and his successor-in-title or Khem Singh who redeemed the mortgage from them. The appellants' position being that of a trespasser pure and simple, they are bound to hand over the property to the plaintiffs, if they failed to establish (as they cannot establish in this case) that they have held the property adversely to the plaintiffs for more than twelve years.

In my view the plaintiffs are entitled to a decree for unconditional possession in each case.

The result is that I would dismiss both the appeals but without costs as the respondents are not represented before us.

Sulaiman, C. J.

SULAIMAN, C. J.—The facts are fully stated in the judgment of my learned brother.

So far as the question whether after the integrity of the mortgage has been broken a co-mortgagor can, as of right claim redemption of his share only, is concerned, I have no doubt that he cannot claim more. He is not entitled to take possession of the share of the other co-mortgagors against the will of the mortgagee. When the mortgagee has acquired a part of the mortgaged property, he is on the same footing as the other co-mortgagors. He cannot be compelled to hand over possession of shares which do not belong to the plaintiffs. I do not think that any of the cases referred to by my learned brother is an authority for the proposition that if the mortgagee submits to the redemption of the whole property on payment of the whole amount due, the taking over possession of the other co-mortgagors' shares is unlawful and the redeeming co-mortgagor enters into adverse possession of those shares immediately.

[8] I. L. R. 50 All. 986

[9] 1932 A. L. J. 275

[10] 58 I. A. 279=I. L. R. 10 Pat. 851

[11] 1929 A. L. J. 1106

CIVIL
1932
JAUHARI
v.
TUNDAY
Sulaiman, C. J.

In Kuray Mal v. Puran Mal[12] Spankie, J. merely held that the representative of a mortgagor of a particular share, is entitled to redeem his own particular share in the joint mortgage of which the joint character has been broken up, but he cannot redeem, against the will of the mortgagee, the share of another share-holder. Oldfield, J. also emphasised that when the joint character of the mortgage has been broken the right to redeem the whole mortgage resting on the joint character of the mortgage ceases, and he cannot redeem more than his share against the will of the mortgagee. In the case of Fakir Baksh v. Sadat Ali[13] the mortgage debt had been satisfied from the usufruct and therefore the mortgage no longer existed.

Gobardhan v. Sujan[14] was also a case where the amount of the mortgage had been satisfied out of the usufruct, and as the learned Judges put it, the mortgage had become extinct and the parties were relegated to the position in which they were before the mortgage. They accordingly held that one of the mortgagors could only claim from the mortgagee his own individual share, as he had no right to take possession of the share of the others. But the learned Judges also observed that there can be no doubt that when one of several mortgagors redeems the mortgage by payment of the mortgage money and takes possession of the mortgaged property, he steps into the shoes of the mortgagee as regards the share of his co-mortgagors, and his possession over those shares can only be regarded as the possession of a mortgagee. In Kallan Khan v. Mardan Khan[15] Banerji, J. relied on Kuray Mal's case, and quoted the observation that the person interested in a part of the mortgaged property after the joint character had been broken up, was not entitled to redeem anything beyond his own share against the will of the mortgagee. He laid down the principle that such a mortgagor "may" redeem his own share only on payment of a proportionate part of the mortgage money, but he "cannot compel" the mortgagee to allow him to redeem the shares of the other persons in which he is not interested.

The case of Ahmad Husain v. Muhammad Qasim Khan[16] is an authority only for the proposition that one mortgagor after the integrity of the mortgage has been destroyed, cannot as of right claim redemption of more than his own share when the mortgagee objects to it. In that case the mortgagee was resisting the claim and was objecting to any greater share being allowed to be redeemed. The same remarks apply to Zaib-un-nissa Bibi v. Maharaja Parbhu Narain[17].

On the other hand a Bench of this Court in Shiam Saran v. Banarsi Das[18] allowed a part owner of the mortgaged property to redeem just as much of it as did not belong to the mortgagees themselves, on payment of a proportionate share of the mortgage debt. Possibly, the learned Judges were influenced by the circumstance that the majority of the pro forma defendants had supported the plaintiff's claim and had asked that his suit might be decreed as brought.

I am not prepared to go to the length to which the Bench in Shiam Saran's case did, but I would certainly say that none of the cases referred to above is any authority for the proposition that when the mortgagee himself does not object and submits to redemption of the share of all the

[12] I. L. R. 2 All. 565

[13] I. L. R. 7 All. 376

[14] I. L. R. 16 All. 254

[15] I. L. R. 28 All. 155

[16] I. L. R. 48 All. 171

[17] I. L. R. 39 All. 618

[18] 20 A. L. J. 258

co-mortgagors other than that which he himself has acquired, on receipt of the proportionate amount of the mortgage money, the possession of the redeeming co-mortgagor at once becomes adverse as against the other co-mortgagors.

It seems to me that when the delivery of possession is made by the mortgagee to the plaintiff co-mortgagor the property is delivered to the latter on behalf of all the persons interested, and the initial possession taken by them is in a representative capacity and therefore not at all adverse. The character of such representative possession would not change unless subsequently there is an assertion of adverse title to the knowledge of the other co-mortgagor. In the case where the redeeming co-mortgagor is a co-sharer with the other co-mortgagors, his possession in the eye of the law is on behalf of all the co-sharers and without an express denial of their title and their ouster to their knowledge, his adverse possession cannot commence. If the possession of one co-mortgagor redeeming the whole property were to become adverse automatically from the very commencement, the mortgagors would find their period of redemption suddenly cut down to 12 years some times without their knowledge.

Article 144 of the Limitation Act will apply where there has been no dispossession, and the defendant must prove his adverse possession for over 12 years. Article 142 applies only, when the plaintiff having been previously in possession has been dispossessed, in which case he must sue within 12 years of his dispossession. I do not imagine that the learned Judges in Kanhaiya Lal v. Girwar[10] meant to lay down anything different.

There is no doubt that Khem Singh, by virtue of his auction purchase in 1892 of the interest of Girdhari, became a co-mortgagor. When in 1898 he redeemed the entire mortgage on payment of the entire mortgage money and obtained possession of all the three mahals his position was that of a full proprietor qua Girdhari's interest purchased by him and that of a charge holder qua the interest of the other co-mortgagors.

When Johri and Mangli, who subsequently purchased mahal Pitam, wanted to redeem the mortgage, the could not have insisted on Khem Singh submitting to a redemption of the entire property. If Khem Singh had insisted upon his rights, he would have compelled Johri and Mangli to redeem only their share on payment of the proportionate amount. But as the redemption took place out of court under a mutual agreement, Khem Singh did not object and handed over possession of the entire mortgaged property to Johri and Mangli on the receipt of the entire mortgage money. Subsequently Johri and Mangli purchased the whole of mahal Harbhan also.

It seems to me that the position of Johri and Mangli, as regards the share of the plaintiffs, must be one of a person who has paid off their share of the mortgage money on their behalf and taken possession from the mortgagee and has not yet been paid off by the plaintiffs. The plaintiffs own the equity of redemption, but so long as they do not pay the mortgage money they are not entitled to obtain possession. The right to possession was with Khem Singh so long as he was not paid. He has passed on his possession to Johri and Mangli on taking the plaintiffs' share of the mortgage money from Johri and Mangli. The latter therefore cannot be treated

---

[10] 1929 A. L. J. 1106

CIVIL

1932

JAUHARI
v.
TUNDAY

Sulaiman,
C. J.

as rank trespassers, but as persons who have been put in possession by the lawful mortgagee, Khem Singh, and who have paid off the share of the mortgage money, due from the plaintiffs. The defendants are, to say the least, the licencees of the mortgagees, and if 12 years were to expire, they would certainly acquire adverse possession as mortgagees against the other mortgagors. But before such adverse possession has matured they would not be entitled to enforce their rights as plaintiffs, but as the defendants they are in equity entitled to protection.

The position of the defendants therefore is not that of trespassers, pure and simple, but of persons who are in possession of the mortgaged property, having paid off a part of the mortgage money, and are entitled to use that payment as a shield so long as they themselves are not redeemed. Legally the mortgagee rights have not been assigned to them to that they cannot, as plaintiffs, enforce any rights of subrogation in a court of law. But as defendants in possession they can set up their payment as a shield. For authority I may refer to the observations made at page 281 and page 285 in Mannu Mal v. Ram Chander[20]. See also Nasiruddin v. Ahmed Husain[21]. In the Full Bench case of Ram Sanehi Lal v. Janki Prasad[22], three out of the remaining four learned Judges agreed with my judgment in which on pages 744 to 745 I referred to previous cases laying down the rule of equity in favour of a defendant in possession, to claim the amount paid by him in discharge of a previous mortgage. The position of a person paying off a simple mortgage (otherwise than by purchasing the property in execution of a decree on a prior mortgage) stands on a different footing because the mortgagee has no right to take possession. But a person paying off a possessory mortgagee in his capacity of a mortgagor or subsequent mortgagee does not obtain possession as a trespasser and cannot be turned out so long as the amount due is not repaid.

It seems to me that the plaintiffs who have neither redeemed their mortgage, nor paid the mortgage money, cannot recover possession against the defendants who have taken possession from the usufructuary mortgagees on payment of the mortgage debt. The case of a Mahommedan widow in possession of her husband's property in lieu of her dower debt over which she has a lien is different. The lien is always extinguished when possession is lost. If she transfers the property without tranferring the lien itself, the transferee obviously cannot claim payment of the dower debt as against her heirs. But it has always been held that her right to recover the debt and her lien are both heritable and transferable. If she were to transfer the lien itself, there can be no doubt that the transferee would be able to resist a claim for possession brought by the heirs. But where she has not transferred the lien at all, a transferee of the property only cannot claim the lien.

I do not think that any of the points which arise in this case at all arose in the Full Bench case of Sohan Lal v. Mohan Lal[23].

But it seems to me that the defendants can also call upon the plaintiffs to prove their title. The mere fact that at one time the mortgage existed, is not sufficient for a claim for redemption to succeed. The plaintiffs must further establish that the mortgage was made within sixty years or that

[20] 1931 A. L. J. 273

[21] 1926 A. I. R. (P.C.) 109

[22] 1931 A. L. J. 729

[23] I. L. R. 50 All. 986

Civil

1932

Jauhari
v.
Tunday

Sulaiman,
C. J.

their right of redemption has been kept alive by any subsequent acknowledgment. The burden is on them to show that they have a subsisting right of redemption. See Anup Singh v. Fateh Chand[24]. The view of the majority of the Full Bench is binding upon me.

Where a suit relates to possession of immovable property and limitation has expired, it is not only that the remedy is barred, but the right also is extinguished under Section 28 of the Limitation Act. If therefore 60 years have expired the plaintiffs' rights have been extinguished.

The defendants who are holding possession with the consent of the mortgagee, Khem Singh, are entitled to plead that they are not rank trespassers, and can legitimately urge that the plaintiffs should have brought their suit for redemption against the mortgagee, Khem Singh, impleading the present defendants as the persons who have been put in possession by the mortgagee. The plaintiffs cannot, over the head of the mortgagee Khem Singh, sue to dispossess the defendants who are in possession with their consent.

It also seems to me that the defendants are at any rate entitled to put the plaintiffs to proof of the fact that their right of redemption was subsisting till 1920 when the mortgagee Khem Singh put the defendants in possession. If the plaintiffs' right of redemption owing to lapse of time had become extinguished by March 26, 1920, then they cannot get a fresh start as against the present defendants merely on the ground that the latter are mere volunteers, even if they were so, who have paid off the mortgage money and taken possession of the mortgaged property without any formal deed of assignment. If the right of redemption had been extinguished by 1920, the only person to whom the defendants are responsible is Khem Singh from whom they have taken over possession for consideration. They cannot be compelled to hand over possession to the plaintiffs without receipt of their money.

In the absence of proof of the exact date of the mortgage the plaintiffs' claim should be dismissed, as laid down by the Full Bench in Anup Singh's case. I would accordingly allow the appeal and dismiss the suit.

By the Court—As we differ on the questions of law arising in this case we direct that this case be laid before the Chief Justice for being sent to one or more of the other Judges.

[The appeal was accordingly heard by King, J., who delivered the following judgment on June 7, 1932.]

King, J.

King, J.—This was an appeal under Sec. 10 of the Letters Patent against the decree of a learned single Judge of this court dismissing a second appeal arising out of a suit for possession of zamindari property. As the two learned Judges who heard the appeal have differed in opinion on a point of law, the case has been referred to me for opinion on that point.

The point of law on which my opinion is required has not been formulated, but both sides have been represented before me by learned counsel who agree that the question is:—"Are the appellants Jauhari and Mangali in possession of the plaintiff's share in the capacity of mortgagees, or trespassers, or in any other capacity?"

The position in 1898 was that there were 3 mahals jointly subject to an old usufructuary mortgage. The mahals were called Mahal Pitam, Mahal Girdhari and Mahal Harbhan. One Khem Singh owned a share in Mahal Girdhari. Khem Singh, as one of the co-mortgagors, redeemed the whole mortgaged property by paying the mortgage money, Rs.210-8 to the mortgagee Jwala Prasad and got possession of the whole property.

---

[24] 1920 A. L. J. 789

After redemption the position was that Khem Singh held his share in mahal Girdhari free from the encumbrance. In respect of the rest of the mortgaged property Khem Singh was subrogated to the rights of the original possessory mortgagee. In the absence of authority the language of Section 95, Transfer of Property Act might have led one to hold that Khem Singh merely held a charge over the remaining property for the proportionate mortgage debt, but it is well established by judicial authority that in respect of the property of his co-mortgagors he must be treated as the assignee of the mortgage security. This proposition has received statutory recognition in Section 92 of the Transfer of Property Act as amended in 1929. So far there is no difficulty.

In 1919 the appellants bought mahal Pitam, and on March 26, 1920 they redeemed, not only mahal Pitam, but the whole of the mortgaged property, on payment of the mortgage debt of Rs.210-8 to Khem Singh. The latter delivered possession to them of the whole mortgaged property including even his own proprietary share in mahal Girdhari. It is not clear why Khem Singh delivered possession of his own share, which was free from the encumbrance, but it seems that he did so. Subsequently the appellants purchased from Harbhan certain shares in mahal Harbhan and Mahal Girdhari but these transactions have no material bearing on the point at issue.

Tunday (the plaintiff in suit No. 18 of 1928) owns a half share in mahal Harbhan. Tunday and the grandsons of Girdhari (plaintiffs in suit No. 103 of 1928) between them own a share in mahal Girdhari. They claim possession of their shares from the appellants, without paying the proportionate share of the mortgage debt, alleging that the latter are in possession without title. The appellants claim that as they had discharged the mortgage debt upon the plaintiff's share they cannot be dispossessed without being paid the proportionate share of the mortgage debt.

Mukerji, J. takes the view that the appellants were only entitled to redeem their own share and had no right to redeem the share of the plaintiff also. When they paid the mortgage debt due upon the plaintiff's shares they did so as volunteers, and have no right to retain the property or to be reimbursed. For these reasons the appellants are nothing but trespassers and are bound to hand over the property to the plaintiff without receiving any payment.

Sulaiman, C. J. is of opinion that although the appellants had no right to redeem more than their own shares against the will of the mortgagee, nevertheless they were entitled to redeem the whole property with the mortgagee's consent. Having redeemed the whole property with the mortgagee's consent they cannot be dispossessed unless the plaintiff pays his proportionate share of the mortgage debt. As defendants in possession they can set up their payment as a shield. At the very least they are licensees of the mortgagee and not mere trespassers.

I find it very difficult to hold that the appellants who were co-mortgagors, and who obtained possession from the mortgagee, after paying up the entire mortgage debt, are mere trespassers.

It is conceded that, when the integrity of a mortgage has been broken a co-mortgagor is entitled to redeem his own share and cannot compel the mortgagee to permit redemption of more than his share. The mortgagee also cannot compel a co-mortgagor to redeem more than his share. But I cannot find any authority for the view that a co-mortgagor cannot redeem the whole mortgaged property with the mortgagee's consent. Such a transaction does not contravene or evade the provisions of any law nor does it injure anyone. The plaintiff as a co-mortgagor was not entitled to recover possession of his share without paying off the proportionate mortgage debt due upon his share. It is immaterial to him whether he pays the money to Khem Singh or to the appellants, so he has not been prejudiced in any way.

In my opinion Section 95 of the Transfer of Property Act applies not only to the redemption by Khem Singh from the mortgagee, but also to the redemption by the appellants from Khem Singh. When Khem Singh redeemed the whole property from the mortgagee he was undoubtedly subrogated to the rights of the mortgagee. He occupied the position of an assignee of the original security. So when the appellants redeemed the whole property from Khem Singh, on payment of the whole mortgage debt, I think the appellants stepped into the shoes of Khem Singh as assignee of the original security. It is true that the appellants were not (like Khem Singh) bound to redeem more than their own share, as the integrity of the mortgage had been broken. But there is nothing in Section 95 to indicate that its application is restricted to cases where the co-mortgagor cannot redeem his own share only and is compelled to redeem the whole property. I think that the same principle will apply where a co-mortgagor redeems the whole property, with the mortgagee's consent, although he might have compelled the mortgagee to permit redemption of his own share only. If the principle of Section 95 is applicable, as I think it is, then the appellants are clearly in possession of the plaintiff's share in the capacity of mortgagees.

No judicial authority which is directly in point has been cited before me. The case of Gobardhan v. Sujan[25] has been cited by the respondent to support the contention that the appellants are in adverse possession of the plaintiff's shares, as trespassers and not as mortgagees but that case is clearly distinguishable on the facts. In that case a usufructuary mortgage had been satisfied out of the usufruct. One co-mortgagor recovered possession of the whole property. It was held that he was not entitled to take possession of more than his own share, and that he did not occupy the position of a mortgagee to his co-mortgagors but his possession was adverse to them. The reason for the decision was that as the mortgage had been satisfied out of the usufruct the mortgage became extinct and the parties were relegated to the position in which they were before the mortgage. In the present case the mortgage had not become extinct and the appellants took possession of the property from the mortgagee Khem Singh on payment of the whole mortgage debt. I think this ruling is no authority for holding that, on the facts of this case, the appellants are in possession of the plaintiff's share not as mortgagees but as trespassers.

[25] I. L. R. 16 All. 254

There is one aspect of this case which has not been touched upon, either in the foregoing judgments or in arguments before me. The language of Section 70 of the Contract Act seems wide enough to be applicable to the facts of this case. The appellants lawfully discharged the mortgage debt on the plaintiff's share. They clearly did not intend to do so gratuitously and the plaintiff enjoys the benefit of such discharge. The plaintiff claims possession of his share without payment on the ground that the appellants have discharged the plaintiff's debts officiously and voluntarily. But Section 70 is not restricted to cases where a service is rendered to another person under compulsion or in circumstances of pressing necessity. It is not the appellant who are seeking as plaintiffs to recover money from the persons benefited. It is the persons benefited who are seeking to recover possession of the property, and under the provisions of Section 70 there is some force in the defence that the plaintiff should not be permitted to recover the property without repaying the sums paid by the defendants on behalf of the plaintiff. If it is held that Section 95 does not apply, and if there is nothing in the law of mortgage that expressly governs the question, then we are entitled to seek guidance from the general principles of equity. On the equitable principle laid down in Section 70 I think the plaintiff is not entitled to enjoy the benefit of the payment made by the appellants without making compensation.

The lower appellate court has decreed the claim in suit No. 103 on payment of Rs.70-2-4 and it is significant that the respondent has not even troubled to file a cross-objection. This shows that the plaintiff does not regard it as unjust that he should pay the proportionate mortgage debt as a condition of obtaining possession, and he will have to do so even if the appeal is dismissed. Whether the view that I take on the point of law is right or wrong, I feel that it is at least in accordance with justice and equity.

In my opinion the appellants are in possession of the plaintiff's share as mortgagees and not as trespassers, and the plaintiff cannot recover possession without paying his proportionate share of the mortgage debt.

JAI DAYAL MADAN GOPAL OF BENARES—IN THE MATTER OF*

Civil

1932

April 22

SULAIMAN, C. J.
MUKERJI, J.

Contract Act, Sec. 239—Firm—Whether can be partner in another firm—Income-Tax—Firm owned by two partners—Partners interested in other firms also—Income from other firms credited into the books of Benares firm—Whether partners individually or firm liable to tax.

Under Sec. 239 of the Contract Act a firm cannot be a partner in another firm. Basanti Bibi v. Babu Lal Poddar, 1930 A. L. J. 1617 and Sheodayal Khemka v. Joharmull Mannmull, I. L. R. 50 Cal. 549 followed.

Where two partners with equal shares, besides owning a registered firm in Benares, were interested in several other unregistered firms bearing the same name, and it was found that although the Benares firm had made no profits in the year of assessment, the other firms had made considerable profits, and the income received from these firms was credited into the books of the Benares firm, held, that subject to the limitation that it does not necessarily follow that the income received by the Benares firm is no part of its own income, the Benares firm cannot legally be a partner in the other firms.

Per SULAIMAN, C. J.—If money had been taken by the partners out of the Benares firm and reinvested by them in other firms, then it is their money and the profits earned on it belonged to them in their individual capacities. If on the other hand, the money belonged to the Benares firm and was invested by the Benares firm as such and profits on the amount had been received back by the Benares firm, the capital continues to belong to the Benares firm and the income earned thereon is the property of the Benares firm, although the Benares firm cannot in the eye of the law have the status of a partner in the other firms.

REFERENCE under Sec. 66, Sub-sec. 2 of the Income Tax Act by the Commissioner of Income-tax, U. P.

K. N. Katju and Harnandan Prasad for the assessee.

U. S. Bajpai (Government Advocate) for the Crown.

The following judgments were delivered:—

Sulaiman, C. J.

SULAIMAN, C. J.—The question referred to the High Court by the Commissioner is in the following words:—

> Whether having regard to the deed of partnership, dated April 16, 1928, and to other relevant evidence on the record, the finding that the registered firm Jai Dayal Madan Gopal of Benares is in its corporate capacity a partner in nine other firms bearing the same name was a legal and proper finding?

It is obvious that the Commissioner has assumed that a registered firm can under the law be a partner in another firm in its corporate capacity and he has asked us to answer the question whether having regard to the deed of the partnership and to other relevant evidence on the record, the firm Jai Dayal Madan Gopal of Benares is a partner in the other firms.

Strictly speaking the question of law that one firm cannot legally be a partner in another firm in its corporate capacity has not been referred to us. This would be clear if we see the grounds in the petition of the assessee for reference to the High Court. The first three grounds did not refer to this question at all. The fourth ground was confined to the proper construction of the instrument of partnership, and the fifth ground was

---

*Mis. Case 653 of 1931

> Whether the income from various partnership concerns mentioned in the assessment order referred to in the appellate order is the exclusive income of the applicant firm or the individual income of the partners of the applicant firm under the instrument of partnership read with the proviso to Section 55 of the Act.

The question of the impossibility of one firm being a partner in another firm was not asked to be referred to.

It is, however, clear from the way in which the question has been put by the Commissioner, challenging, as it does, the legality and propriety of the finding of the Income Tax Officer, it may well be said to include the question of law as stated above. We have power to reframe the question so as to answer it correctly. But when reframing it we must take care that we do not answer the new question in a way which would lead the income tax department to imply an answer to another question not directly included. The real matter with which the department is concerned is whether the income received by the Benares firm from the various partnership concerns in other places is a part of the taxable income of the Benares firm or not. It is in a proceeding relating to the assessment of tax on the income of the Benares firm that the question whether the Benares firm can legally be a partner in the other firms arises.

The instrument of the partnership begins as follows:—

> Whereas a partnership firm in the name of the head of our family Seth Jai Dayal Madan Gopal is carried on at Kashi (Benares) and other places, in which we are shareholders of half and half, etc.

If the question had turned entirely on an interpretation of the instrument of the partnership, I would have said that it means that there is one partnership firm in the name of Seth Jai Dayal Madan Gopal carrying on business at Kashi (Benares) and other places in which the two persons are partners to the extent of a half share each. If an answer were sought as to whether the Benares firm is a partner in the other firms on the basis of the deed of the partnership and other relevant evidence on the record, I would decline to answer the question because that is not a question of law at all but one of fact. Where the evidence is both oral and documentary in addition to the deed of partnership, I would not say that the matter is merely one of a legal inference from found facts, but I would say that it is a question of fact itself.

But if a question were asked whether one firm can legally be a partner in another firm, then I would unhesitatingly proceed to answer it.

There is authority for the view that one firm cannot legally be a partner in another firm. Section 239 of the Contract Act defines a partnership as the relation which subsists between persons who have agreed to combine their property, labour or skill in some business, and to share the profits thereof between them. The view has been expressed that the word 'person' in this Section does not include a firm. I may refer to the case of Sheodayal Khemka v. Joharmull Manmull[1] where Page, J. remarked that a firm is not a person, it is not an entity but is merely a collective name for the individuals who are members of the partnership. This case was

---

[1] 50 Cal. 549 at 558

Civil

1932

Jai Dayal
Madan
Gopal of Benares

Sulaiman,
C. J.

followed by a Division Bench of the Calcutta High Court in Brojo Lal Saha Banikya v. Budh Nath Pyari Lal and Co.,[2] where it was held that a partnership entered into by two or more persons is not a legal person and that a firm is not a person within the meaning of Section 239 of the Contract Act. A Bench of our own High Court in Basanti Bibi v. Babu Lal Poddar[3], expressed a similar view that the owning of a five annas share in the factory could not be regarded as forming a separate partnership, but that there was only one partnership owning the whole factory. The facts of the last mentioned case were however peculiar.

But it may be pointed out that the definition of the word 'person' as given in the General Clauses Act of 1868 which was in force when the Contract Act was passed, and which definition has been reproduced in the Act of 1897, was not expressly considered in the above cases. According to that definition a person includes any company or association or body of individuals, whether incorporated or not (II (3) of 1868 and Section 3(39) of 1897).

In Kader Bux Omer Hyat v. Bukt Behari[4] another learned Judge of the Calcutta High Court when considering the argument that a partnership which purports to exist between a firm and an individual is unlawful according to Indian Law, pointed out the fallacy that "conceding that a firm is not a legal person, a person within the meaning of Section 239 may yet be a combination of persons", but pointed out that "person" is not defined in the Contract Act, and the definition of person in the General Clauses Act permits of this being the case; the terms of the section do not render unlawful or impossible a partnership between an association of persons, although unregistered, and an individual". But the learned Judge went on to say > that a firm is nothing but an association of individuals, and that when such an association under a firm name enters into a partnership with another individual or another association of individuals, it is not the aggregate that combines with the individual but the individuals composing that aggregate.

If the definition of 'person' as given in the General Clauses Act were to be applied to the word 'person' in Section 239, there would be absolutely no reason to exclude a firm from the scope of the word. No doubt the definitions in the General Clauses Act apply only when there is nothing repugnant in the subject or text. But it would be difficult to say that there is something repugnant in Section 239 itself to the applicability of that definition of person. No doubt there are other sections in Chapter XI of the Contract Act dealing particularly with the death or disability of partners which would not be applicable to a firm.

There is nothing absolutely incongruous in holding that a firm is a legal person. Indeed such a conception exists in some systems of law. The English Partnership Act of 1890 (53 and 54 Vict. Ch. 39), Section 4, Sub-section (2) lays down that in Scotland a firm is a legal person distinct from the partners of whom it is composed.

The question is not free from difficulty but having regard to the previous authorities, particularly of this Court, I am not prepared to dissent

---

[2] 55 Cal. 551

[3] 1930 A. L. J. 1517 (1519)

[4] 36 Cal. W. N. 489 (490)

Civil

1932

Jai Dayal Madan Gopal of Benares

Sulaiman, C. J.

from the view that the word 'person' in Section 239 of the Contract Act should not be interpreted so as to include a firm. Such an interpretation avoids complications in dissolution of partnerships and may well be accepted.

But the question whether a firm cannot be legally a partner in another firm so as to be able to enforce all the rights of a partner and be burdened with all the liabilities of a partner, is entirely different from the question whether the income received by a firm which was wrongly admitted as a partner and paid over to that firm is not legally money belonging to that firm.

The question before us arises under the Indian Income Tax Act. The firm Jai Dayal Madan Gopal of Benares is the assessee in this case. According to Section 2(2) of that Act an assessee means a person by whom income-tax is payable. The present reference under Section 66 arises in the course of an assessment and has been made at the request of the assessee. We must for the purposes of the Income Tax Act regard the assessee, namely, the Benares firm, as a "person", otherwise the department cannot tax the assessee at all. Under Section 239 of the Indian Contract Act the firm of Benares is a partnership firm. It can own property and have its own income. It can have a manager authorized to act on its behalf and to dispose of its funds. The Income-tax Act recognizes a firm which has got itself registered under Section 26A of the Income Tax Act. It, therefore, seems to me that the firm of Benares is a distinct legal entity recognized by law, separate from the two individuals who are its partners or proprietors. If the Benares firm had some funds of its own, and a part of its funds was invested in some other firm under a mistaken view of the law that the firm can be a partner in the other firm and some profit was earned on that income and has been paid over to the Benares firm and received by it as its own income, the money belongs to the Benares firm and it is income received by that firm for purposes of the income-tax. It is immaterial whether in the eye of the law the status of the Benares firm was that of a partner in the other firm or not, and quite immaterial whether the Benares firm could have in a court of law enforced its rights as a partner in the other firm or that other firm could have enforced the liability of the Benares firm as a partner. Money that has already been paid over to the Benares firm without protest as profits on that firm's own funds has become a part of the income of the Benares firm. If once it is conceded that the Benares firm exists as an entity, separate from the two individuals who own it, it cannot be said that a part of its funds ceases to be the property of the firm as soon as it is invested in another firm. Surely, even if the relationship of a partner does not legally come into existence, the money so invested continues to be the property of the Benares firm, and its return can be claimed. If profit earned on it has been paid to the Benares firm the profit must be the property of that firm. In my opinion the question whether such income belongs to the firm or to the partners in their individual capacities is entirely one of fact. If money had been taken by the partners out of the Benares firm and reinvested by them in the other firms, then it is their money and the profits earned on it belonged to them in their individual capacities. If, on the other hand, the money belonged to the Benares firm and was invested by the Benares firm as such and profits on the amount had been received back by the Benares firm, the capital continues to belong to the Benares firm and the income earned thereon is the property of the Benares firm, although the Benares firm cannot in the eye of the law have the status of a partner in the other firms.

Sulaiman, C. J.

Subject to the limitation that it does not necessarily follow that the income received by the Benares firm is no part of its own income, I would answer the question referred by saying that even though the finding may be justified on the evidence, the Benares firm cannot legally be a partner in the nine other firms.

Mukerji, J.

MUKERJI, J.—This is a reference under Section 66, Sub-section (2) of the Income Tax Act by the Commissioner of Income Tax, United Provinces.

There is a firm in Benares known as Jai Dayal Madan Gopal. It consists of two partners with equal shares one being Lala Jai Dayal and the other Rai Sahib Ram Ratan Das. There seems to be a slight clerical mistake in the name of the second partner in paragraph 1 of the statement of the case.

The firm has an expensive business. Besides owning this firm the two partners have an interest in numerous firms bearing the same name and carrying on business at different parts of the country. In the year of which the income for the purpose of assessment was under investigation, it was found that the firm made no profits. It was, however, calculated that the other firms in which the two partners at Benares were interested made considerable profits which after a slight correction was declared to be Rs.1,81,338. On this amount the tax and super-tax leviable has already been realised in the hands of the different firms. It appears that under the proviso to Section 55 of the Income Tax Act, where profits of an unregistered firm have been assessed to super-tax, no further super-tax can be levied on that sum in the hands of an individual partner of the firm. If the two gentlemen, Mr. Jai Dayal and Rai Sahib Ram Ratan Das be treated as partners of the numerous firms which have yielded the income described above, they would not be any longer liable to pay super-tax, on their individual share in the profits. The firm Jai Dayal Madan Gopal has been registered within the meaning of Section 2, Clause (14) of the Income Tax Act. The view taken by the Income tax department is that the registered firm Jai Dayal Madan Gopal is a corporate body and as a corporate body is a partner in the nine unregistered firms the profits of which have come to Rs.1,81,338. If this view be correct, the exemption from super-tax contained in the proviso to Section 55 of the Income tax Act will no longer be applicable to the shares of the two individuals, Lala Jai Dayal and Rai Sahib Ram Ratan Das. The contention of these gentlemen is that, as a matter of law, the firm Jai Dayal Madan Gopal is not a corporate body and could not be, having regard to the provisions of Section 239 of the Indian Contract Act, a partner of any other firm. They further contend that as a matter of law they, namely, Lala Jai Dayal and Rai Sahib Ram Ratan Das are partners, in the nine firms mentioned, in their individual capacity and are, therefore, not liable to be taxed with super-tax on one-half of the amount of Rs.1,81,338.

Civil

1932

Jai Dayal Madan Gopal of Benares

Mukerji, J.

A preliminary objection was taken by the learned Government Advocate that the reference itself was incompetent because the controversy arises not because any tax is sought to be levied on the firm Jai Dayal Madan Gopal but because of a controversy that arises out of assessment on the individuals Lala Jai Dayal and Rai Sahib Ram Ratan Das.

This contention, however, is not sound because the question has arisen "in the course of the assessment" on the firm Jai Dayal Madan Gopal. The reference is correct and competent.

The question that has been referred to us by the learned Commissioner of Income tax runs as follows:—

> Whether having regard to the deed of partnership, dated April 16, 1928, and other relevant evidence on the record, the finding that the registered firm Jai Dayal Madan Gopal of Benares is in its corporate capacity a partner in nine other firms bearing the same name was a legal and proper finding?

In framing this question for determination by the High Court the learned Commissioner has taken it for granted that the firm Jai Dayal Madan Gopal is a corporate body and it was possible under the law as contained in the Indian Contract Act, for a firm like this to be a partner of another firm. The assessee firm has always contended that the income of Rs.1,81,338 and odd is their individual income and not the income of the firm Jai Dayal Madan Gopal. The question was very prominently and very clearly put before the Commissioner of Income tax in paragraphs (4) and (5) at page 25 of the printed reference. The same questions were raised before the Assistant Commissioner of Income tax in their appeal by the assessee firm in paragraph 7 at page 20 which runs as follows:—

> Because the findings of the learned Income tax Officer as treating the registered firm Jai Dayal Madan Gopal partners in other partnerships is illegal and is self-contradictory by treating the registered firm as capitalist partners.

It has been held in this Court that when a Commissioner of Income-tax states a case, it is open to this Court to find out for itself what are the question or questions of law that do arise between the parties, namely, the assessee and the Income-tax department for determination by the High Court and to decide those questions. Sheo Prasad v. Commissioner of Income-tax[5] and in re Kajori Mal Kalyan Mal[6]. This view has been followed in Bombay in the case of Income Tax Commissioner, Bombay Presidency v. National Mutual Life Association Limited[7].

In this view of the law this Court has to determine first what was the real point of controversy between the parties and then to pronounce an opinion on it.

The real controversy between the parties is whether the partners of the nine unregistered firms which yielded profits are Lala Jai Dayal and Rai Sahib Lala Ram Ratan Das individually or whether it is the firm Jai Dayal Madan Gopal that is the partner. This is also clear from Para 3 of the statement of the case.

There can be no doubt that under Section 239 of the Indian Contract Act a firm cannot be a partner in another firm. According to the Income Tax Act, the words "firm", "partner" and "partnership" have the same meaning respectively as in the Indian Contract Act 1872 (Vide Section 2, Sub-section (6) (a)). A partnership as defined in Section 239 of the Indian Contract Act is the relation which subsists between persons who are agreed to combine their property, labour or skill in some business and to share the profits thereof between them.

---

[5] 1929 A. I. R. All. 819

[6] 1930 A. L. J. 78

[7] I. L. R. 55 Bom. 647

Persons who have entered into a partnership with one another are called collectively a firm.

It is true that under the definition of the word 'person' contained in the General Clauses Act of 1868 a person includes a number of individuals associated for a purpose, although they may not be a corporate body. But this definition would apply only if any other meaning is not indicated by the context of the law to be interpreted. Now by the Second Paragraph of the definition of "partnership" persons who have entered into a partnership with one another are called collectively a firm. Then if a firm can be a partner, we have this position that in defining a "partnership" the law uses the word "firm" which is hardly to be expected. For the definition of "partnership" would then run something like this. Partnership is the relation which subsists between individual persons or a firm and another firm or a firm and individual persons who have agreed, etc. This way of defining a term of law is hardly satisfactory. Then if we look to the other sections of the Act, we shall find that Chapter XI of the Indian Contract Act never contemplated that an incorporate body like a firm could be a partner. Take for example Section 254 which runs as follows:—

> At the suit of a partner the court may dissolve the partnership in the following cases:—
>
> (1) When a partner becomes of unsound mind.

Now can a firm become of unsound mind? Then again let us consider Section 253. Almost each of the rules regulating the relations of partners inter se presupposes that the partners are individuals and not an incorporate body like a firm. My own opinion, therefore, is that a firm cannot be a partner in another firm. This opinion of mine was expressed by my brother Bennet, J. (sitting with me) in Basanti Bibi v. Babu Lal Poddar[8]. This view has also been taken in Calcutta—see Sheodayal Khemka v. Joharmull Manmull[9] which was approved in Brojo Lal Saha Banikya v. Budh Nath Pyari Lal and Co.[10]. The latest Calcutta case, Kader Bux Omer Hyat v. Bukt Behari[11] does not take a contrary view as was urged by the learned Government Advocate.

It being then the settled law that a firm cannot be a partner in another firm, the Income-tax Officer was undoubtedly in the wrong when he held that the firm Jai Dayal Madan Gopal was a partner in the nine firms carrying on business at different places under the style Jai Dayal Madan Gopal.

The question of law that does arise in this case is: whether as a matter of law the firm Jai Dayal Madan Gopal of Benares could be a partner of the nine unregistered firms of the same name carrying on business at different places and, whether or not, it follows also as a matter of law, that the participation in the nine firms by Lala Jai Dayal and Lala Rai Sahib Ram Ratan Das was in their individual capacity.

[8] 1930 A. L. J. 1617

[9] I. L. R. 50 Cal. 549

[10] I. L. R. 55 Cal. 551

[11] 36 Cal. W. N. 480

From what I have already stated it seems to me clear that there could be only one answer to this question and that is > that the two gentlemen Lala Jai Dayal and Lala Rai Sahib Ram Ratan Das are partners in their individual capacity in the nine unregistered firms styled Jai Dayal Madan Gopal.

It was argued on behalf of the Income-tax department that the income received from the unregistered firms was credited into the books of the Benares firm, namely, Jai Dayal Madan Gopal (registered) and, therefore, the income should not be treated as the income of two individual partners.

In my opinion this argument has no force. It may be that the two partners who constituted the registered Benares firm Jai Dayal Madan Gopal were not aware of the law and for this reason or for some reason of convenience the money was deposited in the firm account of Jai Dayal Madan Gopal (registered). But this fact and this fact standing by itself could not make the income, the source of which is known, the property of the firm and not the property of the two partners considered individually. In the registered Benares firm the two partners had equal shares, and, therefore, it was immaterial to themselves whether the amount was recorded as belonging jointly to them or whether one-half of the sum received was credited to each of them separately. It is only because of the law of income-tax that the question has now arisen.. But an individual, however clever, cannot be expected to take precaution against the language employed by the Income-tax enactment, the provisions of which are so often obscure and exercise the minds of counsel and Judges so much. In any case the Income-tax Act being a fiscal enactment must be liberally construed and administered with leaning always in favour of the subject, where that may be possible.

In the result I would frame the question of law as stated above and would answer it also as stated above.

In my opinion the assessee has succeeded in this reference and, therefore, the Crown must pay his costs including the sum of Rs.100 that was deposited by the assessee for the reference. I would assess the fee of the learned Government Advocate at Rs.250 as considerable time was occupied in court in hearing this reference.

BY THE COURT—Subject to the limitation that it does not necessarily follow that the income received by the Benares firm is no part of its own income, we answer the question referred to us by saying that even though the finding may be justified on the evidence, the Benares firm cannot legally be a partner in the nine other firms.

The Crown must pay the costs of the assessee including the sum of Rs.100 that was deposited by the assessee for the reference. We assess the fee of the learned Government Advocate at Rs.250. We assess the costs of the assessee in this Court at the amount certified by his counsel up to Rs. 250.

Reference answered

Civil

1932

May 27

King, J.
Thom, J.

SAHU DEPUTY SHANKAR (MINOR) THROUGH BHAGWATI (Applicant)

versus

MANGAL SEN AND ANOTHER (Opposite parties)*

Civil Procedure Code (V of 1908), Or. 21, R. 93—Property sold under mortgage decree—Subsequently third party declared true owner of property—Auction purchaser loses property—Whether suit to recover money maintainable.

The doctrine of caveat emptor applies to court-sales. The right given to the auction purchaser being a creation of the statute, the remedy to enforce that right must be confined to that prescribed by the statute. The remedy is to apply under Or. 21, R. 91 to set aside the sale, and if the sale is set aside, to apply for a return of the purchase money under Or. 21, R. 93.

Where a person purchases immovable property at an auction sale in execution of a mortgage decree and subsequently loses the same under a decree passed in a suit brought by a third party against the mortgagor and the mortgagee in which the third party was declared the true owner and entitled to possession, such a purchaser is not entitled to bring a suit for recovery of his purchase money as against the mortgagee decree-holder. Mannu Lal v. Bhagwan Das, I. L. R. 39 All. 114 relied on. Bindeshri Prashad v. Badal Singh, I. L. R. 45 All. 369 distinguished.

EXECUTION SECOND APPEAL from a decree of D. C. HUNTER ESQ., District Judge of Moradabad, confirming a decree of BABU MAKHAN LAL, Subordinate Judge.

N. P. Asthana and Shabd Saran for the applicant.

S. K. Dar and K. N. Malaviya for the opposite parties.

The judgment of the Court was delivered by

King, J.

KING, J.—This defendant's appeal arises out of an application for the refund of purchase-money by Mangal Sen and Ram Prasad, the purchasers of immovable property sold in execution of a mortgage decree. Briefly the relevant facts are as follows: One Mathura Pershad on April 7, 1919 mortgaged a shop at Chandausi, the mortgagee being Babu Gokul Chand, the father of Deputy Shankar, minor, opposite party No. 1 in the application. Gokul Chand, who is now deceased, in respect of the mortgage obtained a final decree for sale on March 5, 1924. The property was put up for sale under the decree and was sold to Mangal Sen and Ram Prasad, the applicants, on September 4, 1924. The proceeds of the sale were distributed eventually amongst opposite party No. 1, (the son of the mortgagee), opposite party No. 2 the mortgagor Mathura Pershad, and opposite party No. 3 Pandit Bohj Raj, a creditor of No. 2, by virtue of attachment in execution of a decree against him. Between the date of the final decree and the sale one Digambar Singh filed suit No. 6 of 1924 in the court of the third Subordinate Judge of Moradabad against the mortgagor and the mortgagee for a declaration that he was the true owner of the property in question and for recovery of possession. After being successful in the first court, his suit being decreed on December 23, 1924

---

*E. S. A. 25 of 1931

—unsuccessful on appeal—his suit was decreed on 'second appeal' by the High Court on December 21, 1927. He obtained possession of the property on September 19, 1928. In the present application therefore the original purchasers Mangal Sen and Ram Prasad seek the return of the purchase money which they paid from those amongst whom it was distributed. In this appeal we are concerned only with their claim for recovery so far as directed against opposite party No. 1—the son of Gokul Chand, the mortgagee and decree-holder. As against him the applicants have been successful in both the courts below.

The trial court took the view that the final decree for sale was reversed or nullified as a result of the decree adjudging Digambar Singh the true owner of the property in question. The lower appellate court took the view that the applicants must have a remedy, as considerations of equity make it right and just that they should have the purchase-money refunded to them. In our opinion the applicants are not entitled to succeed upon either of these grounds.

It is argued for the appellant that under the present Code of Civil Procedure (Act V of 1908) an auction-purchaser has been given a statutory right, under Order 21, R. 93, to recover his purchase-money when the sale has been set aside on the ground that the judgment-debtor had no saleable interest in the property sold (in accordance with the provisions of Order 21, Rr. 91 and 92) and that he has no right to obtain a refund upon any other ground. In other words, the auction-purchaser has no right to recover his purchase money unless the sale has been set aside under Order 21, R. 92. We have come to the conclusion that this contention is correct.

Under S. 315 of the Code of 1882 the auction-purchaser was given a right to receive back his purchase money not only when the sale was set aside, but also when it is found that the judgment-debtor had no saleable interest in the property which was purported to be sold, and the purchaser is for that reason deprived of it. Under the Code of 1882 therefore the auction-purchaser would in the present case have been entitled to a refund. But in the Code of 1908 the law was substantially altered. In Order 21, R. 93 the clause quoted has been deliberately omitted, and the auction-purchaser is only entitled to a refund when the sale has been set aside under Rule 92. The deliberate omission of the clause quoted certainly suggests that the legislature did not intend that the auction-purchaser could claim a refund on the ground stated therein but could only claim a refund when the sale is set aside under R. 92. This interpretation of the existing law has been adopted by most of the High Courts in India. In Mannu Lal v. Bhagwan Das[1] the effect of the statutory amendment was fully discussed and it was held that under the present Code of Civil Procedure, an auction-purchaser who has been deprived, by means of a suit against the judgment-debtor, of the property purchased by him cannot obtain refund of the purchase-money without getting the auction sale set aside. That ruling was followed by another Bench of this Court in Ram Sarup v. Dalpat Rai[2]. It was also followed by the Bombay High Court in Balwant Raghunath v. Bala[3] and it may be noted that the property in that case had been sold in execution of a mortgage decree, as in the present case. The Allahabad rulings cited above were also followed by the Lahore High Court in Habib-ud-din v. Hatim Mirza[4]. The Madras High Court took the same view in Parvathi Ammal v. Govinda Sami Pillai[5]. Their Lordships remarked:

---

[1] I. L. R. 39 All. 114

[2] I. L. R. 43 All. 60

[3] I. L. R. 46 Bom. 833

> The right of action to obtain a refund consequent on the want of saleable interest in the judgment-debtor is not a right inhering in a purchaser, but is the creature of a statute, and the right thus conferred can only be exercised within the limitations prescribed. Consequently, without getting the sale set aside through court, the purchaser has no right of action.

The Calcutta High Court has also held in Rishikesh v. Manik Molla[6] that the auction-purchaser cannot obtain a refund of purchase money, when the sale has not been set aside under R. 92, unless he can bring himself within the equitable principles which justify a suit for money had and received to his use, e.g., by establishing fraud or breach of duty on the part of the decree-holder, or collusion between the decree-holder and judgment-debtor. In the present case, no such fraud, collusion or breach of duty are suggested.

As against all these authorities, the respondent relies upon a Full Bench decision of the Chief Court of Oudh in Bahadur Singh v. Ramphal[7]. Here it was held by a majority of two learned Judges (Srivastava, J. dissenting) that when a person purchases immovable property at an auction sale in execution of a decree of court and subsequently loses the same under a decree passed in a suit brought by a third party against the purchaser, the decree-holder and the judgment-debtor, such a purchaser is entitled to bring a suit for recovery of his purchase money as against the decree-holder. Stuart, Chief Judge, held that as the statute law was silent on the subject, an auction-purchaser who loses the property under a decree passed in favour of a third party, has a right to a refund of the purchase money under the general principles of equity. This decision is based upon the view that there is a warranty by the decree-holder that the property belongs to the judgment-debtor. We think it unnecessary to discuss this proposition, as this Court at least (not to mention other High Courts) has clearly taken the view that "as regards sales under a decree of a court there is no warranty of title either by the decree-holder or by the court". See Shanto Chandar Mukherji v. Nain Sukh[8] and the two Allahabad rulings already cited.

The trial court relied upon the Full Bench ruling in Bindeshri Prasad v. Badal Singh[9] but that ruling is clearly distinguishable. In that case, the decree under which the property had been sold was set aside. The auction-purchaser is entitled to assume that the decree is a valid decree. He is not entitled to assume that the property sold under the decree really belongs to the judgment-debtor. The principle "caveat emptor" is applicable to auction sales. In the present case the decree under which the property had been sold was never set aside, so the ruling is not applicable.

It may seem hard that the auction-purchaser should have no remedy when he has been deprived of property for which he paid cash. Before the confirmation of sale he did not know that the judgment-debtor's title would prove defective although he knew that the title had been impeached.

---

[4] I. L. R. 6 Lah. 283
[5] I. L. R. 39 Mad. 803
[6] I. L. R. 53 Cal. 758
[7] I. L. R. 5 Luck. 552
[8] I. L. R. 23 All. 355
[9] I. L. R. 45 All. 369

CIVIL

1932

SAHU DEPUTY SHANKAR
v.
MANGAL SEN

King, J.

It would also be hard on the decree-holder to be deprived of his share of the sale proceeds when he believed in good faith that the property belonged to his judgment-debtor and he had advanced a loan to the judgment-debtor on the strength of his belief. However much we may sympathise with the auction-purchaser, the law seems to be clear that he has no remedy. It is unnecessary to consider the subsidiary question of procedure whether he should have proceeded by a regular suit or by an application under S. 47.

In our opinion the appellant's contention is clearly supported by the Allahabad rulings on which he relies. They do not appear to have been doubted or dissented from by any Bench of this Court. They are also supported by the authority of other High Courts and we have no hesitation in following them.

We therefore allow the appeal, set aside the decree of the court below and dismiss the application with costs throughout.

Appeal allowed

MOHAMMAD RAFI AND ANOTHER (Plaintiffs)
versus
KRIPA RAMJI AND ANOTHER (Defendants)*

CIVIL

1932

June 10

SULAIMAN, C. J.
MUKERJI, J.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sec. 19—Mortgage—Acknowledgment of—Contained in a dakhalnama filed in an execution proceeding—When valid.

In a suit for redemption of a mortgage which was prima facie time-barred, the plaintiffs relied on an acknowledgment contained in a dakhalnama, which was filed in court in an execution proceeding—after describing what property the auction-purchasers had purchased, they expressly stated that that property did not include an 8 bigha area which was in their possession as mortgagees and which belonged to the mortgagor's representatives, held, that the necessary implication was that the mortgage was subsisting and that they were in possession as mortgagees, and there was therefore a valid acknowledgment within the meaning of Section 19 of the Limitation Act.

LETTERS PATENT APPEAL against the judgment of the HON'BLE MR. JUSTICE SEN.

S. Majid Ali for the appellants.

S. N. Verma for the respondents.

The judgment of the Court was delivered by

Sulaiman, C. J.

SULAIMAN, C. J.—This is a plaintiffs' appeal arising out of a suit for redemption of a mortgage, dated July 12, 1840. The plaintiffs are the representatives of the original mortgagors and the defendants are the representatives of the original mortgagees. The existence of the mortgage is not now in dispute, but the main plea for consideration is whether the claim is barred by time. Obviously the suit was brought more than sixty years after the date of the mortgage and was prima facie barred by time. In the plaint the plaintiffs, however, relied on two acknowledgments, one contained in a dakhalnama, dated November 21, 1887 and the other contained in a scheme for partition, dated June 27, 1888.

The court of first instance held that there was no valid acknowledgment under either of these two documents and accordingly dismissed the suit on the ground of limitation. The lower appellate court came to the conclusion that there was a valid acknowledgment under the dakhalnama of 1887 which extended the period of limitation and it accordingly decreed the claim. On appeal a learned Judge of this Court came to the conclusion that the dakhalnama was not a valid acknowledgment, because it was not an acknowledgment of a liability but was contained in a mere description of a certain property and he held that it was not established that the person who had signed the dakhalnama had authority to acknowledge the liability on behalf of the mortgagees.

---

*L. P. A. 57 of 1931

The question of the authority, in our opinion, does not arise, because the dakhalnama purports to have been executed by the mortgagees themselves, namely, Sadhu Ram and Jai Ram, who are described therein as the executants and whose names appear under the heading "Signed". But it does appear that the document was executed on their behalf by Ghiau, who alleged himself to be the mukhtar-am of the purchasers.

The dakhalnama being more than thirty years old, there is a presumption that it was a genuine document and had been executed by the persons who appeared on the face of it to have executed it—see Haji Sheikh Sheikh Bodha v. Sukhram Singh[1].

It must, therefore, be presumed that the document was validly executed by Sadho Ram and Jai Ram which necessarily implies that the persons, who put down their signatures on their behalf, had authority to do so.

The next question is whether there was a valid acknowledgment within the meaning of Section 19. No doubt this acknowledgment was not addressed to the mortgagors directly, but it was contained in a dakhalnama which was filed in court in an execution proceeding against them. After describing what property the auction-purchasers had purchased, they expressly stated that that property did not include an 8 bighas and odd area which was in their possession as mortgagees and which belonged to the mortgagors' representatives. The exact date of the mortgage was mentioned in the order for attachment and the proclamation of sale and the identity of the mortgage to which there was reference is not in dispute.

It is contended on behalf of the defendants that an acknowledgment must be made as such and must in express language contain an admission of an existing liability of the mortgage and that such an inference cannot be drawn when it is contained in a description of some other property given in the deed. We are not able to accept this contention. So long as there is a clear indication of an intention to admit the existence of the mortgage, it amounts to a valid acknowledgment. In the present case the mortgagees clearly admitted that they were in possession of the area belonging to specific persons as mortgagees, and there is, therefore, the necessary implication that the mortgage was subsisting and that they were in possession as mortgagees. In our opinion this was a valid acknowledgment within the meaning of Section 19 of the Limitation Act. We do not think that the case of Khiali Ram v. Taik Ram[2] or the Bombay case on which it is based has any direct application to the present case.

The appeal is accordingly allowed, the decree of this Court is set aside and the decree of the lower appellate court is restored with costs.

Appeal allowed

---

[1] 22 A. L. J. 857

[2] 14 A. L. J. 834

CIVIL

1932

June 15

PULLAN, J.
NIAMAT-ULLAH, J.

CHANDRABHAN (Defendant)
versus
RAJ KUMAR (Plaintiff) AND SRI PARASNATHJI AND OTHERS (Defendants)*

Limitation Act, Secs. 6, 9 and 19—Suit on mortgage by mortgagee's son after attaining majority—Prima facie time-barred—Acknowledgment—Made when plaintiff a minor—Whether a new period runs from date of acknowledgment—Whether plaintiff entitled to benefit of Sec. 6.

The plaintiff sued within three years of his attaining majority on a mortgage executed in favour of his late father. In order to bring his suit within limitation he relied on an acknowledgment of liability made by the mortgagor in a second mortgage which was executed at a time when the plaintiff's father was dead and he himself was a minor, and the plaintiff claimed the benefit of Sec. 6 Limitation Act. Held, that first period ceased to run entirely and a new period came into existence from the date of the acknowledgment, and the plaintiff was therefore a minor 'at the time from which the period of limitation is to be reckoned' and was entitled to institute the suit within the period of three years after his disability ceased; and Sec. 9 was no bar to the plaintiff's suit. Venkataramayyar v. Kothandaramayyar, I. L. R. 13 Mad. 135 followed.

FIRST APPEAL from a decree of J. N. MUSHRAN ESQ., Subordinate Judge of Etah.

K. Verma for the appellant.

K. N. Katju, Bhagwati Shankar, N. P. Singh and H. C. Mukerji for the respondents.

The judgment of the Court was delivered by

Niamat-ullah, J.

NIAMATULLAH, J.—This appeal arises from a suit brought on the basis of a mortgage, and the only question for determination is whether or not the suit is barred by limitation. A mortgage was executed on April 14, 1910, by two persons Dwarka Das and Jamna Das in favour of Sekhar Chand, father of the plaintiff. The plaintiff was at that time a minor, living jointly with his father. Sekharchand died in 1912, and on February 15, 1913, Dwarka Das and Jamna Das executed a second mortgage in favour of Sonpal, father of the defendant, including in that mortgage a sum of Rs.1,511, being the whole amount due as the principal and interest on the mortgage of April 14, 1910. Sonpal deposited the sum due on the mortgage of 1910, but for certain reasons, which need not be specified, subsequently withdrew the deposit, and his application was automatically struck off on April 10, 1915. On August 26, 1919, defendant No. 1, the son of Sonpal, purchased the mortgagor's rights from Dwarka Das, and in the sale-deed credit was allowed for the amount due under the mortgage of February 15, 1913. The suit was brought on March 14, 1928, the plaintiff claiming that he was entitled to sue within three years of attaining his majority. The defence is two-fold. In the first place it is argued that the plaintiff attained his majority more than three years before filing the suit, and secondly that as time had begun to run against

---

*F. A. 316 of 1928

CIVIL

1932

CHANDRA-BHAN
v.
RAJ KUMAR

Niamat-ullah, J.

the plaintiff from the date of the mortgage, no subsequent disability could stop it as laid down by S. 9 of the Limitation Act, and consequently the plaintiff cannot claim the period of three years from the date of attaining majority under S. 6 of the Limitation Act.

Both parties have given evidence as to the plaintiff's age. He himself stated in accordance with the age in his certificate of guardianship that he became a major on November 14, 1925. He also filed an extract from a register of births showing that he was born in the month of June, 1905, in which case he would not attain majority till June, 1926. The discrepancy between the two dates is relied upon by the defence as casting doubt on the plaintiff's evidence. We do not, however, consider that the discrepancy is material. The plaintiff undoubtedly felt himself bound to uphold the date given in the guardianship certificate but such a certificate is not accepted by this court as evidence of age, and in our opinion the age of the plaintiff should be determined by reference to the register of births and the oral evidence. The register shows that a son was born to Sakri Bania Saraogi, resident of Ganesh Katra mohalla, in the town of Etah. It is now suggested that Sakri and Sekharchand are not the same, but there is nothing in the evidence to indicate that this point was raised in the lower court. We have no doubt that Sakri represents the more formal name of Sekharchand, and the caste and the mohalla correspond to those of the plaintiff's father. The defence witness Gulzarilal, who knew the plaintiff's father and is a member of the same community but wished to make out that the plaintiff was more than 25 years of age at the time of the suit, admitted that the plaintiff and his father lived in mohalla Katra, and that there was no other Sekharchand in the mohalla, and in cross-examination he stated that the plaintiff's father died in the hot weather of the Sambat year of 1970 or 1971 when the plaintiff was a boy of 8 or 9 years. Sambat 1970-1971 corresponds to 1913 A.D., and puts the plaintiff's birth in or about the year 1905, which is the year given in the birth register. We consider that the plaintiff is entitled to rely upon the facts elicited from this witness in cross-examination, and we accept the finding of the lower court that the plaintiff filed the suit within three years of his attaining majority.

As the plaintiff, although a minor, was a member of a joint family with his father when the mortgage deed of 1910 was executed, time began to run against him and against his father from the date of the execution of the mortgage, and the learned counsel for the appellant argues that the minority of the plaintiff became a disability only after his father's death, and was therefore a subsequent disability arising after time had begun to run, and on a proper interpretation of Section 9 of the Indian Limitation Act the time must be held now to have run out and the suit to be barred by limitation. Section 6 of the Indian Limitation Act uses the words "at the time from which the period of limitation is to be reckoned." It does not use the words, "the time from which limitation began to run." The point which we have to determine is whether limitation in this case ran continuously from the date of the execution of the mortgage in 1910 and merely received a new life from the date of the second mortgage of 1913, or whether the first period ceased to run entirely and a new period came into existence from the date of the second mortgage. In our opinion the mortgage of 1913 was a clear acknowledgment of liability, and a further acknowledgment was made in 1914 after the mortgage money was deposited for payment. Under Section 19 of the Indian Limitation Act a fresh period of limitation is to be computed from the time of such an acknowledgment. When this acknowledgment was made the plaintiff's father was dead, and he himself being a minor was under a disability within the meaning of Section 6 of the Limitation Act. In our opinion the plaintiff was therefore a minor "at the time from which the period of limitation is to be reckoned" and he might therefore institute the suit within the period of three years after his disability ceased. This is the view taken by the Judges of the Madras High Court in the case of Venkataramayyar v. Kothandaramayyar[1], a case almost exactly parallel to the one before us. The case for the other side had been stated by a single judge of the Bench of the Madras High Court in a judgment which is reported together with that of the Bench. He took the view that time was already running against the plaintiff before the acknowledgments were made, and Section 9 of the Limitation Act was a bar to the plaintiff's plea that time ceased to run when the acknowledgment was made. The view taken by the Bench was "that the former period, already running, was not extended, but terminated, and that an entirely new period runs from the date of acknowledgment". The view of these learned judges was followed by a Bench of the Calcutta High Court in the case of Sarat Chandra Singh v. Sudhan Hari Mukerjea[2]. There is no reported case of the Allahabad High Court which is directly in point, but a similar view was taken in the case of Zamir Hasan v. Sundar[3] in a case of execution of a decree. In that case a decree had been passed in 1881 in favour of two decree-holders. Subsequently one of them died, and the widow and the minor children became his representatives. In 1888 the widow made an application for execution on behalf of the minor sons, which was dismissed. In February, 1894, the sons being still minors made another application, and this application was held to be in time within the terms of Section 7 of the Indian Limitation Act. The important point about this decision is that it expressly followed the decision of the Calcutta High Court in Lolit Mohan v. Janoki Nath Roy[4] which laid down that if a person entitled to exception "is under a disability at the time when any one of such periods commences (that is to say, the period from which limitation begins to run) the operation of the Act is suspended during the continuance of the disability by the operation of Section 7."

We have no doubt therefore that the view taken by the lower Court in this case was correct, and that the suit was within time. We accordingly dismiss the appeal with costs.

Appeal dismissed

---

[1] I. L. R. 13 Mad. 135

[2] 14 I. C. 694

[3] I. L. R. 22 All. 199 (F.B.)

[4] I. L. R. 20 Cal. 714

Civil

1932

June 16

Mukerji, J

Bennet, J.

THE GRESHAM LIFE INSURANCE SOCIETY, LIMITED (THROUGH THEIR CHIEF AGENTS FOR INDIA, GRESHAM BUILDINGS, BOMBAY (Defendant)

versus

THE COLLECTOR OF ETAWAH (AS MANAGER, COURT OF WARDS, PARTABNER ESTATE (Plaintiff)*

Succession Act (XXXIX of 1925), Sec. 214—Policy holder executed a will in favour of adopted son before his death—Insurance Co. refused payment without production of probate or letters of administration—Whether company acted within its rights.

A Hindu took out an Insurance Policy payable on his death. Before he died he adopted a minor and also executed a will in his favour. The Insurance Company having refused to pay to the court of wards, who had taken over management of the minor's estate, without production of either a probate or letters of administration, the court of wards brought the present suit to recover the sum payable on the policy. Held, that Sec. 214, Succession Act, applied and the company acted within its rights and no decree could be made against the company without production of a probate or letters of administration or a succession certificate.

There is nothing in law to prevent a company from entering into a contract with a proposer for life assurance that the company would pay the money only to him or his assign or to his executor or administrator and such a contract must bind not only the assured but also anybody claiming title under him.

First Appeal from a decree of Maulvi Tufail Ahmad, Subordinate Judge of Etawah.

B. E. O'Conor and Ram Nama Prasad for the appellant.

U. S. Bajpai (Government Advocate) and G. S. Pathak for the respondent.

The judgment of the Court was delivered by

Mukerji, J.

Mukerji, J.—This appeal raises a question which is of great importance to companies doing life insurance business.

It appears that a gentleman named Raja Hukum Pratap Singh took out a Policy of insurance on August 15, 1917, which was payable either when the Raja attained the age of 40 or on his death. The Raja died on May 17, 1925. One day previous to his death he adopted a minor, who subsequently became Raja Maha Bindeshwari Pratap Singh, and he also executed a will in favour of the adopted son. The proprietor of the estate being a minor the Court of Wards took over superintendence and management of the estate. The Policy having become payable on the death of the assured, the Court of Wards called upon the appellant to pay the sum of Rs.15,000 to the Court of Wards as represented by the Collector of Etawah. The company asked for proof of title and stated that they were ready to pay the money as soon as they were satisfied as to the title of the claimant. Their letter will be found printed on page 51 of the record. It stated:

---

*F. A. 26 of 1929

> Kindly now submit us the probate of the will of the deceased as mentioned in the Court's decree, when we shall be pleased to give instruction for the final discharge.

The Court of Wards was advised by the Government Pleader of Etawah that there was no necessity for taking out a probate of the will, as it would be a costly affair and without any legal necessity. The company having refused to pay without what they called proof of title, the suit, out of which this appeal has arisen, was instituted. The suit was decreed by the court below with costs and future interest. The decree however grants interest during the pendency of the suit.

In appeal it has been contended by the learned counsel that under the terms of the Policy granted to the late Raja, the Company were entitled to insist on the production of either a probate or Letters of Administration. It was also contended that under the law for the time being in force the appellant was entitled to insist on the production of either a probate or Letters of Administration or at least a succession certificate, and therefore no decree should have been made against the company without production of any one of these documents.

It appears that after the decree was made by the court below, the company paid the decretal amount in court under protest and filed this appeal. Two questions arise for determination in this case: (1) whether the contract of policy by which the assured agreed that the money would be paid to himself or to his assign or to his executor or administrator is a binding contract and (2) whether, if it is not, the defendant can insist on the production of either a probate or Letters of Administration or a succession certificate?

We shall take the second point first. As the suit is based on the ground that the young Raja Maha Bindeshwari Pratap Singh succeeded to the property of his adoptive father by virtue of the adoption and also by virtue of the will, this is, therefore, a case where there is no allegation that the family was a joint one. It may be mentioned casually that if the family be a joint one, the will would be invalid in law and the right to obtain the property would be by survivorship and not under the will.

The claim being therefore by one who claims to be the heir of a deceased creditor, we have to see what rule of law applies. Section 214 of the Indian Succession Act (1925) lays down that no court shall pass a decree against a debtor of a deceased person for payment of his debt to a person claiming on succession to be entitled to the effects of the deceased except on the production by the person so claiming of (i) a probate or Letters of Administration, or (ii) (iii) a succession certificate granted under part X and having the debt specified therein, etc. . . " This is a case in which the plaintiff claims by right of succession the effects of a deceased person and wants that the debt due to the deceased should be paid to the plaintiff. In the circumstances there is no escape from the provision of Section 214 of the Succession Act, and the plaintiff must supply either a Probate or Letters of Administration or a Succession Certificate.

In the case of a will executed by a person who is neither a Mohammedan nor a Hindu nor a Budhist nor a Sikh nor a Jaina mentioned in Section 57 of the Act, it cannot be insisted that a probate shall be taken out (Sec. 213). But there is no prohibition against Letters of Administration being taken out in the case of the estate of a deceased Mohammedan, Budhist, Sikh or Jaina, vide Sec. 218. Where the testator has not appointed an executor, as in this case (the will is printed on page 31), Section 233 of the Indian Succession Act permits Letters of Administration being granted to the plaintiff who claims as the sole legatee.

In any case there is no bar whatsoever to the grant of a Succession Certificate under Section 370 of the Succession Act. A succession certificate is permissible to be issued in the case of even a particular debt. It is thus a comparatively less costly matter than taking out Letters of Administration to the entire estate.

On a consideration of the law on the subject we are, therefore, of opinion that the appellant can insist on the production by the claimant of either a probate or Letters of Administration or a Succession Certificate in order to be satisfied that the person to whom it would pay the money was really the person entitled to it.

It was argued by the learned Government Advocate that the production of any of these documents has become unnecessary by the fact that the plaintiff has established his title by the suit and the company must pay to him. This argument however is not sound. A decree between the parties does not bind people who are no parties to it, and therefore if there be any claim for the money by any other person, the decree would be no answer for the defendant to such a claim. It is only a probate or Letters of Administration or a succession certificate which grants a complete immunity to the debtor who pays off his debt to the holder of any one of these documents. These are called judgments in rem and have force as against all possible claims. We hold therefore that the defendants were entitled to succeed.

On the first point we are of opinion that the defence is equally strong. There is nothing in law to prevent a company from entering into a contract with a proposer for life assurance that the company would pay the money only to him or his assign or to his executor or administrator. The law of succession varies in different parts of the country, and it cannot be expected of a company doing life insurance business to know the law obtaining in different parts of the country, nor can it be expected that it would undertake an investigation into the title of a claimant or of claimants in general and to decide for itself who is the person best entitled to the money. In the circumstances an agreement that the money under the policy would be paid only to the assured or to his assign or to his executor or administrator is a good contract which must bind not only assured but also anybody claiming title under him. In this view also the defendant was entitled to insist on the production of any of the three documents mentioned above. It may be pointed that even a successor to a property by right of survivorship may take out a succession certificate. See Banwari Lal v. Maksudan Lal[1].

In the result, the appeal must succeed. The law does not contemplate the dismissal of a suit where a suit has already been instituted. All that it provides against is the passing of a decree without the production of any of the title deeds. In the circumstances, it would not be desirable to dismiss the suit altogether. We should grant the plaintiff-respondent some time in order to enable him to produce either a probate or Letters of Administration or a succession certificate in which last case the debt in question may be specifically mentioned.

---

[1] [1930] A. L. J. 280

Civil — 1932 — The Gresham Life Insurance Society, Limited v. The Collector of Etawah — Mukerji, J.

As regards interest and costs, we are of opinion that this litigation was entirely brought about without justification. The company was throughout within its right and therefore when a succession certificate or any of the other two kinds of documents is produced, the decree will be in favour of the respondent without any costs or interest and the respondent must pay the costs of the appellant in both the courts.

We grant three months' time to the respondent to produce either a probate or Letters of Administration or a Succession Certificate.

Appeal allowed

Civil — 1932 — June 16 — King, J. Thom, J.

PIYARE LAL (Plaintiff)
versus
CHUNNI LAL AND OTHERS (Defendants)*

Hindu Law—Partition—Joint family—Separation of one member—No presumption of jointness or separation of other members—Question to be proved as one of fact.

When one co-parcener separates, then there is no presumption that the remaining co-parceners remain joint and there is also no presumption that the remaining co-parceners have separated. The question whether the remaining co-parceners remained joint or whether they separated has to be proved as a question of fact in each case.

Balabux v. Rukhma Bai, I. L. R. 30 Cal. 725, Bal Krishna v. Ram Krishna, 1931 A. L. J. 499, Palani Ammal v. Muthuven Katacharla, 52 I. A. 83 and Mt. Jatti v. Banwari Lal, 21 A. L. J. 582 referred to.

SECOND APPEAL from a decree of MUHAMMAD ZIAUL HASAN ESQ., Additional District Judge of Gorakhpur, confirming a decree of ALI MUHAMMAD ESQ., Additional Subordinate Judge.

K. N. Katju and Banke Behari for the appellant.

M. Waliullah and Sankar Saran for the respondents.

The judgment of the Court was delivered by

King, J.

KING, J.—This is a plaintiff's appeal arising out of a suit for a declaration that the plaintiff is in possession of a one anna four pies share in a certain village as proprietor, and that defendant No. 1 Ghurai Ram has no concern with that share.

It is unnecessary to recite the history of the property which has been fully set forth in the judgment of the courts below. The whole decision turned upon the question whether Jamna Prasad remained joint with his father Suraj Nath and his brother Suraj Prasad in the year 1908. Suraj Nath is the father of the plaintiff Piyare Lal and of Suraj Prasad and Jamna Prasad. The family remained joint until 1907 in which year the plaintiff sued his father and brothers for partition of his share. Jamna Prasad was

---

*S. A. 1707 of 1930

HAVE YOUR DISPUTED DOCUMENTS

EXAMINED BY

Mr. Charles E. Hardless, B.A.,

16-A, Clive Road,

Allahabad.

Government and Publicly Recognised

HANDWRITING EXPERT

of over 27 years' experience and 22 years' practice. Honours Graduate. Trained in the Office of the Government of India Handwriting Expert. Author of several books on Forgery and Handwriting Identification. Dealt with over 10,000 cases. Given evidence in nearly 3,000 cases in almost all the High Courts, Chief Courts and Subordinate Courts of India and Burma. Possesses 1,000 letters, testimonials and judgments testifying to his skill & ability as a Document Examiner.

Blurred finger prints a speciality.

Telegrams :—"EXPERT" Allahabad.

Terms Moderate. Rates on Application.

CORRESPONDENCE INVITED.

Expert Hardless of Allahabad compared with other Experts:—

"You enjoy the reputation of being THE BEST DOCUMENT EXPERT IN INDIA and I have myself seen the very satisfactory remarks passed by Judges in cases in which you have appeared before them as a handwriting expert."—Mr. H. Homi J. Rustomji, Barrister-at-Law, LAHORE.

"The pronote and receipt were sent to Mr. F. BREWESTER of Calcutta and to Mr. Charles E. Hardless of Allahabad. I agree with Mr. Hardless as his reasoning is very sound and unassailable."—Janga Khan versus Abdul Sattar Khan, Munsif of Utraula at GONDA.

"The reasons given by Mr. Charles E. Hardless do appear to be more convincing than the reasons given by Mr. STOTT the Government Expert."—K. E. vs. Pritchard, The Sessions Judge, LAHORE.

"Mr. Charles E. Hardless has thus disposed of all the reasons given by Mr. BENNETT and he seems to have greater experience as an expert than Mr. BENNETT."—Sobha Ram vs. Puran Chand Baqur, Subjudge, AMRITSAR.

"In the opinion of Mr. Charles E. Hardless the receipt is a forgery and does not bear the signature of the plaintiff, while according to Mr. STOTT and his assistant Mr. HODGSON the receipt has been signed by the plaintiff himself and is a genuine document.

* * * * *

"I have considered the statement of all the witnesses and have also looked into the circumstances of the case and in my opinion the receipt does not seem to be genuine and I am not prepared to accept it as proved."—Hazari Lal vs. Hukum Chand, The Munsif, AGRA.

"The same documents were sent to another document expert by the opposite party in the suit. He gave exactly the same opinion as you gave. The case was compromised by the parties out of Court." (Letter No. 319 dated 24th March 1930 in Suit Maung Po Su vs. U Nu, from the Subdivisional Judge of Bassein, Burma, to Expert Hardless of ALLAHABAD.)

absent and exempted from the suit and in 1909 the partition was decreed on a compromise providing that the family property would remain in the possession of Suraj Nath as before and that on his death and on the death of his wife the plaintiff would be entitled to a certain share in the property.

In 1908 Suraj Nath and one of his sons Suraj Prasad borrowed money on a promissory note from the Kayastha Bank of Gorakhpur and renewed the promissory note in 1911. In 1914 the Bank instituted a suit on the basis of the promissory note and obtained a decree. Before the decree could be executed Jamna Prasad brought a suit for partition on August 19, 1915. This suit was decreed upon a compromise. In 1918 the whole of the family property consisting of 5 annas 4 pies was sold, in execution of the Bank's decree, to Ghurai Ram, defendant No. 1.

The plaintiff succeeded in establishing by a suit that his separate share was not affected by the sale. Jamna Prasad executed a deed of gift of a one anna four pies share on February 23, 1923 in favour of the plaintiff and it is this share which is in dispute in the present suit. The plaintiff's case is that this share was not affected by the auction sale in favour of Ghurai Ram.

The whole question is whether Jamna Prasad was joint with or separate from his father at the time when the debt was incurred in 1908.

It has been argued before us on behalf of the appellant that when Piyare Lal, the plaintiff, instituted his suit for partition in 1907, this had the effect of a disruption of the joint family so that each member of the family became separate. His contention is that the separation of one member of a joint family necessarily means the separation of every member of that family.

In support of his contention he has relied upon the decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Balabux v. Rukhma Bai[1]. In that case it was laid down that there is no presumption when one co-parcener separates from the others that the latter remain united. On the other hand, it is not laid down in this ruling that there is a presumption when one co-parcener separates from the others that the latter become separate. This ruling does not go the whole length of supporting the appellant's contention. There is no doubt one passage which might be interpreted as partially supporting him but the language is very guarded.

> In many cases it may be necessary, in order to ascertain the share of the outgoing member, to fix the shares which the other co-parceners are or would be entitled to and, in this sense, the separation of one is said to be a virtual separation of all. And their Lordships think that an agreement amongst the remaining members of a joint family to remain united or to re-unite must be proved like any other fact.

These words might be taken to mean that unless an agreement amongst the remaining members of the family to remain joint is proved, then it should be held that there has been a separation between them. The next case cited is Bal Krishna v. Ram Krishna[2]. This is also a decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council. In this case they cite with approval a judgment of the Board delivered by Sir John Edge in Palani Ammal v. Muthuven Katacharla[3]. In that judgment it was stated:

---

[1] I. L. R. 30 Cal. 725

[2] 1931 A. L. J. 499

[3] 52 I. A. 83

> It is also now beyond doubt that a member of such a joint family can separate himself from the other members of the joint family and is on separation entitled to have his share in the property of the joint family ascertained and partitioned off for him, and that the remaining co-parceners without any special agreement amongst themselves may continue to be co-parceners and to enjoy as members of a joint family what remained after such a partition of the family property.

From this it is clear not only that the remaining co-parceners can remain joint amongst themselves but that they may do so without any special agreement amongst themselves. The question whether the remaining co-parceners do or do not continue to be co-parceners amongst themselves is a question of fact.

The case of Mt. Jatti v. Banwari Lal[4] has also been cited but this does not help the appellant any further. The position disclosed by these rulings seems to be that when one co-parcener separates, then there is no presumption that the remaining co-parceners remain joint and there is also no presumption that the remaining co-parceners have separated. The question whether the remaining co-parceners remained joint or whether they separated has to be proved as a question of fact in each case.

In the present case the courts below have concurrently held that after the plaintiff separated in 1907 the remaining co-parceners remained as members of a joint family amongst themselves up till 1915 when Jamna Prasad instituted his suit for partition. This finding is a finding of fact and is supported by admissible evidence. In our opinion the finding is binding upon us in second appeal.

On the finding that Jamna Prasad was a co-parcener with his father in 1908 when the debt was incurred and in 1911 when the promissory note was renewed, and even up to the time when the decree was obtained by the Bank in 1914, we think it is clear that the Bank as judgment creditor had a right to proceed against all the property that was the joint family property at the time when the debt was incurred. The fact that Jamna Prasad separated in 1915 is immaterial. His share cannot escape liability for the debt on the ground of the subsequent separation.

In our opinion the court below has decided the case perfectly correctly and we dismiss the appeal with costs.

Appeal dismissed

[4] 21 A. L. J. 582

CIVIL

1932

June 21

MUKERJI, J.
BENNET, J.

SABRATAN AND ANOTHER (Defendants)
versus
DHANPAT GADARIYA (Plaintiff) AND ANOTHER (Defendants)*

Mortgage—'Clog on equity of redemption'—What amounts to—Mortgagee given right to recover with interest at 2% p.m. money spent on rebuilding house—Whether stipulation enforceable.

A stipulation in the mortgage deed gave the mortgagee a right to build or rebuild the house mortgaged, and in case he did so, the mortgagor would on redemption pay the amount of the money spent over the building or rebuilding with interest at 2 per cent per mensem, held that the stipulation did not amount to a 'clog on the equity of redemption' under the Indian law and the contract was enforceable in a court of law.

SECOND APPEAL from a decree of BABU SARUP NARAIN, Second Additional Subordinate Judge of Gorakhpur, modifying a decree of MR. S. Z. RAHMAN, Munsif.

M. H. Faruqi for the appellants.

Haribans Sahai for the respondents.

The judgment of the Court was delivered by

Mukerji, J.

MUKERJI, J.—This appeal arises out of a suit for redemption instituted by the respondent, Dhanpat Gadariya. The mortgage was made by the respondent's father on October 30, 1905 for a term of sixty years in consideration of Rs.75.. The mortgagee was one Abdullah weaver, the predecessor-in-title of the defendants and the terms were as follows:—

The mortgagee was to be in possession of the premises. The rent of the premises was taken to be annas 8 per month. The interest carried by the mortgage money was 2 per cent per mensem. Thus, after deducting 8 annas per mensem as the rent of the house, the mortgagor had to pay Re.1 per mensem at the end of sixty years at the time of the redemption. It was further agreed that the mortgagee would be free to build or rebuild the house and in that case, in the case of redemption, the mortgagor would pay the amount of the money spent over the building or rebuilding with interest at 2 per cent per mensem.

The plaintiff alleged in the plaint that the mortgage had been made by his father without legal necessity, that the house was ancestral and that, therefore, he was entitled to redeem the property by removal of the onerous terms. The allegation that the house was ancestral was challenged in the written statement but no issue was framed by the courts below. The first court decreed the suit on condition of payment of Rs.2,300. The plaintiff appealed, but in his memorandum of appeal he did not ask the question of the character of the property to be tried. The lower appellate court came to the conclusion that the redemption should be allowed on payment of Rs.711 only. It held that the cost of the building was Rs.300 but, as the house was capable of fetching a rent of between Rs.5 and Rs.6 per month, the interest would be set off against the usufruct

---

*S. A. 204 of 1931

CIVIL

1932

SABRATAN
v.
DHANPAT GADARIYA

Mukerji, J.

and thus only the principal amount of Rs.300 was to be paid on this head.

The learned counsel for the appellants, that is to say, the mortgagees, has argued that the courts below were not entitled to interfere with the terms of the contract and we think he is right.

This case leads us to consider the law of mortgage with special reference to what is known as the clog on redemption.

In England the law of mortgage is essentially different from our law. Cases of mortgage used to come in England under the jurisdiction of the equity courts, and the rules of equity apply to cases of mortgage. Here in India we have got a codified law of mortgage and it would be improper for us in India to ignore the law obtaining in India and to look for the English cases as our guide. Where our statutory law will not help us, it may be open to us to look to the English cases, for rules of equity, justice and good conscience, as laid down by their Lordships of the Privy Council in the case of Waghela Rajsanji v. Shekh Masludin[1] and Privy Council Appeal No. 96 of 1927, Mehrban Khan v. Makhana, decided on February 13, 1930, and Privy Council Appeal No. 97 of 1930, decided on April 12, 1932, Raza v. Abbas Bandi Bibi. In the last mentioned case Section 10 of the Transfer of Property Act was applied as embodying a rule of justice and equity and good conscience.

It has been held by their Lordships of the Privy Council that the mere fact that the term of redemption is large is no ground for holding that the agreement is bad and should be relieved against; see Bakhtawar Begum v. Husaini Khanum[2]. The courts below, therefore, were wrong in holding that because the term of redemption was sixty years it was a bad stipulation and the plaintiff was entitled to redeem within the term. The defendants, however, did not appeal and a redemption having been decreed, we have only to see on what terms the redemption should be decreed.

The plaintiff stated in the plaint that the stipulations contained in the mortgage deed were unconscionable, and, therefore, not enforceable in a court of law. On this point the law is clearly defined in Section 14 and subsequent sections of the Indian Contract Act. Where a contract is not tainted by coercion, undue influence, fraud, misrepresentation or mistake, the contract has to be upheld in its entirety, unless there is any other law under which a relief can be granted to either party. For example, where the contract amounts to a penalty, Section 74 of the Contract Act provides for relief at the discretion of the court. Again, where the Usurious Loans Act applies, it is open to the court to modify the terms of the contract. But apart from special rules of law, there is nothing to authorise the courts to interfere with the sanctity of contracts. This has been laid down by their Lordships of the Privy Council in numerous cases.

The plaintiff did not allege that his father entered into the mortgage under any mistake of law or was influenced by fraud or there existed any other circumstance which would vitiate the contract. It was open to the plaintiff's father to sell the house outright. If he had sold the house outright for Rs.75, the plaintiff could never have asked for redemption. It is, therefore, wrong to say that the terms entered into by the father were onerous and unconscionable and the plaintiff should be relieved against them. If the plaintiff's father knew that he was entering into terms which would make it impossible for him to redeem the property later on or for his descendants to redeem the property at the end of sixty years, it was certainly open to him not to enter into the contract and go to a creditor who could have given him better terms. Thus, under the law of the land, a contract has to be respected and cannot be interfered with except on well known lines. Mere vague grounds of equity will not justify a court in interfering with the terms of a contract. In certain cases, the courts in India have followed the English rule which sets aside what it calls 'clogs on equity of redemption.' Those rules have to be applied within well defined limits, and what contract may be set aside in England as a mere clog on redemption need not necessarily be set aside having regard to the conditions of the Indian law. Broadly speaking a stipulation, which gives the mortgagee an advantage which does not arise legitimately out of the mortgage contract, is treated as a stipulation to clog the redemption. Thus where the mortgagee and the mortgagor agree that after redemption the mortgagee would remain in possession of the lands mortgaged as a tenant of the mortgagor with occupancy rights, the stipulation would be set aside as a clog on redemption. The reason is clear. After the mortgage is redeemed, there remains no consideration for the subsidiary contract by which the mortgagee wants to remain in possession. The contract, therefore, fails. The contract is no part of the original contract of mortgage. Similar cases may be cited.

---

[1] L. R. 14 I. A. 89 at 96

[2] I. L. R. 36 All. 195

In the case of Sher Khan v. Swami Dayal[3] the stipulation was that there would be a redemption at the end of five years but, if no redemption was asked for, then it could not be asked for another twelve years. Their Lordships of the Privy Council said that under Section 60 of the Transfer of Property Act a party had an absolute right of redemption after the mortgage money fell due and any stipulation that sought to interfere with that right of the mortgagor was bad in law. The case came under Section 23 of the Indian Contract Act and was, therefore, covered by Indian law.

Two cases have been cited before us as showing that rules of equity have been applied by this court and the stipulations between the parties have been interfered with. One case is that of Rajai Singh v. Randhir Singh[4]. This was a case of mortgage of occupancy holdings. The mortgage itself was bad and, according to the view held in this court, the redemption is allowed, because the mortgagor was entitled to get back his occupancy holding. But by rules of equity he must pay back what he has received from the mortgagee. Their Lordships who decided the case pointed out that there were two kinds of cases, one kept the parties strictly within the terms of the mortgage and the other applied the English rules of equity. Their Lordships say:

> That is evident from the way in which the matters of this kind are treated in England as exemplified in the case of Morgan v. Jaffers, [1910] 1 Ch. 620.

[3] I. L. R. 44 All. 185

[4] 87 I. C. 30

The other case, that has been cited before us and was also cited before their Lordships, was the case in Sarbdawah Singh v. Babunandan[5]. Their Lordships pointed out that it bore the influence of English authorities. These two cases may be distinguished, the first on the ground that it was a case of occupancy tenancy and the second on the ground that it was covered by the ruling of their Lordships of the Privy Council in the subsequent case of Sher Khan v. Swami Dayal[6]. The case in I. L. R. 36 Allahabad need not have been decided on the grounds of equity. It could have been decided on the terms of Section 60 of the Transfer of Property Act on which the Privy Council relied.

There being, therefore, no abstract rules of equity applicable to the present case, the present case being governed by established rules of law made by the Legislature, we have to see whether we can cut down the interest or whether we can direct that the usufruct of the house would be set off against the interest payable under the terms of the mortgage.

In our view neither the court of first instance was right in reducing the interest, nor was the lower appellate court right in setting off the usufruct against the interest, there being no stipulation to that effect. The stipulation was that the mortgagee would be entitled to interest on the money laid out by him in building or rebuilding the house.

The lower appellate court has held that Rs.300 were spent in building the house. The appellants, therefore, are entitled to interest on this sum at 2 per cent per mensem from 1908 when the building was erected to the date of the decree which we take to be the present date. The interest will be calculated in complete years, as the exact dates are not forthcoming, i.e., for 24 years. The interest will be simple. A decree under Order XXXIV, Rule 7 of the Transfer of Property Act will be framed. We allow six months to pay. The decree will stand in other respects. The appellants as mortgagees will have their costs of the litigation throughout.

The cross-objections fail and they are dismissed with costs.

CIVIL
1932
July 19
PULLAN, J.
NIAMAT-ULLAH, J.

BEHARI AND ANOTHER (Plaintiffs)
versus
MUTHRA AND OTHERS (Defendants)*

Tenancy Act (III of 1926), Sec. 37—Co-tenants—Holding divided—Effect of—New tenancy not created nor mode of succession given in Secs. 24 and 25 changed.

On the death of an occupancy tenant, with whom plaintiff shared in cultivation, his widow, who had a life-interest in the tenancy under Sec. 24 of the Tenancy Act, sued for partition with the result that the holding was divided. The widow subsequently associated with herself in cultivation, defendants 2 to 4 with the consent of the landlord. In a suit by plaintiff for a declaration that on the widow's death defendants would have no rights in the tenancy as against themselves; held, that plaintiff's suit should be decreed. The partition merely changed the mode of enjoyment by the widow but did not confer on her greater rights than what she

*S. A. 1584 of 1929

---

[5] I. L. R. 36 All. 551

[6] I. L. R. 44 All. 185

had before partition; nor did it change the mode of succession given in Secs. 24 and 25 of the Tenancy Act.

CIVIL

1932

BEHARI v. MUTHRA

SECOND APPEAL from a decree of MUHAMMAD ALI AUSAT ESQ., Additional District Judge of Aligarh, reversing a decree of BABU HARI SHANKER, Munsif of Etah.

Panna Lal for the appellants.

N. C. Vaish for the respondents.

The judgment of the Court was delivered by

Niamatullah, J.

NIAMATULLAH, J.—The plaintiffs shared in the cultivation of the occupancy tenancy of one Gulzari during his lifetime. On the death of Gulzari his widow had a life-interest in the tenancy under the terms of Section 24 of the Agra Tenancy Act. She brought a suit for partition of the holding impleading the plaintiffs, and as a result of that suit the holding was divided, and a portion remained in the cultivation of the widow, who subsequently associated with herself in cultivation other persons, who are defendants 2 to 4 in this suit. The landlord agreed to this arrangement. The plaintiffs have now brought a suit for a declaration that on the widow's death defendants 2 to 4 will have no rights in the tenancy as against themselves, the plaintiffs, who shared in the cultivation of the last male-holder. The suit was decreed by the Munsif, but his decision has been reversed in appeal by the District Judge. The District Judge was of the opinion that the division of the holding created a new tenancy, and the plaintiffs' rights not having been maintained at the time of the partition, have now been lost to them. In argument in defence of this judgment we have been referred to Section 121 of the Agra Tenancy Act; but in our opinion that section has no connection with the present suit, as it is not a suit brought by a tenant against the landholder or any person claiming to hold through the land-holder for a declaration of his right as a tenant, and we cannot agree with the learned District Judge that this is a suit which could have been brought under the Agra Tenancy Act. The view taken by the learned Munsif on that as on other points is correct. On the question of partition the Munsif says:

> Partition would make no difference so far as the rights of the plaintiffs are concerned. Partition would merely change the mode of enjoyment by defendant No. 1 (the widow), but it would not confer on her greater rights than what she had before partition, nor would it change the mode of succession given in Sections 24 and 25 of the Tenancy Act.

In our opinion the judge was in error in allowing the appeal against the Munsif's decision which is a correct statement of the law. The plaintiffs were entitled to the decree awarded to them by the Court of first instance. We allow this appeal, set aside the decision of the lower appellate court and restore that of the court of first instance with costs throughout.

Appeal allowed

Civil

1932

July 21

King, J

Thom, J.

AMBA SAHAI AND ANOTHER (Plaintiffs)

versus

NATHU AND ANOTHER (Defendants)*

Tenancy Act, 1926, Sec. 197—Groveholder's right to maintain his grove by replacing fallen trees—Not taken away by new Act.

The right which a groveholder had before the commencement of the present Tenancy Act, to maintain his grove by replacing fallen trees, has not been taken away by anything in that Act.

Replacing trees which have fallen down in a grove by planting new trees amounts only to "repairs" and should not be held to amount to an "improvement" within the meaning of Sec. 3 (11) of the Act.

Choke Lal v. Behari Lal, I. L. R. 42 All. 634 referred to.

SECOND APPEAL from a decree of MAULVI FARIDUDDIN AHMAD KHAN, Additional Subordinate Judge of Shahjahanpur, confirming a decree of BABU R. C. VERMA, Munsif of Tilhar.

Haribans Sahai for the appellants.

Hazari Lal Kapoor for the respondents.

The judgment of the Court was delivered by

King, J.

KING, J.—This is a plaintiff's second appeal arising out of a suit for uprooting certain trees newly planted by a groveholder, and for a perpetual injunction restraining the groveholder from planting new trees in future without the permission of the zamindar.

The defendants pleaded inter alia that they had the right of planting new trees, in place of those which had been cut or had fallen down, without the zemindar's permission.

The trial court dismissed the suit and the lower appellate court took the same view and dismissed the appeal.

The facts proved are that the defendants are groveholders, and that the grove in question was planted more than 50 years before the institution of the suit. The area of the grove is 1·64 acres and 33 old trees are still standing on it. The courts therefore held that the land still retained its character of grove-land. It is further found that the defendant planted above 22 new trees in the month of July 1925.

As the new trees were planted before the commencement of the Agra Tenancy Act, 1926, the defendants had a right under the law then in force to plant new trees, in place of those that had fallen down or been cut down, so long as the land retained its character of grove-land. For the law on this point we refer to the ruling in Choke Lal v. Behari Lal[1]. In that ruling the customary right of a groveholder to plant fresh trees was recognised, in the absence of a special custom or contract to the contrary.

In the present case the plaintiffs have relied upon the provisions of the wajib-ul-arz prepared at the previous settlement, between 1870 and 1873. In this wajib-ul-arz a list of groves is set forth, giving particulars of the Khasra-numbers, the names of the owners, the area, and the number of trees. After giving this list of groves we find the following entry:

*S. A. 1954 of 1929

[1] I. L. R. 42 All. 634

> As the Government has excluded from the jama the area of the groves and uncultivated area we, the persons in possession of the groves, declare of our own accord that we shall do our best in rearing and looking after the trees and that we shall plant fresh trees in place of damaged trees with the permission of the zemindar.

It appears therefore that the wajib-ul-arz does not even purport to record an existing custom in respect of groves but records a declaration or promise on the part of the groveholders to the effect that they will plant fresh trees, in place of damaged trees, with the permission of the zemindar. The plaintiffs have failed to establish that the grove now in suit is included among the groves mentioned in the wajib-ul-arz. In our opinion, therefore, the provisions in the wajib-ul-arz cannot be held to apply to the grove in suit since the wajib-ul-arz, at the most, only recorded a contract between the groveholders of certain groves and the zemindars of the village and those groves did not include the grove now in suit. We hold, therefore, that the courts below were perfectly right in dismissing the plaintiffs' claim for uprooting the new trees which the defendants had planted in July 1925, before the commencement of the present Tenancy Act.

It has been strongly urged on behalf of the appellants that even if they are not entitled to get the trees which were planted in July 1925 uprooted, they are entitled to a perpetual injunction restraining the groveholders from planting any fresh trees in future without their permission.

The appellants' argument is based on the provisions of the Agra Tenancy Act, 1926. It is argued, firstly, that the rights of groveholders have been defined in Section 197. This section mentions certain rights of groveholders, but is silent on the question whether a groveholder has a right to replant trees in place of trees which have fallen down or been cut down. It is argued therefore that by implication the legislature has denied the groveholder's right of planting new trees.

We are not prepared to accede to this contention. Section 197 does not purport to state the rights and liabilities of groveholders exhaustively. There is nothing to show that a groveholder has no right other than a right mentioned in that section. As we have already stated, the law which was in force before the commencement of the present Act recognised the groveholders' right of planting new trees, to replace fallen trees, so long as the land retained its character of grove-land, provided there was no village custom or contract to the contrary. This right of maintaining a grove was a very important incident of the right of a groveholder. It must be presumed that the legislature knew the existing law and in our opinion the legislature cannot be held to have intended to take away this important groveholder's right without express words to that effect. Merely because Section 197 is silent on the point whether a grove-holder has a right to maintain his grove-land as a grove, by replanting trees whenever required, we are not prepared to hold that the legislature has by implication taken away that right.

It is further argued that under Section 112 a non-occupancy tenant is prohibited from making any improvement except with the written consent of the landholder. Now, a groveholder is certainly a 'tenant'— see Section 3(6). A groveholder is moreover presumed to be a "non-occupancy tenant'—see Section 197(A). Groveland is now included in the definition of 'land'—see Section 3(2). So it follows that groveland is a 'holding' or part of a 'holding'—see Section 3(8).

It is further pointed out that under Section 3(11) "the planting of trees" is expressly mentioned as an 'improvement' with reference to a tenant's holding—see Section 3(11). So the appellants' learned advocate claims to have proved (1) that a grove-holder is prohibited from making any improvement without the written consent of his land-holder, and (2) that the planting of trees in grove-land is an 'improvement' with reference to the grove-land. He contends therefore that a grove-holder is prohibited from planting trees in his grove-land without the written consent of his land-holder.

The first proposition must, we think, be conceded. The second proposition is however open to doubt. The question turns upon whether "the planting of trees" mentioned as an improvement in Section 3(11) (c) means only making a new plantation of trees or whether it includes the replacing of fallen or useless trees in a grove for the purpose of maintaining the grove.

We think there is a substantial distinction between making a new plantation of trees and maintaining an old plantation. For the purpose of maintaining an old grove it is necessary to plant new trees from time to time, to replace old trees which are dead or useless. But this sort of replanting, for the purpose of keeping a grove in good condition and of preventing further deterioration, would not ordinarily be held to amount to an improvement, and we do not think that it is an "improvement" within the meaning of the Act. All the works which are mentioned as improvements in Section 3(11) appear to be new works. "The planting of trees" is coupled with "the reclaiming, clearing, enclosing, levelling or terracing of land." The works of this latter nature are evidently intended to refer to new works. Moreover, it is expressly stated in Sub-clause (e) that "mere repairs" are not to be included among improvements. We think that replacing trees which have fallen down in a grove by planting new trees amounts only to "repairs" and should not be held to amount to an "improvement". Filling up gaps among trees of an old grove is analogous to filling up gaps in an old embankment. In each case the work is of the nature of repairs, for the purpose of maintaining the grove or embankment in its original state, and is not an "improvement."

Our conclusions on this point are fortified by the general principle that the legislature cannot be deemed to have intended to take away a very important right incidental to groveholding without enacting express provisions to this effect. In our opinion the right which a groveholder had before the commencement of the present Tenancy Act, to maintain his grove by replacing fallen trees, has not been taken away by anything in that Act.

We hold therefore that the appellants' contention cannot be accepted and the courts below have come to a right decision.

We accordingly dismiss the appeal with costs. Appeal dismissed

Civil

1932

May 2

King, J.
Thom, J.

SHER PAL SINGH (Defendant)
versus
AIJAZ FATIMA AND OTHERS (Plaintiffs)*

Tenancy Act (III of 1926), Sec. 265—Lambardar—Agreement with certain co-sharers that they should collect rents of their shares separately—Whether binding on other co-sharers.

Where a lambardar, for the sake of good management, entered into an agreement with the purchasers that they should collect the rents of their shares separately, while he should collect the rents of the remaining share separately and the agreement was acted upon by the parties, held, that the agreement was perfectly valid and binding upon the other co-sharers.

Of the heirs of a deceased plaintiff one was brought on the record within time and the others filed an affidavit that they had relinquished their rights in favour of the heir whose name was on the record, held, that the affidavit could not be treated as a transfer of the rights of the remaining heirs in favour of the heir on the record and the suit abated as regards the heirs whose names were not brought upon the record.

SECOND APPEAL from a decree of ALI AUSAT ESQ., Additional District Judge of Aligarh, modifying a decree of RAFIULLAH KHAN ESQ., Assistant Collector, first class.

K. N. Katju and S. B. L. Gaur for the appellant.

Mushtaq Ahmad and Jai Kishan Lal for the respondents.

The judgment of the Court was delivered by

King, J.

KING, J.—This is a defendant's appeal arising out of a suit for rent. The plaintiff originally was one Abdul Karim Khan and he claimed for himself and on behalf of 7 other persons the rent due from the defendants first set in respect of the 15 biswas share belonging to the plaintiff and the persons he represented. Defendant No. 4, Sheo Baran Singh, was joined as pro forma defendant upon the allegation that he was lambardar and entitled under the terms of an agreement between the parties to collect the rent of the remaining 5 biswas share. The suit was resisted on a great number of grounds which we need not set forth in detail for the purpose of this appeal. The trial court dismissed the suit but the lower appellate court has taken a different view and has decreed the major portion of the plaintiff's claim.

To understand the facts in dispute, it is necessary to give a brief history of the property in suit. In 1915 a 15 biswas share of the village was sold to Ghulam Mohiuddin Khan and Rashid Ahmad Khan. The plaintiff and 7 others whom he represented are the representatives of the purchasers. In 1916 Sheobaran Singh and Hardeo Singh, who were cosharers in the village, sued for pre-emption and the suit was decreed on September 26, 1916. Sheobaran Singh paid up the whole of the pre-emption money and thus obtained possession of the 15 biswas. On March 13, 1920 the High Court reversed the pre-emption decree, restoring the title of the original purchasers. The latter regained possession and Sheobaran Singh withdrew the pre-emption deposit. The case went up to their Lordships of the Privy Council and on March 22, 1927 the Privy Council reversed the decree of the High Court, restoring the decree of the Court of first instance. On April 8, 1927 Sheobaran deposited the pre-emption money and regained possession.

---

*S. A. 418 of 1930

This suit was instituted by Abdul Karim, on behalf of the representatives of the purchasers, for the rent of the years 1332 to 1334F.

One of the defences to the suit was that Abdul Karim Khan was not entitled to sue alone but was bound to join all the representatives of the original purchasers. This objection is based upon the provisions of Sec. 266 of the Agra Tenancy Act, but Sub-section (1) of that Section shows that the cosharers can appoint an agent to act on behalf of them all. Abdul Karim claimed to be acting as agent on behalf of them all and the objection is of no importance now, since Abdul Karim died during the pendency of the suit, and upon his death, the remaining representatives of the original purchasers were brought upon the record as plaintiffs. They expressly stated in their application, for being impleaded as plaintiffs, that Abdul Karim Khan was acting for them as the collector of rents. There is therefore no force in this objection.

Another point raised for the appellant is that Abdul Karim Khan and his cosharers had no authority to collect rent in respect of the 15 biswas share in the village. The plaintiff based his right upon an agreement arrived at between all the representatives of the purchasers on the one hand and Sheobaran Singh as lambardar on the other hand. It appears that after the decree of the High Court which resulted in the suit of Sheobaran Singh being dismissed, the purchasers applied to have Sheobaran Singh removed from the post of lambardar and one of themselves to be appointed. The parties came to a compromise in the lambardari case to the effect that Abdul Karim Khan and his vendee cosharers will realise the rent of the 15 biswas share and Sheobaran Singh will realise as lambardar the rent of the 5 biswas share. An arrangement was also made regarding the arrears of rent due from tenants.

It is argued that Sheobaran Singh had no authority to enter into this arrangement with the purchasers. We consider that there is no force in that contention. The powers of a lambardar in an undivided mahal are laid down in Section 265 which defines the powers which were previously exercisable by lambardars. This section expressly lays down that a lambardar is entitled to do all acts incidental to the proper management of the estate with a view to the common benefit. These words are very wide and we think that they cover a case such as the present, where the lambardar for the sake of good management came to an agreement with the purchasers of the 15 biswas share that they should collect the rents of their shares separately, while he should collect the rents of the remaining 5 biswas share separately. We think that this agreement was perfectly valid and binding upon the other cosharers. The court below has also found that the agreement was, as a matter of fact, acted upon by the parties.

Another point argued is that as the result of the Privy Council decree which restored the decree of the trial court, Sheobaran Singh was restored to the position of rightful owner with effect from the date when he deposited the pre-emption money in accordance with the decree of the trial court in the year 1916 and that the plaintiff and the other representatives of the purchasers must be held to have been in possession without title from the time of the High Court decree in 1920 up to the time of the Privy Council decree in 1927. We are not prepared to accede to this argument. After Abdul Karim Khan and the other representatives of the purchasers had been successful in the High Court and had recovered possession under the decree of the High Court we think it cannot be held that they were in possession without title. It must be remembered that Sheobaran Singh withdrew his pre-emption money and in our opinion Sheobaran Singh cannot be held to have regained his title until he deposited the pre-emption money a second time on April 8, 1927 after the Privy Council decree. Rulings have been cited before us on this point on behalf of both parties but we have not been shown any decision which is on all fours with the present case. It would certainly be very inequitable if Sheobaran Singh should be held entitled to the profits of the property from 1920 to 1927, although he had withdrawn his pre-emption money and had the use of it throughout that long period. From the other point of view, it seems inequitable that the purchasers who had paid their money for the property should not be entitled to the benefits of the property until they received the pre-emption money after the decree of the Privy Council. In our opinion, Sheobaran Singh is not entitled to the rents claimed from the defendants first party before April 8, 1927. We agree with the court below on this point.

Another point raised for the appellant is that the rent of the ex-proprietary holding of the defendants first party had not been properly fixed under Section 36 of the U. P. Land Revenue Act and therefore the suit was not maintainable. It appears that in the year 1923 Abdul Karim Khan applied to the Collector, as proprietor and collector of rent, for having the ex-proprietary rent fixed upon Sohan Pal, Sher Pal Singh and Ram Dei. Sher Pal is the appellant before us. Sohan Pal is his brother and Mst. Ram Dei his mother. The rent claimed was over Rs.926. On September 22, 1923, a compromise was filed by the parties agreeing that the rent should be fixed at Rs.570 per annum. The compromise was signed by Sohan Pal and by a barrister on behalf of the other two tenants. The revenue court fixed the rent according to the compromise. Sohan Pal also executed bonds on the same day as head of the family, for payment of arrears of rent in accordance with the compromise and for arrears of rent due in respect of an occupancy holding under a decree.

For the appellants it is contended that Sher Pal Singh the appellant was not properly represented in those proceedings and they are not binding upon him and the rent was not fixed in accordance with the provisions of Section 36. For the respondents it is argued that these proceedings are binding and operate as res judicata. We find that it is not necessary to go into the question how far these proceedings may be binding upon Sher Pal Singh and Mst. Ram Dei because it appears from the judgment of the trial court that the rates of rent claimed were not disputed by the defendants. There is therefore no force in the contention that the plaintiff is not entitled to the amount of rent claimed upon the ground that it was not properly fixed under Section 36.

Another important point which has been raised for the appellant is that the whole suit has abated. On June 7, 1928, Abdul Karim Khan who was then the sole plaintiff, died. On June 23 his daughter Aijaz Fatima applied for having her name substituted as heir and on July 11, 1928 the other representatives of the original purchasers applied to be impleaded as plaintiffs. It appears however that Abdul Karim Khan left as his heirs his daughter and two brothers and the brothers were never brought upon the record. It is argued that on account of the fact that the brothers were not brought upon the record the whole suit automatically abated three months after the date of Abdul Karim Khan's death.

The lower appellate court took into consideration an affidavit filed before that court to the effect that the other heirs of Abdul Karim Khan have relinquished their right in favour of his daughter. On that ground the court below thought it was not proper to dismiss the suit on the ground of abatement. In our opinion the court below was not right in treating the affidavit as a transfer of the right of the remaining heirs in favour of Kaniz Fatima. The other heirs might, if they pleased, relinquish their rights, but a mere relinquishment would not have the effect of transferring their rights to Kaniz Fatima. In our opinion, it must be held that the suit abated as regards the brothers of Abdul Karim who were not brought upon the record. They are only entitled to a half biswa share, so the suit must be held to have abated to the extent of a half biswa out of 15 biswas. It has been argued for the appellant that the suit does not abate merely to this extent, but the whole suit must be held to have abated. The ruling in Haidar Husain v. Abdul Ahad[1] was cited, but we think that the case was distinguishable upon the facts as the suit was for the demolition of a certain building. We think that the question of abatement must be considered with reference to the subject-matter of the suit. It was not possible to pass a decree for the demolition of a small portion of the building, but there is no difficulty in giving a decree for a definite fraction of a sum of money. No clear authority has been shown to us for holding that the suit must be held to have abated entirely, merely because all the heirs of one of the plaintiffs has not been brought upon the record. It has also been argued that a suit for the rent of a portion of a holding is not maintainable. In answer to this we need only say that this point was not taken in the grounds of appeal or argued before the lower appellate court and we cannot permit it to be raised for the first time in arguments.

We accordingly allow the appeal to this extent only that we vary the decree of the court below by deducting a 1|30th share of the sum decreed, namely, Rs.66-10-8. In other respects we maintain the decree of the court below. Parties will receive and pay costs in proportion to success and failure throughout.

Appeal allowed in part

---

[1] I. L. R. 30 All. 117=5 A. L. J. 62

Civil

1931

April 2

Sen, J.

THE SECRETARY OF STATE FOR INDIA IN COUNCIL (THROUGH THE AGENT G. I. P. RAILWAY, AT BOMBAY) (Defendant)

versus

FAZAL UDDIN BADRUDDIN (THROUGH HYDER BAKSH) (Plaintiff)*

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), Sec. 80—Notice under Sec. 77, Railways Act does not dispense with the necessity of a notice under Sec. 80.

Sec. 80 of the Civil Procedure Code is imperative and therefore a notice under Sec. 77 of the Railways Act does not dispense with the necessity of a notice under Sec. 80 C. P. C. Ali Asmat Shakur v. G. I. P. Ry., 1930 A. L. J. 1125 followed.

Where a postal receipt of acknowledgment is filed by the plaintiff which purports to be with reference to some document transmitted to a railway authority it cannot be predicated with certainty that the document in question was a notice which fulfilled the requirements of Sec. 77 of the Railways Act.

Civil Revision against the decree of the Additional District Judge of Agra.

Ladli Prasad Zutshi for the applicant.

S. C. Das for the opposite party.

The following judgment was delivered by

Sen, J.

Sen, J.—This is an application for revision by the Secretary of State for India in Council under Section 25 of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act. On August 16, 1929 an oil tank was despatched by A. O. Oil Company Limited from Rawalpindi to Punjab Oil and Machinery Stores at Jhansi. Rawalpindi is on the North-Western Railway, while Jhansi is on the G. I. P. Railway. When the oil tank reached the Agra Cantonment Station, it was found to be leaking. Plaintiff who is the endorsee of the railway consignment receipt, applied to the railway authorities at Agra Cantonment Station for delivery of the oil tank to him, as the oil tank was leaking. On August 23, 1929, the oil tank was delivered to the plaintiff as requested. The present suit was instituted in the court of the Judge of Small Causes at Agra for recovery of Rs.216 together with interest being the difference of the freight between Rawalpindi and Jhansi, the place where the oil tank was stipulated to be delivered and Agra where it was actually delivered.

The suit was directed against the Secretary of State for India in Council upon the ground that he was the owner of the Great Indian Peninsula Railway Company. The North Western Railway was not impleaded in the action nor was any relief claimed against that Railway.

On July 16, 1930, the defendant applied that two preliminary issues be framed in the case and that the suit be decided on those two issues. It was contended that no notice of the projected suit had been served upon the Secretary of State for India in Council in the manner provided and prescribed by Section 80 of the Code of Civil Procedure. It was also contended that the non-joinder of the North Western Railway Company who were the contracting party was a defect which was fatal to the suit. Curiously enough, no order was passed on this application. The case was taken up in the ordinary course of hearing on November 4, 1930, and the plaintiff's claim was decreed.

---

*Civ. Rev. 563 of 1930

The learned Judge of the court below has found that non-compliance of the provisions of Section 80 of the Civil Procedure Code does not defeat the suit inasmuch as notice under Section 77 of the Indian Railways Act (Act IX of 1890) had been served on the North Western Railway Company.

The court observes:

> it was contended that the notice should have been served on the District Officer of Agra, as both the Railways were State Railways. I do not think it was necessary to do so. For the purposes of the suit, the Agent or the Manager of the Railway Companies could be considered as representing the Secretary of State for India. I decide the issue in the negative.

Section 80 of the Code of Civil Procedure is mandatory and provides that

> No suit shall be instituted against the Secretary of State for India in Council until the expiration of two months next after notice in writing has been, in the case of the Secretary of State in Council, delivered to, or left at the office of, a Secretary to the Local Government or the Collector of the district.

Ex hypothesi the notice of the contemplated suit had not been delivered to, or left at the office of a Secretary to the Local Government or the Collector of Agra.

The statutory rule of procedure quoted above is imperative. The court below is wrong in holding that the delivery or service of a notice under Section 77 of the Indian Railways Act obviates the necessity of the compliance of the rule contained in Section 80 C. P. C. The matter is covered by authority. It has been held by a Division Bench of this Court in Ali Asmat Shakur v. G. I. P. Railway[1] that a notice under Section 77 of the Railways Act would not dispense with the necessity of a notice under Section 80 C. P. C. The lower court was further not justified in arriving at the conclusion that notice in due compliance with Section 77 of the Railways Act had been served upon the railway authority concerned. No such notice either in the original or in the shape of an officially certified copy has been produced in the case. The finding of the court below rests upon very slender data. Because a certain postal receipt of acknowledgment has been filed by the plaintiff which purports to be with reference to some document transmitted to a railway authority, it cannot be predicated with certainty that the document in question was a notice which fulfilled the requirements of Section 77 of the Railways Act.

No notice under Section 80 C. P. C. having been tendered or delivered as required by Section 80 C. P. C. the suit against the Secretary of State for India in Council was bound to fail. I accordingly allow this application, set aside the order of the court below and dismiss the suit with costs.

Application allowed

---

[1] [1930] A. L. J. 1125

Civil

1932

June 28

Sulaiman, C. J.

JAI KARAN (Judgment-debtor)
versus
PANCHAITI AKHARA CHOTA NAYA UDASI NANAK SHAHI (Decree-holder)*

Limitation Act, Sec. 20, Proviso to (added by Act I of 1927)—Applicability of—Art 182—Step-in-aid of execution—Meaning of—Payment by judgment-debtor out of Court—Whether amounts to.

A money decree was passed on June 10, 1927. On December 9, 1929 Rs.85 were paid by the judgment-debtor out of Court to the decree-holder. The decree-holder applied to certify it on March 16, 1931. The application for execution was made on June 24, 1931. Held, that the proviso added to Sec. 20 Limitation Act by Act I of 1927, which came into force on January 1, 1928, applied and the payment of December 9, 1929 did not help to keep alive the decree; and the application certifying payment having been made more than three years after the decree cannot help the decree-holder.

A step-in-aid of execution is an act done by the decree-holder in Court and therefore a payment of money made by the judgment-debtor out of Court cannot be treated in any sense as a step-in-aid of execution.

Jatindra Kumar Das v. Gangan Chandra Pal, I. L. R. 46 Cal. 22 referred to.

Civil Revision from an order of Babu Brij Behari Lal, Judge, Small Cause Court of Allahabad.

Shankar Sahai Verma for the applicant.

Ambika Prasad for the opposite party.

The following judgment was delivered by

Sulaiman, C. J.

Sulaiman, C. J.—This is an application in revision by the judgment-debtor from an order of the Court of Small Causes dismissing his objection to the execution of a money decree. The decree was passed on June 10, 1927. On December 9, 1929 Rs.85 are said to have been paid by the judgment-debtor out of court to the decree-holder. The decree-holder applied to certify it on March 16, 1931. The present application for execution was made on June 24, 1931. The court below has held that the certificate of payment was a step-in-aid of execution, and inasmuch as the payment was made within three years of the decree and the certificate was within three years of the payment, the court has held that there is no force in the objection that the application was barred by time.

Section 20 has been amended by Act I of 1927, which came into force on January 1, 1928. It is quite obvious that as the law of limitation is a law of procedure, the amended Act must govern all future payments and all future applications for execution, even though they may be in pursuance of a decree passed previously. Section 20, therefore, applies to the payment of Rs.85 made on December 9, 1929. The proviso added to the section makes it quite clear that a payment of interest as such does not now save limitation, unless there is an acknowledgment of the payment appearing in the handwriting of, or in a writing signed by, the person

---

*Civ. Rev. 70 of 1932

CIVIL

1932

JAI KARAN
v.
PANCHAITI AKHARA

Sulaiman,
C. J.

making the payment. This is not so in the present case. It follows that this payment did not help to keep alive the decree.

It seems to me that a payment of money made by the judgment-debtor out of court cannot be treated in any sense as a step-in-aid of execution. It is an act of the judgment-debtor out of court, whereas a step-in-aid of execution is supposed to be an act done by the decree-holder in court. It may be said that the payment of the amount by the judgment-debtor implies a receipt of the amount by the decree-holder, but that too takes place out of court, and cannot, in my opinion, be considered as a step-in-aid of execution, which obviously must be in court within the meaning of Article 182 of the Limitation Act. If the payment were to fulfil the requirements of Section 20, it would extend limitation. But that is quite a different matter from saying that it is a step-in-aid of execution.

The case of Jatindra Kumar Das v. Gangan Chandra Pal[1] was decided when the old law of limitation was in force, and I do not think that the learned Judges meant to lay down that the payment could itself be considered as a step-in-aid of execution. All that they decided was that the payment having been made within three years of the decree, it kept alive the decree, and its being certified within three years of the payment, saved limitation.

There has been some conflict of opinion on the question whether an application merely certifying payment is or is not a step-in-aid of execution. It may for the purposes of this revision be assumed without deciding that such a certificate is a step. But if the payment of December 9, 1929 cannot help to keep alive the decree and cannot itself be regarded as a step-in-aid of execution, the certificate which was made more than three years after the decree cannot help the decree-holder. I am, therefore, clearly of opinion that the application, in view of the new Limitation Act, was barred by time.

The court below has overlooked the new provision of the law, as was done at the first hearing of this case even in this Court. I think that this is a sufficient ground for interference in revision. I accordingly allow this revision, and setting aside the decree of the court below, dismiss the application for execution. As the point was raised at a late stage in the case, I direct that the parties should bear their own costs in both the courts.

Revision allowed

CIVIL

1932

June 17

SULAIMAN,
C. J.
MUKERJI, J.

SAID AHMED (Objector)
versus
RAZA HUSAIN AND OTHERS (Decree-holders)*

Civil Procedure Code, Or. 21, Rule 103 and Sec. 47—Order under Or. 21, Rule 98—Order came under Sec. 47 also—Whether appeal lay—Order exempting defendant from suit and allowing his name to remain in decree—Order tantamount to dismissal of suit as against him.

Order 21, Rule 103 merely lays down that where an order is passed against a person under rule 98, rule 99 or rule 101, the order is conclusive, subject to the result of the separate suit, it does not say that where the order falls under some other section as well (e.g., Section 47 C. P. C.), the order would still be conclusive and no appeal would lie therefrom.

---

*L. P. A. 53 of 1931

[1] I. L. R. 46 Cal. 22

In a suit for partition, the appellant was exempted from the suit by the Court but his name appeared in the decree which was subsequently passed. In the execution department the plaintiff sought delivery of possession of the very house which the appellant had been claiming. The attempt was resisted by the appellant, who pleaded that he was the owner of the property. The execution court in a summary proceeding held that the appellant had failed to prove his title, and also went on to hold that he had been set up by the judgment-debtor. His objection was accordingly dismissed and possession was ordered to be delivered to the decree-holder. The appellant preferred an appeal to the District Judge, who dismissed the appeal on the ground that the proceedings were under Or. 21, Rules 97 and 98 and no appeal lay to him. Held, (1) that the order exempting the appellant and at the same time allowing his name to remain in the decree was tantamount to a dismissal of the suit as against him and in view of the explanation to Section 47 C. P. C. he must be deemed to be a party for all purposes under that section and was entitled to put forward his title to the property, (2) that even if it be conceded that the case in part fell under Or. 21, Rules 97 and 98, the main dispute between the parties really came within the scope of Section 47 C. P. C., and the order of the execution court being under Section 47 (read wtih Section 2) C. P. C., an appeal lay to the District Judge.

LETTERS PATENT APPEAL from the judgment of the HON'BLE MR. JUSTICE KING.

Vishwa Mitra for the appellant.

Baleshwari Prasad for the respondents.

The judgment of the Court was delivered by

Sulaiman, C. J.

SULAIMAN C. J.—This is an appeal by defendant No. 4, arising out of an execution proceeding. A suit for partition was brought by the plaintiff against several defendants in respect of two houses originally. The appellant, Said Ahmad, was defendant No. 4. He pleaded that he was entitled to one house by virtue of his adverse possession. The plaintiff withdrew his claim as regards the other house, with liberty to bring a suit afresh. As regards the second house, it was claimed by Said Ahmad that the plaintiff instead of fighting the case against him, chose to exempt him from the suit. The court ordered that defendant No. 4 be exempted from the suit, and he be given his costs. There was, however, no order that his name should be struck off the array of parties and should no longer appear in the decree. His name continued to be on the record as one of the parties, and appeared in the decree which was subsequently passed, though it was noted that he had been exempted.

In the execution department the plaintiff sought delivery of possession of the very house which the defendant No. 4 had been claiming. The attempt was resisted by Said Ahmad, who pleaded that he was the owner of the property. The execution court in a summary proceeding held that Said Ahmad had failed to prove his title, and also went on to hold that he had been set up by the judgment-debtors. His objection was accordingly dismissed, and possession was ordered to be delivered to the decree-holder.

CIVIL

1932

SAID AHMAD
v.
RAZA HUSAIN

Sulaiman,
C. J.

Said Ahmad preferred an appeal to the District Judge, who dismissed the appeal on the ground that the proceedings were under O. 21, R. 97 and R. 98 and that no appeal lay to him. The order of the District Judge has been upheld by a learned Judge of this Court.

The learned Judge of this Court has held that the proceedings fell under Order 21, Rules 97 and 98 and also fell under Section 47 C. P. C. He has rightly pointed out that the defendant No. 4 was a party to the suit for the purposes of the execution proceedings, but he cannot be considered to be a judgment-debtor. He has, however, held that Section 47 contains a general provision of the law, whereas O. 21, R. 98 contains special provisions applicable to this particular case. In his opinion, the special provisions must prevail over the general provisions. He has accordingly upheld the order of the lower appellate court and dismissed the appeal.

It is true that a defendant who has been exempted from the suit and against whom no decree is passed or an order capable of execution made, is not a judgment-debtor as defined in Section 2(10) C. P. C. At the same time, it cannot be doubted that in view of the explanation added to Section 47, for the purposes of that section a defendant against whom a suit has been dismissed must be deemed to be a party to the suit. The order exempting him and at the same time allowing his name to remain in the decree was tantamount to a dismissal of the suit as against him. It follows that the defendant must be deemed to be a party for the purposes of the execution proceedings; he must therefore be deemed to be a party for all purposes under that section. Sections 2 and 47 have to be read together, and where there has been a formal expression of an adjudication which, so far as regards the court expressing it, conclusively determines the rights of the parties in regard to any matter of controversy in the suit, the order amounts to a decree and all such orders which include the determination of any question under Section 47 are decrees. Section 47 is not necessarily confined to decree-holders, on the one side, and judgment-debtors, on the other and is wide enough to cover a dispute between co-defendants who may be parties in a partition suit. There is no doubt that the defendant was a party to the suit for the purposes of the execution department, and was entitled to put forward his title to the property which was sought to be seized by the decree-holder. Indeed, if he were not to do so, his remedy by a separate suit would be barred.

The learned advocate for the respondent has urged before us that inasmuch as the case fell under Order 21, Rules 97 and 98, the only remedy open to the defendant was one by way of separate suit under Rule 103, and the appeal was barred under that rule. Order 21, Rules 97 and 98 contemplate cases where the judgment-debtor or some one whom he has set up is resisting or causing obstruction to the delivery of possession to the decree-holder. The court has to see prima facie whether there is any just cause for such resistance and obstruction, and has not to investigate the question of title thoroughly. In the present case it was not merely a matter of resisting possession or obstructing delivery, but the setting up of a title as against the decree-holder. Even if, therefore, it be conceded that the case in part fell under Rules 97 and 98 and 103, the main dispute

Civil

1932

Said Ahmad v. Raza Husain

Sulaiman, C. J.

between the parties really came within the scope of Section 47 C. P. C.

There is, in our opinion, no inconsistency between the provisions of the rules in Order 21 and the provisions of Section 47. But even if there were, it is obvious that Section 47 must override the provisions of the rules in the schedule, as is suggested by Section 128(1) C. P. C. Where a case falls both under Section 47 and under some rule in Order 21, there will be no prohibition against a second appeal, because the prohibition under Section 104(1) is confined to orders only and not decrees. If the order comes under Section 47 also, the order would be a decree and an appeal would lie under Section 96 C. P. C. and a second appeal under Section 100 to this Court.

Order 21, Rule 103 merely lays down that where an order is passed against a person under rule 98, rule 99 or rule 101, the order is conclusive, subject to the result of the separate suit, it does not say that where the order falls under some other section as well, the order would still be conclusive and no appeal would lie therefrom. The order being under Section 47, read with Section 2 C. P. C., an appeal lay to the District Judge, who has wrongly rejected the appeal. The appeal is accordingly allowed, the decree of this Court and of the lower appellate court set aside and the case is sent back to the lower appellate court with directions to readmit the appeal to its original number on the file and dispose of it according to law. Costs will abide the result.

Appeal allowed

Civil

1932

May 26

Pullan, J.
Niamat-ullah, J.

SHUKRULLAH AND OTHERS (Defendants)
versus
ZUHRA BIBI AND OTHERS (Plaintiffs)*

Mohammedan Law—Mohammedan joint family—Meaning of—Whether a legal entity—Rights of members and their heirs—How determined—Trusts Act (II of 1882), Sec. 88, Illustration (f) and Sec. 90—Mohammedan family—Joint business and joint purse—Partnership—Death of a member—Surviving members carry on business as before—Rights of heirs of deceased member—Limitation Act, Articles 144 and 106—Suit for joint possession by heirs of deceased member of Mohammedan joint family constituting a partnership—Whether maintainable—Limitation.

A so-called Mohammedan joint family implies nothing more than a group of individuals living and messing in commensality, owning property as tenants in common, carrying on business jointly and making fresh acquisitions. The law does not recognise a Mohammedan joint family as a legal unit having a corporate existence and as such owning property. In the generality of such cases their rights and those of their heirs can be determined with reference to express or implied agreement, relation of principal and agent, partnership, constructive trust or the like. In support of each claim it must be shown that it is justified by some known principle of law. Mere a priori conclusions based on the analogy derived from the law applicable to joint Hindu families, if they cannot be shown to be in conformity with a definite rule applicable to Mohammedans, cannot be accepted.

Where male members of a (Mohammedan) family carry on business jointly and have a joint purse and there is an understanding with regard to the sharing of the profits, they are members of a partnership as defined in Sec. 239 of the Contract Act. On the death of a member it is open to the surviving male members of the family to wind up the business and to pay off the heirs of the deceased member by valuing their interests. If the surviving male members prefer to carry on the business, retaining the entire assets, including the shares of the heirs of deceased member, with the result that the profits of their shares in the business and the property are made use of for improving the business and making acquisitions instead of being paid to them, Sec. 88, Illustration (f) and Sec. 90 of the Trusts Act (II of 1882) apply and the heirs of the deceased member are entitled to their shares (under the Mohammedan Law) not only in the property and the business as they were at the time of the death of the member but also in the subsequent improvements and acquisitions; and the heirs of the deceased member can maintain a suit for joint possession of the assets in the hands of the surviving members and Art. 144 of the Limitation Act applies to such a suit. It is not incumbent on them to institute a suit for an account and a share of the profits of a dissolved partnership to which Art. 106 of the Limitation Act applies.

---

*F. A. 295 of 1927

It is open to the surviving members to charge for their personal services a reasonable remuneration, but if they do not do so, they cannot afterwards insist on account being taken of their personal services which it is impossible to assess in terms of money or a share in the improvements and acquisitions.

FIRST APPEAL from a decree of BABU HARIHAR PRASAD, Additional Subordinate Judge of Gorakhpur.

Sir Tej Bahadur Sapru and Mushtaq Ahmad for the appellants.

S. M. Husain (with him A. M. Khawaja, Sankar Saran, Akhtar Husain Khan, S. Zamir Alam, Zahiruddin, A. Dharam Das and Jai Kishan Lal) for the respondents.

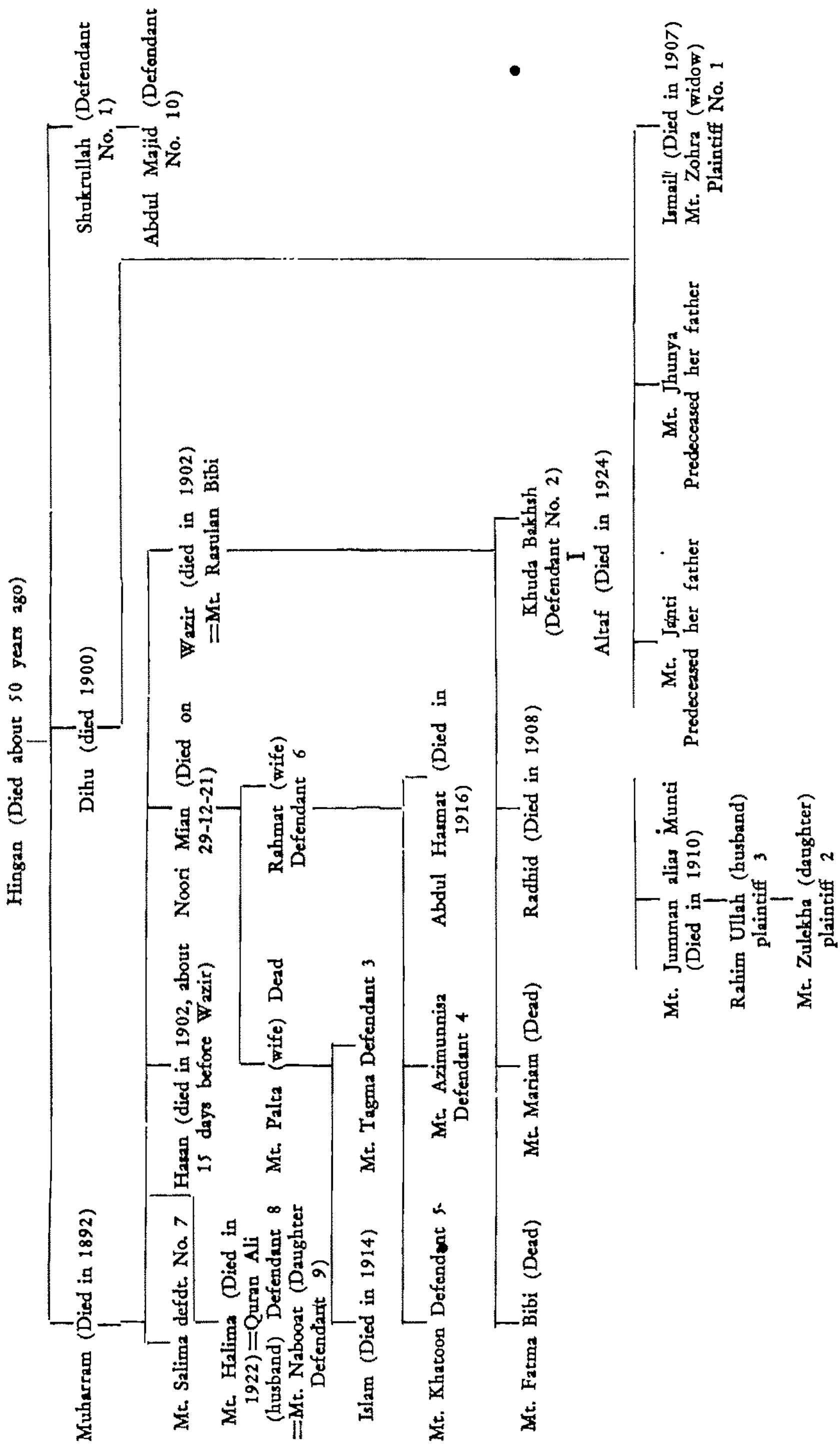
The judgment of the Court was delivered by

Niamatullah, J.

NIAMATULLAH, J.—This is an appeal by defendants Nos. 1 to 3 and 10 from the decree passed by the Additional Subordinate Judge of Gorakhpur in a suit for joint possession of a large number of immovable properties, including three mills, all detailed in schedule A annexed to the plaint, and for a declaration of their right of share in the sums due from third persons under a number of bonds, detailed in schedule C, together with mesne profits. The share of the plaintiffs in all the properties in dispute is alleged to be 16 out of 72 'sihams', that is, 2|9ths belonging to the first three plaintiffs, who have assigned half of their rights to the other three plaintiffs. The contesting respondents are five of the original plaintiffs and the legal representatives of the assignee plaintiff, Maqsud Ali, who died during the pendency of this appeal and is now represented by his heirs. Other defendants, who do not appeal, have been impleaded as pro forma respondents. The following pedigree will explain the position of the first three plaintiffs and the defendants, including the appellants, and will also elucidate the nature of the plaintiffs' claim:—



Hingan (Died about 50 years ago)
Muharram (Died in 1892)
Dihu (died 1900)
Shukrullah (Defendant No. 1)
Abdul Majid (Defendant No. 10)
Mt. Salima defdt. No. 7
Hasan (died in 1902, about 15 days before Wazir)
Noori Mian (Died on 29-12-21)
Wazir (died in 1902) =Mt. Rasulan Bibi
Mt. Halima (Died in 1922)=Quran Ali (husband) Defendant 8 =Mt. Naboot (Daughter Defendant 9)
Mt. Palta (wife) Dead
Rahmat (wife) Defendant 6
Islam (Died in 1914)
Mt. Tagma Defendant 3
Mt. Khatoon Defendant 5
Mt. Azimunnisa Defendant 4
Abdul Hasmat (Died in 1916)
Mt. Fatma Bibi (Dead)
Mt. Mariam (Dead)
Radhid (Died in 1908)
Khuda Bakhsh (Defendant No. 2)
Altaf (Died in 1924)
Mt. Jumman alias Munti (Died in 1910)
Rahim Ullah (husband) plaintiff 3
Mt. Zulekha (daughter) plaintiff 2
Mt. Janti Predeceased her father
Mt. Jhunya Predeceased her father
Ismail (Died in 1907)
Mt. Zohra (widow) Plaintiff No. 1

This pedigree is admitted, except in some particulars to be presently mentioned. Rahimullah, plaintiff No. 3, is a cousin of Khuda Bakhsh, defendant No. 2, being the son of the latter's maternal uncle. The defendants deny that Dihu had any daughter. In particular they deny that he left a daughter named, Jumman, alias Minti. On the contrary, they allege that Dihu had a son named Jumman, who predeceased him, and that Mst. Nakchhedi, an alleged daughter of Shukrullah, defendant No. 1, was also known as Minti. The second plaintiff Mst. Zulekha, though admittedly the daughter of Rahimullah, is not admitted to be the daughter of a daughter of Dihu, so that if the defendants' allegation on this part of the case is correct, plaintiffs Nos. 2 and 3 can have no interest in the property in dispute.

The plaintiffs' case, as stated in the plaint and supplemented by counsel's statements in the earlier stages of the suit, is that the three sons of Hingan had a joint business consisting of trade and banking on a small scale. They were joint in mess and residence. Their joint savings were invested in business and acquisition of properties. After the death of Muharram his sons remained joint with Dihu and Shukrullah, their uncles, and after Dihu's death his son Ismail was similarly joint with Shukrullah, defendant No. 1, and the sons of Muharram, and that all the properties acquired up to the year 1907 belonged jointly to Shukrullah, defendant No. 1, and the heirs of Muharram and Dihu, including Ismail. No male descendant of Dihu was left after the death of Ismail, and the latter's widow and sister, who were his heirs and who inherited a share in the property, remained joint with Shukrullah, defendant No. 1, and the descendants of Muharram. Mst. Zohra, plaintiff No. 1, was maintained by the defendants like other members of the family. Even since the death of her mother, which occurred in 1910, Mst. Zuleikha lived with and was brought up by Mst. Zohra, plaintiff No. 1, all her expenses being defrayed out of the property in which she had a share. According to the plaintiffs, no one was considered to own any definite share in the joint property which descended from the common ancestor or was subsequently acquired with joint funds; each person interested in it had his expenses defrayed out of joint funds; and the entire property was managed by some male member of the family. Muharram, Dihu, Wazir and Noori Mian successively managed the business and the property. The family became very prosperous during the management of Noori Mian, which lasted from 1902 to 1921, when he died leaving no less than three mills at three different places which yielded considerable income to the family. The gist of the plaintiffs' case is that the three sons of Hingan, their descendants and the heirs of such descendants constituted a joint family, similar in all respects to a joint Hindu family, with the difference that fresh interests were created not by birth but by death of those owning an interest, that there was commensality in mess, residence and business and that the entire property was joint and managed by the male co-owners on behalf of all interested in it. On these facts, according to the plaintiffs, the widow and sister of Ismail were entitled to 2|9ths of the entire property.

It is not disputed that some of the properties in question belonged to Dihu and his brothers and that Dihu's share therein devolved on his son Ismail, at any rate, in part. It is also not disputed that some other property, included in schedule A and acquired after Dihu's death, belonged to Ismail in common with Shukrullah, defendant No. 1, and others. The rest of the properties were acquired after the death of Ismail by Noori Mian, Shukrullah, defendant No. 1 and Khuda Bakhsh, defendant No. 2, who were the principal members of the family after the death of Ismail in 1907.

Apart from other defences, it was pleaded by the defendants that Mt. Zohra, the first plaintiff, relinquished all her rights which she might have had in the property left by her husband under an oral arrangement by which she accepted a small cash allowance of Rs.12 a month, besides Rs.610 in case she desired to go on a pilgrimage to Mecca. She did go on such pilgrimage and was paid that sum of money. If, therefore, the defendants' case as regards Mt. Jumman, the alleged daughter of Dihu, and the relinquishment by Mt. Zohra, plaintiff No. 1, be accepted, no other defence falls to be considered. They also pleaded that, according to a custom obtaining in the community of Iraqis, to which the family belongs, females, such as widows and daughters, are not entitled to inherit, being excluded by male collaterals. The pleas of limitation and adverse possession were also taken. It was further pleaded that, in view of the plaintiffs' allegations, the suit was virtually one for dissolution of partnership, and the only relief to which the plaintiffs were entitled was one for dissolution and rendition of accounts of partnership business, as to which their claim was barred by three years' rule of limitation. The most important part of the defence, however, relates to the acquisitions made after the death of Ismail. It is said that even if the plaintiffs be considered to be entitled to a share in the property which existed at the time of his death, they cannot have any right to what was acquired through the good management and personal exertion of Noori Mian and his male co-sharers.

We tried to ascertain from the learned counsel on either side particulars of the properties which existed at the time of Ismail's death but no definite information was forthcoming on that point. The learned counsel for the appellants threw the burden of giving particulars of the properties left by Ismail on the plaintiffs; while the learned counsel for the plaintiffs laid stress on the plaintiffs' allegation that every acquisition made since the earliest time was paid for out of the joint funds belonging to the three sons of Hingan, and after them to their descendants and heirs. According to the plaintiffs, any property acquired out of joint funds belonged, in the peculiar circumstances of the family, to all interested in such funds and the extent of their shares in any newly acquired property corresponded to their shares in the common fund. The principal contest between the parties has centred round the propositions of fact and law involved in the above allegations. Parties were at issue in the trial court on some other unimportant points arising out of their pleadings. The findings of the Subordinate Judge on those questions were not challenged in appeal. We have, therefore, not considered it necessary to refer to them in detail and have confined our narrative of the pleadings to the questions actually argued in appeal.

The learned judge found in favour of the plaintiffs on all the material questions on which issues were struck, and decreed the suit except as regards certain sums of money which the defendants were alleged to have misappropriated—a fact not borne out by the evidence.

As to whether Dihu left a daughter, Mt. Jumman, whether she was

CIVIL
1932 SHUKRULLAH
v.
ZUHRA BIBI
Niamat-ullah, J.

married to Rahimullah, plaintiff No. 3, and whether plaintiff No. 2 is the offspring of that union, the plaintiffs examined a number of witnesses. Most of them are members of the family, whose means of knowledge cannot be questioned. The learned Subordinate Judge has elaborately discussed the oral evidence produced by both the parties and the circumstances bearing on that question. He arrived at a clear finding that Mt. Jumman was the daughter of Dihu, was married to Rahimulla and gave birth to Mt. Zulekha, plaintiff No. 2. The learned Subordinate Judge has given good reasons in support of his finding. Though the learned counsel for the appellant did not give up this part of the defence, he made no serious attempt to impugn the view taken by the learned Subordinate Judge. We are in entire agreement with the finding of the learned Subordinate Judge and the reasons on which it proceeds.

No argument was addressed to us as regards the extent of share claimed by the plaintiffs, assuming they are entitled to a share in the property in dispute.

[Their Lordships then discussed the evidence on the question whether, under a custom obtaining among the Iraqis generally and in this family in particular, widows, daughters and sisters were excluded from inheritance, and upheld the finding of the Subordinate Judge that the custom was not proved, and continued as follows:—]

On the main question in controversy between the parties there is sufficient documentary evidence from which the facts hereinafter narrated clearly appear. The three sons of Hingan lived in commensality, having business and property in which they had equal shares. None of them had any separate property or had dealings on his own account. There can be little difficulty in arriving at the conclusion that each had interest in the business and properties then existing. Muharram died in 1892, and his one-third share devolved on his heirs, viz., his three sons and two daughters (assuming the latter were his heirs.). The sons alone took an active part in the affairs of the family and business and to that extent they stepped into the shoes of Muharram. The position of Dehu as a sharer to the extent of one-third remained unaltered.

Dehu died in 1900, leaving his son Ismail and daughter, Mt. Jumman, who inherited respectively two-thirds and one-third in what belonged to Dehu. It cannot be ascertained precisely as to what property then existed; but it is clear from the evidence that Ismail took the place of the father as regards the actual participation and management of the business and that properties were acquired and business increased between 1900, when Dehu died and 1907, when Ismail died, with the help of joint assets existing at the time of Dehu's death, the profits of the subsequently added property and of the increased business and the personal exertions of the male members, including Ismail. The only contribution which can be said to have been made by Mt. Jumman was that her one-third share in the property and business as they existed at Dehu's death was also employed in making fresh acquisitions. She was maintained by the male members of the family and married to Rahimullah, plaintiff No. 2. It is a question in the case whether, in these circumstances, she became entitled to all the acquisitions made between 1900 and 1907. After Ismail's death, no male descendant of Dehu was left. Ismail's heirs were his widow, Mt. Zohra, his sister, Mt. Jumman, and his uncle, Shukrullah, defendant No. 1. Actual possession and management thenceforward remained with Shukrullah, defendant No. 1, Noori Mian and Wazir Ali, after whose death in 1902 his place was taken by his son Khuda Bakhsh, defendant No. 2. We have no means of ascertaining that property existed at the time of Ismail's death in 1907, but there is no doubt that considerable addition was made to that property and the business greatly increased both as regards its volume and diversity—no less than three sugar mills and one colliery were being worked at the time of Noori Mian's death in 1921. It is not possible to say to what extent the prosperity of the business and increase of joint capital and property was due to skill and personal exertions of the male members; but there is no doubt that the assets as they were at the time of Ismail's death, which were themselves enlargements of those existing at Dehu's death, formed the nucleus, and that no separate funds belonging to any one individual were employed. The female heirs of Dehu and Ismail claim the same share in acquisitions as in the nucleus, though it is not disputed that they had no hand in the management and were not in possession of any property except so far that they might be regarded as in constructive possession through their male relatives, and that the only extent to which they were in the enjoyment of the usufruct was that they were maintained like all other females of the house, regardless of the fact whether they had any interest in the property. A noticeable example of the manner in which the female heirs were content to be treated was that Musammat Zohra, plaintiff No. 1, who had inherited part of her husband's property, lived, if anything, in a less expensive style than Noori Mian's wife, who had no interest in the property during her husband's lifetime. Musammat Zohra received from Rs.12 to Rs.16 a month at different times for her personal expenses besides food from common kitchen and clothing. As regards Musammat Jumman, the sister of Ismail, the evidence does not show how and where she lived after her marriage with Rahimullah, plaintiff No. 3. She died about three years after Ismail, leaving as her heirs her husband, plaintiff No. 3, and an infant daughter, now plaintiff No. 2. The latter lived with Ismail's widow, plaintiff No. 1. Rahimullah does not appear to have had any possession or enjoyment even of the kind the female heirs had. He examined a number of witnesses mainly in proof of the fact that he had been married to Musammat Jumman, who was the daughter of Dehu, (a fact which had been denied by the defendants) and that Musammat Zulekha was born of that union; but he did not give his own evidence which would have given us an idea of the manner in which he was in the enjoyment of the property. Similarly all that we know about Musammat Zulekha, plaintiff No. 2 is that she lived with Musammat Zohra, plaintiff No. 1 and was maintained by male members of the family.

It is important to note that the male members who had the actual control of the business and property, did not spend more than what was necessary to maintain themselves in the style which is usual in their society. After defraying all household expenses incurred in maintaining males and females living in the family, the savings were invested in making fresh acquisitions. There was no accounting or division of profits at any time. Most of the valuable properties stood in the name of Noori Mian.

Soon after the death of Noori Mian in December 1921, the harmonious relations which previously existed were disturbed. On January 10, 1922, a document, styled as a deed of partnership, was executed by Shukrullah, Khuda Bakhsh and the widow and adult daughters of Noori Mian, in which it was recited that the entire property existing at the time had been acquired with joint funds, that the share of Shukrullah was 8 annas, that of Khuda Bakhsh 4 annas and that of Noori Mian 4 annas. It was also stated that "there is no custom of the widow and daughters inheriting the property." On the same date, a 'mukhtar-namah' was executed by the same persons in favour of Khuda Bakhsh. These were followed by a deed of relinquishment executed by Musammat Halima and Salima, the sisters of Noori Mian. They declared that, under a custom obtaining in their brotherhood, females did not inherit and that accordingly they did not claim the property left by their father, Moharram, and their brother, Noori Mian. Thereafter two daughters and the widow of Noori Mian instituted, in the court of the Subordinate Judge of Gorakhpur, suit No. 431 of 1922, impeaching the deed of partnership as fraudulent and claiming possession of the whole property which was alleged to belong to Noori Mian alone. Shukrullah and Khuda Bakhsh filed a written statement, alleging that the property in dispute (then and now) jointly belonged to the male descendants of Hingan's sons and that their male descendants carried on "business and money-lending, etc., and increased them". The written statement proceeded to allege that females were excluded from inheritance by custom. In support of their allegations, they produced account books for a large number of years showing that the properties had been acquired with joint funds and that all the affairs of the family were joint, resembling in all material particulars those of a joint Hindu family. The litigation ended in a compromise, dated November 26, 1923, under which a 5 annas share was given to the widow and her two daughters, 1 anna 5 pie to Musammat Tagma, another daughter of Noori Mian by his first wife, 5 annas 4 pie to Shukrullah and 4 annas 3 pie to Khuda Bakhsh. This division completely ignored the heirs of Dihu and Ismail. The compromise, however, provided that > if any party to the suit or any other person brings a claim in respect of any portion of the property mentioned in this compromise and that claim be held by the court to be valid, defendants Nos. 1 to 3 (Shukrullah, Khuda Bakhsh and Musammat Tagma) shall be responsible to give or make payment in respect of that share and they will make good that deficiency in the share or penalty out of their own share.

Not long after the aforesaid compromise, the present suit was instituted on the allegations already stated. The plaintiffs have had a plain sailing case so far as facts are concerned, relying as they do on the written statements of the present contesting defendants in the earlier case and the account books they had filed. Indeed the plaintiffs' allegations are substantially the same as the defence in the previous case. Of course, they have had to meet the pleas of exclusion of females under the alleged custom, limitation and adverse possession, the onus of which lay on the defendants.

The admissions of the defendants and the accounts for nearly 30 years, supplemented by the oral evidence of Musammat Zohra, plaintiff No. 1, and a few other witnesses, clearly establish the facts stated in the above narrative. The learned Subordinate Judge has made a careful analysis of the documentary evidence and the account books in reference to undivided properties, and has shown in detail that they were acquired out of joint funds. His findings on that part of the case have not been subjected to any criticism. On the other hand, the learned counsel for the plaintiff respondents took us through a large number of entries in the accounts which establish the facts we have already noted.

[Their Lordships then discussed the oral evidence on this part of the case and proceeded:—]

From the entire evidence and the probabilities of the case we are led to the conclusion that the joint state of the family as it existed on the death of Dehu Mian and Ismail continued up to the time when Noori Mian died, that the female heirs, who were content to live under the protection of the male members of the family, did not consider it necessary to assert or even to make a mention of their rights in the property and that the male members treated the female heirs in the same manner as they had done in the lifetime of Dihu and Ismail, defraying their usual expenses and allowing them to live in comfort like their own immediate female relatives. They hoped to retain possession of the entire property without giving any opportunity to the female heirs to put forward their claim to the property as it was when Dehu or Ismail died or to subsequent additions. It was not till after the death of Noori Mian that dissensions arose in the family and his own widow and daughters claimed the entire property as their own and succeeded in getting a part of it. The widow and other heirs of Ismail were alarmed by the manner in which the property was divided between Shukrullah and Khuda Bakhsh on the one hand and Noori Mian's heirs on the other. They were helpless in the matter of obtaining a formal recognition of their right, and sought the aid of financiers. The introduction of the assignee plaintiffs, who hail from Basti, is unfortunate, but was perhaps unavoidable. The contesting defendants are to a great extent responsible for the introduction of this foreign element in their affairs. They could have avoided this result if they had more tactfully handled the situation. Howsoever much we may dislike speculative transactions like the one before us, in which half of the plaintiffs' rights have been conveyed to strangers, the rights of the parties, if established, must be given effect to.

Sir Tej Bahadur Sapru, who argued the case for the appellants with great skill and ability and brought under contribution a large number of decided cases, made a vigorous attack on the frame of the suit and the ratio decidendi adopted by the learned Subordinate Judge. It is pointed out that the plaintiffs claim a share in the property in dispute on the ground that Hingan's descendants formed a joint family analogous to a joint Hindu family and that for that reason the plaintiffs, who claim to be members of such family, are entitled to certain shares in all properties belonging to the family at any given time. The plaintiffs' case, as gathered from the plaint and their counsel's statement on oral pleading, has been thus summarised by the learned Subordinate Judge:—

CIVIL

1932

SHUKRULLAH
v.
ZUHRA BIBI

Niamat-ullah, J.

> The case for the plaintiffs is that the common ancestor of plaintiffs Nos. 1 to 3 and the defendants, named Hingan, had a joint business with his three sons, named Moharram, Dehu and Shukrullah, alias Shukru Mian. Shukrullah is defendant No. 1 and Abdul Majid, defendant No. 10, is his son. The other defendants are descendants of Moharram and plaintiffs Nos. 1 to 3 represent the branch of Dihu. The case for the plaintiffs is that even after the death of Hingan, his 3 sons and after them their descendants and heirs continued that joint family business. That joint business flourished and out of the income of that joint business the family acquired zamindari property, sugar and rice mills, collieries and carried on trade in money lending, silver, gold and other business. Hingan and his descendants all lived and messed together and behaved like a Hindu joint family. They acquired properties indiscriminately in the name of one or the other members of the family out of the joint funds, and their personal expenses were met out of the joint funds according to their actual requirements. There was no specific share in the business, no division of profits from the time of Hingan up to the year 1921, when the family dispute arose. In short, according to the plaintiffs, the plaintiffs Nos. 1 to 3 are co-owners of all the properties in dispute along with the defendants and they have a right to sue for joint possession as the defendants now interfere with their possession.

The learned Judge proceeded to state the defendant's case as follows:—

> The case for the defendants is that no doubt Hingan and his three sons had a joint business but it was not a joint family business but of partnership within the meaning of Section 253 of Contract Act and therefore the plaintiffs' remedy was in a suit for dissolution of the partnership and not for joint possession. The defendants also plead that besides the joint business there was some business of individual members of family and the plaintiffs, therefore, could not, in any sense, claim any share in the property acquired out of that business.

The question emerging from these pleadings which the learned Subordinate Judge set down for trial is > if the property in dispute is a joint family property, or it is a case of partnership contended for by the defendants.

After discussing a number of authorities, he observed that

> It will appear that none of the cases relied on by the defendants are any authority for holding that a Mohammedan family cannot live and trade on the analogy of a joint Hindu family. They are no authorities for holding that such a joint Mohammedan family cannot acquire joint properties, the succession to which will be regulated by the law of inheritance under Mohammedan law.

On a consideration of oral and documentary evidence which led the learned Subordinate Judge to the conclusion that Hingan's sons and their male descendants carried on business jointly, had a common mess and residence and acquired the properties out of joint funds, he held > that the property in suit is joint property of the parties, being joint family properties of the descendants of Hingan and their heirs.

It is clear to us that a so-called Mohammedan joint family cannot be treated as a legal unit having a corporate existence and as such possessing property. In our opinion, for the determination of the rights of individuals supposed to belong to it any analogy drawn from the joint Hindu family system is misleading. The entire conception of a joint Hindu family, its constitution and the rights and obligations of its component parts are foreign to a Muslim joint family, which implies nothing more than a group of individuals living and messing in commensality and owning property and carrying on business jointly. The position of total strangers combining their labour and capital in acquiring property and agreeing to live and mess together will not materially differ from that of a joint Mohammedan family, if all other conditions are identical. A joint Hindu family, both under the Bengal and Benares law, is described by Mayne as a "family, consisting of males and females, constitutes a sort of corporation, some of the members of which are co-parceners, that is, persons who on partition would be entitled to demand a share, while others are only entitled to maintenance. In a so-called Mohammedan joint family there are many males and females who have no interest in the joint property, and on the other hand there may be many who have an interest in the joint property but are no part of the family, e.g., married daughters of a deceased male co-owners. It is only in a loose sense that property is said to belong to a joint Mohammedan family. The law does not recognise a Mohammedan joint family as a legal entity, and has not provided rules applicable to the family as such. The rights of its individual members, both as regards the original joint property and its subsequent enlargements, must be determined by an appeal to general law. Jointness in mess, residence and property and acquisition by one member in his own name with joint funds will go a long way in attracting the application of those provisions of law which entitle a person to a beneficial interest in the property acquired by another. In the generality of cases in which Mohammedans belonging to the same family live in commensality, own property as tenants in common, carry on business jointly and make fresh acquisitions, their rights and those of their heirs can be determined with reference to express or implied agreement, relation of principal and agent, partnership, constructive trust or the like. In support of each claim it must be shown that it is justified by some known principle of law. Mere a priori conclusions, based on the analogy derived from the law applicable to joint Hindu families, if they cannot be shown to be in conformity with a definite rule applicable to Mohammedans, cannot be accepted.

The fact that all the male descendants of Hingan had joint residence, mess, property and business for several generations and made acquisitions from time to time with joint funds is not conclusive as regards the right of every heir to every propositus, however high, in the properties subsequently acquired by the surviving male members with the aid of the profits of the property left by the ancestor. There may be circumstances which entitle an heir to no more than his share of the property as it was at the time of his ancestor's death. On the other hand, the surviving members may so intermeddle with the estate of their deceased partner or co-owner as to make themselves liable to such heir for not only his share of the property as it existed at the time of his ancestor's death but also to profits accruing therefrom or to acquisitions made therewith.

A large number of cases were quoted by both sides in course of the arguments, some of which merely lay down that there is no presumption, in cases of Mohammedan joint families, that a property acquired by one of the members in his own name was acquired with the aid of joint funds. The plaintiffs conceded this proposition of law, and established by definite evidence that such of the properties now in dispute as were acquired after the death of Dehu or Ismail were acquired with joint funds and that none of the members of the family had any source of income other than the joint business and property.

The learned advocate for the appellants criticised some of the observations of Sadasiva Aiyar, J. in Hussain Saib v. Hasan Saib[1]. The parties to that case belonged to a Navayat family described as > new-comers, being the descendants of a party of Arab merchants who migrated to Bhatkal near Goa some 770 years ago and took for their wives converts from the Hindu Konkanis of the place.

The learned Judge referred with approval to the case of Vellai Mira Ravuttan v. Mira Moidin Ravuttan[2] in which it was held that > Although the technical rules of Hindu Law are not applicable to families of this tribe, the same presumption must arise from facts of a similar kind and the same principle must be equally held to govern cases of family partnership among Hindus and Mohammedans.

Observations occurring in the judgment of Spencer, J. in a case which he decided as District Judge were also referred to by Sadasiva Aiyer, J. with approval. They are as follows:—

> All the circumstances of this case show that living in the midst of a country where Hindu usages prevail, and being probably also of Hindu origin, the family has been following the Hindu usage in practice, with regard to joint living and joint enjoyment of property. In this state of things, the courts have a discretion to apply such of the rules and presumptions of Hindu Law which are dictated by the circumstances of the case.

Sadasiva Aiyer, J. himself remarked:—

> I, therefore, venture to think that Sections 241, 249 and 253 (Clause 10) and similar sections of the Contract Act may not be inapplicable to the business carried on by a Navayat family as a family business though the principle of survivorship and that of right by birth ought not to be imported in considering the rights and liabilities of the persons to whom the business of a Navayat family has descended as heirs. I think that in most other respects the principles and considerations applying to the business of Hindu family firms can be made applicable.

With great respect, we are unable to accept the law so widely laid down in the above passages which appear to us to enunciate some propositions which cannot be supported with reference to the law applicable to Mohammedans.

Where male members of a family live in union so as to have jointness in mess, business and property, there can be little difficulty in tracing their relations inter se to an implied agreement which clothes each with a representative capacity in reference to his co-sharers. Each must be deemed to be acting not only for himself but for all in his dealings with regard to joint property and business. Accordingly any acquisitions made by any one member should be considered to have been made by all through the one who actually made it. In such a case, as among partners, each is the manager or agent of the others. The position is not so simple as regards the heirs whose rights are not recognized by any overt act of the surviving male members. The case of female and minor heirs and those not living on the spot, all of whom belong to this category, rests on a somewhat different footing. Their right to share subsequent additions can arise only if the circumstances are such that the male members can be considered to have continued the business and held the joint property on their behalf or in some way made themselves trustees for them in making fresh acquisitions so as to be liable to hold for them part of the resultant benefit.

[1] 31 I. C. 927

[2] 2 M. H. C. R. O. 414

In our opinion, the rights of plaintiffs Nos. 1 to 3 should be determined in the light of the foregoing remarks, and we are unable to conclude in their favour straightaway on the finding that the properties and the various business concerns in dispute were acquired with the profits accruing from the property left by Dehu and Ismail.

The defendants were at pains to establish by oral evidence that after the death of each male member in the family a fresh agreement of partnership was entered into among the surviving members and the male heirs of the deceased. The learned Subordinate Judge has rightly disbelieved the evidence on which such express agreement was sought to be established. At the same time, we see no difficulty in holding that the three sons of Hingan, who carried on business jointly and had a joint purse, were members of a partnership. Section 239, Indian Contract Act, defines partnership as "the relation which subsists between persons who have agreed to combine their property, labour and skill in some business and to share the profits between them." That the sons of Hingan had combined "their property, labour and skill" can admit of no doubt. That the understanding was that the profits would be shared by them equally is also clear. Under S. 253 of the same Act, the death of a partner has the effect of putting an end to the partnership. On the death of Muharram in 1892, the old partnership should be deemed to have come to an end and a fresh partnership to have come into existence between the surviving members and male heirs of Muharram. Similarly on Dehu's death, Ismail should be considered to have joined the partnership. After Ismail's death, the remaining male members of the family, who had an interest in the joint property, should be deemed to have agreed to form a pratnership among themselves. If there had been no other complications, the rights of the heirs to each deceased partner would have been governed by the provisions of S. 241 of the Indian Contract Act, which provides that > in the absence of any contract to the contrary, property left by a retiring partner or the representative of a deceased partner to be used in the business is to be considered a loan.

If the heirs of a deceased male member agreed to become partners, they themselves became partners. If not, their share in the business is to be considered a loan. There is no evidence in this case which can justify the conclusion that the female heirs to each deceased male became partners by virtue of any agreement, express or implied. In these circumstances, if the rights of the parties rested on the theory of partnership, the defence might have prevailed and the plaintiffs' right would be limited to their shares in the business and properties as they were on the death of Dehu and Ismail. But the matter cannot be allowed to rest on that footing in view of the position of the parties and the conduct of the male members after the death of Dehu and Ismail. When Dehu died, his heirs were Ismail and his daughter Jumman. It was open to the surviving male members of the family to wind up the business and to pay off Jumman by valuing her interest in her father's share in the business. They preferred to carry on the business, retaining the entire assets, including her share. In this connection, Section 88 of the Indian Trusts Act seems to us to be fully applicable. It runs thus:—

> Where a trustee, executor, partner, agent, director of a company, legal advisor, or other person bound in a fiduciary character to protect the interests of another person, by availing himself of his character gains for himself any pecuniary advantage, or where any person so bound enters into any dealings under circumstances in which his own interests are, or may be, adverse to those of such other person and thereby gains for himself a pecuniary advantage he must hold for the benefit of such other person the advantage so gained.

It is argued by the learned advocate for the defendants that the surviving male members cannot be considered to be trustees, executors, partners, agents, directors or legal advisors. This is true; but in our opinion they were > bound in a fiduciary character to protect the interests of the heirs to the deceased, as is shown by Illustration (f), which runs as follows:—

>
> A and B are partners. A dies. B, instead of winding up the affairs of the partnership, retains all the assets in the business. B must account to A's legal representative for the profits arising from A's share of the capital.

Reliance is placed on behalf of the defendants on Taylor v. Taylor[3] for the proposition that there is no fiduciary relation between the heir of a deceased partner and the surviving partners. It may be true that the mere fact that one person is an heir to a deceased partner will not clothe the surviving partners in relation to him with a fiduciary character; but taken with the additional circumstance referred to in S. 88, Illustration (f), namely, that the surviving partners, instead of winding up the business of the partnership, retained all the assets of the business and continued it, the position becomes materially different. This is specially so in a case like the one before us in which the female heirs, who are all " pardah nashin" ladies, lived under the protection of the surviving co-sharers of Dehu and Ismail. Section 88 is, however, applicable in regard to the business jointly carried on by the male members of the family and may not in terms apply to the immovable property and its profits; but as to such properties it cannot be disputed that they were co-owners, and the same result is arrived at by applying the provisions of S. 90 of the Indian Trusts Act, which provides that:—

> Where a co-owner or other qualified owner of any property, by availing himself of his position as such, gains an advantage in derogation of the rights of the other persons interested in the property, or where any such owner, as representing all persons interested in such property, gains any advantage, he must hold, for the benefit of all persons so interested, the advantage so gained, but subject to repayment by such persons of their due share of the expenses properly incurred, and to an indemnity by the same persons against liabilities properly contracted, in gaining such advantage.

The combined effect of Sections 88 and 90 of the Indian Trusts Act is that the share of Mt. Jumman in the business and property left by Dehu having been retained by the male members of the family, who continued the business and availed themselves of the dominant position they had in relation to the business and property under their control, they must hold for the benefit of Mt. Jumman any profits accruing from such business or the advantage gained by the use of their position. It is argued in reference to Section 88, Illustration (f), of the Indian Trusts Act that the heir is entitled to the "profits" accruing from his share of the assets and not to acquisitions made therewith. We are unable to agree with this contention. The profits were merely converted into other properties or were invested in the business and it is open to the person entitled to such profits to claim the improved business and the properties acquired with their aid. Moreover, the terms of Section 90 clearly entitle the female heirs to any 'advantage' gained by her co-owners by availing themselves of their position as such. It cannot be doubted that it was in derogation of the rights of such heirs that the advantage was gained. The profits of their shares in the business and the property were made use of for improving the business and making acquisitions instead of being paid to them. In this view, Mt. Jumman was entitled to her share under the Muhammedan Law not only in the property and the business as they were at the time of Dehu's death but also in the improvements and acquisitions made between the time of Dehu's death and that of Ismail in 1907.

---

[3] [1873] 28 L. T. 189

On the death of Ismail, his widow and his sister inherited a portion of what belonged to him. It should be noted that the sister had already a share by virtue of her position as the heir to her father Dehu. For the reasons already given, Mt. Zohra, the widow, should be considered to be entitled not only to a share in the properties and business as they were at the time of Ismail's death but also to a similar share in the improvements and acquisitions made after Ismail's death up to the time when Noori Mian died. Mt. Jumman should be considered to have likewise obtained an interest in the improvements and acquisitions made up to the time of her own death in 1910. Her rights devolved upon her daughter, plaintiff No. 2, and husband, plaintiff No. 3. The nature of the rights of plaintiff No. 2, who was an unmarried girl living with the plaintiff No. 1 under the protection of the defendants, is the same as that of her mother or of Mt. Zohra. Rahimullah, plaintiff No. 3, was somewhat differently situated but we think Section 88, Illustration (f), and Section 90 Indian Trusts Act, equally apply to him. It was open to the defendants to settle his claim by payment of cash equivalent of his share, or otherwise, they however preferred to retain his share of the assets in the business and employed the profits of his share of the assets with the rest of the funds in their hands in improving the business and making fresh acquisitions.

It is pointed out that the skill and personal efforts of the defendants, no less than the capital invested in the business, contributed to the prosperity of the business and to the acquisitions of new properties. It was open to the defendants to charge for the personal services a reasonable remuneration. They did not, however, do so and cannot now insist on account being taken of their personal services which it is impossible to assess in terms of money or a share in the improvement and acquisitions.

The learned advocate for the appellants objected to the decision of the case being made to rest on the provisions of Sections 88 and 90 of the Indian Trusts Act, which were referred to in course of the arguments. It is contended that the plaint and the counsel's statement in pleadings are absolutely silent as regards that aspect of the case. It is true the plaintiff's claim was based solely on the allegations that the property in dispute belonged to a joint family consisting of Hingan's descendants and their heirs and that, therefore, the plaintiffs were entitled to a share not only in the properties left by Dehu and Ismail but also in those subsequently acquired. We are, however, of opinion that all the facts necessary for the application of Sections 88 and 90 of the Indian Trusts Act are alleged in the pleadings. They might not have made allegations as regards the law rightly applicable to such facts. On the facts alleged by the plaintiffs being established, they are entitled to such reliefs as the law applicable to those facts entitles them to.

The only other question that remains to be considered is one of limitation and adverse possession. It is argued that the proper relief which the plaintiffs should have claimed was one of dissolution of partnership to which Art 106 of the Indian Limitation Act, providing a period of limitation of three years, would be applicable and that the plaintiffs cannot be allowed to circumvent the law of limitation by asking for joint possession. In our opinion if the plaintiffs are entitled to joint possession, as they claim, there can be no objection to the suit being so framed as to make a longer period of limitation applicable. On the frame of the suit as launched, Art. 106 of the Indian Limitation Act can have no application. The proper article applicable is Article 144, as to which it is said that the cause of action accrued to the plaintiffs more than 12 years before the institution of the suit. It appears that a suit was instituted by Shukru, Ismail and Islam against third persons for declaration of their right to certain immovable property. Ismail died during the pendency of the suit. The surviving plaintiffs or Noori Mian applied that Noori Mian be substituted for Ismail as his heir and legal representative. The defendants of that suit objected to Noori Mian being treated as "the sole heir of Ismail" and to Ismail's widow not being impleaded. Accordingly, Mt. Zohra was joined not as plaintiff but as a defendant. It is said that the male members who were plaintiffs in that case should be considered to have denied the right of the widow, and therefore, did not implead her as the legal representative of the deceased. We do not think that any denial of her right can be inferred from the proceedings above referred to. Noori Mian, though not an heir of Ismail, was set up as the legal representative, which term includes a person who intermeddles with the estate of a deceased person. The grounds on which the application for substitution was based and the reasons for not joining the widow do not appear from any of the certified copies taken from that record. In this state of the evidence, we cannot hold that the right of Ismail's widow as an heir was denied. Similarly the right of Mt. Jumman as the heir to her father or to her brother Ismail does not appear to have ever been called in question. The same remarks apply to Zulekha, plaintiff No. 2, and Rahimulla, plaintiff No. 3. Accordingly we hold that the plaintiffs' suit is not barred by limitation and that the defendants have failed to establish adverse possession for more than 12 years of the properties now in dispute.

The result of our findings is that the appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed

DHIRAJ LAL RAM PRASAD (Defendant)
versus
JACOB BEHRENS & SONS (Plaintiffs)*

Civil 1932 July 26

PULLAN, J. NIAMATULLAH, J.

Arbitration Act (IX of 1899), Sec. 19 and Sec. 32 Negotiable Instruments Act (XXVI of 1881)—C. I. F. contract—Bank endorses bills of exchange in favour of sellers—Suit based on accepted bills—When can be stayed—Legal position after acceptance.

Where in accordance with he terms of a C. I. F. contract, the sellers draw bills of exchange directing the purchasers to pay the invoice value of the goods to the Bank named in the bills and the purchasers accept the bills before maturity, the legal position is that the purchasers' liability to the sellers for the invoice value of the goods is discharged and a liability to the Bank under the bills is substituted therefor.

Where however the agreement between the parties empowers the sellers to claim the invoice value inspite of the acceptance of the bill, it is implied that if the sellers elect to sue for the invoice value on the basis of the original contract they would secure for the buyers immunity against any claim on the basis of the bill and, conversely, if the buyer's acceptance of the bill is enforced, they are absolved from their liability under the original contract.

Where the Bank endorsed the bills of exchange to the sellers and the sellers brought a suit based on accepted bills of exchange, and the purchasers made an application under Section 19 Arbitration Act (IX of 1899) for stay of suit on the ground that the agreement provided that disputes arising out of any contract entered into in connection with the agreement were to be referred to arbitration, held, that the plaintiffs (who did not avail themselves of the remedy reserved to them under the agreement of falling back on the original consideration) were in the position of the Bank and were suing as holders of the bills of exchange and the suit could not be stayed under Section 19 Arbitration Act as there was no agreement between the plaintiffs as holders and the defendants as acceptors of the bills of exchange containing any clause authorising a reference to arbitration.

FIRST APPEAL from an order of BABU RAJA RAM, First Additional District Judge of Cawnpore.

P. L. Banerji, I. B. Banerji and Ram Narain Verma for the appellant.
N. P. Asthana for the respondents.

The judgment of the Court was delivered by

NIAMATULLAH, J.—This is an appeal from an order of the First Additional Subordinate Judge of Cawnpore on an application by the Niamatullah, J.

---

*F. A. F. O. 32 of 1932

Civil

1932

Dhiraj Lal Ram Prasad v. Jacob Behrens & Sons

Niamat-ullah, J.

defendants-appellants under Section 19 of the Indian Arbitration Act for stay of a suit brought against the appellants-defendants by the plaintiffs. The plaintiffs are Sir Jacob Behrens and Sons of Manchester, England, and the defendants Dhiraj Lal Ram Prasad, cloth dealers in Cawnpore. These parties have entered into an agreement known as a C. I. F. contract, in the terms of which the defendants purchased cloth from the plaintiffs. Under this contract transactions are carried out in the following manner:—

The purchaser orders certain goods. The seller, after accepting the order, despatches the goods, at the same time drawing bills of exchange directing the purchaser to pay the Chartered Bank of Cawnpore a sum representing the cost of goods, freight and insurance, up to the arrival of the goods in India. The Bank tenders to the purchaser the bills of exchange, invoices, bills of lading and other documents. The purchaser accepts the bills of exchange and gives the necessary instructions for the clearance of the goods. The bills of exchange are then presented on maturity to the purchaser who makes the payment and receives delivery of the goods.

In the present case several orders for dhotis were placed with the plaintiff firm by the defendants, and the procedure outlined above was adopted until the time came for the defendants to honour their acceptances of the bills of exchange and take delivery of the goods. In each case the defendants refused to do so. At first they asked for an extension of time, and subsequently asked that the matter might be referred to arbitration in accordance with the terms of the agreement. Ultimately a suit was instituted for recovery of a sum of upwards of one lac of rupees due on the bills of exchange accepted by the defendants. The defendants thereupon made an application under Section 19 of the Indian Arbitration Act for stay of the suit. The Subordinate Judge dismissed this application on the following grounds:—

First, he held that this is a suit based on accepted bills of exchange, and is not a suit for goods delivered.

Secondly, he held that in a C. I. F. contract no question of arbitration can arise as in such contracts it is the duty of the buyer to pay the drafts drawn against shipment, and the only defence which he can take is that documents tendered were not proper documents. In other words no defence can be entertained without previous payment.

Thirdly, he held that no dispute had actually arisen which could be referred to arbitration; and Fourthly, he held that in any case if such a dispute could be said to have arisen, it had not been made within 30 days of the date of the acceptance of the bills of exchange, and therefore under the terms of the agreement could not be referred to arbitration.

Undoubtedly the learned Subordinate Judge was asked to give a decision on all these points, and arguments have been addressed to us also on all the matters dealt with in the judgment, but in our opinion the court should have confined itself strictly to a decision as to whether there was

Civil.
1932
Dhiraj
Lal
Ram Prasad
v.
Jacob
Behrens &
Sons
Niamat-ullah, J.

or was not an adequate reason for not allowing this application in the terms of Section 19 of the Arbitration Act. If the decision of the Subordinate Judge on the first point, to which we have referred above, is correct, it is not, in our opinion, necessary at this stage to give a decision on the other questions dealt with by him.

The agreement between the parties provides, inter alia:

> (a) If such firm offers are accepted by the sellers, they shall, after the despatch from Manchester of the goods, draw upon the buyers or the buyers indentors at sixty days' sight for the price so stated in such firm offer with documents attached through the National Bank of India Limited or such other bank as the sellers hereafter select or agree to.
>
> (b) Should the sellers, at the request of the buyers, draw any drafts on the buyers indentors the buyers shall be and remain liable as guarantors or sureties for the acceptance and payment of such drafts and the sellers shall hold and continue to hold the buyers and the buyers indentors equally liable.
>
> (c) The sellers shall also be entitled and remain entitled to recover the invoice value of the goods from the buyers whether or no the property in the goods has passed to the buyers and whether or no the drafts have been accepted.
>
> (d) Disputes of whatever nature arising out of any contract entered into in connection with this agreement including the question of the construction of such contract or of any trade usage governing the goods covered by such contract unless an amicable settlement can be arrived at must be referred to arbitration under the rules of the Delhi Piece Goods Association.

In the present case the bills of exchange directed the defendants to pay the invoice value to the Chartered Bank (which the plaintiffs selected as they could under the agreement). The defendants accepted the bills before maturity. The effect of such a transaction ordinarily is that the defendants' liability to the plaintiffs for the invoice value of the goods is discharged, and a liability to the bank under the bills is substituted therefor. The defendants could not be liable to both, that is, to the plaintiffs for the price of goods and to the bank for acceptance of the bills under Section 32 of the Negotiable Instruments Act which clearly provides that the acceptor before maturity of a bill of exchange is bound to pay the amount thereof at maturity according to the apparent tenor of acceptance. Clause (c), however, quoted above, (the numbering is our own, adopted for the sake of convenience), empowers the sellers to claim the invoice value in spite of the acceptance of the bill. It is, of course, implied that if the sellers elect to sue for the invoice value on the basis of the original contract they would secure for the buyers immunity against any claim on the basis of the bill and, conversely, if the buyers' acceptance of the bill is enforced, they are absolved of their liability under the original contract. But for Clause (c) the legal position would have been only this: after acceptance followed by maturity of the bill the buyers would have been liable only to the bank which alone would be be liable to the sellers according to the terms of the agreement between them, under which the sellers drew the bill of exchange in favour of the bank. The sellers have, however, reserved to themselves an alternative remedy of falling back on the original consideration. It is only if they avail themselves of this remedy and their claim is contested that a dispute will arise "out of a contract entered into in connection with this agreement" within the meaning of the arbitration clause quoted above (marked (d)). If, on the other hand, the suit is based on the bill and a dispute arises in such suit, it cannot be said to arise out of any contract between the parties "in connection with the agreement" but it arises between one of the parties to it and a third person in connection with the acceptance of the bill, a transaction collateral to but not arising out of the agreement. In our opinion the agreement clearly gives to the seller an option to sue for the price of goods, but this option has not been exercised, and the main argument addressed to us is that this is actually a suit for the price of goods. If it were so, no doubt in the terms of the agreement the buyer would be able to refer to arbitration any objection which he had to make as to the quality or quantity of the goods supplied, but we are not of opinion that this is in any sense a suit for the price of goods. It is in form and in substance a suit based upon the acceptance by the defendant firm of the bills of exchange. It was open to the plaintiffs to sue for the price of goods, but it was also open to them to avail themselves of their position as holders of the accepted and dishonoured drafts, and to enforce against the defendants the terms of Section 32 of the Negotiable Instruments Act, XXVI of 1881.

Mr. Banerji for the defendants-appellants has argued that the decision of the Subordinate Judge is entirely based upon a judgment of the Lahore High Court in Radha Bihari Diwan Singh v. G. B. Alexander[1], and he has shown that that decision, although to some extent in point, is based upon a contract containing a clause whereby the sellers bound themselves "to accept the draft on presentation and pay at maturity notwithstanding any objection they might have regarding or on account of any variation in the terms of the "Indent." There is no such clause in the present agreement, and for that reason we prefer to leave out of account the judgment of the Lahore High Court which has been relied on by the learned Subordinate Judge.

Our view in the case is as follows:—

The draft was drawn in favour of the Chartered Bank, and it was the Chartered Bank who had in the first instance a right to recover the sum due on the draft from the acceptor. Had the Bank sued on the acceptance, clearly the acceptors could not have pleaded that under an agreement between themselves and a third party, namely, the sellers of the goods, they had a right to refer the matter to arbitration. No question as to the nature of the goods arose between the present appellants and the Chartered Bank, and there was no agreement between them containing any clause authorising a reference to arbitration. The Chartered Bank endorsed the bills of exchange to the plaintiffs, and the plaintiffs in bringing this suit on the basis of the bills of exchange are in the position of the Chartered Bank, and therefore entitled to frame their suit accordingly. Their position in this respect is the same as that of a total stranger to whom the

---

[1] 2 Lah. 335

CIVIL 1932
DHIRAJ LAL RAM PRASAD
v.
JACOB BEHRENS & SONS
Niamat-ullah, J.

Bank might endorse the bills. A suit brought by them for the price of goods will bring into operation the arbitration clause of the agreement between themselves as sellers and the defendants as buyers. But there is no agreement and no arbitration clause which can come into force as between the plaintiffs as holders and the defendants as acceptors of the bills of exchange.

In our opinion on this finding alone the plaintiffs' application to refer the dispute to arbitration under Section 19 of the Arbitration Act should have been dismissed. The effect of such dismissal is that the defendants would be at liberty to defend the suit in the court of the Subordinate Judge on such grounds as they may be entitled to take. They can there raise the plea allowed to them by Section 43 of the Negotiable Instruments Act that there has been a failure of consideration. It is also open to them to institute their own suit against the plaintiffs for any compensation to which they may be entitled for the alleged breach of the agreement in that the plaintiffs are said to have sent dhotis which are not of agreed dimensions, if such a defence is not open to them in this suit, a question on which we express no opinion. Consequently we deprecate those findings of the Subordinate Judge which appear to cut off from the defendants the defence which they might raise in the trial of the suit in the court of the Subordinate Judge or in a suit of their own. These are the third and the fourth findings to which we have referred above. On one of these findings we cannot agree with the view taken by the judge, and we think it proper to set aside that finding. He has held that no dispute has arisen which could have been referred to arbitration had the arbitration clause of the agreement come into operation. In our opinion such a dispute has arisen. Before the filing of the suit the defendants complained that on information received from customers they had reasons to suppose that the dhotis supplied in these consignments were not in accordance with the specifications in the invoice. The Judge appears to have overlooked the fact that this is one of the matters which the defendants wished to refer to arbitration, and as they clearly put forward this claim before the suit was filed, it cannot be said that there was no dispute which could have been referred to arbitration under the agreement if the arbitration clause in the agreement had come into operation.

The Judge has also held that the objection, if made, was beyond time, having been made more than 30 days after the acceptance. In our opinion this is a matter which should not be decided in the present proceeding. It is true that there is a decision of a Bench of this Court in the case of Kedarnath Motilal v. Sukhamal, Bansidhar[2], which seems to hold that a decision by arbitrators on an objection raised beyond a period allowed for making such objections in an agreement is void, though one of the Judges expressed the opinion that the arbitrators themselves should decide the question whether the objection was or was not made within time. We do not think it necessary in these proceedings to express any opinion on this matter. We consider that the finding of the Subordinate Judge is premature and that this matter may

[2] I. L. R. 44 All. 481

CIVIL
1932
DHIRAJ LAL RAM PRASAD
v
JACOB BEHRENS & SONS
Niamat-ullah, J.

be reopened if parties wish to do so in the trial of the suit or in another suit. We consider that at the present stage the duty of the Subordinate Judge, and therefore our own duty, was merely to decide whether this suit should be stayed in order that the matter may be referred to arbitration under the agreement between the parties or not. In our view no case for reference has been made out and the suit is therefore one which must be heard on its merits as a suit based on the acceptance of a bill of exchange. We do not wish to record any finding or to support any finding which might preclude the defendants from setting up any defence in the written statement now to be filed which is open to them in a suit of this nature, and we accordingly set aside all those findings of the Subordinate Judge, other than the finding which we affirm, that no reference to arbitration can be made in the terms of the agreement between the parties in the present suit as framed. Subject to this observation we dismiss this appeal with costs.

Appeal dismissed

CIVIL
1932
July 11
MUKERJI, J.
BENNET, J.

SAHU RAM KISHORE (Applicant)
versus
CHIRANJI LAL (Opposite party)*

Civil Procedure Code, Sec. 145—Application by plaintiff in a pending suit for stay of sale in execution of a decree—Sale stayed on appellant filing a bond in plaintiff's suit—Whether decree-holder can execute decree against appellant.

Where on the application of the plaintiff in a pending suit, a sale in execution of a decree was stayed pending the disposal of the plaintiff's suit, on an undertaking being given by the present appellant by execution of a bond filed in the plaintiff's suit, that if the plaintiff's suit was dismissed and the decree-holder suffered any loss, the loss might be made good from certain specified properties of the appellant. The plaintiff's suit was dismissed and the decree-holder, who had suffered a small loss, proceeded to execute the decree against the appellant, held, (1) that the decree could not be executed against the appellant as the undertaking was given in the plaintiff's suit and not in the execution proceedings relating to the decree sought to be executed; (2) that Sec. 145 C. P. C. was inapplicable to the present case.

Subbaraya Pillai v. Sathanatha Pandaram, 48 I. C. 940 followed.

EXECUTION FIRST APPEAL from a decree of MAULVI S. NAWAB HASAN, Subordinate Judge of Aligarh.

G. Agarwala, S. K. Dar and Gopi Nath Kunzru for the appellant.

Panna Lal for the respondent.

The judgment of the Court was delivered by

Mukerji, J.

MUKERJI, J.—All the necessary facts of this case could not be discovered when the appeal was before us on a former occasion, and we had to adjourn the arguments for summoning of records.

The facts materially are briefly these. One Chiranji Lal, the respondent before us, had a mortgage decree against Keshab Deo and others, being decree No. 424 of 1920, which was made final on August 20, 1921. To this suit one Gauri Shankar was a party. Gauri Shankar for some reason with which we are not concerned filed a suit No. 514 of 1922 and made an application for an injunction directing that the sale fixed for January 18, 1923 should not be held at the instance of the decree-holder, Chiranji Lal, pending the disposal of the suit. The court ordered that if Gauri Shankar furnished security to the amount of Rs.5,000, the sale should be stayed. An undertaking was given by the appellant before us, one Ram Kishore, by execution of a bond, dated January 29, 1923, that if the suit of Gauri Shankar was dismissed and Chiranji Lal suffered any loss, the loss might be made good from certain specified properties of Ram Kishore. This undertaking was given and the bond was filed in Suit No. 514 of 1922 instituted by Gauri Shankar but not in the course of the execution proceedings in decree No. 424 of 1920. Gauri Shankar's suit was heard and the execution proceedings in decree No. 424 of 1920 were stayed. Gauri Shankar's suit failed both in the court of first instance and ultimately in the High Court, on November 9, 1928. Chiranji Lal thereafter took out execution of the decree No. 424 of 1920 and got the property sold twice. The first sale that was held on December 5, 1924 was for Rs.68,000, but the sale was set aside and the sale that was ultimately held on March 3, 1926 was for Rs.55,000 only. The result was that the money received by the sale was not enough to satisfy the decree in its entirety. A small balance of Rs.1,000 and odd was left and Chiranji Lal obtained a personal decree against the judgment-debtors for the balance due. This decree he could not successfully execute because the judgment-debtors had nothing out of which the decree-holder could be paid.

---

*E. F. A. 17 of 1931

Thereupon Chiranji Lal proceeded to execute decree No. 424 of 1920 against Ram Kishore.

Ram Kishore's objections were many. One was that the decree-holder suffered no loss and he was not liable to pay anything. Another ground was that the decree could not be executed against him, at any rate, by sale of the property mortgaged.

Both the points which did not find favour with the court below have been repeated here. In our opinion the first point has no force. It is true that if the first sale had held good, it would have wiped out the entire debt and there would have been no occasion for Chiranji Lal to ask for the recovery of the small sum that remains unpaid. But it was no fault of Chiranji Lal that the sale was set aside at the instance of the judgment-debtors. There can be no doubt that the delay due to Gauri Shankar's suit resulted in an increase of the interest on the decretal amount and the interest for the period of 18 months and 25 days during which the suit was pending ought to be made good by Ram Kishore. We say this without prejudice to the merits of the case that may be hereafter instituted by Chiranji Lal against Ram Kishore.

The next point is whether the decree No. 424 of 1920 may be executed against Ram Kishore. We are of opinion that it cannot be. The undertaking that was given was given in Suit No. 514 of 1922, and there is nothing on the record of the proceedings in suit No. 424 of 1920 by which any liability may be fixed on Ram Kishore whether the liability be personal or against his property.

The language of Section 145 has been relied upon by the learned counsel for the respondent. But, in our opinion, it does not help him. Section 145 is divided into three clauses and the liability is imposed on a person who has become liable as a surety. In the case before us Ram Kishore did not undertake to perform any decree or any part thereof. All that he said was that he would compensate the decree-holder in case the suit of Gauri Shankar was dismissed. The amount of his liability has to be computed. Further Gauri Shankar did not even appear in the execution of the decree No. 424 of 1920. So far as the record of that suit goes, including execution proceedings, he is a perfect stranger. Clause (b) does not apply for obvious reasons. Clause (c) again does not apply, because Ram Kishore has not made himself liable for payment of any money under decree No. 424 of 1920 or in any proceeding consequent on suit No. 424 of 1920. As we have said, Ram Kishore is entirely a stranger both to the suit No. 424 of 1920 and to its execution proceedings. If the undertaking given by Ram Kishore in suit No. 514 of 1922 could bring him in as a surety in execution of decree No. 424 of 1920, he might as well be treated as a surety in execution of suit No. 424 of 1920 if he had given a private undertaking to Chiranji Lal by execution of a bond in his favour. It can never be argued that in such a case Ram Kishore would have been liable. In Subbaraya Pillai v. Sathanatha Pandaram[1], a bond outside the court had been given by a surety to the decree-holder, and it was held (reversing the decree of a learned Judge of the Madras High Court) that the liability did not attach and the decree could not be executed against the surety. We agree with this decision.

For the reasons given above, we allow the appeal, set aside the execution order of the court below and dismiss the application for execution as against the appellant Ram Kishore with costs throughout.

Appeal allowed

---

[1] 48 I. C. 940

Civil

1932

May 5

King, J.
Thom, J.

KANIZ FATMA (Plaintiff)
versus
YAD HUSAIN AND OTHERS (Defendants)*

Civil Procedure Code, Sec. 11—Rule of res judicata as between co-defendants —Conflict of interest between co-defendants latent—One co-defendant did not defend suit—Whether Rule applicable.

A house was bought by one K in the name of his wife. K's brother brought a suit claiming his share in the house on the allegation that the property belonged to K. The defendants to the suit were K's wife's brother's children and K's daughter. K's wife's brother's children were vitally interested in denying that the house belonged to K. (If the house belonged to K they would be entitled to a one anna share, whereas if the house belonged to K's wife, they would be entitled to an eight anna share). On the other hand it was to K's daughter's interest that the property should be held to have belonged to her father and not to her mother. (If the property belonged to her father, she was entitled by inheritance to a nine anna share whereas if the property belonged to her mother, she was entitled to eight annas only). K's daughter did not enter appearance in the suit but chose to stand by and let the plaintiff fight her battle. Held that the decision in the suit as to the ownership of the house operated as res judicata between the co-defendants. Munni Bibi v. Triloki Nath, 1931 A. L. J. 453 applied.

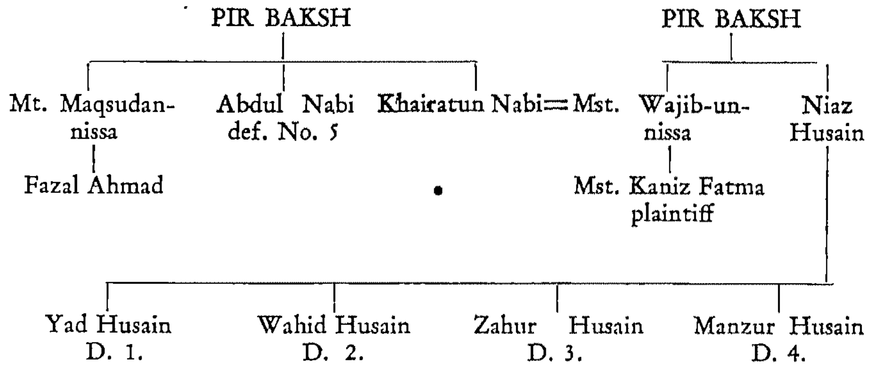
SECOND APPEAL from a decree of BABU KEDAR NATH MEHRA, Additional Subordinate Judge of Farrukhabad, confirming a decree of BABU SHYAM BEHARI LAL, Munsif of Farrukhabad at Fatehgarh.

M. Waliullah for the appellant.
Mukhtar Ahmad for the respondents.

The judgment of the Court was delivered by

King, J.

KING, J.—This is a plaintiff's appeal arising out of a suit for a declaration that the plaintiff is entitled to a 9 annas share out of certain property and that defendants 1 to 4 are entitled to a 1 anna share and defendant No. 5 to 4 annas. The relationship between the parties appears from the following pedigree:—



---

*S. A. 1642 of 1930

The plaintiff, Mst. Kaniz Fatima, claims that the property in suit belonged to her father Khairatun Nabi and that she is entitled to an 8 annas share as his heir. Out of the 2 anna share which passed by inheritance to her mother Mst. Wajib-un-nissa, she is entitled to a further 1 anna share as heir of her mother. She alleged that it had finally been decided between the parties, in suit No. 514 of 1924, that the property belonged to her father.

The principal defence set up by defendants 1 to 4 who are sons of Niaz Husain, the brother of Mst. Wajib-un-nissa, was that it had been decided in a previous suit No. 4 of 1924 in which they were the plaintiffs, as against Kaniz Fatma and her transferees as defendants, that the property belonged to Mst. Wajib-un-nissa and that they are entitled to a half share and that Mst. Kaniz Fatma is precluded by the rule of res judicata from impeaching the correctness of that decision.

It is admitted that the decision in suit No. 4 of 1924 operates as res judicata, but it is contended for the plaintiff that the later decision in suit No. 514 of 1924 also operates as res judicata between the parties. These two previous decisions are conflicting. In suit No. 4, the sons of Niaz Husain alleged that the property belonged to Mst. Wajib-un-nissa and they claimed as her heirs. It must be explained that the property in suit was bought by Khairatun Nabi in the name of his wife. In suit No. 514 a dispute arose as to whether Khairatun Nabi was the real owner and his wife was a mere benamidar, or whether his wife was the real owner. In suit No. 4 that question was not in dispute, since Mst. Kaniz Fatma as defendant did not dispute the allegation that the property belonged to her mother but she claimed title to the whole property by virtue of a gift from her mother. The defence failed and the sons of Niaz Husain succeeded in establishing their claim to a half share in the property as heirs of Mst. Wajib-un-nissa. When suit No. 4 was pending, Abdul Nabi, the brother of Khairatun Nabi, applied to be made a party, but his application was not granted and he was excluded from the suit. On October 22, 1924, Abdul Nabi instituted suit No. 514 against Kaniz Fatma and the four sons of Niaz Husain alleging that the property belonged to Khairatun Nabi and that he was entitled to a four anna share as heir of Khairatun Nabi. Kaniz Fatma never put in any appearance as defendant, but her co-defendants defended the suit on the ground that the property belonged to Wajib-un-nissa. It was finally decided between the parties that the property belonged to Khairatun Nabi. It is apparent therefore that the decisions in suits No. 4 and 514 are conflicting. The former was decided upon the understanding that the property belonged to Wajib-un-nissa, and the latter decided that the property belonged to Khairatun Nabi. The proposition of law is admitted that when there are two previous conflicting decisions, both of which operate as res judicata, then the decision of the latter date must prevail. It is conceded that the decision in suit No. 4 operates as res judicata; so the point for determination is narrowed down to the question whether the decision in suit No. 514 operates as res judicata.

Both the courts below have held that the later decision did not operate as res judicata. There were certain other points at issue between the parties, but we are not concerned with them in second appeal.

The plaintiff argues that the courts below are wrong in holding that the decision in suit No. 514 has not got the effect of res judicata. In that suit, the present plaintiff Mst. Kaniz Fatma and the sons of Niaz Husain (who are defendants 1 to 4 in the present suit) were arrayed upon the same side as co-defendants. There are many rulings which lay down the conditions requisite for applying the rule of res judicata as between co-defendants, but we need only refer to the very recent decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Munni Bibi v. Tirloki Nath[1]. Their Lordships laid down that when there is a question of applying the rule of res judicata between co-defendants, three conditions are requisite:

> (1) There must be conflict of interest between the defendants concerned; (2) it must be necessary to decide this conflict in order to give the plaintiff the relief he claims; and (3) the question between the defendants must have been finally decided.

We have to see then whether these conditions are fulfilled in the case of the co-defendants in suit No. 514.

In one sense it may be held that there was no conflict of interest between Kaniz Fatma and the sons of Niaz Husain in that suit. Kaniz Fatma never defended the suit. So there was no express and open conflict of interest betwen co-defendants as disclosed by conflicting pleadings. In another sense, however, there undoubtedly was a conflict of interest. The principal issue in the suit was "whether the property in suit belonged to Khairatun Nabi and he had purchased it benami in the name of his wife?" If this issue were decided in the affirmative (as it was) then, the decision would be rather in favour of Mst. Kaniz Fatma than against her. The case which she set up about a gift from her mother, had failed in suit No. 4 which was decided on October 24, 1924, two days after suit No. 514 had been instituted. If Kaniz Fatma was unable to rely upon the alleged gift and had to rely only upon her right of inheritance, then it was to her interest that the property should be held to have belonged to her father and not to her mother. If the property belonged to her father, she is entitled by inheritance to a 9 anna share. If the property belonged to her mother, she is entitled to 8 annas only. Probably for this reason, she was not interested in denying that the property belonged to her father and did not trouble to contest the suit. Her co-defendants, the sons of Niaz Husain, on the other hand, were vitally interested in denying that the property belonged to Khairatun Nabi. If that point were established, they would be entitled only to a 1 anna share, whereas if the property were proved to belong to Wajib-un-nissa, then they would be entitled to an 8 anna share, as held in suit No. 4. In our opinion therefore there was a conflict of interest between Kaniz Fatma and her co-defendants in suit No. 514, although the conflict between them was not open and express as Kaniz Fatma never defended the suit. The conflict of interest was, so to speak, latent and not apparent from conflicting pleadings.

Now the question arises whether a conflict of such a nature between co-defendants will satisfy the requirements of the rule of res judicata. In view of the Privy Council decision in Munni Bibi v. Tirloki Nath, we think the question must be answered in the affirmative. The main issue for determination in the previous suit which was under consideration in that case was whether B. Amar Nath was the owner of the disputed house. The plaintiff who held a money decree against Amar Nath sued for a declaration that the property in suit belonged to Amar Nath and was saleable in execution of his decree. He impleaded Kashi Dei and Mst. Kanno who were interested in denying that the house belonged to Amar Nath. Mst. Munni Bibi, the co-defendant, being the daughter of Amar Nath, was obviously interested in maintaining that the house belonged to Amar Nath. Munni Bibi however did not enter an appearance in the suit. So, the issue was fought between the plaintiff and the other defendants Kashi Dei and Mst. Kanno. Nevertheless, their Lordships held that the decision operated as res judicata between the co-defendants. Their Lordships remarked:

---

[1] 1931 A. L. J. 453

> It is true that the appellant (Munni Bibi) did not enter an appearance in the suit and it is also said that she was not a necessary party to it; but their Lordships do not regard either of these factors as really material. The appellant was at all events a proper party to the suit and had the right to be heard if she so desired. If she chose to stand by and let the plaintiff fight her battle, it could not affect her legal position.

These remarks are directly applicable to the facts of suit No. 514. Kaniz Fatma did not enter an appearance in the suit but chose to stand by and let the plaintiff Abdul Nabi fight her battle. But this could not affect her legal position. The issue regarding the ownership of the house was fought out between Abdul Nabi and her co-defendants and it was necessary to decide that issue in order to give relief to the plaintiff. The question was certainly finally determined; so, in our opinion, the decision of that issue is res judicata between the co-defendants of suit No. 514.

The trial court held that the decision in suit No. 514 did not operate as res judicata because it was not in respect of the same subject-matter which is in dispute in the present suit. We do not think the reasoning is sound. It is true that in suit No. 514 Abdul Nabi claimed a declaration only in respect of a 4 anna share in the property, but the share was an undivided one. The sons of Niaz Husain and Kaniz Fatma were all impleaded and we think it cannot be held that the same property was not in dispute merely because the plaintiff only claimed a declaration in respect of a 4 anna undivided share in that property. The lower appellate court does not hold that the decision in suit No. 514 does not operate as res judicata on the ground that it is not in respect of the same subject-matter but only on the ground that there was no conflict of interest between the co-defendants. It has been argued that Kaniz Fatma cannot be held to have had a conflict of interest with the sons of Niaz Husain in suit No. 514, because in the previous suit she never disputed the contention that the property belonged to her mother, and suit No. 4 was decided on the assumption that the property did belong to her mother. We do not think that Kaniz Fatma's pleadings in suit No. 4 constitute a valid reason for holding that there was no conflict of interest between her and the sons of Niaz Husain in suit No. 514. In suit No. 4, the parties did not raise the question whether the property

CIVIL

1932

KANIZ FATMA v. YAD HUSAIN

King, J.

belonged to Khairatun Nabi or to his wife, as they were both interested in asserting that it belonged to his wife. When Kaniz Fatma found that her defence regarding the alleged gift had failed, she may have been advised that it was to her interest not to contest the suit No. 514, since she would stand to gain if it were proved that the property belonged to her father. In any case, we hold that there was in fact a conflict of interest between Kaniz Fatma and her co-defendants and the decision regarding the ownership of the house must, in the light of the Privy Council ruling, be held to constitute res judicata between the co-defendants.

The appellant has also placed reliance upon Mahip Narain Pandey v. Nannu Singh[2]. In that case, the sons of Mahip Narain sued to set aside a sale of joint family property on the ground that the sale was without consideration. They impleaded their father Mahip Narain and the purchasers. Mahip Narain supported his sons, the plaintiffs, and asserted that no consideration had passed. The purchasers did not appear on the date fixed for hearing and the suit was decided against them ex parte. The purchasers then brought a suit against Mahip Narain for recovery of the sale consideration. It was held that the previous decision, namely, that no consideration passed, was res judicata as between the parties who were co-defendants in the previous suit. It is not clear from the report whether the purchasers had filed any written statement or had not entered any appearance from the outset. This ruling does no doubt support the plaintiff's contention, but not so clearly as the Privy Council decision.

On the other hand, we have been referred to Kamta Prasad v. Bhulai Misir[3]. This ruling however is distinguishable upon the facts, as there was no conflict of interest between the donor and donee who were co-defendants in the previous suit. It is expressly stated that both the donor and the donee successfully contested the suit.

The ruling in Kallu v. Fiaz Ali Khan[4] has also been cited, but this ruling is also distinguishable upon the ground that the issue raised in the second suit had not been necessary for determination in the previous suit for the purpose of giving relief to the plaintiff.

The case of Muhammad Ahmad v. Zahur Ahmad[5] has also been referred to on behalf of the respondents, but the facts of that case are not sufficiently clearly reported to justify us in relying upon it as supporting the respondents' contention. In the ruling cited, it is not clear who were the defendants other than Mohammad Ahmad in the suit of 1912. It is also not clear in what form the issue had been decided. Also it does not appear what interests Zahur Ahmad had in the property which was the subject-matter of Mohammad Ahmad's suit and it does not appear who were the other defendants. We cannot take this ruling as clearly supporting the respondents' contention. The case Rukmini v. Dhondo[6] relates to a question of res judicata between co-plaintiffs. It is moreover distinguishable on the ground that the question raised in the subsequent suit had not been necessary for decision in the previous suit for the purpose of giving relief against the defendants.

[2] I. L. R. 47 All 778

[3] A. I. R. 1927 All. 365

[4] 5 A. L. J. 367

[5] I. L. R. 44 All. 334

[6] I. L. R. 36 Bom. 207

In our opinion, the Privy Council decision is applicable to the facts of this case and we are clearly bound by its authority. The defendant-respondents are precluded from impeaching the correctness of the decision in suit No. 514 that the property belonged to Khairatun Nabi and the plaintiff was therefore bound to succeed. We accordingly allow the appeal, set aside the decree of the court below and decree the plaintiff's suit with costs throughout.

Appeal allowed

Civil

1932

June 21

Sulaiman, C. J.

KASTURI AND ANOTHER (Plaintiffs)
versus
BALMUKAND (Defendant)*

Provincial Small Causes Courts Act, Secs. 23 and 25—Order under Sec. 23 returning plaint—Whether appealable—Whether High Court can interfere under Sec. 25.

No appeal lies from an order purporting to be passed under Sec. 23 of the Provincial Small Causes Courts Act for the return of a plaint to be filed in the proper court. But if the order is illegal or irregular, the High Court would have jurisdiction to interfere under Sec. 25 of the Act because the return of the plaint terminates the proceedings in the court of small causes and a case is decided thereby.

Subal Ram Dutt v. Jagadanunda Mazumdar, 1 I. C. 288 dissented from.

Civil Revision from an order of Maulvi S. M. Saiduddin, Judge of Small Cause Court of Agra.

S. B. Johari for the applicants.

K. N. Malaviya for the opposite-party.

The following judgment was delivered by

Sulaiman, C. J.

Sulaiman, C. J.—A preliminary objection is taken to the hearing of this revision. The court of small causes has returned the plaint for presentation to the proper court. It is urged that the order was appealable inasmuch as an appeal lay to the District Judge, and as none has been filed, there could be no revision. In the second place, it is urged that the order of the court of small causes returning the plaint does not come within the meaning of Section 25 of the Small Cause Courts Act and that therefore no revision lies. Reliance is placed on the case of Subal Ram Dutt v. Jagadanunda Mazumdar[1].

In my opinion, the order returning the plaint purported to have been passed under Section 23 of the Provincial Small Cause Court Act, and not under O. 7 C. P. C. Section 27 of the Act makes the order final. It cannot, therefore, be contended that an appeal lay from the order, because the Code of Civil Procedure was applicable under Section 17(1) of the Act only so far as it was not inconsistent with the provisions of the Act.

I also see no force in the second objection. Where a court has exercised discretion, the High Court would not interfere in revision with that discretion. But that is a matter quite different from saying that no case is decided and a High Court can never have any jurisdiction to interfere at all. It seems to me that if a court of small causes has acted grossly wrongly or with material irregularity, for instance, where the plaintiff's right does not in any way depend on the proof or disproof of title to immovable property or any other title and the court arbitrarily returns the plaint for presentation to the proper court, it must be treated as if a case has been decided which would give jurisdiction to the High Court to interfere under Section 25. If the learned Judges in the case of Subal Ram Dutt v. Jagadanunda Mazumdar meant to lay down as a general proposition that any order purporting to be passed under Section 23 of the Provincial Small Cause Court Act for the return of a plaint to be filed in the proper court is not an order passed in a case decided within the meaning of Section 25 of the Act, I am, with great respect, unable to agree with them. As stated above, if the question is merely one of an exercise of discretion, then there would be no interference. But if the order is illegal or irregular, the High Court would have jurisdiction to interfere because the return of the plaint terminates the proceedings in the court of small causes, and, in my opinion, a case is decided thereby. The word "case" is used in a wider sense than "suit", and must include the termination of a legal proceeding pending in a court which, so long as the order is not set aside, cannot be revoked. I accordingly overrule the preliminary objection.

---

*Civ. Rev. 102 of 1932

[1] 1 I. C. 288

The plaintiffs' case was based on the supposition that they were the heirs of Gopal Das, who had put the defendant in possession as tenant. The defendant admitted that he was the tenant of Bhagwan Das and Gopal Das, but did not admit that the present plaintiffs were the heirs of his landlord. The court below has very properly considered that the question depends on the proof or disproof of a title to property, and that the case is a fit one to be tried on the original side. I am unable to interfere with the exercise of discretion by the court below. The application is dismissed with costs.

Application dismissed

CHANDERDEO CHAUBE AND ANOTHER (Applicants)
versus
MEGH NARAIN AND OTHERS (Opposite parties)*

Civil
1932
July 21
Niamat-ullah, J.

Civil Procedure Code, Or. 22, R. 6 and Limitation Act, Art. 176—Plaintiff dies between conclusion of hearing and pronouncement of judgment—Application for leave to appeal by legal representatives—Limitation.

Where a plaintiff dies between the conclusion of the hearing and the pronouncing of the judgment, the decree must be taken to have been passed in his lifetime (Or. 22, R. 6), and no application for substitution of names is necessary. Rule 3, Chapter II of the Rules of the Allahabad High Court require an application by the legal representatives of a party dying after the decree to apply for permission to appeal. For compliance with that rule there is no limitation and all that is necessary is that the appeal itself should be filed within time.

---

*F. A. 321 of 1932

CIVIL
1932
CHANDERDEO CHAUBE
v.
MEGH NARAIN
Niamatullah, J.

A. P. Pandey for the applicants.

K. Verma for the opposite parties.

The following judgment was delivered by

NIAMATULLAH, J.—This is an application for permission to file an appeal on behalf of one Lachhman, who was plaintiff in the original suit and who died between the conclusion of the hearing and the pronouncement of the judgment in the court below. His suit was dismissed and his legal representatives, Chanderdeo and Inderdeo, have preferred an appeal along with this application asking for leave to appeal as the legal representatives of the deceased plaintiff.

The learned advocate for the respondents contests the application on the ground that it has been made more than 90 days after the death of Lachhman, a fact which is not disputed. I do not, however, think that the objection has any force. Or. 22, C. P. C. requires applications for substitution of a deceased plaintiff or defendant, in case any of them dies, during the pendency of the suit. The provisions of that order have been made applicable to cases in which one of the appellants or respondents dies during the pendency of the appeal. There is no law to be found either in the Civil Procedure Code or elsewhere which makes it necessary that any substitution proceedings should take place where one of the parties dies between the decree and the filing of the appeal. In this case Lachhman died before the decree and would have been deemed to have died during the pendency of the suit but for O. 22, R. 6 which provides that in such case the judgment should be considered to have been pronounced before his death. In other words, the decree must be taken to have been passed in his lifetime. This being so, a fiction has to be introduced to the effect that Lachhman died after the decree. As already stated, no application for substitution of names is necessary where a party dies between the date of the decree and the filing of the appeal. Rule 3, Chapter 11 of the Rules of this Court, however, requires an application by the legal representatives of a party dying after the decree to apply for permission to appeal if one is to be preferred. For compliance with that rule there is no limitation and all that is necessary is that the appeal itself should be filed within time. Art. 176 of the Indian Limitation Act does not apply to an application of the kind contemplated by the rule above referred to. The application is accordingly allowed.

CRIMINAL
1932
July 29
PULLAN J.
THOM, J.

KING-EMPEROR
versus CHITTIRA*

Criminal Tribes Act, Sec. 23—Applicable only to convictions for offences specified in Sch. I—'Any other such offence'—Meaning of.

Section 23 of the Criminal Tribes Act refers only to convictions for offences specified in Sch. I and has no application to a conviction for an offence which is not contained in Sch. I. The words "any other such offence" used in the section mean one of those offences mentioned in the schedule.

---

*Cr. A. 155 of 1932

CRIMINAL

1932

KING-EMPEROR v. CHITTIRA

Where a person was convicted under Section 454 Penal Code read with Section 23 of the Criminal Tribes Act and his previous convictions were one under Section 454 and two under Section 457, held, that Section 23 of the Criminal Tribes Act did not apply and the accused could only be punished as an old offender.

CRIMINAL APPEAL from an order of ABDUL HALIM ESQ., Sessions Judge of Budaun.

M. Waliullah (Assistant Government Advocate) for the Crown.

Jail appeal.

The judgment of the Court was delivered by

Pullan, J.

PULLAN, J.—Chatra, who is a registered member of a criminal tribe, has been convicted of an offence under Section 454 I. P. C. read with Section 23 of the Criminal Tribes Act and has been sentenced to transportation for life. The facts of the case are clearly proved. This Chatra entered a house through the roof in the day time and stole a 'hansli' and some money. The owner of the house returned in time and he was arrested with the 'hansli' and the money in his possession. There is, therefore, no question as to his guilt.

The sentence of transportation has been inflicted because in the opinion of the learned Sessions Judge, there was no alternative sentence under Section 23 of the Criminal Tribes Act. Section 23 of the Criminal Tribes Act lays down that a member of a criminal tribe who having been convicted of any of the offences under the Indian Penal Code specified in Schedule 1, is convicted of the same, or of any other such offence, shall, on a second conviction, be sentenced to not less than seven years' rigorous imprisonment and, on a third conviction, to transportation for life. Section 454, Indian Penal Code, under which the appellant has been convicted, is not included in Schedule 1 of the Criminal Tribes Act. The previous convictions of this person were one under Section 454 and two under Section 457. Section 457 is included in Schedule 1. Thus, had the present conviction been one under Section 457, the Judge would have been right in sentencing this man to transportation for life. But, in our opinion, Section 23 refers only to convictions for offences specified in Schedule I. It has no application to a conviction for an offence which is not contained in Schedule I. The Judge says that this is "an offence similar in nature to the one of which he has been convicted twice before". But these are not the words of the section. The words are "the same or any other such offence", and "any other such offence" means one of those offences mentioned in the Schedule. Thus Section 23 of the Criminal Tribes Act does not apply to this case, and the applicant can only be punished as an old offender, who has been twice convicted under Section 457 I. P. C. and once under Section 454, I. P. C. We accordingly alter the conviction to one under Section 454 read with Section 75, I. P. C. and reduce the sentence from transportation for life to seven years' rigorous imprisonment.

CRIMINAL

1932

August 30

PULLAN, J.
THOM, J.

KAUL AHIR
versus
KING-EMPEROR*

Arms Act, Sec. 19(f)—Conviction under—When justified—Loaded cartridges found in a house—Head of the family convicted—When conviction legal.

In the course of a house search two loaded cartridges were found in a corn bin in the house of the accused among ghee, butter and other articles. The accused was prosecuted for an offence under the Arms Act and the Magistrate convicted him on the ground that he was the head of the family and should therefore be held responsible for the arms recovered from his house. Held, that the view taken by the Magistrate was wrong and the conviction was not legal. In all such cases it is necessary to prove not only the presence of the article in the house but the possession of some particular person over that article in order to justify a conviction.

King-Emperor v. Sikhdar overruled.

CRIMINAL REFERENCE made by BABU HARI HAR PRASAD, Sessions Judge of Azamgarh.

The following is the Referring Order:—

IQBAL AHMAD, J.—I find it difficult to reconcile the decision of this Court in Emperor v. Ram Autar, I. L. R. 47 All. 511 with the decision of this Court reported as King-Emperor v. Sikhdar, 1932 A. L. J. 570. The question that arises for consideration in the present reference is of sufficient importance to merit a discussion before two Judges. Accordingly I refer this case to a Bench of two Judges.

L. M. Roy for the applicant.

M. Waliullah (Assistant Government Advocate) for the Crown.

The judgment of the Court was delivered by

Pullan, J.

PULLAN, J.—The learned Sessions Judge of Azamgarh has referred to this Court the case of one Kaul Ahir who has been convicted of an offence under the Arms Act. In the course of a house search two loaded cartridges were found in a corn bin in the house of this man Kaul among ghee, butter and other articles. Kaul and his son were prosecuted for an offence under the Arms Act. The son Lagan was acquitted, and the Magistrate has convicted Kaul on the ground that he was the head of the family and should therefore be held responsible for the Arms recovered from his house. There are many cases of this Court in which it has been laid down that it is improper to convict each and every member of a Hindu joint family because some illicit article has been recovered from the house, and the principle that the head of the family is responsible where there are other adult male members who had equal facilities of access to the article in question has never been affirmed as far as we are aware by any High Court in India. We have been referred to a decision of a single Judge of this Court in the case of King-Emperor v. Sikhdar[1]. In that case the learned Judge held that all the adult male members of a Hindu joint family could be presumed to be in possession of an unlicensed gun found in their house, and it was open to the police to prose-

---

*Cr. Ref. 266 of 1932

[1] 1932 A. L. J. 570

CRIMINAL
1932
KAUL AHIR
v.
KING-EMPEROR
Pullan, J.

cute one or all of them for the offence. This is a view which we are not prepared to accept. We believe that in all such cases it is necessary to prove not only the presence of the article in the house but the possession of some particular person over that article in order to justify a conviction. In a case such as the present it cannot even be said that the head of the house or any individual male member of his family was aware of the presence of these cartridges. For all we know they might have been dropped by some sportsman, picked up by a child and handed over to the child's mother. It is the women of the house and not the men who look after the grain bin and the ghee and the butter and other articles, and the possession of these cartridges may have been entirely innocent. We cannot accept the view that the head of the family is responsible for the presence of the articles, and we do not consider that the conviction for an offence under the Arms Act is legal. We accordingly accept this reference, set aside the conviction and sentence and direct that if the fine has been paid it shall be returned.

Reference accepted

FATTU AND OTHERS
versus
KING-EMPEROR*

CRIMINAL
1932
August 30
PULLAN, J.
THOM, J.

Civil Procedure Code, Or. 21, R. 37—Judgment-debtor—Warrant for arrest and notice under Or. 21, R. 37 issued simultaneously—Warrant did not disclose name or official designation of person to whom issued—Warrant defective and illegal.

Where a warrant for arrest which did not disclose the name or official designation of the person to whom it was issued for execution, was served on a judgment-debtor simultaneously with a notice under Or. 21, Rule 37 C. P. C calling upon him to appeal before the court on a specified date, held, that the warrant was defective in itself and its issue was illegal as the court by issuing a notice under Or. 21, Rule 37 C. P. C. had taken away its own right to issue a warrant of arrest and the question of arrest could only arise when the judgment-debtor fails to comply with the notice, and the persons who released the judgment-debtor from custody committed no offence under Sec. 225 B of the Penal Code. Jagannath v. K. E., A. L. J. [1932] 179 and Badri Gope v. K. E., [1926] A. I. R. 237 relied on.

CRIMINAL REVISION from an order of BABU TRILOKI NATH, Sessions Judge of Meerut.

The following is the Referring Order:—

YOUNG, J.—This is an application in revision from the decision of the learned Sessions Judge of Meerut. The applicant was charged under Section 225 (b) of the Indian Penal Code with resisting arrest. He has been found guilty and sentenced. The whole question in this application in revision is whether the warrant under which the applicant was arrested was a valid warrant or not. If it was a valid warrant, the offence clearly has been committed. If it was invalid, it is contended that no offence under Section 225 (b) could have been committed. There is a decision of a single Judge of this Court in 1932 A. L. J. 179, which decided that a conviction under similar circumstances could not be upheld. The learned Judge, however, in that case felt himself bound by a Bench decision in I. L. R. 18 All. 246. The facts, however, of this case are completely different to the facts in I. L. R. 18 All. 246, and I am myself inclined to hold that the mere failure to make a formal insertion in the warrant of the name of the person to whom the warrant is entrusted for execution would not be enough to invalidate the warrant and therefore the subsequent arrest based upon it. As, however, there is a single Judge case referred to above, I think it proper to have this matter decided by a Bench of two Judges.

---

*Cr. Rev. 95 of 1932

Personally I would be inclined to refuse to exercise the powers of revision vested in me in this case, whatever the legal position might be, but I think the legal point is one which ought to be decided.

Masud Hasan for the applicants.

Kartar Narain Agarwala for the opposite party.

M. Walliullah (Assistant Government Advocate) for the Crown.

The judgment of the Court was delivered by

Pullan, J.

PULLAN, J.—This is an application in revision from an order of the Sessions Judge of Meerut, who confirmed the conviction and sentences passed upon seven applicants for an offence under Section 225B of the Indian Penal Code. A warrant was issued by a Revenue Court for the arrest of one Sarup Singh. Sarup Singh was arrested, but he was rescued from the peons who arrested him. These facts may be taken as admitted.

This application in revision challenges the legality of the warrant. This objection is two-fold. In the first place, the warrant does not disclose the name or official designation of the person to whom the warrant was issued for execution, and secondly the warrant was served simultaneously with a notice under Order 21, Rule 37 of the Civil Procedure Code.

In our opinion the warrant was defective for both the reasons stated by the learned counsel. A warrant must be issued to some person for execution; and where no name or description of that person is given in the warrant, the person arrested can have no knowledge that the persons who present the warrant are legally authorised to do so. It may be that the person who is arrested is unable to read the warrant and has no knowledge as to whether the warrant is or is not properly filled up; but it is the duty of the Court to issue a warrant in proper form, and where a warrant is incomplete, it has been held by more than one High Court that the subsequent release of a person arrested under such a warrant is not an offence under Sec. 225B of the Indian Penal Code. There is a very recent decision on this point by a learned Judge of this Court reported in Jagannath v. K. E.[1]. In that case a warrant had been issued to the Nazir, and the Nazir without any endorsement made it over to a subordinate official. It was held that the warrant was defective and did not authorise the person who directed the peons to make the arrest, and that accordingly an escape from custody in such a case was no offence. In our opinion the learned Judge decided that case on correct principles, and the present case is a stronger one, for in this case the column which should contain the name of the person to whom the warrant was issued for execution is blank. There is a parallel case recently decided by the Patna High Court, Badri Gope v. K. E.[2] in which a warrant, otherwise complete, was defective, as it was afterwards found that the seal of the court was missing. Although this fact was not known to the persons who rescued the person arrested, the Court held that, as the warrant was defective, they had committed no offence under Section 225B.

---

[1] [1932] A. L. J. 179

The second objection to this warrant raises a point which, as far as we are aware, has not previously been before any High Court. Under Rule 37, Order 21, C. P. C., a court may, instead of issuing a warrant for arrest, issue a notice calling upon the judgment-debtor to appear before the Court on a date specified in the notice and show cause why he should not be committed to the civil prison. The second clause of this rule reads as follows:—

> Where appearance is not made in obedience to the notice, the court shall, if the decree-holder so requires, issue a warrant for the arrest of the judgment-debtor.

In the present case the court adopted what is, in our opinion, a most improper procedure. It issued simultaneously a notice calling upon the judgment-debtor to appear before the Court on April 30, and a warrant for his arrest. Both the notice and the warrant were served on April 19. In our opinion this rule is clear. There were two courses open to the court; either it could issue a warrant of arrest, or it could issue a notice giving the judgment-debtor date on which to appear in court. If the court follows the second mode of procedure, the question of arrest could only arise when the judgment-debtor fails to comply with the notice. On April 19 the judgment-debtor had still eleven days within which to comply with the notice, and his arrest within that period was illegal, for the court by adopting this procedure had taken away its own right to issue a warrant of arrest before April 30.

We cannot emphasise too strongly our feeling that in all these matters of the arrest of a judgment-debtor the procedure laid down in the Code must be carefully observed by the Courts. The liberty of the subject cannot be trifled with, and every judgment-debtor can require by right that the court ordering his arrest shall observe to the letter the law as laid down in the Code. In the present case we consider that the warrant was defective in itself, and its issue was illegal. Consequently we have no hesitation in finding that the persons who released this judgment-debtor from custody were not rescuing a person who was under a lawful arrest, and therefore they committed no offence under Section 225B of the Indian Penal Code. We accordingly accept this application in revision, set aside the judgments of the courts below and quash the conviction and sentences.

Application allowed

---

[2] [1926] A. I. R. 237

CRIMINAL

1932

Sep. 1

PULLAN, J.
THOM, J.

BADRI PRASAD
versus JHAMMAN*

Criminal Procedure Code, Sec. 539A—Accused person making false allegations in application for transfer—Whether liable to prosecution.

Section 539A, Criminal Procedure Code, applies to an accused person and he is liable to prosecution in respect of any false statement which he may make in an affidavit supporting his application for transfer.

King-Emperor v. Matan, I. L. R. 33 All. 163 referred to.

CRIMINAL REVISION from an order of BABU RADHA KISHEN, Sessions Judge of Budaun.

The following is the Referring Order:—

KING, J.—This is an application in revision against an order passed by the learned Sessions Judge of Budaun rejecting an application for revision of an order of acquittal under Sections 193 and 199 of the Indian Penal Code.

It appears that one Jhamman was being tried before a tehsildar Magistrate for an offence under Section 323 of the Indian Penal Code and while the trial was pending Jhamman made in application to the District Magistrate asking that the case should be transferred from the court of the tehsildar on the ground that the tehsildar was siding with the complainant, who was an influential person, and that the tehsildar had openly stated in court that if the accused did not pay Rs.100 as compensation to the complainant, he (the tehsildar) would convict him. The District Magistrate obtained an affidavit from Jhamman in support of these allegations and then called for a report from the tehsildar from which it appeared that the allegations made by Jhamman were false. The District Magistrate accordingly rejected the application for transfer and ordered that Jhamman should be prosecuted under Sections 193 and 199 of the Indian Penal Code.

When Jhamman was tried for the offences mentioned above, the trial court found on the strength of certain rulings of this High Court that even if the facts alleged in the affidavit were false, nevertheless he was immune from prosecution. The matter was taken up to the Sessions Judge in revision but he also came to the conclusion, in view of the authorities cited, that the accused had been rightly acquitted.

For the applicant a case decided by a single Judge, Buddhu Khan v. Emperor, A. I. R. 1928 Lah. 182, has been relied upon and it is directly in point. In that case it was held that according to the practice approved by the Allahabad High Court an accused person can legally tender his own affidavit in support of an application for transfer, whether the affidavit is tendered and the application made in a subordinate court or in the High Court, and he can be prosecuted in regard to any false statement made in the affidavit. Several other rulings have been cited which take the same view, namely, Ghulam Muhammad v. The Crown, A. I. R. 1922 Lah. 113; Emperor v. Pir Qadir Shah, A. I. R. 1925 Lah. 312, and Mst. Allah Wasai v. Emperor A. I. R. 1926 Lah. 12. On the other hand we have a ruling of two Judges of this Court in Emperor v. Matan, I. L. R. 33 All. 163, which clearly supports the view taken by the two courts below to the effect that the accused is immune from any prosecution in respect of any false statement which he may make in an affidavit supporting his application for transfer. The same view was taken by single Judges of this Court in Emperor

---

*Cr. Rev. 327 of 1932

CRIMINAL

1932

BADRI PRASAD v. JHAMMAN

v. Bindeshri Singh, I. L. R. 28 All. 331 and Ram Prasad v. King-Emperor, 10 A. L. J. 462.

As there is a clear conflict of opinion between the decisions of this High Court and one of the decisions is by a Bench of two Judges, I refer the case to a Bench of two Judges as it would not be proper for me to dissent from the judgment of a Division Bench of this Court.

A. P. Pandey for the applicant.

N. U. A. Siddiqui for the opposite-party.

The judgment of the Court was delivered by

Pullan, J.

PULLAN, J.—This is an application made by one Badri Prasad for revision of an order of acquittal passed against Jhamman in a case of perjury. Jhamman was accused of some petty offence in the court of the Tahsildar Magistrate. He swore an affidavit in connection with an application for transfer of the case, in which he made certain allegations about the presiding officer. It is in respect of this affidavit that he was prosecuted for offences under Sections 193|199 I. P. C.

The Magistrate and, in revision, the learned Sessions Judge believed that the case should be decided in the same way as the case of King-Emperor v. Matan[1] was decided by a Bench of this Court in the year 1910. The opinion held by that Bench was that no accused person could be prosecuted in respect of any statement made by him for the purpose of his defence, and an application made for transfer was made by the accused person in pursuance of his defence. At that time an accused person could not take oath under any circumstances. We see no reason to differ from the view taken by the Bench of this Court in that case at that time; but Section 539-A has been enacted in the year 1923, and there is nothing to show that that section does not apply to an accused person. In our opinion it applies to any person who chooses to make allegations respecting a public servant and in support of those allegations swears an affidavit. If an accused person chooses to come within the scope of this section and swears an affidavit on false facts, we consider that he should be liable to punishment which can be inflicted upon persons who swear such false affidavits. As pointed out by the learned Judge of this Court who referred this matter to a Bench, this view has already been taken in other High Courts, and we are of opinion that in view of the change of law the judgment of the Bench in the case of King-Emperor v. Matan need no longer be followed.

In the present case we consider that the matter has gone far enough, and we do not propose that this case should go back for decision on the question which has not yet been tried, namely, whether the affidavit was or was not false. With these observations, we direct that the record be returned.

---

[1] I. L. R. 33 All. 163

CRIMINAL

1932

Sep. 2

PULLAN, J.
THOM, J.

RAM CHAND
versus
KING-EMPEROR*

Penal Code, Secs. 395 and 380—Dacoity—No use of force or show of force as inmates did not resist dacoits—Whether offence committed.

The accused were charged originally under Section 395 I. P. C. but the Sessions Judge convicted them of an offence under Section 380 I. P. C. as he was of opinion that probably the inmates did not resist the dacoity seeing their large number and so peacefully and calmly without using any force or show of force the dacoits acquired the property, held, that the view taken by the Sessions Judge was entirely wrong. According to his view any dacoity in which no resistance is offered and no violence required will cease to be a dacoity and should be treated as a theft.

CRIMINAL APPEAL from an order of BABU GOVIND SARUP MATHUR, Sessions Judge of Mainpuri.

Appeal from jail.

Sankar Saran (Government Pleader) for the Crown.

The judgment of the Court was delivered by

Pullan, J.

PULLAN, J.—This is an appeal by three persons, Ram Chand, Reoti and Munshi who have been convicted of an offence under Section 380 I. P. C. and each sentenced to three years' rigorous imprisonment. They had been charged originally under Section 395 I. P. C., and when their appeals were read by a Judge of this Court notice was issued to all three appellants to show cause why their sentence should not be enhanced. This is a very clear case of dacoity. In the first report it was said that there were 14 or 15 dacoits, and the approver, whose evidence has been believed by the Judge, says that there were 12. They entered the house in the night and they took ornaments and a considerable sum of money. It is said that they took Rs.2,000 in cash and ornaments worth Rs.164. There is nothing in the method in which the offence was committed to distinguish it from an ordinary dacoity, and the evidence against all these persons is particularly clear. Munshi himself made a confession which he retracted, and he is also mentioned by the approver whose name is also Munshi. He was identified by several witnesses. The other two appellants were mentioned both by the approver and by Munshi Kachhi in his retracted confession, and stolen ornaments were found in the possession of both of them.

The Judge has laid down a proposition of law which cannot possibly be accepted. He has said:

> Probably the inmates did not resist the dacoits seeing their large number and so peacefully and calmly without using any force or show of force the dacoits acquired the property, and so the offence comes technically within the purview of Section 380 I. P. C.

If this were so, any dacoity in which no resistance is offered and no violence required will cease to be a dacoity and should be treated as a theft. This decision of the learned Judge shows that he has entirely

---

*Cr. A. 45 of 1932 (connected with Cr. Rev. 522 of 1932)

CRIMINAL

1932

RAM CHAND
v.
KING-EMPEROR

Pullan, J.

failed to understand a section of the Indian Penal Code which in the district of Mainpuri, where he is the Sessions Judge, he must have occasion to use almost daily. We cannot alter the section under which he has chosen to convict these persons, and no doubt they are guilty under that section as in the course of committing the dacoity they also committed theft from a building. All that we can do is to emphasise our opinion that the view taken by the learned Judge is entirely wrong, to dismiss the appeal and to enhance the sentence under Section 380 I. P. C. to five years' rigorous imprisonment in the case of each of the appellants.

CRIMINAL

1932

Sep 16

PULLAN, J.

QABUL
versus
KING-EMPEROR*

Criminal Procedure Code, Secs. 236 and 237 and Penal Code, Secs. 302 and 194—Accused acquitted of an offence under Sec. 302—But convicted of an offence under Sec. 194 (with which he was never charged)—Whether conviction under Sec. 194 should have been passed.

Where the Sessions Judge acquitted a person of an offence under Sec. 302 I. P. C. and convicted him of an offence under Sec. 194 I. P. C., with which he was never charged and to which no reference was made either in the charge-sheet or in his examination, held, that the conviction was not illegal but this was a case in which such a conviction should not have been passed.

Begu v. King-Emperor, I. L. R. 6 Lah. 226 discussed.

CRIMINAL APPEAL from an order of BABU KASHI NATH, Sessions Judge of Muzaffarnagar.

K. O. Carleton for the appellant.

Sankar Saran (Government Pleader) for the Crown.

The following judgment was delivered by

Pullan, J.

PULLAN, J.—Six persons were charged in the court of the Sessions Judge of Muzaffarnagar with the murder of one Ganga. No other charge was preferred against them, except the charge under Section 302 I. P. C. Two of these persons were acquitted, but four of them, although acquitted of the charge of murder, were convicted of offences under Sections 194 and 201 I. P. C. and sentenced to 7 years' rigorous imprisonment on each charge.

The facts of this case are somewhat unusual. A report was made by one of the present appellants, Jai Singh at the police station of Shamli at 7 A.M. on August 25, 1931 that his father Ganga was missing and that he was probably confined in the house of one Pirthi. There is nothing in the report to suggest that Ganga was murdered but it is said that on the way to the village Jai Singh informed the police of his suspicion that Ganga had actually been murdered. Pirthi's house was searched and the body of Ganga was found in an inner room. It was subsequently ascertained that Ganga had been hanged, and the police officer who investigated the case discovered marks on the roof of the adjoining house suggesting to his mind that the body had been carried over that roof from outside and deposited in the place where it was found. Pirthi, it may be observed, was discovered smoking at the door of his house, and there can be little doubt that he was entirely unaware of the fact that the body was in his house. In spite of this, Pirthi and three others were arrested; but very soon suspicion was turned on Jai Singh and his relations. The police enquiry was inconclusive, but ultimately Pirthi brought a complaint charging these six men with murder, and it is on this complaint that the case was committed to Sessions and decided in the manner described above.

---

*Cr. A. 389 of 1932

Evidence was called to show that Ganga was on bad terms with Jai Singh and Qabul Singh, his two sons, but it is by no means clear that there was any acute enmity between them at the time. Ganga went to Muzaffarnagar and presented a petition on August 24, and the judge has not believed any of the evidence which has been called to show that he was seen alive after that. The medical officer, who conducted the post-mortem examination at 9-45 A.M. on August 26, was under the impression that the man had been dead for more than two days, but probably the medical officer failed to note the rapid progress of decomposition in the month of August for certainly the man's death cannot have been caused till late in the afternoon on August 24. It is, however, probable that it took place on that day, as the medical opinion is not likely to be so far out as to find that the corpse has been dead for more than 48 hours when actually it has been dead for less than 36 hours. The judge has disbelieved all the evidence which goes to suggest that Jai Singh, his brother, Qabul Singh, his cousin, Sant Lal, and Qadam Singh, who is not related to the family, were seen with Ganga on the evening of August 24 and he has not found it proved that Ganga was hanged in the house of Hoshiara, who is the father of the accused Sant Lal. Indeed there is no evidence as to where the man was hanged or who hanged him. The facts that are proved are simply these. Ganga was hanged, his body was found in Pirthi Singh's house and apparently it had been carried in from outside. Jai Singh made a report at the police station suggesting that Ganga would be found in confinement in the house of Pirthi Singh. It appears to me that there was no evidence on which Qabul Singh or Qadam Singh could have been convicted. As to Sant Lal, he has been convicted because the body is said to have been dragged over his roof. His brother Manphul was also charged, but was acquitted because he did not live in the house. But there is no evidence that Sant Lal was present in his house when the body was taken over the roof, and even if he was, that is no reason for supposing that he was an accomplice. As to Qadam Singh all that can be said is that he went with Jai Singh when the latter made the report at the police station. It is not an offence to accompany another person to the police station, even when the latter makes a false report, and in my opinion Qadam Singh also cannot be convicted. There remains only the case of Jai Singh. There is certainly in his case the presumption that he must have known both that his father was dead and that his body would be found in the house of Pirthi Singh, and as a corollary it may be presumed also that he knew that Pirthi Singh was not responsible for his father's death. But the question whether Jai Singh should on these presumptions only be convicted of an offence under Section 194 or 201 of the Indian Penal Code is far from clear. In the first place, it is not kown for certain that Ganga was murdered. All that is known is that he was hanged, and he may have hanged himself or he may have been hanged by accident. It is also not certain that Jai Singh knew how the man came by his death or how he was removed and placed in the house of Pirthi Singh. All that can be said is that he came to know in some way that Ganga would be found in the house of Pirthi Singh and reported that fact. I cannot see how in any case he could be guilty of an offence under Section 201 I. P. C. because the story believed by the Judge is not that he caused evidence of the crime to disappear, but that he tried to fasten the crime on to some other person.

I confess that I also find some difficulty in supporting a conviction of an offence under Section 194 I. P. C. with which this man was never charged and to which no reference is made either in the charge-sheet or in his examination. I have been referred in this connection to the case of Begu v. King-Emperor[1] in which their Lordships of the Privy Council dealt with the meaning of Sections 236 and 237 of the Criminal Procedure Code. Their Lordships sum up the meaning of these sections read together in the following words:—

> A man may be convicted of an offence, although there has been no charge in respect of it, if the evidence is such as to establish a charge that might have been made.

In that case persons acquitted of an offence under Section 302 I. P. C. were convicted of an offence under Section 201 I. P. C. It may be that an offence under Section 194 stands on the same footing as an offence under Section 201 I. P. C. But an offence under Section 194 I. P. C. brings into the field an entirely different set of circumstances and involves the fabrication of a false charge against a third party, which is in no way involved in a case of murder or in a case of causing the evidence of murder to disappear. I am not prepared to say that the conviction of Jai Singh under Section 194 is, in view of the words of Sections 236 and 237, illegal, but I certainly consider that this is a case in which such a conviction should not have been passed where the accused person has not in any way been asked to plead to the charge of fabricating false evidence. In these circumstances I am of opinion that all these persons should be acquitted. I accordingly allow these appeals, set aside the conviction and sentence and declare all the appellants to be acquitted. Qabul Singh and Sant Lal, who are on bail, need not surrender to their bail.

CIVIL
1932
Oct. 13
SULAIMAN, C. J.
KISCH, J.

RAZA HUSAIN (Defendant)
versus
THE DISTRICT BOARD, BANDA THROUGH CHAIRMAN (Plaintiff)*

District Boards Act, Sec. 192—Interpretation of—Protection intended for defendant—Status of plaintiff immaterial—Sec. 192, Sub-section 3—Advance given to member of District Board for supply of lime—Failure to render

---

*F. A. F. O. 72 of 1932

[1] I. L. R. 6 Lah 226

CIVIL

1932

RAZA HUSAIN
v.
THE DISTRICT BOARD OF
BANDA

proper accounts—Suit for recovery of balance—Filed more than 6 months after accrual of cause of action—Suit time-barred.

Section 192 of the District Boards Act is intended for the protection not only of the Board and its officers and servants, but also of the members of the Board. So long as the defendant is a member of the Board and the suit against him is instituted in respect of an act done or purporting to have been done by him in his official capacity, the section is applicable, no matter whether the plaintiff is a stranger or the Board or any other officer or servant. The protection is for a defendant and does not take into account the status of the plaintiff in the suit.

Where advance money had been given to defendant by the District Board for supply of lime in his capacity as member of the Board and on his failure to supply the full quantity of lime and to submit correct accounts, the Board, after obtaining the Commissioner's sanction but more than 6 months after the accrual of the cause of action, sued the defendant for the balance, held, that Sec. 192, Sub-section 3 applied and the suit was time-barred.

Held, further, that the action of the Board in giving such a contract to the defendant, while he was a member of the Board, was highly objectionable, was contrary to the express provisions of Sec. 34 of the District Boards Act and to the principle underlying Section 31(c) of the rules contained in the District Board manual.

FIRST APPEAL from an order of PANDIT KANHAIYA LAL NAGAR, Additional Subordinate Judge of Banda.

Mushtaq Ahmad for the appellant.

U. S. Bajpai for the respondent.

The judgment of the Court was delivered by

Sulaiman, C. J.

SULAIMAN, C. J.—This is a defendant's appeal arising out of a suit brought by the District Board of Banda against the defendant who was at one time a member of the Board. In the plaint it was alleged that the defendant was a member of the Board from 1923 to 1925, and lime was required for use by the Board. "Consequently an advance of Rs.6,750 was given to the defendant for preparation of lime under the control and supervision of the defendant. The defendant was to supply the lime so prepared and render an account of the advance." The Board went on to allege that he did not supply the full quantity of lime, and that he submitted an account which was wrong. It accordingly claimed the balance. It alleged that the cause of action accrued on or about the end of October 1925 when the defendant stopped supplying lime and also on subsequent dates when he refused to render accounts. The suit was filed on October 26, 1928. The defendant in his written statement pleaded that the suit was bad because no previous sanction of the commissioner had been obtained, and also pleaded that the claim was barred by time. There were other pleas also with which we are not concerned. Interrogatories were served by the defendant on the Chairman of the District Board and the very first question asked was whether the amount had been advanced to the defendant in his capacity as a member of the Board or as an outsider. The answer given was that the amount was given to him for preparation of lime as an advance in his capacity as a member of the District Board.

The learned Munsif began his finding by stating that it is admitted by the plaintiff that the defendant was given the advance in his capacity as a member of the Board. He again referred to this in his finding on the next issue and remarked that the defendant was given the advance to get prepared lime and supply it in his official capacity as a member of the Board. He held that the sanction of the Commissioner was necessary under Section 33 of the Act, and in the absence of such sanction the suit must fail. He further held that the claim was barred by the rules of limitation laid down in Section 192, Sub-section 3 of the District Boards Act.

In the grounds of appeal before the lower appellate court the plaintiff did not challenge the remark that it had been admitted by the plaintiff that the advance had been given to the defendant in his official capacity as a member of the Board.

The lower appellate court also does not in its judgment say that the advance given to the defendant had not been given to him in his official capacity as a member of the Board. It seems to have been conceded that the money had been given to him in that capacity.

The Board filed an application before the lower appellate court supported by an affidavit stating that, as a matter of fact, the sanction of the Commissioner had been previously obtained, but it had been accidently put on a wrong file, and could not be found at the time. It explained that both the present Chairman and the Secretary were not holding the offices at the time when the sanction was obtained. The lower appellate court accepted this explanation and considered that there was sufficient ground for admitting fresh evidence and also held that the papers filed by the Board showed that previous sanction had been obtained.

The learned Judge came to the conclusion that there was no defect. He further held that Section 192, Sub-section 3, did not apply to the case, because the plaintiff was the District Board itself and not a stranger. He overruled the finding of the first court and remanded the case for disposal of the remaining issues.

In appeal it is first contended that the lower appellate court should not have admitted fresh evidence. We think that when the learned Judge accepted the allegations contained in the affidavit and was satisfied that there was good cause for not discovering these papers at an earlier stage, he was perfectly justified in admitting them as fresh evidence. There is no doubt that these papers conclusively show that the sanction had been obtained.

We, however, think that the learned Judge has gone utterly wrong in his interpretation of Section 192. He seems to be under the impression that that sanction would not apply if the District Board itself is a plaintiff. He thinks that the section is intended to be applicable where anyone other than the Board is a plaintiff. There seems to be no justification whatsoever for such a construction. The opening portion of the section runs as follows:—

> No suit shall be instituted against a member of a Board in respect of an act done or purporting to have been done in

CIVIL

1932

RAZA HUSAIN
v.
THE DISTRICT BOARD OF BANDA

Sulaiman, C. J.

his official capacity until the expiration of two months next after notice etc.

The section is obviously intended for the protection not only of the Board and its officers and servants, but also of the members of the Board. So long as the defendant was a member of the Board and the suit is instituted in respect of an act done or purporting to have been done by him in his official capacity, the section would be applicable, no matter whether the plaintiff is a stranger or the Board or any other officer or servant. The protection is for a defendant and does not take into account the status of the plaintiff in the suit. We are, therefore, clearly of opinion that the view taken by the lower appellate court is wrong and cannot be supported.

The learned advocate for the Board felt compelled to fall back upon the contention that the act in question was not one done in his official capacity. If this question were open to the Board to be raised in a third court, we would have been inclined to ask for a finding on this point. But, as remarked above, the position taken up by the plaintiff Board was that the advance had been given to the defendant in his official capacity as a member of the Board. The point was conceded in the answer to the interrogatories by the Chairman, was admitted before the trial Court and the admission was not withdrawn before the lower appellate court. In these circumstances, we do not think that we should allow the Board to raise this point at this last stage, because it is at the least a mixed question of law and fact. We must, therefore, assume that the act complained of was done by the defendant in his official capacity.

This being the case, Section 192, Sub-section 3 applies, and the suit having been instituted more than six months after the accrual of the cause of action, is barred by time.

We may add that even if Section 192 did not apply, we would not have been able to accept the finding of the lower appellate court that the suit is not barred by the three years' rule without a clear finding as to the date on which the accounts stated in writing signed by the defendant were submitted. (Article 64 of the Limitation Act).

We should also like to point out that the action of the Board in giving such a contract to the defendant, while he was a member of the Board, appears to have been highly objectionable, was contrary to the express provisions of Section 34 of the District Boards Act, and was also contrary to the principle now embodied in Section 31 (c) of the rules contained in the District Board Manual.

We accordingly allow this appeal, set aside the order of the lower appellate court and restore the order of first court with costs in all courts.

Appeal allowed

Civil

1932

Oct. 13

Sulaiman, C. J.

Kisch, J.

SUKHDEOJI AND OTHERS (Applicants)
versus
RAM LAL (Opposite-party).*

Tenancy Act (III of 1926), Secs. 271(4) and 242(3)—Suit for ejectment—Issue on proprietary right—Decided in plaintiff's favour by Civil Court—Suit dismissed on different ground—Appeal—Question of proprietorship raised again by defendant in his cross-objection—Commissioner's jurisdiction ousted—Memorandum of appeal to be returned to plaintiff for presentation to proper court.

Where in a suit for ejectment the revenue court, accepting the finding of the civil court in plaintiff's favour on an issue involving the question of proprietary right, dismissed it on a different ground, and on appeal by plaintiff to the Commissioner the defendant filed a cross-objection attacking the finding that he was not the proprietor, held, that the Commissioner having come to the conclusion that his jurisdiction was ousted as the result of the cross-objection, the only way open to him was to return the memorandum of appeal to the appellant for presentation to the proper court. In the absence of any specific provision permitting the sending of an appeal direct to the civil court, the provisions of Or. 7, R. 10 read with Section 107(2) C. P. C. would be applicable.

ORDER on application of Sukhdeoji and others.

The applicants were not represented.

K. N. Laghate and P. M. L. Verma for the opposite-party.

The judgment of the Court was delivered by

Sulaiman, C. J.

SULAIMAN, C. J.—This is a reference by the Commissioner of Jhansi under Section 267 of the Agra Tenancy Act (Act III of 1926).

It appears that the plaintiff Sukhdeoji sued in the court of the Assistant Collector under Section 44 of the Act for the ejectment of the defendant, treating him as a trespasser. The defendant resisted the claim on the ground that he was himself the proprietor and the plot was his khudkasht. An issue was framed as regards the alleged proprietary rights of the defendant and it was referred by the Assistant Collector to the Munsif for determination. The Munsif came to the conclusion that the defendant was not the proprietor and sent his finding to the Revenue Court. The Revenue Court, of course, accepted that finding but dismissed the suit on a different ground, namely, that the plaintiff being only one of the co-sharers was not entitled to maintain a suit for ejectment alone. An appeal was filed in the court of the Commissioner by the plaintiff. Naturally as the finding as regards the defendant's proprietorship was in favour of the plaintiff, he did not raise any question of proprietorship in his grounds of appeal. The defendant, however, filed an application styling it as a cross-objection in which he attempted to support the decree of the Assistant Collector by attacking the finding that he was not the proprietor. Before the learned Commissioner the question of jurisdiction was raised. It is clear that where there is a decree of a Revenue Court passed in a suit in which an issue involving a question of proprietary right has been decided by a Civil Court and the question of proprietary right is in issue also in appeal the decree is appealable to the Civil Court under Section 271 (4) of the Act and also under Section 242 (3). The learned Commissioner came to the conclusion that a question of proprietary right had been raised in the appeal before its hearing and in consequence the appeal could be decided only by the Civil Court under the first mentioned section. He accordingly held:

---

*Mis. Case 296 of 1932

> My jurisdiction is ousted as the result of this cross-objection, and the appeal must now go to the Civil Court.

The learned Commissioner however felt some doubt as to the way in which the appeal is to be sent to the Civil Court. At the time when it was filed apparently the Commissioner had jurisdiction and in his opinion that jurisdiction was ousted as the result of the cross-objection. The learned Commissioner therefore felt doubt as to whether he should hand over the memorandum of appeal to the appellant for presentation to the proper court or whether he himself should send the appeal direct to the Civil Court. He has said:

> I am in doubt as to the manner in which I should direct that this appeal should now be sent to the Civil Court for decision.

It is this point which he has referred to the High Court. We do not think that he came to the conclusion definitely that he must direct the appellant to file the appeal in the court of the District Judge. It seems that he actually had a doubt whether he should direct the appellant to do so. The reference therefore is proper.

There is no doubt that the language of Section 271 is not quite happy and it seems very awkward that an appellant who may not anticipate that the respondent would raise a question of proprietary title by way of cross-objection should be prevented from filing an appeal in the court of the Commissioner when he himself does not raise any question of proprietary title at the time of the filing of the appeal and that although the Commissioner might have jurisdiction when the appeal is filed he would cease to have jurisdiction as soon as the cross-objection is filed. But in this case the respondent merely wanted to support the decree of the trial court by attacking a finding which was against him. We think that when the learned Commissioner came to the conclusion that his jurisdiction was ousted and that the appeal must go to the Civil Court the only way open to him was to return the memorandum of appeal to the appellant. In the absence of any specific provision permitting the sending of an appeal direct to the Civil Court the provisions of O. 7, R. 10 read with Section 107 (2) C. P. C. would be applicable. The question of ordering costs at the time of the return of the appeal would be a matter of discretion for the Commissioner. We order that the costs incurred by the defendants in this reference should be paid by the plaintiff. Let the record be returned.

CRIMINAL

1932

Sep. 23

PULLAN, J.

HIRA LAL
versus
KING-EMPEROR*

Criminal Procedure Code, Sec. 145 (1)—Provisions of—Mandatory—Magistrate fails either in his order or notice to say that there is danger of breach of peace—Whether proceedings liable to be set aside.

The provisions of Sec. 145 (1) of the Criminal Procedure Code requiring a Magistrate to make an order in writing stating the grounds for his being satisfied that a dispute likely to cause a breach of the peace exists are mandatory. Dan Prasad v. Ganesh, 11 A. L. J. 696 and Banka Singh v. Gokul, 25 A. L. J. followed.

Section 145 Criminal Procedure Code is enacted in order that a Magistrate may prevent a breach of the peace arising from a dispute as to immovable property. He has no jurisdiction in a matter primarily appertaining to civil court, unless he is fully satisfied that there is a danger of a breach of the peace and this must, therefore, be put in the forefront of his proceedings and he must give the parties notice that it is to prevent a breach of the peace that he is taking action under the section. If he fails to do so, the proceedings are vitiated, and the order passed under Sec. 145 must be set aside.

CRIMINAL REFERENCE made by L. V. ARDAGH ESQ., Sessions Judge of Agra.

Shiva Prasad Sinha for the applicant.

Krishna Murari Lal for the opposite parties.

M. Waliullah (Assistant Government Advocate) for the Crown.

The following judgment was delivered by

Pullan, J

PULLAN, J.—This is a reference made by the learned Sessions Judge of Agra requesting this Court to set aside an order of a Magistrate purporting to have been passed under Section 145 of the Criminal Procedure Code. The facts of the case are as follows. Certain dhobies made an application to the Joint Magistrate of Agra saying that they had a small plot of land on which they placed their tazias at the time of the Moharram and that one Hira Lal had built or commenced to build a wall on that plot, and when they objected, he was ready to assault them. They accordingly asked the Magistrate to take proceedings under Section 145 of the Criminal Procedure Code. The Magistrate issued a notice without giving any reason, and then made a local inspection and heard evidence. He passed an order in which he stated that in his opinion the dhobies were in actual possession of the land, that Hira Lal should bring a suit in the civil court and the wall which had been started should be left in its present condition. There is not in this order one word suggesting that there was any danger of a breach of the peace. In revision the learned Sessions Judge pointed out that the Magistrate had failed in his order in writing to state the grounds for his being satisfied that there was likely to be a breach of the peace, as required by Section 145 (1) of the Criminal Procedure Code, and following certain rulings of this Court he held that this failure on the part of the Magistrate rendered the proceedings liable to be set aside. He also took certain other objections to the Magistrate's procedure. In reply the Magistrate referred to an unreported decision of this Court which is said to have laid down the principle that the failure of a Magistrate to state that he was satisfied from a police report that there was a likelihood of a breach of the peace cannot vitiate the proceedings. He went on to defend his manner of conducting the enquiry, and in the last words of his explanation for the very first time he suggests that there was proof that a dispute likely to lead to a breach of the peace existed.

---

*Cr. Ref. 501 of 1932

There can be no question that the reported rulings of this High Court support the view that the provisions of Section 145 (1) requiring a Magistrate to make an order in writing stating the grounds for his being satisfied that a dispute likely to cause a breach of the peace exists are mandatory, and this principle was affirmed in the case of Dan Prasad v. Ganesh[1], and more recently in the case of Banka Singh v. Gokul[2]. It appears to me that these rulings are not based upon a mere insistence on the letter of the section, but go to the root of the whole matter. Section 145 is provided in order that a Magistrate may prevent a breach of the peace arising from a dispute as to immovable property. He has no jurisdiction in such a matter, which primarily appertains to a civil court, unless he is fully satisfied that there is a danger of a breach of the peace, and this must therefore be put in the forefront of his proceedings and he must give the parties notice that it is to prevent a breach of the peace that he is taking action under the section. If he fails to do so, the primary intention of the section appears to me to be in danger of being lost, and in this case it clearly has been lost. The Magistrate has concerned himself entirely with the question whether the dhobies have a better right to this plot than Hira Lal, and he has passed his orders with the intention of maintaining the right of the dhobies and forcing Hira Lal to make the necessary move in the civil court. In my opinion, such action was only possible if the Magistrate was convinced that if he failed to do so, there would be a breach of the peace. Where the Magistrate has entirely failed either in his notice or in his order to say that he is of that opinion and where it appears from the evidence, all of which I have read, that there is not a word about a breach of the peace, I must come to the conclusion that the whole proceedings are uncalled for, and as they are also contrary to the specific provisions of the Act, they should be set aside. I accordingly accept the reference and direct that the order of the Magistrate passed under Section 145 of the Criminal Procedure Code be set aside.

Reference accepted
Order set aside

---

[1] 11 A. L. J. 696

[2] 25 A. L. J. 246

HARISH CHANDRA AND ANOTHER
versus
KING-EMPEROR*

CRIMINAL

1932

Sep. 27

PULLAN, J.

Criminal Procedure Code, Sec. 307—Offence under Sec. 395 Penal Code—Accused found guilty by jury on admissible evidence—Jury's refusal to accept judge's view as to requisite amount of evidence necessary to corroborate approver's statement—Whether reference to High Court necessary.

> The appellant was charged with an offence under Section 395 I. P. C. In his charge to the jury the Sessions Judge pointed out that it would be improper to convict on the uncorroborated evidence of the approver and expressed his personal view that they should not hold any accused guilty unless they find that besides being named or identified by the approver, he was also identified by at least two other witnesses. The jury did not accept the judge's view, for the appellant was named by the approver and identified in jail by one witness only, and returned a verdict of guilty. The judge accepted the verdict and convicted the appellant under Sec. 395 I. P. C. Held, that the verdict of the jury was in accordance with law and it was not the duty of the judge to refer the case to the High Court.

CRIMINAL APPEAL from an order of T. N. MULLAH ESQ., Sessions Judge of Allahabad.

K. D. Malaviya for the appellants.

Sankar Saran (Government Pleader) for the Crown.

The following judgment was delivered by

Pullan, J.

PULLAN, J.—This is an appeal on behalf of two persons who were convicted by a jury of an offence under Section 395 I. P. C. They have each of them been sentenced to 5 years rigorous imprisonment. The first ground of appeal is

> That the jury's decision being against the rules and principles explained by the judge in the charge, the learned judge ought to have referred the case under Section 307 Cr. P. C.

and the second is

> That either the judge's charge to the jury is wrong and amounts to misdirection or the jury's verdict is perverse and against law.

These grounds of appeal are based upon certain passages in the judge's charge to the jury. This is one of those cases in which the basis of the prosecution evidence is the statement of an approver, and the judge pointed out that an approver's statement required corroboration and that it would be improper to convict on the uncorroborated evidence of the approver. He went on to develop this by saying that the corroborative evidence should be sufficient in quantity and of a reliable character and he stated correctly that the law has not fixed the quantity of evidence necessary to corroborate the testimony of an approver. He then went on to express his own personal view in the following terms:—

> I should like to lay down as a safe rule for your guidance that you should not hold any accused guilty unless you find that besides being named or identified by the approver, Mathura, he is also identified by at least two other witnesses.

---

*Cr. A. 577 of 1932

CRIMINAL

1932

HARISH CHANDRA v. KING-EMPEROR

Pullan, J.

The judge does not say that this is the law and he has not directed the jury that it would be illegal for them to convict any person who has not been identified by two witnesses in addition to the approver's statement. It was for the jury either to accept the personal opinion of the judge as to the necessary quantum of evidence or to reject it. In the case of one of these appellants Gajadhar, the jury did not accept the judge's view, for this man was named by the approver and identified in jail by one witness only. The judge accepted the verdict and convicted this man Gajadhar along with the others. I cannot accept the contention of the learned counsel that because the jury did not accept the judge's view as to the requisite amount of evidence which could be held to corroborate the statement of an approver, it was his duty to refuse to accept the verdict and to refer the matter to this Court. On the contrary, the verdict of the jury was in accordance with law and based on the evidence which had been placed before the jury by the judge himself and he could only refer the matter to this Court if he held that the verdict was a perverse verdict and that on the evidence the man was shown to be not guilty. It was not the duty of the judge to refer to this Court a case where the jury have found a man guilty on admissible evidence and evidence which in the eyes of the law is sufficient to justify a conviction.

There is even less to be said about the other appellant Harish Chandra alias Babu who was identified in jail by numerous witnesses and made a sort of half-hearted confession himself. Clearly, if the jury believed that evidence, they were right in convicting this man and there is nothing in the judge's summing up to show that he directed them otherwise, and as in the case of Gajadhar he accepted the verdict and sentenced this man along with the others.

As to the sentence, the judge has pointed out that this was a dacoity in which great brutality was perpetrated on an old man and a woman and that the old man was stabbed with a knife and had his arm broken and the woman was wounded in several places with a spear. In my opinion, the sentence far from being excessive, is barely adequate. I accordingly dismiss these appeals and uphold the conviction and sentences.

Appeal dismissed

CIVIL

1932

Oct. 13

SULAIMAN, C. J.

KISCH, J.

BACHCHAN LAL (Defendant)
versus
NAROTTAM DATT AND OTHERS (Plaintiffs)*

Registration Act, Sec. 17(2) (vi) (as amended by Sec. 10, Transfer of Property Supplementary Act XXI of 1929)—Award—Purporting to divide up movable and immovable property—When compulsorily registrable.

By Section 10 of the Transfer of Property (Amendment) Supplementary Act of 1929 the words "and any award" have been deleted from Section 17(2) (vi) of the Registration Act of 1908 with the result that an award is no longer excepted and if it amounts to a non-testamentary instrument purporting to create, declare, assign, limit or extinguish, whether in the present or in future, any right, title or interest whether vested or contingent, of the value of Rs.100 or upwards to or in immovable property, it is compulsorily registrable.

---

*F. A. F. O. 196 of 1931

Where the award in dispute amounted in substance to a deed of partition purporting to divide up considerable movable and immovable property among the parties to the arbitration and compensations were given by the arbitrators in cash for the differences in the values of the properties allotted to the parties, the entire property being treated as forming part of one estate and the document was not registered within the time allowed by law, held, that the award must be treated as one inseparable document incapable of being split up and being inadmissible in evidence for want of registration, it must be rejected.

Amir Begam v. Badruddin Husain, I. L. R. 36 All. 336 referred to.

FIRST APPEAL from an order of MAULVI MUHAMMAD TAQI KHAN, Subordinate Judge of Farrukhabad.

S. N. Sen, Iqbal Ahmad and Damodar Das for the appellant.

M. L. Chaturvedi for the respondents.

The judgment of the Court was delivered by

Sulaiman, C. J.

SULAIMAN, C. J.—This is a defendant's appeal from an order filing an award which was delivered in an arbitration proceeding without the intervention of the court.

On behalf of the respondents the first objection taken was that in view of the provisions of Paragraph 21, Sub-section (2) no appeal would lie from a decree incorporating the award. This contention overlooks the express provision of Section 104(1) (f) which specifically provides an appeal from an order filing an award as distinct from a decree incorporating the award. There is accordingly no force whatsoever in this objection.

The award is dated March 11, 1931 and the application for filing it was made on May 7, 1931. The award was therefore governed by the amended Transfer of Property Act of 1929 and the amended Registration Act of 1929.

Before the amendment Section 17(2) (vi) of the Indian Registration Act of 1908 made an exception in favour of "any decree or order of a court and any award". Accordingly an award even though it divided up immovable properties was not compulsorily registrable.

By Section 10 of the Transfer of Property (amendment) Supplementary Act of 1929 the words "and any award" have been deleted from the section in the Registration Act. The result therefore is that an award is no longer excepted and if it amounts to a non-testamentary instrument purporting to create, declare, assign, limit or extinguish, whether in the present or in future, any right, title or interest, whether vested or contingent, of the value of Rs.100 or upwards to or in immovable property, it is compulsorily registrable.

There is no doubt that the award in dispute in this case amounts in substance to a deed of partition purporting to divide up considerable movable and immovable property and to allot them to the parties named therein, creating and extinguishing the rights of the other parties in the shares allotted. The document therefore required registration and apparently owing to some oversight or ignorance of the new amendment

CIVIL

1932

BACHCHAN LAL v. NAROTTAM DATT

Sulaiman, C. J.

it was not presented for registration within the time allowed by law.

Under Section 49 of the Registration Act a document, which is compulsorily registrable, if not registered, cannot be received as evidence of any transaction affecting such property.

The court below, therefore, should not have acted upon it and should not have accepted it in evidence. The point that it was not admissible in evidence was raised in the court below, but the court held that registration was not necessary. Apparently its attention was not drawn to the recent amendment. We must accordingly hold that the document is not admissible.

The learned advocate for the respondent has next urged before us that the award is separable and that that portion of it which deals with movable properties should be enforced. There is no doubt that where part of an award is found to be invalid as being in excess of the arbitrator's powers and is separable from the rest, the remainder of the award, being good, can be maintained. Amir Begam v. Badruddin Husain[1]. But in the present case we find that it is not possible to split up the award into two parts. In the first place, Mst. Savitri, a daughter of the deceased, who has been given some rights under it, was no party to the proceedings and she and her heirs have been given interest in some cash and she has been given property in lieu of maintenance and a house for her residence. The immovable and movable properties have been divided among the parties to the arbitration and compensations have been given by the arbitrators in cash for the differences in the values of the properties allotted to the parties. Similarly some maintenance allowance has been provided for Mst. Phundo, another widow, and she also has been given a right of residence in the house, although she is not a party to the proceedings. It is obvious that the arbitrators in making the partition must have taken into account the value of the immovable properties as well as the amount of cash available and distributed them treating the entire property as forming part of the estate. It would not be fair to the parties to split up the award and to make a new award in favour of the respondents. We must treat the award as one inseparable document and being inadmissible in evidence for want of registration we must reject it. The result is that this appeal is allowed, the order of the court below is set aside and the application of the contesting respondents for the filing of the award is dismissed, with costs.

Appeal allowed

CIVIL

1932

Oct. 18

MUKERJI, J.
BENNET, J.

GAURI SINGH AND ANOTHER (Defendants)
versus
BECHU SINGH AND OTHERS (Plaintiffs)*

Mortgage—Usufructuary—"If possession of mortgagees interfered with, mortgagees entitled to sue for money due by sale of property"—Possession over some properties not given—Whether mortgagees entitled to institute suit for sale.

---

*F. A. 246 of 1930

[1] I. L. R. 36 All. 336

A usufructuary mortgage deed provided as follows:—"If the possession of the mortgagees be interfered with in any way, the mortgagees shall have power to bring a claim for delivery of possession, damages and costs, or to realise the entire amount of the mortgage due under the mortgage with interest from my person, mortgaged property and other movable and immovable properties." Out of the properties mortgaged the mortgagees were not put in possession over some and they sued to recover the mortgage money with interest by sale of the mortgaged property. Held, that the clause pre-supposes the possession of the mortgagees and was inapplicable to the present suit in which the only relief the mortgagees can have is for possession and mesne profits.

Lal Nar Singh Pratab Bahadur Singh v. Mohammad Yakub Khan, 1929 A. L. J. 581 distinguished.

S. D. Sinha and B. S. Shastri for the appellants.

P. L. Banerji and Gadadhar Prasad for the respondents.

The judgment of the Court was delivered by

Mukerji, J.

MUKERJI, J.—This appeal is by the first two defendants, and arises out of a suit for sale and other reliefs, instituted on foot of a mortgage dated September 9, 1917. The defendant No. 1, Gauri Singh, on behalf of himself and his then minor son, the defendant No. 2, made the mortgage in suit for a sum of Rs.7,000 and odd. The mortgage was in favour of some of the plaintiffs, the other plaintiffs being joint members of the family with the mortgagees. The plaintiffs' case was that out of the properties mortgaged they were not put in possession over some, and therefore under a clause of the mortgage, they were entitled to recover the mortgage money with interest at 2 per cent per mensem from the date of the mortgage, by sale of the mortgaged property. They accordingly asked for sale in lieu of principal and interest and, in the alternative, they asked for possession and mesne profits.

The suit was contested by the two defendants, who are the appellants before us, but the suit succeeded, and a decree was made for sale in lieu of the principal mortgage money and a reduced sum of interest. The interest claimed was reduced on the ground that the clause relating to interest was penal.

In this Court it has been contended that the clause No. 7, under which the plaintiffs claim a right to sell, did not authorise the plaintiffs to that relief; and we have to construe clause No. 7.

The mortgage deed is printed at page 71 and subsequent pages of our book. The mortgagor says:—

> I, the executant, have therefore executed this mortgage deed promising to pay the same in five years. For payment of interest of the aforesaid sum I have mortgaged with possession to the aforesaid creditors zamindari shares, sir and Khudkasht lands and cultivatory holdings specified below .

The seventh clause is as follows:—

> If the possession of the mortgagees be interfered with in any way, the mortgagees shall have power to bring a claim for delivery of possession, damages and costs, or to realise the entire amount of the mortgage due under the mortgage deed with interest at the rate of 2 per cent per month from this date up to the date of payment from my person, mortgaged property and other movable and immovable properties . .

The contention for the appellants is that the seventh clause gave a right of suit for sale only in the case of the mortgagees being put in possession, and thereafter being dispossessed. It is argued that it does not cover a case where there was initially a failure on the part of the mortgagors to deliver possession.

The learned counsel for the respondents has urged that the clause No. 7 covers both the cases of failure to deliver possession initially and a case of subsequent dispossession.

We have looked into the vernacular, and we find that the official translation contained in our book is correct. The clause presupposes the possession of the mortgagees, and then provides as to what would happen when the mortgagees' possession is interfered with. This being our view of the clause, we find that there is no provision as to what would happen in the case of the mortgagors failing to deliver possession initially.

The learned counsel for the respondent has relied on a decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council, namely, Lal Nar Singh Partab Bahadur Singh v. Mohammad Yakub Khan[1]. He has contended that their Lordships have laid down, as a general rule of law that where, in the case of a usufructuary mortgage, a mortgagee has a right to sue for the mortgage money, he is entitled also to sue for the sale of the property. We have carefully read that judgment and are of opinion that their Lordships did not lay down any general rule of law, but confined their remarks to the peculiar language of the mortgage deed before them. At p. 581 of the Report their Lordships quoted clause No. 2, and pointed out that there was a hypothecation of the mortgaged property in lieu of the mortgage money and interest. That being the case, their Lordships remarked that as the mortgage money became payable by virtue of Sec. 66 of the Transfer of Property Act, the mortgage money was realisable under the contract by a suit for sale instituted under Section 67 of the Transfer of Property Act.

There being no clause providing specifically for a case in which the mortgagee is not given possession over a part of the property, the only relief which the mortgagees can have is for possession and mesne profits. These reliefs were asked for by the respondents in the alternative.

Holding that clause 7 does not apply to the present case, and it being admitted before us that on the finding of the court below the mortgagees are entitled to possession over the tenancies at fixed rate alone, we modify the decree of the court below and give the plaintiffs a decree for possession over the fixed rate tenancies in suit, and to three years' mesne profits prior to the institution of the suit, and to mesne profits from the date of the institution of the suit till recovery of possession, or three years from this date, whichever event may happen earlier. The court below will ascertain the amount of mesne profits which has accrued prior to the institution of the suit. As regards costs, we direct that the parties shall receive and pay costs in both the courts in proportion to their respective success and failure. As the assessment of costs payable would depend on the amount of mesne profits allowed to the plaintiffs prior to the institution of the suit, costs cannot be calculated properly in this Court. The court below will ascertain the costs payable by the parties and will insert the same in the decree. The decree of this Court will mention this direction and will state what costs have been incurred by each party in this Court.

---

[1] 1929 A. L. J. 581

CIVIL
1932
GAURI SINGH
v.
BECHU SINGH
Mukerji, J.

Decree modified

PANNA LAL SHAM LAL (THROUGH PANNA LAL) (Objector)
versus
ABDULLAH USMAN AND OTHERS (Insolvents)*

CIVIL
1932
Oct. 18
SULAIMAN, C. J.
IQBAL AHMAD, J.

Provincial Insolvency Act (V of 1920), Sec. 5 and Civil Procedure Code; Sec. 144 —Payment made under an order of insolvency court—Order set aside on appeal—Whether insolvency court has jurisdiction to order refund.

The insolvency court ordered the receiver after annulling the adjudication to distribute the assets of the debtor among the scheduled creditors. Before the High Court set aside this order as ultra vires, the receiver had made payments in pursuance of the order. Held, that Sec. 144 C. P. C. applied and the insolvency court had jurisdiction to order that the person who had received payments should be called upon to refund the amount to the receiver.

FIRST APPEAL from an order of L. V. ARDAGH ESQ., District Judge of Jhansi.

N. C. Vaish for the appellant.

B. Malik and Hari Ram Jha for the respondents.

The judgment of the Court was delivered by

Sulaiman, C. J.

SULAIMAN, C. J.—This is an appeal by the firm Panna Lal Sham Lal and arises out of certain insolvency proceedings. It appears that this firm brought a suit against the debtor to recover Rs.1,200 and odd or in the alternative 100 bags of grain. It also appears that these bags were attached before judgment. While the suit was pending an application was made by some creditors for the debtor to be adjudged an insolvent and a receiver was appointed who took actual charge of the 100 bags along with other properties of the debtor. The appellants obtained their decree on March 14, 1927 while the application for insolvency was pending, and as a result their claim for the recovery of the amount and in lieu thereof of the 100 bags was decreed. This was followed by an order of adjudication with direction to the insolvent to apply for discharge within one year.

The appellants Panna Lal and Sham Lal filed an application in insolvency court claiming three alternative reliefs. They asked for the 100 bags to be given to them or in the alternative for their price or again in the alternative to be entered as scheduled creditors. For some reason or other, the court did not consider it expedient to grant the first two prayers, but ordered that the appellant should be entered on the schedule as creditors.

On the expiry of one year it was found that the insolvent had failed to apply for his discharge. The court accordingly annulled the order of adjudication. It went on to direct the receiver to retain possession of the assets of the debtor and to distribute them among the creditors who were entered in the schedule. It may be noted that the appellants were ordered to be entered as scheduled creditors and their prayer for the bags to be handed over to them was not granted. Two days later than the annulment of the order of adjudication, an application was made by other creditors to be entered in the schedule and their application was dismissed. When the matter came up in appeal to the High Court, the High Court dismissed the appeal inasmuch as no appeal lay, but on the revisional side intervened and set aside the order under which the receiver had been directed to distribute the assets. The Bench pointed out that such an order was illegal and ultra vires because the court could not have ordered the receiver after annulling the adjudication to distribute the assets and all that could be done under Section 37 of the Act was either to restore the property to the debtor leaving the ordinary remedy open to the creditors or to order the property to vest in some specified person.

---

*F. A. F. O. 21 of 1932

When the case went back to the court below it was discovered that the receiver in pursuance of the order directing distribution of the assets made by the District Judge had already made some payments. Part of the amounts realized had been paid to the present appellants Panna Lal Sham Lal. The learned District Judge has therefore thought that these persons should be asked to refund the amounts which they received on distribution by the receiver and he has ordered accordingly. He has not allowed the prayer of the appellants for payment to them of the price of 100 bags sold by the receiver.

In appeal the order of the learned Judge is challenged.

It seems to us that the provisions of Section 5 of the Provincial Insolvency Act (Act V of 1920) give power to the insolvency court similar to those conferred on ordinary civil courts in the exercise of their original civil jurisdiction. Under Section 144 C. P. C. where a decree is varied or reversed the court of first instance has power to order restitution so as to place the parties in the position which they would have occupied, but for such a decree or order which was subsequently varied or reversed. It seems to us that the learned District Judge had jurisdiction to order that as a result of the setting aside of the order directing the receiver to distribute the assets, the persons who have received payments under the distribution should be called upon to refund the amount to the receiver. His order to that extent is therefore correct.

As regards the contention of the appellants that they are to be allowed to have the price of the 100 bags inasmuch as they had attached these bags before the adjudication of the insolvent, we are of opinion that this is not a matter with which we can deal in these proceedings. Now that the adjudication has been annulled and the debtor is no longer insolvent, the appellants are in a position to pursue their ordinary remedies. Their proper course may be to go to the execution court for redress.

We accordingly dismiss this appeal. The appellants must pay the costs of the receiver.

Appeal dismissed

Civil

1932

Oct. 18

Mukerji, A. C. J. Bennet, J

SARNAM PRASAD AND ANOTHER (Defendants)
versus
SUNDER SAHU AND OTHERS (Plaintiffs)*

Tenancy Act (II of 1901), Sec. 25—Sub-lease by occupancy tenant—When document necessary—Sub-lessee out of possession must prove title in order to regain possession—Omission of landlord to have illegal sub-lease cancelled—Effect of.

No document is necessary for the creation of a valid sub-lease in a case where the occupancy tenant sub-lets his land for one year, and at the close of one year he agrees that the tenant, who has already paid one year's rent, should hold the land for another year.

Where a sub-lessee is in possession, he can be ousted only by a person who has a better title and a right to maintain a suit. If the landlord comes to court for the cancellation of an illegal sub-lease after the expiry of one year, he would be put out of court on the ground of limitation and the sub-lessee without title would continue. Where the sub-lessee was out of possession, the mere fact that the landlord had omitted to sue within one year would not give him a title. He could succeed only if he could prove a title and a right to possession.

The plaintiffs took possession of certain plots in 1924 under an oral sub-lease from the occupancy tenant and remained in possession for over a year when they were dispossessed by the defendants. Nearly three years after dispossession the plaintiffs brought the present suit for possession and based their title on the oral sub-lease. Held, that the oral sub-lease could last for only one year and at the end of the year it expired, and the plaintiffs having no title could not succeed.

Letters Patent Appeal against the judgment of the Hon'ble Mr. Justice Kendall.

Ambika Prasad for the appellants.

A. Sanyal for the respondents.

The judgment of the Court was delivered by

Mukerji, A. C. J.

Mukerji, A. C. J.—This appeal is by the defendants Nos. 1 and 2, and arose under the following circumstances:—

One Rameshwar Koeri, the defendant No. 3, has a daughter Dariyai Kunwar, who is married to the defendant No. 1, Sarnam Prasad. Dariyai Kunwar's son is Hardeo. It appears that there was some dispute between Rameshwar Koeri, on the one side, and his daughter and daughter's son, on the other, as regards the occupancy holding of Rameshwar Koeri. The daughter and the daughter's son had no interest in the occupancy holding during the life-time of Rameshwar Koeri, but the daughter's son was entitled to succeed after the death of Rameshwar Koeri, provided the daughter's son shared in the cultivation at the time of the tenant's death. There was a compromise between Rameshwar, on the one hand, and the daughter and the daughter's son and son-in-law, on the other, on April 24, 1924, which was filed in the revenue court in proceedings relating to rectification of a Khatauni, and it was agreed that the names of the daughter and the daughter's son should be entered in the village papers, that Rameshwar would retain his right to let out the plots without the consent of his daughter or daughter's son and that his son-in-law, Sarnam Prasad, would pay off the entire debts contracted by Rameshwar Koeri and would relinquish the amount of the simple money decree which he had obtained against his father-in-law.

---

*L. P. A. 32 of 1932

The plaintiffs, who are the respondent before us, and who unfortunately are unrepresented in this Letters Patent appeal, came to court for obtaining possession of certain plots being part of the occupancy holding of Rameshwar and for mesne profits and damages for taking the crops on these allegations. They said that Rameshwar had let out the lands to them and they raised the crop in Kharif and Rabbi of 1332 fasli. About the beginning of 1333 fasli, which would be July 1925, the defendants, namely, Sarnam Prasad, the son-in-law, and a relation of his, defendant No. 2, began to create mischief. The plaintiffs had grown bajra in July 1925 and the defendants cut the same in October 1925, and in November 1925 the defendants altogether dispossessed the plaintiffs. The plaintiffs accordingly claimed a decree for possession, for Rs.50 as damages for the value of the bajra crop sown by them and further they claimed mesne profits from Kharif 1333 fasli to the delivery of possession of the property in suit to the plaintiffs.

The suit was defended by the two principal defendants Nos. 1 and 2, the third defendant being Rameshwar himself. The defendant No. 1 stated that he was cultivating the land on behalf of his wife and son, and that Rameshwar Koeri was in collusion with the plaintiffs. Rameshwar Koeri filed a written statement supporting the plaintiff's case.

The suit succeeded in the court of first instance, which decreed the claim for possession and for Rs.50 as damages and directed investigation into the amount of mesne profits in the execution department. There was an appeal by the defendants Nos. 1 and 2, and it was unsuccessful, except in this that the lower appellate court reduced the amount of damages which had been decreed to the plaintiffs.

An appeal was filed in this Court, and the learned single judge has dismissed the appeal.

The principal point taken before us, which was also taken before the learned single judge, was that the plaintiffs had no title to the property. The argument is this. The occupancy holding could be sub-let under the law only by a registered instrument, if the lease was to be from year to year for a period exceeding one year. No document is forthcoming to establish the lease. If the lease was granted in July 1924 (early in 1332 fasli), it could last for only one year and at the end of the year it expired. A fresh lease for one year could be granted by Rameshwar, but it is not proved that it was granted. The plaintiffs were dispossessed in November 1925 or about the middle of the agricultural year 1333. The suit was filed in July 1928 when the agricultural year 1336 had commenced. When the plaintiffs were out of possession and the defendants Nos. 1 and 2 were in possession, it was not open to Rameshwar to make a lease for even one year when Rameshwar himself was out of possession. The ordinary practice no doubt is that a zamindar or occupancy tenant lets or sub-lets his land for one year, and at the close of one

CIVIL

1932

SARNAM PRASAD
v.
SUNDER SAHU

Mukerji,
A. C. J.

year he agrees that the tenant, who has already paid one year's rent, should hold the land for another year. In such cases a sub-lease is brought to an end at the end of the previous year. For such leases no document would be needed. But in this case the plaintiffs admit that they were in possession for 1½ years and they were dispossessed in November 1925. There could be no question, therefore, of any renewal of the lease for 1334, 1335 or 1336 fasli. The plaintiffs are claiming as if they held the lease which was granted to them in Kuar 1332 (see the statement of the plaintiff Imdad Ali) and that the lease subsists so that it entitled the plaintiffs to claim possession of the property.

We are of opinion that this argument is valid, and is supported by Section 25 of the N. W. P. Tenancy Act of 1901, which was in force when the alleged lease of Kuar 1332 fasli was granted.

In this view, the claim for possession must fail, and also the claim for mesne profits, but the claim for damages decreed by the court below must stand, which was in respect of the kharif crop of 1333 fasli.

We accordingly modify the decrees of this Court and the court below and dismiss the claim for possession and mesne profits. The decree granted by the lower appellate court for the sum of Rs.20 as the value of the bajra crop sown by the plaintiffs and misappropriated by the defendants Nos. 1 and 2 stands.

In view of the fact that this point of law which has succeeded in this Court was not taken in the court of first instance and was taken in the lower appellate court but was not properly pressed before that court, we direct that the parties shall bear their own costs throughout.

The above draft judgment was dictated without hearing the respondents. Mr. Sanyal, a learned counsel of this Court, then intimated to us that he had received instructions to appear in this case, but by an oversight had omitted to file his notice of engagement. We accordingly permitted him to argue the appeal for the respondents. We have heard the learned counsel, and his argument is this.

A lease for five years, although oral, is good against all the world if the landlord has omitted to sue to avoid the lease. The period of limitation for a suit by the landlord is one year. It may be true that if the period of the one year expires the landlord will have to submit to the lease for five years, for the simple reason that he has no right of suit after the expiry of one year. But from this it does not follow that the so-called sub-lessee has a title of his own. In the case where he is in possession, he can be ousted only by a person who has a better title and has a right to maintain a suit. If the landlord comes to court after the expiry of one year, he would be put out of court on the ground of limitation, and the sub-lessee without title would continue. In the case before us the alleged sub-lessee is the plaintiff, and he must prove his title. The mere fact that the landlord has omitted to sue within one year will not give him a title. Admittedly the plaintiffs are out of possession, and they can succeed only if they can prove a title and a right to possession.

We see no reason to alter the draft judgment which we dictated before, and we accordingly pass the order already dictated.

CIVIL

1932

Oct. 26

IQBAL AHMAD, J.
BAJPAI, J.

BOHRA PANNA LAL (Defendant)

versus

BASDEO (Plaintiff)*

Tenancy Act (III of 1926), Sec. 253 and Civil Procedure Code, Or. 9, Rules 8 and 9—Suit for profits—Dismissed for want of prosecution—Suit subsequently restored—Whether High Court can revise order restoring suit.

Where a suit for profits, which had been adjourned several times to enable plaintiff to produce evidence, was ultimately dismissed "for want of prosecution" and the court subsequently granted plaintiff's application for restoration, held, that the order dismissing the suit was one under Or. 9, R. 8 and could be set aside under Or. 9, R. 9 C. P. C. or under Sec. 151. In either case the order was not appealable to the District Judge and therefore no revision lay to the High Court under Section 253 C. P. C.

CIVIL REVISION from an order of BABU BISHESHAR NATH, Assistant Collector, first class, of Etah.

Binod Behari Lal for the applicant.

G. S. Pathak for the opposite party.

The judgment of the Court was delivered by

Iqbal Ahmad, J.

IQBAL AHMAD, J.—This is an application in revision by the defendant from an order of an Assistant Collector of the first class setting aside an order of dismissal of a suit for profits and restoring the suit to its original number. A preliminary objection has been taken to the hearing of this application on the ground that no revision lies to this Court.

The suit for profits was filed on July 18, 1931. The suit was adjourned on several occasions to enable the plaintiff to produce evidence and ultimately on November 20, 1931 the suit was adjourned with a view to enable the plaintiff to produce the patwari along with the Khatauni. The next date fixed in the case was January 18, 1932. On that date the plaintiff failed to produce the patwari or the khatauni, and the court dismissed the suit "for want of prosecution". On the same date, viz., January 18, 1932 the plaintiff filed an application for the setting aside of the dismissal of the suit and for its being restored to its original number. It was not stated in the application as to whether the application was an application for review under Order 47, or an application under Order 9, Rule 9 C. P. C. The application was put up before the learned Assistant Collector on the same date and he passed the following order:—

> The defendants, who are present, shall file objection, if any, by tomorrow.

The Assistant Collector proceeded to deal with the application on January 19, 1932. The defendant was not present in court and then the Assistant Collector recorded the following order:—

> The defendants have failed to file any objections. They did not even turn up when called today. The case is restored.

In the order quoted above the Assistant Collector did not state as to whether he was restoring the suit under Order 9, Rule 9 C. P. C., or that he purported to pass the order under Order 47, Rule 4 C. P. C.

---

*Civ. Rev. 163 of 1932

The defendant being aggrieved by this order has come in revision to this Court. In support of the preliminary objection Mr. Pathak relies on Sections 248 and 253 of the Agra Tenancy Act, Act III of 1926. Section 253 of the Act provides that the High Court may call for the record of any suit or application which has been decided by any subordinate revenue court and in which an appeal lies to the District Judge and in which no appeal lies to the High Court provided the subordinate revenue court appears to have exercised a jurisdiction not vested in it by law, or to have failed to exercise a jurisdiction so vested, or to have acted in the exercise of its jurisdiction illegally or with material irregularity. It is clear from the provisions of this section that the revisional powers of the High Court under the Agra Tenancy Act are restricted to cases in which the decree or the order sought to be revised is appealable to the District Judge. Section 248(3) of the Act provides for appeals against orders mentioned in Sections 47 and 104 and in Order 43, Rule 1 C. P. C. and the appeals against such orders lie to the court having jurisdiction under Section 242 of the Act to entertain appeals from the decrees in the suit, or in the case of applications for execution having jurisdiction to hear an appeal from the decree which is being executed. By Section 242 the District Judge is empowered to entertain appeals from certain decrees. It is manifest therefore that unless an order comes within Section 47 or Section 104 or Order 43, Rule 1 C. P. C. no appeal lies to the District Judge. In the present case it is contended by Mr. Pathak that the order dated January 19, 1932, passed by the Assistant Collector, was an order under Order 9, Rule 9 C. P. C. and as by that order he granted the application for restoration of the suit, no appeal against that order lay under Order 43, Rule 1 C. P. C. and, therefore, that order was not appealable to the District Judge, and as such the provisions of Section 253 of the Agra Tenancy Act have no application, and accordingly we cannot revise that order.

The learned counsel for the applicant, on the other hand, argues that the order dated January 18, 1932 was an order in substance if not in fact under Order 17, Rule 3 C. P. C. dismissing the suit on the merits and not an order under Order 9, Rule 8 of the Code, and therefore, the Assistant Collector could set aside that order only by exercising his powers under Order 47, Rule 4 and not under Order 9, Rule 9 C. P. C. He maintains that the learned Assistant Collector must be taken to have done that which he was competent by law to do, and as the counsel for the parties were present on January 18, 1932, the Assistant Collector could not dismiss the suit for default and that the only course open to him was to proceed to decide the case on the merits under Order 17, Rule 3, or to adjourn the same in accordance with the provisions of Order 17, Rule 1 of the Code. He, therefore, maintains that the order dated January 19, 1932 was an order under Order 47, Rule 4 C. P. C. and therefore appealable under Order 43, Rule 1 (w) C. P. C. and as the order was passed in a suit for profits valued at more than Rs.200 the order was appealable to the District Judge and as such is capable of being revised by this Court under Section 253 of the Act.

We are unable to agree with the contention of the learned counsel for the applicant. It is clear that if the order sought to be revised was an order under Order 9, Rule 9 C. P. C. granting an application for restoration of a suit dismissed for default the order was not appealable to the District Judge and therefore not capable of being revised by this Court. On the contrary if the order was an order under Order 47, Rule 4, the contention of the learned counsel for the applicant must prevail.

By the order dated January 18, 1932 the Assistant Collector did not decide the suit on the merits. We have quoted above the aforesaid order. The Assistant Collector did not make any reference in that order to the evidence that had already been produced in the case. He did not by that order examine the merits of the plaintiff's claim, nor did he deal with the validity or otherwise of the defence raised by the contesting defendant. He clearly in that order expressed himself as dismissing the suit "for want of prosecution." Such a decision cannot be characterized as a decision on the merits. The order professed to be an order dismissing the suit for default of the plaintiff. We, therefore, are unable to hold that the order was either in fact or in form or in substance a decision of the suit on the merits. It follows therefore that the order did not come within the purview of Order 17, Rule 3 of the Code. The only other rule in the Code under which the order could be passed is Rule 8 of Order 9 C. P. C. That rule allows a court to dismiss a suit for default of appearance by the plaintiff. It is true that the learned counsel for the plaintiff was present on the date that the order was passed and therefore the order dismissing the suit for default was not in accordance with the law, but we are not concerned with the question whether the order dismissing the suit was the proper order to pass. We have to decide the validity or otherwise of the preliminary objection by reference to the order actually passed by the learned Assistant Collector. It may have been a wholly wrong and indefensible order but if the order was one under Order 9, Rule 8 C. P. C., as we hold it was, it could be set aside by the Assistant Collector under Order 9, Rule 9 C. P. C. or under the inherent jurisdiction vested in courts by Section 151 C. P. C. In either case the order was not appealable to the District Judge and, therefore, Section 253 of the Tenancy Act has no application to the case. It follows therefore that the preliminary objection is well founded and ought to prevail.

Apart from this even if the order was revisable by this Court, we would be slow to interfere with the order of the court below in the exercise of our revisional jurisdiction. The suit was by the plaintiff against the lambardar for his share of the profits of the mahal. The Assistant Collector in dismissing the suit on January 18, 1932 did not bring to bear on the facts of the case a judicial mind. Indeed he never considered the merits of the plaintiff's claim. Even if an order is revisable by this Court, this Court is not bound to interfere with such orders and in the present case it seems desirable that the case should be tried on the merits.

For the reasons given above we dismiss this application. Costs here and hitherto shall be costs in the cause and shall abide the result.

Application dismissed

CRIMINAL

1932

July 19

PULLAN, J.

DAKHANI AND OTHERS
versus
KING-EMPEROR

Criminal Procedure Code, Sec. 418(1)—'Trial was by jury'—Meaning of—Offence triable with aid of assessors—In fact tried by jury—Appeal on matter of law only.

The words, "when the trial was by jury", in Sec. 418, Criminal Procedure Code, mean "when the trial in fact was by jury" and not "when the trial should have been by jury."

Under Sec. 418, Criminal Procedure Code, where an accused person is convicted by a jury on a charge which ought to have been tried with the aid of assessors, an appeal lies on matters of law only and not on matters of fact.

K.-E. v. Parbhu Shankar, I. L. R. 25 Bom. 680 followed.

Where appellants were charged under Sec. 325|149 and Sec. 148 Penal Code and the Sessions Judge believing that this was a case which under Sec. 269 Cr. P. C. should be tried by a jury for one of the offences committed, and with the aid of the jurors as assessors for another, impanelled a jury and instructed the jury to give an opinion on the evidence as to the charge under Sec. 325|149 Penal Code and took their opinion as assessors on the charge under Sec. 148 Penal Code, held, that the charge was not under Sec. 325 (which is triable by a jury) but Sec. 325|149 and the wording of the charge showed that the essential part of the offence was rioting, and the case was not therefore triable by a jury but by a judge with the aid of assessors and the opinion given by the jury was a verdict which could only be challenged on questions of law.

CRIMINAL APPEAL from an order of BABU HARIHAR PRASAD, Sessions Judge of Allahabad.

F. Owen O'Neill, R. C. Ghatak and S. P. Sanyal for the appellants.

Sankar Saran (Government Pleader) for the Crown.

The following judgment was delivered by

Pullan, J.

PULLAN, J.—The seven appellants have been tried in circumstances which give rise to certain questions of law. The charge framed against them was drawn up in the following terms:—

> That you on or about the 18th day of June, 1931, were members of an unlawful assembly and in prosecution of the common object of beating Bahadur and his son Mahabir, some of the members voluntarily caused grievous hurt to Bahadur and you are thereby under Section 149 I. P. C. guilty of causing the said grievous hurt and simple hurts to Bahadur and Mahabir and thereby committed an offence punishable under Sec. 325|149 and Sec. 148 I. P. C.

Certain offences are in the Allahabad Judgeship triable by a jury. The Sessions Judge believing that this was a case which under Sec. 269 Cr. P. C. should be tried by a jury for one of the offences committed, and with the aid of the jurors as assessors for another, impanelled a jury and instructed the jury to give an opinion on the evidence as to the charge under Sec. 325|149 I. P. C. and took their opinion as assessors on the charge under Sec. 148 I. P. C. This procedure is rendered necessary

*Cr. A. 100 of 1932

by the terms of the Criminal Procedure Code where persons are charged with several offences, some of which are triable by a jury and others not. In the present case there is only one offence charged against these persons. It is an offence of rioting in the course of which they caused certain injuries. The judge had to consider whether that offence was one which could or could not be tried by a jury. In this province all offences of rioting, which are contained in Chapter VIII of the Indian Penal Code, are excluded from jury trial. The judge appears to have thought that by adding Sec. 325 which is triable by a jury, he brought this case within their jurisdiction. The judge was mistaken. The charge was not under Sec. 325 but Sec. 325|149, and the wording of the charge shows that the essential part of the offence was rioting. This is indeed inevitable in any case where Sec. 149 is employed for the basis of that section is that the persons who are held to be jointly responsible for an offence were committing that offence as members of an unlawful assembly, and were, therefore, where the offence was one involving the use of violence, as in the present case, rioting, within the definition of "rioting" given in the Penal Code. This case, therefore, was not triable by a jury. It was triable by a judge with the aid of assessors. Section 536 Cr. P. C. enacts that if an offence triable with the aid of assessors is tried by a jury the trial shall not "on that ground only be invalid". Opinions have been expressed in various High Courts that these words mean that a verdict given by a jury in a case which should have been tried with the aid of assessors can be regarded as the opinion of assessors, and the trial may stand not as a trial by a jury but as a trial with the aid of assessors. This view was held by one of two Judges in the case of Pattikadan Ummaru v. Emperor[1]and a similar view seems to have been taken by the Calcutta High Court in the case of Empress v. Mohim Chunder Rai[2]. The difficulty in accepting this view is that a jury gives a single opinion. Assessors must give their opinions separately. Consequently the verdict of a jury given as such is not and cannot be the same as the separate opinions of the members of the jury. I have no doubt that on this point I should follow the decision of a Full Bench of five judges in the Bombay High Court in the case of K.-E. v. Parbhu Shankar[3]. I cannot do better than quote the observations of Jenkins, C. J. at p. 688 of the Report:—

> I propose to confine myself to the words of the Code, though, in doing so, I will bear in mind what has been held in the several cases mentioned and discussed in the referring judgment. Section 404 of the Criminal Procedure Code provides that 'no appeal shall lie from any judgment or order of a Criminal Court except as provided for by this Code or by any other law for the time being in force,' and under Section 418 'an appeal may lie on a matter of fact as well as a matter of law except where the trial was by jury, in which case the appeal will lie on a matter of law only.' At the same time it is provided by Section 536 that 'if an offence triable with the aid of assessors is tried by a jury, the trial shall not on that ground only be invalid.'
>
> These sections are clear and need no paraphrase. The first question they suggest is, whether in this particular case the trial was by jury. The record leaves no doubt in my mind on this point; for the events of the

---

[1] I. L. R. 26 Mad. 243

[2] I. L. R. 3 Cal. 765

[3] I. L. R. 25 Bom. 680

> trial absolutely negative the view that the accused was tried by the Court of Sessions with the aid of the jurors as assessors.
>
> The offence, therefore, though triable with the aid of assessors, was in fact tried by a jury. This irregularity did not invalidate the trial; but did it attract the consequences of Section 418? This turns on the precise force in that section of the words 'where the trial was by jury'. Do they mean 'where the trial should have been by jury' or 'where the trial in fact was by jury'? In my opinion the words are themselves the clearest answer to this question: they relate to what actually occurred, not to what should have occurred. An adoption of the rival view would lead to the result that a reversal of the conditions would leave an accused who was wrongly tried with the aid of assessors, without any right of appeal, though the scheme of the Code shows that in the view of the Legislature it is less advantageous to an accused to be tried with the aid of assessors than by a jury. I would under the circumstances answer the reference by saying that in the present case no appeal lies on a matter of fact.

Thus the opinion given by the jury in this case is a verdict which can only be challenged on questions of law.

I have been referred to no case where a trial has been from beginning to end conducted as a jury trial where there was no offence charged which could in law have been tried by a jury. This is, however, the case here, and one of the grounds of appeal is that there has been a misdirection of the jury. In my opinion this objection must prevail.

From beginning to end the charge is a misdirection as it required the jury to give an opinion on a riot which a jury cannot be required to give under the law as enacted in this province. It is not the case that the Judge made any attempt to confine the attention of the jury to the causing of grievous hurt. He states in his summing up that the law applicable is laid down in Sections 141, 142, 146, 147, 148, 149, 323, 325 and 320 I. P. C., and he read and explained all those sections to the jurors. The jury therefore were bound to consider this case as a case of rioting, and not as a case of individual assaults; and this is further emphasised by another error made by the Judge in the summing up when he failed entirely to point out to the jury that they were required to give an opinion as to the guilt of each of the persons charged. He has throughout regarded the accused as a body of men and not as individuals. And there is still a third error in his charge when he states that if the jury found the accused not guilty of the graver offence of 325 and 148 it will be open to them to find them guilty of the minor offences under Sections 323 and 147. But this Section 147 is absolutely excluded from trial by a jury. The jury then returned a verdict of guilty in the majority of 3 to 2, and this would normally mean that 3 of the jurors had found all the accused guilty and 2 of them found them as innocent. It was, however, explained by one of the jurors that this was not their verdict. Consequently the verdict contains a rider to the effect that one of the two dissenting gentlemen held that three of the accused were not guilty, and the others were guilty. In my opinion, therefore, the trial by a jury is vitiated by misdirection. In the circumstances of this case there can be no question of a retrial as the case was not triable by a jury at all, and the jury gave their opinion as assessors on the charge under Sec. 148 which, in my opinion, was the same charge as that which they had tried as a jury under another name. An appeal against this trial with the aid of assessors can be heard on questions of fact, and I have accordingly heard the arguments on behalf of all the seven appellants.

The facts may be stated very briefly. On June 18, 1931, at 6 o'clock in the morning two reports were made at the police station of Dhoomanganj. The first was made by Bahadur, who accused five men, Dakhani, Bhopua, Chunna, Parshadi and Anandi, of beating him and his son Mahabir with lathis. He said that these men attacked him and his son at 3 o'clock in the morning while they were asleep on their chabutra, and that his son was left there injured. He himself showed the marks of three injuries, one being a contused wound on the head. The second report was made by Baijnath who was accompanied by Dakhani, one of the persons accused by Bahadur, and in this report Bahadur and 11 other men named were charged with the murder of one Bachu. Both Baijnath and Dakhani showed trifling injuries. Investigation proved the injuries received by Mahabir and also the fatal injuries received by Bachu. Both parties were prosecuted, Dakhani and his friends for the assault of Bahadur and Mahabir, and Bahadur and his friends for the fatal assault on Bachu. The two affairs were clearly kept separate because the bed on which Mahabir was sleeping was covered with blood, and it was alleged on the other hand that Bachu was killed in a field. The Judge who tried the case under appeal also tried the persons charged for the murder of Bachu, and acquitted them. His judgment in the murder case, to which he makes reference in the present case, is before me. Clearly his opinion is, and it is also the opinion of the assessors, that an assault was committed on Bahadur and Mahabir while they were asleep and that their supporters retaliated by attacking Bachu, Dakhani, Baijnath and others and killing Bachu. The assault must have commenced with the attack on Bahadur and Mahabir as they were lying in bed, as the blood stains cannot be explained away on any other hypothesis. Mahabir is not mentioned as one of the persons who helped to murder Bachu. In the same way Bachu and Baijnath are not mentioned in the report by Bahadur. But this fact goes to suggest that the theory of the first attack by Dakhani's party and the subsequent retaliation by the party of Bahadur is a true version of the affair. When this case came into Court the names of Baiju and Gharib had been added, and from time to time inconsistent statements were made both by Bahadur and his son Mahabir as to the identity of the actual assailants. Bahadur after naming 5 persons in his first report named 9 before the police and 7 in Court; whereas Mahabir in his statement to the police mentioned 5 persons, and they were Gharib and Shamlal, who were not in the first report, and Anandi, Chunni and Bhopua, who were in the first report. As usual in such cases the evidence is not that of the persons who were named in the first instance as being present; but the reason of this is that the persons named as present were closely connected with Shamlal, one of the men charged principally with the murder of Bachu, and this accounts for the fact that Shamlal himself and his father Hannu avoided the witness box. In such case I always lay great

CRIMINAL
1932
DAKHANI
v.
KING-EMPEROR
Pullan, J.

stress on the report and look with suspicion on any names added afterwards. When the first report was made Mahabir had as good materials for naming the assailants as he had at a later date, and none of the five persons mentioned in the first report are able to satisfy me that they did not take part in this riot. The five assessors gave an opinion on this charge which is at variance with their verdict given as a jury. The first assessor found all the accused not guilty; the second assessor found them all not guilty under Section 148 but guilty under Sec. 147; the third assessor found Dakhani, Chunni and Parshadi not guilty under Sec. 148 but guilty under Sec. 147 and acquitted the other three; the fourth and fifth assessors found them all guilty under Sec. 147 but not under Sec. 148. The Judge having already sentenced these persons to nine months' R. I. on the verdict of the jury, which I have set aside, sentenced all of them to one year's R. I. under Sec. 147, I. P. C., the sentences to run concurrently. It is not a satisfactory decision because whatever offence these persons committed they certainly committed the offence of a criminal assault with lathis on the persons of Mahabir and Bahadur of which they must now be considered to have been acquitted. I do not know why the judge considered that a simple offence of rioting was more serious than the offence of causing hurt in the course of a riot, for that is the view which he has given expression to in the sentence inflicted. I do not, however, propose to interfere with the sentence as this appears to have been an unprovoked assault in the night on sleeping men. But the persons who are not mentioned in the first report should in my opinion be acquitted.

I accordingly allow the appeals of Baiju and Gharib, set aside their convictions and sentences and declare them to be acquitted. In the case of Dakhani, Bhopua, Chunni, Parshadi and Anandi I set aside their conviction and sentence under Sections 323|149 but uphold their conviction and sentence under Sec. 147 I. P. C. These five men will accordingly surrender to their bail and serve out the remainder of their sentence.

Appeals allowed

MANNU NAIK AND ANOTHER (Applicants)
versus
MATHURA PRASAD AND OTHERS (Opposite parties)*

CIVIL
1932
Oct. 14
SULAIMAN, C. J.
KISCH, J.

Civil Procedure Code, Or. 21, R. 89—Several items sold on same date—Judgment-debtor's application for setting aside of sale of one item only on payment of its price and penalty—Whether can be allowed.

Where several items were sold on one and the same date and the judgment-debtor applied to have the sale of one item set aside on payment of its price plus the penalty and claimed reduction on account of the prices paid by the auction-purchasers of the other items, held, that the amount which the judgment-debtor need not deposit is the sum which has been received by the decree-holder between the date of the proclamation and the date of the deposit or, at any rate, before the expiry of 30 days from the date of the sale, and inasmuch as the sale of the

*F. A. F. O. 193 of 1931

CIVIL

1932

MANNU NAIK
v.
MATHURA PRASAD

other items cannot be confirmed before the expiry of the prescribed 30 days and the decree-holder has therefore no right to apply for the payment of the money to him, he cannot be taken to have 'received' the prices of the other items within the meaning of O. 21, R. 89 C. P. C.

Panna Lal v. Bhola Nath, 1930 A. I. R. All. 483 considered.

FIRST APPEAL from an order of C. DEB BANERJI ESQ., Subordinate Judge of Azamgarh.

K. N. Katju and A. Sanyal for the appellants.

K. Verma for the respondents.

The judgment of the Court was delivered by

Sulaiman, C. J.

SULAIMAN, C. J.—This is an appeal from an order disallowing an application under Order 21, Rule 89, for the setting aside of a sale. It appears that in execution of a mortgage decree 12 items of properties mortgaged were sold on the same date, namely, June 24, 1931 in 12 separate lots and they fetched different prices, which were noted. The auction-purchasers also were different. On July 21, 1931 the mortgagees from the judgment-debtors of one of the items filed an application under O. 21, R. 89 for the setting aside of the sale of the item which had been sold for Rs.5,500. They deposited the sum of Rs.5,500 plus the penalty of 5 per cent but did not deposit the whole of the decretal amount for which the properties had been put up for sale.

The learned Subordinate Judge confirmed all the sales in September 1931. He disallowed the application of the mortgagees on the ground that it was not open to them to apply under that rule to have the sale set aside of some only of the lots.

It is contended before us in appeal that inasmuch as the sales of the other lots were confirmed and, in fact, no applications for the setting aside of those sales were ever made it must be taken that the decree-holders had received the balance of the amount, and it was therefore open to the judgment-debtors to have the sale of this particular item set aside on payment of its price plus the penalty.

There is no doubt that when properties are sold for separate prices and in favour of different purchasers, there are so many different sales and a judgment-debtor may apply to have only one of the sales set aside. But O. 21, Rule 89 prescribes that he must deposit in court a sufficient amount not only for payment to the purchaser a sum equal to 5 per cent of the purchase money but also for payment to the decree-holder the amount specified in the proclamation of sale as that for the recovery of which the sale was ordered less any amount which may, since the date of such proclamation of sale, have been received by the decree-holder. This rule gives an indulgence to the judgment-debtor and allows him a further period of 30 days to pay the amount together with the penalty. But in order to avail himself of the provisions of this rule he must bring himself strictly within its purview and must fulfil all the conditions required by it. It is clear that the amount which he need not deposit is the sum which had been received by the decree-holder between the date of the proclamation and the date of the deposit or, at any rate, before the expiry of 30 days from the date of the sale.

It is obvious that the sale of the other items cannot be confirmed before the expiry of the prescribed 30 days. So long as the sale of the other items has not been confirmed the decree-holder has not even the right to apply to the court for the payment of the money to him. It is therefore impossible to hold that the decree-holder can be deemed to have received the amount deposited by the auction-purchasers before the sale has been actually confirmed. As a matter of fact, the view taken in some of other High Courts is that the word "received" must be taken in its literal sense and it is the actual receipt of money by the decree-holder and not the deposit of any amount by auction-purchasers in court which is contemplated. But in any case it is clear that so long as the decree-holder has not the right to take the money out of court before confirmation, it cannot be said that the money has been received by him merely because it has been deposited to his credit.

In this view of the matter it seems almost impossible for a judgment-debtor to take advantage of the fact that other sales have taken place on the same date and that auction-purchasers have deposited amounts, and to claim credit for those sums and deduct the same from the amount which he offers to pay. He has to pay the amount in court within thirty days whereas the confirmation of the sale of the other items cannot take place within that time. If the law were otherwise a judgment-debtor would be able to pick and choose and apply for the setting aside of the sale of only one of the several items which may have been sold cheap on payment of its sale price and penalty, claiming credit for the payment of the sale price of the other items.

The learned advocate for the appellants strongly relies on the case of Panna Lal v. Bhola Nath[1]. Apparently in that case also several items were sold on one and the same date and the judgment-debtor applied to have the sale of one item set aside on payment of the purchase money and penalty and claimed reduction on account of the prices paid by the auction-purchasers of the other items. The learned Subordinate Judge had referred to Calcutta and Madras cases, Kripa Nath Pal v. Ram Lakshmi Dasya[2] and Obla K. Subbayyan v. Thoppai Muthayyan[3] which relied on an earlier Madras case, but thought that the facts of those cases were not exactly the same, and that in the absence of any authority of this Court he was entitled to take an equitable view of the matter. The learned Judges of this Court in disposing of the revision did not dissent from the view expressed in the cases quoted above and presumably considered that the case before them was distinguishable. The decision appears to have been based on a statement made on behalf of the applicant before the Bench that the decree-holder had withdrawn the money fetched at the auction-sale in full satisfaction of his decree, which statement the learned advocate for the opposite party was not in a position to controvert. The learned Judges do not seem to have endorsed the view of the court below that the case could be disposed of merely on equitable grounds.

The learned advocate for the respondents before us contends that it

[1] A. I. R. 1930 All. 843
[2] [1897] 1 C. W. N. 703
[3] [1921] 42 M. L. J. 71

Civil

1932

Mannu Naik
v.
Mathura Prasad

Sulaiman, C. J.

was not possible for the decree-holder to have withdrawn the money in that case before the confirmation of the sale and that the assertion must have implied that the amount was withdrawn some time before the revision came up for hearing. It seems to us that the decision is based mainly on the ground that the decree-holder had withdrawn the money and that the decree had been fully satisfied in that way. It was apparently in this view of the matter that the learned Judges thought that the amount had been received by the decree-holder.

If the learned Judges meant to lay down that the withdrawal of the money by the decree-holder after the expiry of 30 days would fulfil the requirements of the rule, we regret we are unable to agree with that view. The judgment-debtor can take advantage of the provisions of O. 21, R. 89 only if he deposits the whole of the amount for which the property had been ordered to be sold minus what had been received by the decree-holder before the expiry of the prescribed time. We accordingly dismiss the appeal with costs.

Appeal dismissed

Civil

1932

June 23

Mukerji, J.
Bennet, J.

JAGANNATH PRASAD AND OTHERS (Defendants)
versus
CHUNNI LAL AND ANOTHER (Plaintiffs)*

Hindu Law—Joint family—All minors—Guardian of property appointed—Guardianship ceases on one of the minors attaining majority—Hindu Law—Joint family—Adults and minors—Appointment of certified guardian for minor members—Whether effects their separation.

Where in a joint Hindu family all the co-parceners are minors and a guardian of the property is appointed for them by the District Judge, the guardianship ipso facto terminates on the attainment of adult status by one of the minors. It is contrary to the Hindu Law that there should be a guardian certified by the Judge for a joint Hindu family where there is an adult member. Bindaji Laxman v. Mathurabai, 30 Bom. 152 relied on.

It is well established that if a Hindu family consisting of adults and minors remains joint, it is not open to the District Judge to appoint a certified guardian for the minor members for their share of joint family property, and it must therefore be assumed that the appointment of a certified guardian implies that ipso facto the minor members are being separated from the adult members.

Appeal from a decree of Maulvi Aqib Nomani, Additional Subordinate Judge of Meerut.

P. L. Banerji and Vishwa Mitra for the appellants.

K. N. Katju, S. N. Verma and Banke Behari for the respondents.

The judgment of the Court was delivered by

Bennet, J.

Bennet, J.—This is a first appeal brought by the following defendants: defendant No. 2 Om Prakash, his son defendant No. 3, Gandharab Singh a minor and defendant No. 5 Jagannath Prasad. The plaint sets forth in paragraph 8 that defendants 5 to 10 are the subsequent transferees of the property in Mauza Shikohpur and that they have been made

---

*F. A. 139 of 1930

Civil

1932

Jagannath Prasad
v.
Chunni Lal

Bennet, J.

pro forma defendants. This allegation is admitted by Jagannath Prasad, the defendant No. 5, who is one of the appellants before us, so far as it concerns himself. It has not been made clear from the record exactly what share the appellant Jagannath Prasad now holds. But he is a transferee from some of the defendants, defendants 1 to 4. The family pedigree is as follows:—

HARBANS (died 1920)

Fateh Singh
defendant No. 4
(eldest son)

Udai Prakash
defendant No. 1
(second son)

Om Prakash
defendant No. 2
(youngest son)

Gandharb Singh
defendant No. 3

The plaintiffs sued on a mortgage dated September 15, 1922 executed by Udai Prakash for himself and as guardian of Om Prakash minor. The mortgage was in favour of Chunni Lal plaintiff and Ratan Lal now deceased, the father of the minor plaintiff Ajit Prasad. The property hypothecated was in Mauza Biswanand and Mauza Shikohpur. But the plaint sets forth that as the property in Mauza Biswa is highly encumbered and there is no prospect of getting anything out of it, it is exempted from this suit. The mortgage-money was Rs.6,000 and the claim in the plaint is for Rs.25,088. Interest was at 2 per cent per mensem with six monthly rests. The plaint sets forth that defendants 1 to 4 were members of a joint Hindu family and that debts were contracted for legal necessity and antecedent debt. There was no written statement on behalf of defendants 1 to 4, but the case for defendants 2 and 3 has been argued before us along with the case for defendant 5 Jagannath. The written statement of defendant 5 sets forth that the document in question was executed on September 15, 1922 when Udai Prakash was a minor and therefore it was invalid. Further it was pleaded that there was no legal necessity and it was stated in paragraph 15 that Udai Prakash was not joint in family with his brothers; that Fateh Singh, the eldest brother, was the certified guardian of Udai Prakash and Om Prakash, the two executants of the document. The following questions arise in this case:—

1 (a) Did Harbans and Fateh Singh separate from the minor members of the family in 1915?
  (b) Did this separation effect the separation of the two minor members Udai Prakash and Om Prakash inter se?
2 Was Fateh Singh the certified guardian of Udai Prakash and Om Prakash on September 15, 1922 and if so, was Udai Prakash incompetent to execute the mortgage in question?
3 Was Udai Prakash a minor at the date of execution, September 15, 1922?
4 Has legal necessity been proved?

5 Has the mortgage in suit been ratified by Om Prakash on attaining majority on March 5, 1924?
6 Is the rate of interest excessive?
7 Is there any clerical error in the decree?

The history of this family on which reliance is placed for separation is as follows:—

On September 26, 1912, Harbans Singh made an application for his appointment as guardian of Udai Singh and Om Prakash which is printed on page 27. The statements in that document are admissible in evidence as Harbans Singh is now dead. In that document he sets forth that the creditors were making pressing demands for the payment of their debts and the property had been advertised for sale and that it was desirable to make arrangements to pay off the debts. That application was refused. Subsequently an application was made by the eldest son Fateh Singh to be the guardian of the two minor sons and that application was granted by the District Judge on May 26, 1915. Accordingly from that date Fateh Singh was the certified guardian of his two minor brothers. There is an order of the District Judge dated December 1, 1915 in this guardianship case in which the District Judge sanctioned a mortgage and in his order it is set forth "Harbans Singh and his major son Fateh Singh have sold their 5 biswas share", the village in question being Basod. It is further stated in an order of the District Judge of February 17, 1916 that Fateh Singh and his father had sold their shares outright in this village and that the main property of the family was in this village Basod. There was left only the share of the minors. Now the allegation is that Harbans and Fateh by having an application in guardianship made for the minor members of the family thereby effected a partition of the family property. It is well established law that if a family remains joint, it is not open to the District Judge to appoint a certified guardian for the minor members for their shares of joint family property. Therefore we must assume that the appointment of a certified guardian implies that ipso facto the minor members are being separated from the adult members. This presumption in the present case is further strengthened by the subsequent action of the adult members in disposing of their shares of the property after separating their shares from the shares of the minors. We therefore hold it established that in 1915 there was a separation effected between Harbans and Fateh on the one hand and Udai Prakash and Om Prakash on the other hand.

The next question is whether the action of Harbans and Fateh Singh did effect in law a separation between the two minors Udai Prakash and Om Prakash. In this connection we may set forth that no action was taken which would in fact make any separation between the shares of Udai Prakash and Om Prakash. The application to the District Judge was that a guardian should be appointed for the property of these two minors and that the guardian would administer the property of these minors as a single unit, and so far as the evidence shows this is what was done. Reference was made to Palani Ammal v. Muthuvenkatachala Moniagar[1] where it is stated:

---

[1] I. L. R. 48 Mad. 254 at 258

> It is also now beyond doubt that a member of such a joint family can separate himself from the other members of the joint family and is on separation entitled to have his share in the property of the joint family ascertained and partitioned off for him, and that the remaining co-parceners, without any special agreement amongst themselves, may continue to be co-parceners and to enjoy as members of a joint family that remained after such a partition of the family property. That the remaining members continued to be joint may, if disputed, be inferred from the way in which their family business was carried on after their previous co-parcener had separated from them.

Reference is also made to Bal Krishna v. Ram Krishna[2] where their Lordships stated:

> The general principle undoubtedly is that every Hindu family is presumed to be joint unless the contrary is proved. If it is established that one member has separated, does the presumption continue with reference to the others? Their Lordships are therefore of opinion that the question whether on Lalman's separation in 1907 the other members of the family remained joint was a question of fact.

This shows therefore that on the separation of some members it is a question of fact in each case as to whether the other members did or did not separate. There is no presumption either way as to separation or remaining joint and the onus of proof lies on the person who makes an assertion that the other members separated or that the other members remained joint. In the present case we have the circumstances of the application for guardianship and of the proceedings that took place on that application. Various applications were made to the District Judge and some were allowed by him to the effect that the property of the two minors was mortgaged jointly. There were therefore joint transactions and we consider that on the evidence in this case it is proved that the two minors Udai Prakash and Om Prakash remained joint when Harbans and Fateh Singh separated in 1915.

The next question is whether Udai Prakash was competent to execute a mortgage on behalf of himself and his minor brother when Udai Prakash attained majority. This question is not free from difficulty. In the present case it was not shown that any application was made to the District Judge at any time that Udai Prakash had become of full age. At the time of the mortgage in suit Fateh Singh apparently remained the certified guardian. But assuming that Udai Prakash was a major at the time of the mortgage in suit, the question before us is what became of the status of guardianship when Udai Prakash, one of the two minors, attained majority? Reliance was placed on a ruling of the Bombay High Court Bindaji Laxuman Triputikar v. Mathurabai[3] in which the only question before their Lordships was whether a guardian could be appointed for the minor members of a joint family, and it was laid down that a guardian could not be appointed for minor members whose only proprietary interest was that of co-parceners along with adults in joint family property. Their Lordships made an observation that if a guardian were appointed for minor co-parceners where there were no adults, then as soon as one minor became an adult the proper course would be for an application to be made to the District Judge to terminate the guardianship. That may

---

[2] 1931 A. L. J. 499 (P.C.) at 502

[3] I. L. R. 30 Bom. 152

Civil

1932

Jagannath Prasad
v.
Chunni Lal

Bennet, J.

be so and in the present case no such application was made. But the dictum of the Bombay High Court was merely in regard to procedure and we are concerned with the question of substantive right. It is we consider contrary to the Hindu Law that there should be a guardian certified by the Judge for a joint Hindu family where there is an adult member. On the attainment of adult status by one of the minors for whom a guardian had been appointed, we consider that ipso facto the guardianship terminates. Therefore we consider that in the present case Udai Prakash on attainment of majority would be competent to execute a mortgage for legal necessity on behalf of himself and on behalf of his minor brother Om Prakash notwithstanding the fact that Fateh Singh still continued to be recorded as a certified guardian appointed by the District Judge.

[After a discussion of the evidence their Lordships held that it was not proved that Udai Prakash was a minor at the date of the mortgage dated September 15, 1925 and found that legal necessity was proved to the extent of Rs.1,500.]

Now the above considerations relate to the case of legal necessity from the point of view of the interest of Om Prakash who was then a minor. The question remains as to what is the effect in the case of Udai Prakash. We have held that Udai Prakash along with Om Prakash formed a joint Hindu family at the time of execution of this bond. Reference has been made to Balgobind Das v. Narain Lal[4]. That was a case as stated at page 340 which related to an attempted mortgage of right and interest in joint ancestral estate by a co-sharer, and the distinction between voluntary and compulsory alienations by him, the latter being sales in execution of decrees against him. The joint family in the case consisted of Narain Lal son and Naunidh Lal, the father. Narain Lal had made a mortgage on which a suit was brought and in that case the father was a defendant and there were also as defendants Narain Lal and two persons who were auction-purchasers on decrees against Narain Lal. The question which was decided by their Lordships was whether a purchaser at auction sale of the interest of the mortgagor Narain Lal could challenge the validity of the mortgage made by Narain Lal when Narain Lal was one of the members of a joint Hindu family. It was held by their Lordships that the auction-purchasers could challenge the validity of the mortgage and that the father could challenge the validity in his capacity as taking by purchase at auction sale apart from his capacity of survivorship—see page 351. This ruling has also been referred to in Madan Lal v. Chiddu[5] where it is also held that an auction-purchaser could challenge the validity of a previous mortgage by the judgment-debtor whose interest he had acquired and a distinction was drawn between auction-purchasers and private transferees from the mortgagor. We therefore consider that it is open to Jagnnath Prasad as an auction-purchaser to challenge the validity of the mortgage in suit whether he was a transferee of the interest of Udai Prakash or of other members of the family. Therefore all the appellants before us are entitled to challenge the validity of the mortgage-deed in question so far as the interests

[4] I. L. R. 15 All. 339

[5] 1930 A. L. J. 1528 at 1533

CIVIL

1932

JAGANNATH PRASAD
v.
CHUNNI LAL

Bennet, J.

of Udai Prakash are concerned in addition to the interests of Om Prakash. We consider that as Udai Prakash was a member of an undivided family he was not entitled to execute the mortgage-deed in question for items which were not for legal necessity. Accordingly we hold that the mortgage-deed is altogether invalid except as regards the items which we held for legal necessity, that is, Rs.1,400 deposited in the Government treasury and Rs.100 paid before registration, total Rs.1,500.

The next question is ratification. The alleged ratification is contained in a bond dated March 5, 1924 executed by Om Prakash after he attained majority. He was an executant along with Fateh Singh and Udai Prakash. In that document there is a recital of a number of other documents which had been executed and among them is the mortgage-deed in the suit. Now the question arises of the position of the son of Om Prakash, Gandharb. In the plaint it is stated that he was about five years of age and the plaint was filed on January 5, 1929. Therefore the date of his birth would be January 5, 1924, that is, two months prior to the alleged ratification on March 5, 1924. Now attention is invited to the point that the plaint merely states that the age is about 5 years but, if Gandharab Singh had been conceived, it would be impossible for the ratification by his father to bind him. Therefore taking a period of 9 months from March 5, 1924, we come to December 1924 and, if Gandharab Singh were born on December 5, 1924, he must have been conceived at the date of ratification. Therefore we consider that the expression about 5 years of age must be taken to cover birth by December 5, 1924. Accordingly we consider that the ratification will not bind the interests of Gandharab Singh, but would only bind Om Prakash personally.

The next question which we shall examine is the rate of interest. The rate of interest in the mortgage-deed in suit was Rs.2 per mensem compound interest with six-monthly rests. The mortgage was executed in 1922 after the Usurious Loans Act of 1918, and we also consider that legal necessity is not shown for the high rate of interest. On these grounds we reduce the rate of interest to fifteen per cent simple interest. The last point is an alleged clerical error in the decree. This does not arise because the question of compound interest no longer remains. We have taken this rate in various other cases and we consider where sufficient security has been given that the rate of fifteen per cent simple interest is ample.

We accordingly allow the appeal to the extent indicated with proportionate costs in both courts. A decree will be framed by this Court under the provisions of Order 34, Rule 4, six months being allowed for payment by the defendants. Interest at fifteen per cent will run until the date fixed by the Court.

As regards the cross-objection, we have already indicated in our order which items we consider are not for legal necessity and the cross-objection is therefore disposed of by those findings. The cross-objection is dismissed except so far as we vary the rate of pendente lite interest and interest upto date of payment. As this amount is small, we dismiss the cross-objection with costs. Appeal allowed in part

Civil

1932

June 24

Sulaiman, C. J.
Mukerji, J.

MUFTI MOHAMMAD HASNAIN (Plaintiff)

versus

RUSTAM ALI (Defendant)*

Mortgage—Part-owner of property (subject to a simple mortgage) sells entire property and vendee enters into possession—Vendee discharges mortgage debt—Suit by another part-owner for possession of his share—Whether vendee liable to be dispossessed unconditionally.

A part-owner of certain property, which was subject to a single mortgage executed by all the owners, purported to transfer the entire property to the defendant, who entered into possession and paid off a part of the mortgage debt with a portion of the sale proceeds left with him. About a year before the expiry of the limitation on the mortgage the present suit was instituted by another part-owner for possession of his share. The defendant contended that the plaintiff should not be allowed possession without payment of a proportionate amount of the sum the defendant had paid towards the discharge of the mortgage debt. Held, that the defendant could not set up the private payment of the simple mortgage as a shield against the plaintiff's claim for possession inasmuch as the defendant had become entitled to possession of the property as purchaser of the equity of redemption and not by virtue of the payment of the previous simple mortgage.

Bijay Saran Sahi v. Rudra Bageshwari Prasad, 1930 A. L. J. 531 (P.C.) applied.

Letters Patent Appeal from the decision of the Hon'ble Mr. Justice Niamatullah.

S. Majid Ali for the appellant.

Mushtaq Ahmad for the respondent.

The judgment of the Court was delivered by

Sulaiman, C. J.

Sulaiman, C. J.—This is a plaintiff's appeal arising out of a suit for recovery of possession. It appears that Hatim Ali, a predecessor-in-title of the plaintiff, was the owner of the property and after his death all his heirs executed a simple mortgage deed in 1906 in favour of certain mortgagees, the period fixed for payment being ten years.

Hatim Ali had left a son, a widow and two daughters. The son Kazim Husain took possession of the entire property and then purported to transfer the whole of it on November 7, 1921 to Rustam Ali. The sale deed was for Rs.6,300 out of which Rs.4,300 were left in the hands of the transferee for payment of the previous mortgage debt. It is now found that as a matter of fact the vendee paid only Rs.1,550-5-0 towards the previous mortgage debt and that he discharged the other debts with which we are not now concerned.

The limitation on the mortgage which was for ten years would not have expired till 1928. About a year before that date, namely, 1927, the present suit was instituted by an heir of one of the deceased sisters of Kazim Husain for recovery of his share. The claim was resisted on various grounds. The defendant wanted to claim the entire property by adverse possession, by estoppel as well as on other grounds. He also pleaded that he was entitled to be paid a proportionate amount out of the sum which he paid towards the discharge of the previous mortgage debt.

---

*L. P. A. 50 of 1931

The suit was decreed by both the courts below unconditionally. On appeal to this Court a learned judge has upheld the decree for possession but has made it subject to the condition of the payment by the plaintiff of proportionate amount out of Rs.1,550-5-0 paid by Rustam Ali towards the mortgage of 1906. He has also directed the payment of interest on this amount at the rate mentioned in the mortgage deed.

The point for consideration is whether Rustam Ali is entitled to resist the claim for possession and demand the payment of this amount.

No doubt it has been held on the strength of previous authorities including Sukhi v. Ghulam Safdar Khan[1] that where a prior mortgagee brings a suit on his mortgage and obtains a decree against his mortgagor without impleading a subsequent mortgagee and purchases a property at auction and actually obtains possession, he cannot be ousted by a plaintiff deriving title through a subsequent mortgagee without his mortgage debt having been satisfied. See Ram Sanehi Lal v. Janki Prasad[2]. But the present suit is not a case of that type. Here there was no suit brought on the basis of the previous mortgage, but the amount was paid off privately by the defendant who had become entitled to the possession of the property as purchaser of the equity of redemption, and not by virtue of the payment of the previous simple mortgage. No authority has been brought to our notice by the learned advocate for the respondent in which private payment of a simple mortgage has been held to justify the holding up of that payment as a shield so as to resist a suit for possession by the mortgagor's representatives. On the other hand, it seems to us that the principle laid down by their Lordships of the Privy Council in the case of Bijai Saran Sahi v. Rudra Bageshwari Prasad[3] applies to this case. There too, the defendants who were transferees had paid off a simple mortgage. Their purchase however was found to be invalid. Their Lordships remarked:

> Now admittedly these mortgages were not usufructuary mortgages, and as the plaintiffs (respondents) have been held to be and are the owners of the equity of redemption, it is impossible to see under what title the defendants (appellants) can claim to resist the decree for possession.

Inasmuch as the defendants in that case had got possession by virtue of the sale and the sale was invalid, they were ordered to surrender possession of the same because their mortgages did not give them any right to possession. It was remarked that whatever rights they had under their mortgages, they can no doubt enforce them in proper proceedings taken for the purpose, but there is no principle or authority which enables the defendants to set up their mortgages as shields against the plaintiff respondents' claim for possession. The same remarks apply to the present case.

There is no doubt that Rustam Ali by virtue of paying the previous mortgage stepped into the shoes of the previous mortgagee and had the same rights as the mortgagee to enforce the debt. It may be that he is

---

[1] I. L. R. 43 All. 469

[2] [1931] A. L. J. 729

[3] [1930] A. L. J. 531

CIVIL

1932

MUFTI MOHD. HASNAIN v. RUSTAM ALI

Sulaiman, C. J.

entitled to enforce the charge created in his favour within an extended time. But on this point it is not necessary to express any final opinion. His remedy may lie in a separate suit to enforce his charge and not in the present suit for possession.

We accordingly allow this appeal, modify the decree of the lower appellate court and restore the decree of the court of first instance. Inasmuch as the defendant has admittedly paid off in part the liability of the plaintiff, we think that the parties should bear their own costs of both the appeals in this Court.

Appeal allowed

CIVIL

1932

July 8

BANERJI, J. IQBAL AHMAD, J.

KARAN SINGH (Judgment-debtor)

versus

SADHO RAM (Decree-holder)*

Civil Procedure Code, Sec. 68 and Or. 21, R. 66(3)—In the statement mentioned in Or. 21, R. 66(3) decree-holder stated property to be sold to be ancestral—Execution case transferred to Collector—Decision as to character of property res judicata.

The application for an order for sale under Or. 21, R. 66 was accompanied by the statement mentioned in Or. 21, R. 66(3) in which it was stated by the decree-holder that the property to be sold was ancestral, and after enquiry the execution case was transferred to the Collector. Before the Collector, however, the decree-holder stated that the property was non-ancestral and that he did not propose to proceed with the execution, and the record was therefore sent back to the Civil Court. Under orders of the Civil Court the property was put up for sale and purchased by the decree-holder. The judgment-debtor filed an application for the setting aside of the sale. Held, (1) that the property to be sold having once been declared as between the parties to be ancestral property, the decree-holder was barred by the principle of res judicata from asserting that the property was non-ancestral; (2) that the sale of such property by the court amin was entirely without jurisdiction as the Collector and the Collector alone could sell the property; (3) that the decree-holder himself being the auction-purchaser, it was open to the judgment-debtor to assail the validity of the sale on grounds other than those specified in Or. 21, R. 90 C. P. C.

EXECUTION FIRST APPEAL from a decree of S. M. MIR ESQ., Subordinate Judge of Meerut.

K. C. Mital for the appellant.

N. P. Asthana, Vishwa Mitra and Nanak Chand for the respondents.

The judgment of the Court was delivered by

Iqbal Ahmad, J.

IQBAL AHMAD, J.—This execution first appeal (No. 338 of 1931) is connected with execution first appeal No. 450 of 1931. Both these appeals are by a judgment-debtor and arise out of proceedings in execution of a final decree for sale.

In order to appreciate the points in controversy between the parties it is necessary to state the facts in some detail.

---

*E. F. A. 338 of 1931 (connected with E. F. A. 450 of 1931)

Sadho Ram, the decree-holder respondent obtained on the basis of a mortgage-deed a preliminary decree for sale on August 27, 1928 against Thakur Karan Singh the appellant before us and his minor son Mahendra Singh who was impleaded as a defendant under the guardianship of his mother Mst. Kasturi. A final decree for sale was passed in favour of the decree-holder against the said judgment-debtors on May 4, 1929.

On June 11, 1929 the decree-holder filed an application for execution of the decree. The application was accompanied by a statement containing the particulars mentioned in Order 21, Rule 66(3) of the Code of Civil Procedure. It was stated in that statement by the decree-holder that the property to be sold was in possession of the judgment-debtor and his ancestors since the year 1860 and was ancestral property. In order to satisfy itself as to the accuracy of this statement of the decree-holder the execution court called for a report from the Collector. The Collector reported that the property was ancestral property and accordingly in pursuance of the provisions of Section 68 of the Code and Government Notification No. 1887|1|238 dated October 7, 1911 the execution case was transferred to the Collector. An enquiry was then instituted by the Sale Officer in order to draw up the proclamation of sale. One of the particulars entered in the sale proclamations is the estimated value of the property and the Sale Officer called for a report from the tehsil as to the value of the property to be sold. The report was that the value of the property included in the proclamation of sale was Rs.20,896. The decree-holder objected to this estimated value and the Sale Officer fixed the value of the property at Rs.18,000. This valuation was accepted by the decree-holder. But the judgment-debtor objected to the valuation and after further enquiry the estimated value of the property was fixed at Rs.25,444.

Then on February 7, 1931 the decree-holder filed an application stating that the property sought to be sold was non-ancestral and as such could not be sold by the Collector and that he did not propose to proceed with the application for execution. The statement of the decree-holder that the property was non-ancestral was diametrically opposed to the statement contained in the particulars submitted by the decree-holder in the execution court in pursuance of the provisions of Order 21, Rule 66 (3). However on this application the proceedings before the Collector terminated and the record was sent back to the Civil Court.

Three days after, viz., on February 10, 1931 the decree-holder put in a second application for execution before the execution court (Civil Court) and in the statement under Order 21, Rule 66 described the property covered by the decree for sale as non-ancestral property and the estimated value of the same to be Rs.10,000. Notices under Order 21, Rule 66 were issued to the judgment-debtors fixing February 25, 1931 for the hearing of the objections, if any, to the application for execution and to the statement containing the particulars prescribed by Clause (2) of Rule 66. It is common ground that these notices were not served personally either on the judgment-debtor appellant before us or on Mst. Kasturi the guardian ad litem of the minor judgment-debtor and that the service was effected by affixation. The judgment-debtor appellant maintains that the decree-holder fraudulently got a bogus report with respect to the service of the notices made by the process-server and that neither he nor Mst. Kasturi came to know of the application for execution dated February 10, 1931. We shall advert to the facts relating to service in a moment.

On February 25, 1931, the date fixed in the execution case, the judgment-debtor did not appear and the court fixed April 20, 1931 for the sale of the property, apparently without any enquiry into the question as to whether the property was ancestral or non-ancestral. The attention of the court was not drawn by the decree-holder either to his earlier statement that the property to be sold was ancestral property or to the report of the Collector that was to the same effect and the court therefore accepted the statement of the decree-holder that the property was non-ancestral property and directed the same to be sold as such by the amin of the court.

On April 14, 1931 the judgment-debtor appellant filed an objection to the application for execution dated February 10, 1931 and the statement of particulars of the property to be sold appended to that application. He alleged that by fraud of the decree-holder he had no notice of the date fixed in the execution case and therefore could not put forward objections to the particulars submitted by the decree-holder. He maintained that the property sought to be sold was ancestral property and therefore could not be sold by the Civil Court and that the value of the same was not less than Rs.30,000 and that the statements to the contrary made by the decree-holder were false. He also prayed that pending the decision of the objections filed by him the sale fixed for April 20, 1931 be postponed.

The court refused to accede to the prayer for the postponement of the sale and the property was actually sold on April 24, 1931. The decree-holder purchased the property for Rs.10,000 at the auction sale.

Thereafter on May 16, 1931 the objections filed by the judgment-debtor were heard and dismissed on the ground that the objections could be entertained only before the sale and as the sale had already taken place the objections could not be maintained. Execution first appeal No. 450 of 1931 is directed against this order of May 16, 1931.

On May 22, 1931 the judgment-debtor filed an application under Section 47 and Order 21, Rule 90 of the Code of Civil Procedure for the setting aside of the sale. In that application he referred to the previous statement of the decree-holder and the report of the Collector that the property to be sold was ancestral property and to the fact that the estimated value of the property sold was fixed by the Sale Officer at Rs.25,444 and maintained that the action of the decree-holder in getting the execution case abruptly terminated before the Collector by means of his application dated February 7, 1931, was deliberate and with a view to gain advantage over the judgment-debtor by perpetration of fraud. He submitted that the statement of the decree-holder that the property covered by the decree was non-ancestral and was of the value of Rs.10,000 only was false to his knowledge and that the order for the sale of the property as non-ancestral property was obtained by the decree-holder by practising fraud on the court. He again alleged that the service of notice of the application for execution dated February 10, 1931 was not effected on him because of the fraud of the decree-holder and thus he was prevented from asserting on the date fixed, viz., on February 25, 1931, that the property was ancestral property and could not be sold by the Civil Court. He further stated that the sale was not proclaimed in the village nor was proclamation caused to be made by beat of drum and that the sale was vitiated by the fact that the Sale Officer (amin) postponed the sale on April 20, 1931 without obtaining any permission from the court and sold the property on a date not fixed for the sale, viz., on April 24, 1931. He asserted that on account of the fraud practised by the decree-holder and the irregularities mentioned above the property was sold and purchased by the decree-holder for a very small amount. On these grounds he prayed that the sale be set aside. This application was also dismissed by the court on June 11, 1931. The order dismissing the application is brief and conspicuous by an absence of any discussion of the allegations of the judgment-debtor imputing fraud to the decree-holder in the proceedings culminating in the sale of the property. All that is stated in the order is that the learned Judge had been through the record and could discover no material irregularities or fraud and that the oral evidence of the witnesses produced before him was biassed and incredible and therefore the inadequacy of the price too, if true, was no ground to set aside the sale. Execution first appeal No. 338 of 1931 is against this order of the court below.

We are unable to uphold either of the two orders appealed against. We are satisfied for the reasons that shall presently appear that the judgment-debtor appellant was prevented by fraud of the decree-holder from putting forward objections in court to the application for execution dated February 10, 1931 and to the particulars submitted by the decree-holder along with that application.

[Their Lordships then reviewed the evidence relating to the service of notice on the judgment-debtor by affixation and proceeded:—]

It is abundantly clear from the facts stated above that the judgment-debtor was vigilant throughout and did not allow the execution proceedings against him to go by default. When the execution case was before the Collector he took exception to the valuation of the property at Rs.18,000 and it was in consequence of this objection that on further enquiry the value of the property was fixed Rs.25,000. It therefore appears incredible to us that if he was cognisant of the application for execution dated February 10, 1931 and of the particulars furnished by the decree-holder in which the decree-holder, contrary to his previous statement, had alleged the property to be non-ancestral and had contrary to the finding of the Collector that the value of the property was more than Rs.25,000 asserted that the property was worth only Rs.10,000, he would have kept quiet and not taken serious objections to these allegations of the decree-holder. His objections as regards these statements of the decree-holder would have been unanswerable. The property to be sold having once been declared as between the parties to be ancestral property, the decree-holder was barred by the principle of res judicata from asserting that the property was non-ancestral, vide Shahzad Singh v. Hanuman Rai[1] and Bhikhan Saran v. Piare Lal[2]. Further the objections as to valuation of the property would have been formidable. The finding of the Collector as to the value of the property based as it was on the report submitted by Tehsil though not conclusive, would have been entitled to grave weight and no court would have differed from that report on light grounds. In short, the objections by the judgment-debtor as regards the nature and value of the property would have been, in the circumstances of the present case, well-founded and not frivolous. Therefore the failure of the judgment-debtor to prefer those objections can be attributed to no other cause except to his ignorance about the execution case initiated by the application dated February 10, 1931.

[Their Lordships then referred to the circumstances attending the so-called service by affixation.]

For these reasons we hold that the assertion of the judgment-debtor that the decree-holder fraudulently got a bogus endorsement about the service of notice effected has been made out. In view of this finding arrived at by us, we hold that the court below was wrong in not entertaining the objections dated April 14, 1931 filed by the judgment-debtor. The reason assigned by the court below for dismissing those objections are entirely unfounded. The objections were dismissed by that court on the ground that they could not be entertained after the sale had taken place. But the court overlooked the fact that the objections were actually filed before the sale was held, and it was due to the action of the court in not acceding to the prayer contained in the objections for the postponement of the sale that the sale took place before the objections were taken up for disposal. The failure of the judgment-debtor to file the objections on the date fixed, viz., February 25, 1931 was due to the fraud of the decree-holder in connection with the service of notice issued by the court.

The result is that we allow Execution First Appeal No. 450 of 1931 with costs here and below and allow the objections dated April 14, 1931.

We now proceed to consider Execution Frst Appeal No. 338 of 1931. The finding of the court, before transferring the execution case to the Collector, that the property was ancestral property was binding between the parties to the present litigation. Therefore it must be assumed for the purposes of this case that the property to be sold was ancestral property. The sale of such property by the court amin was entirely without jurisdiction as the Collector and the Collector alone could sell such property, vide Fatmatul Kubra v. Achchi Begam[3].

[After reviewing the evidence their Lordships came to the conclusion that the allegation of the judgment-debtor that no proclamation was made in the village had been made out.]

Again, as stated above, the sale was, without any reference to court, postponed by the amin from the 20th to 24th of April, 1931. This the amin had no right to do. There is nothing on the record to show whether the intending purchasers who may have been present on April

---

[1] I. L. R. 46 All. 562

[2] 1931 A. L. J. 103

[3] I. L. R. 36 All. 33

20, were informed that the sale would take place on April 24, 1931. It follows therefore there is much to be said in favour of the allegation of the judgment-debtor that, because of the adjournment of the sale in an irregular manner by the amin, the property did not fetch its proper value at the sale. That the property was sold at a grossly inadequate price is patent by the fact that that property was valued at Rs.25,400 by the Collector. Thus, we come to the conclusion that there was fraud in publishing the sale, there was irregularity in the conduct of the sale and as a consequence of the fraud and irregularity the property was sold at a very inadequate price with consequent loss to the judgment-debtor. Apart from this the sale was entirely without jurisdiction and therefore ought to have been set aside. It is to be noted that, as in this case the decree-holder himself was the auction-purchaser, it was open to the judgment-debtor to assail the validity of the sale on grounds apart from those specified in Order 21, Rule 90 of the Code of Civil Procedure, vide Superior Bank Ld. v. Budh Singh[4].

The result is that we also allow Execution First Appeal No. 338 of 1931 and set aside the sale dated April 24, 1931. The appellant is entitled to his costs both in this Court and in the court below.

The necessary consequence of our decision in the two Execution First Appeals is that the property covered by the final decree for sale is to be treated as ancestral property and the execution of the decree has to be transferred to the Collector. We accordingly direct that the court below should transfer the execution of the decree to the Collector.

Appeals allowed

CIVIL

1932

July 22

NIAMATULLAH, J.

SATYA NIDHAN BANERJI (Applicant)
versus
MOHD. HAZABBER ALI KHAN alias GHULAM JABALI KHAN
(Opposite party)*

Tenancy Act (III of 1926), Secs. 253 and 271—'Subordinate revenue court'—Meaning of—Issue remitted to Civil Court under Sec. 271—Whether Civil Court deemed to be a revenue court.

Where the revenue court acting under Sec. 271 of the new Tenancy Act frames an issue on the question of proprietary right and submits the record to the Civil Court for the decision of that issue only, the latter cannot be considered to be a 'subordinate revenue court' within the meaning of Sec. 253.

CIVIL REVISION from an order of B. N. JHA ESQ., Assistant Collector, first class of Shahjahanpur.

S. N. Verma for the applicant.

M. A. Aziz for the opposite party.

The following judgment was delivered by

Niamatullah, J.

NIAMATULLAH, J.—This and the connected civil revisions Nos. 248 to 250 of 1932 arise out of four suits for profits, brought by the opposite party against the applicant, in the court of an Assistant Collector,

---

*Civ. Rev. 36 of 1932

[4] 22 A. L. J. 413 at 415

CIVIL
1932
SATYA NIDHAN BANERJI
v.
MOHD. HAZABBER ALI KHAN
Niamat-ullah, J.

Shahjahanpur. The defendant raised a question of proprietary title, on which an issue was struck by the Assistant Collector and remitted to the munsif for trial and finding under Sec. 271 of the Agra Tenancy Act. On receipt of the finding which was in favour of the plaintiff and was binding on the Assistant Collector, the suits for profits were decreed.

The applicant preferred four appeals to the court of the District Judge impugning the correctness of the munsif's finding and the decision of the Assistant Collector. No appearance was entered on behalf of the applicant, who was the appellant before the District Judge, and his appeals were consequently dismissed. He applied for an order of restoration of the appeals, but his application was also dismissed. He appealed to this Court from the order of the District Judge refusing to restore the appeals, but was unsuccessful.

The present four applications for revision have been filed and the decrees of the Assistant Collector are sought to be revised under S. 253 of the Agra Tenancy Act. That section, like Sec. 115 of the Civil Procedure Code, confers very limited powers on this Court. It is only if the subordinate court has exercised a jurisdiction not vested in it by law, or has failed to exercise its jurisdiction so vested, or has exercised the jurisdiction vested in it illegally or with material irregularity that this Court can interfere. Of the ten grounds taken in revision there is none which can be considered to raise any question of jurisdiction, want of jurisdiction or the exercise of it illegally or with material irregularity. The learned advocate for the applicant desired to criticise the proceedings of the munsif which he contends should be considered as part of the proceedings before the Assistant Collector. I do not think the contention is correct. Sec. 253 of the Tenancy Act, under which the present revision has been filed, can only justify the examination of the orders of "subordinate revenue courts". The proceedings of the munsif cannot, by any stretch of imagination, be considered to be part and parcel of the proceedings of the subordinate revenue court before whom the suits for profits were pending and which referred the issue as to title to the Civil Court. The latter cannot be considered to be a revenue court only because it decides an issue remitted to it under Sec. 271, Tenancy Act. It was open to the applicant to have contested the munsif's finding before the District Judge in appeal, but he missed that opportunity and cannot now impugn it under cover of Sec. 253. The grounds taken in revision might have been such as could be urged in appeal, but they are not good grounds in revision which has, therefore, no force and is dismissed with costs.

CRIMINAL

1932

July 25

PULLAN, J.
NIAMATULLAH, J.

NASIR AND OTHERS
versus
KING-EMPEROR*

Criminal Procedure Code, Sec. 164 and Evidence Act, Sec. 24—Confessions—When inadmissible—Duty of Magistrates and Sessions Judges—Whether evidence of approver coupled with retracted confession sufficient for conviction.

The judge, with whom the responsibility lies for acting upon the confession, should satisfy himself by putting searching questions to such witnesses as had anything to do with the confession. The first question that ought to strike every judge is: "Why the accused made the confession?" It is very important to ascertain from those in whose custody the accused was, the circumstances in which the question of confession first arose, how the accused expressed his willingness to be placed before the Magistrate and his readiness to make a confession. Similar questions arise as regards retraction.

The evidence of the approver, coupled with the retracted confession of a co-accused but uncorroborated by other evidence, is not sufficient for conviction.

CRIMINAL APPEAL from an order of H. P. VERMA ESQ., Additional Sessions Judge of Meerut.

Appeal from jail.

Sankar Saran (Government Pleader) for the Crown.

Seven persons were convicted by the Sessions Judge of Muzaffarnagar of an offence under Sec. 396 I. P. C. and were sentenced each to 8 years' rigorous imprisonment. The prisoners submitted appeals from jail against their conviction, and an application was made on behalf of the Local Government requesting the High Court to enhance the sentences passed upon these persons. The appeal was heard by Pullan and Niamatullah, JJ. who allowed the appeals of six persons, set aside their vonviction and sentences and declared them to be acquitted, and in the case of one person accepted the revision made by the Local Government and enhanced his sentence under Sec. 396 I. P. C. to transportation for life. Separate judgments were delivered by the learned Judges. Niamatullah, J., in his judgment made important observations on the duty of Magistrates and Sessions Judges when recording confessions, which are reproduced below.

Niamatullah, J.

NIAMATULLAH, J.—Section 24 of the Indian Evidence Act does not require the same cogency of evidence as is necessary to establish a fact. It merely requires that if it "appears" to the court that a confession was induced by threat or promise proceeding from a person in authority in relation to the charge against the accused, it shall be inadmissible in evidence. It has been held in numerous cases that if circumstances create a probability in the mind of the court that the confession was improperly obtained, it should be excluded from evidence. A very eminent Judge of this Court expressed himself on the subject of retracted confessions in the following terms:—

---

*Cr. A. 1084 of 1931

> To repeat a phrase I used on a former occasion, instead of working up to the confession they (the police) work down from it, with the result that we frequently find ourselves compelled to reverse convictions simply because, beyond the confession, there is no tangible evidence of guilt. Moreover, I have said, and I repeat now, it is incredible that the extraordinary large number of confessions which come before us in the criminal cases disposed of by this Court, either in appeal or revision, should have been voluntarily and freely made in every instance as represented. I may claim some knowledge of, and acquaintance with, the ways and conduct of persons accused of crime, and I do not believe that the ordinary inclination of their minds, which in this respect I take to be pretty much the same with humanity all the world over, is to make any admission of guilt. I certainly can add that, during fourteen years' active practice in the Criminal Courts in England, I do not remember half a dozen instances in which a real confession, once having been made, was retracted. In this country, on the contrary, the retraction follows almost invariably as a matter of course, and though I am well aware how this is sought to be explained by a suggestion of the influence brought to bear upon the confessor by other prisoners in havalat, the fact remains as an endless source of anxiety and difficulty to those who have to see that justice is properly administered.

Per Straight, Offg. C. J. in Q.-E. v. Babu Lal[1].

The remarks hold good today no less than they did when they were made by Straight, J. I respectfully agree with every word of what he said. In most cases of serious gravity or difficulty we are faced with the problem of retracted confession and the value to be assigned to it against the person making it or his co-accused. In a large number of such cases there is little or no reliable evidence in corroboration. To do lip service to the doctrine which requires corroboration and to accept such evidence in corroboration, for the sake of formality, as a Judge would not conscientiously believe is not in keeping with judicial integrity.

It has been stressed over and over again that, when a confession is made and subsequently retracted, the Committing Magistrate and the Sessions Judge should enquire into all the circumstances in which it was made and those in which it was subsequently retracted. One, however, seldom comes across a case in which any serious effort is made either by the Magistrate or the Sessions Judge to explain the phenomenon that a person who took every precaution of concealing his crime and suppressing evidence which could implicate him becomes so full of remorse and penitance when he comes face to face with the police that he makes a "free and voluntary confession", but subsequently, retracts it at the enquiry, the remorse and penitance, which are supposed to have acted on his mind before, ceasing to influence it in the slightest degree. While it is true that in some cases voluntary confessions are made and while it is permissible for police officers to resort to legitimate devices to obtain useful information from prisoners, it is inconceivable to me, as it was to Straight, J., that ordinarily a dacoit or murderer would make a voluntary confession. It is, therefore, necessary that, when a confession is first made and is subsequently retracted with allegations against the police, the Magistrate and the Sessions Judge should probe the matter for their own satisfaction. What is however done in practice is to record a confession with due formalities and subsequently to record the retraction thereof, leaving it to the accused to get over if he can the effect of the confession which stands against him inspite of retraction. It is impossible for the accused, even if he is defended, to adduce any reliable direct evidence of mal-treatment or inducement while he was in the police custody. His allegations, when put to the investigating officers, are naturally denied. But the matter should not be allowed to rest there. The Judge, with whom the responsibility lies for acting upon the confession, should satisfy himself by putting searching questions to such witnesses as had anything to do with the confession. The first question that ought to strike every judge is: "why the accused made the confession"? It is very important to ascertain, from those in whose custody the accused was, the circumstances in which the question of confession first arose, how the accused expressed his willingness to be placed before the Magistrate and his readiness to make a confession. Similar questions arise as regards retraction. It is only if circumstances make it reasonable to believe that the accused voluntarily made the confession and agreed to make it before the Magistrate that an inquisitive mind can be satisfied.

---

[1] I. L. R. 6 All. at 542 and 543

Another question which requires consideration in the present case is whether, if there is no other reliable evidence in corroboration, the evidence of the approver, coupled with the retracted confession of a co-accused, is sufficient for conviction. There is ample authority in support of the view that it is not. It has been expressed in the dictum that one tainted testimony cannot corroborate another tainted testimony. Numerous cases bearing on this point have been quoted in the Law of Evidence by Woodroffe and Ameer Ali under Section 30, at page 315, 9th Ed., wherein it is stated that > the confession of co-prisoners to be rendered trustworthy must be corroborated aliunde by independent evidence and not by the testimony of accomplices or approvers as well in respect of the identity of all the persons affected by it as of the corpus delicti.

It stands to reason and common sense that if the approver's evidence itself is not sufficient for want of corroboration, the retracted confession of a co-accused, which again has been declared to be equally, if not more untrustworthy, does not furnish the requisite corroboration. The two together cannot obviate the necessity of corroboration from independent sources. The corroboration need not be full proof of guilt but should establish a sufficient degree of complicity. The whole principle of the rule which insists on corroboration of the approver or of the retracted confession of a co-accused is based on the assumption that, in the absence of a guarantee forthcoming from more trustworthy sources, the evidence of the approver or the retracted confession or both together cannot suffice for conviction.

Civil

1932

Oct. 24

Sulaiman, C. J.

Bajpai, J.

MOTI CHAND (Plaintiff)

versus

BALRAM DAS (minor, through MUSAMMAT SARASVATI DEVI) (Defendant)*

Civil Procedure Code, Or. 9, R. 13 and Or. 32, R. 3—Ex parte decree against minor—Guardian ad litem negligent—Whether court has power to set aside decree and appoint another guardian—Position of minor in the suit.

Where on the application of the minor the court set aside an ex parte decree against him on the ground that the minor's father who was his guardian ad litem did not properly represent him and removed the father from the guardianship and appointed the mother as the minor's guardian and allowed her to file a written statement, held, that the court had jurisdiction to pass the order that it did and it was right in not compelling the minor to file a separate suit.

When a minor is made a defendant in a suit, it is the minor who is a party to the suit and not his guardian ad litem. The guardian ad litem's name appears on the record in order to represent the minor but not in his capacity as a party to the suit. Where the guardian ad litem is negligent, it is open to the minor to appear in court through another guardian and ask the court to make proper orders for the protection of his interest.

Eda Punnayya v. Jangala Kama, 53 In. Cas. 184 not followed; Bhagwan Dayal v. Param Sukh Das, 39 All. 8 relied on.

Civil Revision from an order of Maulvi Owais Karney, Subordinate Judge of Gorakhpur.

P. L. Banerji and N. Upadhiya for the applicant.

Shiva Prasad Sinha for the opposite party.

The judgment of the Court was delivered by

Sulaiman, C. J.

Sulaiman, C. J.—The court below has set aside an ex parte decree passed against a minor in a partition suit on the ground that the minor's father, who had previously given his consent to a deed of partition by sale in the lifetime of the grandfather, was not a fit and proper person for being appointed a guardian, that he was careless and did not appear on the date of hearing to defend the suit on behalf of the minor. In connected application filed by the father on the ground that he was ill on the date and could not appear in court it has also set aside the decree as against him on the main ground that in a partition suit the decree must be set aside against all the defendants. It has also removed the father from the guardianship of the minor, and appointed the minor's mother as his guardian and allowed her to file a written statement on his behalf. We do not think that it can be said in revision that either the court had no jurisdiction to pass the order that it has done, or it has acted with material irregularity in the exercise of its jurisdiction.

The learned advocate for the applicant has relied strongly on the case of Eda Punnayya v. Jangala Kama Kotayya[1] and urged before us that the only remedy open to a minor who is not properly represented is to bring a separate suit, and that he cannot be allowed to be heard in the suit itself because he is not a party. We may point out that the view which has prevailed in this Court has been that a minor against whom a decree has been passed without the appointment of a proper guardian has several remedies open to him; he may in that very suit, if the facts justify, appeal against the decree, apply for rehearing under Order 9, Rule 13, apply for a review of judgment or apply for an order under Order 32, Rule 5 (2) of the Code, and he has in addition, the ordinary remedy to bring a separate suit (Bhagwan Dayal v. Param Sukh Das[2]).

*Civ. Rev. 131 of 1932

[1] 53 Ind. C. 184

In our opinion when a minor is made a defendant in a suit it is the minor who is a party to the suit and not his guardian ad litem. The guardian ad litem's name appears on the record in order to represent the minor but not in his capacity as a party to the suit. A suit brought against a minor without a question would still be brought in time and the appointment of a guardian ad litem which must be made by the court after the institution of the suit would not be barred by time merely because the guardian is appointed by the court after the expiry of the prescribed period. Although, therefore, when a decree is passed against a minor who has not been properly represented it is open to him to treat it as if he was not a party to the suit and to avoid the decree, it does not follow that the minor who does appear in court through another guardian or next friend cannot be heard and it must be considered that he has no locus standi to appear except through the guardian who has been appointed by the court, however, incompetent, negligent and improper he may be. It is the duty of the court to protect the interest of the minor and we think that it is open to the court to entertain an application on the ground of the negligence of the guardian, and to remove him and appoint another, if he was not a proper guardian or was negligent. The summary remedy in the suit itself is very often the least expensive. There seems to be no justification for compelling the minor to file a separate suit and incur heavy expenditure and also run the risk of the proceedings being prolonged, and not to allow him to avail himself of the more expeditious summary remedy open to other defendants.

In this view of the matter we think that the court below did not act without jurisdiction in entertaining the application.

We accordingly see no force in this revision and we dismiss it with costs.

Revision dismissed

[2] 39 All. 8 on 10 and 11

THE END

INDEX

ABADI—House in—Whether appurtenant to holding—Question of fact—No presumption of law—House appurtenant to holding—Meaning of.

There is no presumption of law that the house occupied by a cultivator in a village is appurtenant to his holding, and either the house or the site must be given up, simply because the tenancy has either been lost or has lapsed by death in favour of the zamindar.

Per NIAMATULLAH, J.—When it is said that a house is an appurtenant to a holding, what is meant is that the site was let to the tenant for the construction of his residential house on the express or implied understanding that it would go with the holding and that, if he be ejected from the latter or voluntarily relinquished it, his right to occupy the site would cease.

There is no presumption that a tenant is entitled to occupy the site of his house so long as he retains his holding, and the landlord must establish by direct evidence or proof of circumstances which justify the inference that the defendant's right to the site is dependent on his right to retain the holding. GOPI SHANKER v. LILAWATI (minor) THROUGH SHIMBHU NATH NAZIR. 142

———Site in—Customary right of transfer by tenant to stranger—When proved—Transactions relied on to be of the same nature.

The most cogent evidence is required before a customary right of transfer of the sites of houses in a village can be held to be established.

Where in an agricultural village containing 600 houses, the transfer by a perpetual lease, was by an agricultural tenant in favour of a non-agricultural tenant, and the defendants justified the lease of the site by the production of 22 sale-deeds and 8 mortgages spread over 100 years, while the zamindar produced 14 kabuliats and 4 instances of "parjot," held that the custom was not established.

Where an agricultural tenant purports to transfer the right to a site in the village, and on the transfer being challenged by the zamindar, the transferee, who is a stranger to the village, sets up a custom in virtue of which a tenant has a right to transfer sites of house in the village, and relies on sale deeds and mortgages by tenants, he must satisfy the court that the transaction relied on by him were not transactions between two agricultural tenants, and the vendee or mortgagee, as the case may be, was a stranger to the village. GANGA KALWAR v. BENI MADHO PRASAD SINGH. 111

ACCOUNTS—Examination of—Unconditional acknowledgment of indebtedness—Whether constitutes a new cause of action—Inclusion of time-barred debts in acknowledgment—Burden of proof—Limitation Act, Sec. 19—Stamp Act, Art. 1—Contract Act, Sec. 25.

Per NIAMATULLAH, J.—Where two persons examine their mutual dealings and one of them formally acknowledges his indebtedness to the other to a certain extent in a document which complies with all the formalities of the law, for example, Stamp Act, the natural inference is that he promised to pay the amount. The promise is a new contract, the consideration for which is the old debt, and such promise constitutes a new cause of action. In short, an unconditional acknowledgment implies a promise to pay and affords a new cause of action to the obligee. If in making the acknowledgment he has included time-barred debts which he might have well repudiated, it may still be open to him to plead failure of consideration to that extent. The creditor places himself in a disadvantageous position in this respect by omitting to take a bond containing an express promise to pay, which alone can successfully meet the plea of want of consideration. This is the effect of Sec. 25 Contract Act.

Per SULAIMAN, A. C. J.—A mere acknowledgment of liability is not always evidence of a new contract which can be the basis of a suit. There may be recitals in the written acknowledgment or there may be other direct or circumstantial evidence, which may show that the transaction in which the acknowledgment was made amounted in reality to a novation of the contract for a valid consideration. ABDUL RAFIQ v. BHAJAN. 77

AGRA PRE-EMPTION ACT (XI of 1922).
See Pre-emption Act.

AGRA TENANCY ACT (II of 1901) and (III of 1926).
See Tenancy Act.

APPEAL—Question of law raised for the first time—When to be entertained.

When a question of law is raised for the first time in a court of last resort upon the construction of a document or upon facts either admitted or proved beyond controversy, it is not only competent but expedient in the interests of justice to entertain the plea. THE OFFICIAL LIQUIDATOR OF M. E. MOOLA SONS, LTD. v. MRS. PERRIN R. BURJORJEE. 706

ARBITRATION ACT (IX of 1899)—Sec. 19 and Sec. 32 Negotiable Instruments Act (XXVI of 1881)—C. I. F. contract—Bank endorses bills of exchange in favour of sellers—Suit based on accepted bills—When can be stayed—Legal position after acceptance.

Where in accordance with the terms of a C. I. F. contract, the sellers draw bills of exchange directing the purchasers to pay the invoice value of the goods to the Bank named in the bills and the purchasers accept the bills before maturity, the legal position is that the purchasers' liability to the sellers for the invoice value of the goods is discharged and a liability to the Bank under the bills is substituted therefor.

Where however the agreement between the parties empowers the sellers to claim the invoice value inspite of the acceptance of the bill, it is implied that if the sellers elect to sue for the invoice value on the basis of the original contract they would secure for the buyers immunity against any claim on the basis of the bill and, conversely, if the buyer's acceptance of the bill is enforced, they are absolved from their liability under the original contract.

Where the Bank endorsed the bills of exchange to the sellers and the sellers brought a suit based on accepted bills of exchange, and the purchasers made an application under Section 19 Arbitration Act (IX of 1899) for stay of suit on the ground that the agreement provided that disputes arising out of any contract entered into in connection with the agreement were to be referred to arbitration, held, that the plaintiffs (who did not avail themselves of the remedy reserved to them under the agreement of falling back on the original consideration) were in the position of the Bank and were suing as holders of the bills of exchange and the suit could not be stayed under Section 19 Arbitration Act as there was no agreement between the plaintiffs as holders and the defendants as acceptors of the bills of exchange containing any clause authorising a reference to arbitration. DHIRAJ LAL RAM PRASAD v. JACOB BEHRENS & SONS. 1055

ARMS ACT (XI of 1878), Sec. 19(f)—Conviction under—When justified—Loaded cartridges found in a house—Head of the family convicted—When conviction legal.

In the course of a house search two loaded cartridges were found in a corn bin in the house of the accused among ghee, butter and other articles. The accused was prosecuted for an offence under the Arms Act and the Magistrate convicted him on the ground that he was the head of the family and should therefore be held responsible for the arms recovered from his house. Held, that the view taken by the Magistrate was wrong and the conviction was not legal. In all such cases it is necessary to prove not only the presence of the article in the house but the possession of some particular person over that article in order to justify a conviction. KAUL AHIR v. KING-EMPEROR. 1072 ———Section 19(f)—Unlicensed gun in the house—Presumption against all adult male members that it was in their possession and control—One or all the members liable to prosecution.

The finding of an unlicensed gun in the house would raise a presumption against all the adult male members that it was in their possession and control, and they might one and all be tried on that charge. It would be for those persons to show that they were not in possession of the gun in question. It is open to the police to prosecute one or all of the adult male members for an offence of this nature. KING-EMPEROR v. SIKHDAR. 570

BUNDELKHAND LAND ALIENATION ACT (Local Act II of 1903), Sections 16 (as amended by Act VII of 1929), 9 and 6—Mortgagor and mortgagee—Members of agricultural tribe—Suit for sale on mortgage instituted in 1924—No decree for sale could be

BUNDELKHAND LAND ALIENATION ACT (Local Act II of 1903)—Section 16 passed in view of Section 16—Section 9 inapplicable—Order of Subordinate Judge consigning the case to the record room—Effect of —Whether amending Act revived proceedings.

The mortgagee, who was a member of an agricultural tribe within the meaning of the Bundelkhand Land Alienation Act (II of 1903), sued for enforcement of his mortgage executed by another member of an agricultural tribe but as a claim to a simple money decree was time-barred, he prayed for a decree under Or. 34, R. 4 C. P. C. for satisfaction of the mortgage money by sale of the mortgaged property. The Subordinate Judge, being of opinion that no decree for sale or for foreclosure could be passed, made a reference to the Collector with a view to the latter substituting a mortgage in the form prescribed by Section 6 in place of the mortgage then in suit. On the Collector's refusal to take action under Section 9, the Subordinate Judge referred the matter to the High Court under Or. 46, R. 1 C. P. C. and after the High Court's decision "that the law as it stood, left the mortgagee without a remedy" the Subordinate Judge on June 10, 1927 ordered the case to be consigned to the record room. After the Bundelkhand Land Alienation Act had been amended in 1929, the mortgagee, who was protected by the newly added proviso to Section 16, applied for a decree for sale under Or. 34, R. 4 C. P. C. Held, that the order of the Subordinate Judge dated June 10, 1927 operated as a final adjudication of the rights of the parties and was a decree determining the suit for sale; and the amending Act could not have retrospective effect so far as to revive proceedings in a suit which had terminated before it was passed.

Strictly speaking there is no provision in the Act requiring the Collector to 'return' the reference. If the Collector cannot take action under Section 9, the proceedings before him terminate. RAM SAHAI v. DEBI DIN. 584 ———Sections 16 and 11—Decree-holder prevented from putting property of judgment-debtor to sale—Whether decree can be executed by giving a lease which the deceased debtor could have given under Section 11.

Where a decree-holder is prevented, by reason of Section 16 of the Bundelkhand Land Alienation Act, from putting the property of the judgment-debtor to sale, the decree can be executed by the giving of a lease which it would have been open to the judgment-debtor himself to give under Section 11 of the Act. MAJHLI DULAIYA v. MUNNA LAL. 562

BURDEN OF PROOF—Bond—Evidence led by plaintiff showed that full consideration not paid—Defendant not precluded from urging that no consideration passed.

Where the execution of the bond as a simple bond by the defendants was proved, and the plaintiffs' evidence showed that no consideration beyond Rs.50 had passed, held, that the defendants were not precluded from urging that no consideration passed. RADHA BALLAB v. DEOKI NANDAN. 207

CIVIL PROCEDURE CODE (V of 1908), Section 2(11)—Deceased Mohammedan debtor —Suit by creditor against his legal representatives—One defendant exempted—Liability of remaining defendants.

RAM CHANDRA LAL v. HANIFA KHATUN. 727

———Section 2(12)—Suit for possession— By setting aside deed of conveyance on ground of fraud—Suit decreed—Whether plaintiff entitled to mesne profits from date of suit or date of decree.

By a deed dated November 25, 1924, plaintiff purported to make over a valuable estate to the defendant subject to certain conditions. On February 21, 1927 the plaintiff instituted a suit for possession by setting aside this deed on the ground that it was procured by undue influence and fraud. The courts in India found the allegations of undue influence and fraud proved and awarded possession. Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to mesne profits from the date of the deed, inasmuch as on the findings as to fraud, the possession of the defendant must be deemed to have been wrongful from the very date of the deed. SATGUR PRASAD alias BHAIYA HARI SARAN DAS v. HAR NARAIN DAS. 297 ———Section 11—Appeal—Abatement— Whether decision of trial court operates as res judicata.

Where an appeal is not decided on the merits but abates, so that the appeal becomes infructuous and the decision of the trial court becomes conclusive, the latter will operate as res judicata as regards questions decided by it, in a subsequent suit between the same parties, assuming that other conditions of the rule exist. RAGHUNATH DAS v. GANESH DAS. 615

———Section 11—Res judicata—As between co-defendants—When—Dismissal of previous suit depended upon an adjudication of conflict between co-defendants—Decision operates as res judicata between co-defendants.

A Burmese woman died leaving her surviving two sons and two daughters. The sons having entered into possession of the mother's property, one of the daughters instituted a suit claiming a 1|4th share alleging that the succession was regulated by Burmese Buddhist law under which the sons and daughters took equal shares. In this suit both the sons and the remaining daughter were made co-defendants. The relief claimed included administration of the estate of the deceased, accounts against the sons as executors de son tort of the deceased, and the appointment of a receiver of the estate. The sons filed a joint written statement, pleading that the succession was governed by the Chinese customary law under which daughters were excluded from inheritance. The daughter-defendant filed no written statement but gave evidence on behalf of the plaintiff in support of her claim. The suit was dismissed on the finding that the Chinese customary law governed the succession and that under that law the sons only inherited and not the daughters. Subsequently the present suit was instituted by the other daughter against her two brothers for her 1|4th share in her mother's estate. Held, that the suit was barred by the rule of res judicata as applied between co-defendants. The rule is applicable even if the previous suit was dismissed, provided such dismissal depended upon an adjudication of conflict between the co-defendants. MAUNG SEIN DONE v. MA PAN NYUN. 735

———Section 11—Rule of res judicata as between co-defendants—Conflict of interest between co-defendants latent—One co-defendant did not defend suit—Whether Rule applicable.

A house was bought by one K in the name of his wife. K's brother brought a suit claiming his share in the house on the allegation that the property belonged to K. The defendants to the suit were K's wife's brother's children and K's daughter. K's wife's brother's children were vitally interested in denying that the house belonged to K. (If the house belonged to K they would be entitled to a one anna share, whereas if the house belonged to K's wife, they would be entitled to an eight anna share). On the other hand it was to K's daughter's interest that the property should be held to have belonged to her father and not to her mother. (If the property belonged to her father, she was entitled by inheritance to a nine anna share whereas if the property belonged to her mother, she was entitled to eight annas only). K's daughter did not enter appearance in the suit but chose to stand by and let the plaintiff fight her battle. Held, that the decision in the suit as to the ownership of the house operated as res judicata between the co-defendants. KANIZ FATMA v. YAD HUSAIN. 1063 ———Section 11—Rule of res judicata—As between co-defendants—Criterion—Evidence Act, Section 115—Estoppel—Conditions to be fulfilled.

The plaintiffs, who were the heirs of the mortgagor under the personal law, instituted the present suit for redemption of a usufructuary mortgage of an occupancy holding. The mortgagees contested the suit on the ground that the plaintiffs were not the heirs to the mortgagor under Tenancy Law in force at the time the inheritance opened (Sec. 9 of Act XII of 1881). Prior to this the zamindar had instituted a suit in the revenue court against the present plaintiffs and defendants for possession of the occupancy holding on the allegation that on the death of the tenant (mortgagor) without leaving any heirs, the holding lapsed to her as zamindar. The present plaintiffs did not contest the suit. The present defendants however contested the suit on the ground that the tenant had died leaving the present plaintiffs as heirs. This plea found favour with the revenue court which dismissed the suit for ejectment. The plaintiffs contended that the decision of the revenue court operated as res judicata, and it was not now open to the mortgagees to take the plea that the plaintiffs were not the heirs to the mortgagor. Held, (1) that there was no conflict of interest between the present plaintiffs and defendants, who were arrayed as defendants in the revenue court, and the revenue court decision did not operate as res judicata. (2) that whether or not the plaintiffs were the legal heirs of the tenant (mortgagor) was as much within their knowledge as that of the defendants, and the attitude of the defendants in the revenue suit did not in any way mislead the plaintiffs or induce them to alter their position, and Section 115 Evidence Act did not apply. Sri Ram Singh v. Baldeo Prasad. 605

———Section 11 and Tenancy Act (II of 1901), Section 199—Suit for money on a mortgage—In a former ejectment suit it was decided by the revenue court that plaintiff was not a mortgagee—Whether decision operated as res judicata.

Before a matter can be held to be res judicata, it must be found, among other things, that the first court was competent to try the subsequent suit and not merely a subsequent issue.

There is nothing in Section 199 of Act II of 1901 to justify the suggestion that the revenue court deciding a question of title "must be deemed to be a civil court." Even if the revenue court might for the immediate purpose be deemed to be a civil court, it does not become a civil court competent to try a particular whole suit.

The plaintiff having lost possession as a usufructuary mortgagee, brought a suit for money on the mortgage. Previous to this suit the mortgagor had brought a suit against the present plaintiff in the revenue court to eject him from a plot. The present plaintiff pleaded that he was a mortgagee, and his plea was rejected and the suit decreed. It was contended in the present suit that this question of whether the present plaintiff was a mortgagee or not having been decided against him by the revenue court, the matter was res judicata. Held, that while the revenue court was competent to try the issue as to whether the present plaintiff was a mortgagee or not (Act II of 1901, Section 199), it was not competent to try the subsequent suit, and therefore the terms of Section 11 C. P. C. were not satisfied, and the decision of the revenue court did not operate as res judicata. Sarju Prasad Sonar v. Mahadeo Prasad Pandey. 511

———Section 24—High Court or District Judge—Whether empowered to transfer case to another court which has pecuniary but not territorial jurisdiction—'Competent'—Meaning of.

The High Court or the District Judge, acting under Section 24 C. P. C. has power to transfer a suit pending in one subordinate court to another subordinate court, which has pecuniary, but not territorial jurisdiction to try that suit.

The word "competent" as used in Section 24 C. P. C. must be taken to refer to pecuniary jurisdiction only. Kishori Lal v. Balkishan. 984

———Section 47—Whether execution court empowered to substitute a compromise between the parties for the decree originally passed. Gobardhan Das v. Dau Dayal. 365

———Section 47 and Or. 21, R. 58—Suit filed after debtor's death against his daughter's son only—Decree—Execution—Daughter's objection that her property cannot be attached allowed—Objection under Or. 21, R. 58 and not under Section 47.

Where, after the death of his debtor, plaintiff sued deceased's daughter's son only alleging that he was the sole legatee of the deceased under a will, and having obtained a decree against the assets of the deceased in the hands of the son, he tried to execute it by attachment and sale of the property in the hands of the daughter, but an objection by her that the property was her own was allowed, held, that the objection was under Or. 21, R. 58 and not an objection under Section 47 C. P. C. as there was no dispute between the parties to the decree or their representatives. No appeal therefore lay from the order. Jagannath Prasad v. Jamuna Bai. 125

———Section 47 and Or. 21, R. 90—Decree-holder himself auction-purchaser—Judgment-debtor can assail sale on grounds apart from those specified in Or. 21, R. 90. Karan Singh v. Sadho Ram. 1118

———Section 48—Decree for money—Execution—Compromise—Decree payable by instalments—Last instalment not paid in full—Execution application after expiration of twelve years from date of original decree—Whether plea of limitation open to judgment-debtor—Estoppel.

While an application for execution of a decree for money was pending and a warrant for the arrest of the judgment-debtor had been issued, the decree-holder and the judgment-debtor came to terms that the decretal amount be paid in nine instalments spread over four years. When the compromise was filed the execution court passed the following order:—"Parties have come to a compromise. Warrant may be cancelled". The court allowed the compromise to be placed on the record. Eight instalments were regularly paid. The decree-holder refused to accept the last instalment as the balance of the amount due was not paid in full, and the day after the expiry of the date fixed for payment he made an application for execution by attachment and sale of property. This application was made after the expiration of twelve years from the date of the original decree. Held, (1) that the order of the execution court amounted to an order substituting the compromise for the decree originally passed; (2) that the execution court had no power to pass such an order; (3) that the parties could not extend the period of limitation under Section 48 C. P. C. by means of a compromise, and it was open to the judgment-debtor to plead that the decree-holder's application was barred by limitation; (4) that the action of the judgment-debtor in pleading limitation did not amount to fraud within the meaning of Section 48(2) (a) C. P. C. GOBARDHAN DAS v. DAU DAYAL. 365

———Section 48 and Limitation Act, Art. 182—Final decree—Amendment of—Application for execution of amended decree—Made more than 12 years after the date of final decree—Whether time-barred.

An application for execution of an amended decree made more than 12 years after the date of the final decree is barred by limitation under Section 48 C. P. C.

On a correct reading of Art. 182 of the Limitation Act, it is obvious that where execution is barred by Section 48 of C. P. C. execution cannot be allowed under Art. 182 of the Limitation Act. In other words, Art. 182 is subject to the provisions of Section 48. An amendment of a decree therefore does not give a new date for starting a period of limitation, if the application for execution is beyond the period of 12 years allowed by Sec. 48, that is, that the period of 12 years under Section 48 is final and cannot be extended by any amendment of the decree whether that amendment is made before the expiry of the period of 12 years or after the expiry of 12 years. FAQIR CHAND v. KUNDAN SINGH. 471 ———Section 48, and Or. 20, R. 11—'Subsequent order'—Meaning of—Must be an order of the court which passed the decree—'Subsequent order' not confined to orders passed under Or. 20, R. 11.

The execution court has no power to vary the terms of the decree under execution. The "subsequent order" in Section 48 C. P. C., which provides a fresh starting point for limitation, must be an order of the court which passed the decree, and not an order of the court executing the decree. The 'subsequent order' in Section 48 is not confined to orders passed under Or. 20, R. 11. GOBARDHAN DAS v. DAU DAYAL. 365

———Section 48 (2) (a)—Fraud—Meaning of—Decree for money—Execution—Compromise—Decree payable by instalments—Last instalment not paid in full—Execution application after expiration of twelve years from date of original decree—Judgment-debtor pleads limitation—Whether action amounts to fraud. GOBARDHAN DAS v. DAU DAYAL. 365

———Section 53—Decree against Hindu lambardar for amount collected and also remaining uncollected—Lambardar dies before attachment—Son brought on record—Whether decree can be executed as against son.

A suit was brought against a Hindu lambardar and a decree was obtained against him, which was both for the amount collected by him and also for the amount remaining uncollected on account of his negligence. Before any property could be attached, the lambardar died. His son was brought on the record as his legal representative and execution was sought against him by the attachment and sale of the joint family property. Held, that in view of the provisions of Section 53 C. P. C. the decree can be executed as against the son to the extent of the joint family estate in his hands. SRI RAM v. JAI KISHUN LAL. 873

———Section 60(c)—Judgment-debtors belonging to agriculturist caste and doing cultivation—Permission obtained to build houses on a portion of the leased land—Whether ceased to be agriculturists.

Where the judgment-debtors came of an agriculturist caste and cultivated the soil and had no other occupation, the mere fact that they had obtained permission to build houses on a portion of the land which was formerly their occupancy tenancy did not necessarily imply that they had themselves ceased to be agriculturists or that they no longer occupied the houses (sought to be attached and sold in execution of the decree against them) in the capacity of agriculturists; and consequently the house was exempt from attachment and sale under Section 60 (c) C. P. C. SAMPAT v. RAM PRASAD. 499

———Section 60(1) (c)—Decree against assets of deceased person in the hands of his successor—Deceased not an agriculturist—Successor an agriculturist—House occupied by suc- cessor attached—Whether exempted from attachment.

A decree was passed against the assets of a deceased person (who was not an agriculturist) in the hands of his successor-in-interest (who was an agriculturist). The decree-holder attached a house, which was occupied by the successor, with a view to auction sale; held, that it is the occupation of the person in whose hands the assets are at the present time, which should be considered, and the house is therefore exempt from attachment and sale under Section 60 (1) (c). BADRI CHANDAN v. INDRAJIT PERTAB BAHADUR. 675

———Section 64—Partition of undivided property made through award—Subsequently filed in court—Not a private transfer. MOHAMMED AFZAL KHAN v. ABDUL RAHMAN. 909

———Section 68—Sale of ancestral property by Civil Court—Whether without jurisdiction. KARAN SINGH v. SADHO RAM. 1118

———Section 68 and Or. 21, R. 66(3)—In the statement mentioned in Or. 21, R. 66(3) decree-holder stated property to be sold to be ancestral—Execution case transferred to Collector—Decision as to character of property res judicata.

The application for an order for sale under Or. 21, R. 66 was accompanied by the statement mentioned in Or. 21, R. 66(3) in which it was stated by the decree-holder that the property to be sold was ancestral, and after enquiry the execution case was transferred to the Collector. Before the Collector, however, the decree-holder stated that the property was non-ancestral and that he did not propose to proceed with the execution, and the record was therefore sent back to the Civil Court. Under orders of the Civil Court the property was put up for sale and purchased by the decree-holder. The judgment-debtor filed an application for the setting aside of the sale. Held, (1) that the property to be sold having once been declared as between the parties to be ancestral property, the decree-holder was barred by the principle of res judicata from asserting that the property was non-ancestral; (2) that the sale of such property by the court amin was entirely without jurisdiction as the Collector and the Collector alone could sell the property; (3) that the decree-holder himself being the auction-purchaser, it was open to the judgment-debtor to assail the validity of the sale on grounds other than those specified in Or. 21, R. 90 C. P. C.

KARAN SINGH v. SADHO RAM. 1118

———Section 73—'Where assets are held by a court'—Meaning of—Judgment-debtor deposits a certain sum to secure postponement of sale—Whether money so lying in court is an 'asset' available for rateable distribution.

The first seven words in Section 73 C. P. C., viz., where assets are held by a court, must be given the plain and ordinary construction, and the word 'assets' is not confined to 'assets' realised by sale or otherwise in execution of a decree.

The property of a judgment-debtor was about to be put up for sale at the instance of a decree-holder when the judgment-debtor deposited a certain sum in court in order to secure the postponement of the sale. Thereupon another decree-holder, who had, before the above-mentioned payment by the judgment-debtor, made an application to the court for the execution of his decree for the payment of money passed against the same judgment-debtor, claimed to have a rateable distribution of the aforesaid sum held by the court; held, that the money so lying in court was an 'asset' available for rateable distribution. SIDH NATH TEWARI v. TEJ BAHADUR SINGH. 359

———Section 80—Insolvent—Receiver—District Judge, on being moved by creditors, orders receiver to attach property alleged to be insolvent's—Receiver attaches property—Plaintiff sues for a declaration that property belongs to him—Whether notice to receiver necessary.

Where, in the first instance, plaintiff sued for a declaration that a deed of gift executed by her be set aside as it was obtained from her by fraud; but finding that the property in respect of which the gift had been executed, had been attached by the official receiver of an insolvent's estate under order of the District Judge, who was moved by the creditors, as the property of the insolvent, the plaintiff claimed a second declaration that the property gifted belonged to her and could not be attached, and she made the donees, the receiver and the creditors parties to the suit, held:—

Per PULLAN, J.—that the cause of action arose from the execution of the deed of gift and in the first instance the plaintiff sought relief against the donees who had defrauded her, and as the receiver was impleaded in order that the plaintiff may obtain an ancillary relief, no notice to the receiver under Section 80 C. P. C. was necessary.

Per NIAMATULLAH, J.—that the first relief claimed by the plaintiff was clearly one which had no reference to any act done by the receiver; and as regards the second relief, the suit cannot be considered to be one in respect of any act done by the receiver, the material portion of the plaintiff's cause of action having arisen from the act done by the creditors in successfully moving the District Judge to treat the property as the property of the insolvent, and notice to the receiver under Section 80 C. P. C. was therefore not necessary. SHIYAM DEI v. BANKEY LAL. 797 ———Section 80—Notice under Section 77, Railways Act does not dispense with the necessity of a notice under Section 80.

Section 80 of the Civil Procedure Code is imperative and therefore a notice under Section 77 of the Railways Act does not dispense with the necessity of a notice under Section 80 C. P. C.

Where a postal receipt of acknowledgment is filed by the plaintiff which purports to be with reference to some document transmitted to a railway authority it cannot be predicated with certainty that the document in question was a notice which fulfilled the requirements of Section 77 of the Railways Act. THE SECRETARY OF STATE FOR INDIA IN COUNCIL v. FAZAL UDDIN BADRUDDIN. 1033

———Section 92—Temple—Maintained by public subscriptions—Open to public for "Darshan"—Suit by worshipper for removal of manager—Trust for public benefit—Whether temple private or public—No presumption.

There is no presumption that any particular temple is public or private, and whether it is public or private depends on the facts proved in each case.

A temple, which had been held by professed ascetics in succession from Gurus to Chelas, came to defendant by his being a Chela of his Guru and not by any deed of gift or will. The temple was maintained by public subscriptions and it was open to the members of the public attending it for "Darshan" or "worship" to make offerings. On a suit brought by plaintiffs, who were in the habit of worshipping at the temple and of making offerings and giving subscriptions, the defendant was removed from the office of manager on the finding that he had wasted the temple property. Held, that the endowment was a public endowment and the temple was a trust for the benefit of the public and therefore Section 92 C. P. C. applied and plaintiffs were entitled to maintain the suit. SAHDEO DAS v. RAJA RAM. 886

———Section 93—Construction of—Projected suit under Section 92—Previous sanction of Local Government necessary—To enable Legal Remembrancer to exercise his powers.

On a true construction of Section 93 of the Code of Civil Procedure the previous sanction of the Local Government in relation to every projected suit under Section 92 of the Code is necessary to enable the Legal Remembrancer to exercise his powers. Where a suit was instituted merely with the sanction of the Legal Remembrancer and it was not shown that any sanction of the Local Government had been obtained for the institution of such suit, held, that the suit was incompetent and must fail PREM NARAIN v. RAM CHARAN. 182 ———Section 104(b)—Civil suit—Defendant ordered to produce a lady in court for internal medical examination—Lady not produced—Defendant ordered to be arrested and detained in civil prison—Order ultra vires.

In a civil suit one of the points for decision was whether a lady had ever given birth to a child. On the plaintiff's application the learned judge ordered the defendant to produce her in court 'so that she may be required to undergo medical examination'. As she was not produced on the date fixed, the learned judge concluded that the defendant was responsible for her non-appearance and ordered that the defendant who was present in court 'be arrested atonce and detained in the civil prison'. A commissioner, who was appointed for the purpose, produced the lady in court. The learned judge examined the lady and noted that she was willing to submit herself to medical examination by a lady doctor. The medical examination of the lady took place at the Zenana Hospital; held, (1) that the learned judge did not profess to act on the assumption that the defendant was in contempt, and his order for the arrest and detention of the defendant in the civil prison was ultra vires, (2) that the circumstances in which she was brought to court and detained showed that her consent was wrung out of her because of the fear under which she was placed; and an internal examination of a lady, if not voluntarily submitted to by her, would amount to assault. PADARATH TEWARI v. DULHIN TAPESHA KUERI. 221

———Section 109—'Final order'—Meaning of —Order passed on appeal by High Court setting aside the ex parte decree—Whether amounts to 'final order'.

A final order within the meaning of Sec. 109 C. P. C. need not be a final order passed in the suit itself but may be a final order in any other proceeding or case arising subsequent to the suit. If that order finally terminates that proceeding and determines the rights of the parties so far as the question in controversy between the parties in that proceeding arose, it is a final order within the meaning of that section.

On appeal to the High Court from an order of the lower court rejecting an application under Or. IX, R. 13 C. P. C. for setting aside an ex parte decree, the High Court allowed the appeal and set aside the ex parte decree with the result that the original suit was restored to its original number to be tried de novo. Held, that the order of the High Court is a final order within the meaning of Section 109 C. P. C. and is therefore appealable. KISHAN CHAND v. LACHHMI CHAND. 838

———Section 109 (a)—"Final order passed on appeal"—Construction of.

The words "final order passed on appeal" in Sec. 109 (a) should be construed broadly, and include an order directing the dismissal of an appeal consequent upon the appellant's failure to furnish security for costs of the respondent. MAHADEO SAHAI v. THE SECRETARY OF STATE FOR INDIA. 254 ———Section 109 (a)—Order granting an application for review of judgment—Not a 'final' order appealable to Privy Council.

An order made on an application for review of judgment that the appeal be re-heard in the light of new and additional evidence in the shape of a deed of gift, does not finally dispose of the dispute between the parties but re-opens the decree that was passed originally by the court, and therefore the order for review is not a final order within the meaning of Sec. 109(a) C. P. C. which is appealable. AMBIKA PRASAD v. DEVI DAYAL. 235 ———Sections 109 (c) and 151—High Court passes order of suspension against an advocate—Leave to appeal to Privy Council granted—Whether High Court can order that suspension should remain in abeyance.

Where leave to appeal to Privy Council is granted to an advocate from an order of suspension passed against him by a Full Bench, the High Court has inherent jurisdiction to order that the order for suspension should remain in abeyance till the appeal is disposed of by the Privy Council. AN ADVOCATE OF BENARES—In the matter of. 861 ———Section 110—Appellant's failure to furnish security for the costs of respondent—Order dismissing appeal—Whether "affirms decision of court below".

Where on the application of the respondent under Or. 41, R. 10 the High Court ordered the appellant to furnish security for the costs of the respondent, and on his failure to do so, the appeal was dismissed, held, that the order of the High Court dismissing the appeal is an order affirming the decision of the court below within the meaning of the last paragraph of Sec. 110 C. P. C. The words in Sec. 110 C. P. C. are "affirms the decision of the court", and not "affirms the decision of the court on the merits". MAHADEO SAHAI v. THE SECRETARY OF STATE FOR INDIA. 254 ———Section 110—Application for leave to appeal—From decree in a suit for partition—Valuation—Whether value of whole estate to be taken into account.

Where an application is made for leave to His Majesty in Council from a decree in a suit for partition, the value of the whole estate is the value to be taken into account. The suit for partition could not be decreed without considering the value of the entire estate and the method in which the partition should take place and the decree therefore at least indirectly involved a question respecting the whole estate. MOHAMMAD ASGHAR v. ABIDA BEGUM. 730

———Section 115—Munsif dismissing case behind back of parties on date not fixed for hearing—Whether revision lies.

Where the munsif took up a case on a date which was not fixed for hearing and dismissed the suit behind the back of the parties by accepting the sworn testimony of the referee, held, that the munsif's order was irregular and without jurisdiction, and was open to revision under Sec. 115 C. P. C. BASDEO SINGH v. RAM RAJ SINGH. 71

———Section 115 and Land Acquisition Act, Section 18—Order passed by Collector under Sec. 18 refusing to make reference to the District Judge—Whether High Court can revise order. BHOJANI LAL v. SECRETARY OF STATE. 769

———Section 115 and Municipalities Act, Sec.

318—Order of District Magistrate—Passed in exercise of appellate jurisdiction conferred by Sec. 318—Whether revision lies to High Court. BISHAMBHAR NATH v. ACHAL SINGH. 8[illegible]6 ———Section 115 (c)—Interpretation of—When High Court can interfere.

Per BOYS, J.—Under Sec. 115, Clause (c) C. P. C. any illegality or material irregularity may be a basis for revising the order of the lower court, and it is left entirely to the Revision Court, to determine whether there has been such illegality or material irregularity as will dispose it to interfere. If a question of jurisdiction is involved, the Court may act under Clause (a) or (b).

Per NIAMATULLAH, J.—In view of authoritative judicial pronouncements the words of Sec. 115 (c) must be interpreted as implying that a mere error of law in deciding a case cannot be said to be an illegal or irregular exercise of jurisdiction. THE DISTRICT BOARD OF FARRUKHABAD v. IKHLAQUE HUSAIN. 803

———Section 122—Rules framed under—Can only regulate procedure of subordinate courts—Jurisdiction cannot be taken away.

The mere fact that a rule made by the High Court under Sec. 122 C. P. C. is imperative would not necessarily involve the conclusion that a breach of that rule would oust the jurisdiction of the subordinate court and make it helpless in the matter. Under Sec. 122 the High Court can only regulate the procedure of the subordinate courts, and cannot take away their jurisdiction. ABDUL WAHID v. TRIBHAWAN DAS. 13

———Section 144—Payment made under an order of insolvency court—Order set aside on appeal—Whether insolvency court has jurisdiction to order refund. PANNA LAL SHAM LAL v. ABDULLAH USMAN. 1095

———Section 144—Suit for dissolution of partnership in two factories—Defendant in possession—Suit decreed—Decree included appointment of receiver—By agreement each party agreed to manage one factory—Decree set aside on appeal as no valid partnership existed—Defendant dies—His son entitled to possession of factory placed under plaintiff's management.

A suit for dissolution of partnership in two factories was decreed and the decree included the direction that a receiver be appointed, but the parties came before the court and agreed that one factory be managed by defendant and the other by plaintiff. On appeal by defendant, the High Court set aside the decree holding that there was no valid partnership. Defendant having died, his adopted son applied for restitution under Sec. 144 C. P. C. seeking inter alia to be put in possession of the factory which was under the agreement placed under plaintiff's management. Held, that as the defendant was in possession when the suit was brought, he could recover possession by restitution, and as there was no proof that his possession terminated with his death, his son was entitled to represent him after his death and to recover possession and profits, if any, accruing from the factory during plaintiff's management. SHANTI LAL v. RAM GOPAL. 239

———Section 145—Application by plaintiff in a pending suit for stay of sale in execution of a decree—Sale stayed on appellant filing a bond in plaintiff's suit—Whether decree-holder can execute decree against appellant.

Where on the application of the plaintiff in a pending suit, a sale in execution of a decree was stayed pending the disposal of the plaintiff's suit, on an undertaking being given by the present appellant by execution of a bond filed in the plaintiff's suit, that if the plaintiff's suit was dismissed and the decree-holder suffered any loss, the loss might be made good from certain specified properties of the appellant. The plaintiff's suit was dismissed and the decree-holder, who had suffered a small loss, proceeded to execute the decree against the appellant, held (1) that the decree could not be executed against the appellant as the undertaking was given in the plaintiff's suit and not in the execution proceedings relating to the decree sought to be executed; (2) that Sec. 145 C. P. C. was inapplicable to the present case. SAHU RAM KISHORE v. CHIRANJI LAL. 1060

———Section 151 and Or. 41, R. 5—Appeal from preliminary decree—Final decree passed during pendency of appeal—No appeal from final decree—Whether appellate court empowered to stay execution of final decree.

The High Court has power, under Sec. 151 C. P. C., to order stay of execution of a final decree during the pendency of an appeal from the preliminary decree, if, having regard to the ends of justice, it is expedient. JANKI DAS v. SHEO PRASAD. 43

———Section 151 and Or. 41, R. 5—Appeal from preliminary decree—Proceedings for preparation of final decree—Whether should be stayed.

It is generally expedient that proceedings for the preparation of the final decree should not be stayed pending an appeal from the preliminary decree because the mere passing of a final decree will not, in any way, affect the rights of the parties to the appeal from the preliminary decree. Janki Das v. Sheo Prasad. 43

———Sections 151, 152 and 153—Property mortgaged—Misdescribed in mortgage deed, plaint, decree, sale certificate and dakhalnama owing to accidental slip—Court empowered to make corrections necessary for ends of justice.

The language of Section 152 C. P. C. is wide enough to cover the correction of mistakes made by the parties themselves. The power of the court to make corrections necessary for the ends of justice is not confined only to powers exercisable under Sec. 152. Extensive powers may also be exercised under Secs. 151 and 153.

Where by an accidental slip the property mortgaged in village "Nawadiya Zamania Nagla" was described in the deed as "Nagla Zamania Nawadiya", but this misdescription was discovered only when the mortgagee, who in his suit upon the mortgage had purchased the property, obtained sale certificate and formal delivery of possession, applied for mutation, held, that this was eminently a case in which the accidental slip in the plaint, decree, sale certificate and dakhalnama should be corrected as the correction was necessary for the ends of justice. Aziz Ullah Khan v. The Court of Wards, Shahjehanpur. 784

———Order 1, R. 10 (2)—Order exempting defendant from suit and allowing his name to remain in decree—Order tantamount to dismissal of suit as against him. Said Ahmad v. Raza Husain. 1036

———Order 6, R. 16—Hindu son's suit—To set aside alienation by father—Plaint alleges that father was 'extravagant and dissolute'—Paragraph to be struck out.

In a suit by a Hindu son to set aside an alienation by his father on the ground that the debt contracted was tainted with immorality, the immorality must be pleaded with particularity, that is, the exact nature of the immorality must be specified, and it must be shown with precision exactly how it came about at the particular time that the particular money was needed and used for the particular immorality charged. No judge should allow a general charge of immorality (e.g., that the father was 'extravagant and dissolute') to remain on record; and if, on the application of the opposite party, the whole statement is struck out, such opposite party should have the costs. Jagdish Narain v. Hazari Lal. 309 ———Order 7, R. 11—'Cause of action'—Meaning of.

The cause of action as used in Or. 7, R. 11 C. P. C. does not mean a claim which is still enforceable under the law of limitation. Bhajja v. Mohammad Said Khan.. 489 ———Order 9, R. 4—Suit dismissed in default of appearance—Plaintiff present but went to fetch vakil—Restoration—When should be granted.

The courts should not ignore the somewhat natural tendency among the litigants of hurrying to their pleaders, when their cases are called on, with the object of fetching them. Where a pleader is not forthcoming or is busy elsewhere and the case is dismissed in the meantime, the rule as to restoration should not be so rigorously enforced as to sacrifice the ends of justice which it is intended to subserve.

Applicant's suit having been dismissed in default of appearance, he immediately applied for restoration and his affidavit stated that he was present when his case was called on but he went to search his vakil who was busy in another court and that on his return he learnt that his suit had been dismissed. Prima facie the allegations in the affidavit were not open to suspicion nor was there any counter-affidavit. Held, that applicant's suit should be restored. Rama Shankar v. Iqbal Husain. 480

———Order 9, Rules 8 and 9—Suit for profits—Dismissed for want of prosecution—Suit subsequently restored—Whether High Court can revise order restoring suit. Bohra Panna Lal v. Basdeo. 1100

———Order 9, R. 13—Decree specifies liability of each defendant—As against one ex parte*—Other defendants appeal—Appeal dismissed—No notice served on defendant against whom* ex parte decree passed—Whether he can apply to court of first instance to set aside ex parte decree.

The decree passed in a suit for contribution specified the liability of each defendant. The decree as against one defendant, viz., the present applicant, was ex parte. An appeal by the other defendants was dismissed by the Additional Subordinate Judge. The present applicant was made a party in the appeal but no notice was served on him. His application for setting aside of the decree having been disallowed by the munsif on the ground that no such application could be entertained by him, he appealed against this decision and on the same day applied to the Subordinate Judge for rehearing the appeal against the original decision of the munsif. Both the appeal and the application was dismissed. Held, that there was still a subsisting decree against applicant in the munsif's court and he was acting rightly when he applied to that court to have the decree against him set aside; that Section 14 of the Limitation Act applied to this case and the Subordinate Judge was wrong in dismissing the application for rehearing the appeal in his own court on the ground that it was too late. RAGHUNANDAN CHAUBE v. BHUWAL TEWARI. 257 ———Order 9, R. 13 and Or. 32, R. 3—Ex parte decree against minor—Guardian ad litem negligent—Whether court has power to set aside decree and appoint another guardian—Position of minor in the suit.

Where on the application of the minor the court set aside an ex parte decree against him on the ground that the minor's father who was his guardian ad litem did not properly represent him and removed the father from the guardianship and appointed the mother as the minor's guardian and allowed her to file a written statement, held, that the court had jurisdiction to pass the order that it did and it was right in not compelling the minor to file a separate suit.

When a minor is made a defendant in a suit, it is the minor who is a party to the suit and not his guardian ad litem. The guardian ad litem's name appears on the record in order to represent the minor but not in his capacity as a party to the suit. Where the guardian ad litem is negligent, it is open to the minor to appear in court through another guardian and ask the court to make proper orders for the protection of his interest. MOTI CHAND v. BALRAM DAS (MINOR, THROUGH MUSAMMAT SARASVATI DEVI). 1128

———Order 10, R. 4(2)—Power 'to make such order in relation to the suit as it thinks fit'—Whether includes power to dismiss suit for default of appearance under Or. 9.

The power given to a court under Or. 10, R. 4(2) 'to make such order in relation to the suit as it thinks fit', includes a power to dismiss the suit for default of appearance under Or. 9. NANDAN SAHU v. HARI SHANKAR. 726

———Order 21, R. 1—Judgment-debtor makes payment to receiver—No order of court authorising payment—Payment to receiver at judgment-debtor's risk. BRIJ INDAR KUAR v. JAI INDAR BAHADUR. 747 ———Order 21, R. 16, Proviso to—Applicability of—Decree under Or. 34, R. 6 against heirs of mortgagor—A judgment-debtor dies—Decree-holder inherits an interest in his estate—Whether right to execute decree extinguished.

The proviso to Or. 21, R. 16 applies to the case where a decree for the payment of money which is passed against two or more persons who are jointly and severally liable to pay the amount is transferred to one of them. In such a case it is obvious that the person who acquires a decree becomes entitled to execute the whole decree and is also liable to pay the whole decree jointly with his co-judgment-debtors, and there is complete merger. In such an event, the execution cannot proceed against the latter.

Where the decree-holder, who had obtained a decree under Or. 34, R. 6 against the heirs of the mortgagors, was entitled to recover the whole amount against the estate of the mortgagor in the hands of his heirs, including the decree-holder's husband, and the subsequent death of her husband only made her inherit a part of the share which the deceased had got in the assets of the original mortgagor, held, that inasmuch as this inheritance did not make her jointly and personally liable for the payment of the whole decree which she held, her right to execute the decree was not extinguished simply because she became an heir to one of the heirs of the original judgment-debtor. But inasmuch as part of the assets of the original judgment-debtor became vested in her by operation of law, she was bound to give credit for a proportionate amount of the decree, and accordingly the amount had to be reduced pro tanto.

The substitution of the expression "for the payment of money", for the words "for money" in the proviso in the new Code was intended to emphasize that the proviso was confined to cases of personal decrees. The proviso cannot apply to a case where the decree-holder by inheritance acquires an interest in the estate of one of the judgment-debtors. In such a case at no time the decree can be said to have been transferred to a person who is one of two or more persons against whom a decree for the payment of money exists. ASIA BIBI v. MALIK AZIR AHMED. 230 ———Or. 21, R. 24(2)—Warrant of arrest sent to Nazir for execution—Nazir's power of delegation.

There is nothing in the Civil Procedure Code which would prevent the officer to whom the warrant is issued from delegating his authority to some other subordinate officer for executing the warrant. Jagannath v. King-Emperor. 179 ———Order 21, R. 37—Judgment-debtor—Warrant for arrest and notice under Or. 21, R. 37 issued simultaneously—Warrant did not disclose name or official designation of person to whom issued—Warrant defective and illegal.

Where a warrant for arrest, which did not disclose the name or official designation of the person to whom it was issued for execution, was served on a judgment-debtor simultaneously with a notice under Or. 21, Rule 37 C. P. C. calling upon him to appear before the court on a specified date, held, that the warrant was defective in itself and its issue was illegal as the court by issuing a notice under Or. 21, R. 37 C. P. C. had taken away its own right to issue a warrant of arrest and the question of arrest could only arise when the judgment-debtor failed to comply with the notice, and the persons who released the judgment-debtor from custody committed no offence under Sec. 225B of the Penal Code. Fattu v. King-Emperor. 1073

———Order 21, Rule 49—Partner—Judgment-debtor—Interest charged—Receiver appointed—Whether receiver can be appointed manager of entire partnership.

While charging the interest of a partner who is a judgment-debtor and vesting it in the receiver under Order 21, Rule 49 C. P. C., the court cannot appoint the receiver as the manager of the entire partnership as this will involve the dispossessing of the other partners. Lachhmi Narain v. Piarey Lal. 516 ———Order 21, R. 53 (6) and Sec. 64—Decree-holder seeks to execute decree by attachment of another decree—Judgment-debtor of attached decree, who had applied for leave to appeal to Privy Council, compromises with his decree-holder, who accepts a reduced amount—Application for leave to appeal dismissed—Whether attaching creditor is bound by compromise.

A simple money decree-holder sought to execute his decree by the attachment of another decree for the payment of money, which his judgment-debtor had obtained against a third person. When these execution proceedings were taken, an application for leave to appeal to the Privy Council by the judgment-debtor bound by the decree attached was pending in the High Court, and he entered into a compromise with his decree-holder under which the decree-holder agreed to give up a portion of the decretal amount, and this compromise was filed in the High Court, and the reduced decretal amount having been paid, the High Court dismissed the application for leave to appeal to Privy Council.

Held, that the compromise, which was not invalid by virtue of the provisions of Sec. 64 C. P. C., was in the nature of an adjustment of the attached decree and came within the purview of Or. 21, R. 53 (6) C. P. C., and no adjustment of the attached decree with notice or knowledge of such attachment can have any effect as against the attaching creditors. Lachhmi Narain Girdhari Lal through Lachhmi Narain v. Mansa Ram Murlidhar through Ram Saran (minor) under the guardianship of Satla Prasad. 792

———Or. 21, R. 63 and Tenancy Act (III of 1926), Secs. 264 and 247—Order of Assistant Collector under Or. 21, R. 58—Appeal to Collector—Appellate order against claimant—Whether claimant has a right to institute a suit under Or. 21, R. 63. Bikram Singh v. Dip Singh. 514

———Order 21, R. 66—Proceedings under—Order fixing valuation to be entered in the sale proclamation—Whether appealable.

An order passed by the Executing Court in proceedings under Or 21, R 66 to the effect that "in the sale proclamation the valuation be fixed at 50 times of the land revenue", does not amount to a decree and is not appealable. Ram Charan Sahu v. Jumna Prasad Sahu. 859 ———Order 21, R. 86—Decree-holder himself declared purchaser for a sum exceeding decretal amount—Amount due not paid into court within time—Court to resell property—Any interested person can move the court to do its duty.

Once the initial step has been taken by the decree-holder and an application for execution of decree has been made and a sale in pursuance thereof has taken place but the sale becomes abortive in consequence of the decree-holder not fulfilling his obligation as an auction-purchaser, the law casts an imperative duty on the court to have the property re-sold and to recover the balance from him as a defaulting auction-purchaser. There is nothing in law to justify the view that re-sale should not take place unless the court is moved by the decree-holder. Anyone who is interested in having the property re-sold can move the court to do what is its duty. Chitar Singh v. Lachmi Narain. 501 ———Order 21, R. 89—Application for setting aside sale—R. 89 complied with—Poundage fee as required by R. 15, Chapter XVII, General Rules (Civil) not paid—Effect of—A mere irregularity—Court has power to entertain application and grant time.

Where all the conditions required by Or. 21, R. 89 were complied with by the applicant but as he failed to pay the poundage fee by affixing stamps to the application for setting aside the sale as required by R. 15 of Chapter XVII of General Rules (Civil) framed by the High Court under Sec. 122 C. P. C., the lower courts rejected the application on the ground that they had no jurisdiction held, that the failure to comply with R. 15 of Chapter XVII was a mere irregularity, and would not prevent the court from entertaining the application under Or. 21, R. 89, and granting time to deposit the poundage fee. Abdul Wahid v. Tribhawan Das. 13 ———Order 21, R. 89—Several items sold on same date—Judgment-debtor's application for setting aside of sale of one item only on payment of its price and penalty—Whether can be allowed.

Where several items were sold on one and the same date and the judgment-debtor applied to have the sale of one item set aside on payment of its price plus the penalty and claimed reduction on account of the prices paid by the auction-purchasers of the other items, held, that the amount which the judgment-debtor need not deposit is the sum which has been received by the decree-holder between the date of the proclamation and the date of the deposit or, at any rate, before the expiry of 30 days from the date of the sale, and inasmuch as the sale of the other items cannot be confirmed before the expiry of the prescribed 30 days and the decree-holder has therefore no right to apply for the payment of the money to him, he cannot be taken to have 'received' the prices of the other items within the meaning of Or. 21, R. 89 C. P. C. Mannu Naik v. Mathura Prasad. 1107 ———Order 21, R. 90 and Or. 21, R. 69(1)—Reasons of adjournment of sale not recorded in writing—Whether constitutes material irregularity.

Where, on the date fixed for sale of property, in execution of a decree on a mortgage, the sale officer verbally announced to those present that the sale was to take place on the following day but he did not record his reasons in writing for the adjournment nor notify the hour when the sale was to take place, nor was there any mention in the sale proclamation of any incumbrance upon the property although it was subject to a prior incumbrance, and the property, which had been once purchased by the decree-holder himself, in 1918, for Rs.10,000, was eventually sold in 1931, for Rs.2,700, held, that the property was sold for an inadequate consideration as a result of material irregularity in publishing and conducting the sale. Gulab Singh v. Raghubir Saran. 357

———Order 21, Rule 92 and Sec. 151—Whether sale can be set aside outside the provisions of Order XXI—Auction-purchaser under honest mistake—That amount for which property was knocked down included mortgage money also—Whether court can set aside sale.

Where the court set aside a sale on the ground that the auction-purchaser was under an honest mistake that the amount for which the property was knocked down included the mortgage money also, and the auction-purchaser was not misled by anything done or said by the sale officer, held, that there is no inherent jurisdiction in a court to set aside a sale outside the provisions of Order XXI, and the order of the court was ultra vires.

Where the Collector is appointed the sale officer by the court, it is he who has to sell the property and to declare the purchaser. Sridat v. Mohar Singh. 392 ———Order 21, R. 93—Property sold under mortgage decree—Subsequently third party declared true owner of property—Auction-purchaser loses property—Whether suit to recover money maintainable.

The doctrine of caveat emptor applies to court-sales. The right given to the auction-purchaser being a creation of the statute, the remedy to enforce that right must be confined to that prescribed by the statute. The remedy is to apply for a return of the purchase money under Or. 21, R. 93.

Where a person purchases immovable property at an auction sale in execution of a mortgage decree and subsequently loses the same under a decree passed in a suit brought by a third party against the mortgagor and the mortgagee in which the third party was declared the true owner and entitled to possession, such a purchaser is not entitled to bring a suit for recovery of his purchase money as against the mortgagee decree-holder. Sahu Deputy Shankar (minor) through Bhagwati v. Mangal Sen. 1007

———Order 21, Rule 103 and Sec. 47—Order under Or. 21, Rule 98—Order came under Sec. 47 also—Whether appeal lay—Order exempting defendant from suit and allowing his name to remain in decree—Order tantamount to dismissal of suit as against him.

Order 21, Rule 103 merely lays down that where an order is passed against a person under Rule 98, Rule 99 or Rule 101, the order is conclusive, subject to the result of the separate suit; it does not say that where the order falls under some other section as well (e.g., Section 47 C. P. C.), the order would still be conclusive and no appeal would lie therefrom.

In a suit for partition, the appellant was exempted from the suit by the Court but his name appeared in the decree which was subsequently passed. In the execution department the plaintiff sought delivery of possession of the very house which the appellant had been claiming. The attempt was resisted by the appellant, who pleaded that he was the owner of the property. The execution court in a summary proceeding held that the appellant had failed to prove his title, and also went on to hold that he had been set up by the judgment-debtor. His objection was accordingly dismissed and possession was ordered to be delivered to the decree-holder. The appellant preferred an appeal to the District Judge, who dismissed the appeal on the ground that the proceedings were under Or. 21, Rules 97 and 98 and no appeal lay to him. Held, (1) that the order exempting the appellant and at the same time allowing his name to remain in the decree was tantamount to a dismissal of the suit as against him and in view of the explanation to Section 47 C. P. C. he must be deemed to be a party for all purposes under that section and was entitled to put forward his title to the property, (2) that even if it be conceded that the case in part fell under Or. 21, Rules 97 and 98, the main dispute between the parties really came within the scope of Section 47 C. P. C., and the order of the execution court being under Section 47 (read with Section 2) C. P. C., an appeal lay to the District Judge. Said Ahmed v. Raza Husain. 1036

———Order 22, R. 3—Court disallows substitution of names in place of deceased plaintiff —Order not appealable.

- Where a court rightly or wrongly comes to the conclusion that certain persons cannot in terms of Or. 22, R. 3 C. P. C. be substituted in place of a deceased plaintiff, such an order is not a decree nor is it an order from which an appeal has been provided in the C. P. C. Puttoo Lal v. Munshi Lal. 308 ———Or. 22, R. 4—Plaintiffs were owners of a firm—But suit brought in the names of individual owners—Interest of each not specified in plaint—Suit decreed—Second Appeal—One respondent dies—Legal representatives not brought on record within time—Appeal abates as against all respondents.

Plaintiffs jointly owned a firm but the suit for recovery of money was brought in the names of individual owners, and the interest of each was not specified in the plaint. The lower appellate court passed a decree in favour of all the plaintiffs jointly, and the record was silent as regards their right inter se. The defendant filed a second appeal. One of the plaintiff-respondents died during pendency of appeal and his legal representatives were not brought on record within limitation. Held, that the appeal abated as against all the respondents. Shri Chand (minor) through Laraiti v. Bansidhar. 219 ———Order 22, R. 6 and Limitation Act, Art. 176—Plaintiff dies between conclusion of hearing and pronouncement of judgment—Application for leave to appeal by legal representatives—Limitation.

Where a plaintiff dies between the conclusion of the hearing and the pronouncing of the judgment, the decree must be taken to have been passed in his lifetime (Or. 22, R. 6), and no application for substitution of names is necessary. Rule 3, Chapter II, of the Rules of the Allahabad High Court, requires an application by the legal representatives of a party dying after the decree to apply for permission to appeal. For compliance with that rule there is no limitation and all that is necessary is that the appeal itself should be filed within time. Chanderdeo Chaube v. Megh Narain. 1069

———Order 22, R. 9—Application under—Ignorance of death of a respondent—No negligence or omission on the part of appellant—Whether amounts to 'sufficient cause' within Sec. 5 Limitation Act.

Section 5, Limitation Act, is expressly made applicable to an application to set aside the abatement of an appeal so far as a deceased respondent is concerned and the period of limitation prescribed by Art. 171 can be extended, when 'sufficient cause' is shown.

Ignorance of the death of a respondent, in the absence of any negligence or other act or omission for which the appellant can be held responsible, is "sufficient cause" within the meaning of Sec. 5, Limitation Act. LAKSHMI CHAND v. BEHARI LAL. 18

———Order 22, R. 9—Preliminary decree—Death of decree-holder—Application by sons for making final decree without any prayer for setting aside automatic abatement—Final decree passed—Whether passed without jurisdiction.

On the death of the decree-holder after the passing of the preliminary decree, his sons made an application to the court for making the final decree without any prayer for setting aside the abatements which had automatically taken place on the failure of the sons to obtain a substitution of names within 90 days of the death of their father, and a final decree was passed. Held, on a suit for declaration that the final decree was a nullity, that the nature of an abatement is not a final disposal of the case either by dismissal or by decreeing it and the court does not cease to have jurisdiction in the matter in which an abatement takes place, and the final decree is not therefore bad for want of jurisdiction. BADRI NATH v. RAJA RAM. 883

———Order 23, R. 3—'Lawful compromise'—Meaning of—Compromise as between parties that suit be dismissed—Purchaser of plaintiff's rights thereupon asks court not to record compromise, and make him a party—Whether he can object to passing of a compromise decree.

In a contested suit the parties filed a compromise (after the arguments were concluded) that the suit be dismissed. The present respondent, who had purchased the rights of the plaintiff during the pendency of the suit, thereupon presented an application asking that he should be made a party to the suit and that the compromise should not be accepted. The court took evidence as to the execution of the sale deed in favour of the respondent, made him a party, refused to accept the compromise and decided the suit on its merits in favour of the respondent; held, that the compromise was not in its terms or nature 'unlawful', and a compromise is not unlawful because it is alleged by some third person that his rights were infringed by the compromise, and a decree must be passed in accordance with the compromise, and the application of the respondent should have been rejected by the court in limine. LARAITI v. SHIAM SUNDER LAL. 509 ———Order 23, R. 3—Parties agreeing to abide by statement of a certain individual—Effect of agreement—When agreement may be resiled from.

The agreement to abide by the statement of a certain individual nominated by the parties to a pending action, amounts to an agreement to accept an adjustment of the case which might ensue as the result of the statement made by the nominee, the said statement furnishing the agreed data whereon the adjustment is to be founded; and one party or the other has the right to resile from the agreement any time during the pendency of the suit and so long as no proper statement is made by the referee in terms of the agreement. BASDEO SINGH v. RAM RAJ SINGH. 71

———Order 26—Whether court can issue commission to a person—To hear a woman sing and report whether she was a public prostitute.

There is nothing in the Code of Civil Procedure authorizing a court to issue a commission to a person directing him to hear a woman sing and then report not only as to her skill as a singer but also as to her occupation in life so far as it could be deduced from her musical talents. MUNICIPAL BOARD, THROUGH THE CHAIRMAN v. ASGHARI JAN. 117

———Order 30, R. 4—Inapplicability of—Firm owned by plaintiffs but suit brought in names of individual partners. SHRI CHAND v. BANSIDHAR. 219

———*Or. 32, R. 3—*Ex parte decree against minor—Guardian ad litem negligent—Whether court has power to set aside decree and appoint another guardian—Position of minor in the suit. MOTI CHAND v. BALRAM DAS. 1128 ———Order 33, R. 5 (d)—Application for permission to sue as a pauper—By a mere Sanyasi—Neither nominated as successor by last Mahant nor placed on Gaddi by electoral body—No cause of action disclosed.

A person, who is a mere Sanyasi of the math and who has not been nominated as the successor by the last mahant, or elected by the mahants, the members of the sect and the raises and placed upon the gaddi after due performance of rituals is not competent to maintain a suit for ejectment and does not possess the necessary cause for action and therefore an application for leave to sue in forma pauperis

by such a person is liable to dismissal under Or. 33, R. 5(d) C. P. C. PARMARATH GIR v. RAM SARUP SINGH alias TRIGUNANAND. 303 ———Or. 33, R. 5(d)—Application under—Not to be rejected merely on the ground of limitation—When applicant found to be a pauper—Or. 7, R. 11—'Cause of action'—Meaning of.

When the court finds that the plaintiff is a pauper and is unable to pay the court-fees, it ought not to reject the plaint on the mere ground that, in its opinion, the claim, if entertained, would be barred by time. That is a question which can properly be decided after the plaint has been admitted. BHAJJA v. MOHAMMAD SAID KHAN. 489 ———Or. 34, R. 6—Applicable only to cases where there has been a sale.

In a suit for sale on a mortgage, a final mortgage decree was passed, but the mortgagee never brought the property to sale because one D brought a suit for a declaration that the mortgaged property belonged to him and this suit was decreed in favour of D. The mortgagee then applied for a decree under Or. 34, R. 6 C. P. C. Held, that Or. 34, R. 6 C. P. C. applies only to cases where there has been a sale and where the proceeds of the sale are found to be insufficient to pay the amount due to the plaintiff. When there has been no sale, an application under R. 6 of Or. 34 does not lie. BABU LAL v. RAGHUNANDAN. 311 ———Or. 34, R. 6—Decree under—Against mortgagor who has obtained an order of discharge by insolvency court—Whether can be passed.

The mortgagor was adjudicated an insolvent with reference to debts provable in insolvency. In the suit for sale by the mortgagee, the mortgaged property was sold in execution of the mortgage decree after the order of discharge. As the net proceeds of the sale were found insufficient to pay the amount due, the mortgagee applied for a decree under Or. 34, R. 6; held, (1) that the debt due to a secured creditor is not provable in insolvency and the order of discharge cannot affect his rights, (2) that the order of discharge cannot take away the statutory right of the decree-holder under Or. 34, R. 6, which materialised after the order of discharge. NIAZ AHMAD v. PHUL KUNWAR. 237 ———Or. 34, R. 14—Suit on promissory note—Compromise—Payment by instalments—Property hypothecated—Decree in terms of compromise—Whether hypothecated property could be sold in execution.

In a suit on foot of a promissory note, a compromise was entered into between the parties which provided that an instalment decree be passed in favour of the respondent and that in default of payment of two consecutive instalments, the decree-holder could obtain execution of his decree in respect of the entire decretal amount remaining unpaid. The appellant further hypothecated certain property which was specified in the compromise; but the compromise was silent as regards the manner in which the sale of such property was to be obtained. A decree was passed on foot of the compromise. Default having been made in payment of all instalments, the decree-holder applied for execution of the decree by sale of the property hypothecated under the compromise. Held: (1) that the compromise in which the liability under the promissory note became merged, created a mortgage or charge and the decree which followed it related to the payment of money in satisfaction of the claim arising under the mortgage or charge previously created by the compromise, and Or. 34, R. 14 was applicable even if it be assumed that the mortgage or charge must precede the decree; (2) that the hypothecated property could not be sold in execution of the decree passed on the compromise, and if the decree-holder desired to have the hypothecated property sold, he must institute a suit under Or. 34, R. 4 C. P. C. POSTIMAL THROUGH CHAMPA LAL v. RADHA KISHAN LAL CHAND THROUGH LAL CHAND. 486 ———Or. 38, R. 5—Notice issued under—Defendant shows cause why he should not furnish security—Court's order accepting defendant's contention falls within Or. 38, R. 6(2)—And appeal lies under Or. 43 (1) (q).

On the application of the plaintiff under Or. 38, R. 5 the court passed the order—'the defendant will be ordered to appear and furnish security for Rs.23,000 or show cause why it should not be furnished. The property in the list (filed with the plaintiff's application) will be conditionally attached pending such showing of cause". The defendant appeared in court and showed cause why he should not furnish security, and the court cancelled the conditional order of attachment; held, that the order of the court accepting the contention of the defendant is an order which falls within Or. 38, R. (6)(2), and is appealable under

Or. 43(1) (q) C. P. C. CHOKHEY LAL v. SRI KISHAN. 228

———Or. 38, R. 6(2)—Notice issued under Or. 38, R. 5—Defendant shows cause why he should not furnish security—Court's order accepting defendant's contention falls within Or. 38, R. 6(2)—And appeal lies under Or. 43(1)(q). CHOKHEY LAL v. SRI KISHAN. 228 ———Or. 40, R. 1—Decree for payment of annuities—Properties charged with payment—Receiver misappropriates money for payment of annuities—Whether annuitants can enforce charge—Or. 21, R. 1—Judgment-debtor makes payment to receiver—No order of court authorising payment—Payment to receiver at judgment-debtor's risk.

By his will the testator bequeathed the residence of his estate to the respondent, and by his codicil he left annuities to the appellant and other persons, and charged certain properties with the payment of the annuities. All the annuities fell into arrears, and the appellant brought a suit to recover the arrears of the annuity due to her, for the administration of the estate of the testator, and for the appointment of a receiver. The other annuitants were joined as defendants to the suit. A pleader was appointed receiver without security, and ultimately a decree was passed declaring the sums due to the appellant and other annuitants. The decree provided that the said sums were to be paid partly by sale of securities in deposit with a Bank and partly from money to be paid into court by the respondent. The decree also provided that all the annuitants were entitled to recover their annuities from the properties charged, and as regards future payments it was directed that they should be made every six months. Subsequently the receiver obtained possession of the securities from the bank and absconded. Having failed to recover the annuity due to her, the appellant presented an application for execution of the decree by sale of the properties charged. Held, (1) that the charge created by the codicil and affirmed by the decree was in no way affected or impaired by the embezzlement of the receiver, and the appellant was entitled to recover the annuity by sale of the properties charged. (2) that in the absence of any order of the court under which the respondent paid or even was authorised to pay the future annuities to the receiver, the respondent paid them to the receiver at his own risk, and the analogy by a judgment-debtor to a bailiff charged with the execution of a warrant of arrest or attachment did not apply. BRIJ INDAR KUAR v. JAI INDAR BAHADUR SINGH. 747 ———Or. 41, R. 5 and Sec. 151—Appeal from an order confirming sale under Or. 21, R. 92—Application by auction-purchaser for delivery of possession under Or. 21, R. 95—Judgment-debtor applies for stay—Whether High Court has power to order stay.

The judgment-debtor appealed to the High Court from an order confirming the sale of immovable property under Or. 21, R. 92. During the pendency of the appeal the auction-purchaser applied to the court below for delivery of possession under Or. 21, R. 95. The judgment-debtor therefore applied to the High Court for stay of proceedings relating to the delivery of possession. Held, (1) that the application for delivery of possession was 'a proceeding under the order' confirming that sale, and the appellate court had therefore power to order stay under Or. 41, R. 5; (2) that assuming that Or. 41, R. 5 did not apply, the appellate court had power under Sec. 151 C. P. C. to stay proceedings in a subordinate court from which an appeal was pending. HIRAMBHO NATH BANERJI v. SAROJINI DEVI. 582 ———Or. 41, R. 6(2)—Interpretation of—Decree—Appeal—Order for sale of immovable property in execution—Whether execution court obliged to stay sale in every case.

Or. 41, R. 6(2) is not to be interpreted to mean that in every case where an order has been made for the sale of immovable property in execution of a decree from which an appeal is pending, the executing court is obliged to stay the sale on the application of the judgment-debtor. HARNARAIN SAHI v. GOVIND RAI. 603 ———Or. 41, R. 11—Order under—Appeal to be admitted on payment of decretal amount within specified period—Whether ultra vires.

Where an appeal is put up for hearing under Or. 41, R. 11 C. P. C., the admission or rejection of the appeal is to be on the merits. Apart from the discretion to demand security for costs under Or. 41, R. 10(1), there is no power in the appellate court to make the order for issue of notice to the respondent conditional on payment of the decretal amount by the appellant. AFZALI BEGAM v. KANHYYA LAL. 722

———Or. 44, R. 1—Application to file an

CIVIL PROCEDURE CODE (V of 1908)—Or. 45, R. 7 appeal in forma pauperis—Whether applicant entitled as of right to be heard.

On an application to file an appeal in forma pauperis, which was laid before the District Judge with a report by the Munsarim drawing his attention to Or. 44, the District Judge passed an order as follows:—"I see no reason to allow this appeal. Application rejected." Held, that the applicant is not entitled as of right to be heard, and the order complied with the law. RAM KUMAR v. GIRDHARI LAL. 860

———Or. 45, R. 7—Counsel files application for leave to appeal to Privy Council—Deposit under Or. 45, R. 7—Appeal succeeds—Whether counsel can claim lien on the deposit for the outstanding fees. RASHID AHMAD, In re. 764

———Schedule II, Para 20—Agreement to refer to arbitration—Arbitrators to partition entire estate including debts due to the estate—Arbitrators allotted debts en bloc to one party and directed heirs to pay in cash half the value of the debts to the other party—Award invalid.

A dispute having arisen between two brothers as regards their share in the property left by their father, the matter was referred to arbitration. The governing idea in the agreement of reference was that the arbitrators were appointed to partition the entire property. The estate consisted inter alia of certain amounts due to the father on bonds, promissory notes, money lending business and bahi khata accounts, the total of which amounted to Rs.14,000. The arbitrators treated the entire debts as realisable assets and allotted them en bloc to one brother and directed him to pay in cash Rs.7,000 to the other brother as being the cash equivalent of his share in these assets; held, that the arbitrators travelled outside the scope of the reference and the award was not valid, and the court was not competent to enforce it. SHEO NARAIN v. BALA RAO. 331 ———Schedule II, Para 20—Agreement to refer to arbitration—Revocation of arbitrator's authority.

Where a matter is referred to arbitration by an agreement between the parties without the intervention of a court of justice, the agreement to refer to arbitration cannot be revoked without good cause and a mere arbitrary revocation will not be permitted by the court. SHEO NARAIN v. BALA RAO. 331

COMPANY—Shares—Agreement to pay commission or discount for subscription of—Illegal

COMPANIES ACT (VII of 1913)—Sec. 104

—Agreement to underwrite—Payment of commission or discount—Illegal.

An agreement by a company to pay commission to a person in consideration of his subscribing in praesenti for a definite number of shares in the company's capital would be ultra vires the company. The law enacts that every member who takes shares in the company in return for cash shall either pay or become liable to contribute their full nominal value and an arrangement whereby he is allowed a rebate or discount on the amount payable by him for the shares for which he agreed to subscribe is illegal. An agreement to underwrite under which a party agrees to take up by way of subscription in a new company or new issue a certain number of shares if and so far as not applied for by the public, stands on the same footing and a payment of any commission or discount as a consideration for an agreement to underwrite is illegal and not binding on the company. THE AUSTRALIAN INVESTMENT TRUST, LIMITED v. THE STRAND AND PITT STREET PROPERTIES, LIMITED. 963

———Winding up Order—Appeal—Heard after seven years—Appellate court of opinion that order wrongly made—Whether order to be maintained.

A winding-up order having been made in 1924 by the High Court on appeal, with effect from 1922, the Judicial Committee upon an appeal heard in 1931, although of opinion that the order was not justified when made, did not set aside the order except as to costs, having regard to the lapse of time and intervening events—the business of the company had ceased for years and its undertaking had been broken up, and the task of adjusting liability for the mischief which had resulted from that liquidation presented a prospect of far-reaching and ruinous litigation. RIPON PRESS AND SUGAR MILL CO. v. GOPAL CHETTI. 825 ———Winding-up order on petition of share-holders—Appeal—Form of.

Where a winding-up order is made upon the petition of share-holders an appeal at the instance of other share-holders is properly brought in the name of the company. RIPON PRESS AND SUGAR MILL CO. v. GOPAL CHETTI. 825

COMPANIES ACT (VII of 1913), Sec. 104 and Stamp Act, Sec. 2(10)—Deed of conveyance—Test of—Agreement to transfer business, good will, etc.—Agreement for allotment of shares in future—Duty to be paid. SWA-

DESHI COTTON MILLS CO.—In the matter of. 394

———Sec. 162—Company—Winding-up order on petition of share-holders—Appeal by other share-holders—Duty of Liquidator.

Where a winding-up order is made upon the petition of share-holders, an appeal at the instance of other share-holders is properly brought in the name of the company. In such an appeal the only duty of the liquidator is from a position of complete impartiality, and in the interests of the whole body of his constituent contributories to be ready to inform the court of any facts and circumstances in relation to the company's affairs about which he might be asked or which in his judgment the court ought to know, and it is no part of his duty actively to oppose the appeal at the expense of the company. RIPON PRESS AND SUGAR MILL CO. v. GOPAL CHETTI. 825

———Sec. 162(vi)—Company—Preponderating influence of one share-holder—Of itself no reason for winding-up.

Under Section 162(vi) of the Companies Act, 1913, which empowers the court to wind up a company if it is of opinion that such a course is just and equitable, the fact that one of the share-holders has a preponderating voice in the company by reason of his owning or controlling a large number of shares is of itself no reason for winding up the company. RIPON PRESS AND SUGAR MILL CO., LTD., BELLARY v. GOPAL CHETTI. 825

———Secs. 174 and 183(2)—Solvent company—Court should have regard to wishes of contributories ascertained by meetings.

Where a company ordered to be wound up has no creditors, so that the contributories only are interested in the result of the liquidation, the court, under Section 174 of the Companies Act, should have regard to their wishes, ascertained by meetings convened under Section 183(2). RIPON PRESS AND SUGAR MILL CO., LTD., BELLARY v. GOPAL CHETTY. 825

———Schedule I, Table A, Art. 14—Company—Share—Unpaid calls—Forfeiture—Company entitled to interest on unpaid calls up to date of forfeiture—But no interest claimable from date of forfeiture to date of suit. BISHAMBHAR NATH v. THE AGRA ELECTRIC STORES, LTD. THROUGH LIQUIDATOR. 354

———Schedule I, Table A, Art. 28, and Limitation Act, Art. 115—Company—Share—Unpaid calls—Forfeiture—Art. 28 of Table A creates special contract on forfeiture—Limitation—Three years from date of forfeiture.

On failure of a shareholder to pay the calls due on his share, the company forfeited the share. Subsequently the Company went into liquidation, and within three years from the date of forfeiture, the liquidator instituted the present suit for recovery of money in respect of unpaid calls with interest up to the date of the institution of the suit. Held, (1) that under Art. 28 of Table A of the Companies Act the cause of action for the present suit arose when the share was forfeited, and Art. 115 of the Limitation Act applied to the present suit, which was within time. (2) that under Art. 14 of Table A of the Companies Act the liquidator was entitled to interest at 5 per cent per annum on the unpaid calls up to the date of forfeiture but no interest was claimable from the date of forfeiture to the date of suit, in the absence of any provision of law or contract. BISHAMBHAR NATH v. THE AGRA ELECTRIC STORES, LIMITED THROUGH LIQUIDATOR. 354

CONTRACT—Written contract—Meaning doubtful—Surrounding circumstances at creation of contract—Conduct of parties—Whether can be looked into—To arrive at true meaning.

Where a written contract was doubtful in its meaning, the surrounding circumstances existing at the creation of the contract and the subject-matter to which it was designed and intended to apply, as also the conduct of the parties might be looked into to help the court to arrive at the true meaning of the contract. NAND KISHORE v. BEHARI LAL. 329

CONTRACT ACT (IX of 1872), Sec. 25—"Express promise to pay"—Meaning of.

It is necessary to show an express promise to pay (i.e., some such words as "I promise to pay") for Sec. 25 of the Contract Act to be applicable, and a mere acknowledgment of liability will not be sufficient. GIRDHARI LAL v. BISHUN CHAND. 279 ———Section 69—'Person interested in payment'—Meaning of—Whether charge created by payment.

A creditor instituted a suit for a declaration of his right to attach and sell a house, which he alleged belonged to the judgment-debtor, in execution of his decree. He joined as defendants the present appellant to whom the house passed if the title was with the judgment-debtor, and one K, who claimed to be the owner of the house—the present first three respondents being the descendants of K. K died shortly afterwards. Thereupon K's son paid off the decree and retained possession of the house. The present appellant instituted a suit for possession within limitation. The High Court dismissed the suit and held that the previous judgment did not operate as res judicata. On appeal the Privy Council took a contrary view on the question of res judicata and decreed the suit. The respondents however contended that they were entitled to get the money paid by K's son as a condition precedent to the plaintiff getting possession. The Privy Council remanded the case to the High Court for decision on this point. Held, that the question whether the previous decision operated as res judicata was a difficult question of law, and K's son had occasion to believe and did believe that the judgment in the creditor's suit was not conclusive as between the defendants, and that an earlier judgment in which K's title to the house was upheld yet stood in his favour, and therefore K's son acted as a person interested in payment within the meaning of Section 69 of the Contract Act. (2) that Sec. 69 gave only a personal remedy to K's son and there was no charge in favour of K's son on the particular property now in suit. Accordingly the present plaintiffs were entitled to a decree for possession without any condition sought to be attached by the defendants. Munni Bibi alias Ambika Dei v. Tirloki Nath. 63

———Sec. 73, and Interest Act—Scope of—Suit by a co-sharer—For his share of profits—Whether plaintiff can be compensated for delay in payment by allowing an equitable rate of interest.

The observations of the Privy Council do not give rise to the conclusion that interest can be allowed only under the provisions of the Interest Act or of Sec. 73, Illustration (n), of the Contract Act. There are circumstances in which interest can be allowed on general grounds of equity and Illustration (n) does not cover the whole of Sec. 73 of the Contract Act.

In a suit for his share of rent of certain property against the defendant, who was a co-sharer with the plaintiff and collected rent on behalf of himself and the plaintiff, the plaintiff claimed an additional payment of interest as compensation for delay in making the payment of rent but there was no express contract to that effect; held, that the case fell under the third paragraph of Sec. 73, Contract Act, and the plaintiff was entitled to compensation on the basis of an equitable rate of interest. Abdul Jalil Khan v. Mohammad Abdul Salam Khan. 733

———Sec. 130 and Succession Act, Sec. 291—Administration Bond under Sec. 291 Succession Act—Surety to—Whether can claim as of right to be released from future liability. Avinas Chandra Banerji—In the matter of. 140

———Sec. 134—"Act or omission of the creditor"—Meaning of—Failure of creditor to bring suit within limitation against principal debtor—Whether amounts to 'omission'.

Sec. 134 of the Contract Act intends that the act or omission of the creditor should be something in the nature of a breach of the contract on his part. The failure of the creditor to bring a suit within the period of limitation against the principal debtor is not an omission on the part of the creditor which would bring the matter within the provisions of Sec. 134 of the Contract Act. Anand Singh v. The Collector of Bijnor and Udai Raj Singh. 868

———Sec. 145—Liability of principal debtor to indemnify surety—Limited to amount surety bound to pay at date of suit by creditor against surety.

The liability of the principal debtor to indemnify the surety is limited to the amount which the surety was bound to pay at the date of the suit instituted by the creditor against the surety. The liability of the principal debtor is not effected by a compromise under which the surety undertook to pay the creditor after a specified period with contractual interest including compound interest up to the date of payment. Anand Singh v. The Collector of Bijnor. 868

———Sec. 239—Firm—Whether can be partner in another firm—Income-Tax—Firm owned by two partners—Partners interested in other firms also—Income from other firms credited into the books of the firm—Whether partners individually or firm liable to tax.

Under Sec. 239 of the Contract Act a firm cannot be a partner in another firm.

Where two partners with equal shares, besides owning a registered firm in Benares, were interested in several other unregistered firms bearing the same name, and it was found that although the Benares firm had made no profits in the year of assessment, the other firms had made considerable profits, and the income received from these firms was credited into the books of the Benares firm, held, that subject to the limitation that it does not necessarily follow that the income received by the Benares firm is no part of its own income, the Benares firm cannot legally be a partner in the other firms.

Per SULAIMAN, C. J.—If money had been taken by the partners out of the Benares firm and reinvested by them in other firms, then it is their money and the profits earned on it belonged to them in their individual capacities. If, on the other hand, the money belonged to the Benares firm and was invested by the Benares firm as such and profits on the amount had been received back by the Benares firm, the capital continues to belong to the Benares firm and the income earned thereon is the property of the Benares firm, although the Benares firm cannot in the eye of the law have the status of a partner in the other firms. JAI DAYAL MADAN GOPAL OF BENARES—In the matter of. 999

CO-SHARER—Position of—In relation to other co-sharers.

A co-sharer is not an agent for the other co-sharers and holds no fiduciary position as regards the other co-sharers of the village. If a co-sharer is not entitled to make any collections under any village custom he may be sued in the civil court for usurping the shares of other co-sharers. If a co-sharer has been, by custom, allowed to make collections for other co-sharers, he may be treated as the de facto lambardar, and may be sued under Sec. 164 of the Tenancy Act of 1901 (=Sec. 226 of Act III of 1926). The mere fact that a man who is not an agent has acted contrary to his rights, will not make him an agent for other co-sharers. KANHAIYA LAL v. R. H. SKINNER. 129

———Co-sharers—Mortgage by one, of his undivided share—Subsequent partition between—Mortgage applies only to property allotted to mortgagor—Civil Procedure Code, Sec. 64—Partition of undivided property made through award—Subsequently filed in court—Not a private transfer.

Where one of two or more co-sharers mortgages his undivided share in some of the properties held jointly by them, the mortgagee takes the security subject to the right of the other co-sharers to enforce a partition and thereby to convert what was an undivided share of the whole into a definite portion held in severalty. If the mortgage, therefore, is followed by a partition, and the mortgaged properties are allotted to the other co-sharers, they take those properties, in the absence of fraud, free from the mortgage, and the mortgagee can proceed only against the properties allotted to the mortgagor in substitution of his undivided share. Such partition effected by an award made out of court which was subsequently filed in court and a decree passed thereon, does not amount to a private transfer within the meaning of Section 64 of the Code of Civil Procedure. MOHAMMAD AFZAL KHAN v. ABDUL RAHMAN. 909

COSTS—Suit decreed against three defendants—Interest of each defendant separately valued—Liability to costs—Proportionate.

Where a suit was decreed against three defendants, and the interest of each defendant was separately valued, each defendant should contribute to the costs in proportion to the property held by him out of the estate in suit. CHANDI RAM v. KUNJ BEHARI LAL. 411

COURT-FEES—Court parts with seisin of case—Whether has power to direct recovery of court-fees by attachment of property.

There is no provision in the Court-Fees Act which justifies a process of attachment for recovery of court-fee after the court finally parts with the seisin of a case, even if the court-fee is payable in law. MOHAMMAD ISMAIL v. LIYAQAT HUSAIN. 165 ———To be determined with reference to plaint as it is, and not as it ought to have been.

The question of court-fees must be determined with reference to the plaint as it is and not as it ought to have been. If, having regard to the nature of his claim, plaintiff ought to have claimed consequential relief and has not done so, his suit might fail under the proviso to Sec. 42, Specific Relief Act; but the court cannot say that the plaintiff should have claimed consequential relief and not having done so, he should be deemed to have claimed the consequential relief and was therefore liable to pay an ad valorem court-fee on the consequential relief. MOHAMMAD ISMAIL v. LIYAQAT HUSAIN. 165

COURT-FEES ACT (VII of 1870), Sec. 5—Chief Inspector of Stamps—Whether an officer whose duty it is to see that the fee is paid under Chapter II.

The Chief Inspector of Stamps is an officer whose duty it is to see that the fee is paid under Chapter II Court Fees Act, and the decision of the Taxing Officer on a difference of opinion between the Chief Inspector of Stamps and the suitor is final decision. Bhagwanti v. Dhanwani. 244

———Sec. 7 (iv), Suits Valuation Act, Sec. 8 and Civil Procedure Code, Sec. 15—Valuation of suit—Contested—Court must determine value—Plaintiff cannot be allowed to over-value or under-value his claim with a view to choose his forum.

Where the valuation of the suit for purpose of jurisdiction is contested, the value must be determined by the court; and where the valuation can be ascertained correctly, the plaintiff cannot be allowed to put an arbitrary value upon his claim, nor can he be allowed to over-value or under-value his claim with a view to choose his forum.

The Suits Valuation Act and the Court Fees Act are purely fiscal enactments and they have no bearing on the question as to which is the proper court for the institution of the suit having regard to the value of the property. Inayat Husain v. Bashir Ahmad. 416

———*Sec. 7, Cl. (v)—Suit for possession as Mahanth of properties attached to math—*Ad valorem court-fee payable—"Possession"—Interpretation of.

Sec. 7(v) of Court Fees Act is applicable to suits for possession of immovable property and no distinction is made between a suit for possession as a beneficial owner, and a suit for possession as a trustee or as the manager of a religious endowment.

Where the plaintiff alleged that the defendant who was a mahant of a math had lost his title to mahantship owing to his marriage, illegal transfers of properties and other wrongful acts, and that the plaintiff had been duly elected as mahant in his place, and the plaintiff sued for possession as mahant of the properties attached to the math, including the properties which had been unlawfully transferred; held, that the court-fee was payable ad valorem under Sec. 7(v) upon the value of the properties of the math and in calculating the value of such properties the temple itself should be left out of consideration as having no market value. Parsottamanand Giri v. Mayanand Giri. 777

———Sec. 13—High Court remands case to lower appellate court under Or. 41, R. 23 C. P. C.—Whether appellant entitled to a refund of court-fee paid.

Where a court of second appeal remands a case to the lower appellate court under Or. 41, R. 23 C. P. C., the appellant is entitled under Sec. 13 of the Court Fees Act to a refund of the court-fee paid on the memorandum of appeal. Shantilal v. Agha Dost Mohammad. 745 ———Sec. 13—'Lower Court'—Meaning of—Second Appeal—High Court remands suit to court to first instance—Whether fee paid on memorandum of appeal refundable.

Where on second appeal to the High Court, the following order was passed:—"We modify the decree of the court below and remand the suit to the court of first instance for trial in its entirety", held, that the expression 'lower court' in Section 13, Court Fees Act, includes the court of first instance where the appellate court is the High Court, and the fee paid on the memorandum of appeal was refundable. Kanhaiya Lal v. Mahadei. 320 ———Sec. 19, Cl. XX—Applicability of—Application under Sec. 13 for refund of court-fees—Not chargeable with court-fees.

No court-fee is chargeable on an application, under Sec. 13 of the Court-fees Act, for refund of court-fees. Jag Narain Pandey v. Mata Badal. 601 ———Schedule I, Art. 1—Appeal—Valuation of—Dispute about liability of certain properties for the decretal amount—Value of such properties or decretal amount, whichever is less, is the proper valuation.

Where the trial court entirely excluded the assets of one S in the hands of defendants 2 to 5 from liability for the decretal amount, and in the appeal from the decree of the trial court the plaintiffs asked that the suit may be decreed against the assets of S in the hands of defendants 2 to 5, held, that ad valorem court-fee was payable on the liability sought to be imposed or the value of the assets of S in the hands of defendants 2 to 5, upon which the liability was to be imposed, whichever was less. Sabir Husain v. Farzand Hasan. 387

———*Schedule I, Art. 1—Appellants seek to establish priority of their debentures over plaintiff's claim—*Ad valorem court-fee payable on value of debentures or decretal debt, whichever is less.

Plaintiff's suit for recovery of a certain amount from a company and from certain debenture-holders of that company, and for a declaration that the amount was recoverable in priority over the debentures, having been decreed, the debenture-holders appealed to the High Court for modification of the decree by refusing the declaration that plaintiff's claim had priority over the debentures. Held: that the appellants sought to establish the priority of their debentures—in other words, they sought to exonerate the property which was security for their debentures from liability to satisfy the decretal debt—and the court-fee was payable ad valorem on the decretal debt, or on the value of the debentures whichever was less. A. U. John v. Suraj Bhan. 385

———Schedule I, Art. 1, Sec. 7 (iv) (c) and Schedule II, Art. 17 (iii)—Suit for cancellation of an instrument (e.g., mortgage deed or compromise) under Sec. 39, Specific Relief Act—Suit for 'cancellation of a decree'—Whether relief declaratory—'Consequential relief'—Meaning of.

Where a suit is for the cancellation of an instrument under Section 39 of the Specific Relief Act, the relief is not a declaratory one. It falls neither under Sec. 7 (iv) (c) nor under Schedule II, Art. 17 (iii), but under the residuary Article, Schedule I, Art. 1.

The expression 'consequential relief' in Sec. 7 (iv) (c) means some relief which would follow directly from the declaration given, the valuation of which is not capable of being definitely ascertained and which is not specifically provided for anywhere in the Act and cannot be claimed independently of the declaration as a substantive relief. If a substantive relief is claimed though clothed in the garb of a declaratory decree with a consequential relief, the court is entitled to see what is the real nature of the relief and if satisfied that it is not a mere consequential relief but a substantive relief, it can demand the proper court-fee on that relief irrespective of the arbitrary valuation put by the plaintiff in the plaint on the ostensible consequential relief.

Where the plaintiffs claim the following reliefs, viz., (1) that a certain registered mortgage deed may be adjudged void and ineffectual as against the plaintiffs, and that it may be cancelled; (2) that the compromise, the preliminary decree and the final decree in a certain suit may be cancelled. Held, (1) that relief No. 1 is governed by Schedule I, Article 1; (2) that relief No. 2 is one consolidated relief (and not distinct reliefs) and it also falls under Schedule I, Article 1 and the court-fee is payable on the value of the final decree

only. Kalu Ram v. Babu Lal. 684

———Schedule I, Art. 5—Court-fee on application for review—Calculation—Basis of—Effect of U. P. Stamp Act, 1932.

The court-fee on the application for review must be calculated on the basis of the fee leviable on the memorandum of appeal according to the law in force when the memorandum was filed. Parmeshar Kurmi v. Bakhtawar Pande. 908 ———Schedule II, Art. 1 (d)—Memorandum of objections filed under Or. 41, R. 26 C. P. C. —Not liable to court-fee—Memorandum neither an "application" nor a "petition".

No court-fee is chargeable upon a memorandum of objections filed under Or. 41, R. 26 C. P. C.

Such a memorandum cannot properly be held to be either an "application" or a "petition" presented to the High Court. Mohammad Salim-ullah Khan v. Khalil-ur-Rahman Khan. 149 ———Schedule II, Art. 17 (iii) and Sec. 7 (iv) (c)—Suit for declaration—'Family property belonged equally to plaintiff and defendant and certain documents did not affect jointness of family'—Court-fee payable—Actual relief asked for should be looked into.

For the purpose of determination of the court-fee the actual relief asked for should be looked into and it is entirely beside the consideration of the court whether the suit is likely or not to fail, because the plaint did not ask for a consequential relief.

In his suit for a declaration that the entire family property in the hands of the plaintiff, as the head of a joint family, belonged equally to the plaintiff and the male defendant, and that certain documents executed by certain deceased members of the family did not affect the jointness of the family, plaintiff paid a court-fee of Rs.10 only. Held, that the plaint was sufficiently stamped. Brij Gopal v. Suraj Karan (minor) through Dhapi Kunwar. 466 ———Schedule II, Art. 17 (iii) and Sec. 7 (iv) (c)—When inapplicable—Suit for sale on mortgage—Appeal—Relief—Declaration that appellants were prior mortgagees—Ad valorem court-fee payable on value of subject-matter in dispute.

The appellants were impleaded as defendants in a suit for sale on a mortgage upon the allegation that they were subsequent mortgagees. They claimed to be prior mortgagees but the trial court found against them and decreed the plaintiff's suit. The appellants appealed to the High Court and sought for a declaration that they were prior mortgagees. The appeal was valued at Rs.1,600, but a court-fee of Rs.10 only was paid. Held, that Art. 17 (iii) of Sch. II of the Court-Fees Act had no direct application to this case and that an ad valorem court-fee was payable on the value of the subject-matter in dispute in the appeal. KUNDAN LAL v. DULI CHAND. 45

COURT OF WARDS ACT (Local Act IV of 1912), Secs. 3(3), 10, 12, 15, 55 and 37—Joint Hindu family—Of father and sons—Application by father under Sec. 10—Declaration—Notification—Entire joint property under management of Court of Wards—Whether sons, major or minor, deemed to be 'wards' and subject to disabilities under Secs. 37 and 55.

The plaintiffs sued to recover the money due to them under an agreement executed by the defendants. The defendants took the plea that they were 'wards' and no suit could be maintained against them in their names under Section 55 of the Court of Wards Act, 1912, and the contract made by them was void in law under Sec. 37 of the said Act. It appeared that the defendants and their father formed a joint Hindu family. The father made an application under Sec. 10, Court of Wards Act, for the ancestral property being placed under the superintendence of the Court of Wards. The Court of Wards made the declaration required by Sec. 10, and the order of assumption of superintendence was notified in the gazette. The names of the defendants did not appear in the notification. The entire property belonging to the joint family came under the actual management of the Court of Wards. The defendants remained in possession of the estate which they inherited from their maternal grandfather.

Held (1) that the sons having made no application under Sec. 10 and their names not appearing in the declaration and the notification, they did not come within the second portion of the definition of 'ward' in Sec. 3(3); (2) that even if some of the sons were minors on the date of assumption of superintendence, they were never treated as minors whose property the Court of Wards in the exercise of its discretion under Sec. 12, decided to place under its own management, and they cannot therefore come under the first portion of the definition of 'ward' in Sec. 3(3). The mere accident that their property is physically under the superintendence of the Court of Wards will not make them 'wards'; (3) that the defendants not being 'wards' did not suffer the disabilities enumerated for a ward in Sec. 37 and Sec. 55 of the Court of Wards Act. KAULPATI KUNWAR v. RAM BARAN SINGH. 677

CRIMINAL PROCEDURE CODE (V of 1898), Secs. 15, 16 and 350A—Bench of Magistrates—Whether presence of all magistrates on all hearings indispensable—Part of evidence recorded in absence of one magistrate—Conviction based on such evidence—Whether sustainable.

The presence of all the magistrates constituting the bench, under Secs. 15 and 16 of the Criminal Procedure Code, on all hearings is indispensable for a valid trial of a case pending before it. Individual magistrates constituting a bench have no jurisdiction to hear a case cognizable by the whole bench. If witnesses are examined by one or more magistrates in the absence of one or more of those constituting the bench, a conviction based on such evidence is unsustainable. CHITESHWAR DUBE v. KING-EMPEROR THROUGH NARSINGH DUBE. 42

———Sec. 103—Search witnesses—To be invariably produced by prosecution—But conviction may be based on other evidence.

The search lists and the search witnesses should invariably be produced by the prosecution, and they will be guilty of suppression of material evidence if they did not produce the same. But the prosecution can prove the recovery of the incriminating article by other evidence as well. MOHAMMAD BASHIR v. KING-EMPEROR. 104

———Secs. 107, 202 and 203—Magistrate requested to take action under Sec. 107—Whether magistrate can refer matter to police for enquiry and report independently of Sec. 202.

A magistrate is not competent to proceed under Secs. 202 and 203 of the Cr. P. C. when dealing with a petition requesting him to take action under Sec. 107, but he can, independently of those sections, refer the matter to the police for enquiry and report before issuing a notice under Sec. 112 in the exercise of his absolute discretion. In acting under Secs. 107, 108, 109 or Sec. 110 of the Cr. P. C. the magistrate does not, so long as he does not record an order in writing in accordance with Sec. 112 calling upon any person to show cause, act judicially. Laxmi Narain v. King-Emperor. 880

———Sec. 107(2)—Interpretation of—Person informed against not within local limits of Magistrate's jurisdiction—When proceedings initiated—Whether Magistrate has jurisdiction—Issuing a summons under Sec. 114—Part of such proceedings.

An application was presented before the Joint Magistrate of Ghazipur for action being taken against the present applicants under Sec. 107 Cr. P. C., who were in Jaunpur when the application was filed and process issued under Sec. 114. They appeared in obedience to the summons served upon them, when an order under Sec. 112 was read over to them. They took objection to the jurisdiction of the Magistrate to take proceedings under Sec. 107 Cr. P. C. against them; held, that the objection was well-founded, as the present applicants were not within the local limits of the magistrate's jurisdiction when proceedings under Sec. 107 were initiated, and issuing a summons under Sec. 114 was part of such proceedings. Hamid Hasan v. King-Emperor through Syed Husain, Mukhtar. 211

———Sec. 112—Notice issued under—Right of Crown to conduct case.

The moment a notice is issued under Sec. 112, Cr. P. C., the Crown has the right to conduct the case against the person called upon to show cause and Sec. 495 of the Cr. P. C. gives discretion to the magistrate to permit the prosecution to be conducted by any person mentioned in that section. Laxmi Narain v. King-Emperor. 880 ———Secs. 117(3) and 118—Order under—Text of—Bond with sureties—To be in form given in Sch. V—Magistrate to satisfy himself that sureties would be able to make good the amount—Hypothecation bond may be taken in addition by way of precaution.

Where the magistrate issued an order under Sec. 117(3) Cr. P. C. against a person to execute a personal bond, with "two reliable sureties in movable properties", held, that in the order the magistrate should follow the words of Sec. 117 and not introduce the restrictive words "in movable property".

When sureties are produced, the magistrate should consider whether, having regard to all the circumstances, they are fit persons to be accepted or not. The primary consideration is whether the surety is likely to fulfil the undertaking given by him. When they have been accepted, the bond executed by them should be in the form given in Sch. V. A registered security bond is not necessary under the Code, nor is a magistrate bound to accept such security if offered, but if the magistrate has any apprehension that the sureties may part with their properties and be unable to fulfil the undertaking, he may by way of precaution accept a hypothecation bond from them as a condition precedent to their being accepted as reliable sureties. King-Emperor v. Harihar Kalwar. 157 ———Section 121—Bond executed under Sec. 109 Cr. P. C.—Accused again found in suspicious circumstances and unable to give satisfactory explanation—No forfeiture of bond—Liability of sureties.

The accused was proceeded against under Sec. 109 Cr. P. C. Two persons stood sureties for him for his good behaviour. Shortly before expiry of the period for which the sureties had bound themselves, he was again found concealing himself under suspicious circumstances without any means of livelihood and unable to give a satisfactory account of himself, held, (1) that in view of the provisions of Sec. 121 Cr. P. C. there had been no forfeiture of the bond because the action of the accused did not amount to an attempt to commit an offence punishable with imprisonment, (2) that if the bond had been forfeited the sureties would have been liable whether proceedings were started against them or after the expiry of the period for which they had bound themselves. King-Emperor v. Bahadur Singh. 112 ———Section 133—Licensed lime kiln—Magistrate empowered to take action in interests of public health—But it is expedient that matter should be left to the control of Municipal Boards.

A magistrate is empowered under Sec. 133 Cr. P. C. to order a licensed burner of lime to regulate his business in a manner that it may not be injurious to the health or physical comfort of the community.

Where the applicant had been working a lime kiln for the last 45 years, and had a municipal license, and there was no adequate evidence of any evil effects on the public health from the neighbourhood of the kiln; and on a complaint made, under Sec. 113 Cr. P. C., by a person who had recently deliberately occupied a house in a position where he was liable to be inconvenienced by the smoke and smell of the kiln, the magistrate ordered that the kiln should be stopped, held, that the High Court, in such cases, can look to the propriety of the order, which, under the circumstances, was unjustified.

It is generally inexpedient that a magistrate should take action in such cases, for these matters are left by the Legislature to the control of the Municipal Boards. LALMAN v. BISHAMBHAR NATH. 49 ———Sections 137 and 139A—Order under Sec. 133—Existence of public right of way denied—Magistrate must first proceed under Sec. 139A.

Where a person against whom an order is made under Sec. 133 Cr. P. Code, appears before the magistrate and denies the existence of the public right of way, the magistrate must first proceed under Sec. 139A, and if there is reliable evidence in support of the opposite party's denial, the magistrate should stay proceedings (under Sec. 139A(2)) until the matter of the existence of the public right of way has been decided by a competent civil court. The enquiry under Sec. 137 should not take place until after the decision required by Sec. 139A that the opposite party produced no reliable evidence. RAGHUNANDAN v. SHEW NANDAN. 339

———Sec. 145(1)—Not mandatory—Order under Sec. 145—Not to be set aside unless one of the parties prejudiced by absence of formal order—No question of jurisdiction arises—Court of competent jurisdiction—Characteristics of.

Sec. 145(1) Cr. P. C. is not mandatory except in this sense that the court will set aside an order passed under the latter clauses of Sec. 145, if there is any reason to believe that the omission of an order or the passing of an order not strictly in the terms of Sec. 145(1) led to some prejudice to one or other of the parties.

It would be quite unjustifiable and unreasonable to set aside lengthy proceedings under Sec. 145, when the facts indicate that the parties could not conceivably have been prejudiced by the absence of a formal order, where it is manifest that they knew well all the facts and contested the matter with the advantage of the knowledge of the whole of the facts.

The omission to draw up an order under Sec. 145(1) has nothing to do with the question of jurisdiction.

The characteristic of a court of competent jurisdiction are:

(a) power conferred to deal with offences or matters of the class in question.

(b) power conferred to deal with the offences or persons of the class in question. MADAN MOHAN LAL v. SHEORAJ KUNWAR. 503

———Section 145 (1)—Provisions of—Mandatory—Magistrate fails either in his order or notice to say that there is danger of breach of peace—Whether proceedings liable to be set aside.

The provisions of Sec. 145(1) of the Criminal Procedure Code requiring a Magistrate to make an order in writing stating the grounds for his being satisfied that a dispute likely to cause a breach of the peace exists are mandatory.

Section 145 Criminal Procedure Code is enacted in order that a Magistrate may prevent a breach of the peace from a dispute as to immovable property. He has no jurisdiction in a matter primarily appertaining to civil court, unless he is fully satisfied that there is a danger of a breach of the peace and this must, therefore, be put in the forefront of his proceedings and he must give the parties notice that it is to prevent a breach of the peace that he is taking action under the section. If he fails to do so, the proceedings are vitiated, and the order passed under Sec. 145 must be set aside. HIRA LAL v. KING-EMPEROR. 1087

———Sections 145(1) and 537—Order under Sec. 145—Omission or irregularity in the proceedings—When High Court can set aside order.

A court of revision is absolutely prohibited from setting aside an order under Sec. 145 Cr. P. C. on account of any omission or irregularity in the proceedings (e.g., the omission of the magistrate to record his order strictly in accordance with the provisions of Sub-section (1) of Sec. 145), unless such omission or irregularity has in fact occasioned a failure of justice. BARMHA SINGH v. EMPEROR THROUGH MADHO SINGH. 865 ———Section 146(1)—Two joint owners both in joint possession fighting—Likelihood of breach of peace—Whether magistrate entitled to pass order under Sec. 146 and direct parties to file a partition suit in civil court.

The case of two joint owners both in possession is covered by the words "unable to satisfy himself as to which of them was in possession" in Section 146 Cr. P. C. as it is a case where the magistrate cannot decide which of them was in exclusive possession.

When two joint owners of barren land in an urban area are fighting and there is a likelihood of a breach of the peace between them, a magistrate is entitled to pass an order under Sec. 146 Cr. P. C. directing that the land should be kept in attachment pending the decision of the partition suit to be filed in the civil court within three months. CHIRANJI LAL v. MAHADEO PRASAD.

———Section 162 and Evidence Act, Sec. 32 (2)—Statement made to police officer (investigating a dacoity) by M—That A and B took part in dacoity—Police officer made entries in the diary—M was later murdered—A, B and others charged under Sec. 302—Whether entries in police diary inadmissible under Sec. 162.

A police officer in the course of investigations in connection with a dacoity made entries in the diary to the effect that a statement had been made to him by a person who attended the meeting of the villagers called by him, that two of the present appellants had certainly taken part in the dacoity along with some others. Three days after this information was given to the police the person who gave the information was beaten and killed. Six persons (including the two whose names were mentioned to the police officer as having taken part in the dacoity) were charged before the Sessions Judge under Sec. 302 I. P. C., who found them guilty of murder. On appeal to the High Court it was objected that the evidence of the police diary was inadmissible in evidence under Sec. 162 Cr. P. Code; held, that this enquiry or trial, in which it is sought to use these records in the police diary as evidence, could not even have been thought of, and was not under investigation at the time that the statements were made, and Sec. 162 did not apply; and these statements were admissible in evidence under Sec. 32(2) Evidence Act. KING-EMPEROR v. ABDUL AZIZ. 301

———Section 164—Confession—Magistrate to record questions and answers by means of which he has satisfied himself that confession is voluntary—Accused implicating co-accused in his statement—When statement admissible.

Where there is nothing in the statement to show that besides the usual and stereotyped questions any serious attempt has been made by the magistrate recording the confession to find whether the statement was voluntary or otherwise, the court should hesitate to accept his certificate at its face value. It is the imperative duty of the magistrate to record those questions and answers by means of which he has satisfied himself that the confession is, in fact, voluntary. It is only by recording those questions and answers prior to taking down the story of the accused that the magistrate recording the confession furnishes data which enable the court of Sessions and the High Court to form an independent estimate as to the voluntary nature of the confession.

When an accused person in his statement or confession imputes the commission of the offence to his co-accused, but does not implicate himself as fully and substantially as he does his co-accused, the said statement cannot be used as evidence against the co-accused. KING-EMPEROR v. SHAMBHU. 162 ———Section 164—Confession—Retracted—Evidentiary value of.

The evidentiary value of a retracted confession is very little and it is not safe to act on such a confession unless it is corroborated in material particulars. KING-EMPEROR v. SHAMBHU. 162

———Section 164 and Evidence Act, Sec. 24—Confessions—When inadmissible—Duty of Magistrates and Sessions Judges—Whether evidence of approver coupled with retracted confession sufficient for conviction.

The judge, with whom the responsibility lies for acting upon the confession, should satisfy himself by putting searching questions to such witnesses as had anything to do with the confession. The first question that ought to strike every judge is: "Why the accused made the confession?" It is very important to ascertain from those in whose custody the accused was, the circumstances in which the question of confession first arose, how the accused expressed his willingness to be placed before the Magistrate and his readiness to make a confession. Similar questions arise as regards retraction.

The evidence of the approver, coupled with the retracted confession of a co-accused but uncorroborated by other evidence, is not sufficient for conviction. NASIR v. KING-EMPEROR. 1125 ———Section 179—Offence under Sec. 409 I. P. C.—Complainant in Cawnpore—Goods sent to agent in Bengal for sale there—Money to be remitted to Cawnpore—Agent only accounted for part of price—Whether Cawnpore courts had jurisdiction.

Where a complainant in Cawnpore employed a commission agent in Bengal and sent goods to the agent for sale in Bengal, and the agent promised to send the money on receipt of the goods but only accounted for part of the price, held, that on the allegations jurisdiction lay in the criminal courts at Cawnpore to try the agent for an offence under Sec. 409 Penal Code. BRIJ LAL v. EMPEROR. 269 ———Sections 181(2) and 222(2)—Misappropriation of gross sum made up of five items received in places where magistrate had no territorial jurisdiction—Whether magistrate had jurisdiction in respect of all items.

Where on the complaint of a zamindar his agent was charged under Sec. 222(2) Cr. P. C. with misappropriation of a gross sum made up of five items, some of which were received by him in villages situate in Tahsils over which the trying magistrate had no territorial jurisdiction, held, that under Sec. 181(2) the magistrate had jurisdiction in respect of all the sums alleged to have been misappropriated by the accused. SUNDER LAL v. EMPEROR THROUGH RADHEY SHIAM. 160

———Section 195(1) (a) (as amended in 1923)—District Magistrate granted 'sanction'—Believing that Superintendent of Police would thereby be enabled to prosecute accused—Whether a proper complaint.

An information lodged by accused having been found to be false, the investigating officer moved the Superintendent of Police for the prosecution of accused under Sec. 182 Penal Code, whereupon the Superintendent enquired of the District Magistrate whether he had any objection to the prosecution of accused who was the reader of the Tahsildar of Konch, and the District Magistrate merely granted "sanction" for accused's prosecution believing that the Superintendent would thereby be enabled to prosecute accused, held, that there was no complaint either by the Superintendent or by the District Magistrate for the prosecution of accused, and therefore the conviction under Sec. 182 Penal Code was unsustainable for want of a proper complaint as required by Sec. 195 (1) (a) Cr. P. Code (as amended in 1923). ABDUL RAHMAN v. KING-EMPEROR. 155 ———Sections 235 and 236—Conjoint application—Whether permissible—Several charges rightly framed under Sec. 235—Whether one of such charges can be framed in the alternative under Sec. 236.

Several charges being rightly joined against the same accused under Sec. 235 Criminal Procedure Code, there can be no objection to one of such charges being in the alternative as provided by Sec. 236; nor can there be any objection to another accused being joined under Sec. 239 as regards one of those charges. KASHINATH v. EMPEROR. 113

———Section 236, and Penal Code, Secs. 302 and 201—Persons charged with offence of murder—Evidence insufficient to prove participation in murder—Whether can be charged and convicted of an offence under Sec. 201.

Where a number of people are charged with carrying out a massacre in the course of a riot, and not with any individual act, or with throwing live persons into a river in the course of a transaction which otherwise amounted to an offence under Sec. 201 I. P. C., and the evidence was insufficient to prove their participation in the murder, they could be charged and convicted of the offence under Sec. 201 I. P. C. KING-EMPEROR v. SOHAN. 801

———Sections 236 and 237 and Penal Code, Secs. 302 and 194—Accused acquitted of an offence under Sec. 302—But convicted of an offence under Sec. 194 (with which he was never charged)—Whether conviction under Sec. 194 should have been passed.

Where the Sessions Judge acquitted a person of an offence under Sec. 302 I. P. C. and convicted him of an offence under Sec. 194 I. P. C., with which he was never charged and to which no reference was made either in the charge-sheet or in his examination, held, that the conviction was not illegal but this was a case in which such a conviction should not have been passed. QABUL v. KING-EMPEROR. 1079 ———Section 252—Interpretation of—Trial of warrant case—Accused cannot, as a matter of right, cross-examine prosecution witnesses before framing of charge—But as a matter of practice some cross-examination should be permitted.

An accused has no absolute right of cross-examination of prosecution witnesses, in the trial of a warrant-case, before the framing of the charge; but as a matter of practice or discretion the magistrates would be well-advised to permit some cross-examination at least at that stage, otherwise, Sec. 253 would practically become a dead letter. LACHMI NARAIN v. KING-EMPEROR. 5

———Sec. 257—Scope of—Magistrate cannot arbitrarily limit number of witnesses.

Outside the provisions of Sec. 257 Cr. P. C.

it is not open to a magistrate to limit the number of witnesses which the defence or prosecution should be allowed to produce. Where the Magistrate does not consider that the application has been made for the purpose of vexation or delay or for defeating the ends of justice, he has no option but to issue process under Sec. 257(1) Cr. P. C. BALKRISHNA SHARMA v. KING-EMPEROR. 39

———Sec. 307—Offence under Sec. 395 Penal Code—Accused found guilty by jury on admissible evidence—Jury's refusal to accept judge's view as to requisite amount of evidence necessary to corroborate approver's statement—Whether reference to High Court necessary.

The appellant was charged with an offence under Section 395 I. P. C. In his charge to the jury the Sessions Judge pointed out that it would be improper to convict on the uncorroborated evidence of the approver and expressed his personal view that they should not hold any accused guilty unless they find that besides being named or identified by the approver, he was also identified by at least two other witnesses. The jury did not accept the judge's view, for the appellant was named by the approver and identified in jail by one witness only, and returned a verdict of guilty. The judge accepted the verdict and convicted the appellant under Sec. 395 I. P. C. Held, that the verdict of the jury was in accordance with law and it was not the duty of the judge to refer the case to the High Court. HARISH CHANDRA v. KING-EMPEROR. 1089

———Sec. 337, Sub-sec. (2A)—Interpretation of—Whether approver must be committed to session.

Sec. 337, Sub-sec. (2A) of the Criminal Procedure Code means that where a pardon has been granted to one accused who has been examined as a witness, then the case against the other accused must be committed to session if a prima facie case against the latter is established and not tried by the magistrate himself. The Sub-section cannot be reasonably interpreted to mean that the approver must be committed for trial to the court of session. KING-EMPEROR v. RAJA RAM. 754

———Sec. 350A—Bench of Magistrates—One member not present during examination-in-chief of witnesses for complainant—Whether order invalid.

Where one of the magistrates constituting the bench, which ultimately decided the case, was not present during the examination-in-chief of the witnesses for the complainant, held, that the order was invalid under Sec. 350A Cr. P. Code and inasmuch as the complainant had not had a fair hearing, the order of acquittal should be set aside and the case retried. RAM KHELAWAN v. SHEO NANDAN. 166

———Sec. 366—Judgment—Delivered after vacating office of Sessions Judge—Conviction bad.

Where the Sessions Judge, delivered judgment in a criminal case a few hours after he had made over charge of his office to his successor, held, that he had no jurisdiction to deliver judgment and therefore the conviction was bad, and the case should be re-tried. RAM RATAN AND NANHWAN v. KING-EMPEROR. 753

———Section 418(1)—'Trial was by jury'—Meaning of—Offence triable with aid of assessors—In fact tried by jury—Appeal on matter of law only.

The words, "when the trial was by jury", in Sec. 418, Criminal Procedure Code, mean "when the trial in fact was by jury" and not "when the trial should have been by jury."

Under Sec. 418, Criminal Procedure Code, where an accused person is convicted by a jury on a charge which ought to have been tried with the aid of assessors, an appeal lies on matters of law only and not on matters of fact.

Where appellants were charged under Sec. 325|149 and Sec. 148 Penal Code and the Sessions Judge believing that this was a case which under Sec. 269 Cr. P. C. should be tried by a jury for one of the offences committed, and with the aid of the jurors as assessors for another impanelled a jury and instructed the jury to give an opinion on the evidence as to the charge under Sec. 325|149 Penal Code and took their opinion as assessors on the charge under Sec. 148 Penal Code, held, that the charge was not under Sec. 325 (which is triable by a jury) but Sec. 325|149 and the wording of the charge showed that the essential part of the offence was rioting, and the case was not therefore triable by a jury but by a judge with the aid of assessors and the opinion given by the jury was a verdict which could only be challenged on questions of law. DAKHANI v. KING-EMPEROR. 1103

———Secs. 426(1), 107 and 423(1) (d)—'Convicted person' in Sec. 426(1)—Meaning of —Appeal from an order under Sec. 107—Whether appellate court empowered to suspend exe- cution of order relating to security.

The words "convicted person", in Sec. 426(1) of the Criminal Procedure Code, include persons against whom an order has been passed by a criminal court from which there is an appeal allowed.

The applicants, who were bound over under Sec. 107 Cr. P. Code to keep the peace and were ordered to find security, appealed to the sessions court, held, that the words 'convicted person' in Sec. 426(1) applied to a person against whom an order was made under Sec. 107 and the appellate court was therefore empowered to suspend the order relating to furnishing of security. Even supposing Sec. 426(1) did not apply, the appellate court could pass such order under Sec. 423(1)(d). KATWAROO RAI v. KING-EMPEROR. 624

———Sec. 435—Applies exclusively to proceedings before inferior courts. KING-EMPEROR v. PATRAKHAN. 67

———Sec. 435—Case under Sec. 124A Penal Code—Magistrate's order—Limiting number of witnesses defence should produce—Whether revision lies to High Court.

An appeal, in a case under Sec. 124A Penal Code, lies from the order of the District Magistrate direct to the High Court, and the High Court is not precluded from entertaining an application for revision of the District Magistrate's order limiting the number of witnesses which the defence should produce, simply because the Sessions Judge had not been approached first.

Even a settled practice not to entertain a revision when the applicant could have gone to the Sessions Court, does not oust the jurisdiction of the High Court. BALKRISHNA SHARMA v. KING-EMPEROR. 39

———Secs. 438 and 435—Sec. 435 applies exclusively to proceedings before inferior courts—Case decided by Sessions Judge—District Magistrate makes reference to High Court—Reference improper—Duty of District Magistrate.

Where the District Magistrate examined the record of a case decided by the Sessions Judge, and made a reference to the High Court recommending that the sentence of transportation for life should be altered to one of death, held, that Sec. 435 Cr. P. C. applies exclusively to the proceedings before an inferior court, and the District Magistrate acted with impropriety.

A District Magistrate is inferior as a court to the Sessions Judge. It is no business of a District Magistrate, on the judicial side, to criticize the propriety of the view taken by the superior court. It is his imperative duty to abide by the conclusion of the sessions court loyally and faithfully. If however he considers that there is room for reconsideration, he may on the administrative side approach the local Government or the Government Advocate with the request that the High Court should be moved by means of a revision to consider the propriety of the sentence. He cannot sit in judgment over the Sessions Judge and bring his own views to the notice of the High Court. KING-EMPEROR v. PATRAKHAN. 67

———Secs. 488 and 489(2)—Civil suit for restitution of conjugal rights—Within a month wife takes proceedings under Sec. 488 Cr. P. C.—Civil suit decreed ex parte*—Proceedings under Sec. 488 not* bona fide*—Whether criminal court should pass orders under Sec. 488 ignoring civil court decree.*

A civil suit was instituted by the husband against his wife for restitution of conjugal rights. Within a month of the filing of the civil suit the wife took proceedings under Chapter XXXVI Criminal Procedure Code (Of the Maintenance of Wives) and the husband denied that he had ever ill-treated her and no specific questions were put to him to prove ill-treatment. The civil suit was decreed ex parte. Held, that the proceedings under Chapter XXXVI were not bona fide and were taken for the purpose of ignoring any decree that the civil court may pass, and the fact that the civil court decree was passed ex parte or after contest was immaterial, and this was not a case in which any order under Sec. 488 Cr. P. C. should be passed. SHARDA PRASAD v. KING-EMPEROR THROUGH PIARI. 766

———Secs. 498 and 561A—Bail granted by High Court—Conditions on which bail granted not violated—Whether it can cancel the order.

The High Court is not specifically empowered by Sec. 498, Criminal Procedure Code, to cancel bail granted by itself; but it can hardly be argued that it will be exercising the wide powers with which it is endowed by Sec. 561A improperly, if it follows the procedure that would be observed by a Sessions Judge or Magistrate, and directs the arrest of a person who has been released on bail under its orders, for the reason that there do now appear to be reasonable grounds for believing that he has committed a non-bailable offence. KING-

EMPEROR v. MIRZA MOHAMMAD IBRAHIM. 701

———Sec. 539A—Accused person making false allegations in application for transfer—Whether liable to prosecution.

Section 539A, Criminal Procedure Code, applies to an accused person and he is liable to prosecution in respect of any false statement which he may make in an affidavit supporting his application for transfer. BADRI PRASAD v. JHAMMAN. 1076

———Secs. 539B and 537—Accused alleged to have cut and stolen gram crop—Magistrate visits the field—But omits to make a memorandum of what he observed on the spot—Whether omission amounts to irregularity.

The accused who were alleged to have cut and stolen gram crop, were charged under Section 379 I. P. C. They examined the village patwari in defence to establish that there had been no gram crop in the field in question in that year and that wheat had been sown. This surprise was sprung on the prosecution at a late stage of the case. No suggestion of the kind was made when the complainant was examined, nor did the accused state in their defence that the field had not been sown with gram at all. The Magistrate made an inspection of the field and discovered stumps of dried gram plants. He however did not give any previous intimation of his intention to visit the field and he did not record the result of his inspection in a note which, as required by Section 539B Cr. P. C., should have been made part of the record. Held, that the 'omission' of the Magistrate to act in accordance with Section 539B Cr. P. C. was an irregularity, and did not in fact occasion a failure of justice. SARJU v. EMPEROR. 523

CRIMINAL TRIBES ACT (VI of 1924)—Sec. 23—Applicable only to convictions for offences specified in Sch. I—'Any other such offence'—Meaning of.

Section 23 of the Criminal Tribes Act refers only to convictions for offences specified in Sch. I and has no application to a conviction for an offence which is not contained in Sch. I. The words "any other such offence" used in the section mean one of those offences mentioned in the schedule.

Where a person was convicted under Section 454 Penal Code read with Section 23 of the Criminal Tribes Act and his previous convictions were one under Section 454 and two under Section 457, held, that Section 23 of the Criminal Tribes Act did not apply and the accused could only be punished as an old offender. KING-EMPEROR v. CHITTIRA. 1070

CUSTOM—Ancient—How to be proved—Whether proof of instances essential—Whether prevailing practice in maths of the same order relevant.

Evidence afforded by instances is more satisfactory than evidence afforded by tradition but an ancient custom can be established by evidence of persons who heard it mentioned by persons deceased who had special means of knowledge.

While it is true that questions relating to succession to the office of a mahant had to be decided on proof of custom applicable to each particular math, the prevailing practice in a large number of 'maths' of the same order (that installation by mahants belonging to the same order is considered necessary) cannot be ignored.

Where the plaintiff alleged that the 'math' in question had existed for several centuries, and this fact was admitted in the written statement without any qualification or reservation, held, that the District Judge was not justified in holding contrary to the case of both parties that the 'math' in question was of recent growth. RAGHUNATH DAS v. GANESH DAS. 615

DAMAGES—Defendant digs trench near foundation of kutcha house of plaintiff—Rain water accumulates in trench and percolates into plaintiff's ground—Damage caused to plaintiff's wall—Whether plaintiff entitled to recover damages.

Where the defendant digs a trench on his own land but adjoining the wall of the plaintiff's kutcha house, and by failing properly to cover it, permits rain water to accumulate in the trench in such quantities that it naturally percolates through the soil into the plaintiff's ground, so that damage is caused to the plaintiff's wall, the plaintiff is entitled to recover damages from the defendant. MAHADEO PRASAD v. SARJU PRASAD. 758

DISTRICT BOARDS ACT (Local, X of 1922), Sec. 192—Interpretation of—Protection intended for defendant—Status of plaintiff immaterial.

Section 192 of the District Boards Act is intended for the protection not only of the Board and its officers and servants, but also of the members of the Board. So long as the defendant is a member of the Board and the suit against him is instituted in respect of an act done or purporting to have been done by him in his official capacity, the section is applicable, no matter whether the plaintiff is a stranger or the Board or any other officer or servant. The protection is for a defendant and does not take into account the status of the plaintiff in the suit. RAZA HUSAIN v. THE DISTRICT BOARD, BANDA THROUGH CHAIRMAN. 1081

DISTRICT BOARDS ACT (Local, X of of 1922)—Sec. 192

———Sec. 192, Sub-sec. 3—Advance given to member of District Board for supply of lime —Failure to render proper accounts—Suit for recovery of balance—Filed more than 6 months after accrual of cause of action—Suit time-barred.

Where advance money had been given to defendant by the District Board for supply of lime in his capacity as member of the Board and on his failure to supply the full quantity of lime and to submit correct accounts, the Board, after obtaining the Commissioner's sanction but more than 6 months after the accrual of the cause of action, sued the defendant for the balance, held, that Sec. 192, Sub-section 3 applied and the suit was time-barred.

Held, further, that the action of the Board in giving such a contract to the defendant, while he was a member of the Board, was highly objectionable, was contrary to the express provisions of Sec. 34 of the District Boards Act and to the principle underlying Section 31(c) of the rules contained in the District Board manual. RAZA HUSAIN v. THE DISTRICT BOARD, BANDA THROUGH CHAIRMAN. 1081

ESTOPPEL—

See Evidence Act, Sec. 115.

EVIDENCE ACT (I of 1872), Sec. 24—Confessions—When inadmissible—Whether evidence of approver coupled with retracted confession sufficient for conviction. NASIR v. KING-EMPEROR. 1125

———Sec. 32(2) and Criminal Procedure Code, Sec. 162—Statement made to police officer (investigating a dacoity) by M*—That* A and B *took part in dacoity—Police officer made entries in the diary—*M *was later murdered—*A, B and others charged under Sec. 302—Admissibility of entries in police diary. KING-EMPEROR v. ABDUL AZIZ. 301

———Sec. 35—Income from chari—Calculation of—Settlement officer's report—Whether admissible. GANPATJI v. HANUMAN SINGH. 1

———Secs. 44 and 2—Whether bar evidence

EVIDENCE ACT (I of 1872)—Sec. 115

of negligence in a suit by minor to avoid a decree or order against him.

Per SULAIMAN and SEN, JJ. (BOYS, J. dissenting)—The Evidence Act does not purport to destroy any substantive right that may exist independently of that Act. Sec. 44 of the Act is merely permissive and not prohibitive. There is nothing in Sec. 44 or Sec. 2 of the Act which precludes the plaintiff from proving that a judgment previously obtained had been obtained by the negligence of his guardian, and was not binding on him. SIRAJ FATIMA v. MAHMOOD ALI. 437

———Sec. 68, Proviso to—Interpretation of —Suit for sale on a mortgage—A defendant denies that an alleged executant executed the mortgage—One marginal witness to be produced.

If any of the defendants to a suit denies that any of the alleged executants executed the mortgage deed, the plaintiff must produce one of the marginal witnesses to prove the document. RADHA BALLAB v. DEOKI NANDAN. 207

———Sec. 108—Person not heard of for several years—Presumption as to death—But no presumption that he was dead at a particular time.

Under Sec. 108 of the Evidence Act, where a person has not been heard of for more than 7 years by those who are likely to hear of him, a presumption arises as to the death of the said person, but there can be no presumption that he was dead at a particular time.

Where in order to succeed in a suit it is necessary for a person to establish that a particular person who had not been heard of for a number of years, was dead at a particular time, he has to prove the factum of his death at the said time by affirmative evidence either direct or circumstantial. JANGI SINGH v. GUDRI SINGH. 175

———Sec. 115—Principle of—Person entering into possession under an invalid instrument—When estopped—Whether his son not claiming through him also estopped.

By a deed, Government made a grant of property to A for his life. On A's death the deed laid down the mode of selection of his successor. A by his will bequeathed life-interests in the property to B and C in succession, and this portion of the will was invalid at any rate as against the Government as it was inconsistent with the terms of the grant. B went into possession of the property under the will. On B's death his son entered into possession of the property. On a suit for possession by C, who maintained that B's son was estopped from disputing the title of the remainderman under the will, B's son relied on his possession as a squatter. Held, that although B, as he went into possession under the will, might be estopped from denying the remainderman's title, his son entering into possession after his father's death without any title at all and not through his father, because his father had nothing to pass to him, cannot be affected by any such estoppel. Nisar Ali Khan v. Mohammad Ali Khan. 691

———Sec. 115—Estoppel—Assignment—Assignor acknowledging receipt of consideration—Deed registered—Assignor estopped from setting up fictitious nature of transaction.

If a grantor conveys in a form actually and actively misleading, so that any persons reading the conveyance necessarily conclude that the grantees are the absolute owners, the grantor cannot subsequently be heard to say that this is not the real transaction but that the grantees take on a secret trust not disclosed in the conveyance.

If a man acknowledges that he has received the whole of the purchase money from the person to whom he transfers property, he voluntarily arms the purchaser with the means of dealing with the estate as the absolute legal and equitable owner free from every shadow of encumbrance or adverse equity, and he cannot be heard to say that he has not received such purchase money.

Where words of any written instrument are free from ambiguity and where external circumstances do not create any doubt or difficulty as to the proper application of those words to claimants under the instrument, or the subject-matter to which the instrument relates, such instrument is always to be construed according to the strict plain common meaning of the words themselves and in such case evidence dehors the instrument for the purpose of explaining it according to the surmised or alleged intention of the parties to the instrument is utterly inadmissible.

Where a father executed an assignment in the shape of a sale-deed in favour of himself (in an assumed name) and his son jointly for a stated consideration and the deed recited that the consideration had been received and the document was registered under the law of Registration, held; that the son was competent to convey a good title to his mortgagee and the father was estopped from setting up the fictitious nature of the transaction. Tsang Chuen v. Li Po Kwai alias Li Kan. 971

———Sec. 115—Estoppel—Conditions to be fulfilled. Sri Ram Singh v. Baldeo Prasad. 605

EXCISE ACT (Local Act IV of 1910). Secs. 3 (2), 70 and 60—Sub-Inspector of police—Whether an 'Excise officer'—Whether empowered to file complaint under Sec. 60.

A Sub-Inspector of police, who is invested with certain powers in connection with seizure of excisable articles and the arrest of suspected persons under Sec. 10 of the Excise Act, is an 'Excise Officer' within the meaning of Sec. 3 (2); and is therefore empowered by Sec. 70 to file a complaint under Sec. 60. Chedi v. King-Emperor. 107

———Sec. 60 (a)—Conviction under—Irregularity in search—Search without warrant—Effect of.

Irregularity in a search and the failure to obtain warrant would always afford ground for scrutiny, but if after close scrutiny the court comes to the conclusion that an excisable article was recovered from the possession of the accused, then a conviction under Sec. 60 (a) of the Excise Act (Local Act IV of 1910) would be sound. Mohammad Bashir v. King-Emperor. 104 ———Sec. 64 (c)—License for selling liquor—Condition of—Hours for sale fixed—Shop closed temporarily by licensee—Whether amounts to breach of condition of license.

Where one of the conditions in the license for selling liquor was that "the hours for the opening and closing of the shop have been fixed as follows It is necessary that shops should not be kept open at any other hour", and the licensee was convicted under Sec. 64 (c) of the Excise Act (IV of 1910) for having broken the condition as the Excise Inspector had found it closed temporarily, held, (1) that the condition cannot be interpreted as meaning that at no time between the two limits the shop should be closed even temporarily. The object of the condition is to prevent the sale of liquor outside the fixed hours; (2) that there was no breach of condition and the conviction should be quashed. Puttu Lal v. King-Emperor. 32

———Secs. 70, 3 (2) and 60—Sub-Inspector of police—Whether an 'Excise officer'—Whether empowered to file complaint under Sec. 60. Chedi v. King-Emperor. 107

EXECUTANT—Of document—To understand nature of transaction—Details may be left to his lawyer.

It is enough for the executant of a legal document to understand the nature of the transaction, leaving the details to his lawyer. RAJKUMAR SEN CHOWDHURY v. RAM SUNDAR SHAHA. 198

FAMILY SETTLEMENT—Wife not living with husband—Father-in-law executes document—Agrees to pay allowance called Kharch-i-pandan—Allowance unconditional—Agreement amounts to family settlement—Consideration—Promotion of family peace.

Where the father-in-law of a Mohammedan lady, who had left her husband and was living with her parents, executed a document in her favour under which he agreed to pay her a monthly allowance called kharch-i-pandan and expressed his desire of bringing his daughter-in-law to his house so that she may live with her husband, but the document did not reserve to the executant any power of revocation either upon the happening of a future contingency or at his own sweet will and pleasure, held, (1) that the daughter-in-law was entitled to recover the arrears of the allowance which was not dependent upon the fulfilment of a condition precedent that she should return to her husband; (2) that the transaction partook of the nature of a family settlement the object of which was to promote good will between the daughter-in-law and her husband. LATIF JAHAN BEGAM alias SAKKAN BIBI v. MOHAMMAD NABI KHAN alias UMRAO DULAH KHAN. 9

GENERAL CLAUSES ACT (X of 1897), Sec. 27—Presumption as to service of notice—Rebuttable.

On a true construction of Sec. 27 of the General Clauses Act the presumption as to service raised by "properly addressing, prepaying and posting by registered post" a notice (which an Act authorises to be served by post), is a rebuttable presumption. L. C. DESOUZA, CAWNPORE—In the matter of. 409

GRANT—By Hindu in favour of Christian woman—Whom he married according to Arya Samaj rites—Deed described her as 'my wife'—Whether grant dependent upon validity of marriage—Whether a dum casta condition implied—Contract Act, Sec. 25(1)—Whether applicable to such grant.

A Hindu executed a deed in favour of an Australian woman, whom he had married according to the rites of the Arya Samaj sect after she became a convert to Hinduism. By this deed he purported to grant to her, "her heirs, executors, administrators and assigns," a perpetual annuity charged upon specified immovable properties. In the deed he described her as "my wife", and the grant was expressed to be made out of "love and affection". Held, (1) that the deed was not a contract and was in form and substance a gift; (2) that the grant was not intended to be in any way dependent upon the validity of the marriage, and there was no room for the implication of a dum casta condition. GOPAL SARAN NARAIN SINGH v. SITA DEVI. 703

GUARDIANS AND WARDS ACT (VIII of 1890), Sec. 4(2)—Guardian—Definition of—Not limited to guardian appointed by court.

The definition of the word 'guardian' in Sec. 4(2), Guardians and Wards Act does not necessarily mean a guardian duly appointed or declared by the court, and includes any person having the care of the person of a minor. SIDDIQ-UN-NISSA BIBI v. NIZAMUDDIN KHAN. 21

———Sec. 4(2)—Guardian—Minor Mohammedan girl in custody of her maternal grandmother—By virtue of right of hizrat—Whether her 'guardian'. SIDDIQ-UN-NISSA BIBI v. NIZAMUDDIN KHAN. 21

———Sec. 17—Appointment of guardian—Personal law of minor—Not binding upon court.

In cases where Sec. 17, Guardians and Wards Act, applies the personal law has to this extent been superseded that it is not absolutely binding on the court and can be ignored if the welfare of the minor requires that some one else, even inconsistently with that law, is the more proper person to be appointed guardian of the minor. SIDDIQ-UN-NISSA BIBI v. NIZAMUDDIN KHAN. 21

———Sec. 19—Where contingencies mentioned in sub-clauses exist—Court has no power to appoint guardian—Personal law governing minor not touched.

The language of Sec. 19 Guardians and Wards Act implies that when any of the three contingencies mentioned in the Sub-clauses exists, there is no authority in the court to appoint or declare a guardian of the person of the minor at all; that is to say, the jurisdiction of the court conferred upon it by Sec. 17 to appoint or declare a guardian is ousted where the case is covered by Sec. 19 of the Guardians and Wards Act. The legislature apparently did not intend to settle the competition that may arise under the personal law governing the minor between the husband and the father of the minor. SIDDIQ-UN-NISSA BIBI v. NIZAMUDDIN KHAN. 21

———Sec. 25—'Custody'—Meaning of—Includes constructive custody.

There is no reason to restrict the meaning of the word 'custody' in Sec. 25, Guardians and Wards Act, to the physical or actual custody of the minor. Even if the ward is in the actual custody of another person with the permission of the guardian, he or she would be under the guardian's constructive custody. SIDDIQ-UN-NISSA BIBI v. NIZAMUDDIN KHAN. 21

———Secs. 25 and 4(2)—Minor Mohammedan girl in custody of her maternal grandmother—By virtue of right of hizrat—Whether girl can be said to have been removed from the custody of her legal guardian.

If a female relation is under the Mohammedan Law entitled to the custody of the minor and is not disqualified in any way and the minor is actually in her custody, it cannot be said that she has left or has been removed from the custody of the guardian having care of the person of the minor. SIDDIQ-UN-NISSA BIBI v. NIZAMUDDIN KHAN. 21

———Sec. 34—Scope of—Guardian to pay balance due on accounts submitted by himself.

Under Sec. 34 of the Guardians and Wards Act the court directs the guardian to pay such amount as may be due on the accounts submitted by the guardian himself. KANHAIYA LAL v. MAHDEI. 47

———Sec. 35—District Judge assigns bond to minor—Whether order fixing surety's liability essential before assignment.

An order by the District Judge fixing the liability of the surety is not called for, before he can assign the bond to the minor (or any guardian of his appointed by the District Judge) under Sec. 35 of the Guardians and Wards Act.

There is no provision in the Act for the surety being a party to any proceeding in which accounts may be taken, nor can the surety appeal against the District Judge's order fixing his liability. KANHAIYA LAL v. MAHDEI. 47

HINDU LAW—

Adoption.
Alienation.
Impartible estate.
Inheritance.
Joint family.
Joint family business.
Joint family property.
Maintenance.
Partition.
Reversioner.
Succession.
Widow.
Widow remarriage.

Adoption

———Adoption—Widow—Power to adopt—Whether exercisable after remarriage.

A Hindu widow cannot, after remarriage, make a valid adoption to her former husband. ABDUL HALIM KHAN v. SAADAT ALI KHAN. 593

Alienation

———Alienation—Deed of Exchange—Executed by manager—When binding on family.

A deed of exchange executed by a father or manager of a joint Hindu family is an alienation and is liable to be challenged by the other members of the family if it was not executed for legal necessity or for the benefit of the estate. BALZOR SINGH v. RAGHUNANDAN SINGH. 33

Impartible estate

———Impartible estate—Ancestral—Junior members of family—Right of survivorship for purposes of succession—Separation from, how effected—Incorporation of other acquired with impartible estate—Possible and how effected—Incorporation of movables.

In the case of ordinary joint family property the members of the family have (1) the right of partition, (2) the right to restrain alienations by the head of the family except for necessity, (3) the right of maintenance and (4) the right of survivorship. The first of these rights cannot exist in case of an impartible estate, though ancestral, from the very nature of the estate. The second is incompatible with the custom of impartibility and so also the third. To this extent the general law of the Mitakshara has been superseded by custom and the impartible estate, though ancestral, is clothed with the incidents of self-acquired and separate property. But the right of survivorship is not inconsistent with the custom of impartibility and still remains. To this extent therefore the estate still retains its character of joint family property and its devolution is governed by the general Mitakshara law applicable to such property. Though the other rights which a co-parcener acquires by birth in joint family property no longer exist, the birth-right of the senior members to take by survivorship still remains. This right is not mere spes successionis but a right which is capable of being renounced and surrendered. In order to establish that a family governed by Mitakshara in which there is an ancestral impartible estate has ceased to be joint, it is necessary to prove an intention, express or implied on the part of the junior members of the family to renounce their right of succession to the estate. Such a renunciation is not to be presumed from mere separation in food and worship.

On a question whether a member of a joint family has incorporated his self-acquired property with the joint family property, the crucial test is intention and the intention may be expressed by the blending of income or in some other way. It may be done by declaring expressly or impliedly his intention to do so. On the same principle a member of a joint family who is the holder of an impartible estate, may declare his intention to incorporate his self-acquired property with the impartible estate. By so doing he expresses his intention to alter the course of devolution of the self-acquired property. Such incorporation of the self-acquired property will follow the impartible property under the law and be heritable by the rule of primogeniture. The power to incorporate being a power inherent in every Hindu owner applies as well to a customary impartible Raj unless it is excluded by statute or custom; but where a Raj is an estate granted by the Crown, its boundaries cannot be enlarged by any additions being made to it so as to make it descend under the law by the rule of primogeniture. Movable property cannot however form accretion to an ancestral impartible Raj, nor can even the income of such an estate be an accretion to the estate. The income when received is the absolute property of the owner of the impartible estate. It does not attach to the estate as does the income of an ordinary ancestral estate attach to that estate. SHIBA PRASAD SINGH v. PRAYAG KUMARI DEBI. 919

Inheritance

———Inheritance — Mitakshara — 'Heritable bandhus'—Rules for determining—Last male owner's father's father's daughter's son's daughter's son—Whether his heritable bandhu.

The last owner's father's father's daughter's son's daughter's sons are not his heritable bandhus.

Per SULAIMAN, J.—Rules laid down by Sarvadhikari in his Tagore Law Lectures for determining heritable bandhus re-stated as follows:—

(I) Heritable bandhus can belong only to three classes mentioned in the Mitakshara (and cannot be added to). The Atma bandhus are now well known to be included (1) within the circle of grand-parents in the ascending line, and their descendants under certain limitations including certain descendants of the owner himself. For Pitri or Matri bandhus we go outside the circle and higher, but in accordance with the ordinary conception we must travel upwards along agnatic lines, that is (2) the father's father's agnatic ascendants (Pitri, ex parte paterna), (3) the father's mother's agnatic ascendants (Pitri, ex parte materna), (4) mother's father's agnatic ascendants (Matri, ex parte paterna) and (5) mother's mother's agnatic ascendants (Matri, ex parte materna), and not in the agnatic ascendants of the mothers of these ancestors.

(II) There must be at least one female between the given person and the deceased, and there cannot be more than two females between the propositus and the common ancestors on the one side, and not more than two females between the common ancestor and the claimant on the other side, and if two females exist on either side they must be related as mother and daughter to each other. This holds good in the case of Pitri and Matri bandhus, whether ex parte paterna or ex parte materna and also in the case of Atma bandhus whether in the ascending line or in the descending line.

Per MUKERJI, J.—A bandhu who has a right to inherit to a propositus, otherwise known as heritable bandhu, must possess the following qualifications:—

(I) He may be one (1) in the propositus's father's line which would include his own line, either ascending or descending because descending line also would be his father's line through the propositus himself, (2) in the propositus's maternal grandfather's line, (3) in the propositus's father's maternal grandfather's line, (4) in the propositus's mother's maternal grandfather's line.

(II) Both the claimant and the deceased must be related to each other as sapindas. GAJADHAR PRASAD v. GAURI SHANKAR. 533

Joint family

———Joint family—Adults and minors—

Appointment of certified guardian for minor members—Whether effects their separation.

It is well established that if a Hindu family consisting of adults and minors remains joint, it is not open to the District Judge to appoint a certified guardian for the minor members for their share of joint family property, and it must therefore be assumed that the appointment of a certified guardian implies that ipso facto the minor members are being separated from the adult members. JAGANNATH PRASAD v. CHUNNI LAL. 1110

———Joint family—All minors—Guardian of property appointed—Guardianship ceases on one of the minors attaining majority.

Where in a joint Hindu family all the coparceners are minors and a guardian of the property is appointed for them by the District Judge, the guardianship ipso facto terminates on the attainment of adult status by one of the minors. It is contrary to the Hindu Law that there should be a guardian certified by the Judge for a joint Hindu family where there is an adult member. JAGANNATH PRASAD v CHUNNI LAL. 1110

Joint family business

———Non-ancestral business—Joint family —Mitakshara—Father borrows money for business of mortgaging family property—Whether minor members bound.

Money borrowed by the father as manager of a joint Hindu family governed by the Mitakshara for the purpose of a business which is not ancestral, is not borrowed for legal necessity and a mortgage granted as security for such a loan is not binding on the minor members of the joint family, and the mortgage being wholly invalid does not pass the shares even of the alienating co-parceners. THE BENARES BANK, LIMITED v. HARI NARAIN. 714

Joint family property

———Joint family property—Mortgaged for satisfying pre-emption decree—Neither "benefit of the estate" nor "legal necessity" proved —Mortgage unenforceable against family property mortgaged—Alienation by father—When unjustified.

Where two brothers mortgaged ancestral property for the sake of raising a loan for satisfying a pre-emption decree but it was not proved that the loan was raised for legal necessity or for discharging an antecedent debt or for the benefit of the estate, held, that the mortgage was not within the authority of the executants and that therefore it was unenforceable against the family property mortgaged.

Per SULAIMAN, C. J.—The money required for a new business started even by the father as the manager of the family, involving as it does a risk and liability on the minor members of the family, cannot justify an alienation.

Case-law discussed at length. AMRAJ SINGH v. SHAMBHU SINGH. 895

Maintenance

———Maintenance—Widow—In possession of a portion of joint family estate in lieu of maintenance—Whether can be dispossessed by decree-holder holding decree against rights of the family. RAM KUNWAR v. AMAR NATH. 267

Partition

———Partition—Joint family—Separation of one member—No presumption of jointness or separation of other members—Question to be proved as one of fact.

When one co-parcener separates, then there is no presumption that the remaining co-parceners remain joint and there is also no presumption that the remaining co-parceners have separated. The question whether the remaining co-parceners remained joint or whether they separated has to be proved as a question of fact in each case. PIYARE LAL v. CHUNNI LAL. 1018

Reversioner

———Reversioner—Acts of waste by life-tenant—Remote reversioner not entitled to challenge—Act II of 1929—Effect of—Sisters and sisters' sons of last male-holder—Precedence in order of succession over distant collaterals.

Under the Hindu Law the person entitled to challenge any acts of waste or alienation by a life-tenant like a Hindu mother is the next presumptive reversioner on the date of the suit. By operation of Act II of 1929, sisters and sisters' son obtained a precedence in the order of succession over distant collaterals and therefore a remote reversioner is not entitled to sue for an injunction restraining the mother of the last male-holder and her transferee from committing acts of waste unless he satisfies the court that the nearest reversioner has colluded with the life-tenant or has otherwise done acts precluding him from maintaining an action. BANDHAN SINGH v. DAULATA KUAR. 384

———Widow—Gift by—Suit for declaration by reversioner—That gift void after widow's lifetime—Whether court should grant declaration. RAGHUNATH BARAIE v. JAINARAIN BARAIE. 99

Succession

———Succession—Male agnate—Same as gotraja-sapinda—Necessity of proving necessity of gotra.

In order to qualify as a male agnate, or gotraja-sapinda of the propositus, the plaintiff must satisfy two conditions, viz., (a) that he is of the same gotra, or, as it may be expressed, of a common patriarchal stock, and (b) that he is a sapinda of the deceased, that is, connected by blood through a common ancestor, the connection being traced through males. In the absence of challenge, it might well be that proof by the plaintiff that he was a sapinda of the propositus would be sufficient to raise a presumption that he was also gotraja, but on his being challenged by defendant, it is for the plaintiff to satisfy the court that he complies with this condition also, before he can succeed in his claim to the succession. DULAHIN JADUNATH KUAR v. BISHESHAR BAKHSH SINGH. 632

Widow

———Widow—Decree against assets of deceased husband—Decree-holder can sell estate, though that would have the effect of depriving the widow of future profits.

A creditor who has got a decree against the assets of a Hindu who died sonless leaving a widow, can attach and sell the estate in execution of the decree though that would have the effect of depriving the Hindu widow of future profits. MAJHLI DULAIYA v. MUNNA LAL. 562

———Widow—Gift by—Suit for declaration by reversioner—That gift void after widow's lifetime—Whether court should grant declaration—Specific Relief Act, Sec. 42—Declaration to be refused at a preliminary stage—And not by court of appeal.

A deed of gift by a Hindu widow could not possibly be held to be evidence of alienation for value for purposes of necessity, and taken by itself the document could not stand as a deed of title; and if the next reversioner files a suit for a declaration that the deed of gift was void after the lifetime of the widow, the court should refuse the declaration. RAGHUNATH BARAIE (and after his death) RAM RAJI v. JAINARAIN BARAIE. 99 ———Widow—Maintenance—In possession of a portion of joint family estate in lieu of maintenance—Whether can be dispossessed by decree-holder holding decree against rights of the family.

A widow has a right to hold that portion of the joint family estate of which she is in possession in lieu of maintenance as long as she is entitled to maintenance as a Hindu widow. On her death or if she ceases to be entitled to maintenance as a Hindu widow, the right to hold the estate would terminate. Subject to her right to hold the estate, it is open to a decree-holder of a simple money decree against the rights of the joint Hindu family to bring the property to sale. RAM KUNWAR v. AMAR NATH. 267 ———Widow—Property acquired by her out of the savings of her husband's estate—When to be regarded as "accretion to her husband's estate"—Test for determination.

Where a Hindu widow acquired by pre-emption an undivided share in the same property in which she had already acquired the undivided share of her husband, out of the savings of her husband's estate, and treated the two properties as one, and seven years after her purchase by pre-emption she gifted the property to her brother's son, held, on a suit by the reversioner, that the widow intended that the property acquired by pre-emption should be treated as an accretion to her husband's estate, and her subsequent transfer to one who was no heir of her husband does not disprove the widow's intention at the time of the purchase. BHAROSA SHUKUL v. MANBASI KUER. 875

———Widow—Right of maintenance—Unchastity of widow—Instrument executed by two brothers (members of a joint family)—On the death of either, widow of deceased to have profits of half the property for her life—Right to profits not liable to forfeiture—On subsequent unchastity.

The right to maintenance of a Hindu widow, belonging to a joint family, is conditional upon continued chastity, and this right is not affected by the fact that the widow has obtained a decree declaring her right to maintenance or that there has been an agreement between the widow and the male co-parceners to pay her a certain amount by way of maintenance.

The plaintiff respondent and B (the husband of the defendant) were brothers and were members of a joint Hindu family. They had no male issue. Shortly before the death of B, they jointly executed a document, whereby they declared that they were the members of a joint Hindu family, but agreed that on the death of either of them without leaving male issue, the widow of the deceased should have the full share of the profits of half the property upon the same footing as that of a widow of a separated Hindu, held, that the defendant derived under the document a special estate equivalent to the estate of a Hindu widow and it was not liable to forfeiture upon the ground of subsequent unchastity, because under the document the widow's right to profits was to continue for her whole lifetime, unhampered by any restrictions. ANANDI v. LAKHMI CHAND. 208

———Widow—Right of residence in husband's house—Ancestral house mortgaged by son—Suit for sale on mortgage—Widow entitled to claim, as against auction-purchaser, a right to reside in a suitable portion of house.

A Hindu after mortgaging the ancestral house, made a gift of the house in favour of his mother. Later he along with his mother executed a second mortgage over the property. On a suit for sale of the house on the basis of the mortgages, the lower court made a decree jointly on the two mortgages and stated that the question of the right of residence of the mother did not arise at that stage of the proceedings. Held, that the mortgage decree as given by the court below should be split up and the two amounts separately payable under each decree should be shown. It would be open to the parties to the second mortgage to pay it off; and leave the plaintiff to bring the property to sale on the first mortgage. If this happens the mother would be entitled to claim, as against the auction-purchaser, a right to reside in a suitable portion of the house, having regard to the nature of the property and her requirements. The question as to what portion of the house, the right of residence of the mother should be confined, will be determined by the court executing the decree, after the sale has taken place. KISHUN PIYARI v. GOPAL NARAIN. 795

Widow Remarriage

———Widow remarriage—Mere proof of custom—Insufficient to involve forfeiture—Proof of custom of such forfeiture necessary.

The proof of mere custom of remarriage would not be sufficient to involve forfeiture under the Hindu Law. It would be necessary for the party claiming that the estate has been forfeited on account of remarriage to prove that there is a custom of such forfeiture in such a contingency. BHOLA UMAR v. KAUSILLA. 941

HINDU WIDOW'S REMARRIAGE ACT (XV of 1856), Sec. 2—Meaning and scope of —Widow remarrying in accordance with custom of her caste—No forfeiture of her rights in the estate of her first husband.

Section 2 of the Hindu Widows' Remarriage Act (XV of 1856) does not apply to the case of those widows who are entitled under the custom of their caste to remarry and are not bound to take advantage of the provisions of the Act. Accordingly there is no forfeiture of the Hindu widow's estate on remarriage under the Act in such a case. BHOLA UMAR v. KAUSILLA. 941

HIRE-PURCHASE—Contract of hire with option of purchase on payment of instalments in full—Hirer has no option to terminate contract—Whether agreement amounts to 'hire-purchase'—Test.

An agreement whereby the plaintiff agrees to hire to the defendant certain goods at a certain rate with a condition that if so many months instalments are paid the property in the goods passes to the hirer and nowhere in the agreement is the defendant given the option to terminate the hiring, and the agreement further provides that if the defendant fails to pay hire in any one month in advance the whole transaction will be treated purely on the 'hire system'. Held, that the whole tenor of the agreement is that of a 'purchase' and not 'hire-purchase' and the plaintiff is entitled only to that part of the purchase price which has not been paid.

The distinguishing mark of a true hire-purchase agreement, as distinguished from a sale, is that the hirer should have a right to terminate the agreement at his pleasure; and the distinguishing mark of an agreement which is a sale and not a hire-purchase agreement, is that the 'hirer' should be bound to pay the full value of the goods by way of instalments without any option to cancel the agreement. In each case, the substance of the transaction or agreement must be looked at and not mere words. MAHABALI PRASAD v. H. N. PALMER. 761

INCOME-TAX—Firm owned by two partners—Partners interested in other firms also —Income from other firms credited into the books of the firm—Whether partners individually or firm liable to tax. JAI DAYAL MADAN GOPAL OF BENARES—In the matter of. 999

INCOME-TAX ACT (XI of 1922), Sec. 4(3)(vii)—"Receipts arising from business"

—Meaning of.

The expression "receipts arising from business" in Sec. 4(3) (vii) must mean receipts arising from the carrying on of business. The Commissioner of Income Tax, Bengal v. Shaw, Wallace & Co. 588 ———Secs. 6(iv), 2(4), 10, 6(vi) and 12—"Income, profits and gains"—Meaning of—Sum received by agent from his principal as compensation for cessation of agency—Whether taxable.

The object of the Indian Income-tax Act is to tax "income" which connotes a periodical monetary return "coming in" with some sort of regularity, or expected regularity, from definite sources. The source is not necessarily one which is expected to be continuously productive, but it must be one whose object is the production of a definite return, excluding anything in the nature of a mere windfall. Income has been likened pictorially to the fruit of a tree, or the crop of a field. It is essentially the produce of something which is loosely spoken of as "capital".

A sum received by an agent from his principal as compensation for the compulsory cessation of his agency cannot be regarded as profit or gain from carrying on the business or as income from "other sources" as mentioned in Sec. 6(vi) of the Income-tax Act and therefore such a sum is not taxable under the Act. The Commissioner of Income-tax, Bengal v. Shaw, Wallace and Company. 588

———Sec. 10—Business profits—Ascertainment of—Bad debts of the year to be deducted—What debts bad—Question of fact—To be decided by appropriate tribunal—Statute-barred debts not necessarily bad.

In assessing the amount of profits and gains of a year chargeable to income-tax account must be taken of all losses incurred during the year and for this purpose each year is a separate and self-contained period of time in regard to which profits earned or losses sustained before its commencement are irrelevant. Consequently a debt, which had in fact become a bad debt before the commencement of a particular year, could not properly be deducted in ascertaining profits of that year because loss had not been sustained in that year.

Whether a debt is a bad debt, and, if so, at what point of time it became a bad debt, are questions of fact to be decided in the event of dispute by the appropriate tribunal, and not by the ipse dixit of any one else. The assessee has no option of declaring debts bad in any particular year. A statute-barred debt is not necessarily bad; neither is a debt which is not statute-barred necessarily good. The Commissioner of Income-tax, Central Provinces and Berar v. Sir S. M. Chitnavis, since deceased (now represented by Krishna Rao, minor, through his guardian Parwati Bai Lady Chitnavis. 647

———Sec. 22(2)—Notice sent to assessee by registered post, acknowledgment due—Delivery taken by minor son of assessee—Whether service good.

Where a notice, issued by the Income-tax Officer, by registered post, acknowledgment due, under Sec. 22(2) of the Income-tax Act, was taken delivery of by his son without stating the name of the addressee for whom he purported to sign the receipt, and the son, though a minor, was possessed of ordinary intelligence and was living with his father and had on previous occasions received such notices on his father's behalf, held, that the service of the notice was a good service. L. C. DeSouza, Cawnpore—In the matter of. 409

———Secs. 30 and 23(4)—Assessment under Sec. 23(4)—Appeal by assessee—On the ground that case did not fall within Sec. 23(4)—Appeal not admitted without hearing assessee or his counsel.

An assessment under Sec. 23(4) of the Income-tax Act of 1922 having been made against the assessee, he filed an appeal before the Assistant Commissioner contending that the Income-tax Officer was not justified in treating the case under Sec. 23, Sub-sec. 4. The Assistant Commissioner, after scrutinizing the order and the memorandum of appeal behind the back of the assessee or his counsel. came to the conclusion that the order had been rightly made and refused to admit the appeal. Held, that the Assistant Commissioner must satisfy himself on hearing the assessee or his counsel and not by an ex parte examination of the record in his chambers, that the case fell within the purview of Sec. 23(4), and was, therefore, not open to appeal. Bhagwati Prasad, Rais, Alinagar, Gorakhpur—In the matter of. 389 ———Secs. 66(2), 23(4), 30 and 31—Assessment by Income-tax Officer under Sec.

23 (4)—Assistant Commissioner considers assessment properly made—No order under Sec. 31—No reference lies to High Court.

Where the Assistant Commissioner of Income-tax considers that the assessment by the Income-tax Officer is properly made under Sec. 23(4), no appeal lies to him under Sec. 31 (in accordance with the proviso to Sec. 30) and there is no order under Sec. 31, and no reference therefore lies to the High Court in accordance with the provisions of Sec. 66(2). SURAJ BHAN UGARSEN—In the matter of. 576

———Sec. 66(5)—High Court judgment—Reassessment—Question to be considered by Income Tax department in the light of High Court's judgment and in the presence of the assessee.

It is the duty of the Income Tax department to take up the question of reassessment, after a reference by the Commissioner of Income-tax has been answered by the High Court, and to see, in the presence of the assessee, whether in the light of the judgment of the High Court, any of the figures arrived at are liable to alteration or not. It is not enough to say that material alteration in the figure of assessment is not expected, and therefore reassessment is not necessary. SECRETARY OF STATE FOR INDIA v. BASANT RAI. 174

INSOLVENCY—Receiver—Decree directing receiver to pay costs—Executable personally against him—Receiver's right to be re-imbursed from insolvent's estate.

Where the decree dismissing the receiver's appeal directed him to pay the costs of the respondent, without stating that the costs should be paid out of the insolvent's estate, the costs were executable personally against the receiver, though he had ceased to hold the office at the time of execution. If he wanted to safeguard his personal interest he should have obtained an indemnity from the creditor or other person in whose interest he was litigating. It was however open to the receiver or his heirs to apply to the insolvency court for an order that he may be reimbursed out of the insolvent's estate. LACHMAN DAS v. LAKSHMI NARAIN. 226

LAND ACQUISITION ACT (I of 1894), Secs. 11 and 21—One piece of land (forming part of whole to be acquired)—More than one person interested—To be dealt with in one award—Award apportions compensation between owner and tenants—Tenants had by agreement accepted a lower sum—Wehther owner entitled to the extra amount.

Sec. 11 of the Land Acquisition Act does not contemplate that where more than one person is interested in a parcel of land there should be more than one award relating thereto. This does not mean that the whole of the land at any time to be acquired under the Act must necessarily be dealt with in one award; but only that any one piece of land (forming part of the whole) in which more than one person has an interest for which he can claim compensation, ought not to be made the subject of more than one award. Each award should contain within its four corners the fixing of the value of the land with which it deals, and the apportionment of that value between the various persons interested in that land.

Where the compensation for one piece of land (forming part of the whole to be acquired) which was "spotted over with the houses of permanent tenure-holders", was apportioned in the award in the proportion of one-fourth to the owner and three-fourths to the tenants, and the tenants had by agreement accepted a lower sum; held, that no objection ever having been made to the award as to apportionment, there was no foundation for the owner's claim to be entitled to the extra amount which the tenants might have received if they had not by agreement accepted three-quarters of a lower valuation. All that the owner could claim was his awarded proportion. The gain was a gain of the municipality which acquired the land. PRAG NARAIN v. THE COLLECTOR OF AGRA. 741 ———Sec. 18 and Civil Procedure Code, Sec. 115—Order passed by Collector under Sec. 18 refusing to make reference to the District Judge—Whether High Court has jurisdiction to revise the order.

The Collector, when acting under Sec. 18 of the Land Acquisition Act, is acting administratively and not judicially, and not as a 'court', and he could not in any case be acting as a court "subordinate to the High Court", and no revision therefore lies to the High Court under Sec. 115 C. P. C. from an order passed by the Collector under Sec. 18 refusing to make a reference to the Court of the District Judge.

Case-law discussed. BHAJANI LAL v. THE SECRETARY OF STATE. 769

———Secs. 19 and 18—Application under

Sec. 18 barred by time—Collector makes reference to civil court—Whether civil court can entertain plea of limitation—Board Circulars I—VIII, Para 28, Note 2.

Where a 'person interested' who has not accepted the award, makes a time-barred application to the Collector under Sec. 18, Land Acquisition Act, that the matter be referred to the civil court, and the Collector makes the reference; held, on objection by the Secretary of State, that the civil court had no power to entertain the plea of limitation. The principle laid down by Board Circulars I—VIII, Para 28, Note 2, that the collector cannot refuse to make a reference, even if it is time-barred and that his duty is to bring the matter to the notice of the civil court is founded on a misconception of law. Secretary of State for India in Council v. Bhagwan Prasad. 752

LANDLORD AND TENANT—Occupancy holding—House built with zemindar's permission—Site not a holding within meaning of Kumaun Rules—Suit for possession of the house—Cognizable by civil court—Kumaun Tenancy Rules of 1918—Rules 3 and 9, read with Schedule (1) Serial No. 15.

Where plaintiff sued for possession of a house and a court-yard attached thereto standing on a plot of land alleged to be plaintiff's holding, and under the Kumaun Tenancy Rules of 1928 suits in respect of any matter relating to a holding were cognizable by a revenue court only; held, that the land-holder having allowed a building to be put upon the land, the nature and character of the holding was changed and it ceased to be land used or held for agricultural purposes; and in these circumstances the site was not a holding within the meaning of the Kumaun Rules, and the suit was cognizable by the civil court. Jathali Bhul v. Nadia. 468

LAND REVENUE ACT (Local Act III of 1901), Sec. 233 (k)—Joint co-sharers in a suit formed by partition—Civil suit raising a question of title between them—Whether barred.

There is no authority for the proposition that Sec. 233 (k), Land Revenue Act, bars a civil suit raising a question of title between joint co-sharers in a unit formed by partition because such questions might have been raised in the partition proceedings. Supposing A, B and C are recorded co-sharers in a mahal, their respective shares being recorded as 8 annas, 5 annas and 3 annas. Supposing A applies for separation of his share into a separate mahal. B and C do not wish for any partition inter se and prefer to remain joint in one mahal, and the revenue court therefore would only be concerned in dividing the original mahal into two shares of equal value. If after partition C claims as against B a declaration that his share in the new mahal which has been allotted to them jointly is not 3|5ths but ½, then his suit would not be barred, because the question of title, though it might have been raised under Sec. 111 during the partition proceedings, would not have affected the partition. Halima Begam v. Mohit Ullah Khan. 621

LEGAL PRACTITIONER—Advocate made deliberately false imputations upon fairness of judicial officers—In proceedings connected with a case to which he was himself a party—Whether advocate can be punished by suspension or removal from practice.

Where an advocate deliberately made false allegations involving imputations upon the fairness and impartiality of two judicial officers in proceedings connected with an execution case to which he was himself a party; held, that it was not competent for the High Court to punish the advocate on the disciplinary side under the Indian Bar Council Act and to suspend or remove him from practice. All that the court could do was to punish him for contempt of court. An Advocate of Benares—In the matter of. 773

———Counsel files application for leave to appeal to Privy Council—Deposit under Or. 45, R. 7 C. P. C.—Appeal succeeds—Whether counsel can claim lien on the deposit for the outstanding fees.

A counsel, who files an application for leave to appeal to Privy Council, is not entitled to claim a lien for the outstanding fees on the amount deposited by the appellant under Or. 45, R. 7 C. P. C. as security, in the event of the appeal succeeding, as this deposit was never the subject-matter of dispute and was not the fruit of the action. Rashid Ahmad—In the matter of. 764 ———Payment of fees—By execution of promissory note—Whether can be taxed as costs—General Rules, Chapter XXI, Rule 1—Actual payment necessary.

Where the certificate filed by a legal practitioner showed that cash had not been paid, but that a promissory note had been executed in his favour in lieu of the unpaid part of his fees, held, that payment of fees to a legal practitioner must be made in the manner laid down by General Rules, Chapter XXI, Rule 1 (applicable to subordinate courts) which contemplates actual payment and if payment is not actually made but is only promised it cannot be taxed as costs recoverable from the opposite party. BHAGWANT SINGH v. BHAO SINGH. 272 ———Professional misconduct—Unnecessarily protracted examination and cross-examination of witnesses—Gross abuse of process of court.

Unnecessarily protracted examination and cross-examination of witnesses on commission is a gross abuse of the process of the court and it would be within the powers of the High Court to direct an enquiry with a view to disciplinary action in flagrant cases of this description. RAJKUMAR SEN CHOWDHURY v. RAM SUNDAR SHAHA. 198 ———Threatened zemindar that tenants would stop rendering 'begar' and payment of rent—Convicted under Sec. 506 Penal Code —Appeal—Released by Local Government— In accordance with Government of India Notification dated March 5, 1931—Proceedings before High Court relating to suspension dropped—Threat did not imply violence either to person or to property.

The High Court issued a notice to a mukhtar to show cause why he should not be suspended or dismissed inasmuch as he was convicted under Sec. 506 of the Penal Code on the ground that he had threatened a zemindar with this consequence that his tenants would stop rendering "begar" and payment of rent. His appeal was not heard as he was released by the Local Government in accordance with the Government of India Notification dated March 5, 1931 granting general amnesty to political prisoners who had been convicted in connection with the civil disobedience movement for offences not involving violence or incitement to violence. Held, (1) that the release of the mukhtar amounted to an expression of opinion on the part of the Local Government that he was convicted of an offence which did not imply "violence or incitement to violence"; (2) that the threat to the zemindar, although it came within the definition of criminal intimidation, did not imply any violence either to person or to property and therefore the proceedings before the High Court should be dropped. A MUKHTAR OF GORAKHPUR—In the matter of. 116

———When cannot appear for the other party—Definite retainer with a fee paid or relevant confidential information conveyed.

In order to prevent counsel from appearing for the other party, he must have a definite retainer with a fee paid or he must have had such confidential information from one of the parties as would make it improper for him to appear for the other party.

Where in a suit by the wife for dissolution of marriage on the ground of adultery, the husband put in a petition praying that an order should be made prohibiting one C, a Barrister-at-Law, from appearing for the wife on the ground that he had conveyed confidential information to him in a letter; and the letter merely referred to complaints that he had against his wife and he desired to take action so that he might obtain custody of the children but he did not definitely engage counsel's services, held, that there was nothing in the letter which would prejudice the husband if counsel appeared for the wife. EDNA MAY OLIVIA HARDLESS v. HAROLD RICHARD HARDLESS. 755

LEGAL PRACTITIONERS ACT (XVIII of 1879), Sec. 36(1), Explanation to—Resolution of Bar Association—Person declared tout on basis of general repute—Legally admissible in evidence.

A resolution of a Bar Association passed by a majority of the members present at a meeting specially convened, declaring a certain person to be a tout by general repute is legally admissible in evidence under the Explanation to Sec. 36 of the Legal Practitioners Act and can be taken into consideration by the court. There is nothing in the language of the Explanation which would make a resolution based on general repute or hearsay evidence effective. RAM PHAL v. KING-EMPEROR. 176

LIMITATION ACT (IX of 1908), Sec. 5 —Application under Or. 22, R. 9 C. P. C.— Ignorance of death of a respondent—No negligence or omission on the part of appellant —Whether amounts to 'sufficient cause'. LAKSHMI CHAND v. BEHARI LAL. 18

———Secs. 6, 9 and 19—Suit on mortgage by mortgagee's son after attaining majority— Prima facie time-barred—Acknowledgment— Made when plaintiff a minor—Whether a new period runs from date of acknowledgment— Whether plaintiff entitled to benefit of Sec. 6.

The plaintiff sued within three years of his attaining majority on a mortgage executed in favour of his late father. In order to bring his suit within limitation he relied on an acknowledgment of liability made by the mortgagor in a second mortgage which was executed at a time when the plaintiff's father was dead and he himself was a minor, and the plaintiff claimed the benefit of Sec. 6 Limitation Act. Held, that first period ceased to run entirely and a new period came into existence from the date of the acknowledgment, and the plaintiff was, therefore, a minor 'at the time from which the period of limitation is to be reckoned' and was entitled to institute the suit within the period of three years after his disability ceased; and Sec. 9 was no bar to the plaintiff's suit. Chandrabhan v. Rajkumar and Sri Parasnathji. 1012

———Sec. 14—Applicability of—Plaintiff admits—That suit, as framed, not cognizable by civil court as pleaded by defendant—Plaint returned for presentation to proper court—Whether plaintiff entitled to benefit of Sec. 14.

A party may be in doubt as to whether a suit should be instituted in a civil or a revenue court. If a suit is honestly and with due care and caution instituted in one of such courts but at a subsequent stage it is found that a wrong forum had been chosen, it cannot be doubted that if an admission to that effect be made and the court which has no jurisdiction returns the plaint for presentation to the proper court, Sec. 14 of the Limitation Act, which is couched in comprehensive terms, will be applicable.

It was possible to construe the plaint filed in a civil court as one for avoidance of a lease and for compensation for use and occupation of land. Both the parties and the Subordinate Judge, however, put the construction which was equally plausible, viz., that it was a simple suit for arrears of rent by a landholder against the thekadar and as such it was cognizable by a revenue court. Accordingly, the plaint was returned to the plaintiff for presentation to the propert court; held, that there was no want of good faith and the plaintiff was entitled to the benefit of Sec. 14 Limitation Act. Ram Pati Kunwar v. Phool Singh. •421

———Sec. 19—Document containing acknowledgment of title to immovable property—Whether compulsorily registrable under Sec. 17 Registration Act. Bageshwari Charan Singh v. Jagannath Kuari. 186

———Sec. 19—Mortgage—Acknowledgment of—Contained in a dakhalnama filed in an execution proceeding—When valid.

In a suit for redemption of a mortgage which was prima facie time-barred, the plaintiffs relied on an acknowledgment contained in a dakhalnama, which was filed in court in an execution proceeding—after describing what property the auction-purchasers had purchased, they expressly stated that that property did not include an 8 bigha area which was in their possession as mortgagees and which belonged to the mortgagor's representatives, held, that the necessary implication was that the mortgage was subsisting and that they were in possession as mortgagees, and there was therefore a valid acknowledgment within the meaning of Section 19 of the Limitation Act. Mohammad Rafi v. Kripa Ramji. 1010

———Sec. 19—Unconditional acknowledgment of indebtedness—Whether constitutes a new cause of action—Inclusion of time-barred debts in acknowledgment—Burden of proof. Abdul Rafiq v. Bhajan. 77

———Sec. 19 and Pre-emption Act, Sec. 4(9)—Whether pre-emptor is a person deriving his title through the vendee within the meaning of Sec. 19.

A pre-emptor is not a person deriving his title through the vendee within the meaning of Sec. 19 of the Limitation Act so as to make an acknowledgment of the vendee made in his written statement filed after the claim for pre-emption has been brought, an acknowledgment of his predecessor in title binding upon the pre-emptor. Shankar Lal v. Hashmi Begam. 878

———Sec. 20, Proviso to (added by Act I of 1927)—Applicability of.

A money decree was passed on June 10, 1927. On December 9, 1929 Rs.85 were paid by the judgment-debtor out of Court to the decree-holder. The decree-holder applied to certify it on March 16, 1931. The application for execution was made on June 24, 1931. Held, that the proviso added to Sec. 20 Limitation Act by Act I of 1927, which came into force on January 1, 1928, applied and the payment of December 9, 1929 did not help to keep alive the decree; and the application certifying payment having been made more than three years after the decree cannot help the decree-holder. Jai Karan v. Panchaiti Akhara Chota Naya Udasi Nanak Shahi. 1035

———Sec. 123—Applicability of—Suit against an executor or administrator or some person legally charged with duty of distributing the estate.

Article 123 of the Indian Limitation Act only applies to a suit brought against an executor or administrator or some person legally charged with the duty of distributing the estate. Ghulam Mohammad v. Ghulam Husain. 245

———Sec. 144—Religious Endowment—Transfer by manager without necessity—Adverse possession against idol—Time from which period begins to run.

When property does not vest in the Mahant, but vests in the idol and the Mahant purports to transfer it in his capacity as the manager of the idol, adverse possession against the idol commences from the very moment possession is taken under the sale deed, and it cannot be deemed to have been postponed until the Mahant is dead. Sarabdeo Bharthi v. Ram Bali. 836

———Art. 36—Applicability of—Suit for compensation—By attaching creditor—Against person who misappropriates attached goods.

A suit for compensation by an attaching creditor against a person who dishonestly removes the attached goods, sells the same and misappropriates the sale proceeds, is governed by Art. 36 of the Limitation Act, and not by Arts. 48 and 49, which apply to cases where the plaintiff has a right to possession of the goods. Kripa Ram v. Kunwar Bahadur. 241

———Art. 48—Applicability of—Plaintiff must have a right to possession of the goods. Kripa Ram v. Kunwar Bahadur. 241

———Arts. 48 and 49—Inapplicability of—Suit for compensation—By attaching creditor—Against person who misappropriates attached goods. Kripa Ram v. Kunwar Bahadur. 241

———Art. 49—Applicability of—Plaintiff must have a right to possession of the goods. Kripa Ram v. Kunwar Bahadur. 241

———Arts. 60 and 59—Suit for recovery of money—Loan or deposit—Distinction between.

Where plaintiffs sued to recover a sum of money alleged to have been deposited by their mother with the defendant in the year 1921, held, that the Article applicable was Art. 60 of the Limitation Act and not Article 59, and the transaction was a deposit and not a loan in the ordinary sense of that term. Sohan Pal (Minor) through Radha Ballabh v. Mustafa Husain. 261 ———Art. 64—'Account stated'—Meaning of—Bilateral account essential—Account must be stated within limitation—Burden of proof.

The expression "accounts stated" in Art. 64, Limitation Act, implies that there must be mutual demands on each side and the account must not be a unilateral but a bilateral account. In other words the Article contemplates an account stated by one party and an account stated by the other party, that is, two accounts and not merely an account stated by a single party.

Where the plaintiffs lent money to the defendants and the defendants merely made repayments of money which had been lent and had all along been debtors of the plaintiffs, and on a certain date the accounts were gone into and a sum of money found due to the plaintiffs, and the defendants acknowledged the said sum in the books of the plaintiffs, and within three years of the acknowledgment the plaintiffs sued the defendants for a certain sum of money as due on the acknowledgment, held, that the transactions were entirely unilateral, and there was no statement of a mutual account, and the case, therefore, did not come under Art. 64 Limitation Act.

For an account stated under Art. 64, Limitation Act, account must be stated within the period of limitation, and it is necessary for the plaintiff to show that the acknowledgment is within the period of limitation. Girdhari Lal v. Bishun Chand through Sri Ram. 279

———Art. 115 and Companies Act, Schedule I, Table A, Art. 28—Company—Shares—Unpaid calls—Forfeiture—Art. 28 creates special contract on forfeiture—Limitation. Bishambhar Nath v. Agra Electric Stores. 354

———Art. 116—Mortgage deed—Covenant—Mortgagee entitled to sue for compensation on loss being occasioned to him in consequence of a dispute raised by a third party—Suit to enforce covenant—Limitation—Starting point.

In the proceedings in execution of a mortgage decree, a certain person objected that the property sought to be sold belonged to him. His objection was disallowed, but in the declaratory suit brought by him it was declared that the property could not be sold in execution of the mortgage decree. A suit for a simple money decree was barred on that date. Thereupon the mortgagee brought a suit for compensation against the mortgagor for breach of the covenant contained in the mortgage deed, which entitled the mortgagee to sue for compensation on loss being occasioned to him in consequence of a dispute raised by a third party; held, that the plaintiff's suit was for compensation for breach of a covenant of indemnity, and was therefore governed by Art. 116; and was within limitation, whether it was reckoned from the date of objection in execution proceedings or the date of the decree nullifying the decree in favour of the plaintiff. ZIA UDDIN AHMAD KHAN v. AKBAR ALI. 317

———Art. 120—Applicability of—Family settlement—Person having the right to have and enjoy the profits of the property but cannot possess, partition or transfer—Suit for recovery of arrears of profits. LAKHMI CHAND v. ANANDI. 177

———Art. 120—Vendee agreed to pay balance of consideration to mortgagees—Delay in payment—Vendor had to pay interest—Suit for recovery of sum so paid—Limitation. MAHTAB SINGH v. COLLECTOR OF SAHARANPUR. 556 ———Art. 132—Mortgage deed—Stipulated period—Money becomes due after expiry of.

A mortgage deed provided that the principal sum would be paid within 6 years and the stipulated interest every year and further that in case of default in punctual payment of interest the mortgagee shall, within the expiry of the stipulated period of 6 years, have power to realise the entire mortgage money and the remaining interest and compound interest due to him in a lump sum through court by sale of the mortgage property. There was default in payment of interest, but the mortgagee did not avail himself of the option given to him. He sued upon the mortgage after 12 years from the date of such default but within 12 years from the date of the expiry of the stipulated period of six years. Held, that the suit was within time. Money became due within the meaning of Art. 132 only after the expiry of six years. LASA DIN v. GULAB KUNWAR. 913

———Art. 144—Co-owners—Transferee from co-owner takes transfer of whole property—Other co-owner has no knowledge of extent of share transferred—Whether adverse possession commences as against other co-owner.

Where a transferee from a co-owner takes a transfer of the whole property, the other co-owner, if he has actually no knowledge of the extent of the share transferred, is entitled to presume that the co-owner has transferred his own interest only and that the transferee by virtue of his right to that share is enjoying possession of the whole property. Of course, if the assertion of title to the whole is brought to his knowledge, and it is accompanied by his ouster and exclusion, adverse possession would then commence as against him.

If a co-owner is in possession of the whole of the joint property and asserting his exclusive title makes a possessory mortgage of the whole and knowledge of the fact is communicated to his co-owners, he can treat his mortgagee's possession as his own constructive possession and count the period of occupation by his mortgagee as a part of the period of his own adverse possession. But where the possession of the co-owner himself was not adverse to his co-owners, and it is not he, but his mortgagee who, having become his subsequent vendee, is setting up adverse possession, then the mortgagee vendee cannot join the two periods together in order to complete his period of prescription for acquiring full title.

Two persons jointly owned a shop in equal shares. A lease was granted to the defendant by the managing co-owner, who remained in possession as a lessee for some time. In 1910 the managing co-owner made a usufructuary mortgage of this very shop to the defendant, and in 1913 the managing co-owner sold the shop to the defendant, who continued in possession all this time. The other co-owner had no reason to suspect the conduct of the managing co-owner, and no evidence was led to prove that the other co-owner had knowledge of the mortgage. On a suit for joint possession by the other co-owner instituted in 1924, the defendant pleaded adverse possession. Held, (1) that in the absence of proof that knowledge of the extent of the property mortgaged was communicated to the other co-owner the defendant's possession did not become adverse as against him; (2) that assuming that possession became adverse after the execution of the sale deed of 1913, it was not open to the defendant to tack on the period of his possession as usufructuary mortgagee to the period of his possession as vendee so as to acquire full title by prescription. SUBAH LAL v. FATEH MOHAMMAD. 425 ———Arts. 144 and 106—Suit for joint possession by heirs of deceased member of Mohammedan joint family constituting a partnership—Whether maintainable—Limitation.

The heirs of a deceased member of a Mohammedan joint family constituting a partnership can maintain a suit for joint possession of the assets in the hands of the surviving members and Art. 144 of the Limitation Act applies to such a suit. SHUKRULLAH v. ZUHRA BIBI. 1039 ———Art. 181 and Civil Procedure Code, Sec. 144—Application for restitution—Limitation—Whether to be counted from the decree of the lower appellate court or from the decree of the High Court confirming that decree.

In an application for restitution under Sec. 144 C. P. C., the time to be reckoned under Art. 181, Limitation Act, should be counted from the decree of the lower appellate court and the applicant is not entitled to get deduction of the period occupied by the appeal to the High Court. DHAPO v. BAKRIDI. 724

———Art. 182—Construction of—Decree —Appeal—Appeal irregular or incompetent—Whether time runs from date of appellate decree.

Time under Article 182 of the Limitation Act in a case where there has been an appeal runs from the date of the decree of the appellate court. There is no qualification either as to the character of the appeal or as to the parties to it and the appeal would be no less an appeal even though it be irregular or incompetent; nor is it necessary that all the persons affected should be parties to the appeal or it should be one in which the whole decree was imperilled.

In construing provisions relating to statutes of limitations equitable considerations are out of place and strict grammatical meaning of the words is the only safe guide.

In a mortgage suit some of the mortgagees were plaintiffs while others were impleaded as defendants. The other defendants were the mortgagors or their representatives. A decree having been passed partly in favour of the plaintiffs and partly in favour of the defendants mortgagees, the plaintiffs appealed against the decree in so far as it related to the defendants mortgagees and to the appeal the defendants representing the mortgagors' interests were not impleaded. Held, nevertheless, that time for execution under Art. 182 ran from the date of the decree of the appellate court.

Any application by a party to an appellate court, asking it to set aside or revise a decision of a subordinate court, is an appeal within the ordinary acceptation of the term and it is no less an appeal because it is irregular or incompetent. NAGENDRA NATH DEY v. SURESH CHANDRA DEY. 643 ———Art. 182—Step-in-aid of execution—Meaning of—Payment by judgment-debtor out of court—Whether amounts to.

A step-in-aid of execution is an act done by the decree-holder in Court and therefore a payment of money made by the judgment-debtor out of Court cannot be treated in any sense as a step-in-aid of execution. JAI KARAN v. PANCHAITI AKHARA CHOTA NAYA UDASI NANAK SHAHI. 1035

———Art. 182—"Where there has been an appeal"—Meaning of—Whether include an appeal from an order dismissing an application to set aside an ex parte decree.

The words "Where there has been an 'appeal'," used in Art. 182 of the Limitation Act, contemplate and mean an appeal from the decree, and do not include an appeal from an order dismissing an application to set aside a decree passed ex parte. SUKHNANDAN SINGH v. RAMDEYI KUNWAR. 731

———Art. 182 and Civil Procedure Code, Sec. 48—Final decree—Amendment of—Application for execution of amended decree—Made more than 12 years after date of final decree—Whether time-barred. FAQIR CHAND v. KUNDAN SINGH. 471

———Art. 182, Cl. (5)—Application for execution filed after expiry of prescribed period—Previous application made under Or. 21, R. 11 —Not accompanied by affidavit required by Or. 21, R. 66(3)—Rules 11 to 14 complied with—Whether application "in accordance with law" so as to save limitation.

An application for execution of a final decree for sale in a suit on a mortgage was made by the decree-holder, who claimed that limitation was saved under Art. 182(5), Limitation Act, by a previous application under Or. 21, R. 11. On behalf of the judgment-debtor it was alleged that the previous application was not 'in accordance with law' because it was not accompanied by the affidavit required by Or. 21, R. 66(3) and the certificate of the Sub-registrar as regards prior encumbrances. Held, (1) that it was not shown that any of the rules 11 to 14 of Or. 21 were not complied with and therefore the application under Rule 11 was an application according to law; (2) that the affidavit and the certificate should be filed at a subsequent stage. DAMBAR LAL v. CHAND MAL. 578

MADRAS IRRIGATION CESS ACT (VII of 1865)—Section 1, proviso—Interpretation of.

Where riparian property passes, the property, being riparian, has inherent in it, without special mention in the conveyance, the riparian rights, and the riparian owner is entitled to the protection of the proviso to Sec. 1 of the Madras Irrigation Cess Act. THE SECRETARY OF STATE FOR INDIA IN COUNCIL v. SANNIDHIRAJU SUBBARAYUDU. 348

MAJORITY ACT (IX of 1875)—Sec. 2(a)—'To act in the matter of dower'—Meaning of—Mohammedan woman—Major by her personal law but minor under Majority Act—Whether capable of relinquishing her dower.

A Mohammedan woman who is a major by her personal law but a minor under the Indian Majority Act is capable of relinquishing her dower as consideration for obtaining Khula—a form of divorce recognised by the Mohammedan Law, inasmuch as to relinquish dower is 'to act in the matter of dower' within the meaning of Sec. 2(a) of the Indian Majority Act. QASIM HUSAIN BEG v. KANIZ SAKINA. 781

MINOR—Right of—To institute a suit to avoid a decree or order against him—On the ground of negligence of his guardian.

A minor has a right to institute a suit in the civil court to avoid a decree or order passed by a competent court against him on the ground of the negligence of his guardian. The negligence in order to be a good ground for the avoidance of a decree must be of such a nature as to justify the inference that the minor's interests were not at all protected and therefore he was not properly represented.

The plaintiffs were clearly the righful owners of the entire zamindari property in suit but in the revenue papers their names were recorded jointly with the defendants. On the strength of these entries in the revenue papers the defendants applied in the revenue court for partition of their shares. The plaintiffs being minors were represented by their certificated guardian, who objected that the defendants had no right in the property. A question of proprietary title having been raised the revenue court directed the guardian to file a civil suit within three months. The guardian failed to file any suit, and as a result the revenue court decided the question against the present plaintiffs and ordered partition. One of the plaintiffs on attaining majority instituted the present suit for a declaration of title to the property and for possession in his own right and acting as the next friend of his minor brothers and sisters, against the defendants who were applicants for partition. Held, (1) that the legal rights of the plaintiffs being absolutely clear, the failure of the guardian to file a civil suit as ordered by the revenue court prejudiced the interests of the minors, and the guardian ceased to represent the minors properly and effectively, and the inaction of the guardian amounted to negligence, and the minors were entitled to treat the partition order as not binding on them; (2) that when the partition order under the Land Revenue Act itself fell to the ground, Sec. 233 (k) would have no application, and the present suit was maintainable. SIRAJ FATMA v. MAHMOOD ALI. 437

MOHAMMEDAN LAW—Deceased debtor—Suit by creditor against his legal representatives—One defendant exempted—Liability of remaining defendants—Civil Procedure Code, Sec. 2(11).

Where in a suit, based on a bond executed by a Mohammedan debtor who died before the institution of the suit, the plaintiff originally impleaded the debtor's widow, father and minor daughter who were in possession of his property as his heirs and legal representatives, but subsequently the plaintiff discharged the daughter from the array of defendants, held, that the plaintiff was only entitled to a decree against the two remaining defendants (i.e., father and widow) for sums proportionate to the shares of the deceased debtor's estate which devolved upon them, and a decree should not be passed for the whole debt against these two legal representatives. RAM CHARAN LAL v. HANIFA KHATUN. 727

———De facto guardian—Powers of—Mother of minor sons—No authority to enter into an agreement of reference to arbitration so as to make award binding upon minors as to their share in immovable property—No power to enter into an arrangement whereby minors' share in property is affected.

Under the Mohammedan Law, the mother, as a de facto guardian of her minor sons, has no authority to enter into an agreement of reference to arbitration on behalf of her minor sons so as to make the award binding upon them as to their share in the immovable property of their father, nor has she power or authority to enter into an arrangement whereby the minors' share in the immovable property of their father would be affected and she cannot be clothed with the necessary authority by calling the transaction a family arrangement. MOHAMMAD EJAZ HUSAIN v. MOHAMMAD IFTIKHAR HUSAIN. 199

———Dower—Relinquishment as consideration for obtaining khula—Right to reclaim dower cannot be exercised after expiry of period of iddat.

Where a Mohammedan woman relinquishes her dower as consideration for obtaining Khula, it is open to her to reclaim her dower at any time during the 'iddat' and she cannot exercise the option after the expiry of the period of 'iddat', when the husband's right to revoke the divorce is automatically put an end to. QASIM HUSAIN BEG v. KANIZ SAKINA. 781

———Dower—Widow in possession of husband's property in lieu of dower debt—Right to receive dower and the right to remain in possession vest in the same person by inheritance or transfer—Whether husband's heir can dispossess widow's heirs of transferees from her or her heirs, without payment of dower debt.

If the right to receive dower and the right to remain in possession of certain property in lieu of such dower are vested in the same person, by inheritance or transfer, he cannot be dispossessed by the heirs of the husband until the dower debt is satisfied. AMIR HASAN KHAN v. MOHD. NAZIR HASAN. 275

———Dower—Widow in possession of husband's property in lieu of dower debt—Whether can sue for her dower and obtain a decree against the assets of her husband.

A Mohammedan widow in possession of her husband's property in lieu of dower, can sue for her dower and obtain a decree against the assets of her husband if her claim is not barred by limitation. AMIR HASAN KHAN v. MOHD. NAZIR HASAN. 275 ———Gift of immovable property to wife—Deed stating possession delivered—Actual vacation by husband not necessary.

A Mohammedan executed in favour of his wife a deed of gift of immovable property which declared that he delivered possession over it to her as absolute owner. The deed was handed over to the donee and remained in her possession, but there was no mutation of names. She did not take actual possession until after her husband's death, but during his life she frequently resided with him on the premises. Held, that the declaration made by the husband in the deed, followed by the handing over of the deed, were amply sufficient to establish a transfer of possession, and the gift was valid. In the case of an intended gift by a husband to his wife, Mohammedan Law does not require an actual vacation by the husband and an actual taking of separate possession by the wife. MOHAMMAD SADIQ ALI KHAN v. FAKR JAHAN BEGAM. 663 ———Gift to infant, daughter—Bona fide intention to give—Valid gift.

A Mohammedan purchased immovable property, taking the conveyance in the name of his five years old daughter. The income was credited to a separate account, but it was in part applied to purposes with which she had no concern. On the occasion of her marriage the deed was placed upon a tray and sent for the inspection of her father-in-law. After the death of the donor it was contended that the purchase was benami. Held, that in the case of a gift by a Mohammedan father to his infant child, no transfer of possession is required, it is only necessary to establish a bona fide intention to give, which was established, and there was therefore a valid gift to the daughter. Though there may be no presumption of advancement in such cases in India, very little evidence of intention would be sufficient to turn the scale. MOHAMMAD SADIQ ALI KHAN v. FAKR JAHAN BEGAM. 663

———Hanafi school—Sunnis—Talak addressed to absent wife by name, and repeated three times—Whether constitutes an immediately effective divorce—Talak pronounced under compulsion or in jest—Whether valid and effective.

Among Sunni Mohammedans governed by the Hanafi law, words of divorce addressed to the wife by name, though she is not present, and repeated three times by the husband, constitute an immediately effective divorce, and the validity and effectiveness of the divorce is not affected by the husband's mental intention that it should not be a genuine divorce. A talak actually pronounced under compulsion or in jest is valid and effective.

Once a divorce is proved, the fact that for fifteen years after the divorce the husband treated the woman as his wife and his children born after the divorce as legitimate, could not undo its effect or confer legitimacy on the children. RASHID AHMAD v. ANIS KHATUN alias ANIS FATIMA. 344 ———Inheritance—Surrender of their rights in exchange for annuities—By widow and daughters of deceased Mohammedan—Their in- terests enure for benefit of other heirs irrespective of their rights inter se.

The widow and daughters of a deceased Mohammedan having surrendered their rights in exchange for annuities which were charged upon the whole estate, their interests in the entire property enured for the benefit of the other heirs irrespective of their rights inter se, and the whole estate, subject to the annuities so charged and the debts, became divisible between the remaining heirs, the sons of the deceased. GHULAM MOHAMMAD v. GHULAM HUSAIN. 245

———Kharch-i-pandan—Wife not living with husband—Father-in-law executes document—Agrees to pay allowance for kharch-i-pandan—Allowance unconditional—Whether agreement binding.

See Family Settlement. 9

———Mohammedan joint family—Meaning of—Whether a legal entity—Rights of members and their heirs—How determined.

A so-called Mohammedan joint family implies nothing more than a group of individuals living and messing in commensality, owning property as tenants in common, carrying on business jointly and making fresh acquisitions. The law does not recognise a Mohammedan joint family as a legal unit having a corporate existence and as such owning property. In the generality of such cases their rights and those of their heirs can be determined with reference to express or implied agreement, relation of principal and agent, partnership, constructive trust or the like. In support of each claim it must be shown that it is justified by some known principle of law. Mere a priori conclusions based on the analogy derived from the law applicable to joint Hindu families, if they cannot be shown to be in conformity with a definite rule applicable to Mohammedans, cannot be accepted. SHUKRULLAH v. ZUHRA BIBI. 1039

———Waqf—Provision for salary and pension of servants—A valid object—Whether mutwalli can reduce amount—Waqif can reserve to himself the power of naming beneficiaries subsequent to the execution of deed.

A provision for the salary and pension of servants is a valid object of waqf.

On general grounds there is nothing to prevent a waqif from reserving to himself the power of naming beneficiaries subsequent to the execution of the deed of waqf, provided charitable intention is clearly indicated in the deed.

If the pay or pension of servants is made a valid object of the waqf, it is not open to any mutwalli to interfere with it. ABDUL WAHAB v. SUGHRA BEGUM. 171

———Waqf—Waqif reserved right to transfer property to pay off previous debts—Subsequent mortgage of part of waqf property—Mortgage valid.

Where the waqif expressly reserved to himself the right to transfer a part of the dedicated property in order to pay off the previous debts, and it was merely in exercise of that power that he subsequently mortgaged a part of the waqf property with a view to satisfy those debts, held, that the mortgage was valid. MOHAMMAD AHMAD SAEED KHAN v. KISHORI LAL. 414

———Waqf by Shia—Waqif reserving to himself as mutwalli a larger sum for collections and mutwalli's dues than for succeeding mutwallis—Whether waqf valid.

Where the waqif, who was an old man when he dedicated the property and had retained only a very small property for himself, assigned to himself as mutwalli a larger sum for collections and mutwalli's dues than he assigned to those who were to come after him and for whom collection would be a matter of no difficulty and little expense; held, that in making this distinction between himself and the succeeding mutwallis, the waqif was not reserving to himself any portion of the profits, but was merely making allowance for additional expense which would be incurred during his life-time in carrying out the purposes of the waqf, and the waqf was therefore valid under the Shia Law. SALONA BIBI (and after her death) ZUBAIDA BIBI v. BU ALI KHAN. 855

———Will—In favour of one of heirs of testator—Invalid—Unless consented to by other heirs after death of testator—Consent of minor heirs to be given after attaining majority—Consent by guardian not valid.

Under the Mohammedan Law a will made in favour of one of the heirs of the testator, is invalid unless consented to by the other heirs after the death of the testator. If the other heirs are at the time of the death of the testator minors, consent must be given by them after their attaining majority. A consent by their guardian on their behalf during their minority is invalid. GHULAM MOHAMMAD v. GHULAM HUSAIN. 245

MORTGAGE—'Clog on equity of redemption'—What amounts to—Mortgagee given right to recover with interest at 2% p.m. money spent on rebuilding house—Whether stipulation enforceable.

A stipulation in the mortgage deed gave the mortgagee a right to build or rebuild the house mortgaged, and in case he did so, the mortgagor would on redemption pay the amount of the money spent over the building or rebuilding with interest at 2 per cent per mensem, held, that the stipulation did not amount to a 'clog on the equity of redemption' under the Indian law and the contract was enforceable in a court of law. SABRATAN v. DHANPAT GADARIYA. 1021

———Part-owner of property (subject to a simple mortgage) sells entire property and vendee enters into possession—Vendee discharges mortgage debt—Suit by another part-owner for possession of his share—Whether vendee liable to be dispossessed unconditionally.

A part-owner of certain property, which was subject to a single mortgage executed by all the owners, purported to transfer the entire property to the defendant, who entered into posesssion and paid off a part of the mortgage debt with a portion of the sale proceeds left with him. About a year before the expiry of the limitation on the mortgage the present suit was instituted by another part owner for possession of his share. The defendant contended that the plaintiff should not be allowed possession without payment of a proportionate amount of the sum the defendant had paid towards the discharge of the mortgage debt. Held, that the defendant could not set up the private payment of the simple mortgage as a shield against the plaintiff's claim for possession inasmuch as the defendant had become entitled to possession of the property as purchaser of the equity of redemption and not by virtue of the payment of the previous simple mortgage. MUFTI MOHAMMAD HASNAIN v. RUSTAM ALI. 1116

———Plaint framed as in a redemption suit—Relief—Possession—Mortgage deed unregistered—Plaintiff's title proved independently—Defendants claimed possession as mortgagees for more than 12 years—Plaintiff entitled to possession on paying amount due to defendants.

The plaint was framed as if it were one in a suit for redemption, and the substantive relief claimed was one for possession. The mortgage deed being unregistered was invalid and no suit for redemption could lie. The defendants had never set up adverse possession and had claimed possession as mortgagees for more than 12 years. The plaintiff succeeded in proving his title independently of the mortgage; held, that the defendants must be deemed to have acquired at least the mortgagee's rights, and the plaintiff was entitled to recover possession on payment of the mortgage money admitted by him in the plaint. HALKA alias DARIYAO v. NANNHON. 101

———Possessory mortgage—Simple mortgage—Covenant—Mortgagor could not redeem first mortgage without payment of sum due under second mortgage—Suit for redemption of possessory mortgage—At a time when suit on second mortgage barred by limitation.

Besides the possessory mortgage of 1868, the mortgagor had executed in 1874 another bond in favour of the same mortgagee and the sum advanced under the bond was charged on the same property as was in possession of the mortgagee under the deed of 1868, and there was a clear stipulation that the mortgagor should not redeem the mortgage of 1868 without payment of the principal and interest due under the bond of 1874. The present suit was brought to redeem the possessory mortgage at a time when if the defendant had to sue on the bond of 1874 it would have been barred by limitation. Held, that limitation can be pleaded as against a plaintiff's claim but no defence can be barred by any Article of the first Schedule of the Limitation Act, and the mortgagor was not entitled to redeem the possessory mortgage without payment of the sum due under the second bond. PARAS RAM CHAUBEY v. SHEO DHAN PANDEY. 595

———Prior and subsequent mortgages—Prior mortgagee takes another mortgage—Part of mortgage consideration left with him to pay up his own mortgage and the subsequent mortgage—Subsequent mortgage not paid up—Suit for sale on subsequent mortgage—Whether prior mortgagee can use his paid up mortgage as a shield.

Where a mortgagee having a prior lien upon the property, takes another's mortgage of the property with a distinct stipulation with his mortgagor to discharge with the mortgage money left in deposit with him his own lien and that of another mortgagee(of a date subsequent to his own), and the mortgagee satisfies his own incumbrance but fails to discharge the other incumbrance, he cannot be allowed in equity to use his paid up mortgage or charge as a shield against the suit of the subsequent mortgagee for sale. BALBHADDAR UPADHYA v. SHEO MANGAL. 413

———Several mortgagors—A co-mortgagor redeems property from the mortgagee—Another co-mortgagor redeems property from the co-mortgagor who has already redeemed it—Whether right of subrogation arises—Transfer of Property Act, Section 92 (as amended in 1929).

One of several co-mortgagors having redeemed the mortgaged property, the appellants, who had purchased the share of one of the co-mortgagors, redeemed the property from the co-mortgagor who had already redeemed it on payment of the mortgage money. The plaintiffs, who were the other co-mortgagors, then brought a suit to recover possession of their shares without paying their proportionate shares of the mortgage debt. Held:

Per SULAIMAN, C. J.—That although the appellants had no right to redeem more than their own shares against the will of the mortgagee, nevertheless they were entitled to redeem the whole property with the mortgagee's consent. Having redeemed the whole property with the mortgagee's consent they cannot be dispossessed unless the plaintiffs pay their proportionate shares of the mortgage debt. As defendants in possession they can set up their payment as a shield. At the very least they are licensees of the mortgagee and not mere trespassers.

Per MUKERJI, J.—That the appellants were only entitled to redeem their own shares and had no right to redeem the shares of the plaintiffs also. When they paid the mortgage debt due upon the plaintiffs' shares they did so as volunteers, and have no right to retain the property or to be reimbursed. For these reasons the appellants are nothing but trespassers and are bound to hand over the property to the plaintiffs without receiving any payment.

Per KING, J. (on reference)—That the principle of Section 95 Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882) was applicable to cases where a co-mortgagor redeems the whole property, with the mortgagee's consent, although he might have compelled the mortgagee to permit redemption of his own share only, and the appellants are therefore in possession of the plaintiffs' shares as mortgagees and not as trespassers, and the plaintiffs cannot recover possession without paying their proportionate shares of the mortgage debt. JAUHARI v. TUNDAY. 986

———Usufructuary—"If possession of mortgagees interfered with, mortgagees entitled to sue for money due by sale of property"—Possession over some properties not given—Whether mortgagees entitled to institute suit for sale.

A usufructuary mortgage deed provided as follows:—"If the possession of the mortgagees be interfered with in any way, the mortgagees shall have power to bring a claim for delivery of possession, damages and costs, or to realise the entire amount of the mortgage due under the mortgage with interest from my person, mortgaged property and other movable and immovable properties". Out of the properties mortgaged the mortgagees were not put in possession over some and they sued to recover the mortgage money with interest by sale of the mortgaged property. Held, that the clause pre-supposes the possession of the mortgagees and was inapplicable to the present suit in which the only relief the mortgagees can have is for possession and mesne profits. GAURI SINGH v. BECHU SINGH. 1092

MUNICIPALITIES ACT (Local Act II of 1916), Sec. 298, List I, Group H, Cl. (e)—Bye-law under—Prohibiting public prostitutes from residing within specified areas and streets.

A minor girl, whose mother and other relations were prostitutes, and who lived in the city with her mother, was served with a notice by the municipality forbidding her to carry on her occupation as prostitute in her house, in pursuance of a bye-law framed under Sec. 298 of the Municipalities Act prohibiting prostitutes from residing within specified areas and streets. It was found that the girl carried on the occupation of singing and dancing and lived for about two months as a concubine of a certain man and there was nothing to show that their intimacy was not of an exclusive character. Held, that the plaintiff was not a public prostitute and the bye-law could not apply to her case. MUNICIPAL BOARD, ETAH through THE CHAIRMAN v. ASGHARI JAN alias LAPPO (minor) THROUGH BISMILLA. 117

———Sec. 298H(e)—Bye-law under—Prohibits prostitutes from residing within the municipal limits except certain streets—Whether bye-law ultra vires.

Where a municipality frames a bye-law under Sec. 298H(e) of the U. P. Municipalities Act prohibiting public prostitutes from residing 'within the municipal limits' except certain streets, held, that having regard to the definition of 'municipality' in Sec. 2(9) of the Act, the municipality is itself an area the limits of which are defined and specified, and the bye-laws themselves show what the municipal limits are, and therefore the mention of such limits with the exception of certain parts of it, does amount to specifying a particular area within the meaning of Sec. 298H(e), and the bye-law is not ultra vires.

Where a municipality framed a bye-law prohibiting public prostitutes from residing 'within the municipal limits' except certain streets, but the exception permitted those who owned houses within the area other than the streets excepted, to continue to reside in such houses, held, that reading the whole bye-law together with the exception in it, there was no absolute prohibition against prostitutes residing within the specified area, and the bye-law was ultra vires. NAZIRAN v. KING-EMPEROR THROUGH MUNICIPAL BOARD, AGRA. 399

———Sec. 298, List I, Group H, Cl. (e)—Bye-law under—Prohibiting prostitutes from residing within specified areas and streets—But permitting those who owned and resided in houses in March 1925 to continue to live—Whether bye-law ultra vires.

The object of the Legislature in enacting Sec. 298, List I, Group H, Cl. (e) of the U. P. Municipalities Act is that the prohibition must be general and of universal application within a specified street or area, and must not hit particular prostitutes, while leaving other prostitutes free to ply their trade.

Where a municipality framed a bye-law prohibiting public prostitutes from residing within specified areas and streets but permitted those who owned and resided in houses in March 1925 to continue to live there as before, held, that such a bye-law was not in accordance with the provisions of Sec. 298 because it did not amount to a prohibition of the residence of public prostitutes but merely to a prohibition against a particular class of prostitutes. CHANCHAL v. KING-EMPEROR THROUGH THE SECRETARY, MUNICIPAL BOARD, ALIGARH. 28

———Sec. 298, List I, Group H, Cl. (e)—Interpretation—To be one which encroaches less on rights of citizens—Whether Board has power to make bye-law prohibiting prostitutes from residing in the whole of the municipal area with the exception of a specified part.

The interpretation which must be placed on Sec. 298, List I, Group H, Cl. (e) of the U. P. Municipalities Act is the one which is not only the more reasonable one but also the one that encroaches less on the rights of individual citizens, viz., that a Municipal Board has power to make a bye-law prohibiting prostitutes from residing in a specified street or area, but not to make a bye-law prohibiting them from residing in the whole of the municipal area with the exception of a certain specified part. MUHAMMADI v. KING-EMPEROR THROUGH MUNICIPAL BOARD, AGRA. 15

———Sec. 307—Recurring fine—Cannot be imposed on first conviction.

Under Sec. 307 of the Municipalities Act (II of 1916) a recurring fine cannot be imposed at the time of the first conviction but on the second conviction when it is proved that the offender has persisted in the offence for which he was first convicted. HURMAT v. KING-EMPEROR. 154

———Secs. 307, 318 and 321(1)—Prosecution under Sec. 307—Accused's failure to comply with notices ordering him to remove certain construction—Remedy under Sec. 318 not availed of—Whether trying magistrate precluded from questioning legality or validity of notices.

The accused was prosecuted under Sec. 307 of the Municipalities Act of 1916 for failure to comply with two notices issued by the Municipal Board under Secs. 186 and 211 ordering him to remove a certain construction which was encroaching upon a public drain, and it was proved that the notices had been served and not complied with. The accused maintained that he had not made any encroachment on the public drain and therefore the Municipal Board had no jurisdiction to issue the notices. Held, that Sec. 318 gave to the accused a remedy by way of appeal to the District Magistrate to challenge the legality or validity of the notices under Secs. 186 and 211 of the Act and as he failed to avail himself of that remedy, the criminal court was, under Sec. 321, precluded from questioning the legality or validity of the notices.

There is nothing in the language of Sec. 307 of the Municipalities Act of 1916 which indicates that it is the duty of the court to satisfy itself that the notice was "lawfully" issued by the Municipal Board. HAR PRASAD v. KING-EMPEROR. 579

———Sec. 318 and Civil Procedure Code, Sec. 115—Order of District Magistrate—Passed in exercise of appellate jurisdiction conferred by

Sec. 318—Whether revision lies to High Court.

The Court of the District Magistrate while deciding an appeal under Sec. 318 of the Municipalities Act is not subordinate to the High Court and accordingly no revision lies to the High Court. BISHAMBHAR NATH v. ACHAL SINGH. 816

———Sec. 319—Reference by District Magistrate—High Court's duty—Merely to express opinion on a point of law formulated by the District Magistrate and not to investigate facts.

Under Sec. 319 of the Municipalities Act (II of 1916) all that the High Court is required to do is to see a statement of facts made by the District Magistrate himself and to express its opinion on a point of law arising out of the statement. This point of law should also be formulated by the District Magistrate. It is no part of the duty of the High Court to investigate the facts. SHEIKH MOHAMMAD v. SAGAR MAL. 470

MUSSALMAN WAQF ACT (XLII of 1923), Secs. 10 and 3—Failure to comply with Sec. 3—Necessary to decide whether person in default is 'mutawalli' of a 'waqf'—Sec. 10 applicable if position as 'mutawalli' established by evidence.

Before a person described as 'mutawalli' can be fined for failure to comply with the provisions of Sec. 3, Mussalman Waqf Act, it is necessary for the District Judge to decide whether the person who is alleged to be in default is or is not the 'mutawalli' of a waqf within the meaning of Sec. 2(e) of the Act. All that is needed to bring home an offence under Sec. 10 read with Sec. 3 to a defaulting 'mutawalli' is to establish by evidence that he is a 'mutawalli' in respect of property which is waqf within the meaning of Act XLII of 1923. Whether the character of the property is 'waqf' and his own position as 'mutawalli' are admitted or are established by evidence, if denied, Sec. 10 is equally applicable, if a 'mutawalli' has failed to comply with Sec. 3. AFZAL HUSAIN v. MOHAMMAD AHSAN. 266

———Secs. 10, 3 and 5—'Mutawalli' furnishes particulars under Sec. 3—Deemed to have admitted 'waqf'—Failure to file statement of account under Sec. 5—Liable to be punished under Sec. 10—District Judge's jurisdiction to impose fine.

Where a "Mutawalli" complies with the provisions of Sec. 3 Mussalman Waqf Act (XLII of 1923), no question as to whether he desires the waqf or admits it can arise, because by his conduct in furnishing particulars of the waqf he must be deemed to have admitted the 'waqf' and his own position as a 'mutawalli', and having furnished particulars required by Sec. 3, he is also under an obligation to file a statement of account in terms of Sec. 5, and if omits to do so, he can be punished under Sec. 10.

The whole scheme of Act XLII of 1923 suggests that the District Judge (and not the criminal court) is the proper authority to fine a 'mutawalli', who is in default in respect of certain duties enjoined by the Act, under Sec. 10. NASARULLAH v. WAJID ALI. 262

NEGOTIABLE INSTRUMENTS ACT (XXVI of 1881) and Arbitration Act, Sec. 19—C. I. F. Contract—Bank endorses bills of exchange in favour of sellers—Suit based on accepted bills—When can be stayed—Legal position after acceptance. DHIRAJ LAL RAM PRASHAD v. JACOB BEHRENS & SONS. 1055

N. W. TENANCY ACT (XII of 1881), Sec. 9—Grove land—Mortgage by sub-tenant—Not illegal. ARJUN SINGH v. MAHESHA NAND. 474

OATHS ACT (X of 1873), Sec. 9—Application for an oath—To be without any condition.

An application for an oath under the Oaths Act must be an application without any condition. It is not open to a party to ask the court to adjudicate, and if the court adjudicates against them to then ask the court to start a separate proceeding under the Oaths Act.

Where plaintiff's application stated that "if the court does not hold the evidence to be sufficient, defendant should swear by the Ganges water in hand before the court and say "I may be ruined if I speak lie or falsely swear by the Ganges", held, that the offer did not conform to Sec. 9 of the Oaths Act. CHAND REKHA v. JANKI PRASAD. 481

OUDH ESTATES ACT of 1862, Sec. 19—Applicability of—To wills made after inclusion of talukdar's name in the prescribed lists made up for approval, but before such approval.

Sec. 19 of the Oudh Estates Act of 1862 applied to wills made after the passing of the Act by talukdars of the statutory class prescribed by Sec. 10, and it applied to a will, at the time of making of which the talukdar's name was included in the lists made up under

Sec. 8 for the purpose of subsequent approval and publication, so that, if unattested as required by Sec. 50 of the Succession Act, 1865, it was invalid as a will. Dulahin Jadunath Kuar v. Bisheshar Bakhsh Singh. 632

———(I of 1869), Sec. 29—Widow of Mohammedan taluqdar—Power to adopt—Forfeited upon re-marriage.

The widow of a Mohammedan taluqdar has, under the terms of Sec. 29 of the Oudh Estates Act (I of 1869), no power to adopt a son after her re-marriage. Abdul Halim Khan v. Saadat Ali Khan. 593 ———Sec. 32A—Alleged accretions to taluqa—Absence of statutory declaration.

Apart from the provisions of Sec. 32A of the Oudh Estates Act of 1869 as amended in 1910 there cannot be incorporation of acquisitions in the taluqdari estate. Mohammad Sadiq Ali Khan v. Fakr Jahan Begam. 663

OUDH TALUQDARI ESTATE—Non-talukdari properties—Presumption as to custom of descent—Rebuttal of presumption.

Where a family custom which governs the succession to the taluqdari estate is of comparatively recent origin, two well-established instances of division of non-taluqdari property according to Mohammedan Law are sufficient to rebut the presumption that the family custom of primogenitary succession being established in respect of the taluqdari property, it must be held to govern also what is non-taluqdari. Mohammad Sadiq Ali Khan v. Fakr Jahan Begam. 663

PARTITION—Co-sharers—Mortgage by one, of his undivided share—Subsequent partition between—Mortgage applies only to property allotted to mortgagor. Mohammad Afzal Khan v. Abdul Rahman. 909

PARTITION ACT (IV of 1893), Sec. 4—"Transferred"—Meaning of—"Undivided family"—Owns dwelling house—Share of one member sold in execution of a decree against him—Whether "transferred" to auction-purchaser.

Where the undivided share of one of the members of an undivided family, in a dwelling house belonging to the family, is sold in execution of a decree against him, it is 'transferred' to the auction-purchaser within the meaning of Sec. 4 of the Partition Act. The word 'transfer' in Sec. 4 of the Partition Act is used in its ordinary sense, namely, change of ownership from one to another; and the words "transfer of property," as used in Sec. 5 of the Transfer of Property Act, cannot be imported in Sec. 4 of the Partition Act. Sohni v. Raj Kumar Singh Jain. 809

PENAL CODE (XXVII of 1870), Sec. 215—Offence under—Necessary to prove—That property lost by commission of an offence—And accused was screening offender.

Where the accused merely undertook to endeavour to trace out and restore the lost property on payment of some remuneration, he could not be convicted of an offence under Sec. 215 Penal Code, unless over and above that the prosecution proved that the property had been lost by the commission of an offence and that the accused was endeavouring to screen the offender from justice and was not using all means in his power to cause the offender to be apprehended and convicted of the offence. Ram Naresh Rai v. King-Emperor. 103 ———Section 225B—"Lawful apprehension"—Meaning of—Warrant of arrest defective—No "lawful apprehension".

A warrant was issued by the court for arrest of a judgment-debtor in the name of the central nazir of Banda, and his office sent it to the registration clerk at Karwi (a sub-division in Banda Judgeship) without having the nazir's endorsement on it, and the clerk directed his peons to make the arrest, and after he had been arrested the judgment-debtor assaulted the peons and entered his house. He was prosecuted and convicted under Sec. 225B I. P. C.; held, that there was no proper delegation of authority which empowered the clerk to get the warrant executed by the peons under him, and consequently there was no 'lawful apprehension' within the meaning of Sec. 225B and the conviction could not be upheld. Jagannath v. King-Emperor. 179 ———Section 279 and Motor Vehicles Act, Section 16—Accused's negligence and failure to observe the rule of the road—Collision—Conviction under Section 279 I. P. C.—When conviction under special Act more appropriate.

Where the offence falls strictly within the provisions of a section of a special Act and does not go beyond it, it would be more appropriate to prosecute the offender and convict him under that special Act, rather than fall back upon a more general law which prescribes a heavier penalty. In such a case it may be assumed that the legislature in prescribing the smaller penalty has considered recourse to the special law as the proper course.

Where the fault of the accused did not lie merely in not observing the rule of the road by driving the lorry on the right side of it but he was negligent in continuing to drive on the wrong side of the road in spite of due warning and in going fast, held, that when the ingredient of negligence entered into the offence, the conviction under Section 279 I. P. C. was not only proper but more appropriate. Rule 27 of the Motor Vehicles Act Rules merely lays down the rule of the road, and a breach of it need not necessarily involve rashness or negligence. Jiwa Ram v. King-Emperor through Lt.-Col. Pengelley. 519 ———Section 332, and Criminal Procedure Code, Section 103—Search of applicant's house—Police constables prevented applicants from entering into house at the time of search—Scuffle—Constables hurt—Whether Section 332 applicable.

On receiving information that the applicants were in possession of illicit liquor, the Excise Inspector with the assistance of the police, searched the house of the applicants. Two constables who had been posted near the house prevented the applicants from entering into the house saying that they should enter it after the search was over. On a scuffle which ensued there was an exchange of blows between the applicants and the constables, with the result that the applicants and the constables received injuries. The applicants were subsequently convicted under Section 332 I. P. C. Held, that the constables acted not in the discharge of their duty, which was to allow the applicants to enter into the house and be present at the time of the search, but in contravention of the mandatory provisions of Section 103 Cr. P. C., and were not justified in offering physical resistance when the applicants attempted to go into their house and therefore Section 332 I. P. C. did not apply. Bhikugir v. King-Emperor. 530 ———Section 336—Conviction under—Throwing bricks into another's house from enmity—"Any act"—Meaning of.

Where it was found that the accused had thrown bricks into the house of the complainant from enmity, held, that the act was one which would endanger the personal safety of the complainant when he was inside the house and of any other person who might be inside, and the accused committed an offence under Sec. 336 I. P. C. The accused could also be convicted of the offence of assault under Sec. 351 Penal Code, as the throwing of brickbats by the accused would be a gesture which would cause the complainant to apprehend that criminal force was about to be used against him. Mahadeo Pandey v. King-Emperor through Joganand Pande. 224

———Section 351—Conviction under—Throwing bricks into another's house from enmity. Mahadeo Pandey v. King-Emperor. 224

———Section 351—Internal examination of a lady—If not voluntarily submitted to by her—Amounts to assault. Padarath Tiwari v. Dulhin Tapesha Kueri. 221

———Section 353—Warrant of arrest illegal—Whether officer executing warrant acting in discharge of duty as public servant.

Where the warrant issued was illegal, the officer executing that warrant could not be considered to be acting in the discharge of his duty as public servant, and the conviction of the accused under Sec. 353 I. P. C. could not be upheld. Jagannath v. King-Emperor. 179 ———Section 366—Offence under—When made out—Kidnapping or abduction from lawful guardianship—Necessary ingredient.

In order to prove an offence under Sec. 366 Penal Code, it is necessary to show that the girl or woman had been kidnapped or abducted from lawful guardianship.

A man who commits sexual intercourse with a girl in a field near her own home without having any intention of taking her away with him is not guilty of an offence under Sec. 366 Penal Code; but a man who has intercourse with a minor girl even with her consent is guilty of the offence of rape. King-Emperor v. Abdul alias Abdul Karim and Abdul Hasan. 776

———Section 366—'Seduced to illicit intercourse'—Meaning of—Accused carrying on intrigue with a girl under sixteen (in the custody of her guardian)—He goes away with her—With intention of continuing illicit intercourse—Whether offence under Sec. 366 made out.

The phrase 'seduced to illicit intercourse' in Sec. 366 I. P. C. implies two distinct stages in the acts of the accused, the seduction and the illicit intercourse. These must be two distinct acts, though they may follow in immediate sequence. The words or actions of the accused which induced the girl to submit to the illicit intercourse must precede the actual act.

PENAL CODE (XXVII of 1870)—Sec. 395

The term 'seduction' can only properly be held applicable to the first act of illicit intercourse, unless there be proof of a return to chastity on the part of the girl meanwhile, or unless possibly there is an intention on the accused's part that the girl should be seduced by some different man.

The act of seduction alleged must be subsequent to the kidnapping in order to make Sec. 366 Penal Code applicable.

Section 366 Penal Code cannot apply to a case where the accused is said to have been carrying on an intrigue with a girl under 16 while she is in the custody of her lawful guardian, and goes away with her because obstacles are thrown in the way of that intrigue, even though when he so goes away with her it is with the intention of carrying on that intrigue or in other words, with the intention of continuing illicit intercourse. KING-EMPEROR v BAIJNATH. 483

————Secs. 395 and 380—Dacoity—No use of force or show of force as inmates did not resist dacoits—Whether offence committed.

The accused were charged originally under Section 395 I. P. C. but the Sessions Judge convicted them of an offence under Section 380 I. P. C. as he was of opinion that probably the inmates did not resist the dacoity seeing their large number and so peacefully and calmly without using any force or show of force the dacoits acquired the property, held, that the view taken by the Sessions Judge was entirely wrong. According to his view any dacoity in which no resistance is offered and no violence required will cease to be a dacoity and should be treated as a theft. RAM CHAND v. KING-EMPEROR. 1078

————Sec. 405—Criminal breach of trust—Failure to produce an electric meter on a particular date—Whether amounts to—Evidence of dishonesty necessary.

A person on whose premises a meter is installed by the electric company is responsible for it, and if at any time he is unable to produce the meter, the price of it could be deducted from his deposit with the company; but the mere failure to produce the meter on any particular date does not of itself constitute criminal breach of trust under Sec. 405 Penal Code. The words of Section 405 do not embrace the case of a man who has taken an article on hire and fails to produce it. There must be some evidence that he acted dishonestly. MANNI LAL v. KING-EMPEROR. 213

————Sec. 499, Exception 9—Complainant excommunicated by panchayat—Punches informed members of brotherhood—Good faith to be presumed—No direct evidence of malice—Communication privileged.

A communication by the punches to the members of the community, incorporating the resolution of the panchayat excommunicating the complainant (who absented himself when summoned to answer a charge), must be presumed to have been made in good faith, and in the absence of direct evidence of malice, the communication must be deemed to be privileged, even though the resolution was not worded in an absolutely regular and formal manner. DASAI v. KING-EMPEROR. 75

PRE-EMPTION—Customary right of—Suit for pre-emption—Crucial date—Date of decree—Vendee's acquisition by gift of a share in village pending suit—Whether claim defeated—Re-sale by stranger purchaser after suit—Effect of—Transfer of Property Act, Sec. 52.

In a suit for enforcement of a customary right of pre-emption, not governed by Mohammedan Law or by the Agra Pre-emption Act, the right of a co-sharer seeking pre-emption must be judged on the facts existing on the date when the decree is passed. Therefore, the vendee's acquisition by gift of a share in the village pending suit defeated the claim of the plaintiff-co-sharer to pre-emption. The doctrine of lis pendens as embodied in Section 52 of the Transfer of Property Act applies only to dealings with property actually in litigation. A re-sale by the stranger purchaser after suit will not defeat the pre-emptor. HANS NATH v. RAGHO PRASAD SINGH. 190

————In Kumaun—Not governed by Pre-emption Act but custom—Record does not give preference to relatives within third degree inter se.

Where, in a suit for pre-emption in Kumaun, to which the Pre-emption Act did not apply, the plaintiffs were step-brothers of the vendor, and the vendees were descended from the same grand-father as the vendor, and according to the custom prevailing in Kumaun "a relative of the vendor within the third degree has a right of pre-emption against any purchaser who is an unrelated or a more distantly related co-sharer", held, that the record of custom did not mean that if both the plaintiff-pre-emptor and the vendee were within the third degree, the plaintiff would have preference if he was a nearer relation; and therefore the plaintiffs were not entitled to pre-empt. BHIM SHAH v. UDE RAM SHAH. 108

———Plaintiff's property included in sale deed —Claim for possession as owner joined with alternative claim for pre-emption—Whether pre-emptor to pay proportionate amount of sale consideration for the rest of property.

Where plaintiff's property has been included in the sale deed, he can combine a claim for recovery of possession and a claim for pre-emption in one and the same suit and base his claim on alternative grounds.

Obiter dicta—Where plaintiff's property has been intentionally included either to defraud him or to embarrass him, the consideration paid may be treated as the consideration for the property which in reality belonged to the vendor, but where the vendee has acted in good faith, it may well be argued that the total consideration paid by him must be paid by the pre-emptor even though a part of his own property was included. HANKAR KUNWARI v. ISHWAR DAYAL SINGH alias BABBAN SINGH. 313

PRE-EMPTION ACT (Local Act XI of 1922), Sec. 4(10)—Vendor sells property not in his possession—Vendee recovers property from third party—Whether transaction amounts to sale and is pre-emptible.

Where a person, who is not in possession of his property and is unable to raise money to sue for its recovery, sells the same to the defendant for cash consideration, and the defendant recovers the property from the third party by a suit, the transaction falls within the definition of 'sale' under Sec. 54 of the T. P. Act and such sale is pre-emptible on payment of all that the vendee has had to pay. BADRI PRASAD MISIR v. BIJAI NAND TEWARI. 851

———Sec. 5—Wajib-ul-arz—Language of—"No particular rule based on custom, but there is one according to custom of country and Mohammedan Law"—Whether Sec. 5 (a) complied with.

Where the extract from the wajib-ul-arz prepared before the commencement of the Pre-emption Act (XI of 1922) ran as follows:—"Custom of Pre-emption. There is no particular rule of (based on) custom in this village, but there is one according to the custom of the country and the Mohammedan Law", held, that this statement in the wajib-ul-arz contains a declaration that there is a custom of pre-emption, though the entry proceeds to limit its significance by saying that pre-emption can be had only according to the custom of the country and the Mohammedan Law, and Sec. 5 (a) of the Pre-emption Act has been complied with. ABDUL RAB v. AKBAR HUSAIN. 561

———Secs. 9 and 20—Sale of Sir land—Vendor becomes ex-proprietary tenant—Right of pre-emption accrues in favour of plaintiffs—Before institution of suit for pre-emption vendee sells property back to vendor—Whether Sec. 9 bars suit for pre-emption.

On a sale of Sir lands, the vendor became an ex-proprietary tenant, and a right of pre-emption under Sec. 11 of the Pre-emption Act accrued in favour of the plaintiffs against the vendee. Before the institution of a suit for pre-emption the vendee sold the property back to the vendor. The suit for pre-emption was instituted within one year of the original sale. Held, (1) that Sec. 9 did not apply, as it did not say that if property ultimately passed on to an ex-proprietary tenant the right of pre-emption previously acquired was automatically extinguished; (2) that Sec. 20 applied, and the suit was maintainable against the subsequent transferee who, being an ex-proprietary tenant, had no right of pre-emption equal or superior to that of the plaintiffs. MAHABIR PERSHAD v. CHITTOO LAL. 397

———Sec. 12(2)—Right of pre-emption—Confined to proprietors in same village—Not extended to shares sold in another village—Even though both villages are in the same mahal.

Sec. 12(2) of the Pre-emption Act contemplates that the right of pre-emption should not be exercised outside the village in which the pre-emptor is a co-sharer, that is to say, there would be no right of pre-emption in favour of a proprietor of one village in respect of a share sold in another village, even though both the villages happen to be within the same mahal. The policy of the legislature appears to be that the right of pre-emption should be confined to proprietors in the same village and not extended to shares sold in other villages. It should make no difference whether one mahal consisted of two or more complete villages or only portions of two or more villages. BASDEO NARAIN SINGH v. BIRJU SINGH. 30

———Sec. 17—Sale—Price—Included mortgage money, which was in fact due—Whether value of mortgage debt limited to the market value of property—Striking disparity between ostensible price and market value—Whether burden of proving actual price shifted on vendee.

PRE-EMPTION ACT (Local Act XI of 1922)—Sec. 19

Per NIAMATULLAH, J.—Where the mortgage money included in the price was in fact due and both the vendor and the vendee agreed that that amount be made part of the consideration, (there being no dispute as to the remainder of the consideration which was paid in cash) the ostensible price cannot be considered to be otherwise than the actual price merely because it greatly exceeds what the property can fetch in the open market.

Per SULAIMAN, J.—Where the mortgage money included in the price was in fact due (i.e., the existence of the amount due on an arithmetical calculation of the principal and interest was not disputed), the court is not bound to find that the full amount due under the mortgage was a real part of the sale consideration.

Per NIAMATULLAH, J.—It will be a highly objectionable mode of dealing with the evidence if we seize on only the disparity between the ostensible price and the market value, ignoring other circumstances simultaneously appearing and explaining the disparity, and to reserve consideration of them for the next step in the case, namely, to find whether the vendee has succeeded in discharging the onus laid on him by proof of the market price. The evidence should be taken as a whole, and if it does not suffice to prove, prima facie, that the ostensible price is not the actual price, the issue is answered against the pre-emptor. MISRI LAL v. DEBI CHARAN. 321

———Sec. 19—Pre-emptor—Entitled to maintain suit—If status of co-sharer not lost till passing of first court decree—Not necessary to establish that his status could not have been challenged.

If the plaintiff-pre-emptor has the status of a co-sharer up to the time the first court passes its decree, he would be entitled to maintain the suit. It is not necessary for him to establish further that no suit to challenge his interest as a co-sharer could have been brought. Where such a suit is brought against him and decreed before the first court passes the decree in the pre-emption suit, the position would of course be different. RAM RAJ PANDEY v. HAR PRASAD. 109

———Secs. 19, 11, 12 and 4(1)—Suit for pre-emption against a stranger—By a co-sharer —Of less than 12 months' standing—Whether maintainable.

A person, who has purchased a share in a village can maintain a suit for pre-emption against a stranger who has subsequently purchased another share, although twelve months from the date of the registration of the plaintiff's deed of purchase have not expired and he himself is still liable to be pre-empted by other co-sharers. NARSINGH NARAIN v. RAM CHANDER PANDEY. 719

———Sec. 20—'Indefeasible'—Deeds of exchange from individual members of joint Hindu family—Transferee does not acquire indefeasible title—Unless deeds are for 'benefit of the estate'.

Where the vendee, who was a stranger at first, obtained, during the pendency of a co-sharer's suit for pre-emption, deeds of exchange from individual members of a joint Hindu family, and the exchanges were not for the benefit of the estate, held, that the vendee had not acquired an indefeasible interest in the property taken in exchange and therefore could not defeat the pre-emptor. BALZOR SINGH v. RAGHUNANDAN SINGH. 33

———Sec. 22—Property jointly purchased by two defendants—Right of pre-emption against one only—Pre-emption suit—Defendants cannot go behind sale-deed and set up a secret arrangement defining their shares—Suit to be decreed as against both.

Where property is jointly purchased by two persons against one of whom only there is a right of pre-emption and the sale deed does not specify their shares, they cannot go behind the sale deed and set up a secret arrangement defining their shares, and the right of pre-emption can be claimed as against both. SAGHIR FATMA BIBI v. BRIJ RAJ SINGH. 757

PROBATE AND ADMINISTRATION ACT (V of 1881), Secs. 4 and 90 (=Succession Act (XXXIX of 1925), Secs. 211 (1) and 307)—Executor—Not clothed with probate—Estate vests from date of testator's death—Vesting under Sec. 4 or power of disposal under Sec. 90—Not dependent upon grant of probate.

In case of Hindu wills to which the Hindu Wills Act does not apply, the estate vests in the executor (who accepts office) from the date of the testator's death, even though probate has not been obtained, and he is competent to deal with the testator's property. KADIYALA VENKATA SUBAMMA v. KATREDDI RAMAYYA. 293

PROFESSIONAL MISCONDUCT

See Legal Practitioner.

PROSTITUTE

See Public prostitute.

PROVINCIAL INSOLVENCY ACT (V of 1920), Sec. 5 and Civil Procedure Code, Sec. 144—Payment made under an order of insolvency court—Order set aside on appeal—Whether insolvency court has jurisdiction to order refund.

The insolvency court ordered the receiver after annulling the adjudication to distribute the assets of the debtor among the scheduled creditors. Before the High Court set aside this order as ultra vires, the receiver had made payments in pursuance of the order. Held, that Sec. 144 C. P. C. applied and the insolvency court had jurisdiction to order that the person who had received payment should be called upon to refund the amount to the receiver. PANNA LAL SHAM LAL (THROUGH PANNA LAL) v. ABDULLAH USMAN. 1095

———Sec. 28—Liability arising out of a covenant in a sale deed of a house in favour of insolvent—Vendee undertook to remove certain constructions at vendor's pleasure—Whether receiver bound—Specific Relief Act, Sec. 27(b)—Transfer of Property Act, Sec. 11.

Plaintiff-respondent owned two houses with a lane running between them. The house to the south was sold by him to F. The sale deed contained a covenant that, if and when, the vendor wanted the vendee to remove the chhatta—a two-storeyed building constructed over the lane—which opened into the vendee's house, it would be removed by the vendee at his own cost. Further, it was agreed that each of the parties would be entitled to open sky-lights or clear-storey windows in their respective walls. After the sale, F was declared insolvent and the house was purchased by the defendants from the receiver. The plaintiff, therefore, instituted the present suit for compelling the defendants to remove the chhatta built over the lane. Held, (1) that the house vested in the receiver with the liability arising out of the covenant in the sale deed to remove the chhatta at the vendor's pleasure.

(2) that the covenant could be enforced against the receiver under Sec. 27(b) of the Specific Relief Act.

(3) that, as the chhatta rested partly on the plaintiff's wall, it imposed a burden on that wall, and unless the chhatta was removed the sky-lights, etc., could not be opened, and it was therefore for the beneficial enjoyment of the plaintiff's property that the defendants should be compelled to enjoy their property in a particular manner, viz., that agreed upon, and the case was covered by the proviso to Sec. 11, Transfer of Property Act. NAND GOPAL DAS v. BATUK PRASAD GUPTA. 36

———Sec. 28, and Tenancy Act (III of 1926), Sec. 264—Whether insolvency law applicable to suits and proceedings under the Tenancy Act.

Before the coming into force of the Tenancy Act of 1926 the law was that provisions of the insolvency law did not apply to proceedings in the revenue court. But that portion of Sec. 193 of the old Tenancy Act (II of 1901) which had the effect of making the insolvency law inapplicable to cases under the Tenancy Act has been deleted from the corresponding Sec. 264 of the new Act (III of 1926), and the bar has been automatically removed. The Provincial Insolvency Act must now be held to be applicable to suits and proceedings under the Tenancy Act. THE OFFICIAL RECEIVER OF MORADABAD v. MURTAZA ALI. 402

———Sec. 28(2)—"Commence any suit or other legal proceeding"—Meaning of—Appeal—Relief—Declaratory decree that certain property was not attachable be set aside—Whether Sec. 28 barred appeal.

The sons of a judgment-debtor sued for and obtained a declaration that certain property was not saleable or attachable under a decree against their father. Prior to the passing of the decree the father was adjudged an insolvent. The decree-holder appealed to the High Court (and although he did not in the first instance implead the official receiver, he was given time to do so when the appeal came on for hearing) without obtaining permission of the insolvency court; held, that all that the appellant asks is that the declaratory decree should be set aside, so that the property be attachable under the decree of the appellant, and that would not be a remedy against the property of the insolvent within the meaning of Sec. 28 and that section did not bar the present appeal. HARNAM CHANDAR v. RUP CHAND. 361

———Sec. 28(2)—Hindu father declared insolvent—Untainted debts—Whether receiver can dispossess sons from property available for payment of father's debts—Rights of receiver.

Where property in the hands of Hindu sons can be made available for payment of the father's debts, the receiver of the father is entitled to attach and sell the property, but he has no right to dispossess the son of the insolvent from the property in their possession. In the reported cases, sometime the word 'seize' has been used and sometime the word 'attach' but they have been indifferently used to express the same idea. Sita Ram v. Receiver of the Estate of Ram Prasad, Insolvent. 285

———Secs. 28(2) and 31—Judgment-debtor adjudicated insolvent—No protection from arrest in execution of decree—Until protection order made under Sec. 31.

Sec. 28 of the Provincial Insolvency Act (V of 1920) does not operate as any protection from arrest of a judgment-debtor who has been adjudicated an insolvent.

Under Sec. 31 of the Provincial Insolvency Act of 1920 a discretion is granted to the court either to make an order for protection of the insolvent from arrest for all debts or make a limited order or not to make a protection order at all; and it is no longer a matter of right for a judgment-debtor to apply in insolvency and be ipso facto absolved from liability to arrest.

The words "or person" were deliberately taken out of the present Sec. 28 by the legislature because provision was made in Sec. 31 for dealing with the question as to how far insolvency proceedings bar the arrest of a judgment-debtor. Ali Husain v. Lachhmi Narain Mahajan. 168

———Secs. 31, 75 and 5(2)—Insolvency court refusing protection as regards all debts due from insolvent—Appeal—Only three creditors who contested application for protection in the first court impleaded—Protection granted —Other creditors entitled to execute decrees against insolvent.

The insolvency court having refused protection as regards all the debts due from the insolvent, he appealed to the District Judge impleading only the three creditors who had appeared in the first court to contest the insolvent's application for protection and obtained a protection order from the District Judge. Subsequently, the appellant, who was not one of the three creditors, took out execution of his decree praying for the insolvent's arrest. Held, that the order of the insolvency court of appeal though general in its terms, must be limited to the debts due to the three creditors, who had been impleaded and as against whom the order of the first court was set aside, but as regards the other creditors, including the appellant, the order of the first court became final, and the appellant was therefore entitled to execute his decree against the insolvent. Jitmal Ram Gopal through Ram Gopal v. Nathu Ram. 407 ———Sec. 53—"Valuable consideration"—Meaning of—Inadequate consideration—When sale can be set aside.

A consideration would be valuable if it is not so small as to be negligible when the value of the property is to be taken into account. An inadequate consideration may be evidence of want of good faith which may itself be sufficient for the setting aside of a transfer. P. K. Banerji, Official Liquidator, Cawnpore v. Mangal Prasad. 53

———Sec. 57(4)—Government Notification 359|VII-277 dated March 11, 1930—Official Receiver—Remuneration fixed at 5% of "gross assets"—Meaning of "gross assets"—Interest of mortgagee—Not to be taken into account in estimating the assets of insolvent debtor.

Where the houses owned by insolvents were subject to a mortgage of Rs.2,500, and the insolvents, the creditors and the mortgagee agreed that this property should be sold to the mortgagee for Rs.3,500, and the latter was to keep Rs.3,125 for himself and pay Rs.375 to the unsecured creditors; and by a Government Notification No. 359|VII-277, dated March 11, 1930 the remuneration of the official receiver was fixed at '5% of the gross assets coming into his hands, subject to a minimum commission of Rs.5 in each case', held, that the words 'gross assets' in this particular case must mean that portion of the property which was represented by the amount Rs.375. The official receiver therefore should have his remuneration calculated on the sum of Rs.375.

The word 'assets' mean 'effects of an insolvent debtor or bankrupt applicable to the payment of his debts'. This definition implies that the interest of the mortgagee is not to be taken into account in considering what are the assets of an insolvent debtor, because a mortgage is the transfer of an interest in the immovable property and what has already been parted with by the insolvent cannot be considered to be his property available for distribution among his unsecured creditors. In re The Official Receiver. 152

———Sec. 59(c), 57 and 56 and Government of India Act, Sec. 32—Official receiver makes a contract—Liability on contract—Property of insolvent liable if court's sanction obtained, otherwise receiver personally liable—No liability on Secretary of State for acts of receiver.

The proprietor of a printing press was adjudicated insolvent and the official receiver of the time, who was appointed receiver of the insolvent's estate, arranged with the plaintiff that the press should remain for a period in the house of the plaintiff where the press was, at the rent which was paid by the insolvent. The official receiver failed to pay the sum due to the plaintiff, and the plaintiff thereupon brought the present suit to recover the sum due, making the Secretary of State party to the suit.

Held: that all that the official receiver can do by making a contract is in the first place to render the property of the insolvent liable for the performance of the contract, if the receiver has obtained the sanction of the insolvency court to the making of the contract, and if he has not obtained that sanction, then he is personally liable on the contract. Under no circumstances there is any liability imposed on the Secretary of State in Council by an official receiver making a contract. Even if it were shown that he is in any sense an agent of the Secretary of State or the Government, the official receiver has no authority to make contracts on behalf of the Secretary of State or the Government.

Where the official receiver was appointed by the Government to perform certain duties under the Provincial Insolvency Act, the duties being imposed by statute, the Government has no liability for whatever the official receiver has done in the discharge or supposed discharge of his duty or supposed duty.

The Regulations of the East India Company, which govern the liability of the Secretary of State in virtue of Sec. 32 of the Government of India Act, drew a distinction between the acts of executive officers for which a certain liability might be assumed under Regulation III of 1793, Chapter XI, and the acts of courts for which Regulation I of 1823, Sec. 38, disclaimed all responsibility. RAM SHANKER v. THE SECRETARY OF STATE FOR INDIA IN COUNCIL. 842

———Secs. 68 and 4—Attachment by official receiver in pursuance of court's order—Application challenging attachment made more than 21 days after attachment—Sec. 68 inapplicable —Court entitled to decide question of title under Sec. 4.

The official receiver attached certain property alleged to belong to the insolvent under an order of the insolvency court. Later on the objection of the son of the insolvent the insolvency court decided that the house belonged to the son, and released it from attachment. The objection was made more than twenty-one days after the attachment by the receiver. Held, that Sec. 68 did not apply and the objection was not barred by time. The objector was not challenging the act of the receiver, but the order of attachment passed by the court ex parte, and it was open to the court, acting under Section 4, to enquire into the question of title and adjudicate upon the rights of the objector. NATHU RAM v. MADAN GOPAL. 391

PROVINCIAL SMALL CAUSES COURTS ACT (IX of 1887), Sec. 17—"Amount due under the decree"—Interpretation of.

The words "the amount due under the decree" as used in Sec. 17 of the Provincial Small Causes Courts Act, 1887, mean "the amount due under the decree at the date it was given" and not "the amount due under the decree at the date when the application for restoration was presented". KALLU MAL v. BIKRAMAJIT SINGH. 260 ———Secs. 23 and 25—Order under Sec. 23 returning plaint—Whether appealable—Whether High Court can interfere under Sec. 25.

No appeal lies from an order purporting to be passed under Sec. 23 of the Provincial Small Causes Courts Act for the return of a plaint to be filed in the proper court. But if the order is illegal or irregular, the High Court would have jurisdiction to interfere under Sec. 25 of the Act because the return of the plaint terminates the proceedings in the court of small causes and a case is decided thereby. KASTURI v. BALMUKAND. 1068

———Sch. II, Art. 35(ii)—Whether suit cognizable by small cause court—Test.

Where the plaintiff sued in the Court of Small Causes to recover a sum of money on the ground that the defendant had cut a nim tree belonging to the plaintiff which was growing upon the plaintiff's ground, and had done so without the knowledge of the plaintiff and without any right, and had taken it away, held, that on a fair reading of the plaint it did not disclose a criminal offence, and the suit was cognizable by the court of Small Causes. BHAN DATT v. MOTI LAL. 306

'PUBLIC PROSTITUTE'—Interpretation of.

A public prostitute is a woman who openly and habitually offers her person to promiscuous sexual intercourse for gain, and who advertises and acknowledges her occupation by word of mouth, deportment or conduct.

For the bye-laws framed under Section 298 of the Municipalities Act to be applicable a woman should be not only a prostitute but a public prostitute. MUNICIPAL BOARD, ETAH THROUGH THE CHAIRMAN v. ASGHARI JAN. 117

RAILWAY—Consignment of 'wrought timber' despatched at owner's risk—Rate charged by Booking Clerk—Lower than Tariff rate (company's risk)—No rate for carriage at owner's risk—Whether Company entitled to freight at Tariff rate—Mistake in classification—Conditions of contract noted on back of Railway Receipt did not provide for right of re-classification—Whether Company protected.

In the Goods Tariff of the Railway Company there was only one class of rate fixed for 'Wrought timber', viz., those at the Company's risk, and none at the owner's risk. The plaintiff handed over planks (Wrought timber) to the Company to be despatched from Shahjahanpur to Agra. Owing to the mistake of the booking clerk the consignment was despatched at the owner's risk, and the consignor was charged at a rate lower than that notified in the Tariff for 'Wrought timber'. Held, (1) that the rate actually charged was within the limits fixed by the Railway Board and the Company could without any previous sanction of the Railway Board have fixed that rate as the rate of 'Wrought timber' and notified the same in the Tariff which they issued, and it could not therefore be said that the charging at the lower rate was contrary to any rule or regulations issued by the Railway Board which had the force of law; (2) that so far as the rules and notifications of Railway Companies issued under the authority of the Railway Board are concerned, it might possibly be assumed that there was constructive notice to the public, but the same assumption cannot be made as regards the rate entered in Tariff issued by the Railway Company without reference to the Railway Board; (3) that the consignor was not responsible for the mistake made by the clerk in not charging at the Tariff rate, because private instructions issued by a principal to an agent are not binding on a third party unless the latter has notice, and the Company must be deemed to be bound by the rate of contract entered into on their behalf by their agent, viz., the Booking Clerk, and it could not charge a higher rate; (4) that as there was no separate rate for 'unwrought timber' there could have been no mistake in classification.

Under the rules issued by the Railway Board the Company can seek protection if there was a mistake in classification (Rule 15, General Rules, 1926). The conditions of the contract noted on the back of the Railway Receipt stated that the Company had the right of re-measurement, reweighment and recalculation of charges at the place of destination, but the paragraph did not contain the word 're-classification' which occurred in Rule 15; held, that the term of the written contract as notified to the consignor did not protect the Company from a mistake made in classification of goods. CHHOTEY LAL PANNA LAL THROUGH PREM DIAL MODI v. R. K. RAILWAY THROUGH THE AGENT R. K. R., BAREILLY. 526 ———Risk Note H—'Misconduct'—Meaning of—Bale weighing 9½ mds. consigned—Lock on platform side opened and bale removed at some intervening station—Whether 'misconduct' to be inferred.

'Misconduct' need not be wilful, and means bad management, or mismanagement, or culpable neglect of an official in regard to his office.

Where a bale weighing 9½ maunds consigned under Risk Note H was found missing at the destination and the lower court came to the conclusion "that while the train was standing at some intervening station, on the platform side, some man managed to wrench off the ring and open the lock of the wagon and removed the bale" held, that there seemed to be no escape from the conclusion that the bale was removed owing to either deliberate misconduct of the railway servants in the shape of standing by or helping in the theft, or at any rate in so neglecting the wagon that it was possible for several men to arrive at the place to 'wrench off the ring' and to remove a heavy load like the bale in question. The neglect, in the latter case, was culpable and the whole affair was mismanaged. THE EAST INDIAN RAILWAY v. NARAIN DAS GANGA SARAN. 217

RAILWAYS ACT (IX of 1890), Sec. 72—Goods despatched under Risk Note forms A and B—Diversion of route—Delay in delivery and shortage in weight—Damages—Whether loss occurred at particular time—Burden of proof on bailee.

The exemption from liability afforded to the railway administration by the risk note forms A and B is operative and available to the railway administration only during the transit on the ordinary route and once the goods are diverted from that route the protection afforded by these risk notes ends.

Where, owing to the mistake of the Railway Co., certain goods despatched under Risk Note Forms A and B were diverted from the ordinary route for a short distance with the result that their delivery was delayed at the destination and there was a shortage in weight, held, that the consignor was entitled to damages for the shortage, and the railway administration could not invoke to its aid the benefits of Forms A and B, and its responsibility must be judged by reference to the provisions of Sec. 72 of the Railway Act untrammelled by the stipulations contained in the forms.

When the goods are solely under the control of the bailee, the fact as to when loss, destruction or deterioration occurred, is a matter especially within his knowledge and therefore the burden of proving that the loss occurred at a particular time and not subsequently must, in view of the provisions of Sec. 106 of the Evidence Act, be on him; and in the present case the railway administration did not prove that the loss occurred prior to the commencement of default on its part, viz., the diversion of goods from the ordinary route. The Secretary of Estate for India in Council through The Agent, E. I. Railway, Calcutta v. Kesho Prasad Sheo Prasad, Belanganj, Agra, through Kesho Prasad. 788

———Secs. 77 and 140—Suit for refund of over-charge—Not imperative to mention in plaint that refund had been demanded from railway—Notices purporting to be under Sec. 80 C. P. C. served on managers—Requirements of Sec. 77 complied with—Whether notices good.

There is nothing in Sec. 77 or 140 of the Railways Act which makes it imperative on a plaintiff to mention in the plaint that refund had been demanded from the railway administration in the manner required by law. If the fact is denied by the defendant but is proved from the evidence, the plaintiff's suit is not liable to be dismissed.

REGISTRATION ACT (XVI of 1908)—Sec. 17(2) (vi)

Where in a suit for refund of an over-charge in respect of goods carried by four state railways, it was proved that notices purporting to be those under Sec. 80 C. P. C. were served on the managers in the manner provided by Sec. 140, Railways Act and the notices substantially complied with the requirements of Sec. 77, Railways Act, held, that the mere fact that Sec. 80 C. P. C. was mentioned in the notices will not detract from their real character as demands made under Sec. 77 Railways Act. Mela Ram Gorwara v. The Secretary of State for India in Council through The Collector, Allahabad. 405

REGISTRATION ACT (XVI of 1908), Sec. 17—Applicability of—Document should by itself declare or create a title. Bageshwari Charan Singh v. Jagannath Kuari. 186

———Sec. 17(1) (b)—'Declare'—Meaning of—Document containing acknowledgment of title relating to immovable property within meaning of Sec. 19 Limitation Act—Whether compulsorily registrable.

A document containing an acknowledgment of title relating to immovable property within the meaning of Section 19 of the Limitation Act is not compulsorily registrable under Section 17 of the Indian Registration Act. To attract the operation of Section 17, it is essential that the document should by itself declare or create a title. There is clear distinction between a mere recital of a fact and something which in itself creates a title. Bageshwari Charan Singh v. Jagannath Kuari. 186

———Sec. 17(2) (vi) (as amended by Sec. 10, Transfer of Property Supplementary Act XXI of 1929)—Award—Purporting to divide up movable and immovable property—When compulsorily registrable.

By Section 10 of the Transfer of Property (Amendment) Supplementary Act of 1929 the words "and any award" have been deleted from Section 17(2) (vi) of the Registration Act of 1908 with the result that an award is no longer excepted and if it amounts to a non-testamentary instrument purporting to create, declare, assign, limit or extinguish, whether in the present or in future, and right, title or interest whether vested or contingent, of the value of Rs.100 or upwards to or in immovable property, it is compulsorily registrable.

Where the award in dispute amounted in substance to a deed of partition purporting to divide up considerable movable and immovable property among the parties to the arbitration and compensations were given by the arbitrators in cash for the differences in the values of the properties allotted to the parties, the entire property being treated as forming part of one estate and the document was not registered within the time allowed by law, held, that the award must be treated as one inseparable document incapable of being split up and being inadmissible in evidence for want of registration, it must be rejected. BACHCHAN LAL v. NAROTTAM DATT. 1090

———Sec. 49—Admitted document—Not registered—When court compelled to take notice of non-registration—Practice.

There is nothing in Sec. 49 of the Registration Act to compel the court to take notice of the non-registration of an admitted document unless at any rate such document must, if treated as effective, be the foundation of a judgment affecting immovable property comprised in such document.

When the only claim is one for damages for breach of an admitted agreement to purchase immovable property against an alleged undisclosed principal who denies he was a principal and the property affected by the agreement has passed out of the picture—the parties having arranged to minimise damages by concurring in a sale of the property and in handing the proceedings of sale to the respondent—, the proceedings do not in any respect affect any immovable property. THE OFFICIAL LIQUIDATOR OF M. E. MOOLLA SONS, LIMITED v. MRS. PERRIN R. BURJORJEE. 706

RES JUDICATA

See Civil Procedure Code, Sec. 11.

RIPARIAN RIGHTS—Riparian owner—Has inherent right to take water from river for domestic use and irrigation—Irrespective of ownership of soil of stream—When river belongs to Government—Madras Irrigation Cess Act (VII of 1865), Sec. 1, Proviso—Interpretation of.

A person who owns land abutting on a stream has an unrestricted right to take water from the stream for domestic use, and a restricted right to take water for other uses connected with the land, of which irrigation of the lands which form the property is one—in the latter case the only limitation is that the amount taken shall not be so much as to hurt the right of the lower owner to have the stream passed on to him practically undiminished. The right of a riparian owner to the use of the stream does not depend upon the ownership of the soil of that stream. This right is a natural right and not in the strict sense of the word an easement, and it is not capable of being lost non utendo.

A river only belongs to the Government when the solum of the stream belongs to the Government. This will happen either when the Government is proprietor of the lands abutting on the river on both sides or when the river is tidal and navigable. THE SECRETARY OF STATE FOR INDIA IN COUNCIL REPRESENTED BY THE COLLECTOR OF EAST GODAVARI DISTRICT v. SANNIDHIRAJU SUBBARAYUDU. 348

SPECIFIC RELIEF ACT (I of 1877), Sec. 9—Inapplicability of—Decree-holder put in formal possession by execution court—Plaintiff's objection under Or. XXI, R. 100 C. P. C. dismissed—Suit under Sec. 9 of Specific Relief Act—Whether maintainable.

After formal delivery of possession had been given to the defendants of a house purchased by them in execution of a decree, the plaintiffs filed an objection under Or. XXI, R. 100 C. P. C. The execution court, holding that plaintiffs had not been in possession, dismissed their objection. They then sued under Sec. 9 of the Specific Relief Act, and the lower court, finding that plaintiffs had been in possession of the house and were wrongly dispossessed within 6 months of the suit, restored possession to them. Held: that formal delivery of possession was given to the defendants in due course of law and Sec. 9 of Specific Relief Act had no application, and the lower court acted without jurisdiction or, to say the least, with material irregularity, in decreeing the plaintiffs' claim under that section without going into plaintiff's right to possession. (2) that as a regular suit under Or. 21, R. 103 was now barred by time, the plaintiff should be allowed to amend the plaint and convert the suit into one for possession based on title or right to possession. MURLIDHAR v. JAINTI PRASAD. 812

———Sec. 27(b)—Agreement between parties—Term of—'In case of contemplated transfer, property to be transferred to other party for proper price'—Deed of exchange executed between representatives of one party and a stranger—For value and without notice—Previous agreement unenforceable against transferee.

Two sets of persons entered into an agreement in 1874 that in case of a contemplated transfer of certain property, it would be transferred to the other party for proper price. In 1928 a deed of exchange was executed between the representatives of one party and a stranger. In a suit for enforcement of the previous agreement brought by the representatives of the other party, the lower court found that the transferee had no notice of this agreement. Held, that no matter what principle or statute governed the obligation of the representatives, the provisions contained in Sec. 27 of the Specific Relief Act must apply and the transferee for value without notice was protected and the contract could not be enforced against her. SHAHZAD SINGH v. JIACHHA KUNWAR. 853

———Sec. 27(b)—Covenant in a sale deed—Whether can be enforced against receiver.

See Provincial Insolvency Act, Sec. 28. 36

———Sec. 42—Declaration to be refused at a preliminary stage—And not by court of appeal.

Where a declaration is to be refused, it should be refused at a preliminary stage of litigation and not by a court of appeal after the issues on fact and law have been decided. RAGHUNATH BARAIE v. JAINARAIN BARAIE. 99

STAMP ACT (II of 1899), Sec. 2(10) and Companies Act, Sec. 104—Deed of conveyance—Test of—Agreement to transfer business, good will, etc.—Agreement for allotment of shares in future—Duty to be paid.

If the parties choose to be satisfied with a mere contract for sale, without an actual deed of sale, stamp duty payable on a conveyance cannot be demanded.

The proprietors of a private firm called 'the vendors' of the one part and the Swadeshi Cotton Mills Co., Ltd. called 'the company' of the other part entered into an agreement which provided that the vendors shall sell all their business undertakings and assets, including good will, free-hold plant, etc., that the purchase was to be completed on such date as might be arranged mutually between the parties, and possession of the premises was to be given to the company on the completion of the purchase, that in the meantime the vendor was to carry on the business on behalf of the company, that part of the consideration be paid by allotment of shares in the company, and that the costs of all the documents required for the purpose of transferring the properties agreed to be sold were to be paid by the company. After the execution of this agreement a sale deed was executed by the vendors in respect of the immovable property but no subsequent deed of transfer was executed as regards the good will or the movable properties. The allotment of shares was made subsequent to the agreement which bore a stamp of eight annas only, and was filed with the Registrar of the Joint Stock Companies under Sec. 104 of the Companies Act (VII of 1913). Held: that the instrument in question could not be regarded as a deed of conveyance but was only an agreement for which the duty due under the Stamp Act was fully paid.

There is nothing in the provisions of Sec. 104 of the Companies Act which requires that a duty payable on a conveyance should be levied on an agreement for the allotment of shares by a company in future. SWADESHI COTTON MILLS CO., LTD.—In the matter of. 394

———Art. 1—Unconditional acknowledgment of indebtedness—Of the description given in Art. 1—Whether constitutes a new cause of action—Inclusion of time-barred debts in acknowledgment—Burden of proof. ABDUL RAFIQ v. BHAJAN. 77

SUCCESSION ACT (XXXIX of 1925), Sec. 172—Will—Testatrix gave to P (Executor under will) the right to spend the entire income of her estate—For maintaining himself and his family—Whether income of estate given to P. MANNU LAL v. LACHHMAN DAS. 564

———Secs. 211(1) and 307—Executor—Not clothed with probate—Estate vests from date of testator's death—Not dependent upon grant of probate. KADIYALA VENKATA SUBAMMA v. KATREDDI. 293

———Sec. 214—Policy holder executed a will in favour of adopted son before his death—Insurance Co. refused payment without production of probate or letters of administration—Whether company acted within its rights.

A Hindu took out an Insurance Policy payable on his death. Before he died he adopted a minor and also executed a will in his favour. The Insurance Company having refused to pay to the court of wards, who had taken over management of the minor's estate, without production of either a probate or letters of administration, the court of wards brought the present suit to recover the sum payable on the policy. Held, that Section 214, Succession Act, applied and the company acted within its rights and no decree could be made against the company without production of a probate or letters of administration or a succession certificate.

There is nothing in law to prevent a company from entering into a contract with a proposer for life assurance that the company would pay the money only to him or his assign or to his executor or administrator and such a contract must bind not only the assured but also anybody claiming title under him. The Gresham Life Insurance Society, Limited v. The Collector of Etawah. 1015

———Secs. 214 and 381—Property descends to Crown by escheat—Whether Sec. 214 applicable.

Where the property descends to the Crown by escheat, it could not be said that the Crown was claiming the property by right of 'succession' within the meaning of Sec. 214 of the Succession Act. The Succession Act is not applicable to the Crown where it takes the property upon escheat. Secretary of State for India in Council v. Girdhari Lal Shambhunath. 150

———Sec. 291 and Contract Act, Secs. 129 and 130—Administration Bond—Surety to—Whether can claim as of right to be released from future liability—Court's power to release surety from future liability—When to be exercised.

A surety to an administration bond cannot claim as of right to be relieved of all further liability by merely expressing his intention to do so either by notice or by a proper application to the court. Secs. 129 and 130 of Contract Act do not apply to such a surety.

The court has power to release a surety for the administrator of the estate of a deceased person from all liability for future transactions from a date when full accounts are rendered and the assets duly accounted for, if it is satisfied that there is ground for it, and after providing safeguards for the heirs of the deceased. Such release however will only be operative after the date of the release and the surety will continue to be liable for any maladministration that might hereafter be discovered and which was committed prior to the date of release. Avinas Chandra Banerji—In the matter of. 140

———Secs. 299 and 271—Objector moves District Judge under Sec. 271—District Judge decides not to refuse application for letters of administration—Whether so-called order passed by him appealable.

Where the appellant moved the District Judge under Sec. 271 of the Succession Act (XXXIX of 1925), which does not in terms require any application by the objector, to refuse to hear the respondent's application for letters of administration and exercise his discretion to return it for presentation to another court, and the District Judge decided to go on with the proceeding and not to refuse the application for letters of administration, held, that the District Judge did not refuse the application for letters of administration and therefore literally speaking did not make any order by virtue of the power conferred on him by Sec. 271, and the so-called order passed by him was more or less in the nature of a finding and it could not be treated as a final order adjudicating upon the rights of the parties or disposing of any matter absolutely, and the case therefore did not come within the scope of Sec. 299 so as to give the objector a right of appeal.

Quaere—Whether appeals under Sec. 299 Succession Act (XXXIX of 1925) are limited exclusively to the appeals which are provided for in the Code of Civil Procedure. Lal Bhupendra Narain Singh v. Ashtabhuja Ratan Kuer. 418

———Sec. 369—Executor—Liability of—Funds in his hands remain uninvested—Liability to payment of interest.

No one is bound to become an executor but if he does accept the position he must act with the ordinary care and the prudence of a reasonable and diligent business man. He must make the funds in his hands productive and in order to do this he must invest them in interest bearing securities. If he fails to do this, he will be liable for the consequent loss. In the Goods of R. V. A. Stock. 363

TENANCY ACT (Local Act II of 1901), Sec. 22—Occupancy holding—Succession.

An occupancy tenure is the creation of statute, and where a special rule of succession has been laid down in the statute, it is the statute which regulates the devolution of inheritance and not the personal law of the tenant (Sec. 9 of Act XII of 1881 and Sec. 22 of Act II of 1901). Sri Ram Singh v. Baldeo Prasad. 605

———Sec. 25—Sub-lease by occupancy tenant—When document necessary—Sub-lessee out of possession must prove title in order to regain possession—Omission of landlord to have illegal sub-lease cancelled—Effect of.

No document is necessary for the creation of a valid sub-lease in a case where the occupancy tenant sub-lets his land for one year, and at the close of one year he agrees that the tenant, who has already paid one year's rent, should hold the land for another year.

Where a sub-lessee is in possession, he can be ousted only by a person who has a better title and a right to maintain a suit. If the landlord comes to court for the cancellation of an illegal sub-lease after the expiry of one year, he would be put out of court on the ground of limitation and the sub-lessee without title would continue. Where the sub-lessee was out of possession, the mere fact that the landlord had omitted to sue within one year would not give him a title. He could succeed only if he could prove a title and a right to possession.

The plaintiffs took possession of certain plots in 1924 under an oral sub-lease from the occupancy tenant and remained in possession for over a year when they were dispossessed by the defendants. Nearly three years after dispossession the plaintiffs brought the present suit for possession and based their title on the oral sub-lease. Held, that the oral sub-lease would last for only one year and at the end of the year it expired, and the plaintiffs having no title could not succeed. SARNAM PRASAD v. SUNDER SAHU. 1097

———Sec. 31(2)—Unauthorised transfer by occupancy tenant—Suit by zamindar—To eject transferee—Tenant not impleaded—Whether maintainable in civil court.

Where the plaintiffs sued for ejectment of defendant on the allegation that the heirs of an occupancy tenant of the land of which the plaintiffs were the owners, had transferred it to defendant, though they had no right to do so, and the heirs of the occupancy tenant were not impleaded, held, that the question of jurisdiction must, in the first instance, be decided on the statement of facts to be found in the plaint which merely sought the ejectment of an alleged trespasser, and the suit was cognizable by the civil court; and Sec. 31(2) of the Tenancy Act of 1901 did not apply as the plaintiffs had not sued for the ejectment of both the tenant and the transferee.

The word 'maurusi' means heritable and is not the recognised equivalent of occupancy, which is more appropriately translated as 'dakhilkari'. JOTI PRASAD v. HAR PRASAD. 567

———Secs. 165 and 194—Suit for profits against co-sharers—Lambardar included as a co-sharer—Collection by co-sharers—Basis of division.

In a suit under Sec. 165 of Act II of 1901 (=Sec. 227 of Act III of 1926) the lambardar, in the array of the defendants, cannot be treated as a lambardar, but must be treated as a co-sharer; and therefore he is entitled to deduct out of the colections made by him his full share of the profits of the mahal, the balance alone being divisible among the other co-sharers.

Where in a suit under Sec. 165 of Act II of 1901 it was proved that karinda made collections on behalf of certain co-sharers, one of whom was the lambardar, the collection must be treated as a collection by the defendant co-sharers, and not as a collection on behalf of the lambardar alone, and the liability of the co-sharers must be a joint one. KANHAIYA LAL v. R. H. SKINNER. 129 ———(Local Act III of 1926), Secs. 15 and 14(5)—Usufructuary mortgage of sir in terms of Sec. 14(5)—Stipulation—In the event of mortgagor being declared exproprietary tenant, he would be liable to pay rent determined—But mortgagee to retain possession of property—Whether this amounted to waiver of exproprietary rights.

Where a specific area of sir was transferred by a usufructuary mortgage in terms of Sec. 14(5) of the Tenancy Act of 1926, and there was a stipulation in the mortgage bond that in the event of the mortgagor being declared an exproprietary tenant he would be liable to pay the rent determined but the mortgagee should retain full possession and enjoyment of the mortgaged property, that is the grove, held, that the stipulation amounted to a waiver of his exproprietary rights, since the mortgagor expressly consented that the mortgagee should retain possession of the mortgaged property which would form the subject of the exproprietary rights, and the mortgagee could not be deprived of the benefit of this stipulation. RAGHUNATH PRASAD v. JWALA PRASAD. 574 ———Sec. 37—Co-tenants—Holding divided —Effect of—New tenancy not created nor mode of succession given in Secs. 24 and 25 changed.

On the death of an occupancy tenant, with whom plaintiff shared in cultivation, his widow, who had a life-interest in the tenancy under

Sec. 24 of the Tenancy Act, sued for partition with the result that the holding was divided. The widow subsequently associated with herself in cultivation, defendants 2 to 4 with the consent of the landlord. In a suit by plaintiff for a declaration that on the widow's death defendants would have no rights in the tenancy as against himself; held, that plaintiff's suit should be decreed. The partition merely changed the mode of enjoyment by the widow but did not confer on her greater rights than what she had before partition; nor did it change the mode of succession given in Secs. 24 and 25 of the Tenancy Act. BEHARI v. MATHURA. 1024

———Sec. 44—Decree for ejectment of tenant—'Dakhalnama' obtained but defendant still in physical possession—Suit for possession in Civil Court treating defendant as trespasser—Whether maintainable.

Plaintiff obtained a decree for ejectment against defendant, who was then his tenant, on May 26, 1927 but failed to take possession prior to June 30, 1927 as required by Section 94 of the Tenancy Act. He, however, obtained a 'dakhalnama' giving formal possession on July 14, 1927 but defendant was still in physical possession in July 1928. On September 1, 1928 plaintiff brought the present suit for possession in the civil court describing the defendant as a trespasser. Held, that the 'dakhalnamah' either operates as a break in the tenancy of the defendant or it does not. If it does not, the defendant is still a tenant and there is no question that proceedings against him must be taken in the revenue court. If, on the other hand, the 'dakhalnamah' does operate as a break in the tenancy and determines the tenancy, then the defendant is a person who has taken possession of the plot without the consent of the landholder and in contravention of the provisions of the Tenancy Act, and he is liable to ejectment on a suit by the landholder in the revenue court. In either case, the civil court has no jurisdiction to determine the dispute between these parties. DAN SAHAI v. JAI RAM SINGH. 517

———Sec. 72, Sub-sections (6) and (1)—Remission claimed under alleged local custom—Failure to prove custom—Whether court can grant remission under Sec. 72(1)—Sub-sec. (6)—"Local custom"—Meaning of.

The local custom referred to in Sec. 72(6) of the Tenancy Act of 1926 means an existing local custom. In other words, if there is a local custom under which remission of rent can be claimed in alluvial tracts by reason of diluvion and similar calamities and if a claim for remission is made under such local custom, then the provisions of Sec. 72(1) will not apply. Accordingly, the mere fact that a tenant has claimed a remission under an alleged local custom which he has failed to prove does not prohibit the court from granting a remission under Sec. 72(1). JUTHI UPADHYA v. KESHO PRASAD SINGH. 495

———Secs. 79 and 80, and Civil Procedure Code, Or. 20, R. 11—Suit for recovery of arrears of rent—Against tenant other than permanent tenure holder or fixed rate tenant—Revenue court incompetent to make decree payable by instalments.

In a suit for recovery of arrears of rent against a tenant other than a permanent tenure-holder or fixed rate tenant, it is not open to the revenue court to make a decree payable by instalments under Or. 20, R. 11 C. P. C. HARAKH CHAND v. SAJIDA BEGUM. 315

———Sec. 82—Grove—Sold in execution of decree against grove-holder—Landholder's suit for possession of grove alleging that transfer was prohibited by custom—Lies in revenue court only.

Where a grove was sold in execution of a decree against the grove-holder after the enforcement of the new Tenancy Act, the landholder could sue for the recovery of the grove from the auction-purchaser on the allegation that there was a custom prohibiting transfers of groves, in the revenue court only, under Sec. 82 of the Tenancy Act, impleading both his tenant and the transferee, and an appeal in such a suit lay to the revenue court. SHRI KISHAN LAL v. BIJAI SINGH. 857

———Secs. 99 and 230—Tenant ejected from holding by a landholder—And not by the entire body of landholders—Tenant must still sue for possession in the revenue court.

According to Sec. 99 of the Tenancy Act of 1926 read with Sec. 230, a tenant ejected from his holding by his landholder or any person claiming as landholder to have a right to eject him, must sue such persons for possession in the revenue court, and it is not necessary that all the proprietors of the mahal should eject a tenant in order to give jurisdiction to the revenue court. RAM AGYAN PANDEY v. CHATRUGHUN SINGH. 864

———Sec. 121—Co-tenants—Suit for determination of shares in occupancy holding—Cog- nizable by revenue court alone.

A suit for the determination of the quantity of share held by each co-tenant in an occupancy holding is covered by Sec. 121 of the Tenancy Act (III of 1926) and is cognizable by the revenue court. BHAGWAN SAHAI v. RAM CHANDER. 849

———Sec. 121 and Schedule IV, Group D—Alleged tenants of a plot—Declaratory suit in Civil Court—Relief—'Owners of a pucca well'—Whether Civil Court has jurisdiction.

Plaintiffs alleging themselves to be tenants of a certain plot instituted a suit in the Civil Court for a declaration that they were owners of a pucca well in the plot, and the defendants who were admittedly zemindars of the land in question denied that the plaintiffs were tenants and alleged that the well had been made by them. Held, that the suit amounted to one for a declaration of the right of the plaintiffs as tenants, and such a suit will cover the question of the ownership of the well, and the revenue court alone had jurisdiction to entertain it. HIRA SINGH v. CHANDAN SINGH. 815

———Sec. 197—Groveholder's right to maintain his grove by replacing fallen trees—Not taken away by new Act.

The right which a groveholder had before the commencement of the present Tenancy Act, to maintain his grove by replacing fallen trees, has not been taken away by anything in that Act.

Replacing trees which have fallen down in a grove by planting new trees amounts only to "repairs" and should not be held to amount to an "improvement" within the meaning of Sec. 3(11) of the Act. AMBA SAHAI v. NATHU. 1026

———Sec. 225(1)—Profits divisible on a prescribed date—Profits accrue from day to day and vesting not postponed—Principle of Sec. 36 Transfer of Property Act applicable.

Applying the principle of Sec. 36, Transfer of Property Act, the profits accrue from day to day and become vested in the co-sharers, and although the time for payment is postponed for the sake of convenience till the following August, it does not imply that the right to a share in the income does not vest till the arrival of that date. MOHAMMAD ABDUL JALIL KHAN v. MOHAMMAD ABDUS SALAM KHAN. 93

———Sec. 225(2)—Co-sharer entitled to simple interest at 1% p.m. on net profits—From date when profits became divisible till actual realization.

There is no reason why the principle underlying Sec. 225 should not be applied to future interest after the decree up to the date of realisation. Accordingly in a suit for profits against the lambardar, the plaintiff co-sharer is entitled to simple interest at the rate of 1% per mensem on his share of net profits from the date when they became divisible till actual realisation. MOHAMMAD ABDUL JALIL KHAN v. MOHAMMAD ABDUS SALAM KHAN. 93

———Sec. 226—Suit for profits—Accounting—Lambardar entitled to 5% on the actual collections, as expenses of collection—In addition to lambardari dues.

See Tenancy Act, Sec. 226(2). 93

———Sec. 226—Suit for profits—Accounting—No set off can be allowed, which is not due under a decree.

See Tenancy Act, Sec. 226(2). 93

———Sec. 226—Suit for profits—Accounting—Unavoidable litigation—Lambardar to be credited with taxable costs.

Litigation is not a part of the ordinary expenditure in the management of a mahal; but where it is unavoidable, it is a necessary part of the expenditure incurred by a lambardar and it is undoubtedly incurred for the benefit of the entire coparcenary body, and there is no reason why the lambardar should not be credited with the taxable costs of the litigation. MOHAMMAD ABDUL JALIL KHAN v. MOHAMMAD ABDUS SALAM KHAN. 93

———Sec. 226(2)—Suit for profits against lambardar—When decree to be passed on basis of gross rental—Collections exceed 75% of gross rental—Presumption of no negligence.

In a suit for profits by a co-sharer against the lambardar, if the lambardar succeeds in showing the actual collections, then unless those collections are so low that the court may presume negligence on the part of the lambardar, the decree has to be made on the basis of the actual collections and not on the gross rental. On the other hand, if the discrepancy between the gross rental and the actual collection is very large, then, in the absence of any satisfactory explanation on the part of the lambardar why he was not able to collect a larger amount, the presumption would be that he was negligent and the decree should be on the basis of gross rental. In the absence of any definite evidence either way, those cases in which collections exceed 75% of the gross rental should be taken as cases in which no negligence can be presumed, and in cases in which collections are less than 75% there is prima facie a presumption of such negligence. Mohammad Abdul Jalil Khan v. Mohammad Abdus Salam Khan. 93

———Sec. 266(3)—Suit for profits against lambardar—Court's power to estimate 'unrealizable arrears'—To be based on evidence.

Where in a suit for profits against the lambardar, it was found that the lambardar had not shown in his books the actual realisations and that his books were extremely unreliable and misleading, but the court, without giving any reason, allowed 'a rebate of 10%' on the gross rental as covering the possible arrears in the collections, held, that the estimate of unrealisable arrears should be based on some evidence which can be acted upon, and the deduction should not be merely conjectural, and the rebate should not have been allowed. Ganpatji v. Hanuman Singh. 1

———Sec. 227—Family settlement—Person having the right to have and enjoy the profits of the property but cannot possess, partition on transfer—Not to be regarded as a 'co-sharer' —Suit for recovery of arrears of profits—Not cognizable by revenue court—Art. 120 of the Limitation Act applied to such a suit.

Where a person under an instrument in the nature of a family settlement has the right to have and enjoy the profits of the property without having the rights of possession, partition or transfer which are the incidents of ownership, such a person is not and cannot be deemed to be a "co-sharer" within the orbit of the Agra Tenancy Act, and a suit for profits accruing to the plaintiff under the terms of the instrument is maintainable in the civil court, and is not cognizable by the revenue court, and Art. 120 of the Limitation Act applied to such a suit. Lakhmi Chand v. Anandi. 177

———Sec. 230—Civil suit—Revenue court could substantially grant the relief for which plaintiff asked under Sections 121 and 44 of the Tenancy Act—Suit not maintainable.

The allegations in the plaint were that plaintiff and defendant No. 1 were joint occupancy tenants, that the defendant No. 1 had made without plaintiff's consent a perpetual lease to defendants 2 and 3 and that plaintiff was still in possession. The relief sought was that on establishment of plaintiff's right a decree invalidating the lease may be passed in plaintiff's favour, and her possession may be maintained and in case of proof of dispossession, a decree for possession may be passed. Held, that the civil court had no jurisdiction to entertain this suit as the revenue court could substantially grant the relief for which plaintiff asked under Sections 121 and 44 of the Tenancy Act. Duiji Kunwar v. Baila Kunwar. 521

———Secs. 249 and 248(3)—Order by revenue court in execution proceedings—Appeal lies to District Judge—But no second appeal lies to the High Court.

By Sec. 248(3) of the Agra Tenancy Act (III of 1926) an appeal lies to the District Judge from an order of the revenue court passed in proceedings in execution of a decree for profits, but by Sec. 249 no further appeal is allowed, and no second appeal therefore lies to the High Court from the order passed by the District Judge in the execution appeal before him. Gobardhan Das v. Dau Dayal. 365

———Sec. 253—Revisional powers of High Court—Not governed by Sec. 115 C. P. C.—But confined to Sec. 253.

Sec. 115 C. P. C. is inapplicable to revenue cases, and the revisional power of the High Court is restricted to Sec. 253 of the Tenancy Act (III of 1926), and the High Court has therefore no jurisdiction to interfere in revision with an order of the District Judge passed by him in a revenue appeal, but the High Court has power to revise the order of the first court if it is open to any of the three objections mentioned in Sec. 253, and if it does so revise it, the order of the District Judge in appeal has to be assumed to be a nullity by implication. Gobardhan Das v. Dau Dayal. 365

———Sec. 253 and Civil Procedure Code, Or. 9, Rules 8 and 9—Suit for profits—Dismissed for want of prosecution—Suit subsequently restored—Whether High Court can revise order restoring suit.

Where a suit for profits, which had been adjourned several times to enable plaintiff to produce evidence, was ultimately dismissed "for want of prosecution" and the court subsequently granted plaintiff's application for restoration, held, that the order dismissing the suit was one under Or. 9, R. 8 and could be set aside under Or. 9, R. 9 C. P. C. or under Sec. 151. In either case the order was not appealable to the District Judge and therefore no revision lay to the High Court under Section 253 C. P. C. BOHRA PANNA LAL v. BASDEO. 1100

———Secs. 253 and 271—'Subordinate revenue court'—Meaning of—Issue remitted to Civil Court under Sec. 271—Whether Civil Court deemed to be a revenue court.

Where the revenue court acting under Sec. 271 of the new Tenancy Act frames an issue on the question of proprietary right and submits the record to the Civil Court for the decision of that issue only, the latter cannot be considered to be a 'subordinate revenue court' within the meaning of Sec. 253. SATYA NIDHAN BANERJI v. MOHD. HAZABBER ALI KHAN alias GHULAM JABALI KHAN. 1123 ———Sec. 253 and Sec. 115 C. P. C.—Order of Assistant Collector setting aside dismissal for default of appearance—Whether revision lies to High Court.

No revision lies to the High Court from an order of the Assistant Collector setting aside a dismissal for default of appearance in a suit for profits. The language of Sec. 253 of the Tenancy Act of 1926, which has replaced the provisions of Sec. 115 C. P. C., precludes the High Court from entertaining the revision, because no appeal lies to the District Judge from the order sought to be revised. KANAUJI LAL v. CHIRAUNJI LAL. 863 ———Secs. 264 and 247, and Civil Procedure Code, Order 21, Rule 63—Order of Assistant Collector, second class under Order 21, Rule 58—Appeal to Collector under Section 247 of Tenancy Act—Appellate order against claimant—Whether claimant has a right to institute a suit under Order 21, Rule 63.

In execution of a decree for arrears of rent (passed by the Assistant Collector, second class) the decree-holder attached certain property as belonging to the judgment-debtor. The present plaintiff intervened with the claim that the property belonged to him. His claim was allowed by the Assistant Collector, second class, but on appeal to the Collector under Section 247 of the Agra Tenancy Act, the appelate court held that the property belonged to the judgment-debtor. Thereupon the present plaintiff instituted the present civil suit under Order 21, Rule 63 C. P. C. Held, that there was no inconsistency between the right to file a civil suit and a right to appeal under the Tenancy Act, and the present suit was, therefore, maintainable. BIKRAM SINGH v. DIP SINGH. 514

———Sec. 264 and Provincial Insolvency Act, Sec. 28—Whether insolvency law applicable to suits and proceedings under the Tenancy Act. THE OFFICIAL RECEIVER OF MORADABAD v. MURTAZA ALI. 402

———Sec. 265—Lambardar—Agreement with certain co-sharers that they should collect rents of their shares separately—Whether binding on other co-sharers.

Where a lambardar, for the sake of good management, entered into an agreement with the purchasers that they should collect the rents of their shares separately, while he should collect the rents of the remaining share separately and the agreement was acted upon by the parties, held, that the agreement was perfectly valid and binding upon the other co-sharers.

Of the heirs of a deceased plaintiff one was brought on the record within time and the others filed an affidavit that they had relinquished their rights in favour of the heir whose name was on the record, held, that the affidavit could not be treated as a transfer of the rights of the remaining heirs in favour of the heir on the record and the suit abated as regards the heirs whose names were not brought upon the record. SHER PAL SINGH v. AIJAZ FATIMA. 1029

———Sec. 265(1)—Lambardar of a mahal—Mahal sub-divided into pattis—Suit for arrears of rent—Land situated in a patti in which lambardar was not a co-sharer—Whether lambardar empowered to collect rent—Part of arrears in respect of a period prior to passing of Act III of 1926.

The lambardar of a mahal, which was subdivided by an imperfect partition into a number of pattis, brought a suit for arrears of rent against the defendant. The land for which rent was claimed was situated in a patti in which the lambardar himself was no co-sharer and had no proprietary interest. Held, that the lambardar was not empowered to collect rent in respect of such land, as he had no proprietary interest in such land.

In view of the procedure laid down by Act III of 1926 in Ss. 265 and 266 for the collection of rent, decisions under the previous enactment cannot operate as res judicata.

Any authority which a lambardar might have had before the passing of the Act of 1926 became subject to the limitations imposed by Ss. 265 and 266, regardless of the fact whether arrears were in respect of a period subsequent to the passing of that Act or prior to it. SUN- 1203

der Lal v. Subedar Singh. 507

———Sec. 266(1)—Several co-sharers—Tenant let into possession by one co-sharer without consent of others—Co-sharers entitled to treat lease as nullity and to eject the tenant.

Where land belonging to three co-sharers was let to the defendant by the agent of only one of them without the consent of the other two co-sharers, held, (1) that Sec. 266(1) of the Tenancy Act of 1926 applied and the defendant, not having been admitted to tenancy by all the three co-sharers, did not acquire the rights of a statutory tenant and was not entitled to retain possession as such; (2) that there was nothing to prevent the co-sharer who had granted the lease to the defendant from joining the other co-sharers to eject him. Panchanan Banerji v. Anant Prasad Pandey. 477

———Secs. 271(4) and 242(3)—Suit for ejectment—Issue on proprietary right—Decided in plaintiff's favour by Civil Court—Suit dismissed on different ground—Appeal—Question of proprietorship raised again by defendant in his cross-objection—Commissioner's jurisdiction ousted—Memorandum of appeal to be returned to plaintiff for presentation to proper court.

Where in a suit for ejectment the revenue court, accepting the finding of the civil court in plaintiff's favour on an issue involving the question of proprietary right, dismissed it on a different ground, and on appeal by plaintiff to the Commissioner the defendant filed a cross-objection attacking the finding that he was not the proprietor, held, that the Commissioner having come to the conclusion that his jurisdiction was ousted as the result of the cross-objection, the only way open to him was to return the memorandum of appeal to the appellant for presentation to the proper court. In the absence of any specific provision permitting the sending of an appeal direct to the civil court, the provisions of Or. 7, R. 10 read with Sec. 107(2) C.P.C. would be applicable. Sukhdeoji v. Ram Lal. 1085

TORT—Joint tort-feasors—Suit for damages—Decree—Executed against one alone—Decree satisfied—When suit for contribution lies against co-tort-feasors.

Where a person obtains a decree against joint tort-feasors, and executes the decree against one of them alone, who is compelled to pay the whole damages, he has no right of contribution from the others, if they committed the act of tort knowing that what they were doing was nothing but a clear case of tort.

No distinction can properly be drawn, in principle, between a case where a joint liability has been liquidated without a suit, and where a joint liability has been established by a suit and the judgment has been liquidated by one of the parties. Parbhoo Dayal v. Dwarka Prasad. 215 ———Suit for damages—Against joint tort-feasors—Some entered into compromise with plaintiffs by which they agreed to accept a certain sum—Whether compromise operated as a bar to a decree against the other tort-feasors.

In a suit for damages for injuries caused to the persons of the plaintiffs as a result of missiles being thrown at them by the defendants who were acting as a body in pursuance of the common object of stopping the Hindu procession, of which the plaintiffs formed a part, which was passing the mosque, some of the defendants, who were joint-tort-feasors, entered into a compromise with the plaintiffs by which they agreed to accept a certain sum; held, (1) that a compromise of this nature was no bar to a decree against the other defendants; (2) that the plaintiffs were entitled to bring a joint suit for damages against all the defendants (Or. 1, R. 1 C. P. C.).

A release granted to one joint tort-feasor operates as a discharge of the other tort-feasors where the cause of action, which is one and indivisible, has itself been released. Basharat Beg v. Hira Lal. 497

TRANSFER OF PROPERTY ACT (IV of 1882), Sec. 3 and Registration Act, Secs. 58 and 59—Signature of sub-registrar and identifying witnesses—Whether sufficient attestation. Lachman Singh v. Surendra Bahadur Singh. 653

———Section 3—Actionable claim—Cause of action in respect of debt not having arisen or time for its payment not having arrived—Whether amounts to actionable claim. Amir Hasan Khan v. Mohd. Nazir Hasan. 275

———Section 3—'Actionable claim'—Mohammedan widow's claim to unpaid dower debt—Whether amounts to—Mohammedan Law—Dower—Widow in possession of husband's property in lieu of dower debt—Transfers claim to debt and right to possession, to a legal practitioner—Legal practitioner does not in law acquire widow's right to dower (Sec. 136 T. P. Act)—Whether husband's heir can dispossess legal practitioner.

A Mohammedan widow entered into possession of her husband's property peacefully and without force or fraud in lieu of her dower debt. Later she executed a sale deed in favour of the present defendant-appellant, a legal practitioner, transferring her right to recover the dower debt and the right to remain in possession of the property till her dower was paid. Possession was obtained by the present defendant. Thereupon the present plaintiff-respondent, in whom the ownership of the property in possession of the defendant vested as the heir of the husband, instituted a suit for recovery of possession. Held, (1) that a Mohammedan widow's claim to unpaid dower debt is an actionable claim as now defined in Sec. 3 Transfer of Property Act, and the defendant being a legal practitioner was debarred under Sec. 136 T. P. Act from taking a transfer of such claim, (2) that the defendant, who had not in law acquired the widow's right to receive dower, was not entitled to retain possession as against the husband's heir who owned the property. Amir Hasan Khan v. Mohammad Nazir Hasan. 275

———Section 6 (d)—Applicability of—Award—Co-sharer—To appropriate income—Condition in restraint of alienation during his life-time—Rights of transferee from him.

By an award, which partitioned the family property, specified shares in the shops in question were allotted to M. The award defined the rights of M in the shops as follows:—"He is the absolute owner thereof. He is to appropriate and maintain himself with the income and rent of such property, but he will have no power to make any transfer, such as sale, mortgage, lease, hypothecation as security and theka for a term or in perpetuity, etc., in respect of such property; and if he does make a transfer, the same shall be considered to be invalid. Besides M any one among his descendants will have power to make mortgage, etc." M while in possession assigned his rights in the shops to the plaintiff, who thereupon instituted a suit for partition, making M's co-sharers parties to the suit. Held, that subject to the condition in restraint of alienation, assuming it to be valid, the shares in the shops in question vested in M and no one else, and his right of enjoyment described as full ownership being unfettered, he could claim separate enjoyment of his share of the shops by partition, and the defendants, who had no locus standi to eject the plaintiff or to question his right of possession could not question his right to obtain partition by virtue of his present possession of the shares of M in the shops in dispute; and Sec. 6 (d) of Transfer of Property Act had no application. Ram Nath v. Nanak Chand. 821 ———Sections 6(e) and 130—Lease—Lessee agreed to pay Government revenue—On failure of lessee to do so, lessor paid revenue—Later lessor assigned his right to recover the revenue paid—Whether assignee entitled to sue.

Under a lease the lessee agreed to pay the lessor a yearly rent and, in addition, the Government revenue, cesses and other public demands. On failure of the lessee to pay the Government revenue the lessor paid the sums due. Later the lessor executed a deed of assignment in favour of the appellant by which he assigned his right to recover the amount (with interest) of the revenue paid by him. Held, that what was assigned to the appellant was not a mere right to sue but a claim for a definite sum of money which the lessee was bound by his contract with the lessor to repay to him, and this would be an actionable claim to which Sec. 130 of T. P. Act would apply. Manmatha Nath Mullick v. Hedait Ali. 341 ———Section 10—Absolute estate—By family settlement—Restraint against alienation outside the family—Whether repugnant.

In compromise of their conflicting claims a family settlement was come to between A and B, by which it was agreed that A should take an absolute estate in what she claimed, saddled with the condition that she would not alienate the property outside the family. Held, that an agreement of this nature was not contrary to justice, equity and good conscience and the condition was binding upon A.

Under Sec. 10, Transfer of Property Act, 1882, a partial restriction upon the power of disposition would not, in the case of a transfer inter vivos, be regarded as repugnant, and there is no authority suggesting that before the Act of 1882 a different principle was applied by the courts in India.

Quaere—Whether the Shia Law permits of the creation of a vested remainder in such an indeterminate body as the heirs of a living person. Mohammad Raza, since deceased (represented by Syed Mohammad Abbas and others) Abbas Bandi Bibi. 709 ———Section 11—Proviso to—Vendee undertook to remove certain constructions at vendor's pleasure—Whether proviso applicable.

See Provincial Insolvency Act, Sec. 28. 36

———Section 52 and Tenancy Act (III of 1926), Sec. 19—Lease for 20 years in favour of defendant during pendency of mortgage suit—Civil suit by purchaser in execution of mortgage decree—Relief—That lease was void and defendant be ejected—Status of defendant —Whether suit for ejectment maintainable in civil court.

The plaintiffs purchased certain property at a sale in execution of a mortgage decree. Prior to this the same property was purchased by one H in execution of a simple money decree, who executed a lease for 20 years in favour of the defendant during the pendency of the mortgage suit. On a suit by the plaintiffs in the civil court for a declaration that the lease was void and for the ejectment of the defendant, held, (1) that at the time the lease was granted, H was the landlord, and was authorised to admit the defendant to the occupation of the land, and the position of the defendant was that of a tenant, and when the suit was brought, the possession of the defendant was, under Sec. 19 of the Tenancy Act of 1926, that of a statutory tenant, and he could be ejected only under the provisions of that Act; (2) that the lease could be challenged under the terms of Sec. 52 T. P. Act, and the civil court could grant a declaration that the lease was void as against the plaintiffs. AZIZ FATMA v. MUKUND LAL. 572

———*Section 52—Explanation added by Act XX of 1929—Does not introduce a new rule of law—Mortgage suit—*Lis continued even after final decree and subsisted during pendency of execution proceedings.

The explanation appended to Sec. 52, Transfer of Property Act, by the Amending Act XX of 1929, has not introduced a new rule of law, but has put the impress of legislature upon certain judicial pronouncements in which it has been held that in a mortgage suit the lis continued even after the final decree and subsisted during the pendency of proceedings in execution. MOTI CHAND v. THE BRITISH INDIA CORPORATION LTD., CAWNPORE. 54

———Section 55(2)—Sale deed—Covenant —Entitling vendee to recover consideration by sale of property sold—On being dispossessed from whole or part of property—Whether implied covenant of title in terms of Sec. 55(2) excluded.

Where there was an express covenant in the sale deed entitling the vendee, on being dispossessed from the whole or part of the property sold, to recover the whole of the consideration by sale of the property transferred or from other property; held, that there was nothing in the sale deed which excluded an implied warranty of title, contemplated by Sec. 55(2) T. P. Act, nor was there anything in the sale deed which limited the vendee's remedy to the rescission of the contract; and the covenant was an enabling clause, intended for the benefit of the vendee, and conferred a right, which he would not otherwise possess, and which he could exercise in addition to any right which the law gave him. NANHI v. KETKI. 69

———Section 55(2)—Sale-deed—No covenant of indemnity—Vendee had some idea as to defect in vendor's title—Whether vendor liable under Sec. 55(2).

Where the sale-deed does not contain any statement to the effect that the vendor was assuring the vendee that his title subsists, held, that unless the vendor's liability as imposed by Sec. 55, Sub-sec. (2) Transfer of Property Act is excluded by express covenant, his liability must be deemed to subsist, notwithstanding the fact that the vendee may have some idea as to the defect in the title of the vendor. NEWAL KISHORE v. SARJU RAM SAHU. 611

———Sections 55(2) and 55(1) (g)—Vendees—Property passes out of their possession—Suit for damages—Claim not founded upon covenant of idemnity in sale-deed—Whether vendees entitled to an implied warranty of title under Sec. 55(2).

Defendant purchased certain property. Part of the sale consideration was left with him for payment of the pre-existing mortgage. As the money was not paid, the vendors brought a suit for recovery of the unpaid purchase money against the defendant, and the present plaintiffs, who had purchased the property from the defendant, were also made parties to this suit; and a decree was passed against defendant personally and against the property in the hands of the plaintiffs. In execution of the decree, the property was sold. Thereupon the plaintiffs instituted the present suit for damages against the defendant, and the claim was not founded upon the covenant of indemnity contained in the sale-deed. Held, (1) that the cause of action for the present suit accrued on the date of plaintiffs' dispossession consequent upon the sale of the property, and they were entitled to damages by reason of a breach of an implied warranty of title under Sec. 55(2) T. P. Act; (2) that the former suit did not operate as res judicata. GOBARDHAN DAS v. AFZAL HUSAIN AND (AFTER HIS DEATH) IQBAL HUSAIN. 598

———Section 55(5) (b)—Agreement to sell—Suit for specific performance—Court had sale-deed executed—Liability to pay unpaid consideration arose at once—Limitation Act, Art. 120—Vendee agreed to pay balance of consideration to mortgagees—Delay in payment—Vendor had to pay interest—Suit for recovery of sum so paid—Limitation.

One B agreed to sell (this village and another village were subject to a mortgage) to the defendant, who paid earnest money in cash; but later B sold the village to other persons. The defendant instituted a suit for specific performance making the vendees also parties. The suit was decreed, and the court had the sale-deed executed and completed in favour of the defendant. An appeal to the High Court by the vendees was dismissed. The defendant then deposited under Sec. 83 T. P. Act the balance of the sale consideration to the account of the mortgagees—this they had agreed to do under the terms of the agreement of sale—who agreed to accept the same in part satisfaction of the money due to them. The Court of Wards who had taken over the estate of B had to pay a large sum to the mortgagees as interest accruing between the date of the execution of the sale-deed in favour of the defendant and the date of deposit under Sec. 83. The Court of Wards thereupon sued the defendant for recovery of the sum paid with interest from the date of demand. Held, (1) that it was the duty of the defendant to pay the amount to the mortgagees on the date the sale-deed was executed in his favour, and the fact that an appeal was preferred to the High Court in the specific performance suit, could not suspend his liability. He insisted on the immediate execution of the sale-deed and must accept his liability arising from it; (2) that the defendant was not entitled to retain the balance of purchase money, as there was no plea that the payment of this sum was conditional on the remaining incumbrance being discharged; (3) that the cause of action arose on the date the mortgagees were paid off, and the suit was governed by Art. 120, Limitation Act, and was within time. MAHTAB SINGH v. THE COLLECTOR OF SAHARANPUR. 556

———Section 59, Evidence Act, Secs. 68 to 71 and Registration Act, Secs. 58 and 59—Suit to enforce mortgage—Execution and attestation not admitted—No specific plea that the deed, for want of proper attestation, did not operate as a mortgage deed—What must mortgagee prove to obtain a decree—Signature of Sub-registrar and identifying witnesses—Whether sufficient attestation.

Where a mortgagee sues to enforce his mortgage and, on the one hand, the execution and attestation of the deed are not admitted and, on the other, there is no plea that the deed for want of proper attestation does not operate as a mortgage deed, the mortgagee need prove only this much that the mortgagor signed the document in the presence of the attesting witness called (or the attesting witness received from the executant a personal acknowledgment of his signature) and the attesting witness signed in the presence of the executant, provided the document on the face of it bears the attestation of more than one person.

But if the validity of the mortgage be specifically denied, in the sense that the document did not effect a mortgage in law, then it must be proved by the mortgagee that the mortgage deed was attested by at least two witnesses.

Neither the registering officer nor the witnesses identifying the executant at registration sign as attesting witnesses, and they cannot therefore be treated as such for the purpose of the validity of the mortgage. LACHMAN SINGH v. SURENDRA BAHADUR SINGH. 653

———Section 63 and Trusts Act (II of 1882), Sec. 90—Scope of—Suit for redemption—Occupancy rights acquired by mortgagee—Mortgagor claims them as accretions to suit mortgage—When entitled.

Section 63 of the Transfer of Property Act cannot be read as entitling the mortgagor on redemption to recover acquisitions made by the mortgagee for his own benefit in circumstances which do not bring him within Sec. 90 of the Trusts Act, 1882, that is to say, when he did not have any special advantage by reason of his position as mortgagee in acquiring them.

Where in a suit for redemption the mortgagor claimed occupancy rights acquired by the mortgagee, who was also a co-sharer with him in the mauza, subsequent to the creation of the mortgage, as accretions to the suit mortgage, held, that it was incumbent on the mortgagor to show that the occupancy rights were acquired under such circumstances as to bring them within the provisions of Sec. 90, Trusts Act. SORABJI v. DWARKADAS RANCHHODDAS. 889

———Section 70—Accession to mortgaged property—After final decree—Mortgagee not entitled to such accession. MOTI CHAND v. THE BRITISH INDIA CORPORATION LTD., CAWNPORE. 71

———Section 76(e)—Mortgagee in possession—Entitled to appropriate wood of fallen tree.

Under Sec. 76(e) Transfer of Property Act, a mortgagee in possession must not commit any act which is destructive or permanently injurious to the property. That means that he must not commit waste, such as felling unripe timber. But there is no prohibition in this clause against taking wood of a fallen tree which fell from natural causes. Such wood is part of the profits of the property and a mortgagee in possession is entitled to take the profits. DURGA SHANKAR v. GANGA SAHAI. 493

———Section 82—Mortgage of properties A, B and C—Property A subject to prior incumbrance jointly with properties X, Y and Z—Value of property A for contribution purposes—How to be determined.

To arrive at the value for contribution purposes, within the meaning of Section 82 of the Transfer of Property Act, of each of several properties on which a particular mortgage is secured, it is clear that the amount of all prior encumbrances upon such properties must be ascertained and deducted. Where properties A, B and C are all made security for one mortgage, if property A is subject to a prior encumbrance jointly with properties X, Y and Z, the rateable share to be attributed to A under the prior encumbrance must necessarily be assessed in order to ascertain its value for the purposes of the mortgage. To take into consideration only the total amount of the prior encumbrance to which A was liable, irrespective of the question whether that liability was to be shared by X, Y and Z or not, would be quite erroneous. FAQIR CHAND v. AZIZ AHMAD KHAN. 195 ———Section 91—Mortgage by sub-tenant—Death of tenant heirless—Right of tenant-in-chief to redeem—N. W. Tenancy Act (XII of 1881), Sec. 9—Grove land—Mortgage by sub-tenant—Not illegal.

The plaintiff's grandfather was sir-owner and zamindar of a portion of a plot and occupancy tenant of the remaining portion. He got a guava grove planted on the plot by his sub-tenant. In 1885 the sub-tenant (and his wife) executed a usufructuary mortgage of the said plot in favour of the father of defendants. The mortgagors died about 1903. In 1928 the plaintiff brought a suit for redemption of the usufructuary mortgage; held, (1) that on the extinction of the rights of the mortgagors as sub-tenants their rights reverted to the plaintiff in his capacity of sir-owner and zamindar in one part of the plot and in his capacity of tenant-in-chief in the other part of the plot, and he had an interest in the property in question and was therefore entitled to redeem. (2) that there is nothing in Act XII of 1881 which makes a mortgage of a grove by a tenant illegal, as the prohibitions refer to tenants of agricultural land. ARJUN SINGH v. MAHESHA NAND. 474

———Section 91(f)—Simple money decree-holder attaches property subject to mortgage—Suit for sale on mortgage—Attaching creditor not made party—During pendency of mortgage suit attaching creditor purchases property in execution of his decree and obtains possession—Subsequent purchase by mortgagee in execution of his decree—Suit for possession by mortgagee—Whether attaching creditor's right to redeem subsists.

The defendant, who held a simple money decree, attached the property of his debtor, which was subject to a mortgage. After this attachment the mortgagee brought a suit for sale in which he did not make the attaching creditor a party. At the auction sale in execution of the simple money decree (which took place during the pendency of the mortgage suit) the defendant himself purchased the attached property and obtained possession. Subsequently a decree for sale was passed in the mortgage suit, and the mortgagee himself purchased the mortgaged property, and took out formal delivery of possession, but the revenue court refused to order mutation of names in his favour. Consequently the mortgagee brought the present suit for possession in the civil court; held, that the plaintiff was entitled to a decree for possession subject to the defendant's right to redeem on payment of the amount due to the plaintiff on his mortgage, and this right was not lost when the sale in pursuance of the attachment took place during the pendency of the mortgage suit. FATIMA BEGAM v. BANSIDHAR AND JAFRI BEGAM. 289 ———Sections 92 and 101 (as amended by Act

XX of 1929)—Embody rule of justice, equity and good conscience—Whether have retrospective effect—Three successive mortgages—Third mortgagee pays off first mortgagee with a part of the mortgage money—Suit for sale by second mortgagee—Whether third mortgagee subrogated to the position of the first mortgagee.

Sections 92 and 101 of the Transfer of Property Act (as amended by Act XX of 1929) have retrospective effect. Supposing, however, that the said sections have no retrospective effect, the rule laid down by the Legislature would be a safe guide to follow as laying down correctly the rule of justice, equity and good conscience for cases arising before the passing of Act XX of 1929.

Where a third mortgagee professes to keep in his hand a part of the mortgage money in order to pay of the first and second mortgages and pays off only the first mortgage, and the second mortgagee brings a suit to enforce his mortgage, held, that the third mortgagee is subrogated to the position of the first mortgagee. TOTA RAM v. RAM LAL. 627

———Sections 95, 82, and 100—One of several mortgagors redeems mortgage—Charge accrues in favour of mortgagor who redeems—Rule not limited to possessory mortgages—Art. 132 Limitation Act applicable to such a claim.

On redemption of the mortgage property by one of the several mortgagors, even in a case where the mortgage is not a possessory one, a charge accrues in favour of the mortgagor who discharges the mortgage, and he is entitled to enforce the charge against his co-mortgagors, and the right accrues on the date of payment, and Art. 132, Limitation Act is applicable to such a claim. COLLECTOR OF FARRUKHABAD v. KISHORE MOHAN alias MUNNA LAL. 19

———Secs. 108 and 111 (a)—Second lease—to take effect after first lease for 10 years had expired—First lease expired by efflux of time under Sec. 111 (a)—First lessee holding over—Whether second lessee entitled to eject first lessee.

Defendant obtained a lease of a house for a period of ten years. A few months before the expiry of the lease, the lessor executed another lease in favour of the plaintiff for a further period of ten years. The second lease was to take effect a few days after the expiry of the first lease. As the first lessee, whose lease determined by efflux of time under Sec. 111 (a) T. P. Act, was holding over, the second lessee brought a suit for ejectment of the first lessee from the house, held, that under Sec. 108 T. P. Act the second lessee was entitled to eject the first lessee who was holding over. HAKIM MOHD. FAZIHZZAMAN v. ANWAR HUSAIN. 126

———Section 122—Gift—Acceptance—May be either express or implied—No presumption of acceptance operating immediately upon gift.

Under Sec. 122 Transfer of Property Act there is no presumption of acceptance operating immediately upon the gift, whether known or unknown to the donee.

There is nothing in Sec. 122 T. P. Act to limit acceptance to an express acceptance and acceptance may be either express or implied. ANANDI DEVI v. MOHAN LAL. 335 ———Section 122—Gift—By husband to wife—Gift within wife's knowledge—Mutation effected—Acceptance to be implied.

Actual or constructive possession is undoubtedly proof of acceptance, and in zamindari property, and especially in a case concerning husband and wife, mutation means delivery of possession, and the acts of the husband after mutation are acts on behalf of his wife. ANANDI DEVI v. MOHAN LAL. 335 ———Sections 130 and 6(e)—Lease—Lessee agreed to pay Government revenue—On failure of lessee to do so, lessor paid revenue—Later lessor assigned his right to recover the revenue paid—Whether assignee entitled to sue. MANMATHA NATH MULLICK v. HEDAIT ALI. 341

———Section 136—Legal practitioner takes a transfer from Mahomedan widow of her claim to dower and right to possession—Whether transfer void. AMIR HASAN KHAN v. MOHD. NAZIR HASAN. 275

U. P. COURT OF WARDS ACT (IV of 1912).

See Court of Wards Act.

TRUSTS ACT (II of 1882), Sec. 88, Illustration (f) and Sec. 90—Mohammedan family—Joint business and joint purse—Partnership—Death of a member—Surviving members carry on business as before—Rights of heirs of deceased member—Limitation Act, Articles 144 and 106—Suit for joint possession by heirs of deceased member of Mohammedan joint family constituting a partnership—Whether maintainable—Limitation.

Where male members of a (Mohammedan) family carry on business jointly and have a joint purse and there is an understanding with regard to the sharing of the profits, they are members of a partnership as defined in Sec. 239 of the Contract Act. On the death of a member it is open to the surviving male members of the family to wind up the business and to pay off the heirs of the deceased member by valuing their interests. If the surviving male members prefer to carry on the business, retaining the entire assets, including the shares of the heirs of deceased member, with the result that the profits of their shares in the business and the property are made use of for improving the business and making acquisitions instead of being paid to them, Sec. 88, Illustration (f) and Sec. 90 of the Trusts Act (II of 1882) apply and the heirs of the deceased member are entitled to their shares (under the Mohammedan Law) not only in the property and the business as they were at the time of the death of the member but also in the subsequent improvements and acquisitions; and the heirs of the deceased member can maintain a suit for joint possession of the assets in the hands of the surviving members and Art. 144 of the Limitation Act applies to such a suit. It is not incumbent on them to institute a suit for an account and a share of the profits of a dissolved partnership to which Art. 106 of the Limitation Act applies.

It is open to the surviving members to charge for their personal services a reasonable remuneration, but if they do not do so, they cannot afterwards insist on account being taken of their personal services which it is impossible to assess in terms of money or a share in the improvements and acquisitions. SHUKRULLAH v. ZUHRA BIBI. 1039

U. P. LAND REVENUE ACT (III of 1901).

See Land Revenue Act.

U. P. MUNICIPALITIES ACT (II of 1916).

See Municipalities Act.

WILL—Construction of—Testatrix gave to P (Executor under the Will) the right to spend the entire income of her estate—For maintaining himself and his family—Whether income of estate given to P—Succession Act (XXXIX of 1925), Sec. 172.

Where the testatrix expressly said in her will that she was maintaining one P and she wanted to maintain him in future, and she authorised him to deal with her property by appointing him the executor and gave him the right to spend the entire income of her estate for maintaining himself and his family, on this condition that if P turned out to be a man of dissolute habits, her property was to be utilized in raising money and in constructing a temple, held, (1) that the testatrix intended to give and did give the income of her estate to P, and as a matter of law the estate belonged to P (Sec. 172 of Succession Act of 1925); (2) that the prohibition against alienation being inconsistent with the interest given, was bad in law. MANNU LAL v. LACHHMAN DAS. 564 ———Series of successive interests—Each legatee given powers like testator—Bequests of life-interests only—Tests for determination of.

Where a testator appointed A as the successor to his property and the will recited that whatever powers the testator had in respect of the property, the legatee shall have like himself, the very same powers with powers of possession and enjoyment as owner and on the death of A, B, if alive, was to be his successor with the same powers as were bestowed on A. Similarly after B, C was to be his successor. After all these three successors the property was to pass to some one or more persons selected in a specified manner. Held, that successive life-interests only were conferred on A, B and C. The dominant intention of the testator was that the property should pass to three persons in succession, and this intention was inconsistent with the idea of a series of absolute interests, and the gift in the will of the same powers as the testator had, must be read as a gift of such powers so far as was consistent with the subsequent provisions of the instrument. NISAR ALI KHAN v. MOHAMMAD ALI KHAN. 691

ALLAHABAD LAW JOURNAL

[1932] APRIL 1, 1932 NUMBER 1

LAW LIBRARY

THE HISTORY AND STATUS OF LANDLORDS AND TENANTS IN THE UNITED PROVINCES, by S. N. A. Jafri, B.A., Barrister-at-Law. (The Pioneer Press, Allahabad, pages 438).

It is common knowledge that the effects of the catastrophic fall in prices of primary products has been felt more severely in the United Provinces than in any other Province in India, and the system of land tenure in these Provinces has been put to a very severe test. At a time like the present men's minds are prone to be carried away by clap-trap, and we think Mr. Jafri's book will be very helpful to those who want to trace the roots of the present system, and view it in its true perspective. A reformer who has before his mind's eye a historical picture of the evolution of the present system, can put his finger with certainty on the weak spots.

The book is divided into two parts. The first two chapters deal with 'Ancient India', and the 'Muslim period' and in about seventy three pages the author has summarised the results of his extensive reading of the literature relating to the period. Chapter III sketches the 'Early history of British revenue administration', and Chapter IV contains a good account of the controversy as to the merits of the permanent and periodical settlements. Chapter V views historically 'The assessment in the Agra Province'. Chapters VI & VII, which deal with the 'Legal position of the tenant in the United Provinces' have been written with care and precision, and will provide a useful guide to the practising lawyer. Chapter VIII outlines the 'Administrative machinery to safeguard tenures'.

Part II is mainly descriptive. The author gives a vivid account of village life, methods of agriculture, irrigation, education and sanitation. Chapter VIII deals with the problem of Indebtedness. Chapter XI and XII deal with 'Rural economy' and 'Village uplift'. In this part much useful information which is scattered over a very large number of Blue Books, has been collected in one place in a systematic way.

We have no doubt that the book will prove exceedingly useful to those who are interested in the 'Agrarian Problem', and even a practising lawyer will find certain parts of the book well worth careful study.

ALLAHABAD LAW JOURNAL

1932 AUGUST 12, 1932 NUMBER 2

LAW LIBRARY

THE LAW OF SHAH JOG AND OTHER HUNDIS, by Ramniklal R. Mody, B.A., LL.B. (Published by the Author). pp. 60.

This book is a reprint of articles which have appeared in the Bombay Law Journal. The nature of the Shah Jog Hundi was first discussed by Arnould, J. in Doulatram's case (1869) 6 Bom. H. C. 24, which is the leading case on the subject. In this little book Mr. Mody has brought together all the available decisions, and the discussion of the case-law is clear and exhaustive. The book will be greatly appreciated by those who have occasion to study this subject.

THE COURT FEES AND SUITS VALUATION ACTS, by Mr. Anand Swarup, B.A., LL.B., Vakil, Allahabad (1932) Price Rs.1-8-0.

This book embodies the recent amendments made in the Court Fees Act which came into force on May 1 last. To the sections are added short commentaries and the important cases on the point. A comparative table showing the changes made in the amounts of the court-fees now payable enhances the usefulness of the work. There are appendices dealing with the refund, renewal and remissions of the court-fees. A note on the valuation of suits serves as a helpful introduction to the book. The get-up is neat and the price moderate. It should prove a handy book of reference alike to the members of the profession and the officers of the Court.

THE ALL-INDIA LAW DIGEST (1921-1930) AND CENTURY REFERENCER (1821-1920), by A. S. Srinivasa Aiyar. (The Law Publishing Company, Mylapore, Madras). Two Volumes.

This Digest in two volumes covers the cases reported from 1921 to 1930. The cases digested have been grouped under appropriate headings and catch-words to be prefaced to cases have been selected with care. A novel feature of the book is the incorporation of a 'Referencer,' where deemed necessary, which gives references to cases decided between 1821-1920, and thereby facilitates the collection of the case-law on the point under study in the shortest possible time. We have no doubt these volumes will be very useful to the legal profession.

THE LAW OF EVIDENCE IN INDIA, by A. K. Ghose, Bar-at-Law (Butterworth & Co.).

The aim of the author is to write a text-book on the Law of Evidence, such as would be useful to students and junior practitioners in India. The book has been divided into six parts, viz., General Principles of Evidence; Relevancy of Evidence; Cogency of Evidence; Witnesses; Instruments of proof; General. Each part is again divided into a number of chapters, which contain a clear and logical account of the subject, and the case-law has been utilised with discrimination to throw light on the principles discussed. The last part contains a valuable chapter on the 'Rights and duties of the Profession of the Advocate.' The Indian Evidence Act has been reproduced in the Appendix for convenience of reference. We strongly recommend this book to those who want to form clear ideas on the subject.

ELEMENTS OF THE LAW OF CONTRACT, by W. G. H. Cook, LL.D. (Lond.), Bar-at-Law (Butterworth & Co. Ltd.). pp. 203.

This book sets out the Law of England relating to contract as it stands at the present time without undue use of technical terms. Questions of the historical development of the law have also to a large extent been avoided. The book contains an admirably clear and succinct statement of the Law of Contract, and has not been unnecessarily burdened with cases, which have been given throughout the book in the form of illustrations.

A novel feature in the arrangement of the work is the insertion of a chapter entitled "Conditions, warranties and covenants" immediately after the chapter dealing with the parties to a contract, and a number of matters are considered in this chapter, which are generally scattered throughout the chapters dealing with misrepresentation, illegality and assignment. There is a very full discussion of the Law relating to Bills of Exchange, Promissory Notes and Cheques. The general get-up and printing is excellent.

ALLAHABAD LAW JOURNAL

[1932] OCTOBER 21, 1932 NUMBER 3

MR. JUSTICE LALIT MOHAN BANERJI

We deeply regret to record the sudden death of Mr. Justice Lalit Mohan Banerji on the morning of October 15, 1932, from heart-failure. The eloquent tributes which were paid to his memory by the Bench and Bar of the Allahabad High Court, and the numerous meetings which have been held all over the province to mourn his loss are indicative of the high esteem in which he was held by the people of these Provinces. Born and bred in this part of the country, he was regarded by all as one of themselves. He was an advocate and Judge of ripe experience and combined wide legal knowledge with strong common sense. As a man he inspired confidence and was held in genuine affection by a large circle of friends. He was one of the founders of the Allahabad Law Journal and his interest in it continued unabated and his advice was always at our disposal. As was truly said by Sir Tej Bahadur Sapru, Sir Promada Charan Banerji and his son have left a name in the history of the Allahabad High Court which will never be forgotten. We tender our most heart-felt sympathies to the members of his family.

REFERENCES IN HIGH COURT

A touching reference was made to the sudden death of Mr. Justice Lalit Mohan Banerji, by the Bench and the Bar, on Oct. 17, at the High Court. As a mark of respect to the memory of the deceased, the Judges closed their courts for the day.

CHIEF JUSTICE

The Chief Justice said—Members of the Bar, it was with the deepest sorrow and grief that we received the sad news of the sudden death of Mr. Justice Lalit Mohan Banerji. The shock was so sudden that for a moment it was difficult to believe that he had really passed away from our midst. He attended the High Court on Friday last and he sat at an English meeting till 4 P.M. that day. He looked so strong and fit that no one could have imagined that he would expire in a little over 12 hours.

Mr. Justice L. M. Banerji was a distinguished judge of this High Court and enjoyed the respect, reverence and confidence of the bench and the bar.

His relations with his colleagues on the bench and with the members of the bar were most cordial and friendly. He had a deep and sound knowledge of the principles of law and a vast experience of judicial work, particularly criminal work. His jovial temperament made him very popular with every one who came in contact with him and for us judges it was a pleasure to sit with him on the bench.

Mr. Justice Banerji had been associated with this High Court for over thirty years. He was born in 1875 and after taking the degrees of Master of Arts and Bachelor of Laws from the Muir Central College, Allahabad, he joined the legal profession in 1899. During his college days he was a good cricketer, a fine sportsman and later he developed into a keen motorist. For the first time in 1906 he officiated as the Government pleader of this High Court and was later on made the permanent Government pleader in 1913 and continued to work as Government pleader till 1921 when he was made the permanent Government advocate. His work was very highly appreciated and the title of Rai Bahadur was conferred on him on the New Year's Day in 1921 when he was still the Government pleader. In 1925 he officiated as a judge of the High Court and from 1926 onwards he had been a permanent member of our bench. Besides performing his judicial duties he served on several Government committees and educational bodies. He was for instance a member of the Racial Discriminations Committee and also a member of the Indian Bar Committee which were both appointed by the Government of India.

He was indeed a dear friend. His memory will remain fresh not only in the minds of those who have known him but through his weighty judicial pronouncements he will be remembered long by the future generations of lawyers. He has died at the early age of 57 years and undoubtedly he had a peaceful end. He was found as if he were sleeping calmly in his bed in the morning. It must have been a painless death to him though by the mere fact of its unexpectedness it is all the more painful to the survivors who are left behind to mourn his loss. The loss has been very great to the High Court. On behalf of my learned colleagues and myself I offer our most heartfelt condolence and sympathy to the members of his bereaved family.

SIR T. B. SAPRU

Sir Tej Bahadur Sapru said—My lord Chief Justice and my lords, it is hardly possible for us to realize that we have assembled this morning to mourn the death of one who occupied such a large space in this court during the last 33 years. Your lordships are mourning the loss of a valuable colleague on the bench. We on this side are mourning the loss of one who was not merely an ornament of the profession until he was raised to the bench but who also was a personal friend, and a very good friend, of many of us. He joined the profession just one year after I moved to the High Court, and during the last 32 years of our close and intimate association I cannot recollect a single occasion when there was the slightest misunderstanding between him and myself or, for the matter of that, between him and any other member of the profession. We all recognized his ability as a lawyer, his great common sense, his power of appreciation of evidence both when he was at the bar and when he was elevated to the bench. Above everything else, I can say with confidence that the feeling in all the grades of the profession about him was that it was a real genuine pleasure for any one of us, senior or junior, to appear before him and argue our cases before him. To untiring industry he united common sense, great and varied experience and above everything else, a temper which could never be ruffled.

My lord, I cannot recollect of any legal family in India with a more distinguished record than that of the Banerjis of this court. Their history takes us back to 1871, that is to say, to a period some six years after the establishment of this court. His great and distinguished father was, if I may say so respectfully, one of the most outstanding members of this bench for 30 years. There was hardly any interregnum before the son succeeded, if I may say so, the father on the bench. Long legal and judicial traditions ran in his blood and though it would be difficult for any one to say that he was in every respect as great a judge as his father, yet I feel confident when I say that he very nobly maintained the traditions of this bench and the traditions which he had inherited from his father.

To many of us and, if I may respectfully say so, to me in particular, his death has come as a great personal loss. He returned from England, after seeing his son who is a cadet at Sandhurst at present, only a week or 10 days ago and some of us had not even met him in private. If you had asked any one of us on Friday night that on Monday morning we should meet in this court to mourn his loss we should have considered it an absolute impossibility. But such is life. We are assembled here to mourn his loss—the loss of a dear and valued friend of many of us and the loss of a judge who served his country and his King with zeal, ability, honesty and integrity. My lord, I shall stop there.

SIR C. R. ALSTON

Sir Charles Ross Alston said.—May it please your lordships, it would be a true statement if I said that we have met this morning to lament the sudden death of a dear friend who happened to have been a judge of this High Court and the emotion we all feel is proof of the esteem and affection with which we regarded Mr. Justice Banerji. The passing away of a friend is always a painful event. When such an event comes in as unexpected a way as in the present case the suddenness accentuates the feeling.

Nevertheless, to pass away after a life of fulfilment without the not uncommon interlude of a long-drawn out illness, accompanied by suffering, is a thing that many would envy. My friendship with Lalit Mohan Banerji—for it was as such that I always thought it was—was a long-standing and very sincere friendship. I got to know him first when he joined the bar of this court. I saw him proceed from private practitioner to Government pleader, then to Government advocate, and ultimately to a seat on the same bench that his distinguished father had occupied for many years. We who knew the son's qualities so well cannot doubt that the father must have been proud of his son's work as judge of this court.

Your lordship and Sir Tej Bahadur Sapru have dealt so fully with Mr. Justice Banerji's work as a judge and have put such just appreciation of its value that there is nothing that I can add on this subject. At the bar Lalit Mohan Banerji showed by his presentation of his cases how well he had prepared himself. His arguments were clear and precise. He was scrupulously fair to his opponent and would never make a statement that the record did not support. For this reason he was trusted completely by both the bench and the bar. As Government advocate he had the moral courage to give expression to any doubt he felt as to the soundness of a conviction. A mere desire to win his case never made him press any point which he considered was not a sound one.

None knew better than your Lordships how helpful he was as a colleague. Nor need I remind the bar of his courtesy, his patience and his fairness on the bench. As a man he was a charming and interesting companion. He knew human nature and had a strong sense of humour. He will be missed by all of us to an unusual degree for his popularity was great. As a judge we of the bar admired him, as an advocate we appreciated his abilities and as a friend we loved him much.

DR. N. C. VAISH

Dr. N. C. Vaish said—My lords, for myself as well as for those whom I represent (members of the High Court bar who do not belong either to the Advocates' Association or to the Bar Library on whose behalf Sir Tej Bahadur Sapru and Sir Charles Ross Alston, respectively, had already spoken), I beg to associate myself with everything that has fallen from the lips of Sir Tej Bahadur Sapru and Sir Charles Ross Alston.

As the sad news that Providence had removed our beloved judge from the field of his activities into the beyond broke upon us, we all felt staggered, and I have no doubt whatever that each one of us, high or low in office, wealth and name, aspiring for the same, deeply felt for the moment how insignificant man was, how in his vanity he lays out plans for his future, not always mindful of others, as if he were going to live for ever, while there is a mysterious power which dashes to pieces all his plans by terminating his earthly sojourn without notice at its sweet will.

In life the late judge brought lustre to the court by bright sunny smiles and good will towards all. He meted out justice tinged with mercy and overflowed with genuine sympathy for the losing party. Even in his severest strictures against the subordinate judiciary, police or litigants as his righteous ire was roused when he smelt anything neglectful or unclean, he differentiated the act from the actor.

So good indeed was the late judge that even in parting company from us he has provided us with a moral. His sudden departure will always remind us that each one of us, however situated, is after all a soldier on the march likely to be removed into the eternal beyond at any moment. Its recollection will always bring us nearer to our Maker and serve as a wholesome warning to us amidst our manifold activities.

MR. U. S. BAJPAI

Mr. Uma Shankar Bajpai, Government Advocate, said—My lords, a distinguished son of a distinguished father, is no more. More than two years ago we assembled in this very room to offer our mournful tribute to the late Sir Promoda Charan Banerji. But then he died at a ripe old age in the fullness of time and who could have thought that so soon after we shall have to assemble again here to mourn the loss of his son in such an unexpected way?

About 10 days back he came from England where he had gone for his vacation, and when we saw him every one of us complimented him upon his health for we in our short-sighted vision saw him looking extremely bright and little did we dream that Death with muffled steps was staring behind him! On the 14th he came to court, did his full quota of work, went home, had his dinner and smoked his usual cigar and then retired to bed, but in the early hours of the morning God's finger touched him and he slept a sleep that knows no waking.

Mr. Justice Banerji was a good judge. He had a strong common sense, a quick grasp of facts and a sound knowledge of the principles of law. His great experience on the criminal side of the bar made him an exceptionally good criminal judge. He had almost a weird knack of getting at the bottom of things.

'Your client is a blackguard' was a favourite expression of his, which he used against a member of the bar when he was trying to present his case in a favourable light and that expression very often induced the advocate concerned to take his seat with a good grace. His fund of wit and humour was inexhaustible and his cheerfulness was always great. I overheard one of your lordships telling another, 'We shall miss his cheery presence in the English meetings.' I heard a junior member of the bar telling another, 'The human judge is gone.' He meant no disrespect to any of your lordships, but Mr. Justice Banerji was above all intensely human.

He has left a number of friends to mourn his loss here and elsewhere. Enemies he had none. To his son and to his daughter, to his brother and to his sister, we offer our sincerest condolence and share with them in their great grief.

ALLAHABAD LAW JOURNAL

[1932] AUGUST 5, 1932 NUMBER 1

PRINCIPLES GOVERNING THE FORFEITURE OF BAIL-BONDS

(By H. K. SHARGHA, B.A., LL.B.)

It is proposed in this little essay to give a short and analytical statement of the principles and precedents underlying the forfeiture of bail-bonds. The definition of 'bailable offences' in the Cr. P. C., is neither accurate nor illuminating and, in view of the amendments and the latest decisions, only an heirloom of archaelogical interest. 'Bail' is derived from the Latin 'Bajulare', 'to keep in custody', through the Old French 'baillier', 'to give or deliver.' It means: (i) 'the custody of a prisoner or person under arrest by a person who procures his release from imprisonment by giving security for his appearance' (as distinguished from official custody); or (ii) the security given for the due appearance of a prisoner in order to obtain his release from imprisonment and involves the undertaking by the surety of the appearance 'at a certain day and place of the person bailed'.

The Cr. P. C. permits the taking of such an assurance, with a fixed penalty for default, in any of the following three ways: By taking from (a) 'the person wanted' or the 'principal', if sui juris, a 'Muchalka zati,' variously called a 'personal recognizance', 'bond without sureties' or 'personal bond'; or (b) a bond from third persons called 'sureties', (i) in addition to a 'personal bond' from the 'principal, if he is sui juris, otherwise (ii) in lieu thereof[1]; or a deposit[2] of money or G. C. Notes as a substitute for both or for a bond from the 'principal.'

Strictly speaking, 'bail' is really a tripartite contract[3] of continuing[4] guarantee[5], on behalf of a third person, and a personal recognizance is of the nature of a contract of indemnity[6].

Thus it is necessary for the proper appreciation of the subject to refer to the principles of contracts. For the sake of facility, I have borrowed from American phraseology, the terms: (1) 'obligor' as commonly or jointly referring, both to the principals or sureties; and (2) 'obligee', likewise referring to the 'office' or 'court' for whom or to whom this assurance is given.

GENERAL POLICY

Before discussing the other aspects of the subject it appears desirable to remove some misapprehensions about the policy of the law in such cases. The administration of criminal justice is in the hands of the executive, interested equally in the maintenance of law and order, the prevention of crime and the dispensing of justice—with all its technicalities and formalities. It is very difficult to maintain a strict and proper balance between the various capacities. The result is such that the High Court had to repeat again and again that 'the Magistrate trying the case has to protect the interests of the prosecution and the defence alike' and he 'is expected to afford all facilities to the accused not only when he is compelled by law to do so, but also when he has a discretion in the matter and the ends of justice require that'[7]. Similarly, undue reliance on the advice of the Superintendent of Police or Kotwal has been disapproved[8], as also a reference to the opinions of the Government Advocate or the Public Prosecutor[9]. And in actual practice, the influence of the police is very often felt. So far as the sureties are concerned, High Courts have recommended that they should always be treated in a considerate manner[10] ' lest indiscriminate forfeitures should bring our administration on that point into general disrepute.'

---

[1] Ss. 466 and 514B Cr. P. C.

[2] S. 513

[3] S. .10 Contract Act

[4] S. 129 Contract Act

[5] S. 126 Contract Act

[6] S. 124 Contract Act

The subject may for the sake of convenience be divided into three broad divisions: (a) Where the contract is not valid from the beginning. (b) Where the obligor is under no obligation to perform his part. (c) Where performance is rendered impossible by subsequent events.

(a) The contract may be void ab initio on the following grounds:—

1.—INCOMPETENCY OF THE PARTY

On the principles contained in Sections 11 and 13 of the Contract Act, the incompetency to contract may arise from minority, unsoundness of mind or some other law placing the party under a disability to contract. The first two conditions would generally govern the cases of the obligee but not of the obligors who take bail in their official capacity.

(i) The incompetency of the obligee.—(a) A Police officer's capacity to take bail is restricted by Section 57 or 59, Clause (3), Cr. P. C. and if he happens to be investigating the case by Sections 167 and 169. Such an officer's bond would be useless if he takes bail under conditions other than those mentioned in these sections. Similarly, an officer incharge of a Police Station (and also his superior officer under Section 551) can take bail under Sections 84, 169, 170, 171, 496 and 497. This is all subject to the local limitations of the district in which they are operating or the terms of the legal orders of the court on which they are acting and also to the ouster of their jurisdiction by the cognizance of courts.

Thus a Police officer's capacity to take bail is restricted by the Code according to the nature of his office and the nature of the offence. This is all subject to the territorial limits and sub-limits of Police districts as well as by the local jurisdiction of the officer, to whom the court sends a warrant for execution. He is not competent to act beyond his limitations and if he does so, his bond would probably be considered void.

---

[7] Per Niamatullah, J., 1932 Cr. C. (All.) 176

[8] Ibid

[9] Per Shah and Martin, JJ., 45 I. C. 512

[10] Per Kensington, J., 21 I. C. 176

(b) The Jurisdiction of the Courts

(i) Absence of local jurisdiction.—Sections 12, 14-15, 20-22 , 25 Cr. P. C. govern the local jurisdiction of the criminal court. In a case where a first class magistrate of Rai Bareli took bail from a person against whom a warrant from the court of the District Magistrate of Badaun was pending; and in spite of the bond, the accused did not appear at Badaun and the bond was forfeited, the order of forfeiture was cancelled on the ground that the Magistrate of Rai Bareli had no jurisdiction to take it[11].

Similarly, in a Rangoon case where an Additional Sessions Judge had taken bail, it was cancelled as that court had no jurisdiction to allow bail being not specially empowered in that behalf[12].

(ii) Absence of jurisdiction in certain classes of cases.—Under Schedule 2, Column 8 of Cr. P. C., groups of offences to be tried by different classes of magistrates are given and Section 530 mentions the voidability of certain proceedings, if done by courts not having that jurisdiction, e.g., bonds under Chapter VIII by Second or Third Class Magistrates.

(iii) Jurisdiction may not have arisen.—For example, under Sections 190-194, Cr. P. C. or (iv) Having arisen, it might have been (a) ousted by transfer or by being excluded by being in the siesin, even of a subordinate magistrate. Where a district magistrate cancelled bail in a case pending before a subordinate court, his order was considered void and illegal. It would have been illegal on the same principle to have taken bail[13], (b) or exhausted, e.g., by pronouncement of the final order when the court becomes functus officio for the purposes of that case. Where a person was bound over after discharge his bond was considered illegal[14], but this is different from a bond under Section 562—when there is a non-technical discharge after a warning. After conviction it is only the appellate or revisional court alone that can grant bail[15]. If the trying magistrate were to take bail after conviction that would be void.

(v) Special jurisdiction.—The Cr. P. C. has specially extended powers of bail even to Civil and Revenue Courts[16] only for offences mentioned in Clauses (b) and (c) of Section 195 when committed in their courts. Where bail was taken for the personal attendance of the appellant in a civil case, it was considered void—being a bail which that court was not authorized to take.

Thus, it is clear that the capacity of the 'obligee', i.e., the officer or the court taking bail is exactly commensurate and coeval with his legal power to demand it.

(ii) The 'incompetency' of the 'obligors'.—'Minority' and 'unsoundness of mind' would account for incapacity in either case. But incapacity of the principal would not affect the liability of the surety or

---

[11] Per Mears, C. J. and Sen, J., 120 I. C. 194: 1930 A. L. J. 199: 1929 Cr. C. 642: A. I. R. (1929) A. 914

[12] Per Doyle, J., 1930 Cr. C. (Rang.) 1151

[13] 1932 Cr. C. (All.) 308

[14] 84 I. C. 944: A. I. R. 1925 (Oudh) 314

[15] Ss. 426-427, 432, 434, 438-9 Cr. P. C.

[16] Ss. 476, 476A, 476B, 478, 482, 485-6

vice versa. So far as the surety is concerned, he can be a juristic person and the validity of his bonds will probably be affected by its constitution. If the releasing on bail does not come within its objects, the bond would probably be void. Section 514-B has now clearly provided for the bond of surety in place of that of the principal. Section 466 makes similar provision for the case of an insane person. Bonds by minors and insane persons, if taken, are void; but in those cases sureties are treated as principals. If no personal bond is taken from the principal where he is major or of sound mind, the surety has been held not to be liable[17].

In a civil case where the principal was insane, his surety was held liable for the contract[18].

But the surety's incapacity to contract is quite different from his 'sufficiency' or 'fitness' which refers to his financial stability or in some cases his capacity to control the conduct or behaviour of the principal[19].

2.—ABSENCE OF FREE CONSENT

This would cover two sorts of cases: (i) where there is no consent, i.e., where the parties do not agree to the same thing in the same sense or (ii) when the consent is not free.

(i) Such cases would arise where parties come to an agreement without both of them meaning the same thing. In other words, they come to an apparent agreement, while in reality they do not. This may be the result of a mistake[20], which both the parties have made or even the obligor alone about some essential matter, e.g., regarding date, time, place[21], or necessity[22] of appearance or where the meaning of the pact is uncertain[28] or incapable of being made certain[24]. Such cases may arise where, as sometimes happens, the police officers take bonds which are blank at the time of signatures of the obligors and are filled in later.

(ii) Another set of cases arises where obligor agrees to give bail as a result of the 'obligee' or somebody on his behalf succeeding in taking it by (a) abuse of authority or (b) fraud.

(a) In a Punjab case where an allegation was made by the surety, that he had to stand bail for another, because his son was involved in another case, and he was afraid that his son would be prejudiced, by his refusing the police officer asking him to do so; it was held that this was a case of abuse of influence and as such the surety was excused[25]. Probably the same principle would apply where the question of coercion is raised.

But the test of undue influence or coercion[26] requires very careful consideration against abuse, as whoever gives bail in a criminal case must, by the very nature of the circumstances, be under some sort of fear of his own or of some friend's being sent to jail in the alternative.

---

[17] 109 I. C. 219: A. I. R. (1928) Lahore 318

[18] [1907] 17 Mad. L. J. 78

[19] Chapter VIII or 562 Cr. P. C.

[20] Ss. 20-22 Contract Act

[21] 124 I. C. 85: A. I. R. (1929) Pat. 658

[22] 34 I. C. 944: A. I. R. 1925 (Oudh) 314: 97 I. C. 672: A. I. R. 1926 (Lah.) 636

[23] 65 I. C. 420: 23 Cr. L. J. 68

[24] S. 29 Contract Act

[25] 5 P. W. R. (1918) Cr.

[26] Ss. 15 and 16 Contract Act

But such a plea does not appear to have ever been raised on behalf of the principal.

(b) Similarly, consent might be secured by abuse of the ignorance of the obligor or some special knowledge of circumstances of the obligee by (i) fraudulent concealment or (ii) misrepresentation[27] of the facts which ought to have been fully and truly made known to the obligor, for a full and correct appreciation of the facts necessary for the deliberation and consideration of the obligor.

It has been held in an English case that "a surety ought to be acquainted with the whole contract entered with his principal[28]." This is specially necessary where the obligors are ignorant and illiterate.

3.—ABSENCE OF LAWFUL CONSIDERATION OR OBJECT[29]

Like other contracts, a bail bond would become illegal, if the purpose for which it is taken is in contravention of a statute or opposed to its general policy and intent, or forbidden by law, or is of a nature different from that sanctioned by the Code[30]. For example, a bond for the personal attendance of the surety[31], or a bond from an agent[32] or possibly from sureties under Sections 217, 171 or 170, Clause (2) or of an appellant under the civil law[33] or for production of witnesses before police[34].

Probably, the same principles would cover those cases where magistrates in mofussils sometimes bind the 'pairokars,' relations or friends of persons (specially female witnesses under Section 498 I. P. C.), who cannot be otherwise traced but are thought to be under their influence—just to facilitate appearance of a defaulter or an accused[35].

4.—A PARTICULAR FORM IN WRITING

Schedule V gives the various forms on which different bonds should be taken[36]. A particular form being prescribed, no amount of verbal instructions or agreement would be binding on anybody. But the contract being one of continuous performance, no writing is essential for a subsequent appearance, an oral direction from the court had been thought to be enough[37]. But not so, if it proceeds from the Peshkar alone, if the court is not being held.

For a bond, usually the details in Clause (2) of Section 76 or Section 499 are necessary except those taken under Section 169 Cr. P. C.

Bonds have been considered illegal where these essentials were missing: e.g., time, place, or money penalty[38] or court or officer before whom attendance is required[39].

[27] Ss. 17 and 18 Contract Act, read with 19-22, and 142-3

[28] Per Littledale and Bayley, JJ., Bedcock v. Bishop, 27 R. R. at 433 and 435. Also 15 Bom. 64: 2 K. B. 72: 15 B. 585

[29] S. 23 Contract Act

[30] 32 P. R. (1903)

[31] 5 B. H. C. R. (Cr.) 64

[32] Ss. 207 and 117 Cr. P. C.

[33] P. R. 75 of 1866

[34] 11 C. 77; 22 P. W. R. (Cr.)

[35] e.g. 22 P. W. R. (1907)=6 Cr. L. J. 275

[36] e.g. Forms Nos. 2, 3, 15-16, 37, 42 and 45

[37] 1 Weir 87

[38] [1885] A. W. N. 44; 6 Cr. L. J. 275; 20 I. C. (1913) 414

[39] 36 C. 749

These bonds should be strictly[40] interpreted and an obligor should not be made to suffer for any condition which is not expressed in it[41] or which is outside or contrary to its scope[42], or for an offence other than for which bail is taken[43].

Certain additional conditions were imposed on an application for bail presented by some persons accused in the Meerut Conspiracy Case[44]. The cases being under trial would not admit of discussion.

It has been held that bonds cannot be forfeited, if the penal clause is not inserted in persuance of the order of the magistrate[45]; nor for an offence different from the one for which bail is taken[46]; or for not appearing before another court[47], if that court is on tour and the accused is asked to appear before another.

Similarly, where a bond under Chapter VIII was taken and an offence was committed in a Native State, it was held that the bond could not be forfeited, as the obligation referred to the King-Emperor, which could not be extended to the ruler of a Native State[48]; but the penalty could not be avoided where the offence was committed in another Indian district under the British Government[49]. Nor could the offender be held liable, when he had given a bond under one clause of Section 110 when the offence referred to another clause[50] unless the obligation was wide enough to include both the clauses[51]. Nor was he held liable when he was bound under Section 107 and committed an offence which was not one involving breach of the peace[52].

B.—Fact justifying non-performance or rendering the performance of the bail-obligations voidable inspite of the validity of the contract[53].

It has been held in an American case that: "It is the settled law of this class of cases that the bail will be exonerated where the performance of the conviction is rendered impossible by the Act of God, the Act of the obligee or the Act of the law . . . . "

This may be due to the subsequent events making performance impossible or optional by acts of (a) obligee, amongst which might be included illegal omissions or some other default of the obligee, (b) third party,.(c) obligor.

(a) Among the acts of the obligee would come two sorts of cases: (i) obligee not doing its own part of the obligation: e.g., fixing a date on

---

[40] 23 Cr. L. J. 68.

[41] [1930] Cr. C. 1015: A. I. R. 1930 Pat. 519; 11 P. L. T. 578

[42] Rat. Un. Cr. C. 547; 26 A. L. J. 443

[43] 76 I. C. 227=25 Cr. L. J. 131

[44] A. I. R. 1931 (All.) 356, per Mukerjee and Boys, JJ. and per Sulaiman, A. C. J. and Young and King, JJ., in A. I. R. [1931] 504

[45] A. I. R. 1928 (Rang.) 310: 114 I. C. 682; 1930 Cr. C. 1015

[46] 16 I. C. 27

[47] 84 I. C. 933: 30 C. 107:

[48] 47 I. C. 440

[49] 2 B. L. R. App. XI

[50] 14 Cr. L. J. 430

[51] 1906 A. W. N. 13

[52] 4 Cr. L. J. 278; 18 W. R. 48 (Cr.); 25 I. C. 517

[53] S. 56 Contract Act

Sunday and then not holding court on that day[54]; or not informing obligor of the next date[55]; or passing no order for the next date or giving him a wrong date, time or place for appearance. But absence of written order would be insufficient to excuse the defaulter[56] or if he attends the court but not at the time fixed[57] or when called[58] or if he departs before the conclusion of the trial[59] or if he is absent at the time the next date is fixed[60].

Similar provisions would govern the agent of the obligor[61] and neither of them would be excusable if the principals do not appear from day to day if required to do so[62]. The same principles would extend to orders of the magistrate which are either illegal or legal if they create an impossibility of performance. In a case where a magistrate of Agra ordered the accused to proceed to South India with the result that the surety could not produce him at Agra, Banerji, J. held:

> It is the duty of the surety to see that the accused does not run away, but I do not agree with the view, that where a surety has failed to produce the accused, by reason of an illegal order passed by a magistrate, which the surety was not bound to carry out, and where there is no connivance and no negligence, it cannot be said that the petitioner has stood surety irresponsibly, and I do not think that this would be a case which would give an impression that any one can stand as a surety and not be penalised in the event of failing in his trust.[68]

Similarly, where in a Punjab case a person accused of murder was released on bail and kept in hospital under police guard and later he absconded and the surety alleged that he was not allowed to keep full watch and guard on the accused, the High Court held that the circumstances ought to have been considered, if not for completely excusing the surety, at least for mitigation[64]. Similarly, where a court at Nowada, without the surety's consent permitted the accused to leave the district without surety's consent, for purposes of trade and later transferred the case to Gaya where the accused did not appear, it was held that the bond was not forfeited[65]. Under almost identical circumstances it was held in an American[66] case that:

> It would be against all principle and all justice, to allow the Government to recover against the sureties, for not producing their principal, when it had itself consented to his placing himself beyond their reach and control.

This would also probably extend to omission of the court to take action under Section 502 C. P. C. or if after forfeiture the obligee does not

[54] 106 I. C. 108: A. I. R. 1928 (Lah.) 20: 2 C. W. N. 15

[55] 31 Cr. L. J. 605'

[56] 5 M. H. C. R. (Cr.) App. XV: I Weir 87

[57] A. I. R. 1928 (Cal.) 261

[58] People v. Wiglas, 5 Ben. 58

[59] People v. Mc. Coy, 59 Barb. 73

[60] People v. Bartlett, 3 Hill 570

[61] Ss. 205 and 116 Cr. P. C; 5 B. H. C. R. 64

[62] 6 M. H. C. R. App. 38: 2 Weir 662

[63] 102 I. C. 554

[64] 125 I. C. 376: A. I. R. 1930 (Lah.) 591

[65] 13 W. R. (Cr.) 53

[66] U. S. Supreme Court Report, Volume XIX 541

take a fresh bond. On a similar ground a surety was discharged of his obligations in a civil case in England[67].

(ii) The other set of cases would arise where the obligee varies the terms of the bond without express consent[68] of the surety. In an English case Lord Lyndhurst, L.C. held that the surety could be responsible only when > the engagement is carried into complete, literal and strict effect. He enters into a particular and specific contract and that contract alone, he is bound to perform.[69]

In English rulings there is some difference of opinion as to the effect of "Self evident and unsubstantial" variation but the better opinion seems to be that a variation without surety's consent would be to discharge him. This point has been discussed in an American case which happened to be for forfeiture of a bail bond where it is said:

> Any change in the contract, on which they are sureties, made by the principal parties to it, without their assent discharges them and for obvious reasons. When the change is made they are not bound by the contract in its original form, for that has ceased to exist. They are not bound by the contract in its altered form, for to that they have never assented; nor does it matter how trivial the change or even that it may be of advantage to the sureties. They have a right to stand upon the very terms of their undertaking[70].

Nor would they permit a substitute. In a Privy Council case from New Zealand it was held that the obligee cannot alter the contract without the surety's consent and then say:

> Although the contract has been altered and I have put it out of my power to carry it out by a voluntary act, I offer you an equivalent[71].

But in an Indian case they seem to have gone even further and held that even a written stipulation in a contract of guarantee whereby the surety purports to waive all his rights, legal, equitable, statutory or otherwise, which may be inconsistent with the guarantee, will not deprive the surety of his right to discharge under the section[72].

Similarly where the sureties agreed to certain conditions in the bond which were bad in law, the order demanding them was considered illegal and the bail-bond void[73].

(b) Acts of third party making performance impossible are not usually considered valid under the American law. They consider acts of other courts as acts of third parties and do not recognise them as good for this purpose. But under the Indian Law they appear to be considered just as good as other unavoidable events like an "Act of God." But where complainant and accused in a 107 case agreed to stay away, and thus allowed it to be dismissed for default, the compromise was not considered a bar to forfeiture[74].

[67] Phillips v. Foxall, L. R. 7 Q. B. 666

[68] Cf. S. 133 Contract Act

[69] Bonser v. Cox, 13 L. J. Ch. 260; 55 R. R. 120

[70] 9 Wallace 13 at 21: U. S. Sup. Court Reports Vol. XIX 541

[71] Ward v. National Bank of New Zealand, 8 App. Cas. 755

[72] 58 I. C. 184 and S. 133 Contract Act

[73] Wadhava v. King-Emperor, 4 P. L. R. 1904

[74] 26 A. 202 (204); A. W. N. (1903) 237

(c) The events which make performance impossible may as well be due to an act of the obligor. Such cases may be due to the rashness or negligence of the obligor. These need not be repeated here as they have been dealt with under Clause (a) (ii) above[75].

Although suicide is certainly an act of the obligor making performance impossible but it is recognised as a good ground for the surety's exoneration. But it appears that anything short of suicide depending upon the act of the obligor would probably not excuse the default.

Thus it appears that in such cases unless the obligee himself is to blame whether for his act, omission, negligence or carelessness, with or without any act proceeding from the obligee or a third party, the obligor is liable for the penalty, otherwise not.

C.—Unforeseen events rendering performance impossible

Then there are certain events which are beyond human control and foresight and which could not be contemplated or avoided either before their occurrence or at least at the time the contract was executed inspite of ordinary care or prudence[76]. For the sake of convenience they may further be subdivided into (i) "Acts of God" or (ii) "Acts of Law."

(i) Acts of God

Roughly speaking, for our purposes, this term would include all events mentioned above, which do not depend for their existence on the authority of law, i.e., not being acts of Law,—sudden seriously illness[77] not allowing attendance at court, some such other misfortune, which could not be contemplated or provided against at an earlier time. This would include cases where the accused commits suicide[78] and has been held equally to apply to cases where though the accused had not committed suicide till after the date was over but was thought to have been contemplating suicide and as such could not be expected to have attended the court and it was remarked by Beamon and Heaton, JJ., that it was "an event which his sureties could not have had in contemplation and which is not of the kind which would impose upon them any moral obligation and responsibility to the courts." For if he elects to die sooner than face his trial, that can hardly be sufficient reason for forfeiting the surety bonds since that was an event which his sureties would not have had in contemplation[79].

Suicide is certainly not an "Act of God" but of man but it is treated as such. Similarly the death of any of the obligors before forfeiture would discharge the heirs[80].

(ii) Acts of Law

For our purposes, an act may be considered to be an act under the authority of law or probably even sometimes under colour of office, which should prevent the obligor from performing his contract. Where a person was confined, so that he could not attend court on the date fixed, he was excused the penalty[81] but not when he was arrested some days earlier and released in time to attend court: MacPherson, J., held that "The important point is not mere arrest on the day when production is to be made, but which makes such production impossible[82]." This gives greater latitude to the Indian citizen. In America, they usually do not consider cases in which such a hindrance is the result of an act of a third party amongst which they include other courts. They make a "distinction between the act of the law proper, and the act of the obligor which exposes him to the control and action of the law[83]. While the former exonerates, the latter gives no immunity. It is the willing act of the obligor which creates the obstacle and the legal effect of it is the same as of any other act of his, which puts performance out of his power. This applies only where the accused has been convicted and sentenced, before judgment non-constat but that he may be innocent. He violated the law and thus put in motion the machinery provided to bring him within the reach of the punishment denounced for his offence. But for this, that machinery, so far as he was concerned, would have remained dormant. To hold that the surrender was the act of the law, in the sense contended for, would be as illogical as to insist that the blow of an instrument used in the commission of a crime of violence, is the act of the instrument and not of the criminal. The principal in the case before us cannot be allowed to avail himself of an impossibility of performance thus created and what will not avail him cannot avail his sureties. His contract is identical with theirs. They undertook for him, what he undertook for himself[84]." But this principle has not been applied in Indian decisions.

---

[75] See page 7 supra.

[76] 35 I. C. 514

[77] 5 P. W. R. (1918) Cr.; 122 I. C. (1930) at 533

[78] 37 M. 156: 151 C. 1008

[79] 35 I. C. 514

[80] S. 514 Cl. 6 Cr. P. C.

Other causes coming up for the consideration of appellate courts such as the violation of the principles of procedure contained in Section 514 are not discussed here as like all other rules of procedure, they must be strictly followed and an obligor should be given a full opportunity to know the cause of the forfeiture and afforded an opportunity of defence according to law[85], or when the bond has already been forfeited once[86] or where the surety has applied under Section 502[87].

---

[81] 86 I. C. 657: 1925 A. I. R. (Pat.) 389: Ref. 16 C. W. N. 550. 37 M. 156

[82] A. I. R. (1930) Pat. 17-18: Cf. A. I. R. (1925) Pat. 389: 86 I. C. 58: 16 I. C. 332 distinguished

[83] U. S. v. Fossen, 1 Dil 409

[84] Taylor v. Taintor, 16 Wallace 366-7; U. S. Sup. Court Decisions, Vol. XXI, 287

[85] 122 I. C. (1930) 532; 67 I. C. 830; 25 C. 40; 15 W. R. (Cr.) 87; 11 B. H. C. 120; 9 W. R. (Cr.) 2 N. W. P. 113

[86] 11 P R. 1889

[87] S. 130 Contract Act

HIGH COURT NOTIFICATION*

ENGLISH (CIVIL) DEPARTMENT

Dated Allahabad, July 4, 1932

NOTIFICATION No. 3540|45—19(2)

THE following amendment is made in the Rules of Court revised and corrected up to December 3, 1931:—

Insert the following as Chapter IXA, page 71A.

(71A)

Special Rules of Procedure in First Appeals

1. The following rules shall govern the procedure to be observed before listing First Appeals for hearing.

2. No First Appeal shall be set down for hearing unless, before the dates mentioned in rules 8 and 9, a precis of the case shall have been handed to the Registrar by the counsel of both parties. The Registrar shall not accept the precis unless it is accompanied with a note signed by the counsel that a copy has been given to the other side.

3. The precis shall consist of:—

(1) Brief statement of the case.

(2) Important and material issues arising out of the pleadings.

(3) Findings of the trial court.

(4) Points to be raised in the appeal by the party.

(5) Reference on the margin to the material documentary and oral evidence relied on by the party without any comment, but with a brief indication of their nature.

(6) Reference to any ruling referred to by the trial court which is sought to be distinguished.

4. The precis shall be prepared on the lines of a Privy Council brief. It shall on no account be in the nature of a written argument. The counsel shall not be bound by it, and shall be free to put the case in any way he considers best. There shall be no discussion of evidence in the precis, and as a rule there need be no reference to the rulings to be relied upon by a party except as indicated in rule 3(6) above.

5. The Press Clerk shall, on the day on which he forwards the manuscript of the paper book to the Press, deliver to the Superintendent, Vernacular department, for publication in the next day's Cause List a notice in the following form:—

> "The manuscripts of the following paper books in First Appeals have been sent to the Press and the fees for the preparation of the precis must be deposited within the time allowed by rule 6 of Chapter IX-A of the Rules of Court."

6. The time for depositing the fee for the preparation of the precis shall be 60 days of the publication of the notice referred to in rule 5.

Provided that the Registrar may on good cause being shown extend the time for payment of fees up to any date immediately preceding the date of the receipt of the paper book from Press. The Registrar shall, if he considers it necessary, demand an affidavit in support of the request for extension of time.

---

*Published in Government Gazette, dated Allahabad, July 16, 1932

Once the printed paper book is received, time can only be granted on a written application made to a Judge on which shall first be obtained a report by the Deputy Registrar.

7. As soon as the printed paper book is received from the Press, a notice shall be published in the Cause List.

"The precis for the following First Appeals must be filed by the counsel within the time specified in rules 8 and 9 of Chapter IX-A of the Rules of Court."

8. The appellant's counsel shall supply two copies of the precis to the Registrar for the use of the Bench and one copy to the senior counsel of the opposite party within six weeks of the date of the publication of the notice of the arrival of the printed paper book (rule 7). It shall be the duty of the senior counsel to inform all other counsel appearing on the same side that the appellant's precis has been filed and the date on which it was filed.

Provided that the Registrar may, on good cause being shown, grant an extension of time not exceeding 72 days from the receipt of the printed paper book from the press.

9. The respondent's counsel shall, within one month from the date on which the appellant's precis was supplied to him, supply two copies of his precis to the Registrar for the use of the Bench and one copy to the senior counsel for the appellant.

Provided that the Registrar may, on good cause being shown, grant an extension of time not exceeding 45 days of the date on which the appellant's precis was supplied to him.

10. In cases where there are different sets of respondents who have either separate or distinct cases to urge or have conflicting interests they may file separate precis, but it shall be in the discretion of the Court to award separate costs of these precis.

11. A Judge alone shall have authority on a written and stamped application to grant an extension of time beyond the extensions granted by the Registrar under rules 8 and 9 of these rules. Such application shall first be presented to the Deputy Registrar for an office report.

12. A supplemental precis will be admitted provided that it is supplied by the appellant, within one week, and by the respondent, within two weeks of the date on which the appeal appears in the Provisional List (rule 13). In this case also there must be a written notice to the Registrar that a copy has been supplied to the other side.

13. If the fee required from the appellant for the preparation of the precis is not deposited within the time or extended time allowed or if the precis is not filed within the time or extended time allowed by rule 8, the appeal shall be listed before the senior First Appeal Bench which may dismiss the case for non-prosecution.

If the respondent fails to deposit the fee for its preparation or omits to file his precis within the time or extended time allowed by rule 9, he shall not be entitled to be heard, except on the question of costs.

14. Except as provided for in rule 12, no First Appeal shall be listed for hearing unless it has appeared in the Provisional List of cases ready for hearing. Each appeal shall be set down in the Provisional List according to its serial number, and shall be listed for hearing in that order except when cases have been adjourned or expedited.

15. The precis shall be clearly type-written with double spacing and leaving a quarter margin on one side only of good durable white paper of the size of a First Appeal paper book.

16. The fees allowed for the preparation of the precis shall be paid on oral application to those counsel who sign the precis.

17. The fee for the preparation of the precis shall be on the following scale:—

Valuation of appeal	Amount Rs.
Below Rs. 5,000	20
Between Rs. 5,000 and Rs. 9,999	32
Between Rs. 10,000 and Rs. 14,999	50
Rs. 15,000 and above ..	64

18. The fee for the preparation of the precis shall be paid by the parties and the amount to be recovered from them shall be included in the estimate for translating and printing.

19. The fee for the preparation of the precis shall be taxed in the decree as ordinary costs, unless the Bench otherwise directs. Ordinarily there shall be only one set of costs for each party, unless the Bench otherwise directs.

20. Every counsel engaged in an appeal may obtain a certified copy of either of the precis on application in the usual way for copies and on payment of the usual fee.

21. In connected appeals arising out of the same suit, either party may file only one precis.

22. These rules shall, except rule 13, have effect from the date of publication in the Local Government Gazette.

Rule no. 13 shall come into full effect from January 1, 1933.

23. These rules are at present only experimental.

AGRA TENANCY (AMENDMENT) ACT

(No. II of 1931)*

[Received the assent of the Governor-General on January 19, 1932]

An Act to amend the Agra Tenancy Act (United Provinces Act III of 1926).

WHEREAS it is expedient to amend the Agra Tenancy Act for the purpose hereinafter appearing: It is hereby enacted as follows:—

Short title and duration.

1. (i) This Act may be called the Agra Tenancy (Amendment) Act, 1931.

(ii) It shall remain in force for a period of one year.

Insertion of new section 132-A in the United Provinces Act III of 1926.

2. After Section 132 of the Agra Tenancy Act the following section shall be inserted, namely,— Recovery of arrears of rent as arrears of revenue.

132-A. (1) In case of any general refusal, on the part of the under-proprietors or tenants of any local area to pay arrears of rent, rates or cesses due by them to their landlords, the Local Government may, by notification in the Gazette, declare that such arrears may be recovered as arrears of land revenue.

(2) In any local area to which a notification made under Sub-section (1) applies, a landlord to whom an arrear of rent, rate or cess is due by an under-proprietor or tenant may (notwithstanding anything to the contrary contained in this Act or the United Provinces Local Rates Act, 1914, or any other enactment for the time being in force), instead of suing for recovery of the arrear under this Act, apply, in writing to the Collector to realize the same, and the Collector shall, after satisfying himself that the amount claimed is due, proceed, subject to rules made under Section 275, to recover such amount with costs and interest as an arrear of land revenue.

(3) Nothing in this section shall be held to prevent the Collector from proceeding under Section 185 of the United Provinces Land Revenue Act, 1901, in any case to which that section applies.

(4) The Collector shall not be made a defendant to any suit in respect of an amount for the recovery of which an order has been passed under this section.

(5) No appeal shall lie from an order of a Collector under this section, but nothing herein contained and no order passed under this section shall debar—

---

*Published in the Government Gazette, dated Allahabad, Jan. 30, 1932 (a) a landlord from maintaining a suit under Section 230 for the recovery of any amount due to him which has not been recovered under this section, or (b) a person from whom any amount has been recovered under this section, in excess of the amount due form him, from recovering the said amount under Section 230.

U. P. ARREARS OF RENT ACT, 1931

(No. I OF 1931)*

[Received the assent of the Governor-General on January 28, 1932]

An Act to protect tenants and thekadars from ejectment and distraint on account of arrears of rent.

WHEREAS it is necessary to provide, as a temporary measure, that tenants and thekadars in the United Provinces of Agra and Oudh shall be protected from ejectment or distraint on account of their inability to pay arrears of rent in full: It is hereby enacted as follows:—

Short title and extent.

1. (1) This Act shall be called the United Provinces Arrears of Rent Act, 1931.

(2) It shall extend to the territories for the time being comprised in the United Provinces of Agra and Oudh.

Protection from ejectment.

U. P. Act III of 1926 and U. P. Act XX of 1886.

2. Notwithstanding anything contained in the Agra Tenancy Act of 1926 or the Oudh Rent Act of 1886, the ejectment of a tenant or thekadar shall not be ordered for arrears of rent falling due between July 1, 1927, and June 30, 1931, provided that within two months of date of the decree the tenant or thekadar has paid two-thirds of the arrears decreed in addition to the costs of the suit.

Protection from distraint.

U. P. Act III of 1926 and U. P. Act XX of 1886.

3. Notwithstanding anything contained in the Agra Tenancy Act of 1926 or the Oudh Rent Act of 1886, where rent falling due between July 1930, and June 30, 1931, in respect of any holding, is in arrears, a landlord shall not be competent to distrain or sell the produce of the holding, for an amount exceeding two-thirds of such arrears.

Published in the Government Gazette, dated Allahabad, Feb. 6, 1932

U. P. MUNICIPALITIES (AMENDMENT) ACT

(No. II OF 1931)[1]

[Received the assent of the Governor-
General on January 31, 1932]

An Act to amend the United Provinces Municipalities Act, 1916 (II of 1916).

WHEREAS it is inexpedient that the term of office of the elected members and of the Chairman of the Cawnpore municipal board should expire on February 14, 1932, and February 22, 1932, respectively; It is hereby enacted as follows:—

Short title.

1. This Act may be called the United Provinces Municipalities (Amendment) Act, 1931.

Addition of new section after Section 38 of the United Provinces Municipalities Act (II of 1916).

2. After Section 38 of the United Provinces Municipalities Act, 1916, the following section shall be inserted as Section 38-A, namely:—

Special temporary provision for extending the term of office of members of the Cawnpore municipal board.

"38-A. Notwithstanding anything contained in Section 38 the term of office of the elected and nominated members of the municipal board of Cawnpore, who were members on the date when the United Provinces Municipalities (Amendment) Act, 1931, came into force, or who became members subsequent to its enactment and prior to December 14, 1932, shall expire on December 14, 1932."

Addition of new section after Section 46 of Municipalities Act (II of the United Provinces 1916).

3. After Section 46 of the United Provinces Municipalities Act, 1916, the following section shall be inserted as Section 46-A, namely:—

Special provision for extending the term of office of the Chairman of the Cawnpore municipal board.

"46-A. Notwithstanding anything contained in Section 46 the term of office of the Chairman of the Cawnpore municipal board shall continue until the date upon which his successor is elected or nominated."

U. P. MEDICAL (AMENDMENT) ACT, 1931

(No. IV OF 1931)[2]

[Received the assent of the Governor-
General on February 12, 1932]

An Act further to amend the United Provinces Medical Act, 1917.

WHEREAS it is expedient further to amend the United Provinces Medical Act, 1917; It is hereby enacted as follows:—

---

[1] Published in the Government Gazette, dated Allahabad, Feb. 13, 1932

[2] Published in the Government Gazette, dated Allahabad, Feb. 20, 1932

1. This Act may be called the United Provinces Medical (Amendment) Act, 1931.

Short title.

2. In Sub-section (1) of Section 4 of the United Provinces Medical Act, 1917—

Amendment of Sub-section (1) of Section 4 of the United Provinces Act, III of 1917.

(1) clause (c) shall be deleted;

(2) clauses (d), (e), (f), (g), (h) and (i) shall be re-lettered (c), (d), (e), (f), (g) and (h) respectively; and

(3) in clause (g) as re-lettered, the words "two members" shall be substituted for the words "one member".

INDIAN COMPANIES (SUPPLEMENTARY AMENDMENT) ACT, 1932

(No. I OF 1932)[1]

[Received the assent of the Governor-General on March 5, 1932]

An Act to amend the Indian Companies (Amendment) Act, 1930, for a certain purpose.

WHEREAS it is expedient to amend the Indian Companies (Amendment) Act, 1930, for the purpose hereinafter appearing; It is hereby enacted as follows:—

XIX of 1930.

1. This Act may be called the Indian Companies (Supplementary Amendment) Act, 1932.

Short title.

2. In the proviso substituted by Sub-clause (ii) of clause (a) of Section 2 of the Indian Companies (Amendment) Act, 1930, for the words "whereof the partners all", the words "whereof all the partners practising in India" shall be substituted.

XIX of 1930.

Amendment of Section 2, Act XIX of 1930.

CODE OF CIVIL PROCEDURE (AMENDMENT) ACT, 1932

(No. X OF 1932)[2]

[Received the assent of the Governor-General on April 8, 1932]

An Act further to amend the Code of Civil Procedure 1908, for a certain purpose.

WHEREAS it is expedient further to amend the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908, for the purpose hereinafter appearing; It is hereby enacted as follows:—

V of 1908.

---

[1] Published in the Government Gazette, dated Allahabad, March 26, 1932

[2] Published in the Government Gazette, dated Allahabad, April 23, 1932

Short title.

1. This Act may be called the Code of Civil Procedure (Amendment) Act, 1932.

Amendment of Section 78, Act V of 1908.

2. In Section 78 of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908 (hereinafter referred to as the said Code),— V of 1908.

(a) before the words "The provisions" the words "Subject to such conditions and limitations as may be prescribed," shall be inserted;

(b) after the words "issued by" the words "or at the instance of" shall be inserted; and

(c) in Clause (c), the words "for the time being in alliance with His Majesty" shall be omitted.

Insertion of new rules in Order XXVI of the First Schedule, Act V of 1908.

3. In Order XXVI of the First Schedule to the said Code, the following heading and rules shall be added, namely:—

"Commissions issued at the instance of Foreign Tribunals.

19. (1) If a High Court is satisfied—

(a) that a foreign court situated in a foreign country wishes to obtain the evidence of a witness in any proceeding before it.

(b) that the proceeding is of a civil nature, and

(c) that the witness is residing within the limits of the High Court's appellate jurisdiction, it may, subject to the provision of rule 20 issue a commission for the examination of such witness.

(2) Evidence may be given of the matters specified in Clauses (a), (b) and (c) of Sub-rule (1)—

(a) by a certificate signed by the consular officer of the foreign country of the highest rank in India and transmitted to the High Court through the Governor-General in Council, or

(b) by a letter of request issued by the foreign court and transmitted to the High Court through the Governor-General in Council, or

(c) by a letter of request issued by the foreign court and produced before the High Court by a party to the proceeding.

20. The High Court may issue a commission under rule 19—

(a) upon application by a party to the proceeding before the foreign court, or

(b) upon an application by a law officer of the Local Government acting under instructions from the Local Government.

21. A commission under Rule 19 may be issued to any court within the local limits of whose jurisdiction the witness resides, or, where the High Court is established under the Indian High Courts Act, 1861, or the Government of India Act, 1915, and the witness resides within the local limits of its ordinary original civil jurisdiction, to any person whom the court thinks fit to execute the commission.

22. The provisions of Rules 6, 15, 16, 17 and 18 of this Order in so far as they are applicable shall apply to the issue, execution and return of such commissions and when any such commission has been duly executed it shall be returned together with the evidence taken under it, to the High Court, which shall forward it to the Governor-General in Council, along with the letter of request for transmission to the foreign court."

PUBLIC SUITS VALIDATION ACT, 1932

(No. XI OF 1932)*

[Received the assent of the Governor-General on April 8, 1932]

An Act to validate certain suits relating to public matters.

WHEREAS it is expedient to validate certain suits relating to public matters which may be or have been held to be invalid by reason of the previous sanction of the Local Government in respect thereof not having been obtained as required by Section 93 of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908; It is hereby enacted as follows:— V of 1908.

Short title and extent.

1. (1) This Act may be called the Public Suits Validation Act, 1932.

(2) It extends to all parts of British India to which Sections 91, 92 and 93 of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908, extend. V of 1908.

Validation of certain pending public suits.

2. Where a suit relating to any of the public matters specified in Sections 91 and 92 of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908, is pending at the commencement of this Act, the institution of such suit shall not be deemed to be invalid on the ground that the previous sanction of the Local Government in respect of such suit has not been obtained as required by Section 93 of that Code. V of 1908.

Explanation—For the purposes of this section a suit pending at the commencement of this Act includes a suit in respect of which an appeal lies or is pending at the commencement of this Act.

Restoration of certain dismissed public suits.

3. Where any suit relating to any such public matter has, after November 30, 1931, and before the commencement of this Act, been dismissed by a Court of first instance solely on the ground that the sanction of the Local Government in respect of such suit has not been obtained as required by Section 93 of the V of 1908.

---

*Published in the Government Gazette, dated Allahabad, April 23, 1932

Code of Civil Procedure, 1908, the Court shall, on application made within six months from the commencement of this Act, make an order setting aside its decree and shall proceed with the suit.

Retrial of certain appeals relating to public suits.

4. Where, in any appeal arising from a suit relating to any such public matter, a decree has been passed after November 30, 1931, and before the commencement of this Act, dismissing the appeal or dismissing the suit from which the appeal arose, solely on the ground that the previous sanction of the Local Government in respect of the suit had not been obtained as required by Section 93 of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908, the Appellate Court shall, on application made within six months from the commencement of this Act, make an order setting aside its decree and shall proceed with the appeal.

U. P. LAND REVENUE (AMENDMENT) ACT, 1932

(No. II of 1932)*

[Received the assent of the Governor-General on May 10, 1932]

An Act to amend the United Provinces Land Revenue Act (U. P. Act III of 1901).

WHEREAS it is expedient to amend the United Provinces Land Revenue Act of 1901 for the purposes hereinafter appearing; It is hereby enacted as follows:—

U. P. Act III of 1901.

Short title.

1. This Act may be called the United Provinces Land Revenue (Amendment) Act, 1932.

2. In this Act the expression "the principal Act" means the United Provinces Land Revenue Act, 1901.

U. P. Act III of 1901.

Addition of definition of "sub-proprietor" to Section 4 of principal Act.

3. The following definition of "sub-proprietor" shall be added to Section 4 of the principal Act, namely:—

"(16) A sub-proprietor in the Province of Agra means a person who possesses a subordinate but heritable and transferable right and whose name is recorded in the register of proprietors as such; and includes such persons as a rent-free grantee to whose grant the provisions of Sections 185 and 186 of the Agra Tenancy Act apply, a gawanhadar, an arazidar or other like person owning these rights."

Addition of explanation to Section 34 of principal Act.

The following explanation shall be added to Section 34 of the principal Act, namely:—

"Explanation.—The word 'transfer' includes a family settlement by which the proprietary share or part of the proprietary share recorded in the register of proprietors in the name of one or more members of that family is declared to belong to another or other members."

---

*Published in the Government Gazette, dated Allahabad, May 21, 1932

Amendment of Section 39 of principal Act.

5. Sub-section (2) of Section 39 of the principal Act shall be deleted, Sub-section (3) shall be renumbered (2) and the following explanations shall be added to this section, namely:—

"Explanation.—The word 'changes' in Sub-section (1) shall include division of a holding and distribution of rent payable in respect thereof made in accordance with Section 37 of the Agra Tenancy Act; provided that where the landholder has not consented in writing to the division of the holding and distribution of rent payable in respect thereof a note to that effect shall be made in the record of rights."

U. P. Act III of 1926.

Addition of explanation to Section 40 of principal Act.

6. The following explanation shall be added to Section 40 of the principal Act, namely:—

"Explanation.—The term "possession' in this section means possession based on succession or transfer or on such transfers and changes as are dealt with in Section 39."

Amendment of Section 112 and addition of new Section 112-A.

7. In Section 112 of the principal Act the words "and the Appellate Court may issue a precept to the Collector, desiring him to stay the partition pending the decision of the appeal" shall be deleted and the following new section shall be added after Section 112, namely:—

Stay of partition pending decision of appeal.

"112-A. The appellate court may issue a precept to the Collector, directing him to stay the partition pending the decision of the appeal, whether the appeal is pending from a civil court under Section 111(1)(b) or from the court of the Collector under Section 111(3)."

Amendment of Sub-section (1) of Section 138 of principal Act.

8. The following Sub-section shall be substituted for Sub-section (1) of Section 138 of the principal Act, namely:—

"(1) The partition of sub-proprietary rights in Agra, and of taluqdari and under-proprietary mahals and of mahals held by lessees whose rent has been fixed by the Settlement Officer or other competent authority in Oudh shall be carried out according to the provisions of this chapter, so far as they are applicable."

Addition of new Section 192-A.

9. The following new section shall be added after Section 192, namely:—

Consolidation of cases.

"192-A. Where more cases than one involving substantially the same question for determination and based on the same cause of action are pending in one or more courts they shall, on application being made by any party to the court to which the court or courts concerned are all subordinate, be consolidated in one court and decided by a single judgment. Such cases may be filed direct in the superior court".

Amendment of Section 200 of principal Act.

10. The following section shall be substituted for Section 200 of the principal Act, namely:—

Hearing in absence of party.

"200. Whenever any party to such proceeding neglects to attend on the day specified in the summons or on any day to which the case may have been postponed, the court may dismiss the case for default or may hear and determine it ex parte."

Addition of Sub-section (5) to Section 210 of principal Act.

11. The following sub-section shall be added to Section 210 of the principal Act, namely:—

"(5) When a party desires to appeal in a partition case against several decisions passed on objections relating either to the partition proceedings or to the final partition he may do so in a single appeal. The period of limitation for such an appeal shall run from the date on which the partition proceedings or the final partition papers are submitted to the Collector for confirmation."

Amendment of Sub-section (1) of Section 214 of principal Act.

12. At the commencement of Sub-section (1) of Section 214 of the principal Act the words "Except as provided in Sub-section (5) of Section 210" shall be inserted.

Substitution of "Agra Tenancy Act, 1928" for "North-Western Provinces Tenancy Act, 1901" in principal Act.

13. For the words "the North-Western Provinces Tenancy Act, 1901," wherever they occur in the principal Act shall be substituted the words "the Agra Tenancy Act, 1926," "U. P. Act III of 1926," being substituted in the margin for "U. P. Act II of 1901."

Substitution of "Section 14" for "Section 10."

14. In Sub-section (1) of Section 36, in Sub-section (2) of Section 72, in Sub-section (2) of Section 87 and in Sections 127 and 186 of the principal Act for the words "Section 10" shall be substituted the words "Section 14".

Substitution of "the Agra Province" for "the North-Western Provinces" in principal Act.

15. For the words "the North-Western Provinces" wherever they occur in the principal Act shall be substituted the words "the Agra Province".

Addition of the words "Additional Collector" or "Additional Collectors" in certain sections of principal Act.

16. In Section 4(8), Sections 189, 203 and 210(b) of the principal Act after the word "Collector" or "Collectors" shall be added the words "Additional Collector" or ""Additional Collectors" as the case may be.

17. In Sections 203, 210(c), 212, 212-A and 218 of the principal Act, after the word "Commissioner' shall be added respectively the words "an Additional Commissioner," "or Additional Commissioner", "and Additional Commissioner", "or Additional Commissioner", and "the Additional Commissioner."

Addition of the words "Additional Commissioner" in certain sections of principal Act.

U. P. MUNICIPALITIES (AMENDMENT) Act, 1932

(No. V of 1932)*

[Received the assent of the Governor-General on June 10, 1932]

An Act further to amend the United Provinces Municipalities Act, 1916.

WHEREAS it is expedient to amend certain provisions of the United Provinces Municipalities Act, 1916, in certain respects; It is hereby enacted as follows:—

Short title.

1. This Act may be called the United Provinces Municipalities (Amendment) Act, 1932.

Definition.

2. In this Act the expression "the principal Act" means the United Provinces Municipalities Act, 1916.

Amendment of Clause (n) of Section 7(1) of the principal Act.

3. In Section 7(1) of the principal Act, Clauses (n) to (r) shall be re-numbered as (o) to (s) and the following clause inserted as Clause (n):—

"Maintaining or contributing to the maintenance of veterinary hospitals."

Amendment of Sub-section (2) of Section 7 of the principal Act.

4. In Section 7(2) "Clause (o)" shall be substituted for "Clause (n)".

Addition of new section after Section 29 in principal Act.

5. After Section 29 of the principal Act the following section shall be inserted as Section 29-A, namely:—

General election.

"In the year 1936 and thereafter in every fourth year there shall be a general election of members of municipal boards."

Amendment of Section 31-A in principal Act.

6. Section 31-A of the principal Act shall be amended as follows:—

(1) In Clause (a) after the words "all members of the board" the words "except the chairman" shall be inserted; and

(2) for Clause (c) the following shall be substituted, namely,—

"(c) the provisions of Sections 43 and 44 shall apply as if the election was being held after a general election of the members of the Board."

---

*Published in the Government Gazette, dated Allahabad, June 18, 1932

7. In Section 38 of the principal Act the following shall be substituted for Sub-section (1), namely,—

Substitution of new Sub-section (1) and omission of Sub-sections 1(a) (3) and (4) of Section 38 in principal Act.

"the term of office of a member of a board shall begin from the date upon which he is declared by the returning officer to be elected or from the date of his nomination or from the date upon which the vacancy occurs which he is elected or nominated to fill if the vacancy occurs subsequent to the election or nomination, and shall cease, subject to the provisions of Sections 39 and 40, upon the first day of the general election."

and Sub-sections 1(a), (3) and (4) shall be omitted.

8. For Section 43 of the principal Act the following Section shall be substituted, namely,—

Substitution of new section for Section 43 of principal Act.

Election or nomination of chairman.

"43. (1) All members and persons qualified to be members of the board shall be eligible for election to the office of chairman of the board: provided that no whole-time salaried Government servant and no member or servant of a district board shall be so eligible.

Explanation 1—A Government treasurer or Government pleader is not a whole-time salaried servant of Government.

Explanation 2—A member of the District Board Education Committee co-opted under Section 63A(2) of the District Boards Act is not a member of the District Board.

(2) When a board is completed after a general election it shall elect its own chairman in the manner provided in Section 44: provided that if any board fails to do so the local Government shall nominate a chairman for that board. A board shall be deemed to be complete if all elected seats have been filled up after a general election.

(3) The local Government may by notification in the gazette declare that the provisions of Sub-section (2) shall not apply in the case of a board specified in the notification and shall in such case nominate such person as it thinks fit to be chairman of such board: provided that no such notification shall be operative for more than one year in respect of any board the chairman of which on April 1, 1929, was not a Government servant.

(4) If there is a question whether the chairman of a board was duly qualified for election or has been duly elected or nominated under this section the decision of the local Government shall be final."

9. For Section 44 of the principal Act the following section shall be substituted, namely,—

Substitution of new section for Sec. 44 of principal Act.

"44. (1) For the purpose of electing a chairman under Sub-section (2) of Section 43, a meeting of the board of which no previous notice shall be required to be given shall be held at the office of the board at 2 P.M. on a date which shall be subsequent to the election of members of the board and shall be fixed by the local Government by notification in the gazette.

Procedure for election of chairman.

(2) A stipendiary civil judicial officer previously appointed by the Government in this behalf shall act as chairman of a meeting held under the provisions of this section: provided that the chairman of a meeting held under the provisions of this section shall have no right to vote thereat.

(3) The following procedure shall be observed at a meeting held under the provisions of this section, namely,—

(a) If only one duly qualified candidate is proposed and seconded he shall be elected.

(b) If two but not more than two duly qualified candidates are proposed and seconded, the candidate who obtains the greater number of votes shall be deemed to be elected.

(c) If more than two duly qualified candidates are proposed and seconded, the names of the two candidates who obtain the greater number of votes shall again be put to the vote and the candidate who then obtains the greater number of votes shall be deemed to be elected.

(d) Every member who desires to vote shall write the name of the candidate for whom he wishes to vote upon a blank voting paper and shall also sign his own name thereon, and the voting papers shall form part of the minutes of the proceedings.

(e) In case of equality of votes the chairman shall decide the question by drawing lots.

(4) If at 4 P.M. on the date of a meeting held under the provisions of this section a chairman has not been elected the meeting shall stand adjourned.

(5) If a meeting is adjourned under the provisions of Sub-section (4) the adjourned meeting shall be held at 2 P.M. at the office of the board on the seventh day after the adjournment and the procedure shall be the same as at the previous meeting.

(6) If at 4 P.M. on the date of an adjourned meeting held under the provisions of Sub-section (5), a chairman has not been elected the chairman of the meeting shall send the minutes of the meeting and of the adjourned meeting to the district magistrate who shall send them to the local Government."

Addition of new section after Section 44 of principal Act.

10. After Section 44 of the principal Act the following section shall be inserted as Section 44-A, namely:—

Election or nomination of chairman on casual vacancy.

"44-A. (1) If a casual vacancy in the office of chairman occurs owing to the death, resignation or removal of the chairman, a meeting of the board for the purpose of electing a chairman shall be held on such day as the local Government may, by notification in the gazette appoint after the occurrence of the vacancy.

(2) To a meeting held under Sub-section (1) the provisions of Section 44 shall apply as far as may be.

(3) If the board fails to elect a chairman under the provisions of this section the local Government shall nominate a chairman.

(4) When there is a question whether a chairman of a board has been duly elected or nominated under the provisions of this section the decision of the local Government on the question shall be final."

Amendment of Sub-section (2) of Section 45 of principal Act.

11. In Sub-section (2) of Section 45 the word "previous" shall be inserted before the word "sanction" in each case.

Substitution of new section for Section 46 and omission of Section 46-A of principal Act.

12. (1) For Section 46 of the principal Act the following section shall be substituted, namely,—

Term of office of chairman.

"46. (1) The term of office of a chairman shall begin from the date on which he is elected or nominated or from the date upon which the vacancy occurs which he is elected or nominated to fill if the vacancy occurs subsequent to the election or nomination.

(2) Subject to the provisions of Sections 47, 47-A and 48 and notwithstanding anything in Section 38 the term of office of an elected or nominated chairman shall cease upon the date upon which his successor is elected or nominated."

(3) Section 46-A of the principal Act shall be omitted.

Amendment of Sub-Clause (i) of Clause (e) of Section 50 of principal Act.

13. In Sub-clause (i) of Clause (e) of Section 50 of the principal Act after the words "Section 60" the following words shall be added, namely,—

> "and where there is a medical officer of health, those vested in the medical officer of health by Section 60-A."

Substitution of new section for Section 57 of principal Act.

14. For Section 57 of the principal Act the following section shall be substituted, namely,—

"57. (1) Every board with an income of Rs.50,000 per annum or over shall, unless the local Government otherwise directs, appoint an executive officer by a special resolution:

Power of board to appoint and employ executive officer and medical officer of health.

Provided that in every case in which such board has at the time of the passing of the Act a secretary but no executive officer the secretary shall be deemed to be the executive officer until or unless he is duly replaced.

(2) Every board with an income of Rs.50,000 per annum or over shall, unless the local Government otherwise directs, employ a medical officer of health who belongs to the United Provinces Public Health Service.

(3) The appointment, salaries and conditions of service of executive officers and medical officers of health shall be subject to the approval of the local Government."

15. For Section 58 of the principal Act the following section shall be substituted, namely,—

Substitution of new section for Section 58 of the principal Act.

"58. (1) A board may punish, dismiss or remove its executive officer by a special resolution supported by not less than two-thirds of the members constituting the board, subject to his right of appeal to the local Government within thirty days of the communication to him of the order of punishment or dismissal.

Punishment, dismissal or removal of executive officer and transfer of medical officer of health.

(2) The local Government may suspend the executive officer pending the decision of an appeal under Sub-section (1), and may allow, disallow or vary the order of the board.

(3) If a board by special resolution recommend the transfer of its medical officer of health the local Government shall transfer the medical officer of health from the board's employment provided the board gives sufficient reasons therefor."

16. For Sub-section (1) of Section 59 of the principal Act the following shall be substituted, namely,—

Amendment of Section 59 of principal Act.

"(1) During the absence on leave, or other temporary vacancy in the office of an executive officer, if the period does not exceed two months the chairman may appoint a person to act as executive officer; If the period exceeds two months an appointment shall be made by the board in accordance with the provisions of Section 57(1)" and for Sub-section (3) of the same section the following sub-section shall be substituted, namely,—

"(3) All appointments made under Sub-section (1) and the salaries and conditions of service appertaining to such appointments shall be subject to the approval of the local Government if the term of appointment exceeds two months, and the provisions of Section 58 shall apply to persons so appointed."

Addition of new section after Section 60 of principal Act.

17. After Section 60 of the principal Act the following section shall be inserted as Section 60-A, namely,—

Functions to be discharged by medical officer of health.

"60A. Notwithstanding anything contained in Section 60 the local Government may, by notification in the Gazette, direct that in any municipality the medical officer of health, with the concurrence in writing of the executive officer, shall exercise the following powers: provided that in case of disagreement between these officers the question shall be referred to the chairman, whose decision shall be final—

(a) the power to grant and issue under his signature every permit or licence, other than a permit or licence for a market or slaughter-house, which can be granted by a board in respect of bye-laws framed under parts B, D, F, G and I of list I and part I of list II of Section 298;

(b) the power to suspend or withdraw any such permit or licence;

(c) the powers conferred on the executive officer under Section 60(1) (d) in respect of Sections 191(1) and (2), 192(1), 196(c) and (d), 201(1), 202(1), 225(1) and (2), 227, 244(1) and (2), 245(1), 249, 250(2), 267, 268, 269, 270, 271, 273(1) (a), 276, 277, 278, 280, 283, 294, and also in respect of 307 so far as the notice referred to therein relates to the other section specified in this clause;

(d) in respect of servants of the board employed for conservancy, public health, vaccination, and the registration of births and deaths the powers vested in the executive officer by Section 75(a) and 76(a) and the power to grant leave of absence to the holder of any post to which he has power to appoint.

Amendment of section 61 of principal Act.

18. In Sub-section (1) of Section 61 of the principal Act, after the words "executive officer" the words "or medical officer of health" shall be inserted, and after the words "Section 60" the following words shall be inserted, namely,—

"or Section 60-A."

Amendment of Sections 62, 63 and 64 of principal Act.

19. In Sections 62, 63 and 64 of the principal Act the words "for medical officer of health" shall be inserted after the words "executive officer" wherever they occur, and in Section 63 for the words "the administration of the municipality" shall be substituted the words "that branch of the administration of the municipality with which he is concerned."

20. For Section 65 of the principal Act the following Section shall be substituted, namely,—

Substitution of new section for Section 65 of principal Act.

"65. If a board, being bound to make an appointment under the provisions of Section 57 or Section 59, fails to make an appointment and to obtain the approval of the local Government to such appointment within such time as the local Government considers reasonable, the local Government may itself make the appointment and may fix the salary, contributions to provident fund or pension and other conditions appertaining to such appointment: provided that if the local Government has made an appointment in exercise of the powers conferred by this section, the board shall not be bound to pay a sum exceeding a monthly average of Rs.1,000 in the case of municipalities with an income of three lakhs or over or of Rs.500 in the case of other municipalities on account of the salary, leave allowances, and contributions of the person so appointed."

Power of local Government to appoint executive officer.

21. For Sub-section (1) of Section 68 of the principal Act the following sub-section shall be substituted, namely,—

Substitution of new sub-section for Sub-section (1) of Section 68 of principal Act.

"(1) Any board by special resolution may, and if so required by the local Government shall, appoint an engineer, a water-works engineer, a water-works superintendent, an electrical superintendent, a secretary or a qualified sub-overseer."

Appointment of engineer, water-works engineer, water-works superintendent, electrical superintendent, secretary or sub-overseer.

22. For Section 71 of the principal Act the following section shall be substituted, namely,—

Substitution of new section for Section 71 of principal Act.

"71. Except as provided by Sections 57, 66, 68, and 70 a board may, by resolution, determine what servants are required for the discharge of the duties of the board and the salaries to be paid to them respectively."

Power of board to determine permanent staff.

23. For Section 74 of the principal Act the following section shall be substituted, namely,—

Substitution of new section for Section 74 of principal Act.

"74. Subject to any provisions to the contrary contained in Sections 57 to 73 servants on a monthly salary exceeding Rs.30, or in a city Rs.75, shall be appointed and may be punished or dismissed by the chairman, subject in the case of dismissal or removal to an appeal to the local Government, which must be presented to the local Government within one month of the date upon which the order of dismissal or removal is communicated to the person in respect of whom the order is made:

Appointment and dismissal of permanent superior staff.

Provided that an appointment on a monthly salary of Rs.250 or over in the case of cities and of Rs.100 or over in other cases shall be subject to confirmation by the board."

24. For Section 75 of the principal Act the following section shall be substituted, namely,—

Substitution of new section for Section 75 of principal Act.

"75. Except as otherwise provided the executive officer shall appoint—

Appointment of permanent inferior staff.

(a) servants on a monthly salary not exceeding Rs.15, or in a city Rs.30; and

(b) with the sanction of the chairman servants on a monthly salary exceeding Rs.15 but not exceeding Rs.30 or in a city exceeding Rs.30 but not exceeding Rs.75:

Provided that in case there is no executive officer the said appointments shall be made by the chairman."

25. For Section 76 of the principal Act the following section shall be substituted, namely,—

Substitution of new section for Section 76 of principal Act.

"76. Except as otherwise provided the executive officer may punish or dismiss—

Punishment and dismissal of permanent inferior staff.

(a) servants on a monthly salary not exceeding Rs.15, or in a city Rs.30; and

(b) servants on a monthly salary exceeding Rs.15 but not exceeding Rs.30 or in a city exceeding Rs.30 but not exceeding Rs.75, but in such case each order of dismissal or order imposing a fine exceeding in amount one month's pay of the person fined, or order of suspension for a period exceeding one month, or order of reduction by way of punishment shall be appealable to the chairman:

Provided that in case there is no executive officer the powers conferred by this section may be exercised by the chairman."

26. For clause (c) of Sub-section (1) of Section 112 of the principal Act the following clause shall be substituted, namely:—

Substitution of new clause for Clause (c) of Sub-clause (1) of Section 112 of principal Act.

"(c) Where there is an executive officer or a medical officer of health, reserved to the executive officer by Section 60 or to the medical officer of health by Section 60-A."

27. In Section 243 of the principal Act after the words "executive officer" the following words shall be inserted, namely,—

Amendment of Section 243 of principal Act.

"the medical officer of health."

Addition of new section after Section 279 in principal Act.

28. After Section 279 of the principal Act the following section shall be inserted as Section 279-A:—

Power to examine persons suspected to be suffering from infectious diseases.

"Where there is any reason to believe that a case of infectious disease notifiable under Section 279 has occurred in a building the medical officer of health or other competent person deputed by him shall, subject to the provisions of Section 287, enter the said building and make an examination of the person or persons suspected to be suffering from the disease and may also obtain material for pathological examination if necessary:

Provided that all females above the age of eight years shall be inspected by persons of their own sex only."

Amendment of Section 298 of principal Act.

29. In Section 288 of the principal Act after the words "executive officer" the following words shall be inserted, namely,—

"or the medical officer of health."

Addition of a new Clause (i) to Section 298 (2), List I J.—Miscellaneous of the principal Act.

30. The following shall be added as clause (i) to Section 298 (2), List I. J. Miscellaneous of the principal Act:—

"Providing for the registration and control of midwives and dais publicly practising their profession.

Amendment of Sub-section (1) of Section 315 of principal Act.

31. In Sub-section (1) of Section 315 of the principal Act for the words "in municipalities in which there is an executive officer, the executive officer," the following words shall be substituted, namely,—

"in municipalities in which there is an executive officer or a medical officer of health, either of these officers."

Amendment of First Schedule to principal Act.

32. (1) In the First Schedule to the principal Act an additional item shall be inserted after the item against Section 43, namely,—

"44-A. (1) To elect a chairman in a casual vacancy.

(2) To the entry against Section 59 shall be added in cases 'where the vacancy exceeds two months' and the entries in columns 1, 2 and 3, against Sections 74 and 76(2) (b) shall be deleted.

(3) For the entries in the second column against Sections 57, 58, 61, 63, 68 and 71 the following shall be substituted:—

57. To appoint and employ an executive officer and a medical officer of health.

58. To punish or dismiss an executive officer and recommend the transfer of a medical officer of health.

61. To entertain appeals from orders of the executive officer or the medical officer of health.

63. To require the executive officer or the medical officer of health to furnish returns, etc.

68. To appoint an engineer, a water-works engineer, a waterworks superintendent, an electrical superintendent or a secretary.

71. To determine the number and salaries of the board's permanent staff."

33. In the second schedule to the principal Act the following additional items shall be inserted before the item against Section 79(1):—

75. To appoint permanent and inferior staff.

76. To punish or dismiss permanent and inferior staff.

Amendment of seventh schedule to principal Act.

34. In the seventh schedule to the principal Act shall be inserted in numerical order the following new items:—

43. (2) To nominate a chairman where a board fails to elect one.

43. (4) To decide whether the chairman of a board has been duly elected or nominated under this section.

44. To fix a date for holding the election of chairman.

44-A. (1) To fix a date for the holding of a casual election of chairman.

44-A. (3) To nominate a chairman in a casual vacancy where the board fails to elect one.

44-A. (4) To decide whether the chairman of a board in a casual vacancy has been duly elected or nominated.

58. To entertain an appeal by an executive officer against an order of punishment or dismissal; to allow, disallow or vary such punishment or dismissal; to suspend the executive officer pending the decision of his appeal; and to transfer a medical officer of health from one board to another.

59.(3) To approve the appointment, salary and conditions of appointment of an officiating executive officer if the term of appointment exceeds two months.

60-A. To direct that in any municipality the medical officer of health and not the executive officer shall exercise certain powers conferred on the executive officer.

65. In default of his appointment by a board to appoint a person to be an executive officer or to act as executive officer and to fix the salary, contributions to provident fund or pension and other conditions appertaining to such appointment.

74. To entertain appeals from servants of boards on a monthly salary exceeding Rs.30, or in a city Rs.75 on their dismissal by the chairman.

76. (1) The entries in columns 1 and 2 against Sections 38 (4), 44, 58(3) and (4), 65(1), and (3) shall be deleted.

(2) For the entries in the second column against Sections 43 (3) and 57 the following shall be substituted:—

43. (3) To declare that the provisions of Sub-section (2) of this section shall not apply to a municipality.

57. To approve the appointment, salary and conditions of appointment of an executive officer and a medical officer of health.

U. P. STAMP (AMENDMENT) ACT, 1932

(No. IV OF 1932)*

[Received the assent of the Governor-General on April 25, 1932]
[PASSED BY THE LOCAL LEGISLATURE OF THE UNITED PROVINCES OF AGRA AND OUDH]

An Act to amend the Indian Stamp Act, 1899, in its application to the United Provinces

II of 1899

Preamble.

WHEREAS it is expedient to increase the revenues of the United Provinces and for that purpose to amend the Indian Stamp Act, 1899, in its application to the United Provinces, in the manner hereinafter appearing;

5 and 6, Geo. V, c. 61; 6 and 7, Geo. V, c. 37; 9 and 10 Geo. V, c. 101

And whereas the previous sanction of the Governor-General has been obtained, under Section 80-A, Sub-section (3), of the Government of India Act, to the passing of this Act;

It is hereby enacted as follows:—

Short title, extent and commencement.

1. (1) This Act may be called the United Provinces Stamp (Amendment) Act, 1932.

(2) It extends to the whole of the United Provinces.

(3) It shall come into force on the first day of May, 1932, and shall remain in force up till March 31, 1934.

Application of Act II of 1899.

2. The Indian Stamp Act, 1899, hereinafter referred to as the said Act, shall, in its application to the United Provinces, be amended in the manner hereinafter provided.

Amendment of clause (10) of section 2 of Act II of 1899.

3. To clause (10) of section 2 of the said Act the following shall be added, namely,—

"or by Schedule IA, as the case may be."

Amendment of section 3

4. In section 3 of the said Act—

(1) after clause (c) the following shall be inserted, namely,—

"Provided that, except as otherwise expressly provided in this Act, and notwithstanding anything contained in clauses (a), (b) or (c) of this section or in Schedule I the amount indicated in Schedule IA to this Act shall, subject to the exemptions contained in that schedule, be the duty chargeable under this Act on the following instruments, mentioned in clauses (aa) and (bb) of this proviso, as the proper duty therefor respectively,—

(aa) every instrument mentioned in Schedule IA as chargeable with duty under that schedule, which not having been previously executed by any person, is executed in the United Provinces on or after the first day of May, 1932, and

---

*Published in the Government Gazette, dated Allahabad, May, 7, 1932 (bb) every instrument mentioned in Schedule IA as chargeable with duty under that schedule which, not having been previously executed by any person, is executed out of the United Provinces on or after the first day of May, 1932, and relates to any property situated, or to any matter or thing done or to be done in the United Provinces, and is received in the United Provinces;"

(2) after the word "Provided" the word "also" shall be inserted.

Amendment of section 4 (1)

5. In sub-section (1) of section 4 of the said Act—

(a) after the words and figure "in Schedule I" the following shall be inserted, namely,—

"or in Schedule IA, as the case may be;"

(b) for the words and brackets "instead of the duty (if any) prescribed for it in that schedule" the following shall be substituted, namely,—

"if the principal instrument be chargeable with the duty prescribed in Schedule I, or with a duty of one rupee eight annas, if the principal instrument be chargeable with the duty prescribed in Schedule IA, instead of the duty (if any) prescribed for such other instrument in Schedule I or Schedule IA, as the case may be."

Amendment of section 6

6. In section 6 of the said Act—

(1) in the first paragraph, after the words and figure "in Schedule I" the following shall be inserted, namely,—

"or in Schedule IA, as the case may be;"

(2) in the proviso, after the words "one rupee" the words "and eight annas" shall be inserted, and after the words "has been paid" the following shall be added, namely,—

"unless it falls within the provisions of section 6-A."

New section 6-A

7. After section 6 of the said Act, the following shall be inserted, namely,—

Payment of the United Provinces stamp duty on copies, counterparts or duplicates when that duty has not been paid on the principal or original instrument.

"6-A. (1) Notwithstanding anything contained in section 4 or 6 or in any other law, unless it is proved that the duty chargeable under the United Provinces Stamp (Amendment) Act, 1932, has been paid—

(a) on the principal or original instrument as the case may be, or

(b) in accordance with the provisions of this section, the duty chargeable on an instrument of sale, mortgage or settlement other than a principal instrument, or on a counterpart, duplicate or copy of any instrument shall, if the principal or original instrument would, when received in the United Provinces, have been chargeable under the United Provinces Stamp (Amendment) Act, 1932, with a higher rate of duty, be the duty with which the principal or original instrument would have been chargeable under section 19-A.

(2) Notwithstanding anything contained in any law, no instrument, counterpart, duplicate or copy chargeable with duty under this section shall be received in evidence as properly stamped unless the duty chargeable under this section has been paid thereon:

Provided that a court before which any such instrument, counterpart, duplicate or copy is produced, may, in its discretion, permit the duty chargeable under this section to be paid thereon, and may then receive it in evidence."

New section 19-A

8. After section 19 of the said Act the following shall be inserted, namely,—

Payment of duty on certain instruments liable to increased duty in the United Provinces under clause (bb) of section 3.

"19-A. Where any instrument has become chargeable in any part of British India other than the United Provinces with duty under this Act or under any other law for the time being in force in any part of British India and thereafter becomes chargeable with a higher rate of duty in the United Provinces under clause (bb) of the first proviso to section 3—

(i) notwithstanding anything contained in the first proviso to section 3 the amount of duty chargeable on such instrument shall be the amount chargeable on it under Schedule IA less the amount of duty, if any, already paid on it in British India,

(ii) in addition to the stamps, if any, already affixed thereto, such instrument shall be stamped with the stamps necessary for the payment of the amount of duty chargeable on it under clause (i) in the same manner and at the same time and by the same persons as though such instrument were an instrument received in British India for the first time at the time when it became chargeable with the higher duty."

New section 29-A

9. After section 29 of the said Act the following shall be inserted, namely,—

Application of section 23-A, 24 or 29 to instruments chargeable with duty under Schedule IA.

"20-A. In applying section 23-A, 24 or 29 to any instrument chargeable with a higher rate of duty under the United Provinces Stamp (Amendment) Act, 1932, the references in those sections to the several articles in Schedule I shall be deemed to be references to the corresponding articles in Schedule IA.

Amendment of section 32

10. In section 32 of the said Act—

(1) in clause (a) of the proviso, after the words "any instrument" the words "other than an instrument chargeable with a duty under clause (bb) of the first proviso to section 3" shall be inserted;

(2) the word "or" at the end of clause (b) of the proviso shall be omitted;

(3) after clause (c) of the proviso the following shall be inserted, namely,—

"or

(d) any instrument chargeable with duty under clause (bb) of the first proviso to section 3 and brought to him after the expiration of three months from the date on which it is first received in the United Provinces."

New section 48-A

11. After section 48 of the said Act the following shall be inserted, namely,—

Validity of certificate or endorsement in respect of instruments for which higher rate of duty is payable in the United Provinces.

"48-A. Notwithstanding anything contained in this Act, no certificate or endorsement under this Act in respect of an instrument chargeable in the United Provinces with a higher rate of duty under the United Provinces Stamp (Amendment) Act, 1932, shall be received in evidence or be in any way valid in respect of the payment of duty on such instrument or in respect of the chargeability of such instrument with duty unless the duty chargeable under the United Provinces Stamp (Amendment) Act, 1932, has been paid on such instrument."

Amendment of section 77

12. At the beginning of section 77 of the said Act the following shall be inserted, namely,—

"Except for the provisions as to copies contained in section 6-A."

New Schedule IA

13. After Schedule I to the said Act the following shall be inserted, namely,—

SCHEDULE IA

Stamp duty on certain instruments under the United Provinces Stamp (Amendment) Act, 1932

(See section 3, first proviso.)

[NOTE.—The articles in Schedule IA are numbered so as to correspond with similar articles in Schedule I.]

Description of instrument	Proper stamp duty
* * * * * *
2. ADMINISTRATION BOND, including a bond given under sections 291, 375 and 376 of the Indian Succession Act, 1925, or section 6 of the Government Savings Banks Act, 1873—
(a) where the amount does not exceed Rs.1,000 ..	The same duty as a Bond (no. 15) for such amount.	XXXIX of 1925 V of 1873
(b) in any other case	Two rupees.
* * * * * *
ADVOCATE. See entry as an Advocate (no. 30).
4. AFFIDAVIT, including an affirmation or declaration in the case of persons by law allowed to affirm or declare instead of swearing.	Two rupees.
Exemptions
Affidavit or declaration in writing when made—
(a) as a condition of enlistment under the Indian Army Act, 1911.		VIII of 1911
(b) for the immediate purpose of being filed or used in any court or before the officer of any Court; or
(c) for the sole purpose of enabling any person to receive any pension or charitable allowance.		X of 1874
5. AGREEMENT OR MEMORANDUM OF AN AGREEMENT—
(a) if relating to the sale of a bill of exchange.	Three annas.
(b) if relating to the sale of a Government security or share in an incorporated company or other body corporate.	Subject to a maximum of fifteen rupees, one and half annas for every Rs. 10,000 or part thereof of the value of the security or share.

Stamp duty on certain instruments under the United Provinces Stamp (Amendment) Act, 1932—(continued).

Description of instrument		Proper stamp duty
(c) if not otherwise provided for		Twelve annas.
Exemptions
Agreement or Memorandum of Agreement— (a) for or relating to the sale of goods or merchandise exclusively, not being a note or memorandum chargeable under no. 43; (b) made in the form of tenders to the Government of India for, or relating to, any loan; (c) made under the European Vagrancy Act, 1874, section 17.
AGREEMENT TO LEASE. See Lease (no. 35).
6. AGREEMENT RELATING TO DEPOSIT OF TITLE-DEEDS, PAWN OR PLEDGE, that is to say, any instrument evidencing an agreement relating to— (1) the deposit of title-deeds or instrument constituting or being evidence of the title to pay any property whatever (other than a marketable security): or (2) the pawn or pledge of movable property, where such deposit, pawn or pledge has been made by way of security for the repayment of money advanced or to be advanced by way of loan or an existing or future debt— (a) if such loan or debt is repayable on demand or more than three months from the date of the instrument evidencing the agreement—
	Rs.	Rs.	a.	p.
when the amount of the loan or debt does not exceed	200	0	3	0
when it exceeds Rs. 200 but does not exceed	400	0	8	0

Stamp duty on certain instruments under the United Provinces Stamp (Amendment) Act, 1932—(continued).

Description of instrument		Proper stamp duty
when it exceeds Rs. 400 but does not exceed	600	0 12 0
when it exceeds Rs. 600 but does not exceed	800	1 0 0
when it exceeds Rs. 800 but does not exceed	1,000	1 4 0
when it exceeds Rs. 1,000 but does not exceed	1,200	1 8 0
when it exceeds Rs. 1,200 but does not exceed	1,600	2 0 0
when it exceeds Rs. 1,600 but does not exceed	2,500	3 0 0
when it exceeds Rs. 2,500 but does not exceed	5,000	6 0 0
when it exceeds Rs. 5,000 but does not exceed	7,500	9 0 0
when it exceeds Rs. 7,500 but does not exceed	10,000	12 0 0
when it exceeds Rs. 10,000 but does not exceed	15,000	18 0 0
when it exceeds Rs. 15,000 but does not exceed	20,000	24 0 0
when it exceeds Rs. 20,000 but does not exceed	25,000	30 0 0
when it exceeds Rs. 25,000 but does not exceed	30,000	36 0 0
and for every additional Rs. 10,000 or part thereof in excess of Rs.30,000;		12 0 0
(b) if such loan or debt is repayable not more than three months from the date of such instrument.		Half the duty payable on a loan or debt under clause (a) for the amount secured.

Stamp duty on certain instruments under the United Provinces Stamp (Amendment) Act, 1932—(continued).

Description of instrument	Proper stamp duty
7. APPOINTMENT IN EXECUTION OF A POWER, whether of trustees or of property, movable or immovable, where made by any writing not being a will—
(a) where the value of the property does not exceed Rs.1,000.	Fifteen rupees.
(b) in any other case	Twenty-five rupees.
8. APPRAISEMENT OR VALUATION made otherwise than under an order of the Court in the course of a suit—
(a) where the amount does not exceed Rs.1,000.	The same duty as a Bond (no. 15) for such amount.
(b) in any other case	Seven rupees eight annas.
Exemptions
(a) Appraisement or valuation made for the information of one party only, and not being in any manner obligatory between parties either by agreement or operation of law.
(b) Appraisement of crops for the purpose of ascertaining the amount to be given to a landlord as rent.
9. APPRENTICESHIP DEED, including every writing relating to the service or tuition of any apprentice, clerk or servant placed with any master to learn any profession, trade or employment, not being Articles of Clerkship (no. 11).	Seven rupees eight annas.
Exemption
XIX of 1850 Instruments of apprenticeship executed by a Magistrate under the Apprentices Act, 1850, or by which a person is apprenticed by, or at the charge of, any public charity.
10. ARTICLES OF ASSOCIATION OF A COMPANY.	Fifty rupees.
Exemption
VII of 1918 Articles of any Association not formed for profit and registered under section 26 of the Indian Companies Act, 1913.
See also Memorandum of Association of a Company (no. 39).
* * * * * *

Stamp duty on certain instruments under the United Provinces Stamp (Amendment) Act, 1932—(continued).

Description of instrument	Proper stamp duty
ASSIGNMENT. See Conveyance (no. 23), Transfer (no. 62), and Transfer of Lease (no. 63), as the case may be.
ATTORNEY. See Entry as an Attorney (no. 30), and Power of Attorney (no. 48).
AUTHORITY TO ADOPT. See Adoption-deed (no. 3).
12. AWARD, that is to say, any decision in writing by an arbitrator or umpire not being an award directing a partition, on a reference made otherwise than by an order of the Court in the course of a suit—
(a) where the amount or value of the property to which the award relates, as set forth in such award, does not exceed Rs.1,000.	The same duty as a Bond (no. 15), for such amount.
(b) if it exceeds Rs.1,000 but does not exceed Rs.5,000.	Seven rupees eight annas.
(c) in any other case ..	Ten rupees.
Exemption Award under the Bombay District Municipal Act, 1901, section 160, or the Bombay Hereditary Offices Act, 1874, section 18, or the United Provinces Municipalities Act, 1916, section 324(1) or the United Provinces District Boards Act, 1922, section 190(1).		Bom. Act III of 1901 Bom. Act III of 1874 U. P. Act II of 1916 U. P. Act X of 1922
* * * * * *
14. BILL OF LADING (including a through bill of lading).	Six annas. N.B.—If a bill of lading is drawn in parts the proper stamp therefor must be borne by each one of the set.
Exemptions (a) Bill of lading when the goods therein described are received at a place within the limits of any port, as defined under the Indian Ports Act, 1908, and are to be delivered* at another place within the limits of the same port.		XV of 1908
(b) Bill of lading when executed out of British India and relating to property to be delivered in British India.

Stamp duty on certain instruments under the United Provinces Stamp (Amendment) Act, 1932—(continued).

	Description of instrument		Proper stamp duty
VII of 1870	15: BOND [as defined by section 2(5)], not being a DEBENTURE (no. 27), and not being otherwise provided for by this Act, or by the Court-fees Act, 1870—
		Rs.
	where the amount or value secured does not exceed	10	Two annas.
	where it exceeds Rs.10 but does not exceed	50	Four annas.
	where it exceeds Rs.50 but does not exceed	100	Eight annas.
	where it exceeds Rs.100 but does not exceed	200	One rupee.
	where it exceeds Rs.200 but does not exceed ..	300	One rupee eight annas.
	where it exceeds Rs.300 but does not exceed	400	Two rupees.
	where it exceeds Rs.400 but does not exceed	500	Two rupees eight annas.
	where it exceeds Rs.500 but does not exceed	600	Three rupees four annas.
	where it exceeds Rs.600 but does not exceed .	700	Four rupees.
	where it exceeds Rs.700 but does not exceed	800	Four rupees twelve annas.
	where it exceeds Rs.800 but does not exceed	900	Five rupees eight annas.
	where it exceeds Rs.900 but does not exceed	1,000	Six rupees four annas.
	and for every Rs.500 or part thereof in excess of Rs.1,000.		Three rupees twelve annas.
	See Administration Bond (no. 2), Bottomry Bond (no. 16), Customs Bond (no. 26), Indemnity Bond (no. 34), Respondentia Bond (no. 56), Security Bond (no. 57).
	Exemptions
	Bond when executed by—
Bom. Act III of 1876	(a) headmen nominated under rules framed in accordance with the Bengal Irrigation Act, 1876, section 99, for the due performance of their duties under that Act;

Stamp duty on certain instruments under the United Provinces Stamp (Amendment) Act, 1932—(continued).

Description of instrument	Proper stamp duty
(b) any person for the purpose of guaranteeing that the local income derived from private subscriptions to a charitable dispensary or hospital or any other object of public utility shall not be less than a specified sum per mensem.
16. BOTTOMRY BOND, that is to say, any instrument whereby the master of a sea-going ship borrows money on the security of the ship to enable him to preserve the ship or prosecute her voyage.	The same duty as a Bond (no. 15) for a sum equal to the amount or value secured.
17. CANCELLATION—Instrument (including any instrument by which any instrument previously executed is cancelled) if attested and not otherwise provided for. See also Release (no. 55), Revocation of Settlement (no. 58-B), Surrender of lease (no. 61), Revocation of Trust (no. 64-B).	Seven rupees eight annas.
18. CERTIFICATE OF SALE (in respect of each property put up as a separate lot and sold), granted to the purchaser of any property sold by public auction by a Civil or Revenue Court, or Collector or other Revenue Officer—
(a) where the purchase-money does not exceed Rs. 10.	Two annas.
(b) where the purchase-money exceeds Rs.10 but does not exceed Rs.25.	Four annas.
(c) in any other case	The same duty as a Conveyance (no. 23) for a consideration equal to the amount of the purchase-money only.
* * * * * *
20. CHARTER PARTY, that is to say, any instrument (except an agreement for the hire of a tug-steamer), whereby a vessel or some specified principal part thereof is let for the specified purposes of the charterer, whether it includes a penalty clause or not.	Two rupees.

Stamp duty on certain instruments under the United Provinces Stamp (Amendment) Act, 1932—(continued).

Description of instrument	Proper stamp duty
* * * * * *
22. COMPOSITION-DEED, that is to say, any instrument executed by a debtor, whereby he conveys his property for the benefit of his creditors, or whereby payment of a composition or dividend on their debts is secured to the creditors, or whereby provision is made for the continuance of the debtor's business, under the supervision of inspectors or under letters of licence, for the benefit of his creditors.	Twelve rupees eight annas.
23. CONVEYANCE [as defined by section 2(10)], not being a transfer charged or exempted under no. 62—
where the amount or value of the consideration for such conveyance as set forth therein does not exceed Rs.50;	Eight annas.
Rs.
where it exceeds Rs.50 but does not exceed . 100	One rupee.
where it exceeds Rs.100 but does not exceed . 200	Two rupees.
where it exceeds Rs.200 but does not exceed . . 300	Three rupees.
where it exceeds Rs.300 but does not exceed 400	Four rupees.
where it exceeds Rs.400 but does not exceed . 500	Five rupees.
where it exceeds Rs.500 but does not exceed . 600	Six rupees eight annas.
where it exceeds Rs.600 but does not exceed 700	Eight rupees.
where it exceeds Rs.700 but does not exceed . 800	Nine rupees eight annas.
where it exceeds Rs.800 but does not exceed 900	Eleven rupees.
where it exceeds Rs.900 but does not exceed 1,000	Twelve rupees eight annas.
and for every Rs.500 or part thereof in excess of Rs.1,000.	Seven rupees eight annas.
Exemptions
III of 1914 Assignment of copyright under the Indian Copyright Act, 1914, section 5.
CO-PARTNERSHIP DEED, See Partnership (no. 46).

Stamp duty on certain instruments under the United Provinces Stamp (Amendment) Act, 1932—(continued).

Description of instrument	Proper stamp duty
24. Copy or Extract, certified to be a true copy or extract by or by order of any public officer and not chargeable under the law for the time being in force relating to court-fees—
(i) if the original was not chargeable with duty, or if the duty with which it was chargeable does not exceed one rupee.	Eight annas when the copy or extract is of an agricultural lease or of a mortgage-deed or sale-deed of agricultural land; in any other case twelve annas.
(ii) in any other case not falling within the provision of section 6-A.	One rupee when the copy or extract is of an agricultural lease or of a mortgage-deed or sale-deed of agricultural land; in any other case one rupee eight annas.
Exemptions
(a) Copy of any paper which a public officer is expressly required by law to make or furnish, for record in any public office or for any public purpose.
(b) Copy of, or extract from, any register relating to births, baptisms, namings, dedications, marriages, divorces, deaths or burials.
25. Counterpart or Duplicate of any instrument chargeable with duty and in respect of which the proper duty has been paid—
(a) if the duty with which the original instrument is chargeable does not exceed one rupee eight annas;	The same duty as is payable on the original.
(b) in any other case not falling within the provisions of section 6-A.	One rupee eight annas.
Exemption
Counterpart of any lease granted to a cultivator, when such lease is exempted from duty.

Stamp duty on certain instruments under the United Provinces Stamp (Amendment) Act, 1932—(continued).

Description of instrument	Proper stamp duty
26. CUSTOMS BOND—
(a) where the amount does not exceed Rs.1,000.	The same duty as a Bond (no. 15) for such amount.
(b) in any other case .	Ten rupees.
27. DEBENTURE (whether a mortgage debenture or not), being a marketable security transferable—
(a) by endorsement or by a separate instrument of transfer.	The same duty as a Bond (no. 15) for the same amount.
(b) by delivery— where the face amount of the debenture does not exceed Rs.100.	One rupee four annas.
Rs. where it exceeds Rs.100 but does not exceed .. 200	Two rupees eight annas.
where is exceeds Rs.200 but does not exceed .. .	The same duty as a Conveyance (no. 23) for a consideration equal to the face amount of the debenture.
Explanation.—The Term "Debenture" includes any interest coupons attached thereto, but the amount of such coupons shall not be included in estimating the duty.
Exemption
A debenture issued by an incorporated company or other body corporate in terms of a registered mortgage-deed, duly stamped in respect of the full amount of debentures to be issued thereunder whereby the company or body borrowing makes over, in whole, or in part, their property to trustees for the benefit of the debenture-holders: provided that the debentures so issued are expressed to be issued in terms of the said mortgage-deed.
See also Bond (no. 15) and sections 8 and 55.

Stamp duty on certain instruments under the United Provinces Stamp (Amendment) Act, 1932—(continued).

Description of instrument	Proper stamp duty
DECLARATION OF ANY TRUST. See Trust (no. 64).
* * * * * *
DEPOSIT OF TITLE-DEEDS. See Agreement relating to deposit of title-deeds, pawn or pledge (no. 6).
DISSOLUTION OF PARTNERSHIP. See Partnership (no. 46).
29. DIVORCE—Instrument of—that is to say, any instrument by which any person affects the dissolution of his marriage.	Five rupees.
DOWER—Instrument of—See Settlement (no. 58).
DUPLICATE—See Counterpart (no. 25).
30. ENTRY AS AN ADVOCATE, VAKIL OR ATTORNEY ON THE ROLL OF ANY HIGH COURT, in exercise of powers conferred on such Court by Letters Patent or by the Legal Practitioners' Act, 1879—
(a) in the case of an advocate or Vakil	Five hundred rupees.
(b) in the case of any Attorney	Five hundred rupees.
Exemption
Entry of an Advocate to, Vakil or Attorney on the roll of any High Court, when he has previously been enrolled in a High Court.
31. EXCHANGE OF PROPERTY—Instrument of—	The same duty as a Conveyance (no. 23) for a consideration equal to the value of the property of greatest value as set forth in such instrument.
EXTRACT. See Copy (no. 24).
32. FURTHER CHARGE. Instrument of, that is to say, any instrument imposing a further charge on mortgaged property—
(a) when the original mortgage is one of the description referred to in clause (a) of article no. 40 (that is, with possession):	The same duty as a Conveyance (no. 23) for a consideration equal to the amount of the further charge secured by such instrument.
(b) when such mortgage is one of the description referred to in

XVIII of 1879

Stamp duty on certain instruments under the United Provinces Stamp (Amendment) Act, 1932—(continued).

Description of instrument	Proper stamp duty
clause (b) of article no. 40 (that is, without possession)—
(i) if at the time of execution of the instrument of further charge possession of the property is given or agreed to be given under such instrument;	The same duty as a Conveyance (no. 23) for a consideration equal to the total amount of the charge (including the original mortgage and any further charge already made) less the duty already paid on such original mortgage and further charge.
(ii) if possession is not so given	The same duty as a Bond (no. 15) for the amount of the further charge secured by such instrument.
33. GIFT—Instrument of, not being a Settlement (no. 58), or Will or Transfer (no. 62).	The same duty as a Conveyance (no. 23) for a consideration equal to the value of the property as set forth in such instrument.
HIRING AGREEMENT or agreement for service. See Agreement (no. 5).
34. INDEMNITY BOND	The same duty as a Security Bond (no. 57) for the same amount.
INSPECTORSHIP-DEED. See Composition-deed (no. 22).
35. LEASE, including an under-lease or sub-lease and any agreement to let or sub-let—
(a) where by such lease rent is fixed and no premium is paid or delivered—
(i) where the lease purports to be for a term of less than one year;	The same duty as a Bond (no. 15) for the whole amount payable or deliverable under such lease.
(ii) where the lease purports to be for a term of not less than one year, but not more than five years;	The same duty as a Bond (no. 15) for the amount or value of the average annual rent reserved.

Stamp duty on certain instruments under the United Provinces Stamp (Amendment) Act, 1932—(continued).

Description of instrument	Proper stamp duty
(iii) where the lease purports to be for a term exceeding five years, but not exceedng ten years;	The same duty as a Conveyance (no. 23) for a consideration equal to the amount or value of the average annual rent reserved.
(iv) where the lease purports to be for a term exceeding ten years, but not exceeding twenty years;	The same duty as a Conveyance (no. 23) for a consideration equal to twice the amount or value of the average annual rent reserved.
(v) where the lease purports to be for a term exceeding twenty years but not exceeding thirty years.	The same duty as a Conveyance (no. 23) for a consideration equal to three times the amount or value of the average annual rent reserved.
(vi) where the lease purports to be for a term exceeding thirty years, but not exceeding one hundred years;	The same duty as a Conveyance (no. 23) for a consideration equal to four times the amount or value of the average annual rent reserved.
(vii) where the lease purports to be for a term exceeding one hundred years or in perpetuity;	The same duty as a Conveyance (no. 23) for a consideration equal in the case of a lease granted solely for agricultural purposes to one-tenth, and in any other case to one-sixth of the whole amount of rent which would be paid or delivered in respect of the first fifty years of the lease.
(viii) where the lease does not purport to be for any definite term;	The same duty as a Conveyance (no. 23) for a consideration equal to three times the amount or value of the average annual rent which would be paid or delivered for the first ten years if the lease continued so long.

Stamp duty on certain instruments under the United Provinces Stamp (Amendment) Act, 1932—(continued).

Description of instrument	Proper stamp duty
(b) where the lease is granted for a fine or premium or for money advanced and where no rent is reserved;	The same duty as a Conveyance (no. 23) for a consideration equal to the amount or value of such fine or premium or advance as set forth in the lease.
(c) where the lease is granted for a fine or premium or for money advanced in addition to rent reserved.	The same duty as a Conveyance (no. 23) for a consideration equal to the amount or value of such fine or premium or advance as set forth in the lease, in addition to the duty which would have been payable on such lease, if no fine or premium or advance had been paid or delivered: Provided that in any case when an agreement to lease is stamped with the ad valorem stamp required for lease, and a lease, in pursuance of such agreement is subsequently executed, the duty on such lease shall not exceed twelve annas.
Exemptions
(a) Lease executed in the case of a cultivator and for the purposes of cultivation (including a lease of trees for the production of food or drink), without the payment or delivery of any fine or premium, when a definite term is expressed and such term does not exceed one year, or when the average annual rent reserved does not exceed one hundred rupees.
* * * * * *

Description of instrument	Proper stamp duty
In this exemption a lease for the purposes of cultivation shall include a lease of land for cultivation together with a homestead or tanks.
(b) Leases of fisheries granted under the Burma Fisheries Act, 1905, or the Upper Burma Land and Revenue Regulation, 1889.		Bur. Act III of 1905, III of 1889
Explanation.—When a lessee undertakes to pay any recurring charge, such as Government revenue, the landlord's share of cesses or the owner's share of municipal rates or taxes, which is by law recoverable from the lessor, the amount so agreed to be paid by the lessee shall be deemed to be part of the rent.
* * * * * *
LETTER OF GUARANTEE. See Agreement (no. 5).
38. LETTER OF LICENCE, that is to say, any agreement between a debtor and his creditors that the latter shall, for a specified time, suspend their claims and allow the debtor to carry on business at his own discretion.	Twelve rupees eight annas.
39. MEMORANDUM OF ASSOCIATION OF A COMPANY—
(a) if accompanied by articles of Association under section 17 of the Indian Companies Act, 1913.	Thirty rupees.	VII of 1913
(b) if not so accompanied	Eighty rupees.
Exemptions
Memorandum of any Association not formed for profit and registered under section 26 of the Indian Companies Act, 1913.		VII of 1913
40. MORTGAGE-DEED, not being an Agreement relating to deposit of Title-deeds, Pawn or Pledge (no. 6), Bottomry Bond (no. 16), Mortgage of a crop (no.

Stamp duty on certain instruments under the United Provinces Stamp (Amendment) Act, 1932—(continued).

Description of instrument	Proper stamp duty
41), Respondentia Bond (no. 56) or Security Bond (no. 57)—
(a) when possession of the property or any part of the property comprised in such deed is given by the mortgagor or agreed to be given;	The same duty as a Conveyance (no. 23) for a consideration equal to the amount secured by such deed.
(b) when possession is not given or agreed to be given as aforesaid;	The same duty as a Bond (no. 15) for the amount secured by such deed.
Explanation.—A mortgagor who gives to the mortgagee a power-of-attorney to collect rents or a lease of the property mortgaged or part thereof, is deemed to give possession within the meaning of this article.
(c) when a collateral or auxilliary or additional or substituted security, or by way of further assurance for the abovementioned purpose were the principal or primary security is duly stamped—for every sum secured not exceeding Rs.1,000.	Twelve annas.
and for every Rs.1,000 or part thereof secured in excess of Rs. 1,000.	Twelve annas.
Exemptions
XIX of 1883 XII of 1884 (1) Instruments executed by persons taking advances under the Land Improvement Loans Act, 1883, or the Agriculturists Loans Act, 1884, or by their sureties as securities for the payment of such advances.
(2) Letter of hypothecation accompanying a bill of exchange.
* * * * * *
42. NOTARIAL ACT, that is to say, any instrument, endorsement, note, attestation, certificate, or entry not being a Protest (no. 50) made or signed by a Notary Public in the execution of the duties of his office, or by any other person lawfully acting as a Notary Public.	Two rupees.

Stamp duty on certain instruments under the United Provinces Stamp (Amendment) Act, 1932—(continued).

Description of instrument	Proper stamp duty
See also Protest of Bill or Note (no. 50).
43. NOTE OR MEMORANDUM sent by a broker or Agent to his principal intimating the purchase or sale on account of such principal—
(a) of any goods exceeding in value twenty rupees.	Three annas.
(b) of any stock or marketable security exceeding in value twenty rupees.	Subject to a maximum of fifteen rupees two annas for every Rs.10,000 or part thereof of the value of the stock or security.
44. NOTE OF PROTEST by the Master of a ship.	One rupee.
See also Protest by the Master of a ship (no. 51).
* * * * * *
45. PARTITION. Instrument of—as defined by section 2(15).	The same duty as a Bond (no. 5) for the amount of the value of the separated share or shares of the property. N.B.—The largest share remaining after the property is partitioned (or if there are two or more shares of equal value and not smaller than any of the other shares) then one of such equal shares shall be deemed to be that from which the other shares are separated. Provided always that— (a) when an instrument of partition containing an agreement to divide property in severality is executed and a partition is effected in pursuance of such agreement, the duty chargeable upon the instrument effecting such partition shall be reduced by the amount of duty

Stamp duty on certain instruments under the United Provinces Stamp (Amendment) Act, 1932—(continued).

Description of instrument	Proper stamp duty paid in respect of the first instrument, but shall not be less than twelve annas. (b) where land is held on Revenue Settlement for a period not exceeding thirty years and paying the full assessment the value for the purpose of duty shall be calculated at not more than five times the annual revenue. (c) where a final order for effecting a partition passed by any Revenue Authority or any Civil Court, or an award by an arbitrator directing a partition, is stamped with the stamp required for an instrument or partition, and an instrument of partition in pursuance of such order or award is subsequently executed, the duty on such instrument shall not exceed twelve annas.
46. PARTNERSHIP—
A.—Instrument of—
(a) where the capital of the partnership does not exceed Rs. 500.	Three rupees twelve annas.
(b) where the capital exceeds Rs. 500 but does not exceed Rs. 2,000.	Seven rupees eight annas.
(c) in any other case	Fifteen rupees.
B.—Dissolution of—	Ten rupees.
PAWN OR PLEDGE. See Agreement relating to deposit of Title-deeds, Pawn or Pledge (no. 6).
* * * * * *
50. PROTEST OF BILL OR NOTE, that is to say, any declaration in writing made by a Notary Public; or other person lawfully acting as such, attesting the dis-	Two rupees.

Stamp duty on certain instruments under the United Provinces Stamp (Amendment) Act, 1932—(continued).

Description of instrument	Proper stamp duty honour of a Bill of Exchange or Promissory Note.
51. PROTEST BY THE MASTER OF A SHIP, that is to say, any declaration of the particulars of her voyage drawn up by him with a view to the adjustment of losses or the calculation of averages, and every declaration in writing made by him against the characters or the consignees for not loading or unloading the ship, when such declaration is attested or certified by a Notary Public or other person lawfully acting as such. See also Note of Protest by the Master of a ship (no. 44).	Two rupees.
* * * * *
54. RECONVEYANCE OF MORTGAGED PROPERTY—
(a) if the consideration for which the property was mortgaged does not exceed Rs.1,000;	The same duty as a Conveyance (no. 23) for the amount of such consideration as set forth in the reconveyance.
(b) in any other case	Fifteen rupees.
55. RELEASE, that is to say, any instrument (not being such a release as is provided for by section 23-A), whereby a person renounces a claim upon another person or against any specified property—
(a) if the amount or value of the claim does not exceed Rs.1,000;	The same duty as a Bond (no. 15) for such amount or value as set forth in the release.
(b) in any other case	Seven rupees eight annas.
56. RESPONDENTIA BOND, that is to say, any instrument securing a loan on the cargo laden or to be laden on board a ship and making repayment contingent on the arrival of the cargo at the port of destination.	The same duty as a Bond (no. 15) for the amount of the loan secured.
REVOCATION OF ANY TRUST OR SETTLEMENT. See Settlement (no. 58); Trust (no. 64).
57. SECURITY BOND OR MORTGAGE-DEED, executed by way security for the due execution of an office, or to account

	Description of instrument	Proper stamp duty for money or other property received by virtue thereof, or executed by a surety to secure the due performance of a contract—
	(a) when the amount secured does not exceed Rs.1,000	The same duty as a Bond (no. 15) for the amount secured.
	(b) in any other case .	Seven rupees eight annas
	Exemptions
	Bond or other instrument when executed—
Ben. Act III of 1876	(a) by headman nominated under rules framed in accordance with the Bengal Irrigation Act, 1876, section 99, for the due performance of their duties under that Act;
	(b) by any person for the purpose of guaranteeing that the local income derived from private subscriptions to a charitable dispensary or hospital, or any other object of public utility, shall be not less than a specified sum per mensem;
Bom. Act VII of 1879	(c) under no. 3-A of the rules made by the Governor of Bombay in Council under section 70 of the Bombay Irrigation Act, 1879;
XIX of 1883 XII of 1884	(d) executed by persons taking advances under the Land Improvement Loans Act, 1883, or the Agriculturists Loans Act, 1884, or by their sureties, as security for the repayment of such advances;
	(e) executed by officers of Government or their sureties to secure the due execution of an office, or the due accounting for money or other property received by virtue thereof.
	58. SETTLEMENT—

Stamp duty on certain instruments under the United Provinces Stamp (Amendment) Act, 1932—(continued).

Description of instrument	Proper stamp duty
A.—Instrument of (including a deed of dower)—	The same duty as a Bond (no. 15) for a sum equal to the amount or value of the property settled as set forth in such settlement: Provided, that where an agreement to settle is stamped with the stamp required for an instrument of settlement and an instrument of settlement in pursuance of such agreement is subsequently executed, the duty on such instrument shall not exceed twelve annas.
Exemptions (a) Deed of dower executed on the occasion of a marriage between Muhammadans. (b) Hludassa, that is to say, any settlement of immovable property executed by a Buddhist in Burma for a religious purpose in which no value has been specified and on which a duty of Rs.10 has been paid.
B.—Revocation of—	The same duty as a Bond (no. 15) for a sum equal to the amount or value of the property concerned, as set forth in the instrument of Revocation, but not exceeding fifteen rupees.
See also Trust (no. 64).
59. SHARE WARRANTS to bearer issued under the Indian Companies Act, 1913.	The same duty as a Debenture transferable by delivery [no. 27(b)] for a face amount equal to the nominal amount of the shares specified in the warrant.	VII of 1913

Stamp duty on certain instruments under the United Provinces Stamp (Amendment) Act, 1932—(continued).

Description of instrument	Proper stamp duty
Exemptions Share warrant when issued by a company in pursuance of the Indian Companies Act, 1913, section 43, to have effect only upon payment, as composition for that duty, to the Collector of Stamp Revenue of— (a) one and a half per centum of the whole subscribed capital of the Company; or (b) If any company which has paid the said duty or composition in full, subsequently issues an addition to its subscribed capital, one and a half per centum of the additional capital so issued.
* * * * * *
61. SURRENDER OF LEASE—
(a) when the duty with which the lease is chargeable does not exceed seven rupees eight annas;	The duty with which such lease is chargeable.
(b) in any other case .	Seven rupees eight annas.
Exemption Surrender of lease, when such lease is exempted from duty.
62. TRANSFER (whether with or without consideration)— (a) of shares in an incorporated Company or other body corporate; or (b) of debentures, being marketable securities, whether the debenture is liable to duty or not except debentures provided for by section 8;
When the value of the share or the face amount of the debenture does not exceed Rs.100.	Twelve annas.
where it exceeds Rs.100 but does not exceed . .. Rs. 200	One rupee eight annas.
where it exceeds Rs.200 but does not exceed 300	Two rupees four annas.

Stamp duty on certain instruments under the United Provinces Stamp (Amendment) Act, 1932—(continued).

Description of instrument	Proper stamp duty
where it exceeds Rs.300 but does not exceed 400	Three rupees.
where it exceeds Rs.400 but does not exceed 500	Three rupees twelve annas.
where it exceeds Rs.500 but does not exceed 600	Four rupees eight annas.
where it exceeds Rs.600 but does not exceed 700	Five rupees four annas.
where it exceeds Rs.700 but does not exceed 800	Six rupees.
where it exceeds Rs.800 but does not exceed 900	Six rupees twelve annas.
where it exceeds Rs.900 but does not exceed 1,000	Seven rupees eight annas.
and for every Rs.500 or part thereof in excess of 1,000	Three rupees twelve annas.
(c) of any interest secured by a bond, mortgage-deed or policy of insurance—
(i) if the duty on such bond, mortgage-deed or policy does not exceed five rupees;	The duty with which such Bond, Mortgage deed or Policy of Insurance is chargeable.
(ii) in any other case	Seven rupees eight annas.
(d) of any property under the Administrator-General's Act, 1913, section 25;	Fifteen rupees.	III of 1913
(e) of any trust property without consideration from one trustee to another trustee, or from a trustee to a beneficiary.	Seven rupees eight annas or such smaller amount as may be chargeable under clauses (a) to (c) of this article.
Exemptions
Transfers by endorsement—
(a) of a bill of Exchange, Cheque or Promissory note;
(b) of a Bill of Lading, Delivery Order, warrant for goods, or other mercantile document of title to goods;
(c) of a Policy of Insurance;
(d) of securities of the Government of India or the local Government.
See also section 8.

Stamp duty on certain instruments under the United Provinces Stamp (Amendment) Act, 1932—(continued).

Description of instrument	Proper stamp duty
63. TRANSFER OF LEASE by way of assignment and not by way of underlease.	The same duty as a Conveyance (no. 23) for a consideration equal to the amount of the consideration for the transfer.
Exemption Transfer of any lease exempt from duty.
64. TRUST.—
A.—DECLARATION OF—of, or concerning, any property when made by any writing not being a will.	The same duty as a Bond (no. 15) for a sum equal to the amount of value of the property concerned, as set forth in the instrument; but not exceeding twenty-two rupees eight annas.
B.—REVOCATION OF—of, or concerning, any property when made by any instrument other than a will.	The same duty as a Bond (no. 15) for a sum equal to the amount or value of the property concerned, as set forth in the instrument, but not exceeding fifteen rupees.
See also Settlement (no. 58).
VALUATION. See Appraisement (no. 8).
VAKIL. See Entry as a Vakil (no. 30).
65. WARRANT FOR GOODS, that is to say, any instrument evidencing the title of any person therein named, or his assigns, or the holder thereof, the property in any goods lying in or upon any dock, warehouse or wharf, such instrument being signed or certified by or on behalf of the person in whose custody such goods may be.	Six annas.

U. P. COURT-FEES (AMENDMENT) ACT, 1932

(No. III OF 1932)*

[Received the assent of the Governor-General on April 25, 1932]

[PASSED BY THE LOCAL LEGISLATURE OF THE UNITED PROVINCES OF AGRA AND OUDH.]

An Act further to amend the Court-fees Act, 1870, in its application to the United Provinces.

Preamble.

VII of 1870

WHEREAS it is expedient further to amend the Court-fees Act, 1870, in its application to the United Provinces.

5 and 6, Geo. V, c. 61; 6 and 7 Geo. V, c, 37; 9 and 10, Geo. V c. 101

And whereas the previous sanction of the Governor-General has been obtained, under section 80-A, sub-section (3), of the Government of India Act, to the passing of this Act;

It is hereby enacted as follows:—

Title, extent and commencement.

1. (1) This Act may be called the United Provinces Court-fees (Amendment) Act, 1932.

(2) It extends to the territories for the time being administered by the Local Government of the United Provinces.

(3) It shall come into force on the first day of May, 1932, and shall remain in force up till March 31, 1934.

Amendment of section 6 of Act VII of 1870

2. To section 6 of the Court-fees Act, 1870 hereinafter referred to as "the said Act", the following proviso shall be added, namely,—

Provided that where such document relates to any suit, appeal or other proceeding under the Oudh Rent Act, 1886, the Agra Tenancy Act, 1926, or the United Provinces Land Revenue Act, 1901, the proper fee shall be three-quarters of the fee indicated in either of the said schedules except where the document is of any of the kinds specified as chargeable in the first schedule and the amount or value of the subject-matter of the suit appeal or proceeding to which it relates exceeds the value of Rs. 500:

Act XXII of 1886
U. P. Act III of 1926
U. P. Act III of 1901

Provided further that the fee payable in respect of any such document as is mentioned in the foregoing proviso shall not be less than that indicated by either of the said schedules before the commencement of this Act.

Amendment of paragraph (v) of section 7 of Act VII of 1870

3. In paragraph (v) of section 7 of the said Act the word "ten" in clause (a) shall be read as "twenty" and the word "five" in clause (b) shall be read as "six."

Amendment of paragraph (ix) of section 7 of Act VII of 1870

4. For paragraph (ix) of section 7 of the said Act the following clause shall be substituted, namely,—

(ix) In suits against a mortgagee for the recovery of the property mortgaged according to the principal money expressed to be secured by the instrument of mortgage.

---

*Published in the Government Gazette, dated Allahabad, May 7, 1932

(ix) (a) In suits by a mortgagee to foreclose the mortgage, or where the mortgage is made by conditional sale, to have the sale declared absolute, according to the total amount claimed by way of principal and interest.

Amendment of section 18 of Act VII of 1870

5. In section 18 of the said Act for the words "eight annas" the words "twelve annas" shall be substituted.

Amendment of Schedule I to Act VII of 1870

6. In Schedule I to the said Act the following amendments shall be made, namely,—

(i) In article 1 for the entries in the second and third columns the entries shown in the first and second columns of Schedule A to this Act shall be substituted.

(ii) In article 6 for the words "four," "eight" and "one rupee" in the third column the words "six," "twelve" and "one rupee eight annas," respectively, shall be substituted.

(iii) In article 7 for the words 'eight" and "one rupee" in the third column the words "twelve" and "one rupee eight annas", respectively, shall be substituted.

(iv) In article 8 for the word "eight" in the third column the word "twelve" shall be substituted.

(v) In article 11 for the entries above the proviso in the second and third columns the following shall be substituted:—

(1) When the amount or value of the property in respect of which the grant of Probate or Letters is made exceeds one thousand rupees, but does not exceed ten thousand rupees;	Two per centum on such amount or value.
and
(2) When such amount or value exceeds ten thousand rupees, but does not exceed fifty thousand rupees;	Two and one-half per centum on such amount or value.
and
(3) When such amount or value exceeds fifty thousand rupees, but does not exceed one lakh of rupees, for the portion of such amount or value which is in excess of fifty thousand rupees;	Three per centum on such amount or value.
and
(4) When such amount or value exceeds a lakh of rupees, for the portion of such amount or value which is in excess of a lakh of rupees;	Four per centum on such amount or value.

(vi) In article 12 for the entries in the first and second columns and for the first paragraph in the third column the following shall be substituted:—

12. Certificate under the Indian Succession Act, 1925.	1. When the amount or value of any debt or security specified in the certificate under section 374 of the Act does not exceed twenty thousand rupees; and	Two per centum on such amount or value and three per centum on the amount or value of any debt or security to which the certificate is extended under section 376 of the Act.
	2. When such amount or value exceeds twenty thousand rupees, but does not exceed fifty thousand rupees, for the portion of such amount or value which is in excess of twenty thousand rupees; and	Two and a half per centum on such amount or value and three and a three-quarters per centum on the amount or value of any debt or security to which the certificate is extended under section 376 of the Act.
	3. When such amount or value exceeds fifty thousand rupees, but does not exceed a lakh of rupees, for the portion of such amount or value which is in excess of fifty thousand rupees; and	Three per centum on such amount or value and four and a half per centum on the amount or value of any debt or security to which the certificate is extended under section 376 of the Act.
	4. When such amount or value exceeds a lakh of rupees, for the portion of such amount or value which is in excess of a lakh of rupees.	Four per centum on such amount or value and six per centum on the amount or value of any debt or security to which the certificate is extended under section 376 of the Act.

(vii) For the table of ad volorem fees leviable on the institution of suits the table shown in Schedule B to this Act shall be substituted.

Amendment of Schedule II to Act VII of 1870

7. In Schedule II to the said Act the following amendments shall be made, namely:—

(i) In article 1 for the words “one anna,” “eight annas” and “one rupee” in the third column the words “two annas,’ “twelve annas” and “one rupee and eight annas”, respectively, shall be substituted; and the following clause shall be substituted for clause (d):—

(d) I.—When presented to the Board of Revenue for revision of a judgment or order,	Three rupees.
II.—When presented to a High Court—
(1) Under the Indian Companies Act, 1913 (Act VII of 1913), for winding up a company.	Fifty rupees.
(2) Under section 115 of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908 (Act V of 1908), for revision of an order—	Four rupees.
(3) In any other case	Three rupees.

(ii) In article 1-A for the words “twelve annas” in the third column the words “one rupee two annas” shall be substituted.

(iii) In articles 5, 6 and 7 for the word “eight” in the third column the word “twelve” shall be substituted.

(iv) In article 10 for the words “eight annas” “one rupee” and “two rupees” in the third column, the words “twelve annas”, “one rupee and eight annas” and “three rupees”, respectively, shall be substituted.

(v) For article 11, the following shall be substituted:—

11.	Memorandum of appeal when the appeal is not from a decree or an order having the force of a decree and is presented.	(a) to any Civil Court other than a High Court or to any Revenue Court or Executive Officer other than a Commissioner of the division or Chief Controlling Revenue Executive Authority:	Twelve annas.
		(b) to a Commissioner of the division:	Two rupees.
		(c) to a High Court or to a Chief Controlling Executive or Revenue Authority:	Three rupees.

(vi) The bracket opposite articles 12, 13 and 14 in the second column shall be omitted and for article 12 the following shall be substituted:—

12. Caveat	Where the amount or value of the property in respect of which the caveat is lodged—
	(a) does not exceed five thousand rupees:	Five rupeees.
	(b) exceeds five thousand rupees.	Ten rupees.

(vii) For article 14 the following shall be substituted, namely,—

14. Petition in a suit under the Native Converts' Marriage Dissolution Act, 1866.		Seven rupees eight annas.

(viii) In article 17 for the words "Ten rupees" in the third column, the words "Fifteen rupees" shall be substituted, and the following proviso shall be added:—

Provided that in a suit filed before a High Court under its original jurisdiction the fee chargeable under this article shall be one hundred rupees.

(ix) In articles 18 and 19 for the word "ten" in the third column the word "fifteen" shall be substituted.

(x) In articles 20 and 22 for the word "twenty" in the third column the word "thirty" shall be substituted.

SCHEDULE A.

When the amount or value of the subject-matter in dispute does not exceed five rupees.	Six annas.
When such amount or value exceeds five rupees, for every five rupees, or part thereof, in excess of five rupees, up to one hundred rupees.	Six annas.
When such amount or value exceeds one hundred rupees, for every ten rupees or part thereof, in excess of one hundred rupees up to two hundred rupees.	Twelve annas.
When such amount or value exceeds two hundred rupees, for every ten rupees, or part thereof, in excess of two hundred rupees up to five hundred rupees.	One rupee.

When such amount or value exceeds five hundred rupees, for every ten rupees, or part thereof, in excess of five hundred rupees, up to one thousand rupees.	One rupee four annas.
When such amount or value exceeds one thousand rupees, for every one hundred rupees, or part thereof, in excess of one thousand rupees, up to five thousand rupees.	Six rupees four annas.
When such amount or value exceeds five thousand rupees, for every five hundred rupees, or part thereof, in excess of ten thousand rupees, up to twenty thousand rupees.	Twelve rupees eight annas.
When such amount or value exceeds ten thousand rupees, for every five hundred rupees, or part thereof, in excess of ten thousand rupees, up to twenty thousand rupees.	Eighteen rupees twelve annas.
When such amount or value exceeds twenty thousand rupees, for every one thousand rupees, or part thereof, in excess of twenty thousand rupees, up to thirty thousand rupees.	Twenty-five rupees.
When such amount or value exceeds thirty thousand rupees, for every two thousand rupees, or part thereof, in excess of thirty thousand rupees, up to fifty thousand rupees.	Twenty-five rupees.
When such amount or value exceeds fifty thousand rupees, for every five thousand rupees, or part thereof, in excess of fifty thousand rupees.	Thirty-one rupees four annas.

Provided that the maximum fee leviable on a plaint or memorandum of appeal shall be four thousand five hundred rupees.

SCHEDULE B

Table of rates of ad valorem fees leviable on the institution of suits

When the amount or value of the subject-matter exceeds—	But does not exceed—	Proper fee
Rs.	Rs.	Rs.	a.
	5	0	6
5	10	0	12
10	15	1	2
15	20	1	8
20	25	1	14
25	30	2	4
30	35	2	10
35	40	3	0
40	45	3	6
45	50	3	12
50	55	4	2
55	60	4	8
60	65	4	14
65	70	5	4
70	75	5	10
75	80	6	0
80	85	6	6
85	90	6	12
90	95	7	2
95	100	7	8
100	110	8	4
110	120	9	0
120	130	9	12
130	140	10	8
140	150	11	4
150	160	12	0
160	170	12	12
170	180	13	8
180	190	14	4
190	200	15	0
200	210	16	0
210	220	17	0
220	230	18	0
230	240	19	0
240	250	20	0
250	260	21	0
260	270	22	0
270	280	23	0
280	290	24	0
290	300	25	0
300	310	26	0

Table of rates of ad valorem fees leviable on the institution of suits—(continued)

When the amount or value of the subject-matter exceeds—	But does not exceed—	Proper fee
Rs.	Rs.	Rs.	a.
310	320	27	0
320	330	28	0
330	340	29	0
340	350	30	0
350	360	31	0
360	370	32	0
370	380	33	0
380	390	34	0
390	400	35	0
400	410	36	0
410	420	37	0
420	430	38	0
430	440	39	0
440	450	40	0
450	460	41	0
460	470	42	0
470	480	43	0
480	490	44	0
490	500	45	0
500	510	46	4
510	520	47	8
520	530	48	12
530	540	50	0
540	550	51	4
550	560	52	8
560	570	53	12
570	580	55	0
580	590	56	4
590	600	57	8
600	610	58	12
610	620	60	0
620	630	61	4
630	640	62	8
640	650	63	12
650	660	65	0
660	670	66	4
670	680	67	8
680	690	68	12
690	700	70	0
700	710	71	4
710	720	72	8
720	730	73	12

Table of rates of ad valorem fees leviable on the institution of suits—(continued)

When the amount or value of the subject-matter exceeds—	But does not exceed—	Proper fee
Rs.	Rs.	Rs.	a.
730	740	75	0
740	750	76	4
750	760	77	8
760	770	78	12
770	780	80	0
780	790	81	4
790	800	82	8
800	810	83	12
810	820	85	0
820	830	86	4
830	840	87	8
840	850	88	12
850	860	90	0
860	870	91	4
870	880	92	8
880	890	93	12
890	900	95	0
900	910	96	4
910	920	97	8
920	930	98	12
930	940	100	0
940	950	101	4
950	960	102	8
960	970	103	12
970	980	105	0
980	990	106	4
990	1,000	107	8
1,000	1,100	113	12
1,100	1,200	120	0
1,200	1,300	126	4
1,300	1,400	132	8
1,400	1,500	138	12
1,500	1,600	145	0
1,600	1,700	151	4
1,700	1,800	157	8
1,800	1,900	163	12
1,900	2,000	170	0
2,000	2,100	176	4
2,100	2,200	182	8
2,200	2,300	188	12
2,300	2,400	195	0
2,400	2,500	201	4

Table of rates of ad valorem fees leviable on the institution of suits—(continued)

When the amount or value of the subject-matter exceeds—	But does not exceed—	Proper fee
Rs.	Rs.	Rs.	a.
2,500	2,600	207	8
2,600	2,700	213	12
2,700	2,800	220	0
2,800	2,900	226	4
2,900	3,000	232	8
3,000	3,100	238	12
3,100	3,200	245	0
3,200	3,300	251	4
3,300	3,400	257	8
3,400	3,500	263	12
3,500	3,600	270	0
3,600	3,700	276	4
3,700	3,800	282	8
3,800	3,900	288	12
3,900	4,000	295	0
4,000	4,100	301	4
4,100	4,200	307	8
4,200	4,300	313	12
4,300	4,400	320	6
4,400	4,500	326	4
4,500	4,600	332	8
4,600	4,700	338	12
4,700	4,800	345	0
4,800	4,900	351	4
4,900	5,000	357	8
5,000	5,250	370	0
5,250	5,500	382	8
5,500	5,750	395	0
5,750	6,000	407	8
6,000	6,250	420	0
6,250	6,500	432	8
6,500	6,750	445	0
6,750	7,000	457	8
7,000	7,250	470	0
7,250	7,500	482	8
7,500	7,750	495	0
7,750	8,000	507	8
8,000	8,250	520	0
8,250	8,500	532	8
8,500	8,750	545	0
8,750	9,000	557	8
9,000	9,250	570	0

Table of rates of ad valorem fees leviable on the institution of suits—(continued)

When the amount or value of the subject-matter exceeds—	But does not exceed—	Proper fee
Rs.	Rs.	Rs.	a.
9,250	9,500	582	8
9,500	9,750	595	0
9,750	10,000	607	8
10,000	10,500	626	4
10,500	11,000	645	0
11,000	11,500	663	12
11,500	12,000	682	8
12,000	12,500	701	4
12,500	13,000	720	0
13,000	13,500	738	12
13,500	14,000	757	8
14,000	14,500	776	4
14,500	15,000	795	0
15,000	15,500	813	12
15,500	16,000	832	8
16,000	16,500	851	4
16,500	17,000	870	0
17,000	17,500	888	12
17,500	18,000	907	8
18,000	18,500	926	4
18,500	19,000	945	0
19,000	19,500	963	12
19,500	20,000	982	8
20,000	21,000	1,007	8
21,000	22,000	1,032	8
22,000	23,000	1,057	8
23,000	24,000	1,082	8
24,000	25,000	1,107	8
25,000	26,000	1,132	8
26,000	27,000	1,157	8
27,000	28,000	1,182	8
28,000	29,000	1,207	8
29,000	30,000	1,232	8
30,000	32,000	1,257	8
32,000	34,000	1,282	8
34,000	36,000	1,307	8
36,000	38,000	1,332	8
38,000	40,000	1,357	8
40,000	42,000	1,382	8
42,000	44,000	1,407	8
44,000	46,000	1,432	8
46,000	48,000	1,457	8

Table of rates of ad valorem fees leviable on the institution of suits—(concluded)

When the amount or value of the subject-matter exceeds—	But does not exceed—	Proper fee
Rs.	Rs.	Rs.	a.
48,000	50,000	1,482	8
50,000	55,000	1,513	12
55,000	60,000	1,545	0
60,000	65,000	1,576	4
65,000	70,000	1,607	8
70,000	75,000	1,638	12
75,000	80,000	1,670	0
80,000	85,000	1,701	4
85,000	90,000	1,732	8
90,000	95,000	1,763	12
95,000	1,00,000	1,795	0

And the fee increases at the rate of thirty-one rupees four annas for every five thousand rupees, or part thereof, for example—

Rs.	Rs.	a.
2,00,000	2,420	0
3,00,000	3,045	0
4,00,000	3,670	0
5,00,000	4,295	0
5,35,000	4,500	0

SPECIAL POWERS ORDINANCE, 1932

(ORDINANCE NO. X OF 1932)*

AN ORDINANCE

TO

Confer special powers on Government and its officers for the purpose of maintaining law and order.

WHEREAS an emergency has arisen which makes it necessary to confer special powers upon Government and its officers for the purpose of maintaining law and order;

NOW THEREFORE in exercise of the power conferred by section 72 of the Government of India Act, the Governor-General is pleased to make and promulgate the following Ordinance:—

CHAPTER I

PRELIMINARY

Short title, and extent and commencement.

1. (1) This Ordinance may be called the Special Powers Ordinance, 1932.

(2) This chapter and Sections 64, 74, 75, 76, 77, 78, 79 and 80 extend to the whole of British India, including British Baluchistan and the Sonthal Parganas, and the Governor-General in Council may, by notification in the Gazette of India, extend any or all of the remaining sections to the said area or to any province or part of a province specified in the notification.

(3) This Chapter and Sections 64, 74, 75, 76, 77, 78, 79, and 80 shall come into force at once, and the Local Government may, by notification in the local official Gazette, direct that any or all of the remaining provisions shall come into force in any area to which they have been extended, on such date as may be appointed in the notification.

Definitions.

2. In this Ordinance, unless there is anything repugnant in the subject or context,—

(1) "the Code" means the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1898; and V of 1898

(2) "District Magistrate" means in the case of a Presidency-town or the town of Rangoon, the Commissioner of Police, except in Chapters IV and VI where, in the case of a Presidency-town it means the Chief Presidency Magistrate.

---

*Published in the Government Gazette, dated Allahabad, July 9, 1932

CHAPTER II

EMERGENCY POWERS

Power to arrest and detain suspected persons.

3. (1) Any officer of Government authorized in this behalf by general or special order of the Local Government may, if satisfied that there are reasonable grounds for believing that any person has acted, is acting or is about to act, in a manner prejudicial to the public safety or peace, himself arrest such person without warrant, or may direct the arrest without warrant of such person, and in making such arrest any means that may be necessary may be used.

(2) An arrest made by or on the direction of any officer under this section shall be reported forthwith to the Local Government by the officer so making or so directing the arrest as the case may be, and such officer may, by order in writing, commit any person so arrested to such custody as the Local Government may, by general or special order, specify in this behalf:

Provided that no person shall, unless the Local Government by special order otherwise directs, be so detained in custody for a period exceeding fifteen days:

Provided further that no person shall be so detained in custody for a period exceeding two months.

Power to control suspected persons.

4. (1) The Local Government, if satisfied that there are reasonable grounds for believing that any person has acted, is acting, or is about to act, in a manner prejudicial to the public safety or peace or in furtherance of a movement prejudicial to the public safety or peace, may, by order in writing, give any one or more of the following directions, namely, that such person—

(a) shall not enter, reside or remain in any area specified in the order;

(b) shall reside or remain in any area specified in the order;

(c) shall remove himself from, and shall not return to, any area specified in the order;

(d) shall conduct himself in such manner, abstain from such acts, or take such order with any property in his possession or under his control, as may be specified in the order.

(2) An order made under Sub-section (1) shall not, unless the Local Government by special order otherwise directs, remain in force for more than one month from the making thereof.

(3) An order made under Sub-section (1) shall be served on the person to whom it relates in the manner provided in the Code for service of a summons.

Power to take possession of buildings.

5. (1) If, in the opinion of the Local Government, any land or building can be utilized as quarters or offices for public servants, or for the accommodation of troops or police, the Local Government may, by order in writing, require the occupier or other person in charge of the land or building to place it at the disposal of Government at such time as may be specified in the order, together with the whole, or any part specified in the order, of any fixtures, fittings, furniture or other things for the time being in the building; and the Local Government may dispose of or use such land, building, fixtures, fittings, furniture or other things in such manner as it may consider expedient.

(2) In this section "building" includes any portion or portions of a building whether separately occupied or not.

Power to prohibit or limit access to certain places.

6. The District Magistrate may, by order in writing, prohibit or limit, in such way as he may think necessary for the public advantage, access to any building or place in the possession or under the control of Government or of any railway administration or local authority, or to any building or place in the occupation, whether permanent or otherwise, of His Majesty's Naval, Military or Air Forces or of any police force, or to any place in the vicinity of any such building or place.

Power to prohibit or regulate traffic.

7. The District Magistrate may, by order in writing, prohibit or regulate, in such way as he may think necessary for the public advantage, traffic over any road, pathway, bridge, waterway or ferry.

Power to regulate means of transport.

8. (1) The District Magistrate may, by order in writing, require any person to make, in such form and within such time and to such authority as may be specified in the order, a return of any vehicles or means of transport owned by him or in his possession or under his control.

(2) The District Magistrate, if, in his opinion, it is necessary for the public advantage, may, by order in writing, require any person owning or having in his possession or under his control any vehicle or means of transport to take such order therewith for such period as may be specified in the order.

Powers regarding arms, ammunition, etc.

9. (1) The District Magistrate may, by order in writing published in such manner as he thinks best adopted for informing the persons concerned,—

(a) prohibit, either absolutely or subject to such exception as may be specified in the order, the purchase, sale or delivery of, or other dealing in, any arms, parts of arms, ammunition or explosive substances; or

(b) direct that any person owning or having in his possession or under his control any arms, parts of arms, ammunition or explosive substances, shall keep the same in a secure place approved by the District Magistrate or remove them to any place specified in the order.

(2) The District Magistrate may take possession of—

(a) any arms, ammunition or explosives, or

(b) any tools, machinery, implements or other material of any kind, likely, in his opinion, to be utilized, whether by the owner or by any other person, for the purpose of causing unlawful hurt or damage to any person or to any property of Government or of any railway administration or of any local authority, and may make such orders as he may think fit for the custody and disposal thereof.

Power to require the assistance of certain persons.

10. Any officer of Government authorised in this behalf by general or special order of the Local Government may, within any area specified in such order, require any landholder, village headman, lambardar, inamdar or jagirdar, or any officer or servant of any local authority, or any teacher in any school, college or other educational institution to assist in the restoration and maintenance of law and order and in the protection of property in the possession or under the control of Government or of any railway administration or local authority in such manner and within such limits as the officer so authorised may specify.

Power to control posts and telegraphs.

11. The District Magistrate, if, in his opinion, it is necessary for the public advantage may, in consultation with the chief postal authority in the district, control the operation of any post, telegraph, telephone or wireless office or station, and, in particular, may intercept any postal article or telegraphic, telephonic or wireless message in the course of transmission, may, ascertain its contents and may prohibit its further transmission.

Power to regulate the use of railways and vessels.

12. The District Magistrate may—

(a) require accommodation to be provided on any railway train or any vessel for any passengers or goods, and, for this purpose, exclude from such train or vessel any passengers or goods which it is already carrying or about to carry;

(b) require that any specified persons or classes of persons or persons proposing to travel to specified destinations, or any specified goods or classes of goods or goods consigned to specified destinations, shall not be carried on any railway or vessel;

(c) exclude or eject any passenger from any train or vessel;

(d) stop, or prohibit the stopping of trains or vessels at any station; or

(e) in consultation with the local railway authorities require special trains to be provided for the conveyance of troops, police or other persons.

13. The District Magistrate may, by order in writing, depute one or more police officers not below the rank of head constable, or other persons, to attend any public meeting for the purpose of causing a report to be made of the proceedings, and may, by such order, authorise the persons so deputed to take with them an escort of police officers.

Power to secure reports of public meetings.

Explanation—For the purposes of this section a public meeting is any meeting which is open to the public or to any class or portion of the public, and a meeting may be a public meeting notwithstanding that it is held in a private place and notwithstanding that admission thereto is restricted by ticket or otherwise.

14. The power to issue search-warrants conferred by Section 98 of the Code shall be deemed to include a power to issue warrants authorising—

Power to issue search-warrants.

(a) the search of any place in which any Magistrate mentioned in that section has reason to believe that any offence under this Ordinance or any act prejudicial to the public safety or peace has been, is being or is about to be committed, or that preparation for the commission of any such offence or act is being made;

(b) the seizure in or on any place searched under Clause (a) of anything which the officer executing the warrant has reason to believe is being used, or is intended to be used, for any purpose mentioned in that clause;

and the provisions of the Code shall, so far as may be, apply to searches made under the authority of any warrant issued, and to the disposal of any property seized, under this section.

15. Any authority on which any power is conferred by or under this Chapter may, by general or special order authorise any person to enter and search any place the search of which such authority has reason to believe to be necessary for the purpose of—

General power of search.

(a) ascertaining whether it is necessary or expedient to exercise such power; or

(b) ascertaining whether any order given, direction made, or condition prescribed in the exercise of such power has been duly complied with; or

(c) generally, giving effect to such power or securing compliance with, or giving effect to, any order given, direction made, or condition prescribed in the exercise of such power.

16. If any person disobeys or neglects to comply with an order made, direction given, or condition prescribed in accordance with the provisions of this Chapter, the authority which made the order, gave the direction or prescribed the condition may take or cause to be taken such action as it thinks necessary to give effect thereto.

Power to give effect to orders if disobeyed.

Penalty for disobeying order under section 4.

17. Whoever disobeys or neglects to comply with any order made or direction given in accordance with the provisions of Section 4 shall be punishable with imprisonment which may extend to two years, or with fine, or with both.

Penalty for disobeying other orders under this Chapter.

18. Subject to the provisions of Section 17, whoever disobeys, or neglects to comply with any order made, direction given, or condition prescribed in accordance with the provisions of this Chapter or impedes the lawful exercise of any power referred to in this Chapter, shall be punishable with imprisonment which may extend to six months, or with fine, or with both.

Claims for compensation.

19. (1) Any person who has suffered any direct loss or damage by reason of action taken under Section 5 or Sub-section (2) of Section 9 may, within two months from the date on which the action was taken, lodge a claim for compensation with the Local Government, or with such officer as the Local Government may appoint in this behalf.

(2) No claim for compensation may be lodged for loss or damage caused in any case where action has been taken under Section 16.

(3) Any claim lodged under Sub-section (1) may be investigated by such officer as the Local Government may appoint in this behalf, and any amount which may be agreed upon, between the Local Government and the claimant shall be paid to him. If the amount is not agreed upon, the claim shall be decided by an Arbitration Tribunal, in the manner hereinafter provided.

Constitution for Arbitration Tribunals.

20. (1) The Local Government may constitute an Arbitration Tribunal for the trial of any particular claim or claims, or of claims of a specified kind or of claims arising within specified area for which provision is not otherwise made.

(2) An Arbitration Tribunal shall consist of three persons, who are—

(a) Commissioners; or

(b) persons who have presided in a Civil Court of any grade for not less than five years; or

(c) persons who are qualified under Sub-section (3) of Section 101 of the Government of India Act for appointment as Judges of a High Court; or

(d) persons who have exercised the powers of a Magistrate of the first class for not less than five years; or (e) persons having special knowledge of matters such as those which may be in dispute.

(3) The Local Government shall appoint one of the members to be President of the Tribunal.

(4) If for any reason any member of an Arbitration Tribunal is unable to discharge his duties, the Local Government shall appoint another member in his place, and on any such change occurring it shall not be incumbent on the Tribunal to re-call or re-hear any witness who has already given evidence in regard to any claim before it, and the Tribunal may act on any evidence already recorded by or produced before it.

Procedure of Arbitration Tribunals.

21. (1) Arbitration Tribunals may take evidence on oath (which such Tribunals are hereby empowered to administer) and shall have such powers to enforce the attendance of witnesses and the production of evidence as a Civil Court has under the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908. V of 1908

(2) In the event of any difference of opinion among the members of an Arbitration Tribunal, the opinion of the majority shall prevail.

(3) Subject to any rules which the Local Government may make in this behalf, the President of an Arbitration Tribunal may make orders consistent with this Chapter to provide for the place and conduct of a trial and all other ancillary matters which he may think necessary for carrying into effect the provisions of this Chapter.

Delegation of powers.

22. (1) The Local Government may invest the District Magistrate with powers of the Local Government under Sub-section (1) of Section 4, and may invest the District Magistrate or any Sub-divisional Magistrate, or any police officer not below the rank of Deputy Superintendent, with any of the powers of the Local Government under Section 5.

(2) The Local Government may invest any Sub-divisional Magistrate, or any police officer not below the rank of Deputy Superintendent, with any of the powers of a District Magistrate under this Chapter.

(3) The District Magistrate may, by order in writing, authorise any officer to exercise any of the powers of the District Magistrate under this Chapter in a specified area or in connexion with a specified emergency.

Reserve power to Governor-General in Council.

23. The Governor-General in Council may exercise any of the powers of a local Government under this Chapter.

CHAPTER III

OFFENCES AND PENALTIES

Tampering with public servants.

24. Whoever induces or attempts to induce any public servant or any servant of a local authority or any railway servant to disregard or fail in his duty as such servant shall be punishable with imprisonment which may extend to one year, or with fine, or with both.

Dissuation from enlistment.

25. Whoever dissuades or attempts to dissuade any person from entering the military or police service of His Majesty shall be punishable with imprisonment which may extend to one year, or with fine, or with both.

Dissemination of false rumours.

26. Whoever by words, whether spoken or written, or by signs or by visible or audible representations or otherwise publishes any statement, rumour or report which is false and which he has no reasonable ground to believe to be true, with intent to cause or which is likely to cause fear or alarm to the public or to any section of the public, or hatred or contempt towards any public servant, or any class of His Majesty's subjects, shall be punishable with imprisonment which may extend to one year, or with fine, or with both.

Imposition of collective fine on inhabitants of turbulent areas.

27. (1) Where it appears to the Local Government that the inhabitants of any area are concerned in the commission of such offences or acts, the Local Government may, by notification in the local official Gazette, impose a collective fine on the inhabitants of that area.

(2) The Local Government may exempt any person or class or section of such inhabitants from liability to pay any portion of such fine.

(3) The District Magistrate, after such inquiry as he may deem necessary, shall apportion such fine among the inhabitants who are liable collectively to pay it, and such apportionment shall be made according to the District Magistrate's judgment of the respective means of such inhabitants.

(4) The portion of such fine payable by any person may be recovered from him as a fine or as arrears of land revenue.

(5) The Local Government may award compensation out of the proceeds of a fine realised under this section to any preson who, in the opinion of the Local Government, has suffered injury to person or property by the unlawful acts of the inhabitants of the area.

Explanation.—For the purposes of this section, the "inhabitants" of an area includes persons who themselves or by their agents or servants occupy or hold land or other immovable property within such area, and landlords who themselves or by their agents or servants collect rents from holders or occupiers of land in such area, notwithstanding that they do not actually reside therein.

Dissemination of contents of proscribed documents.

28. Whoever publishes, circulates or repeats in public any passage from a newspaper, book or other document copies whereof have been declared to be forfeited to His Majesty under any other law for the time being in force, shall be punishable with imprisonment which may extend to six months, or with fine, or with both.

29. (1) Where any young person under the age of sixteen years is convicted by any Court of an offence under this Ordinance or of an offence which in the opinion of the Court has been committed in furtherance of a movement prejudicial to the public safety or peace, and such young person is sentenced to fine, the Court may order that the fine shall be paid by the parent or guardian of such young person as if it had been a fine imposed upon the parent or guardian:

Power to direct payment by parent or guardian of fine imposed on a young person.

Provided that no such order shall be made unless the parent or guardian has had an opportunity to appear before the Court and be heard.

(2) In any such case the Court may direct by its order that in default of payment of the fine by the parent or guardian, the parent or guardian shall suffer imprisonment as if the parent or guardian had himself been convicted of the offence for which the young person is convicted.

CHAPTER IV

SPECIAL CRIMINAL COURTS

30. Courts of criminal jurisdiction may be constituted under this Ordinance of the following classes, namely:—

Special Courts.

(i) Special Judges;
(ii) Special Magistrates;
(iii) Summary Courts.

31. The Local Government may appoint to be a Special Judge for such area as it may think fit any officer who has acted for a period of not less than two years in the exercise of the powers of a Sessions Judge under the Code.

Special Judges.

32. Subject to the provisions of Section 48, a Special Judge shall try such offences as the Local Government, or an officer empowered by the Local Government in this behalf, may, by general or special order in writing, direct.

Jurisdiction of Special Judges.

33. (1) A Special Judge may take cognizance of offences without the accused being committed to his Court for trial, and, in trying accused persons, shall follow the procedure prescribed by the Code for the trial of warrant cases by Magistrates:

Procedure of Special Judges.

Provided that a Special Judge may make a memorandum only of the substance of the evidence of each witness examined, and shall not be bound to adjourn any trial for any purpose unless such adjournment is, in his opinion, necessary in the interests of justice.

(2) In matters not coming within the scope of Subsection (1), the provisions of the Code, so far as they are not inconsistent with this Ordinance, shall apply to the proceedings of a Special Judge; and for the purposes of the said provisions, the Court, of the Special Judge shall be deemed to be a Court of Session.

Sentences by Special Judges.

34. A Special Judge may pass any sentence authorised by law.

Appeals and confirmation.

35. (1) An appeal shall lie in the case of any sentence passed by a Special Judge of death or of transportation or imprisonment for a term of two years or more, and the provisions of the Code and of the Indian Limitation Act, 1908, shall apply in respect of such appeal as if it were an appeal under the Code from a sentence passed by a Court of Session exercising jurisdiction in the area in which the offence was committed.

IX of 1908

(2) A sentence of death passed by a Special Judge shall be subject to confirmation in the manner provided in the Code for the confirmation of a sentence of death passed by a Court of Session.

Special Magistrates.

36. Any Presidency Magistrate or Magistrate of the first class who has exercised powers as such for a period of not less than two years may be invested by the Local Government with the powers of a Special Magistrate under this Ordinance.

Jurisdiction of Special Magistrates.

37. Subject to the provisions of Section 48, a Special Magistrate shall try such offences, other than offences punishable with death, as the Local Government or an officer empowered by the Local Government in this behalf may, by general or special order in writing, direct.

Procedure of Special Magistrates.

38. (1) In the trial of any case, a Special Magistrate shall follow the procedure laid down in Subsection (1) of Section 33 for the trial of cases by a Special Judge.

(2) In matters not coming within the scope of Subsection (1), the provisions of the Code, so far as they are not inconsistent with this Ordinance, shall apply to the proceedings of a Special Magistrate; and for the purposes of the said provision the Special Magistrate shall be deemed to be a Magistrate of the first class.

Sentences by Special Magistrates.

39. A Special Magistrate may pass any sentence authorised by law, except a sentence of death or of transportation or imprisonment exceeding seven years.

Appeals.

40. (1) Where a Special Magistrate passes a sentence of transportation or imprisonment for a term exceeding one year, or of fine exceeding one thousand rupees, an appeal shall lie, where the case was tried in a Presidency-town to the High Court, and where the case was tried outside the Presidency-town to the Court of Session, unless the Special Magistrate passes a sentence of transportation exceeding one year or a sentence of imprisonment exceeding four years, in which case the appeal shall lie to the High Court.

(2) An appeal under Sub-section (1) shall be presented within seven days from the date of the sentence.

Distribution of cases.

41. If any question arises whether, under any order made under Section 32 or Section 37, an offence is triable by a Special Judge or a Special Magistrate, the question shall be referred for decision to the Local Government, and its decision shall be final.

Summary Courts.

42. The Local Government may, by general or special order in writing, empower any Magistrate appointed under the provisions of the Code to exercise the powers of a Summary Court in any area specified in the order.

Jurisdiction of Summary Courts.

43. (1) Subject to the provisions of Section 48, a Summary Court shall have power to try such offences as the District Magistrate may, by general or special order, direct:

Provided that no person shall be tried by a Summary Court for an offence not specified in Sub-section (1) of Section 260 of the Code which is punishable with imprisonment for a term exceeding two years.

(2) The District Magistrate may, by general or special order, give directions as to the distribution among the Summary Courts in his district of cases triable by them under Sub-section (1).

Procedure of Summary Courts.

44. In the trial of any case a Summary Court shall, as far as possible, follow the procedure laid down in the Code for the trial of warrant cases, and shall have all the powers conferred by the Code on a Magistrate:

Provided that the Court shall not be required to record more than a memorandum of the evidence or to frame a formal charge:

Provided further that, in the trial of any offence punishable with imprisonment for a term not exceeding one year, the Court may follow the procedure for the summary trial of cases in which an appeal lies laid down in Chapter XXII of the Code.

Sentences by Summary Courts.

45. Summary Courts may pass any sentence which may be passed by a Magistrate of the first class.

Appeals.

46. (1) If a Summary Court in a case tried according to the procedure for the trial of warrant cases passes a sentence of imprisonment for a term exceeding three months or a fine exceeding two hundred rupees, or in a case tried by summary procedure passes a sentence of imprisonment for a term exceeding one month or a fine exceeding fifty rupees, an appeal shall lie to the Special Judge appointed for the area in which the offence was committed, or, if no Special Judge has been so appointed, to the High Court or to the Court of Sessions according as the offence was tried in a Presidency-town or was tried outside the Presidency-towns.

(2) An appeal under Sub-section (1) shall be presented within seven days from the date of the sentence.

(3) In disposing of an appeal under this section, a Special Judge shall follow the same procedure and have the same powers as an Appellate Court follows and has under the Code.

Procedure when Summary Court considers case triable by another Court.

47. (1) If a Summary Court is of opinion that the offence disclosed is one which it is not empowered to try, it shall send the case for trial to the Special Judge or Special Magistrate empowered to try the case under this Ordinance or, if no such Court has been so empowered, to an ordinary criminal court having jurisdiction.

(2) If a Summary Court is of opinion that an offence which it is empowered to try should be tried by a Court of superior jurisdiction, or that it requires a punishment in excess of that which the Summary Court is empowered to inflict, it shall stay proceedings and report the case to the District Magistrate who may—

(a) direct that the case shall be tried by a Summary Court, or

(b) send it to a Court constituted under this Ordinance having jurisdiction, or to an ordinary criminal court having jurisdiction, or

(c) report it for the orders of the Local Government.

Limitation of Jurisdiction of Special Courts.

48. (1) No Court constituted under this Ordinance shall try any offence unless it is an offence punishable under this Ordinance or was committed in furtherance of a movement prejudicial to the public safety or peace.

(2) The question whether or not an offence tried by a Court constituted under this Ordinance is of the nature described in Sub-section (1) shall not be raised in any Court other than the Court trying the offence, and where such question is so raised then, if the Court is that of a Special Judge, the question shall be referred to the Local Government, and if the Court is that of a Special Magistrate or is a Summary Court the question shall be referred to the District Magistrate, and the decision of the Local Government or District Magistrate shall be final.

Powers of Special Courts to deal with refractory accused.

49. (1) Where any accused, in a trial before a Court constituted under this Ordinance has, by his voluntary act, rendered himself incapable of appearing before the Court, or resists his production before it, or behaves before it in a persistently disorderly manner, the Court may, at any stage of the trial, by order in writing made after such inquiry as it may think fit, dispense with the attendance of such accused for such period as it may think fit, and proceed with the trial in his absence.

(2) Where a plea is required in answer to a charge from an accused whose attendance has been dispensed with under Sub-section (1) such accused shall be deemed not to plead guilty.

(3) An order under Sub-section (1) dispensing with the attendance of an accused shall not affect his right of being represented by a pleader at any stage of the trial, or of being present in person if he has become capable of appearing, or appears in Court and undertakes to behave in an orderly manner.

(4) Notwithstanding anything contained in the Code, no finding, sentence or order passed in a trial before a Court constituted under this Ordinance shall be held to be illegal by reason of any omission or irregularity whatsoever arising from the absence of any or all of the accused whose attendance has been dispensed with under Sub-section (1).

Special rule of evidence.

50. Notwithstanding anything contained in the Indian Evidence Act, 1872, when the statement of any person has been recorded by any Magistrate, such statement may be admitted in evidence in any trial before a Court constituted under this Ordinance if such person is dead or cannot be found or is incapable of giving evidence, and the Court is of opinion that such death, disappearance or incapacity has been caused in the interests of the accused.

I of 1872

Legal practitioners.

51. A Court constituted under this Ordinance shall not be required to grant an adjournment for the purpose of securing the attendance of a legal practitioner if, in the opinion of the Court, such adjournment would cause unreasonable delay in the disposal of the case.

Exclusion of interference of other Courts.

52. Notwithstanding the provisions of the Code, or of any other law for the time being in force, or of anything having the force of law by whatsoever authority made or done, there shall, save as provided by this Ordinance, be no appeal from any order or sentence of a Court constituted under this Ordinance and, save as aforesaid, no Court shall have authority to revise such order or sentence, or to transfer any case from any such Court, or to make any order under Section 491 of the Code or have any jurisdiction of any kind in respect of any proceedings of any such Court.

Application of ordinary law.

53. The provisions of the Code and of any other law for the time being in force, in so far as they may be applicable and in so far as they are not inconsistent with the provisions of this Ordinance, shall apply to all matters connected with, arising from or consequent upon a trial by special criminal courts constituted under this Ordinance.

CHAPTER V

SPECIAL PROVISIONS AGAINST INSTIGATION TO THE ILLEGAL REFUSAL OF THE PAYMENT OF CERTAIN LIABILITIES.

Power to declare notified areas and notified liabilities.

54. (1) The Local Government may, by notification in the local official Gazette, declare that any part of the province or the whole province shall be a notified area for the purposes of this Chapter.

(2) Such Local Government may further, by the same or by subsequent notification, declare that in such notified area land revenue or any sum recoverable as arrears of land revenue, or any tax, rate, cess or other due or amount payable to Government or to any local authority, or rent of agricultural land, or anything recoverable as arrears of or along with such rent, shall be a notified liability.

Punishment for unlawful instigation to the non-payment of notified liability.

55. Whoever, by words either spoken or written, or by signs or by visible representations, or otherwise, instigates, expressly or by implication, any person or class of persons not to pay or to defer payment of any notified liability.

and whoever does any act, with intent or knowing it to be likely that any words, signs or visible representations containing such instigation shall thereby be communicated directly or indirectly to any person or class of persons, in any manner whatsoever.

shall be punishable with imprisonment which may extend to six months, or with fine or with both.

Special rule of procedure.

56. No Court shall take cognizance of any offence punishable under this Chapter except upon a report in writing of facts which constitute such offence made by a police officer not below the rank of sub-inspector.

Power to collect an arrear of a notified liability as an arrear of land revenue.

57. (1) Any person to whom an arrear of a notified liability is due may apply in writing to the Collector to realise it, and the Collector may, after satisfying himself that the amount claimed is due, proceed to recover it as an arrear of land revenue in accordance with the law applicable to the recovery of arrears of land revenue in the area concerned.

(2) Nothing in this section shall prevent any person to whom an arrear of a notified liability is due from recovering it in accordance with the law applicable to the recovery of such arrear.

(3) Any person from whom an amount has been recovered under this section in excess of the amount due from him may recover such excess in accordance with law from the person on whose behalf the Collector has realised it.

CHAPTER VI

SPECIAL PROVISIONS AGAINST ASSOCIATIONS DANGEROUS TO THE PUBLIC PEACE.

58. In this Chapter, unless there is anything repugnant in the subject or context,—

Definitions.

(a) "notified place" means a place notified under Sub-section (1) of Section 59;

(b) "place" includes also a house, building tent and vessel; and

(c) "unlawful association" means an unlawful association within the meaning of Section 15 of the Indian Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1908, and includes an association which has been declared to be unlawful by the Governor-General in Council under the powers conferred by Section 64.

XIV of 1908

59. (1) The Local Government may, by notification in the local official Gazette, notify any place which in its opinion is used for the purposes of an unlawful association.

Power to notify and take possession of places used for the purposes of an unlawful association.

(2) The District Magistrate, or any officer authorised in this behalf in writing by the District Magistrate, may thereupon take possession of the notified place and evict therefrom any person found therein, and shall forthwith make a report of the taking of possession to the Local Government.

(3) A notified place whereof possession is taken under Sub-section (2) shall be deemed to remain in the possession of Government so long as the notification under Sub-section (1) in respect thereof remains in force.

60. (1) The District Magistrate or officer taking possession of a notified place shall also take possession of all movable property found therein, and shall make a list thereof and submit it, with a report of the taking of possession of such movable property, to the Local Government.

Movable property found in a notified place.

(2) If, in the opinion of the Local Government, any articles specified in the list are or may be used for the purposes of the unlawful association, the Local Government may, by order in writing declare such articles to be forfeited to His Majesty, and may give such directions for the disposal thereof as it may think fit.

(3) Any articles specified in the list which are not so forfeited may be delivered by the District Magistrate to any person whom he considers to be entitled to possession thereof, or may be tained in the possession of Government and used in such manner the District Magistrate may direct.

Any person who enters or remains upon a notified place without the permission of the District Magistrate, or of an officer authorised by him in this behalf, shall be deemed to com-upon . notified

mit criminal trespass, and, notwithstanding anything contained in the Code, any such offence of criminal trespass shall be cognizable and non-bailable.

The relinquishment of property.

62. Before this Ordinance ceases to have effect, or before a notification under Sub-section (1) of Section 59 is cancelled, the Local Government shall give such general or special directions as it may deem requisite regulating the relinquishment by Government of possession of notified places and of movable property found thereon whereof possession has been retained under Sub-section (3) of Section 60.

Power to forfeit funds of an unlawful association.

63. (1) Where the Local Government is satisfied, after such inquiry as it may think fit that any monies, securities or credits are being used or are intended to be used for the purposes of an unlawful association, the Local Government may, by order in writing, declare such monies, securities or credits to be forfeited to His Majesty.

(2) A copy of an order under Sub-section (1) may be served on the person having custody of the monies, securities or credits, and on the service of such copy such person shall pay or deliver the monies, securities or credits to the order of the Local Government:

Provided that, in the case of monies or securities, a copy of the order may be endorsed for execution to such officer as the Local Government may select, and such officer shall have power to enter upon and search for such monies and securities in any premises where they may reasonably be suspected to be, and to seize the same.

(3) Where the Local Government has reason to believe that any person has custody of any monies, securities or credits which are being used or are intended to be used for the purposes of an unlawful association, the Local Government may by order in writing, prohibit such person from paying, delivering, transferring or otherwise dealing in any manner whatsoever with the same, save in accordance with the written orders of the Local Government. A copy of such order shall be served upon the person to whom it is directed.

(4) The Local Government may endorse a copy of an order under Sub-section (3) for investigation to any officer it may select, and such copy shall be warrant whereunder such officer may enter upon any premises of the person to whom the order is directed, examine the books of such person, search for monies and securitie and make inquiries from such person, or any officer, agent or serv of such person, touching the origin of and dealings in any mo securities or credits which the investigating officer may suspe being used or are intended to be used for the purposes of lawful association.

(5) A copy of an order under this section may be served in the manner provided in the Code for the service of a summons, or, where the person to be served is a corporation, company, bank or association of persons, it may be served on any secretary, director or other officer or person concerned with the management thereof, or by leaving it or sending it by post addressed to the corporation, company, bank or association at its registered office, or where there is no registered office, at the place where it carries on business.

(6) Where an order of forfeiture is made under Sub-section (1) in respect of any monies, securities or credits in respect of which a prohibitory order has been made under Sub-section (3), such order of forfeiture shall have effect from the date of the prohibitory order, and the person to whom the prohibitory order was directed shall pay or deliver the whole of the monies, securities, or credits forfeited, to the order of the Local Government.

(7) Where any person liable under this section to pay or deliver any monies, securities, or credits to the order of the Local Government refuses or fails to comply with any direction of the Local Government in this behalf, the Local Government may recover from such person, as arrears of land revenue or as a fine, the amount of such monies or credits or the market value of such securities.

(8) In this section, "security" means a document whereby any person acknowledges that he is under a legal liability to pay money, or whereunder any person obtains a legal right to the payment of money; and the market value of any security means the value as fixed by any officer or person deputed by the Local Government in this behalf.

Power of Governor-General in Council to declare associations to be unlawful.

64. (1) If the Governor-General in Council is of opinion that any association interferes with the administration of law and order, or that it constitutes a danger to the public peace, he may, by notification in the Gazette of India, declare such association to be unlawful.

(2) An association in respect of which such declaration has been made shall be an unlawful association for the purposes of the Indian Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1908, throughout the whole of British India. XIV of 1908

Effect of reports and declarations.

65. Every report of the taking possession of property and declaration of forfeiture made or purporting to be made under this Chapter, shall, as against all persons, be conclusive proof that the property specified therein has been taken possession of by Government or has been forfeited, as the case may be.

CHAPTER VII

SPECIAL PROVISIONS AGAINST CERTAIN FORMS OF INTIMIDATION

Definition of "molestation."

66. For the purposes of this Chapter, a person is said to molest another person who,—

(a) with a view to cause such other person to abstain from doing or to do any act which such other person has a right to do or to abstain from doing, obstructs or uses violence to or intimidates such other person or anyone in whom such person is interested, or loiters at or near a house where such person or anyone in whom such person is interested resides or works or carries on business or happens to be, or persistently follows him from place to place, or interferes with any property owned or used by him or deprives him of or hinders him in the use thereof, or

(b) loiters at or near the place where such other person carries on business, in such a way or with intent that any person may thereby be deterred from entering or approaching or dealing at such place, or does any other act at or near such place which may have a like effect.

Punishment for molestation.

67. Whoever molests or abets the molestation of any person shall be punishable with imprisonment which may extend to six months, or with fine, or with both.

Special rule of procedure.

68. No Court shall take cognizance of any offence punishable under Section 67 except upon a report in writing of facts which constitute such offence made by a police officer.

Definition of "boycotting."

69. For the purposes of this Chapter,—

(a) a person is said to "boycott" another person who refuses to deal or do business with, or to supply goods to, or to let a house or land to, or to render any customary service to such person or any person in whom such person is interested, or refuses to do so on the terms on which such things would be done in the ordinary course, or abstains from such professional or business relations as he would ordinarily maintain with such person; and

Definition of "public servant".

XLV of 1860

(b) a "public servant" includes a public servant as defined in Section 21 of the Indian Penal Code, and a servant of a local authority, and a person belonging to any class of persons which the Local Government may, by notification in the local official Gazette, declare to be public servants for the purposes of this Chapter.

Punishment for boycotting of a public servant.

70. Whoever boycotts or abets the boycotting of a public servant, or threatens a public servant with boycotting, shall be punishable with imprisonment which may extend to six months, or with fine, or with both:

Provided that no person shall be convicted under this section if the Court is satisfied that his acts were not intended to prejudice the public servant boycotted, or proposed or threatened to be boycotted, in the discharge of the duties of his office or to cause such public servant to terminate or withhold his services in the discharge of such duties, or to commit a breach of discipline.

Special rules of procedure.

71. (1) An offence punishable under Section 70 shall be non-cognizable and bailable, and notwithstanding anything contained in the Second Schedule to the Code, a case relating to such an offence, shall, for the purposes of Section 204 of the Code, be deemed to be one in which a warrant should issue in the first instance.

(2) Where information is given to the officer in charge of a police station of the commission within the limits of such station of an offence punishable under Section 70, he shall deal with it in the manner provided in Section 154 of the Code, and he shall investigate the case as if he had received an order to that effect from a competent Magistrate.

Punishment for participating in a mock funeral ceremony.

72. Whoever with intent to annoy any person, or with the knowledge that annoyance is likely to be caused to any person, performs or takes part in or abets the performance of any mock ceremony resembling any ceremony associated with or consequent upon death shall be punishable with imprisonment which may extend to six months, or with fine, or with both.

Jurisdiction.

73. No Court other than a Court of a Presidency Magistrate or Magistrate of the first class or of a Special Judge or Special Magistrate constituted under this Ordinance shall take cognizance of or try any offence under this Chapter.

CHAPTER VIII

SUPPLEMENTAL

Offences under the Ordinance to be cognizable and non-bailable.

74. Notwithstanding anything contained in the Code, any offence punishable under this Ordinance shall, save as otherwise specially provided in this Ordinance, be cognizable and non-bailable.

All offences under Act XIV of 1908 to be cognizable and non-bailable.

75. Notwithstanding anything contained in the Code, all offences punishable under Sub-section (1) of Section 17 of the Indian Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1908, shall be cognizable and non-bailable.

XIV of 1908

Certain other offences to be cognizable and non-bailable.

76. (1) The Local Government may, by notification in the local official Gazette, declare that any offence punishable under Sections 160, 186, 187, 188, 189, 190, 227, 228, 295A, 298, 506, 507 or 508 of the Indian Penal Code, when committed in rea specified in the notification, shall, notwithstanding any-contained in the Code, be cognizable and non-bailable, and pon the Code shall while such notification remains in force, be deemed to be amended accordingly.

XLV of 1860

(2) Notwithstanding anything contained in Section 195 or Section 196 of the Code, in any area in which a notification under Sub-section (1) in respect of Section 186, 187, 188, 228, 295A or 505 of the Indian Penal Code is in force, any Court otherwise competent to take cognizance of such offence may take cognizance of such offence upon a report in writing of facts constituting such offence made by any police officer, but shall not proceed with the trial unless it has received a complaint in respect of such offence under Section 195 or Section 196 as the case may be, and the absence of such complaint shall be reasonable cause, within the meaning of Section 344 of the Code, for postponing the commencement of the trial and for remanding the accused.

XLV of 1860

Temporary amendment of section 4, Act XXIII of 1931.

XXIII of 1931

77. So long as this Ordinance remains in force in Sub-section (1) of Section 4 of the Indian Press (Emergency Powers) Act, 1931 after Clause (b), the following words and clauses shall be deemed to be inserted, namely:—

"or which tend, directly or indirectly,—

(c) to seduce any officer, soldier, sailor or airman in the military, naval or air forces of His Majesty or any police officer from his allegiance or his duty, or

(d) to bring into hatred or contempt His Majesty or the Government established by law in British India or the administration of justice in British India or any Indian Prince or Chief under the suzerainty of His Majesty, or any class or section of His Majesty's subjects in British India or to excite disaffection towards His Majesty or the said Government or any such Prince or Chief, or

(e) to put any person in fear or to cause annoyance to him and thereby induce him to deliver to any person any property or valuable security, or to do any act which he is not legally bound to do, or to omit to do any act which he is legally entitled to do, or

(f) to encourage or incite any person to interfere with the administration of the law or with the maintenance of law and order, or to commit any offence, or to refuse or defer payment of any land revenue, tax, rate, cess or other due or amount payable to Government or to any local authority, or any rent of agricultural land or anything recoverable as arrears of or along with such rent, or

(g) to induce a public servant or a servant of a local authority to do any act or to forbear or delay to do any connected with the exercise of his public fun or to resign his office, or

(h) to promote feelings of enmity or hatred between rent classes of His Majesty's subjects, or

(i) to prejudice the recruiting of persons to serve in any of His Majesty's forces, or in any police force, or to prejudice the training, discipline or administration of any such force," and the provisions of that Act shall apply accordingly.

Jurisdiction barred.

78. Except as provided in this Ordinance, no proceeding or order purporting to be taken or made under this Ordinance shall be called in question by any Court, and no civil or criminal proceeding shall be instituted against any person for anything done or in good faith intended to be done under this Ordinance or against any person for any loss or damage caused to or in respect of any property whereof possession has been taken under this Ordinance.

Operation of other penal laws not barred.

79. Nothing contained in this Ordinance shall be deemed to prevent any person from being prosecuted under any other law for any act or omission which constitutes an offence punishable under this Ordinance.

Savings in respect of certain Ordinances.

II of 1932
III of 1932
IV of 1932
V of 1932

80. (1) Anything done in pursuance of any provision of the Emergency Powers Ordinance, 1932, the Unlawful Instigation Ordinance, 1932, the Unlawful Association Ordinance, 1932, or the Prevention of Molestation and Boycotting Ordinance, 1932, shall, where the corresponding provision of this Ordinance has come into force before July 4, 1932, be deemed on the expiry of the said Ordinances to have been done in pursuance of the corresponding provision of this Ordinance, and shall have effect, and the provisions of this Ordinance shall have effect, accordingly.

(2) Without prejudice to the generality of the foregoing provision it is hereby expressly provided that—

(a) this Ordinance shall operate to confer a right of appeal in all cases where an appeal would have lain under any provision of any of the Ordinances specified in Sub-section (1), and every appeal pending at the time of the expiry of the said Ordinances, and subject to the provisions of this Ordinance relating to the presentation of appeals, every appeal made in pursuance of this Sub-section shall be heard and decided in accordance with the provisions of this Ordinance;

this Ordinance shall operate to confer a power to prosecute any person for any offence committed against any provision of any of the Ordinances specified in Sub-section (1) and such offence shall be deemed to be an offence committed against the corresponding provision of this Ordinance;

(c) this Ordinance shall operate to confer a power to continue and complete any trial or proceeding under any provision of any of the Ordinances specified in Subsection (1) which was pending at the time of the expiry of the said Ordinances as if such trial or proceeding were a trial or proceeding begun under the corresponding provision of this Ordinance.

U. P. DISTRICT BOARDS (SECOND AMENDMENT) ACT

(No. X OF 1932)*

[Received the assent of the Governor-General on Sep. 2, 1932]
[PASSED BY THE LOCAL LEGISLATURE OF THE UNITED PROVINCES OF AGRA AND OUDH]

An Act to amend the United Provinces District Boards Act, 1922, in order to remove certain doubts and difficulties which have arisen in the operation of the Act.

THE UNITED PROVINCES DISTRICT BOARDS (SECOND AMENDMENT) ACT, 1922

WHEREAS it is expedient to amend the United Provinces District Boards Act, 1922, in order to remove certain doubts and difficulties which have arisen in the operation of the Act: It is hereby enacted as follows:—

Short title and commencement.

1. (1) This Act may be called the United Provinces District Boards (Second Amendment) Act, 1932.

(2) It shall come into force on such date as the Local Government may by notification in the gazette appoint in this behalf.

Definition.

2. In this Act the expression "the principal Act" shall mean the United Provinces District Boards Act, 1922.

Amendment of Section 6 of the principal Act.

3. In section 6 of the principal Act the words and figures "sub-section (2) of section 35 or sub-section (3) of section 35-B" shall be substituted for the words and figures "sub-section (3) of section 35."

Amendment of Section 33 of the principal Act.

4. In section 33 of the principal Act after the words "member of the board" the words "or of the education committee" shall be inserted and the following sentence shall be added at the end of the section, namely, "A grant-in-aid given to a school in contravention of rules made under this Act is for the purposes of this section a misapplication of money belonging to the board".

Amendment of Sub-section (1) of Section 34 of the principal Act.

5. In sub-section (1) of section 34 of the principal Act after the words "member of the board" the words "or of the education committee" shall be inserted.

Amendment of Sub-sections (5) and (6) of Section 35-A of the principal Act.

6. In sub-sections (5) and (6) of section 35-A of the principal Act, the words and figures "sub-section (4)" and "Sub-section (5)" shall be substituted for the words and figures "sub-section (5)" and "sub-section (6)" respectively.

---

*Published in the Government Gazette, dated Allahabad, September 10, 1932

7. For sub-section (2) of section 37 of the principal Act the following sub-section shall be substituted:—

Amendment of Sub-section (2) of Section 37 of the principal Act.

"(2) The term of office of a chairman, who at the date of his election or nomination is not a member of the board, shall expire on the same date as that of members of the board".

8. For sub-sections (2), (3) and (4) of section 63-A of the principal Act the following sub-sections shall be substituted:—

Amendment of Sub-sections (2), (3) and (4) of Section 63-A of the principal Act.

"(2) The board shall appoint an education committee which shall consist of twelve members. Of these, eight shall be members and four shall not be members of the board. Of those who are not members of the board not exceeding two may be Government servants in the Education department other than members of the inspecting staff of that department.

(3) A newly elected board shall, within fifteen days of the appointment or election of its chairman, meet under his chairmanship to elect, in accordance with sub-sections (2) and (5) of this section, members of the education committee from amongst its own members and to appoint to be members of the education committee the persons who are not members of the board.

(4) The Local Government shall make rules for the appointment of persons to the education committee who are not members of the board. If, in the opinion of the Local Government any appointment for any vacancy on the committee has not been made in accordance with such rules, Government shall require the board to make a further appointment for that vacancy. If Government consider that such further appointment has not been made in accordance with the rules Government shall then appoint to the vacancy such person as they think fit."

9. In sub-section (6) of section 63-A of the principal Act for the words "the appointment of any person to be a member of the education committee has been made in accordance with the provisions of sub-section (4) or (5) of this section as the case may be" shall be substituted the words "the appointment of election, or nomination for election or appointment of any person to be a member of the education committee or the election of the chairman or vice-chairman of the education committee has been made in accordance with the provisions of this Act".

Amendment of Sub-section (6) of Section 63-A of the principal Act.

10. (1) Sub-section (9) of section 63-A of the principal Act shall be re-numbered as sub-section (9) (a).

Amendment of Sub-section (9) of Section 63-A of the principal Act.

(2) The following sub-clauses shall be added to sub-section (9) (a):—

"(b) The secretary of the education committee shall convene a meeting of the members of the committee within fifteen days of its constitution or a vacancy occurring in the office of chairman for the purpose of electing a chairman of the committee. The chairman of the board shall preside over this meeting and shall have a casting vote in the event of a tie. If within 30 days of the constitution of the education committee its chairman has not been elected, Government shall appoint a chairman from amongst the members of the committee:

Provided that no salaried officer of the Government shall be appointed as chairman of the education committee".

"(c) The education committee at its first meeting after the election of its chairman or at its first meeting after the United Provinces District Boards (Second Amendment) Act of 1932 comes into force shall elect a vice-chairman whose term of office shall be one year only. In the absence of the chairman the vice-chairman shall preside over the meetings of the committee. In the absence of both the chairman and the vice-chairman the members present shall elect a chairman of the meeting and he shall perform all the duties and exercise all the powers of the chairman of an education committee when presiding at that meeting. The education committee shall elect its vice-chairman annually. The vice-chairman of the education committee shall also exercise such powers and perform such duties as are delegated to him by the chairman of the education committee.

During a vacancy in the office of chairman of the education committee, or in the case of urgent necessity during the temporary absence or incapacity of the chairman of the education committee, the vice-chairman of the education committee shall perform any duty and exercise any power of the chairman of the education committee."

"(d) Notwithstanding any other provisions of this Act a chairman, vice-chairman or member of the education committee shall continue in office, unless he dies or is removed by Government or by the board or unless he resigns or unless the education committee is dissolved under Sub-section (20) of this section until his successor is duly elected or appointed."

"(e) A chairman or vice-chairman of the education committee may resign by submitting his resignation to the chairman of the board. A member of the education committee may resign by submitting his resignation to the chairman of the education committee."

"(f) If a member of the education committee dies or is removed or resigns, the board shall fill the vacancy by special resolution in the case of a member of the board. In the case of a member of the education committee who is not a member of the board, the board shall appoint a person to the vacant seat in accordance with the provisions of Section 63-A (3) and (4). If the vacant seat was held by a Muslim the vacancy shall be filled by the appointment of a Muslim: if it was held by a non-Muslim the vacancy shall be filled by the appointment of a non-Muslim."

Amendment of Sub-section (11) of Section 63-A of the principal Act.

11. For Sub-section (11) of Section 63-A of the principal Act shall be substituted the following:—

"(a) The deputy inspector of schools shall be the secretary of the education committee.

"(b) If an education committee at any time passes a resolution by a majority of the total number of members constituting the committee that the deputy inspector of schools be transferred from the district the department of education shall transfer him."

Amendment of Sub-section (13) of Section 63-A of the principal Act.

12. Sub-section (13) of Section 63-A of the principal Act shall be numbered (13) (a) and the following clause shall be added:—

"(b) If the chairman of the education committee is not a member of the board he shall be entitled to attend any meeting of the board and to address the board on any matter relating to educational questions in the district."

Addition of Sub-section (14) to Section 63-A of the principal Act.

13. To Section 63-A of the principal Act shall be added the following new Sub-section (14):—

"(14). The education committee shall meet for the transaction of business at least once in every month except in the districts of Naini Tal, Almora and Garhwal where the committee shall meet at least once in every quarter: ten days' notice shall be given for an ordinary meeting of the committee and four days for an emergent meeting."

Addition of Sub-section (15) to Section 63-A of the principal Act.

14. To Section 63-A of the principal Act shall be added the following new Sub-section (15):—

"(15) Government may remove from the education committee any member who is not a member of the board for any of the reasons justifying removal of a member from the board under Sub-section (1) of Section 31, the word "committee" being read for this purpose for the word "board" wherever it occurs in that sub-section."

Addition of Sub-section (16) to Section 63-A of the principal Act.

15. To Section 63-A of the principal Act shall be added the following new Sub-section (16):—

"(16) (a) The Local Government may remove from the board a member of the education committee or chairman of the education committee being a member of the board, who in the opinion of the Local Government has so flagrantly abused in any manner his position as a member of the committee or as chairman of the committee as to render his continuance as a member detrimental to the public interest and the Local Government may in like circumstances remove from the education committee a member or chairman of the education committee who is not a member of the board. A member or chairman of the committee removed from the board will thereupon cease to be a member or chairman of the committee."

"(b) The Local Government may also remove from his office a chairman of the education committee who in the opinion of the Local Government has habitually failed to perform his duty; provided that if he is a member of the board such removal will not involve his removal therefrom."

"(c) A member of the education committee or chairman of the education committee removed under this sub-section shall not be eligible for election or appointment to the education committee as member or chairman as the case may be, until after the next general election of the board."

Addition of Sub-section (17) to Section 63-A of the principal Act.

16. To Section 63-A of the principal Act shall be added the following new Sub-section (17):—

"(17) Provided that when the Local Government proposes to take action under Sub-section (15) or (16) of this section an opportunity of explanation shall be given to the member or chairman concerned and when such action is taken the reasons therefor shall be placed on record."

Addition of Sub-section (18) to Section 63-A of the principal Act.

17. To Section 63-A of the principal Act shall be added the following Sub-section (18):—

"(18) The provisions of Section 32 shall be applicable to a member or chairman of an education committee removed under Sub-section (15)."

Addition of Sub-section (19) to Section 63-A of the principal Act.

18. To Section 63-A of the principal Act shall be added the following new Sub-section (19):—

"(19) The board may, subject to the approval of Government, remove the chairman of the education committee or a member or members of the education committee from the committee by a special resolution supported by a majority of the total number of the members of the board. Save as provided by this sub-section the board shall not have power to remove a member of the education committee."

Amendment of Sub-section (20) to Section 63-A of the principal Act.

19. To Section 63-A of the principal Act shall be added the following new Sub-section (20):—

"(20) (a) If at any time it appears to the board that the education committee persists in making default in the performance of any duty or duties imposed on it by or under this or any other enactment, or in exceeding or abusing its powers, the board may, after calling for an explanation from the committee and considering any objection made by it to action being taken under this sub-section, dissolve the committee and proceed to appoint another. The resolution of the board by which the education committee is dissolved under this sub-section shall be a special resolution passed by a majority consisting of not less than two-thirds of the total number of members of the board for the time being. The resolution shall be subject to the approval of Government and shall not take effect until it is so approved.

(b) When an education committee is dissolved by an order under this sub-section—

(i) all members of the education committee shall on a date to be specified by Government vacate their offices as such members but without prejudice to their eligibility for election or nomination under clause (ii),

(ii) the election and appointment of members of the new education committee shall be made in accordance with Sub-section (3) of this section on a date to be fixed by Government,

(iii) the provisions of Sub-sections (4), (5), (9) (b) and (9) (c) shall apply as if the education committee were being constituted after a general election."

Amendment of Sub-section (2) of Section 65-A of the principal Act.

20. For Sub-section (2) of Section 65-A of the principal Act the following sub-section shall be substituted:—

"(a) The education committee shall have power to sanction all contracts for educational purposes up to a maximum of Rs.5,000 provided budget provision exists and provided further that contracts for new educational buildings or for special repairs to existing educational buildings shall be sanctioned by the board.

(b) The location, site, plans, specifications and estimates of new educational buildings shall be approved by the education committee before the sanction of the board is given to projects or contracts for such buildings."

Delegation of Sub-section (3) of Section 65-A of the principal Act.

21. Sub-section (3) of Section 65-A of the principal Act shall be deleted.

Amendment of Sub-section (4) of Section 65-A of the principal Act.

22. For Sub-section (3) of Section 65-A of the principal Act shall be substituted:—.

"(3) Contracts for educational purposes sanctioned by the education committee under Sub-section (2) (a) of the section shall be signed by the secretary of the education committee."

Addition to Sub-section (1) (b) of Section 68 of the principal Act.

23. In Sub-section (1) (b) of Section 68 of the principal Act the word and figures "or 82" shall be added after the word and figures "Section 41," the comma after these word and figures being placed after the word and figures "or 82."

24. In Sub-section (1) (c) of Section 68 of the principal Act the word and figures "or 82" shall be added after the word and figures "Section 74," the comma after these word and figures placed after the word and figures "or 82."

Addition to Sub-section (1) (c) of Section 68 of the principal Act.

25. To Sub-section 2 (b) of Section 161 of the principal Act shall be added the following clauses:—

Addition of clauses to Sub-section 2 (b) of Section 161 of the principal Act.

"(iv) any expenditure proposed in the budget, or (v) the continuance in future years of any recurring expenditure proposed in the budget."

26. In Sub-section 1 (a) of Section 164 of the principal Act after the words "occupied by a board" the words "or education committee" shall be inserted.

Amendment of Sub-section 1 (a) of Section 164 of the principal Act.

27. In Sub-section (3) of Section 166 of the principal Act after the word "board" shall be inserted the words "or committee of the board, or a joint committee, or any officer or servant of a board or of a committee of a board or of a joint committee."

Amendment of Sub-section (3) of Section 166 of the principal Act.

28. In Sub-section (1) of Section 167 of the principal Act after the word "board" where it first occurs shall be inserted the words "or education committee or joint committee or other committee of the board."

Amendment of Sub-section (1) of Section 167 of the principal Act.

29. In Sub-section (1) of Section 168 of the principal Act after the word "board" shall be added the words "or education committee or joint committee or other committee of the board."

Amendment of Sub-section (1) of Section 168 of the principal Act.

30. (1) In Schedule I of the principal Act the following additional items shall be inserted in the first and second columns, namely:—

Additions to and amendments of Schedule I of the principal Act.

(a) after the item against Section 63:

"63-A (2) To appoint an education committee."

"63-A (5) To elect members of the board to be members of the education committee."

"63-A (12) To remit for reconsideration any resolution of the education committee."

(b) after the item against Section 65 (2) (b):

"65-A (2) (a) To sanction contracts for new educational buildings or for special repairs to existing educational buildings."

(2) The entry in the third column against Section 82 shall be deleted and for the entry in the second column the following words shall be substituted, namely:—

"To appoint and dismiss the engineer and the tax-officer of the board."

Addition to Schedule II of the principal Act.

31. In Schedule II of the principal Act the following additional item shall be inserted in the first and second columns before the item against section 86 (1), namely:—

"82. Power to appoint, grant leave of absence to, punish, dismiss, transfer and control servants of the board on a monthly salary of Rs.25 or less."

U. P. COURT-FEES (SECOND AMENDMENT) ACT, 1932

(No. VII of 1932)*

[Received the assent of the Governor-General on July 18, 1932]

[Passed by the Local Legislature of the United Provinces of Agra and Oudh.]

An Act to amend the United Provinces Court-Fees (Amendment) Act, 1932

THE UNITED PROVINCES COURT-FEES (SECOND AMENDMENT) ACT, 1932.

U. P. Act III of 1932

Whereas it is expedient to amend the United Provinces Court-Fees (Amendment) Act, 1932, for the purpose hereinafter appearing;

It is hereby enacted as follows:—

Short title.

1. This Act may be called the United Provinces Court-Fees (Second Amendment) Act, 1932.

Amendment of clause (x) of Section 7 of U. P. Act III of 1932.

2. In Section 7, clause (x) of the United Provinces Court-Fees (Amendment) Act, 1932, the figure "21" shall be substituted for the figure "22."

---

*Published in the Government Gazette, Dated Allahabad, July 30, 1932

INDIAN EMIGRATION (AMENDMENT) ACT, 1932

(No. XVI of 1932)*

[Received the assent of the Governor-General on September 30, 1932]

An Act further to amend the Indian Emigration Act, 1922, for certain purposes.

VII of 1922

Whereas it is expedient further to amend the Indian Emigration Act, 1922, for the purposes hereinafter appearing; it is hereby enacted as follows:—

Short title.

1. This Act may be called the Indian Emigration (Amendment) Act, 1932.

Amendment of Section 24, Act VII of 1922.

VII of 1922

2. For clause (b) of Sub-section (2) of Section 24 of the Indian Emigration Act, 1922, (hereinafter referred to as the said Act), the following shall be substituted, namely:—

"(b) the licensing, supervision and control of persons in British India engaged in causing or assisting persons to emigrate and in the conveyance and accommodation of emigrants, and the prohibition of unlicensed persons from being so engaged."

3. In Section 25 of the said Act—

Amendment of Section 25, Act VII of 1922.

(a) in clause (b) of Sub-section (2), for the words "induces, or attempts to induce" the words "causes or assists or attempts to cause or assist" shall be substituted; and

---

*Published in the Government Gazette, Dated Allahabad, October 1[illegible] 1932.

(b) Sub-section (3) shall be renumbered as Sub-section (4), and the following sub-section shall be inserted as Sub-section (3), namely:—

"(3) When in the course of any proceedings in connection with emigration in which a person licensed in accordance with rules framed under clause (b) of Sub-section (2) of Section 24 is concerned, a breach of the provision of this Act or of the rules made under this Act is committed, such persons shall be liable to the punishment provided by Sub-section (2), unless he shows that he was not responsible for and could not have prevented the commission of the breach."

LIBRARY COLLEGE

Amendment of Section 30, Act VII of 1922.

4. In Sub-section (8) of Section 30 of the said Act, for the words "induces, or attempts to induce" the words "causes or assists or attempts to cause or assist" shall be substituted.

TRADE DISPUTES ACT, 1929

(No. XIX OF 1932)*

[Received the assent of the Governor-General on September 30, 1932]

An Act to amend the Trade Disputes Act, 1929, for certain purposes.

VII of 1929 WHEREAS it is expedient to amend the Trade Disputes Act, 1929, for the purposes hereinafter appearing; It is hereby enacted as follows:—

Short title.

1. This Act may be called the Trade Disputes (Amendment) Act, 1932.

Amendment of Section 13, Act VII of 1929.

VII of 1929 2. In Section 13 of the Trade Disputes Act, 1929.

(a) in Sub-section (1),—

(i) for the words "except with the consent in writing of the Secretary of the Trade Union or of the person, firm or company in question" the words "if the Trade Union, person, firm or company in question has preferred a request to the Court or Board that such information shall be treated as confidential" shall be substituted, and

(ii) for the words "without such consent" the words "without the consent in writing of the Secretary of the Trade Union or the person, firm or company in question, as the case may be" shall be substituted;

---

*Published in the Government Gazette, dated Allahabad, Oct. 15, 1932

(b) in Sub-section (2), after the words "before a Court or Board" the word "wilfully" shall be inserted; and

(c) after Sub-section (2) the following sub-sections shall be inserted, namely:—

"(3) No Criminal Court inferior to that of a Presidency Magistrate or a Magistrate of the first class shall try any offence under this section.

(4) No Criminal Court shall take cognizance of any offence under this section except with the previous sanction of the authority appointing such Court or Board; and no Civil Court shall without the like sanction entertain any suit against a member of a Court or Board, or any person present at or concerned in the proceedings before a Court or Board for any matter arising out of such proceedings."

CODE OF CRIMINAL PROCEDURE, 1898

(No. XXI OF 1932)*

[Received the assent of the Governor-General on October 1, 1932]

An Act further to amend the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1898, for a certain purpose.

WHEREAS it is expedient further to amend the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1898, for the purpose hereinafter appearing; It is hereby enacted as follows:— V of 1898

Short title.

1. This Act may be called the Code of Criminal Procedure (Amendment) Act, 1932.

Amendment of Section 526, Act V of 1898.

2. In Section 526 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. 1898,— V of 1898

(a) in Sub-section (5), for the words "has power under this section to award by way of costs" the words "may under this section award by way of compensation" shall be substituted;

(b) in Sub-section (6A), for the word "costs" the word "compensation" shall be substituted, and for the words "any expenses reasonably incurred by such person in consequence of the application" the words "such sum not exceeding two hundred and fifty rupees as it may consider proper in the circumstances of the case" shall be substituted;

(c) for Sub-section (8) the following sub-section shall be substituted, namely:—

---

*Published in the Government Gazette, Dated Allahabad, October 15, 1932.

"(8) If in any inquiry under Chapter VIII or Chapter XVIII or in any trial, any party interested intimates to the Court at any stage before the defence closes its case that he intends to make an application under this section, the Court shall, upon his executing, if so required, a bond without sureties, of an amount not exceeding two hundred rupees, that he will make such application within a reasonable time to be fixed by the Court, adjourn the case for such a period as will afford sufficient time for the application to be made and an order to be obtained thereon:

Provided that nothing herein contained shall require the Court to adjourn the case upon a second or subsequent intimation from the same party, or, where an adjournment under this sub-section has already been obtained by one of several accused, upon a subsequent intimation by any other accused";

(d) to Sub-section (9) the following Explanation shall be added, namely:—

"Explanation.—Nothing contained in Sub-section (8) or Sub-section (9) restricts the powers of a Court under Section 344"; and

(e) after Sub-section (9) as so amended the following sub-section shall be added, namely:—

"(10) If, before the argument (if any) for the admission of an appeal begins, or, in the case of an appeal, admitted, before the argument for the appellant begins, any party interested intimates to the Court that he intends to make an application under this section, the Court shall, upon such party executing, if so required, a bond without sureties of an amount not exceeding two hundred rupees that he will make such application within a reasonable time to be fixed by the Court, postpone the appeal for such a period as will afford sufficient time for the application to be made and an order to be obtained thereon."

UNIVERSITY LIBRARY LAW COLLEGE

U. P. LAND REVENUE (SECOND AMENDMENT) ACT

(No. XII OF 1932)*

[Received the assent of the Governor-General on December 1, 1932]

[PASSED BY THE LOCAL LEGISLATURE OF THE UNITED PROVINCES OF AGRA AND OUDH]

An Act to amend the United Provinces Land Revenue (Amendment) Act of 1932 (U. P. Act II of 1932).

U. P. Act II 1932

WHEREAS it is expedient to amend the United Provinces Land Revenue (Amendment) Act, 1932, for the purposes hereinafter appearing: It is hereby enacted as follows:—

Short title

1. This Act may be called the United Provinces Land Revenue (Second Amendment) Act, 1932.

Amendment Section 14 of U. P. Act II 1932

2. In Section 14 of the United Provinces Land Revenue (Amendment) Act, 1932, for the words and figures "In Sub-section (2) of Section 72" the words and figures "in Section 74 (a) and (b) in Sub-section (2) of Section 76" shall be substituted.

Amendment Section 17 of U. P. Act II 1932

3. In Section 17 of the United Provinces Land Revenue (Amendment) Act, 1932, for the figures and letter "212A" the figures and letter "212 (a)" shall be substituted.

---

*Published in Govt Gazette, dated Allahabad, December 10, 1932